John Ruſſell biſhop of Lincolne, a graue and learned man, had the ſeale deliuered to him by the ſaid protector of England, during the time of the ſhort reigne of the yong king Edward, when the ſame ſeale was taken from Rotheram: and ſo this Ruſſell was made chancellor in the moneth of June, in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and three, being the firſt yeare of the vſurped gouernement of the bloudie tyrant the miſhapen king Richard the third. This Ruſſell is buried in the church of Lincolne, in a chappell caſt out of the vpper wall of the ſouth part of the church.

Thomas Barow maiſter of the rolles.

Thomas Barow maiſter of the rolles was made keeper of the great ſeale (as I haue ſeene recorded) which I ſuppoſe, was in the third and laſt yeare of the ſaid king Richard the third: for in that yeare he was maiſter of the rolles.

Thomas Rotheram.

Thomas Rotheram made againe lord chancellor, in the firſt entrance of king Henrie the ſeuenth into the gouernement: but verie ſhortlie after he was diſplaced, and the biſhop of Worceſter placed in that roome; he was archbiſhop of Yorke ninteene yeares & ten moneths; he was verie beneficiall to all his kinred, and aduanced ſome with mariages, ſome with poſſeſſions, and ſome with ſpirituall liuings. He died the nine and twentith daie of December, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred, being the ſixteenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, at Cawood in Yorkeſhire the morrow after the Aſcenſion, being of the age of three ſcore and ſixteene yeares or more: he was buried in Yorke minſter on the northſide in our ladie chappell, in a toome of marble which he cauſed to be made whileſt he was liuing.

John Alcot biſhop of worceſter.

John Alcot biſhop of Worceſter, made in the yeare one thouſand foure hundred three ſcore and ſixteene, was lord chancellor of England in the firſt yeare of the ſaid K. Henrie the ſeuenth, the Salomon of England, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore & fiue: ſhortlie after the entrance of the ſaid Henrie into the gouernement of England. For though Rotheram were chancellor when he got the victorie, for that he had beene ſo before, & for that the king was neither prouided nor minded ſuddenlie to haue a man not meete for that place to execute the ſame; yet this Rotheram kept not that roome manie moneths, but that Alcot came in place; becauſe the king found Alcot a meeter perſon to execute the ſame office, anſwerable to the diſpoſition of the kings humor. All which notwithſtanding, whether for malice of others, or for his owne deſerts, or both, or for more eſpeciall truſt that king Henrie put in Morton biſhop of Elie, who had beene the meanes to bring him to the crowne, this Alcot fell ſhortlie in the kings diſgrace, was diſplaced of his office, and Morton came in his roome. So that in this firſt yeare of the ſaid king Henrie the ſeuenth, there ſeemed to be three chancellors in ſucceſſion one after another, if I haue not miſconceiued the matter: all which before Morton in this firſt yeare of king Henrie the ſeuenth, may perhaps more properlie be termed keepers of the great ſeale, than chancellors.

John Morton biſhop of Elie.

John Morton doctor of the ciuill law, an aduocat in the ciuill, of the councell to Henrie the ſixt and to Edward the fourth, to whome alſo he was maiſter of the rolles, was made biſhop of Elie in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred three ſcore and eighteene, and lord chancellor of England, (vpon his returne from beyond the ſeas) in the firſt yeare of the worthie prince K. Henrie the ſeuenth, being the yeare that the word became fleſh, one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and fiue: after which he was aduanced to the biſhoprike of Canturburie; he died in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and ninteene, in the fifteenth yere of the reigne of king Henrie the ſeuenth, as hath Matthew Parker.

William Warham archbiſhop of Canturburie.

William Warham aduocat in the arches, maiſter of the rolles, biſhop of London, and then biſhop of Canturburie; was (before his aduancement to the ſee of Canturburie) made chancellor of England in the time of Henrie the ſeuenth, in which office he continued vntill about the latter end of the ſeuenth yeare of king Henrie the eight. At what time ſurrendring the ſeale by reaſon of his age and weakeneſſe, the ſame great ſeale was deliuered to Thomas Wolſeie.

Thomas Wolſeie.

Thomas Wolſeie ſomtime chapleine to Henrie Deane archbiſhop of Canturburie, after the kings almoner and abbat of ſaint Auſtins, who poſſeſſing manie other abbeies and biſhopriks, as in other places ſhall more largelie appeare, was aduanced to the gouernment of the great ſeale, about the beginning of the eight yeare of the triumphant reigne of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our Lord and Sauior Jeſus Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred ſixteene, to hold the ſame during his life (as I gather) in which office yet he continued not aboue thirteene yeares, vntill the one and twentith of the ſaid king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and nine. During which time of his chancellorſhip, in the nineteenth yere of king Henrie the eight, being the yere of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and ſeauen, he went into France, repreſenting the king of Englands perſon, to ſet order for the deliuerie of pope Clement the ſeuenth and Francis the French king, at what time he carried the great ſeale ouer the ſeas to Calis, which ſeale he left with doctor Tailor maiſter of the rolles, to keepe the ſame at Calis vntill the cardinals returne out of the French dominions. He died in Leiceſter abbeie (not without ſuſpicion of poiſon as was thought, which he had prepared for himſelfe, and giuen to his apothecarie to deliuer when he called for it) the two and twentith of king Henrie the eight, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and thirtie.

Thomas More.

Thomas More knight, ſometime vnderſhiriffe of London, and chancellor of the dutchie of Lancaſter, was aduanced to the honor of chancellorſhip of England, in the yere that the word became fleſh one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and nine, being the one and twentith yeere of that king Henrie which expelled pope Clement the ſeauenth his authoritie out of his dominions, in which office this rare witted knight (to vſe Eraſmus his epitheton) and learned chancellor continued not full three yeares; but in the foure and twentith yeare of the reigne of the ſaid king Henrie the eight, with much labor and earneſt ſute he left his office. Touching which it ſhall not greeue me to ſet downe the words of Matthew Parker of the liues of the biſhops of Canturburie in the life of Thomas Cranmer writing after this maner: Intereà rex dum papæ meditabatur excidium, ſingulorum de papali auctoritate ſenſus iudicijs haud obſcuris collegit. Inter quos Thomas Morus, quia regis conatus pontificijs valdè ſuſpectus fuit, cancellarij munere, venia regis ægrè impetrata, ſeſe abdicanit.

Thomas Audleie.

Thomas Audleie attornie of the dutchie of Lancaſter, ſergeant at the law (as moſt affirme) and ſpeaker of the parlement, was made knight and lord keeper of the great ſeale the fourth of Iune, in the foure and twentith yere of the reigne of the famous prince king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and two, not long after which he was indued with the title and honor of lord chancellor of England. This man in the tenth yere of his chancellorſhip, being the yere of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and two, and the fiue and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the eight, changing the name of Buckingham college in Cambridge, did name it the college of ſaint Marie Magdalen, and indued it with ſome poſſeſſions. He died on Maie euen in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and foure, being the fiue and thirtith yeare of Henrie the eight.

Hiſto. Cantab. per Caium. 78.

Thomas Wriotheſlie.

Thomas Wriotheſlie knight of the garter, being created baron at Hampton court on the firſt of Ianuarie, in the fiue and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and three, was after aduanced to the honor of the great ſeale and chancellorſhip of England, about the beginning of Maie, in the ſix and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, being the yere of grace one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and foure, in which office he continued vntill the death of the ſaid king Henrie the eight, and in the beginning of the reigne of king Edward the ſixt, vntill for his obſtinacie in the Romane religion he was the ſixt of March remoued, and the ſeale was deliuered to William Paulet lord Sent-Iohn of Baſing. This Wriotheſlie (being created earle of Southampton by king Edward the ſixt) died at his houſe of Lincolne place in Holborne the 30 of Iulie, in the fourth yeare of the ſaid king Edward, in the yeere 1550, & was buried at ſaint Andrews in Oldborne commonlie called Holborne.

William Paulet.

William Paulet knight being firſt ſteward of the lands of the biſhoprike of Wincheſter, then treaſuror of the houſhold, lord Sent-Iohn of Baſing, lord great maiſter of the kings houſe, afterwards earle of Wiltſhire, marqueſſe of Wincheſter, and treaſuror of England, being of the priuie councell to king Henrie the eight, king Edward the ſixt, queene Marie, and queene Eliſabeth, had the keeping of the great ſeale committed vnto him the ſeuenth daie of March, in the yeare that the ſecond perſon in trinitie deſcended from the boſome of the father into the wombe of the mother one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and ſeuen, being the firſt yere of the reigne of the yong king Edward the ſixt, which ſeale he had in cuſtodie about ſeuen moneths, vntill the three and twentith or foure and twentith of October following, at what time ſir Richard Rich was made lord chancellor.

Sir Richard Rich.

Sir Richard Rich knight, lord Rich, was aduanced to the dignitie of lord chancellor of England about the 23 of October in the yere of our ſaluation one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and ſeuen, being the firſt yeare of the reigne of the noble king Edward the ſixt, in which place he remained about fiue yeers.

Thomas Goderich.

Thomas Goderich or Goderike being biſhop of Elie had the great ſeale deliuered to him, and was made lord chancellor of England the twentith of December (as Iohn Stow hath noted in his chronicle) in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and one, being the fift yeare of the reigne of king Edward the ſixt, in which office he continued all the life of the ſaid king Edward, which died in Iulie one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and three, being the ſeuenth yeare of his reigne, and about one moneth after vntill the thirteenth or fourteenth daie of Auguſt, in which queene Marie made Stephan Gardener hir chancellor.

Sir Nicholas Hare.

Sir Nicholas Hare, maiſter of the rolles, had at the comming of queene Marie to the crowne the keeping of the great ſeale, after the death of king Edward, as lord keeper by the ſpace of one fortnight, and ſhortlie after was Stephan Gardener made chancellor.

Stephan Gardener.

Stephan Gardener biſhop of Wincheſter was in Auguſt, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and three, being the firſt yeare of the reigne of the vnfortunat queene Marie, made chancellor of England. This man going in ambaſſage vnto Calis left the great ſeale in the cuſtodie of William Paulet marqueſſe of Wincheſter, which biſhop after his returne into England continued in that office all the time of his life, which he ended the 19 of Nouember, in the yeare that the word became fleſh one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and fiue, being the third yeere of queene Marie. After which the great ſeale lieng in the cuſtodie of the prince, ſhe on the new yeares daie following made a new chancellor.

Nicholas Heath.

Nicholas Heath biſhop of Rocheſter, almoner to the king, ambaſſador into Germanie, biſhop of Worceſter, preſident of Wales, and archbiſhop of Yorke, was vpon new yeares daie, in the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and fiue, being the third yeare of the reigne of queene Marie, aduanced to the honorable dignitie of the chancellorſhip. But queene Marie deceaſing the ſeauenteenth daie of Nouember, in the yeare of grace one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and eight, and the ſixt yere of hir gouernement, this Heath vpon the placing of the worthie queene Eliſabeth vpon the throne of the Engliſh gouernment, was remoued from his office, and maiſter Bacon aduanced.

Nicholas Bacon.

Sir Nicholas Bacon eſquier, attournie of the court of wards, was made knight, and lord keeper of the great ſeale the two and twentith of December, in the yeare of our redemption 1558, being the firſt yeare of the now reigning Eliſabeth the Saba of England. Which name of lord keeper he ſtill kept during his life, and the time of his office. In whoſe time there was an act of parlement eſtabliſhed, to make the power of the keeper of the great ſeale equall with the authoritie of the chancellor. This man continued in this office, and worthilie executed the ſame, being a man of rare wit and deepe experience, during the time of his life, which continued vntill the twentith of Februarie, in the yeare of our ſaluation 1578 after the account of England, being the one and twentith yeare of the rare and ſingular gouernement of the worlds wonder the famous queene Eliſabeth, which place this man kept eighteene yeeres, being (as I ſuppoſe) double as long time as anie other chancellor or keeper of the great ſeale poſſeſſed that place, except Rafe Neuill biſhop of Chicheſter, and Iohn Stafford biſhop of Bath and Wels, both which held it equallie eighteene yeares with him: a ſtrange thing, that in the courſe of almoſt 600 yeares, no ſuch officer might poſſeſſe that place by twentie years togither.

Thomas Bromleie.

Thomas Bromleie, the generall ſolicitor of queene Eliſabeth, a councellor of the law, and one of the inner temple, was aduanced to the dignitie of lord chancellor on the fiue and twentith day of Aprill, in the yeare of our redemption 1579, being in the one & twentith yeare of the reigne of the ſaid queene

Eliſabeth, which office at this daie he beareth.

Thus (although I maie be a little wetſhod in paſſing ouer the deepe ſea of this difficultie of the chancellors, in which I am ſure I am not ouer head and eares) I haue at length brought my chancellors to end: a worke of ſome labour and difficultie, of ſome ſearch and charge, which I haue doone onelie of my ſelfe without the furtherance or help of ſome others, who more inconſideratlie than trulie doo diſorderlie report, that I haue atteined vnto this in obteining thoſe names by ſome ſiniſter means, from the priuat bookes of them who haue trauelled in the ſame matter. In which (as I ſaid in the begining, ſo I ſaie againe) if anie imperfection for haſt, by reaſon of the printers ſpeedie calling on me, haue now fallen out of my pen, it ſhall hereafter God willing be corrected in the large volume of their liues. Wherefore as I neither eſteeme nor feare the ſecret reports of ſome others; ſo for their countries good it ſhall be well that they would deliuer ſomething to the world to bring truth to perfection (if other men haue vnwillinglie ſet downe error) and not as they doo, for a litle commoditie & gaine to themſelues, neither benefit their countrie, nor ſpeake well of ſuch as would and doo helpe poſteritie. Thus this much by Francis Thin, touching the chancellors of England.]

Ab.Fl. ex publicis æditionibus B.G. & T.C.

¶ Here though ſomewhat out of place (for it ſhould haue beene entered in 1578) it were better to record the receiuing of the queenes maieſtie into Suffolke & Norffolke, than making no commemoration therof at all, to let it periſh in threehalfepenie pamphlets, and ſo die in obliuion. It maie alſo ſerue for a reſt of recreation, after ſo long an introduction of ſerious matters, as alſo (and that moſt worthilie) maie remaine in record, to ſignifie what well affected ſubiects the queens maieſtie hath within hir dominions, to whome goods, lands, friends, kindred, or life, none of theſe ſeuerallie, nor all iointlie, are ſo pretious and deere, but for hir ſake they can find in their hearts to eſteeme them as doong. And now to the matter. The truth is (ſaith one that wrote the whole interteinment) that albeit they had but ſmall warning certeinlie to build vpon, of the comming of the queenes maieſtie into both thoſe ſhires, the gentlemen had made ſuch readie prouiſion, that all the veluets and ſilks were taken vp that might be laid hand on, and bought for anie monie, and ſoone conuerted to ſuch garments and ſutes of robes, that the ſhew thereof might haue beautified the greateſt triumph that was in England theſe manie yeares. For (as it was ſaid) there were two hundred yoong gentlemen clad all in white veluet, and three hundred of the grauer ſort apparelled in blacke veluet cotes, and faire chaines, all readie at one inſtant and place, with fifteene hundred ſeruing men more on horſſebacke, well and brauelie mounted in good order, readie to receiue the queenes highneſſe into Suffolke, which ſurelie was a comelie troope, and a noble ſight to behold: and all theſe waited on the ſhiriffe ſir William Spring, during the queenes maieſties abode in thoſe parties, and to the verie confines of Suffolke.

The receiuing of the queene into Suffolke and Norffolke.

The number of gentlemen that receiued the queene into Suffolke.

But before hir highneſſe paſſed to Norffolke, there was in Suffolke ſuch ſumptuous feaſting and bankets, as ſeldome in anie part of the world haue beene ſeene before. The maiſter of the rolles ſir William Cordall was one of the firſt that began this great feaſting, and did light ſuch a candle to the reſt of the ſhire, that manie were glad bountifullie and frankelie to follow the ſame example, with ſuch charges and coſts, as the whole traine were in ſome ſort pleaſed therewith. And neere Burie ſir William Drurie for his part at his houſe made the queenes highneſſe a coſtlie and delicat dinner, and ſir Robert Germine of Roeſhbrooke feaſted the French ambaſſadors two ſeuerall times, with which charges and courteſie they ſtood maruellouſlie contented. The ſhiriffe ſir William Spring, ſir Thomas Kidſon, ſir Arthur Higham, and diuerſe others of worſhip, kept great houſes, and ſundrie either at the queenes comming, or returne, ſolemnelie feaſted hir highneſſe, yea and defraied the whole charges for a daie or twaine, preſented gifts, made ſuch triumphs and deuiſes, as indeed was moſt noble to behold, and verie thankfullie accepted.

Perſons of worſhip in Suffolke that feaſted hir highneſſe during hir abode amongſt them.

The Norffolke gentlemen hearing how dutifullie their neighbors had receiued the prince, prepared in like ſort to ſhew themſelues dutifull: and ſo in moſt gallant maner they aſſembled and ſet forward with fiue and twentie hundred horſſemen, wherof (as ſome affirme) were ſix hundred gentlemen, ſo brauelie attired and mounted, as in deed was worthie the noting, which goodly companie waited on their ſhiriſe a long ſeaſon. But in good ſooth (as it was crediblie ſpoken) the bankets and feaſts began here afreſh, all kinds of triumphs that might be deuiſed were put in practiſe and proofe. The earle of Surreie did ſhew moſt ſumptuous cheare, in whoſe parke were ſpeaches well ſet out, and a ſpeciall deuiſe much commended: and the reſt, as a number of iollie gentlemen, were no whit behind to the vttermoſt of their abilities, in all that might be doone and deuiſed.

Norffolke incited by the example of Suffolke to giue yͤ queene roiall interteinment.

But when the queenes highneſſe came to Norwich, the ſubſtance of the whole triumph and feaſting was in a maner there new to begin. For order was taken there, that euerie daie for ſix daies togither, a ſhew of ſome ſtrange deuiſe ſhould be ſeene. And the maior and aldermen appointed among themſelues and their brethren, that no one perſon reteining to the queene ſhould be vnfeaſted, or vnbidden to dinner & ſupper, during the ſpace of thoſe ſix daies: which order was well & wiſelie obſerued, and gained their citie more fame and credit than they wot of: for that courteſie of theirs ſhall remaine in perpetuall memorie whiles the walles of their citie ſtandeth. Beſides the monie they beſtowed vpon diuerſe of the traine, and thoſe that tooke paines for them, will be a witneſſe of their well dooing and good will, whiles the report of theſe things maie be called to remembrance. Now, who can (conſidering their great charges and diſcreet gouernement in theſe cauſes) but giue them due laud and reputation, as farre as either pen or report maie doo them good & ſtretch out their credit. For moſt aſſuredlie, they haue taught and learned all the townes and cities in England a leſſon, how to behaue themſelues in ſuch like ſeruices and actions.

What order was taken in Norwich in the receiuing and recreating of the queene.

On ſaturdaie being the ſixteenth of Auguſt 1578, and in the twentith yeare of the reigne of our moſt gratious ſouereigne ladie Eliſabeth, by the grace of God queene of England, France & Ireland, defender of the faith, &c: the ſame our moſt dread and ſouereigne ladie (continuing hir progreſſe in Norffolke) immediatlie after dinner ſet forward from Brakenaſh, where ſhe had dined with the ladie Stile, being fiue miles diſtant from Norwich, towards the ſame hir moſt dutifull citie. Sir Robert Wood then eſquier, now knight, maior of the ſame citie, at one of the clocke in the ſame happie daie, ſet forward to meet with hir maieſtie in this order. Firſt there rode before him well and ſeemelie mounted, threeſcore of the moſt comelie yoong men of the citie, as batchellers apparelled all in blacke ſatten dublets, blacke hoſe, blacke taffata hats, and yellow bands, and their vniuerſall liuerie was a mandilion of purple taffata, laid about with ſiluer laſe: & ſo apparelled they marched forwards two and two in a ranke. Then one which repreſented king Gurgunt, ſometime king of England, which builded the caſtell of Norwich, called Blanch Flowre, and laid the foundation of the citie. He was mounted vpon a braue courſer, and was thus furniſhed: his bodie armed, his baſes of gréene and white ſilke: on his head a blacke veluet hat, with a plume of white feathers. There attended vpon him thrée henchmen in white and gréene: one of them did beare his helmet, the ſecond his target, the third his ſtaffe: after him a noble companie of gentlemen and wealthie citizens in veluet coats and other coſtlie furniture, brauelie mounted. Then followed the officers of the citie euerie one in his place. Then the ſword-bearer, with the ſword & hat of maintenance. Then the maior and foure and twentie aldermen, and the recorder all in ſcarlet gownes, whereof ſo manie as had béene maiors of the citie, and were iuſtices, did weare their ſcarlet clokes: then followed ſo manie as had béene ſhiriffs, and were no aldermen, in violet gownes and ſattin tippets. Then followed diuerſe others, to kéepe the people from diſturbing the araie aforeſaid.

The maior of Norwich with his attendants ſet forth to receiue the queene.

The builder f Norwich caſtell repre-ſented.

The founder f Blanch flowre ſtai-th in person o meet the ueene.

Thus euerie thing in due and comelie order, they all (except Gurgunt, which ſtaied hir maieſties comming within a flight ſhot or two of the citie, where the caſtell of Blanch Flowre was in moſt beautifull proſpect) marched forwards to a bridge, called Hartford bridge, the vttermoſt limit that waie, diſtant from the citie two miles or there abouts, to méet with hir maieſtie; who within one houre or little more after their attendance, came in ſuch gratious and princelie wiſe, as rauiſhed the harts of all hir louing ſubiects, and might haue terrified the ſtouteſt heart of anie enimie to behold. Whether the maieſtie of the prince, which is incomparable; or ioie of hir ſubiects, which excéeded meaſure, were the greater, I thinke would haue appalled the iudgement of Apollo to define. The acclamations and cries of the people to the almightie God for the preſeruation of hir maieſtie ratled ſo lowd, as hardly for a great time could anie thing be heard. But at laſt, as euerie thing hath an end, the noiſe appeaſed: and the maior ſaluted hir highneſſe with the oration following, and yéelded to hir maieſtie therewith the ſword of the citie, and a faire ſtanding cup of ſiluer and guilt, with a couer, and in the cup one hundred pounds in gold. The oration was in theſe words.

Prætoris Nordouicenſis ad ſereniſſimam Reginam, &c.

Prætoris pro ſe ſuiſq; fratri-bus obteſtatio.

SI nobis ab Opt. Max. concederetur optio quid rerũ humanarũ nunc potiſsimum vellemus: nihil duceremus antiquius (auguſtiſsima princeps) quàm vt tuus ille, qui ita nos recreat, caſtiſsimi ocelli radius poſſet in abditiſsimos cordium noſtrorũ angulos ſe conferre. Cerneres profectò quanta ſint hilaritate perfuſa, quàm in ipſis arterijs & venulis ſpiritus & ſanguis geſtiant: dum intuemur te huius regni lumen (vt Dauid olim fuit Iſraelitici) in hijs tandem finibus poſt longam ſpem, & ardentiſsima vota exoriri. Equidem vt pro me, qui tua ex authoritate & clementia (quod humillimis gratijs profiteor) celeberrimæ huic ciuitati præſum, & pro hijs meis fratribus, atq; omni hoc populo quem tuis auſpicijs regimus, ex illorum ſenſu loquar, quod & ipſe ſentio: ſic nos demum ſupplicibus votis expoſcimus, vt maieſtatem tuam beneuolam nobis, & propitiam experiamur: vt nunquam cuiquam populo aduenisti gratior quàm nobis. In illius rei luculentiſsimũ indicium, inſignia hæc honoris, & officij noſtri, quæ nobis clementiſsimus princeps Henricus quartus quinto ſui regni anno cũ prætore, ſenatoribus, & vicecomitibus cõceſsit: (cùm antea balliuis (vt vocant) vltra annalium noſtrorum memoriam regeremur) perpetuis deinde regum priuilegijs, & corroborata nobis, & aucta magnificè, maieſtati tuæ omnia exhibemus, quæ per tuam vnius clementiam (quam cum immortalibus gratijs prædicare nunquam ceſſabimus) viceſimò iam anno tenuimus: atq; vnà cum illis, hunc theſaurum, quaſi pignus noſtrarum & voluntatum & facultatum. Quas omnes, quantæ, quantulæue ſint, ad tuum arbitrium deuouimus: vt ſi quid omni hoc fœliciſsimi tui temporis decurſu admiſimus, quod amantiſsimos, obſequentiſsimos, amplitudinis tuæ ſaluti, coronæ, emolumento deuotiſsimos non deceat: ſtatuas de nobis, & noſtris omnibus, pro tua clementiſsima voluntate. Sin ita clauum huius ciuitatis (Deo duce) reximus: vt eam in portu ſaluam maieſtati tuæ conſeruauerimus, & populum primum gloriæ Dei, & veræ religionis, deinde ſalutis, honoris, & voluntatis tuæ ſtudioſiſsimum, quantum in nobis eſt, effecerimus: tum non libet nobis id à te petere, quod inſita tibi ſingularis clementia facillimè à te ipſa impetrabit. Tantum obſecramus, vt amplitudinem tuam Deus omnibus & animi & corporis bonis cumulatiſsimè beare velit, Amen.

Henricus quartus ciuitati Nordouicenſi princeps munificentiſsimus

Prætoris pro ſe ſuiſq; fratribus quàm ſignificanter facta oratio.

The maiors oration to the queene Engliſhed.

IF our wiſh ſhould be granted vnto vs by the almightie, what humane thing wee would chieflie deſire: we would account nothing more pretious (moſt roial prince) than that the bright beame of your moſt chaſt eie which dooth ſo cheare vs, might pearſe the ſecret and ſtrait corners of out hearts. Then ſurelie ſhould you ſee how great ioies are diſperſed there, and how the ſpirits and liuelie bloud tickle in our arteries & ſmall veines, in beholding you the light of this realme (as Dauid was of Iſrael) now at length, after long hope and earneſt petitions, to appeare in theſe coaſts. Trulie on mine owne part, which by your highneſſe authoritie and clemencie (with humble thanks bee it ſpoken) doo gouerne this famous citie, and on the part of theſe my brethren, and all theſe people which by your authoritie we rule (ſpeaking as they meane, and as I my ſelfe doo thinke) this onelie with all our hearts and humble praiers we deſire, that we maie ſo find your maieſtie gratious and fauourable vnto vs, as you for your part neuer came to anie ſubiects better welcome than to vs your poore ſubiects here. For moſt manifeſt token whereof, we preſent vnto your maieſtie here, theſe ſignes of honor and office, which we receiued of the moſt mightie prince Henrie the fourth, in the fift yere of his reigne, then to vs granted in the name of maior, aldermen and ſhiriffs; whereas before time out of mind or mention, we were gouerned by bailiffs (as they tearme them) which euer ſince haue beene both eſtabliſhed and increaſed with continuall priuileges of kings: and which by your onelie clemencie (which with immortall thanks we ſhall neuer ceaſe to declare) we haue now theſe twentie yeares inioied: and togither with thoſe ſignes, this treaſure is a pledge of our good willes and abilitie: which all how great or little ſo euer they be, wee powre downe at your pleaſure, that if we haue neglected anie thing in all this courſe of your moſt happie reigne, which becommeth moſt louing, obedient and well willing ſubiects to performe, for the preſeruation of your crowne, and aduancement of your highneſſe, you maie then determine of vs and all ours at your moſt gratious pleaſure. But if we haue (God being our guide) ſo ordered the gouernance of this citie, that we haue kept the ſame in ſafetie to your maieſties vſe, and made the people therein (as much as in vs lieth) firſt moſt ſtudious of Gods glorie and true religion, and next of your maieſties health, honour, and pleaſure; then aske we nothing of you: for that the ſingular clemencie ingraffed in your highneſſe, will eaſilie of it ſelfe grant that which is requiſit for vs to obteine. We onelie therefore deſire, that God would abundantlie bleſſe your highneſſe with all good gifts of mind and bodie.

The maior ſpeaketh in his owne and his brethren the aldermens behalfe.

Henrie the fourth a moſt bountifull prince to the citie of Norwich.

A moſt dutifull ſubmiſſion.

Wherein the dutie of ſubiects chieflie conſiſteth.

Which oration ended, hir maieſtie accepting in good part euerie thing deliuered by the maior, did thankefullie anſwer him in theſe words, or verie like in effect: We hartilie thanke you maiſter maior, and all the reſt, for theſe tokens of goodwill; neuertheleſſe, princes haue no néed of monie: God hath indued vs abundantlie, we come not therefore, but for that which in right is our owne, the hearts and true allegiance of our ſubiects, which are the greateſt riches of a kingdome; whereof as we aſſure our ſelues in you, ſo doo you aſſure your ſelues in vs of a louing and gratious ſoueraigne. Wherewith was deliuered to the maior, a mace or ſcepter, which he carried before hir to hir lodging, which was in the biſhop of Norwich his palace, two miles diſtant from that place. The cup and monie was deliuered to a gentleman, one of hir maieſties footmen to carrie. The maior ſaid to hir, Sunt hîc centum libræ puri auri. The couer of the cup lifted vp, hir maieſtie ſaid to the footmen; Looke to it, there is 100 pounds. With that hir highneſſe, with the whole companie, marched towards Norwich, till they came to a place called the Towne cloſe, diſtant from the citie a good ſlightſhot, where the partie which repreſented Gurgunt came forth, as in due maner is expreſſed, and was readie to haue declared to hir maieſtie this ſpéech following; but by reaſon of a ſhowre of raine which came, hir maieſtie haſted awaie, the ſpéech not vttered. But thus it was as here followeth.

The quéens maieſties acceptable anſwer vttered by hir owne mouth in perſon.

Gurguntius his ſpéech cut off by a ſhowre of raine.

Leaue off to muſe moſt gratious prince of Engliſh ſoile,
What ſudden wight in martiall wiſe approcheth neere:
King Gurgunt I am hight, king Belins eldeſt ſonne,
Whoſe ſire Dunwallo firſt, the Brittiſh crowne did weare.
Whom truthleſſe Gutlacke forſt to paſſe the ſurging ſeas,
His falſhod to reuenge, and Denmarke land to ſpoile.
And finding in returne, this place a gallant vent,
This caſtle faire I built, a fort from forren ſoile:
To win a conqueſt, get renowme and glorious name,
To keepe and vſe it well, deſerues eternall fame.
When brute through cities, townes, the woods & dales did ſound;
Elizabeth this countrie peereleſſe queene drew neere:
I was found out, my ſelfe in perſon noble queene
Did haſt, before thy face in preſence to appeare.
Two thouſand yeares welnie in ſilence lurking ſtill:
Heare, why to thee alone this ſeruice I doo yeeld.
Beſides that, at my cities ſute their founder firſt
Should gratulat moſt this ioifull ſight in open field,
Foure ſpeciall points and rare concurring in vs both
This ſpeciall ſeruice haue reſerud to thee alone:
The glorie though of each in thee dooth far ſurmount,
Yet great with ſmall compard, will like appeare anon.
When doubtfull warres the Britiſh princes long had wroong,
My grandſire firſt vniting all did weare the crowne.
Of Yorke and Lancaſter, who did conclude thoſe broiles?
Thy grandſire Henrie ſeuenth, a king of great renowne.
Mine vncle Brennus eke, my father ioining hands,
Old Rome did raſe and ſacke, and halfe conſume with fire:
Thy puiſſant father ſo, new Rome that purple whore
Did ſacke and ſpoile hir neere, of all hir glittering tire.
Lo Cambridge ſchooles by mine aſſignement founded firſt,
By thee my Cambridge ſchooles are famous through the world,
I thirtie wandring ſhips of baniſht men relieued.
The throngs of baniſht ſoules that in this citie dwell,
Do weepe for ioy: and praie for thee with teares vntold:
In all theſe things thou noble queene dooſt far excell.
But lo to thee I yeeld as dutie dooth me bind
In open field my ſelfe, my citie, caſtle, keie,
Moſt happie fathers kings in ſuch a daughter queene,
Moſt happie England were, if thou ſhouldſt neuer die,
Go on moſt noble prince, for I muſt haſt awaie
My citie gates doo long, their ſoueraigne to receaue:
More true thou neuer couldſt, nor loiall ſubiects find,
Whoſe harts full faſt with perfect loue to thee doo cleaue.

Gurguntius the eldeſt ſon of Belinus.

The ancientneſſe of Norwich citie by the founders age may be gathered.

King Henrie the ſeuenth, and king Henrie the eight.

Gurguntius yeeldeth his eſtate to the quéene.

Then hir maieſtie drew néere the gates of the citie called ſaint Stephans gates, which with the wals there were both gallantlie and ſtronglie repared. The gate it ſelfe was thus inriched and beautified. Firſt the portcullice was new made both timber & iron. Then the outward ſide of the gate was thus beautified. The quéenes armes were moſt richlie and beautifullie ſet forth in the chiefe front of the gate. On the one ſide thereof, but ſomewhat lower, was placed the ſcutchion of ſaint George his croſſe: on the other ſide, the armes of the citie: and directlie vnder the queenes maieſties armes, was placed the falcon, hir highneſſe badge, in due forme, and vnder the ſame were written theſe words, God and the queene we ſerue. The inner ſide of the gate was thus beautified. On the right ſide was gorgeouſlie ſet forth the red roſe, ſignifieng the houſe of Yorke; on the left ſide the white roſe, repreſenting the houſe of Lancaſter; in the midſt was the white and red roſe vnited, expreſſing the vnion, vnder the which was placed by deſcent the armes of the quéene, and vnder that were written theſe verſes following.

S. Stephans gates in Norwich richlie beautified.

The vnion of the white roſe and the red.

Diuiſion kindled ſtrife,
Bliſt vnion quencht the flame:
Thenſe ſprang our noble Phenix deare,
The peareleſſe prince of fame.

And beſides that, at this gate, the waits of the citie were placed with lowd muſicke, who cheerefullie & melodiouſlie welcomed hir maieſtie into the citie, this ſong being ſong by the beſt voices in the ſame.

The deaw of heauen drops this daie on drie and barren ground, Wherefore let fruitfull hearts I ſaie at drum and trumpets ſound
Yeeld that is due, ſhew that is meet, to make our ioy the more,
In our good hope, and hir great praiſe,
we neuer ſaw before.
The ſun dooth ſhine where ſhade hath beene, long darkeneſſe brought vs daie,
The ſtar of comfort now coms in,
and here a while will ſtaie.
Ring out the bels, plucke vp your ſpreets, and dreſſe your houſes gaie,
Run in for floures to ſtrew the ſtreets,
and make what ioy you maie.
The deaw of heauen, &c.
Full manie a winter haue we ſeene,
and manie ſtormes withall,
Since here we ſaw a king or queene in pompe and princelie pall.
Wherefore make feaſt and banket ſtill,
and now to triumph fall,
With dutie let vs ſhew good will,
to glad both great and ſmall.
The deaw of heauen, &c.
The realme throughout will ring of this,
and ſundrie regions mo
Will ſay, full great our fortune is, when our good hap they kno.
O Norwich, heere the wellſpring runs, whoſe vertue ſtill dooth flo,
And lo this day dooth ſhine two ſuns within thy wals alſo.
The deaw of heauen, &c.

This ſong ended, hir highneſſe paſſed towards hir lodging, & by the waie in a church-yard, ouer againſt maiſter Pecks doore (a worthie alderman) was a ſcaffold ſet vp & brauelie trimmed. On this ſcaffold was placed an excellent boy, well and gallantlie decked, in a long white robe of taffata, a crimſin ſcarffe wrought with gold, folded on the Turkiſh faſhion about his browes, and a gaie garland of white flowers on his head, which boie was not ſéene, till the quéens had a good ſeaſon marked the muſicke, which was maruellous ſwéet and good, albeit the rudeneſſe of ſome ringers of bels did ſomewhat hinder the noiſe and harmonie: and as ſoone as the muſike ended, the boy ſtepped reuerendlie before the quéene, and ſpake theſe words that follow in comelie order.

The boies ſpeach at maiſter Pecks doore.

Great things were meant to welcome thee (O queene)
If want of time had not cut off the ſame:
Great was our wiſh, but ſmall is that was ſeene,
For vs to ſhew before ſo great a dame.
Great hope we haue it pleaſd our princes eie,
Great were the harmes that elſe our paines ſhould reape:
Our grace or folie dooth in your iudgement lie,
If you miſlike, our griefs doo grow on heape:
If for ſmall things we doo great fauour find,

Great is the ioy that Norwich feeles this daie:
If well we waid the greatneſſe of your mind,
Few words would ſerue, we had but ſmall to ſaie.
But knowing that your goodneſſe takes things well
That well are meant, we boldlie did proceed:
And ſo good queene, both welcome and farewell,
Thine owne we are in heart, in word, and deed.

The quéene liked this deuiſe.

The boy there vpon flang vp his garland, and the quéenes highnes ſaid, This deuiſe is fine. Then the noiſe of muſike began againe, to heare the which the quéene ſtaid a good while, and after departed to the cathedrall church, which was not far from thenſe. Then paſſed ſhe forwards through ſaint Stephans ſtréet, where the firſt pageant was placed in forme following. It was builded ſomewhat in maner like a ſtage of 40 foot long, & in breadth eight foot. From the ſtanding place vpward was a bank framed in maner of a frée ſtone wall, & in the height thereof were written ſentences, that is to ſaie: The cauſes of this common wealth are, God trulie preached, Iuſtice dulie executed, The people obedient, Idleneſſe expelled, Labour cheriſhed, Vniuerſall concord preſerued.

The firſt pageant was in S. Stephans pariſh in this maner.

From the ſtanding place downewards it was beautified with painters worke, artificiallie expreſſing to ſight the portraiture of theſe ſeuerall loomes, and the weauers in them (as it were working) and ouer euerie loome the name thereof, that is to ſaie. Ouer the firſt loome was written, the weauing of worſted: ouer the ſecond, the weauing of ruſſels: ouer the third, the weauing of darnix: ouer the fourth, the weauing of tuft mockado: the fift, the weauing of lace: the ſixt, the weauing of caffa: the ſeuenth, the weauing of fringe. And then was there the portraiture of a matrone, and two or thrée children, and ouer hir head was written theſe words: Good nurture changeth qualities. Vpon the ſtage there ſtood at the one end eight ſmall women children ſpining worſted yarne, and at the other end as manie knitting of worſted yarne hoſe: and in the middeſt of the ſaid ſtage ſtood a pretie boy richlie apparelled, which repreſented the common wealth of the citie. And all the reſt of the ſtage was furniſhed with men, which made the ſaid ſeuerall works, and before euerie man the worke in déed. Euerie thing thus readie, and hir maieſtie come, the child repreſenting the common wealth ſpake to hir highneſſe theſe words following.

How the pageant was beautified with repreſentation of the myſteries of the citie.

Moſt gratious prince, vndoubted ſouereigne queene,
Our onelie ioy next God, and chiefe defenſe:
In this ſmall ſhew, our whole eſtate is ſeene,
The [illegible] we haue, we find proceed from thenſe,
The idle hand hath here no place to feed,
The painfull wight hath ſtill to ſerue his need.
Againe, our ſeat denies our traffike heere,
The ſea too neare decides vs from the reſt,
So weake we were within this doozen yeare,
As care did quench the courage of the beſt:
But good aduiſe hath taught theſe little hands,
To rend in twaine the force of pining bands.
From combed wooll we draw this ſlender threed,
From thenſe the loomes haue dealing with the ſame,
And thenſe againe in order doo proceed,
Theſe ſeuerall works which ſkilfull art dooth frame:
And all to driue dame need into hir caue,
Our heads and hands togither labourd haue.
We bought before the things that now we ſell.
Theſe ſlender impes, their works doo paſſe the waues,
Gods peace and thine, we hold and proſper well,
Of euerie mouth the hands the charges ſaues.
Thus through thy helpe and aid of power diuine,
Dooth Norwich liue, whoſe hearts and goods are thine.

1. Pointing to the ſpinners.
2. Pointing to the loomes.
3. Pointing to the workes.

This ſhew pleaſed hir maieſtie ſo greatlie, as ſhe particularlie viewed the knitting & ſpinning of the children, peruſed the loomes, and noted the ſeuerall works and commodities which were made by theſe means: and then after great thanks by hir giuen to the people, marched towards the market place, where was the ſecond pageant thwarting the ſtréet at the enterance of the market, betwéene maſter Skinner & maſter Quaſh, being in bredth two and fiftie foot of aſſiſe, and was diuided into thrée gates, in the midſt a maine gate, & on either ſide a poſterne: the maine gate in breadth fourtéene foot, each poſterne eight foot, their heights equall to their proportion: ouer each poſterne was as it were a chamber, which chambers were repleniſhed with muſike. Ouer all the gates paſſed a ſtage of eight foot brode, in maner of a pageant, curious, rich, & delitefull. The whole worke, from the pageant downewards, ſéemed to be iaſper & marble. In the forefront towards hir maieſtie was the armes of England on the one ſide the gate, & on the other ſide the *falcon with crowne and ſcepter. The other ſide was beautified with the arms of England on the one ſide of the gate, & the creſt of England on the other. The pageant was furniſht with fiue perſonages apparelled like women. The firſt was the citie of Norwich; the ſecond Debora; the third Iudith; the fourth Heſter; the fift Martia, ſometime quéene of England. At the firſt ſight of the prince, & till hir maieſties comming to the pageant, the muſicians vſed their lowd muſike, and then ceaſſed: wherewith hir highneſſe ſtaied, to whome the perſonage repreſenting the citie of Norwich, did ſpeake in theſe words.

The ſecond pageant with the ſituation of the ſame, and what repreſentations it bare.

*which is hir owne badge.

Theſe muſicians were incloſed in the chambers of the ſaid pageant.

Whom fame reſounds with thundring trump, that rends the ratling ſkies,
And perſeth to the hautie heauens, and thenſe deſcending flies
Through flickering aire: and ſo conioines the ſea & ſhore togither,
In admiration of thy grace, good queene thart welcome hither:
More welcome than Terpſicore was to the towne of Troie.
Sea-faring men by Gemini conceiue not halfe my ioie.
Strong Hercules to Theſeus was neuer ſuch delight,
Nor Niſus to Eurialus as I haue in this ſight.
Penelope did neuer thirſt Vlyſſes more to ſee,
Than I poore Norwich hungred haue to gaine the ſight of thee.
And now that theſe my happie eies behold thy heauenlie face,
The Lord of lords I humblie praie, to bliſſe thy noble grace
With Neſtors life, with Sibils helth, with Creſus ſtocke & ſtore,
With all good gifts of Salomon, and twiſe as manie more.
What ſhuld I ſaie? Thou art my ioy next God, I haue none other,
My princeſſe & my peerleſſe queene, my louing nurſſe and mother.
My goods & lands, my hands and hart, my lims and life are thine,
What is mine owne in right or thought, to thee I doo reſigne.
Grant then (oh gratious ſouereigne queene) this onlie my requeſt,
That that which ſhall be doone in me, be conſtrued to the beſt.
And take in part my ſlender ſhewes, wherein my whole pretenſe
Is for to pleaſe your maieſtie, and end without offenſe.
So ſhall I clap my hands for ioy, and hold my ſelfe as rich
As if I had the gold of Inde, and double twiſe as mich.

The citie of Norwich ſpeaketh to the quéenes maieſtie.

How Norwich is affected to the quéenes highneſſe.

Then ſpake Debora the ſecond perſon.

Where princes ſitting in their thrones ſet God before their ſight
And liue according to his law, and guide their people right,
There doth his bleſſed gifts abound, there kingdoms firmlie ſtand
There force of foes cannot preuaile, nor furie fret the land.
My ſelfe (oh peerleſſe prince) doo ſpeake by proofe of matter paſt,
Which proofe by practiſe I perfourmd, and foild his foes at laſt.
For Iabin king of Canaan, poore Iſraell did ſpite,
And meant by force of furious rage to ouerrun vs quite.
Nine hundred iron chariots, he brought into the field,
With cruell capteine Siſera by force to make vs yeeld.
His force was great, his fraud was more, he fought, we did defend,
And twentie winters long did laſt this warre without an end.
But he that neither ſleepes nor ſlackes ſuch furies to correct,
Appointed me Debora for the iudge of his elect:
And did deliuer Siſera into a womans hand,
I ſlue them all, and ſo in reſt his people held the land.
So mightie prince, that puiſant Lord, hath plaſt thee here to be,
The rule of this triumphant realme alone belongs to thee.
Continue as thou haſt begun, weed out the wicked rout,
Vphold the ſimple, meeke and good, pull downe the proud & ſtout.
Thus ſhalt thou liue and reigne in reſt, & mightie God ſhalt pleaſe,
Thy ſtate be ſure, thy ſubiects ſafe, thy commonwealth at eaſe.
Thy God ſhall grant thee length of life, to glorifie his name,
Thy deeds ſhall be recorded in the booke of laſting fame.

The application of the former examples.

Then ſpake Iudith the third perſon.

Oh floure of grace, oh prime of Gods elect,
Oh mightie queene and finger of the Lord,
Did God ſometime by me poore wight correct
The champion ſtout, that him and his abhord?
Then be thou ſure thou art his mightie hand,
To conquer thoſe which him and thee withſtand.
The rage of foes Bethulia did oppreſſe,
The people faint were readie for to yeeld;
God aided me poore widow nerthelesse,
To enter into Holofernes field,
And with this ſword by his directing hand,
To ſlaie his fo, and quiet ſo the land.
If this his grace were giuen to me poore wight,
If widowes hand could vanquiſh ſuch a fo:
Then to a prince of thy ſurpaſſing might,
What tyrant liues but thou maiſt ouerthro?
Perſeuere then his ſeruant as thou art,
And hold for aie a noble victors part.

The applicatiō of the former examples

Then Heſter ſpake the fourth perſon.

The fretting heads of furious foes haue ſkill,
As well by fraud as force to find their preie.
In ſmiling lookes dooth lurke a lot as ill,
As where both ſterne and ſturdie ſtreams doo ſwaie,
Thy ſelfe oh queene, a proofe haſt ſeene of this,
So well as I poore Heſter haue Iwis.
As Iabins force did Iſraell perplex,
And Holofernes fierce Bethulia beſiege,
So Hamans ſlights ſought me and mine to vex,
Yet ſhewd a face of ſubiect to his liege.
But force no fraud, nor tyrant ſtrong can trap,
Thoſe whom the Lord in his defenſe dooth wrap.

The application of the former exãples.

The prooſes I ſpeake by vs haue erſt bin ſeene,
The prooſes I ſpeake, to thee are not vnknowne.
Thy God thou knowſt moſt dread and ſoueraigne queene,
A world of foes of thine hath ouerthrowne,
And hither now triumphantlie dooth call
Thy noble grace, the comfort of vs all.
Dooſt thou not ſee the ioie of all this flocke?
Vouchſafe to view their paſſing gladſome cheare,
Be ſtill (good queene) their refuge and their rocke,
As they are thine to ſerue in loue and feare:
So fraud, nor force, nor forreine fo may ſtand
Againſt the ſtrength of thy moſt puiſſant hand.

Then ſpake Martia the fift perſon.

With long diſcourſe (oh puiſſant prince) ſome tract of time we ſpend,
Vouchſafe yet now a little more, and then we make an end.
The thundring blaſt of fame, whereof dame Norwich firſt did ſpeake,
Not onelie ſhooke the aire and ſkies, but all the earth did breake,
It rent vp graues, and bodies raiſd, ech ſpirit tooke his place,
And this alonelie word was heard: Here comes the pearle of grace,
Here coms the iewell of the world, hir peoples whole delight,
The paragon of preſent time, and prince of earthlie might.
The voice was ſtrange, the wonder more: for when we viewd the earth
Ech prince that earſt had reigned here, receiud againe his breath,
And with his breath, a libertie to hold againe his place,
If anie one amongſt vs all exceed your noble grace.
Some comfort euerie one conceiud to catch againe his owne,
His vtmoſt ſkill was trimlie vſde, to haue his vertues knowne.
The plaies ſurpaſſe my ſkill to tell. But when ech one had ſaid,
Apollo did himſelfe appeare and made vs all diſmaid.
Will you contend with hir (quoth he) within whoſe ſacred breſt
Dame Pallas and my ſelfe haue framd our ſoueraigne ſeat of reſt?
Whoſe ſkill directs the muſes nine, whoſe grace dooth Venus ſtaine:
Hir eloquence like Mercurie: like Iuno in hir traine?
Whoſe God is that eternall Ioue which holds vs all in awe?
Beleeue me, you exceed the bounds of equitie and lawe.
Therewith they ſhronke themſelues aſide, not one I could eſpie,
They coucht them in their caues againe and that full quietlie.
Yet I that Martia hight, which ſometime ruld this land,
As queene for thirtie three yeares ſpace, gat licence at his hand,
And ſo Gurguntius did, my husbands father deere,
Which built this towne and caſtell both, to make our homage here,
Which homage mightie queene accept: the realme and right is thine,
The crowne, the ſcepter, and the ſword to thee we doo reſigne,
And wiſh to God, that thou maiſt reigne, twiſe Neſtors yeares in peace,
Triumphing ouer all thy foes, to all our ioies increaſe, Amen.

Herewith ſhe paſſed vnder the gate, with ſuch thanks as plainelie expreſſed hir noble nature: and the muſicians within the gate vpon their ſoft inſtruments vſed broken muſike, and one ſang this dittie.

A dittie ſoong to ſoft muſicke at the queenes entrance vnder the gate.

From ſlumber ſoft as I fell faſt aſleepe,
From ſleepe to dreame, from dreame to deepe delight,
Ech gem the gods had giuen the world to keepe
In princelie wiſe came preſent to my ſight:
Such ſolace then did ſinke into my mind,
As mortall man on mould could neuer find.
The gods did ſtriue, and yet their ſtrifes were ſweet,
Ech one would haue a vertue of hir owne.
Dame Iuno thought the higheſt place moſt meet
For hir, bicauſe of riches was hir throne.
Dame Venus thought by reaſon of hir loue
That ſhe might claime the higheſt place aboue.
The virgins ſtate Diana ſtill did praiſe,
And Ceres praiſd the fruit of fertile ſoile:
And Prudence did dame Pallas chieflie raiſe,
Minerua all for eloquence did ſtriue,
They ſmild to ſee their quarelling eſtate,
And Ioue himſelfe decided their debate.
My ſweets (quoth he) leaue off your ſugred ſtrife,
In equall place I haue aſſignd you all:
A ſoueraigne wight there is that beareth life,
In whoſe ſweete hart I haue incloſd you all.
Of England ſoile ſhe is the ſoueraigne queene,
Your vigors there doo floriſh freſh and greene.
They ſkipt for ioy, and gaue their franke conſent,
The noiſe reſounded to the hautie ſkie:
With one lowd voice they cried all, content,
They clapt their hands, and therewith waked I.
The world and they concluded with a breath,
And wiſht long reigne to queene Eliſabeth.

The place of the queenes abode during the time of hir tariance in Norwich.

Herewith ſhe paſſed through the market place, which was goodlie garniſhed, and thenſe through the other ſtreets which were trimlie decked, directlie to the cathedrall church, where Te Deum was ſoong, and after ſeruice ſhe went to the biſhops palace, where hir maieſtie kept the time ſhe continued in Norwich. All this was on saturdaie the ſixteenth of Auguſt 1578. On the next daie after, which was ſundaie, when princes commonlie come not abroad (and time is occupied with ſermons and laudable exerciſes) T. C. was to watch a conuenient ſeaſon, where and how might be vttered the things that were prepared for paſtime. And ſo vpon mondaie before ſupper, he made a deuiſe, as though Mercurie had beene ſent from the gods, to requeſt the queene to come abroad, & behold what was deuiſed for hir welcome, the whole matter whereof dooth follow.

The manner of Mercuries coch & meſſage to the queene, requeſting hir highneſſe to come abroad, and ſe what paſtims the gods haue prouided for a noble a prince.

The coch that Mercurie came in vnto the queene, was cloſelie kept in ſecret a long ſeaſon, and when the time came it muſt paſſe towards the court, it had a trumpetter with it, and the cochman was made to driue ſo faſt, as the horſſes ſhould ſeeme to flie, which was ſo well obſerued, as the people wondered at the ſwiftneſſe therof, and followed it in ſuch flocks and multitudes, that ſcarſe in a great greene (where the preaching place is) might be found roome for anie more people. And when the coch approched in the hearing of a trumpet, the trumpetter ſounded, and ſo came in to the greene ſounding, vntill the coch was full placed before a window at the which the queene ſtood, and might be plainelie ſeene and openlie viewed. When Mercurie had eſpied hir highneſſe, he ſkipped out of the coch, and being on the ground, gaue a iumpe or two, and aduanced himſelfe in ſuch a ſort, that the queene ſmiled at the boldneſſe of the boie. Thus Mercurie beholding the queene with great courage and audacitie, at the length bowed downe his head, and immediatlie ſtood bolt vpright, and ſhaked his rod, and ſo began his ſpeech with a moſt aſſured countenance, and brauelie pronounced it in deed, to his great liking and commendation.

Muſe not good queene at me that meſſage brings
From Ioue or iuſt Iehoua Lord of might,
No earthlie god, yet gouerns mortall things,
And ſprites diuine, and ſhining angels bright.
This lord of late to ſhew his mightie power,
Hath wonders wrought when world lookt leaſt therefore:
For at his becke, this daie and preſent hower,
The heauens ſhakt, the thunderbolts did rore,
The earth did moue, the dead therein did riſe,
And out of graue the ghoſts of men are gone,
The wandring ſprites that houered in the ſkies
Dropt downe from aire, for world to wonder on.
The ſaints themſelues that ſat in glorie great,
Were ſent in haſt to worke Iehouas will,
And I that oft my reſtleſſe wings doo beat,
Was cald to vſe my wings and office ſtill.

He reuealeth what he is by office.

A common poſt is Mercurie you know,
When he commands that made the world of nought.
And flies as faſt as arrow out of bow,
When meſſage may expreſſe Iehouas thought.
Whoſe power diuine full long yet this hath ſeene,
That in this place ſhould lodge a ſacred queene.
And weighing well, the prince whereof I ſpeake,
Might wearie war of common paſtimes heere,
(For that he knowes hir iudgement is not weake)
Deuiſd aboue, below there ſhould appeere
(To welcome hir) ſome ſights that rare ſhould ſeeme,
And carleſſe ſtood, what world thereof did deeme,
So that good queene, you take them well in worth.

Here ſights of ſuch ſorte as Mercuries [illegible]

No ſooner had Iehoua meant theſe things,
But clouds clapt hands, and ſoules of men came
Of heauen gates, yea goodlie crowned kings
Were flowen abroad from bleſſed Abrams breſt:
Some in the aire, and tops of trees did reſt,
Some fell on towres and ſtatelie houſes high,
Some ſunke in ſeas, whoſe names were drowned now,
And ſome did light on land where euerie eie
May them behold, and note their manners throw.
And therewithall the blacke infernall ſpreets
Ran out of hell, the earth ſo trembling than,
And like yoong lads they hopt about the ſtreets,
The ſatyres wild, in forme and ſhape of man,
Crept through the woods, and thickets full of breers,
The water nymphs, and feiries ſtreight appeers
In vncouth formes and faſhion ſtrange to view:
The hags of hell that hatefull are of kind,
To pleaſe the time had learnd a nature new,
And all thoſe things that man can call to mind,
Were glad to come and doo their dutie throw.
I ſeeing this, cald for my coch in haſt,
Abide ſir boie, then ſaid Iehoua now,
Thou goeſt not yet vntill a prince be plaſt,
Where I appoint, thou haſt nothing to ſaie.
Then ſtill I ſtood, to know what ſhould be done.

Mercurie is attentiue to his charge.

With that a ſwarme of people euerie waie
Like little ants about the fields gan run,
Some to prouide for pompe and triumph great,
Some for good fare, yea houſhold cates and meat,
And ſome they ran to ſeeke where poets dwell,
To pen foorth ſhews and paint out trifles well.
Some haild and puld to bring the carrege in,
Some ran to gaze on triumph neere at hand,
And ſome ſtood mute, as they amazd had bin
To ſee a court and princelie noble band
Come marching on, and make heere their abode.
But when I ſaw the carrege heere vnlode,
And well had weid the wonders I haue told,

The charge giuen by Iupiter to Mercurie for ỹ recreation of the queene.

O mightie God (quoth I) now giue me leaue
To go from thee ſome meſſage to vnfold,
That by my ſpeech the hearers may conceiue.
Thy godhead great hath brought this princeſſe here.
It ſhall be ſo (quoth he) diſpatch and part,
And tell hir that ſhe is to me ſo deere,
That I appoint by mans deuiſe and art,
That euerie daie ſhe ſhall ſee ſundrie ſhoes,

If that ſhe pleaſe to walke and take the aire,
And that ſo ſoone as out of doore ſhe goes
(If time doo ſerue and weather waxeth faire)
Some od deuiſe ſhall meet hir highneſſe ſtreight,
To make hir ſmile, and eaſe hir burthened breſt,
And take away the cares and things of weight
That princes feele, that findeth greateſt reſt.
When I had thus receiud my charge at full,
My golden rod in liuelie hand I tooke,
And bad in haſt my flieng horſes pull.
But yer I paſt, I gan about me looke,
To ſee that coch, and ech thing gallant were:
So downe I came all winged as you ſee.
And ſith I haue eſpide that princeſſe there,
That greateſt kings doo ſue to by degree,
And manie mo that ſues no whit, doo feare
I kiſſe hir ſteps, and ſhew my maiſters will,
And leaue with hir ſuch graces from aboue,
As alwaies ſhall command hir peoples loue,
(Uphold hir reigne, mainteine hir regall ſtate,
Find out falſe harts, and make of ſubiects true,
Plant perfect peace, and root vp all debate)
So with this grace good queene now heere adue,
For I may now on earth no longer ſtaie,
Thus ſeruants muſt to maiſters will obaie.

The quéenes rare eſtate deſcribed.

Mercurie hauing thus ſpoken to the quéene, whoſe gratious inclination is ſuch, as will not haue anie thing dutifullie offered to paſſe vnregarded, was well heard, hir highnes ſtanding at a window, and the ſpéech verie well taken and vnderſtood. Mercurie as he came paſſed awaie, at whoſe coch the people that had ſeldome ſéene ſuch a deuiſe maruelled, and gazed verie much; for it had horſſes to draw it finelie painted and winged, to as great ſhew and order of that it preſented, as wit might imagine: the cochman ſutable to the ſame, and a trumpetter in right good garments, as decent for that purpoſe as could be deuiſed. But the coch was made and framed on ſuch a faſhion as few men haue ſéene: the whole whereof was couered with birds and naked ſpirits, hanging by the héeles in the aire and clouds, cunninglie painted out, as though by ſome thunder cracke they had béene ſhaken and tormented: yet ſtaied by power diuine in their places, to make the more wonder and miraculous ſhew. And on the middle of that coch ſtood a high compaſſed tower bedecked with golden and gaie iewels, in the top whereof was placed a faire plume of white feathers, all to beſpanged and trimmed to the moſt brauerie: Mercurie himſelfe in blew ſatin lined with cloth of gold, his garments cut and ſlaſhed on the fineſt maner, a pecked hat of the ſame colour, as though it ſhould cut ouer the wind aſunder; and on the ſame a paire of wings, and wings on his héeles likewiſe. And on his golden rod were little wings alſo, about the which rod were two wrigling or ſcralling ſerpents, which ſéemed to haue life when the rod was moued or ſhaken. So in this ſort and forme was Mercurie and his coch ſet foorth, and indéed at ſuch a ſeaſon as a great ſort looked not for anie ſhew, nor things were readie, as ſome thought, to performe that was neceſſarie and expected: yet hap was ſo good, and the gratious fauour of the prince, that all was well taken, and conſtrued to the beſt meaning of the deuiſor. So ended that daies deuiſe, which offered occaſion to further matter.

The deſcription of Mercuries coch.

The deſcription of Mercurie, his attire, [illegible]

On tueſdaie following (for before that daie by meanes of the weather the quéene went not abrode) a verie pretie and pleaſant ſhew was performed before hir highnes without ſaint Benets gates, as ſhe went towards Coſſie parke to hunt. At which ſeaſon, although the deuiſor was not well prouided of things neceſſarie for a ſhew (by meane of ſome croſſing cauſes in the citie) yet hearing the quéene rode abrode, determined as he might (and yet by helpe of fréends and hap) verie well to venture the hazard of a ſhew, and to be full in the waie where hir highneſſe ſhuld paſſe towards hir dinner. In which determination manie doubts were to be caſt, and manie perſuaded him to tarrie a better time. But conſidering how time rolled on, and daies and houres did waſt (without dooing anie thing promiſed and not performed) he haſtilie prepared his boies and men with all their furnitures, and ſo ſet forward with two coches handſomlie trimmed. The common people beholding the maner thereof, and gréedie to gaze on that ſhould be doone, followed as their fanſies did lead them: ſo that when the deuiſor and his retinue came into the open field, there was as great a traine and preaſe about the ſhew, as came with the court at that inſtant, which graced much the matter, and gaue it ſome expected hope of good ſucceſſe.

The deuiſor ventureth the hazard of a ſhew.

First, there was a fained deuiſe, that Uenus and Cupid were thruſt out of heauen, and walking on the earth, met a philoſopher; who demanded from whenſe they came. They told the philoſopher what they were, and he replied, and began with truth & tants to tickle them ſo néere, that Uenus fell in a great anger, and Cupid ran awaie, and left his mother and the philoſopher diſputing togither. But Cupid bicauſe he would be nouriſhed ſomewhere, ran to the court, and there ſought for ſuccor, & incountring the quéene began to complaine his ſtate and his mothers, and told how the philoſopher had handled them both. But finding neither anſwer nor aid, he returned againe, but not to his mother, for ſhe was fallen mad vpon a conceipt that ſhe was not made of. And Cupid wandering in the world, met with dame Chaſtitie & hir maids, called Modeſtie, Temperance, Good exerciſe, and Shamefaſtnes: and ſhe with hir foure maids incountring Cupid in a goodlie coch, and without anie honeſt gard waiting on him, ſet vpon him, threw him out of his golden ſeat, trod on his pompe, ſpoiled him of his counterfeit godhead and cloke, & tooke awaie his bow and quiuer of arrows, the one headed with lead, and the other with gold, and ſo ſent him like a fugitiue awaie, and mounted vp into the coch hir ſelfe and hir maids, and ſo came to the queene, and reherſed what had hapned. Although this was done in hir view, & bicauſe (ſaid Chaſtitie) that the quéene had choſen the beſt life, ſhe gaue the quéene Cupids bow, to learne to ſhoot at whom ſhe pleaſed, ſith none could wound hir highneſſe heart, it was méet (ſaid Chaſtitie) that ſhe ſhould doo with Cupids bow & arrows what ſhe pleaſed; and ſo did Chaſtitie depart as ſhe ſaid to the powers diuine. Cupid in the meane while wandering in the world had found out Wantonneſſe and Riot, who ſoone fell into beggerie and ruine (a ſpectacle to be looked into) and felt ſuch dailie miſerie with Wantonneſſe and Riot, that Cupid was forced to fling awaie once againe, and hazard himſelfe to fall into the hands of naughtie people, or where fortune aſſigned: and comming abrode, happened vpon the philoſopher, who talked with him againe, told him his errors, and other points of pride and preſumption; declaring it was a great blaſphemie & abuſe, to report & beléeue that in heauen were anie other gods but one, who had the onelie rule of all, & that made all of naught. In which reaſoning & diſcourſe Cupid waxed warme, & yet in his greateſt heat knew not how nor where to coole himſelfe, at which time came Wantonneſſe & Riot, & perſuaded Cupid to plaie no longer the foole in ſtriuing with philoſophers, and go awaie with them. So Cupid departed, & went awaie with Wantonneſſe and Riot, & the philoſopher remained, & declared that all abuſes & follies ſhuld come to no better end than preſentlie was expreſſed by the miſerie of Wantonneſſe, Riot, and Cupid. Then Modeſtie and hir fellows, leauing their miſtreſſe dame Chaſtitie with the powers diuine, came ſoft and faire in their miſtreſſe coch, ſinging a ſong of chaſte life, as héere vnder followeth.

The whole manner of the deuiſe or ſhew.

Dame Chaſtitie & hir maids incounter with Cupid.

What aſſociats Cupid found out to keepe him companie.

Chaſtitie and hir maids matched togither, &c.

Chaſt life liues long and lookes on world and wicked waies,
Chaſt life for loſſe of pleaſures ſhort, dooth win immortall praiſe.
Chaſt life hath merrie moods,
and ſoundlie taketh reſt,

Chaſt life is pure as babe new borne, that hugs in mothers breſt.
Lewd life cuts off his dates, and ſoone runs out his date,
Confounds good wits, breeds naughtie bloud,
 and weakens mans eſtate.
Lewd life the Lord doth loth,
 the law and land miſlikes,
The wiſe will ſhun, fond fooles doo ſeeke, and God ſore plages and ſtrikes.
Chaſt life may dwell alone, and find few fellowes now,
And ſit in regall throne,
 and ſearch lewd manners throw.
Chaſt life feares no miſhap,
 the whole account is made,
When ſoule from worldlie cares is crept,
 and ſits in ſacred ſhade.
Lewd life is laught to ſcorne,
 and put to great diſgrace,
In hollow caues it hides the head, and walks with muffled face,
Found out and pointed at,
 a monſter of the mind,
A cankred worme that conſcience eates, and ſtrikes cleere ſenſes blind.
Chaſt life a pretious pearle, dooth ſhine as bright as ſun,
The faire houre glaſſe of daies and yeeres, that neuer out will run.
The beautie of the ſoule,
 the bodies bliſſe and eaſe,
A thing that leaſt is lookt vnto, yet moſt the mind ſhall pleaſe.

And when the ſong was ended, modeſtie ſent (as ſhe ſaid ſhe was) from hir maiſtreſſe, ſpake to the quéene a good ſeaſon, and ſo the matter ended. For this ſhew the deuiſer had gratious words of the quéene openlie and often pronounced by hir highneſſe. On the ſame daie the miniſter of the Dutch church, pronouncing to hir maieſtie at hir being abrode the oration following, preſented the cup therein mentioned, which was eſtéemed to be worth fiftie pounds, verie curiouſlie and artificiallie wrought.

Oratio ad ſereniſſimam Angliæ reginam habita 19. *Auguſti 1578 à mini*ſtro eccleſiæ Belgogermanicæ Nordouici in loco publico.

Quinam oratores antiqua ętate pręclariſſima laudatiſſimi extiterunt.

Magna oratoribus, qui percelebratorum ætate vixerunt fuit laus, ſereniſſima regina, quòd indicum animo: partim ſuauiloquentia, partim poſita rei perſonæque ante ipſorum oculos calamitate, in quemcunque vellent animi habitum transformarent. Prius membrum non vulgarem nobis ob oculos ponit hominum facilitatem, quòd adeò ſequaces dictóque audientes fuerint, vt ſe linguis duci paterentur. Poſterius magnam vbique apud gentes, quarum reſpublica optabili ordine fuit conſtituta, obtinuit gratiam: longè autem maiorem apud eos, qui Chriſto nomen dederunt: omnium verò maximam apud te (ô ſereniſſima regina) eccleſiæ Chriſti nutrix, cuius animum verbo Dei obſequentem inſtruxit, non fucatus hic ſermo, ſed Chriſti ſpiritus, pietatíſque zelus. Ipſiſſima piorum calamitas afflictorúmque lachrymæ, lachrymæ inquam Chriſti fidelium te commouerunt, miſera diſperſáque Chriſti membra quibuſuis iniurijs obiecta, mille iam mortibus territa, in tutelam ſalutémque animi iuxta ac corporis recipere ac protegere. Ob hæc ſingularia tua in nos pietatis beneficia, & quòd ſub tutore optimo magiſtratu in hac tua Nordouicenſi vrbe (quam maieſtas tua nobis ob Chriſti religionem exulantibus domicilij loco clementer conceſſit) viuimus, adde quòd populi in nos animum fauorabilem experimur, inprimis Deo patri, & Domino vnico ſeruatori noſtro Ieſu Chriſto, deinde & tibi ſereniſſima regina immortales non quas debemus ſed quas poſſimus agimus gratias. Porrò humile quidem & vnicum tamen noſtrum eſt votum, animi noſtri gratitudinem maieſtati tuæ oſtendere. Ecce igitur nullum munus, ſed animum noſtrum: nullum regium ſplendorem, ſed pietatis poſteritatíſque monumentum ſereniſſimæ tuæ maieſtati conſecratum. Hoc autem eo gratius maieſtati tuæ fore confidimus, quòd ex inculpati pijſſimíq; Ioſephi hiſtoria, Dei erga maieſtatem tuam bonitas, ad viuum ſit delineata, quem nulla aſtutia, nullum robur, nulla denique regnandi libido; ſed fides conſtans, chriſtiani pectoris pietas, cæleſtíſque virtus, ſingulari Dei fauore ex ſanguinaria fratrum conſpiratione, mortíſque metu, ad ſummam dignitatem, regníque decus euexerunt. In huius fratres non aliena videtur prouerbialis illa apud Hebræos ſententia, Inuidia malarum rerum appetitus, & ſtudium vanæ gloriæ hominibus ſæpiſſimè occaſio ſunt ſui interitus. Tamen quòd Ioſephi animum attinet, ea fuit præditus & temperantia & fortitudine, vt nimis iniquus ſimul & prauus cenſeri poſſet, qui eum vel minimo vindicandi affectu accuſare velit; adeò Dei prouidentia & ſe & omne vitæ ſuæ ſtudium, vitæ inquam in alieno regno periclitantis, commiſit, vt non aliunde quàm à ſolo Dei nutu pendêre viſus ſit. Sed quorſum iſta? In te ne hæc ipſa aliáque conſimilia (ô ſereniſſima regina) & regni tui ratione omnium oculis conſpicua ſunt? Hæc inquam eſſe eccleſiæ Chriſti fœliciſſimum gaudium, ſpirituale diadema, & ſummum decus, huius verò regni verè regium ſplendorem, atque perennem gloriam, quis niſi mente captus inficias ire poteſt? Pijſſimè tu quidem ſingulari Dei bonitate animum Ioſephi tum in regni tui conſeruatione, tum in regno Chriſti amplificando imitata es (ô nutrix eccleſiæ Dei fideliſſima) ſolius enim Dei eſt hunc per res (prout hominum oculis ſunt ſubiectæ) ſecundas diſperdere, illum autem per quæuis tētationum genera rerúmque diſcrimina extollere. Quos vt vaſa ſuæ miſericordiæ agnoſcit, ita etiam & bonitate & ſpiritus ſui tum conſolatione, tum fortitudine ad æternæ vitæ fœlicitatem proſequitur. Quod noſtrum votum ratum eſſe, maieſtatem tuam regníque ordinem ſpirituali prudentia ac ſapientia ſtabilire, eámque in longam ætatem ſeruare, tuæ item maieſtatis ſubditos vera ſui cognitione magis ac magis imbuere, dignetur bonus ille & clemens Deus, per merita filij ſui Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti, Amen.

Beneficiorum à regia maieſtate collatorum agnitio cum obſequio &c.

Monumentum antiquum regię maieſtati exhibitum.

Ioſephus inſigniter laudatus, neque immeritò.

Regia maieſtas in omnibus Ioſepho ęquiparata.

Regiæ maieſtati poſt orationem oblatum eſt monumentum aliquod, in cuius ſuperficie artificiosè ſculpta erat hiſtoria Ioſephi: ex lib. Geneſios.

In circumferentia verò hoc carmen.

Innocuum pietas ad regia ſceptra Ioſephum,
 Ex manibus fratrum, carnificíſque, rapit:
Carcere & inſidijs ſic te regina tuorum
 Ereptam duxit culmina ad iſta Deus.

Inſcriptio erat in ipſius capacitate ſcripta in orbem, hoc modo.

Sereniſſimæ Angliæ reginæ Eliſabethæ, eccleſiæ Belgicæ Nordouici ob religionem exulãtes, hoc monumentum & pietatis & poſteritatis ergò conſecrabant, Anno ſalutis humanæ [illegible]8.

In interiore ipſius parte erat inſigne ſerpentis in gyrum conuoluti, cui media inſidebat columba, cum hoc Chriſti elogio: Prudens vt ſerpens, ſimplex vt columba.

The miniſter of the Dutch church his oration in Engliſh.

The oratours (moſt gratious queene) which liued in the age of them that woone greateſt renowme, were highlie commended for that they could transforme the iudges minds, partlie by eloquence, and partlie by ſetting downe before their eies the calamitie of the thing and perſon they ſpake of, into what diſpoſition them liſted. The firſt part declareth vnto vs no common felicitie of men, in that they were ſo willing in following, and attentiue in hearing, as they would ſuffer themſelues to be lead by eloquence. The laſt obteined great fauour amongſt all nations, whoſe common weale was gouerned in good order, and farre greater amongſt the chriſtians: but greateſt of all with thee (ô moſt excellent queene) the nurſſe of Chriſt his church, whoſe mind obedient to Gods word, the ſpirit of Chriſt, and zeale of godlineſſe, and not this prophane kind of ſpeech hath inſtructed. The verie calamitie of godlie men and teares of the afflicted, the teares I ſaie of faithfull chriſtians haue thoroughlie mooued thee to defend and protect the miſerable ſerable and diſperſed members of Chriſt obiect to euerie kind of iniurie, before beaten in peeces by a thouſand deaths, with the ſafetie and preſeruation as well of mind as bodie. For theſe thy ſingular benefits of godlineſſe towards vs, and that we liue vnder ſo good a tutor, being magiſtrate in this thy citie of Norwich, which thy maieſtie hath of clemencie granted vnto vs for a manſion place, which were baniſhed for Chriſt his religion; and moreouer that we find the minds of the people fauourable towards vs, firſt wee giue immortall thanks, not ſuch as wee ought, but ſuch as we are able vnto God the father, and the Lord our onelie ſauiour Ieſus Chriſt; and then vnto thee moſt mercifull queene. Moreouer, it is our humble and yet our onelie petition, to ſhew vnto your maieſtie the thankefulneſſe of our mind. Behold therefore dedicated to your moſt excellent maieſtie, not anie gift but our mind, no princelie iewell but a monument of godlineſſe and poſteritie. The which we hope will be ſo much the more acceptable to your maieſtie; for bicauſe the goodnes of God towards your maieſtie is liuelie drawne out of the hiſtorie of the innocent and moſt godlie Ioſeph, whom neither policie, ſtrength nor deſire of bearing rule, but conſtant faith, godlineſſe of a chriſtian heat, and heauenlie vertue by Gods ſingular mercie deliuered from the bloudie conſpiracie of his brethren and feare of death, and brought vnto high dignitie & roiall kingdome. To whoſe brethren that prouerbiall ſentence of the Hebrewes is verie fitlie alluded: Enuie being the deſire of euill things, and couetouſneſſe of tranſitorie renowme, is oftentimes the occaſion of mans deſtruction. But touching the mind of Ioſeph, the ſame was indued with ſuch temperance and fortitude, that he might be thought no leſſe vniuſt than wicked, that would accuſe him ſo much as with the leaſt affection of reuengement: ſo wholie did he commit himſelfe and all the gouernement of his life, his life I ſay put in hazard in a ſtrange kingdome vnto the prouidence of God, that he ſeemed to hang of no other thing than the onelie will of God. But to what end ſpeake I this? Are not theſe ſelfe ſame things, and others their like (ô moſt excellent queene) by the eies of all men clearlie beheld in [illegible] the order of thy kingdome? What man (I ſaie) hauing his wits, can denie theſe things to be the moſt happie ioy, ſpirituall crowne, & chiefeſt ornament of Chriſtes church, & trulie of this kingdome the princelie beautie and perpetuall renowne? Thou ſurelie dooſt folow moſt holilie the mind of Ioſeph, by the ſingular goodneſſe of God, as well in preſeruing thy kingdome, as in amplifieng the kingdome of Chriſt (ô thou moſt faithfull nurſe of the church of God.) For it is in God onelie to deſtroie this man by proſperitie (as the world ſeeth) and aduance another by al kinds of aduerſities, tentations, & dangers. Whom as he acknowlegeth the veſſels of his mercie, ſo by his goodneſſe togither with the conſolation and ſtrength of his ſpirit, he dooth bring them to the happineſſe of eternall life. Which our petition that good and mercifull God grant may be ratified, in eſtabliſhing your maieſtie and gouernance of your kingdome with ſpirituall wiſedome and vnderſtanding, in preſeruing the ſame full manie years, and induing your maieſties ſubiects more and more with true knowledge of him, for his ſonnes ſake our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, Amen.

What oratours were beſt commended in former times of beſt renowme.

An acknowledgement of benefits by hir maieſtie with dutifulnes for the ſame.

A monument of antiquitie preſented to hir maieſtie.

Ioſeph ſingularlie commended & not without cauſe.

The queenes maieſtie compared to Ioſeph, &c.

The oration ended, there was a certeine monument preſented to hir maieſtie, in the vper part whereof was artificiallie grauen the hiſtorie of Ioſeph out of Geneſis. In the inner part of the ſame there was the figure of a ſerpent, interfolding it ſelfe: in the middeſt whereof did ſit a doue with this ſentence of Chriſt, Matth. 10, 16. Wiſe as the ſerpent, and meeke as the doue. In the circumference or compaſſe thereof was theſe verſes to be read.

To roiall ſcepter, godlineſſe,
　Ioſeph the innocent,
Dooth take from brothers bloudie hands,
　and murtherers intent.
So thee, O queene, the Lord hath led from priſon and deceit
Of thine, vnto theſe higheſt tops of your princelie eſtate.

On wedneſdaie hir highneſſe dined at my lord of Surreis, where were the French ambaſſadors alſo, at a moſt rare and delicate dinner and banket. At which ſeaſon the deuiſer did watch with his ſhew (called Manhood & Deſert) at my lord of Surreis backe dore, going to the quéenes barge: but the roome was ſo little, that neither the ſhot, the armed men, nor the plaiers could haue place conuenient. Whervpon he and his aſſiſtants tooke boats, and conueied their people downe the water, towards a landing place that they hoped the queene would come vnto. And there hauing althings in redineſſe, they houered on the water thrée long houres, by which meanes the night came on, and ſo they were faine to withdraw themſelues and go homeward, truſting for a better time and occaſion, which in déed was offered the next daie after by the quéenes maieſties owne good motion, who told the deuiſer ſhe would ſée what paſtimes were prepared, as hereafter you ſhall perceiue by the diſcourſe of theſe matters, and by this ſhew of Manhood, and the ſhew of the Nymphes.

The quéenes maieſtie is banketted at the earle of Surreis.

Neuertheleſſe, as hir maieſtie returned homeward; within Biſhops gate at the hoſpitall doore, maſter Stephan Limbert, maſter of the grammar ſchoole in Norwich ſtood readie to render hir an oration. Hir maieſtie drew neare vnto him, & thinking him fearefull, ſaid gratiouſlie vnto him: Be not afraid. He anſwered hir againe in Engliſh: I thanke your maieſtie for your good incouragement: & then with good courage entered into this oration following.

O ſingular affabilitie of a prince to put awaie a ſubiects baſhfulneſſe.

Ad illuſtriſſimam principem Eliſabetham, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ reginam &c: ante fores πτωχοδοχεῖου Nor*douicenſis, oratio Stephani Limberti* ludimagiſtri publici.

*AEgyptum fama eſt inundante Nilo (ſereniſſima regina) & aureo Pactoli flumine quotannis Lidiam irrigari, quæ res in ijs agris maxima fecunditatis cauſa putatur. In nos autem atq; adeò vniuerſam Angliam, quæ latè patet, non è Tmolo aut alijs neſcio quibus montibus, ſed ex illo perenni & vberrimo fonte bonitatis tuæ, multi maximiq; pietatis, iuſticiæ, manſuetudinis, aliorúmq; innumerabilium bonorum, præ quibus iam viluit aurum & obſoleuit, copioſiſſimi riui profluxerunt. Atq; vt ex infinitis vel vnum leuiter attingam, propterea quòd de pluribus dicere nec eſt huius loci & temporis nec facultatis meæ. Inſignem illam miſericordiam celſitudinis tuæ, nobiliſſima regina, & ad leuandum pauperrimorum hominum inopiam incredibilem propenſionem, qua de plurimis virtutibus nulla Deo gratior (*πρὸς γὰρ Διός εἰσιν ἅπαντες πτῶχοι vt canit Homerus) in ſumma principe nulla mortalibus admirabilior eſſe poteſt, quibus tandem laudibus efferemus? Quàm honorificis verbis proſequemur? πτωχοδοχεῖον, hoc eſt, hoſpitium pauperum celeberrimum eſt apud omnes poſteros regiæ virtutis atq; beneficentiæ monumentum futurum, inſtitutum quidem ab illuſtriſſimo Henrico patre celſitudinis tuæ, à nobiliſſimo Edouardo fratre

Egregiæ necnon impares Angliæ dotes.

Henricus & Edouardus reges, necnon Eliſabetha regina præcipui benefactores agnoſcuntur.

tre maximis tabulis conſignatum, a tua verò maieſtate, quod non minorem laudem meretur, Crinlefordienſibus fundis & poſſeſsionibus egregiè nuper auctum atq; amplificatum, vt non tam alienis iam ornamentis, quàm proprijs virtutibus meritò lætari poſsis. Recordata quippe es pro tua ſingulari prudentia atq; eruditione, diuinam illam ſapientiſsimi Platonis legem, quam vndecimo de legibus libro ſcriptam reliquit, πτωχὸς μηδεὶς ἡμῖν ἐν τῇ πόλει γιγνέσθω. Tantam igitur benignitatem, tam eximiam & incredibilem miſericordiam tuam (illuſtriſsima princeps) quibus complectemur ſtudijs? Quibus officijs, aut qua voce grati animi voluntatem teſtificabimur? Cùm enim omnes referendæ gratiæ ſtudio & labore, vel accuratiſsimas rationes exquiſiuerimus, ne vnius quidem huius beneficij, quo nos auguſtiſsimæ maieſtati tuæ obſtrictos eſſe & deuinctos agnoſcimus, magnitudinem aſſequi poterimus. Superabimur vel ab hoc vno & ſingulari merito, nedum ſperandum eſt, vt immenſo reliquorum meritorum pelago, quod tum in omnes tibi ſubditos publicè & generatim, tum in hanc ciuitatem propriè ac particulatim exundauit, pares eſſe queamus. Verè nos iam ὄλβιον incolimus, & in beatis illis inſulis de quibus meminit Heſiodus παρ' ὠκεανὸν βαθυδίνην ætatem agimus, qui non modò frugibus, lana, pecore, alijſq; ſubſidijs humanæ vitæ ſed multo magis veræ religionis verbiq; diuini, in quibus animi ſolùm acquieſcunt, pretioſiſsimis opibus abundamus. Sunt qui Britanniam alterum orbem appellârunt, quod hac ætate noſtra dici rectiſsimè poſſe arbitror. Cùm enim omnes vndique terræ grauiſsimis bellis affligantur, & diſcordiarum iactentur fluctibus, ſoli nos, celſitudine tua clauum moderante, in pacatiſsimo portu nauigamus, & ab orbe malorum diſiuncti, in cælum quodammodo fælicitatis ſublati videmur. Quod eſt ergô officij noſtri, primùm deo Opt. Max. gratias agimus, cuius vnius bonitati omnem hanc, quantacúnq; eſt, beatitudinem acceptam referimus, precamúrq; vt eam nobis propriam & perpetuam eſſe velit: deinde celſitudini tuæ, ſereniſsima regina, cuius opera, cura, ſolicitudine, & partam hanc nobis fælicitatem, & tot annos conſeruatam agnoſcimus. Lætamur hoc aſpectu tuo, & gratulamur incredibili ſtudio, quòd tum ex meo ipſius ſenſu loquor, tum omnes qui iam vndiq; confluxerunt Nordouicenſes tui à me dici poſtulant. Atq; vtinam in hæc pectora poſſes oculos inſerere, & occultos animorum noſtrorum ſinus perluſtrare, videres profectò incluſam intus, quæ tantis anguſtijs erumpere non poteſt, infinitam molem voluntatis. Fidem omnem, ſtudium, obſeruantiam, quæ tantæ principi debentur, vt hactenus promptiſsimè detulimus, ita ſtudioſiſsimè ſemper deferemus: & ſi quando caſus aliquis inciderit (quod Deus omen auertat) ſacroſanctæ maieſtatis tuæ, aut iſtius florentiſsimi regni, vel ſalus in diſcrimen veniat, vel dignitas periclitetur, non ſolùm bonorum omnium ac facultatum effuſionem, ſed laterum noſtrorum oppoſitus & corporum pollicemur. Rogamus deinde & obſecramus excellentiam tuam, illuſtriſsima regina, vt & hoc noſtrum qualecunq; officium à ſumma beneuolentia animóq; quàm gratiſsimo profectum boni conſulas, & de nobis Nordouicenſibus ſic exiſtimes, ad lautiores te fortaſſe ſubditos veniſſe ſæpe, ad lætiores nunquam.

Pares gratias pro imparibus beneficijs agi non poſſe.

Angliam meritò alterum orbem nuncupari.

Nordouicenſium vera et ex intimis medullis prouenicus lætitia quam regiam maieſtatem videant.

The oration of Stephan Limbert, publike ſchoolemaiſter, to the moſt magnificent prince, Eliſabeth of England, France, and Ireland queene, &c: before the gates of the hoſpitall of Norwich.

IT is reported (moſt gratious queene) that Aegypt is watered with the yerelie ouerflowing of Nilus, and Lidia with the golden ſtreame of Pactolus, which thing is thought to be the cauſe of the great frutefulnes of theſe countries: but vpon vs, and further, ouer all England, euen into the vttermoſt borders, manie and maine riuers of godlineſſe, iuſtice, humilitie, and other innumerable good things, in compariſon of the which, gold is vile and naught worth, doo moſt plentifullie guſh out, and thoſe not from Tmolus, or other hilles I know not which, but from that continuall and moſt aboundant welſpring of your goodneſſe. And that of thoſe infinit goodneſſes I maie lightlie touch one, for that neither place, time, nor my abilitie dooth permit to ſpeake of manie: with what praiſes ſhall we extoll; with what magnificent words ſhall we expreſſe that notable mercie of your highneſſe (moſt renowmed queene) and vncredible readineſſe to relieue the need of poore men, than the which of manie vertues none can be more acceptable vnto God, as Homer writeth, neither anie vertue in a mightie prince more woondered at amongſt men. This hoſpitall of poore men is moſt famous, which will be a monument of princelie vertue and beneficence amongſt all poſteritie, inſtituted by the moſt mightie king Henrie your highneſſe father, confirmed with the great ſeale by the moſt noble king Edward your brother, but by your maieſtie, which deſerueth no leſſe praiſe, of late notablie increaſed and amplified by the lands and poſſeſſions of Cringleford, that you maie not now worthilie reioiſe ſo much in others ornaments, as your owne vertues. For you are ſaid for your ſingular wiſdome and learning, to haue ſtudied that diuine law of the moſt wiſe Plato, which he left written in the eleuenth booke of lawes. Such your great bountie therefore, ſo exceeding and incredible mercie (ô moſt vertuous prince) in what bookes ſhall we comprehend? With what duties, or with what voice ſhall we teſtifie the good will of a thankefull mind? For when we diligentlie ſeeke all the moſt exquiſit and curious means of thankeſgiuing: we cannot ſo much as atteine vnto the greatneſſe of this one benefit, by the which we acknowledge our ſelues bound and ſtreictlie holden to your mo[illegible] maieſtie. We ſhall be ouercome, euen with t[illegible] one and ſingular benefit, ſo much the leſſe hope haue we then in anie point to counteruaile the huge ſea of the reſt of your benefits, which ouerfloweth on euerie ſide as well publikelie & generallie ouer all your ſubiects, as properlie and particularlie vpon this citie. We certeinlie now inhabit, and lead our liues in thoſe moſt happie Ilands, of the which Heſiodus maketh mention, which not onelie abound with all maner of graine, wooll, cattell, and oth[illegible] aids of mans life; but much more with the moſt [illegible]tious treaſure of true religion and the word of God, in the which onlie the minds of men haue reſt and peace. There be that call England another world, which I thinke maie be moſt true in this our age. For whereas all lands on euerie ſide of vs are afflicted with moſt grieuous warres, and toſſed with the flouds of diſſention, we onelie (your highneſſe gouerning our ſterne) doo ſaile in a moſt peaceable hauen, and ſeuered from a world of miſchiefs, doo ſeeme after a ſort to be taken vp into a heauen of happineſſe. We therefore (according to our bounden dutie) firſt giue thanks vnto God almightie, vnto whoſe goodneſſe onelie with thanks we referre all this our happineſſe, how great ſoeuer it be, & praie that he would vouchſafe to make the ſame proper and perpetuall vnto vs. And afterwards vnto your highneſſe (ô moſt gratious queene) by whoſe ſtudie, care and diligence we confeſſe this bleſſedneſſe to be gotten, and ſo manie years preſerued vnto vs. We are glad in this beholding you, and we reioiſe with deſire more than maie be beleeued, which as I ſpeake of mine owne thought, ſo alſo all the ſubiects of Norwich deſire me to ſaie the ſame in their behalfe. And

The excellent and incomparable bleſſings of England.

King Henrie king Edward and queene Eliſabeth acknowledged ſpeciall benefactors.

Condigne thanks impoſſible to be giuen.

England deſeruedlie called another world.

Their vnfeigned reioiſing to ſee hir maieſtie.

I would to God you could pearſe theſe our breaſts with your eies, and throughlie view the hidden and couered creeks of our minds! Then vndoubtedlie ſhould you behold an infinit heape of goodwill cloſelie ſhut vp within, which cannot breake out of ſo narrow ſtraits. All the faith, ſtudie, and obedience, which are due to ſo great a prince, as hitherto we haue moſt willinglie imploied, ſo will we alwaies moſt diligentlie performe the ſame: and if at anie time anie chance ſhall happen (which fortune God turne from vs) that the ſtate of thy bleſſed maieſtie, or of this flouriſhing realme ſhould come in danger, or the worthineſſe therof be in hazard, we do not onlie proteſt the effuſion of all our goods and ſubſtance, but alſo the putting foorth and brunt of our ſtrengths and bodies therein. Finallie, we deſire and beſeech thy excellencie (moſt renowmed queene) well to accept of this our dutie, howſoeuer it be, proceeding from a ſingular good will, and a moſt thankefull mind, and ſo to thinke of vs citizens of Norwich, that perhaps you haue manie times come to people more wealthie, but to more ioifull neuer.

The queenes high commendation of maiſter Limberts oration.

Immediatlie after the beginning of the oration hir maieſtie called to hir the French ambaſſadors, whereof there were thrée, and diuerſe Engliſh lords, and willed them to harken, and ſhe hirſelfe was verie attentiue, euen vntill the end thereof. And the oration ended, after ſhe had giuen great thanks therefore to maiſter Limbert, ſhe ſaid to him; It is the beſt that euer I heard; you ſhall haue my hand: and pulled off hir gloue, and gaue him hir hand to kiſſe, which before knéeling on his knées, he aroſe and kiſſed; and then ſhe departed to the court without anie other ſhew that night, but that ſhe ſent backe to know his name. The next night being thurſdaie there was an excellent princelie maſke brought before hir after ſupper by maiſter Goldingham in the priuie chamber, it was of gods and goddeſſes both ſtrangelie and richlie apparelled. The firſt that entred was Mercurie, then entred two torchbearers in purple taffata mandillions laid with ſiluer lace, as all other the torchbearers were; then entred a conſort of muſike, to wit, ſix muſicians, all in long veſtures of white ſarſenet girded about them, and garlands on their heads, plaieng verie cunninglie; then two torchbearers more; then Iupiter and Iu[illegible]two torchbearers more; then Mars and Venus, then two torchbearers more; then Apollo and Pallas, then two torchbearers more; then Neptune and Diana; and laſtly Cupid concluding the matter.

The deſcription of an excellent and princelie maſke.

Mercuries meſſage to the quéene.

Thus when they had once marched about the chamber, Mercurie dischargeth his meſſage in theſe words to the quéene: The good meaning maior and all his brethren, with the reſt, haue not reſted from praieng vnto the gods, to proſper thy comming hither; and the gods themſelues moued by their vnfained praiers, are readie in perſon to bid thée worthilie welcome; and I Mercurie the god of merchants and merchandize, and therefore a fauourer of the citizens, being thought méeteſt am choſen fitteſt to ſignifie the ſame. Gods there be alſo which cannot come, being tied by the time of the yeare, as Ceres in harueſt, Bacchus in wines, Pomona in orchards. Onelie Hymineus denieth his good will, either in preſence or in perſon: notwithſtanding Diana hath ſo counterchecked him therfore, as he ſhall hereafter be at your commandement. For my part, as I am a reioiſer at your comming, ſo am I a furtherer of your welcome hither; and for this time I bid you farewell.

Then marched they about againe, and that done Iupiter ſpake to the quéene in this ſort, and then gaue hir a riding wand of whales fin curiouſlie wrought.

Feare not oh queene, thou art beloued ſo,
As ſubiects true will trulie thee defend:
Feare not my power to ouerthrow thy wo,
I am the God that can ech miſſe amend.
Thou doeſt know great Iupiter am I,
That gaue thee firſt thy happie ſouereintie.
I giue thee ſtill as euer thou haſt had,
A peereleſſe power vnto thy dieng daie:
I giue thee rule to ouercome the bad,
And loue to loue thy louing ſubiects aie.
I giue thee heere this ſmall and ſlender wand,
To ſhew thou ſhalt in quiet rule the land.

Then Iuno ſpake, whoſe gift was a purſe curiouſlie wrought.

Is Iuno rich? No ſure ſhe is not ſo,
She wants that wealth that is not wanting heere,
Thy goods get friends, my wealth wins manie a fo,
My riches ruſt, but thine ſhine paſſing cleere.
Thou art beloued of ſubiects farre and nie,
Which is ſuch wealth as monie cannot buie.
Farewell faire queene, I cannot giue thee ought,
Nor take awaie thy good that is ſo bound:
Thou canſt not giue that I ſo long haue ſought,
Ne can I hold the riches thou haſt found.
Yet take this gift, though poore I ſeeme to be,
That thou thy ſelfe ſhalt neuer poorer be.

Then after they had marched againe about, Mars gaue his gift, which was a faire paire of kniues, and ſaid:

Where force dooth fiercelie ſeeke to foſter wrong,
There Mars dooth make him make a quicke recoile,
Nor can indure that he ſhould harbor long,
Where naughtie wights manure in goodlie ſoile.
This is the vſe that aids the force of warre,
That Mars dooth mend, that force dooth ſeeke to marre.
And though oh queene thou beeſt a prince of peace,
Yet ſhalt thou haue me faſtlie ſure at need:
The ſtormes of ſtrife and bluſtering broiles to ceaſe,
Which forren foes or faithleſſe friends may breed.
To conquer, kill, to vanquiſh and ſubdue,
Such fained folke, as loues to liue vntrue.

These words were ingrauen vpon the kniues:

To hurt your fo and helpe your frend,
Theſe kniues are made vnto that end:
Both blunt and ſharpe you ſhall vs find,
As pleaſeth beſt your princelie mind.

Then ſpake Venus whoſe gift was a white doue.

In vaine (faire queene) from heauen my comming was,
To ſeeke to mend that is no waie amis:
For now I ſee thy fauour ſo dooth paſſe,
That none but thou, thou onelie ſhe it is,
Whoſe beautie bids ech wight to looke on thee,
By view they may another Venus ſee.
Where beautie boaſts, and fauour dooth not faile,
What may I giue to thee O worthie wight?
This is my gift, there ſhall no wo preuaile,
That ſeekes thy will againſt thy willes delight,
Not where they will, but where it likes thy mind,
Accept that friend if loiall thou him find.

The doue being caſt off, ran directlie to the quéene, and being taken vp and ſet vpon the table before hir maieſtie, ſate ſo quietlie as if it had béene tied. Then after they had marched againe about, Apollo preſented his gift, which was an inſtrument called a bandonet, and did ſing to the ſaid inſtrument this ſhort and pithie dittie, as he was plaieng thereupon:

The ſong of Apollo to the quéene.

It ſeemeth ſtrange to ſee ſuch ſtrangers heere,
Yet not ſo ſtrange but ſtrangers knowes you well:
Your vertuous thoughts to gods doo plaine appeere,
Your acts on earth bewraies how you excell:
You cannot die, loue here hath made your leaſe,
Which gods haue ſent, and God ſaith ſhall not ceaſe.
Vertuous deſire deſired me to ſing,
No ſubiects ſute, though ſuters they were all,
Apollos gifts are ſubiect to no king,
Rare are thy gifts that did Apollo call,
Then ſtill reioiſe, ſith God and man ſaie ſo,
This is my gift, thou neuer ſhalt haue wo.

Pallas then ſpeaketh and preſenteth hir gift, which was a booke of wiſdome.

Moſt worthie wight, what wouldſt thou haue of me?
Thou haſt ſo much, thou canſt inioie no more:
I cannot giue that once I gaue to thee,
Nor take awaie the good I gaue before.
I robbed was by natures good conſent,
Againſt my will, and yet I was content.
A Pallas thou, a princeſſe I will be:
I queene of loſſe, thou goddeſſe which haſt got:
I ſometime was, thou onelie now art ſhe:
I take, thou gaueſt that lucke that was my lot.
I giue not thee this booke to learne thee aught,
For that I know alreadie thou art taught.

Then Neptune ſpake & his gift was a great artificiall fiſh, and in the bellie of it a pike, which he threw out before hir maieſtie.

What art thou (queene) that gods do loue thee ſo?
Who woon their wils to bend at thy will?
How can the world become thy cruell fo?
How can Diſdaine or Malice ſeeke to kill?
Can ſea or earth deuiſe to hurt thy hap?
Sith thou by gods dooſt ſit in fortunes lap.
As heauen and earth haue vowed to be thine,
So Neptunes ſeas haue ſworne to drench thy foes,
As I am god, and all the waters mine,
Still ſhalt thou get, but neuer ſhalt thou loſe:
And ſith on earth my wealth is nought at all,
Accept good will, the gift is verie ſmall.

Diana preſented a bow and arrowes nocked and headed with ſiluer; hir ſpeach was this.

Who euer found on earth a conſtant friend,
That may compare with this my virgin queene?
Who euer found a bodie and a mind
So free from ſtaine, ſo perfect to be ſeene?
Oh heauenlie hew, that apteſt is to ſoile,
And yet dooſt liue from blot of anie foile.
Rare is thy gift, and giuen to few or none,
Maliſt therefore of ſome that dare not ſay,
More ſhines thy light, for that I know but one,
That anie ſuch ſhew, to follow on their waie.
Thou thou art ſhee, take thou the onelie praiſe,
For chaſteſt dame in theſe our happie daies.

Accept my bowe, ſith beſt thou dooſt deſerue,
Though well I know thy mind can thee preſerue.

Cupido his ſpeach, his gift an arrow of gold.

Ah ha, I ſee my mother out of ſight,
Then let the boy now plaie the wag a while,
I ſeeme but weake, yet weake is not my might,
My boieſh wit can oldeſt folke beguile.
Who ſo dooth thinke, I ſpeake this but in ieſt,
Let me but ſhoot, and I ſhall quench his reſt,
Marke here my ſhafts: this all is made of wood,
Which is but ſoft, and breeds but ſoft good will,
Now this is gilt, yet ſeemes it gold full good,
And dooth deceiue blind louing people ſtill.
But here is one is ſeldome felt or ſeene:
This is of gold, meet for the nobleſt queene.
Wherefore dame faire, take thou this gift of me,
Though ſome deſerue, yet none deſerue like you,
Shoot but this ſhaft at king or Ceſar: he,
And he is thine, and if thou wilt allow,
It is a gift that manie here doo craue,
Yet none but thou this golden ſhaft maie haue.

There was written vpon the ſhaft:

My colour, ioy, my ſubſtance pure,
My vertue ſuch as ſhall indure.

The quéenes behauiour after all this welcomming.

Hir maieſtie receiued theſe gifts verie thankefullie, the gods and goddeſſes with the reſt of the maſke marched about the chamber againe, and then departed in like maner as they came in. Then the quéene called vnto hir maſter Robert Wood, the maior of Norwich, whom firſt ſhe heartilie thanked, and tooke by the hand, and vſed ſecret conference: but what I know not. And thus this delightfull night paſſed, to the ioy of all that ſaw hir grace in ſo pleaſant plight.

The deuiſor is commanded to be readie with his ſhewes to delight the queene.

On thurſdaie in the morning, my lord chamberlaine gaue the deuiſor warning the quéene would ride abrode in the after noone, and he commanded him to be readie, dutifullie to preſent hir with ſome ſhew. Then knowing which waie the quéene would ride (by coniecture and inſtructions giuen) the deuiſor cauſed a place to be made and digged for the nymphes of the water, the maner and proportion whereof was in this forme and faſhion. Firſt there was meaſure taken for thréeſcore foot of ground euerie waie, the hole to be made déepe and foure ſquare, which ground was all couered with canuas painted gréene like the graſſe, and at euerie ſide on the canuas ran a ſtring through curteine rings, which ſtring might eaſilie be drawne anie kind of waie, by reaſon of two great poales that laie along in the ground, and anſwered the curteine or canuas on each ſide, ſo that drawing a ſmall cord in the middle of the canuas, the earth would ſéeme to open, & ſo ſhut againe as the other end of the cord was drawne backward.

A proper deuiſe and verie delectable of a caue & twelue water nymphes, &c.

And in the ſame caue was a noble noiſe of muſike of all kind of inſtruments, ſeuerallie to be ſounded and plaied vpon, and at one time they ſhould be ſounded all togither, that might ſerue for a conſort of broken muſike. And in the ſame caue alſo was placed twelue water nymphes, diſguiſed or dreſſed moſt ſtrangelie, ech of them had either vpon white ſilke, or fine linnen, gréene ſedges ſtitched cunninglie on a long garment, ſo well wrought and alſo ſet on, as ſcarſe anie whit might be perceiued. And euerie nymph had in hir hand a great bundle of bulruſhes, and had on hir head a garland of iuie, vnder the which iuie was a coiſe of moſſe, and vnder the moſſe was there long goodlie heare like golden treſſes that couered hir ſhoulders, and in a maner raught downe vnto hir middle.

Now touching the beautie of the nymphes, they ſéemed to be the choſen children of the world, and became their attire ſo well, that their beautie might haue abuſed a right good iudgement. For diuerſe of thoſe that knew them before (albeit they were bare faced) could ſcarſe know them in their garments, and ſundrie tooke them to be yoong girles and wenches, prepared for the nonce, to procure a laughter.

What was deuiſed to be done by the nymphs at the quéenes comming néere the water ſide.

Theſe nymphs thus apparelled, and all things in good plight and readineſſe, there was deuiſed, that at the quéenes comming néere the water ſide (as this caue ſtood at the brim of the riuer) one nymph ſhould pop vp out of the caue firſt, and ſalute the quéene with a ſpeach, and then another: and ſo till foure of them had finiſhed their ſpeaches, there they ſhould remaine; and when they retired into their caue, the muſike ſhould begin: which ſure had béene a noble hearing, and the more melodious for the varietie thereof, and bicauſe it ſhould come ſecretlie and ſtrangelie out of the earth. And when the muſike was doone, then ſhould all the twelue nymphs haue iſſued togither, & danſed a danſe with timbrels that were trimmed with belles, and other iangling things, which timbrels were as brode as a ſiue, hauing bottoms of fine parchment, and being ſounded, made ſuch a confuſed noiſe and paſtime, that it was to be wondered at: beſides the ſtrangeneſſe of the timbrels (yet knowne to our forefathers) was a matter of admiration vnto ſuch as were ignorant of that new found toy, gathered and borrowed from our elders. So in order and readineſſe ſtood that ſhew for the time.

The ſhew of Manhood and Deſert with the furniture declared.

And to kéepe that ſhew companie (but yet farre off) ſtood the ſhew of Manhood and Deſert, as firſt to be preſented, and that ſhew was as well furniſhed as the other; men all, ſaue one boy called Beautie; for the which, Manhood, Fauour, and Deſert, did ſtriue (or ſhould haue contended) but good Fortune (as victor of all conqueſts) was to come in, and ouerthrow Manhood, Fauour, Deſert, & all their powers, and onelie by fine force (vpon a watchword ſpoken) ſhould laie hand on Beautie, and carrie or lead hir awaie. The other ſutors troubled with this kind of dealing, ſhould talke togither, and ſweare to be in one mind for an open reuenge: and vpon that Fortune ſhould crie Arme, arme. The other ſide called for their friends, at the which ſtirre ſhould appeare both their ſtrengthes: but good Fortune ſhould farre in power excéed his enimies. And yet to ſhew that Deſtinie (and who beſt can conquer) ſhall gouerne all, Fortune ſhould make an offer, that ſix to ſix with ſword and target ſhould end the brall and buſineſſe. Then ſix gentlemen on either ſide with rebated ſwords and targets (onelie in dublet and hoſe, and murrion on head) approched and would claime the combat (and deale togither twelue blowes apéece, and [illegible]) fortune ſhould be victor: and then the [illegible]med men ſhould fall at variance ſo ſharpelie (vpon miſtaking of the matter) that Fortunes ſide ſhould triumph and march ouer the bellies of their enimies: in which time were legs and armes of men (well and liuelie wrought) to be let fall in numbers on the ground, as bloudie as might be. Fortune, regarding nothing but victorie, marcheth [illegible] awaie in great triumph: and then ſhould haue come into the place a ſong for the death of Manhood, Fauor, and Deſert, and ſo the ſhew ſhould haue ended.

A bloudie fight and yet harmleſſe done by art.

All the preparation diſappointed by thunder and raine.

But now note what befell after this great buſineſſe and preparation. For as the quéenes highneſſe was appointed to come vnto hir coch, and the lords and courtiers were readie to mount on horſſebacke, there fell ſuch a ſhowre of raine (& in the necke thereof came ſuch a terrible thunder) that euerie one of vs were driuen to ſéeke for couert and moſt comfort, inſomuch that ſome of vs in bote ſtood vnder a bridge and were all ſo daſhed & waſhed, that it was a greater paſtime to ſée vs looke like drowned rats, than to haue beheld the vttermoſt of the ſhewes rehearſed. Thus you ſée, a ſhew in the open field is alwaies ſubiect to the ſudden change of weather, and a number of more inconueniences. But what ſhould be ſaid of that which the citie loſt by this cauſe; veluets, ſilkes, tinſels, and ſome cloth of gold being cut out for theſe purpoſes, that could not ſerue to anie great effect after? Well, there was no more to ſaie, but an old adage, that Man dooth purpoſe, but God dooth diſpoſe, to whoſe diſpoſition and pleaſure the guide of greater maters is committed. So this thurſdaie tooke his leaue from the actors, and left them looking one vpon another, & he that thought he had receiued moſt iniurie, kept greateſt ſilence, and lapping vp (among a bundle of other miſfortunes) this euill chance, euerie perſon quietlie paſſed to his lodging.

The cities loſſe by occaſion of this tempeſt.

The next daie being fridaie, in which daie the court remooued, the ſtréets towards ſaint Benets gates were hanged, from the one ſide to the other, with cords made of hearbs and floures, with garlands, coronets, pictures, rich cloths, and a thouſand deuiſes. At the gates themſelues there was a ſtage made verie richlie apparelled with cloth of gold and crimſin veluet, wher vpon in a cloſe place made theron for the purpoſe, was placed verie ſwéet muſike: & one readie to render hir this ſpeach following. The dolefull houre of hir departure came, ſhe paſſed from the court, to thoſe gates, with ſuch countenances, both of hir maieſties part, and hir ſubiects now dolorous, now chéerefull, as plainlie ſhewed the louing hearts of both ſides. When ſhe came there the ſpeach was thus vttered vnto hir in verie plauſible ſort:

The quéens departure frō Norwich heauilie taken.

Terreſtriall ioies are tide with ſlender file,
Each happie hap full haſtilie dooth ſlide,
As ſummer ſeaſon laſteth but a while,
So winter ſtormes doo longer time abide:
Alas what bliſſe can anie time endure?
Our ſunſhine daie is daſht with ſudden ſhoure.
Could toong expreſſe our ſecret ioies of hart,
(Oh mightie prince) when thou didſt come in place?
No no God wot, nor can expreſſe the ſmart
Thy ſubiects feele in this departing caſe.
But gratious queene, let here thy grace remaine
In gratious wiſe, till thy returne againe.
In lieu whereof, receiue thy ſubiects harts,
In fixed faith continuallie thine owne:
Who readie reſt to looſe their vitall parts
In thy defenſe, when anie blaſt is blowne.
Thou art our queene, our rocke and onelie ſtaie,
We are thine owne to ſerue by night and daie.
Farewell oh queene, farewell oh mother deare,
Let Iacobs God thy ſacred bodie gard:
All is thine owne that is poſſeſſed here,
And all in all is but a ſmall reward
For thy great grace, God length thy life like Noy,
To gouerne vs, and eke thy realme in ioy. Amen.

Note the true hearts of the citizens and people.

These words were deuiſed by B. Goldingham, and ſpoken by himſelfe, to whome hir maieſtie ſaid: We thanke you hartilie. Then with the muſicke in the ſame place was ſong this ſhort dittie following, in a [illegible]ét voice, to the great delite of the hearers;

A little ſong in a verie ſwéet voice.

[illegible]aileth life, where ſorow ſokes the hart?
Who feareth death that is in deepe diſtreſſe?
Releaſe of life dooth beſt abate the ſmart
Of him, whoſe woes are quite without redreſſe.
Lend me your teares, reſigne your ſighes to me,
Helpe all to waile the dolor which you ſee.
What haue we doone, ſhe will no longer ſtaie?
What may we doo to hold hir with vs ſtill?
Shee is our queene, we ſubiects muſt obaie,
Grant, though with greefe, to hir departing will.
Conclude we then, and ſing with ſobbing breath,
God length thy life (oh queene Eliſabeth.)

Fridaies deuiſe vpon the remouing of the court.

On fridaie, the court vpon remooue, the citie troubled with manie cauſes, and ſome ſéeking to doo ſeruice like the deuiſer, mooued him to doo ſomewhat of himſelfe, bicauſe his aids (as manie times they were before) were drawne from him, each one about his owne buſineſſe, and he left to his owne inuentions and policie, at which exigent or caſuall things of fortune, he drew his boies vnto him, that were the Nymphs on the water, and ſo departed the citie, with ſuch garments and ſtuffe neceſſarie as fitted his purpoſe and the matter he went about. Then he choſe a ground, by the which the quéene muſt paſſe, incloſing his companie in the corner of a field, being defenſed with high and thicke buſhes, and there ſome parts he made, which the boies might miſſe, bicauſe the time was ſhort for the learning of thoſe parts. But he being reſolued to doo ſomewhat might make the quéene laugh, appointed that ſeauen boies of twelue ſhould paſſe through a hedge from the place of abode (which was gallantlie trimmed) and deliuer ſeauen ſpéeches. And theſe boies (you muſt vnderſtand) were dreſſed like Nymphes of the water, and were to plaie by a deuiſe and degrées the feiries, and to danſe (as néere as could be imagined) like the feiries. Their attire and comming ſo ſtrangelie out, made the quéenes highneſſe ſmile and laugh withall. And the deuiſer hearing this good hope, being apparelled like a water ſprite, began to ſound a timbrell, & the reſt with him, all the twelue Nymphs togither (when the ſeauen had repaired in) ſounded timbrels likewiſe. And although the deuiſer had no great harting, yet as he durſt, he led the yoong fooliſh feiries a danſe, which boldneſſe of his bred no diſgrace, but as he heard, was well taken. The quéene vpon their retire in, haſted to hir highnes lodging, which was ſeuen miles off, and at that preſent, when the ſhew ended, it was paſt fiue of the clocke.

A pleaſant deuiſe to make the quéene laugh.

The deuiſers doings well taken of the quéene, &c.

All theſe ſhewes finiſhed, hir maieſtie in princelie maner marched toward the confines of the liberties of the citie of Norwich, which was ſuppoſed almoſt two miles. Before ſhe came there, maiſter maior brake to my lord chamberlaine, that he was to vtter to hir maieſtie an other oration, whereof my lord ſéemed to haue good liking: but before they came to the ſaid confines, maiſter maior was willed to forbeare the vtterance of the ſame his oration, bicauſe it was about ſeauen of the clocke, and hir maieſtie had then fiue miles to ride. Neuertheleſſe he gaue to hir maieſtie both his orations in writing, which ſhe thanked him for. She alſo thanked the maior, euerie alderman, and the commoners, not onelie for the great chéere they had made hir, but alſo for the open houſholds they kept to hir highneſſe ſeruants, and all others. Then ſhe called maiſter maior and made him knight: and ſo departing, ſaid: I haue laid vp in my breaſt ſuch good will, as I ſhall neuer forget Norwich; and procéeding onward did ſhake hir riding rod and ſaid: Farewell Norwich, with the water ſtanding in hir eies. In which great good will towards vs all, I beſéech God to continue hir maieſtie with long and triumphant reigne ouer vs, Amen.

Maiſter maior purpoſing to vtter another oration, is willed to forbeare it, and whie, &c.

The maior of Norwich knighted.

The quéenes words at hir departing.

Now to come to the returne of the quéenes maieſtie from Norfolke and Suffolke, in which two counties hir highneſſe knighted certeine gentlemen, as namelie in Suffolke George Colt, Philip Parkar, Robert Iermine, William Spring, Thomas Barnardiſton, Thomas Kidſon, Arthur Hedingham: In Norffolke, Thomas Kneuet, Nicholas Bacon, William Paſtons, Edward Cléere, Rafe Shelton, Henrie Woodhouſe, Thomas Gaudie, Robert Wood maior, Roger Woodhouſe. Theſe gentlmen hir maieſtie knighted, for that they ſhould all their life time after haue the greater regard to God and their prince. Now the quéenes maieſtie paſſing from Norwich, ſhe came to ſir Roger Woodhouſes that night, where ſhe was well receiued, and noblie interteined. From thenſe to Wood riſing at ſir Edward Cléeres. From thenſe to ſir Thomas Kidſons, where in verie déed the fare and bankets did ſo excéed a number of other places, that it is worthie the mention. A ſhew repreſenting the feiries (as well as might be) was there ſéene, in the which ſhew a rich iewell was preſented to the quéenes highnes. From thenſe to maſter Reuets, where all things were well and in verie good order, and meat liberallie ſpent.

Gentlemen of Suffolke & Norffolke knighted.

The quéenes maieſtie departeth from Norwich and is now interteined by the waie.

But now to ſpeake a little by the waie of Gods mightie hand and power, that framed mens hearts ſo well in manie parts, before the quéenes highneſſe came to Cambridgeſhire, and to tell how bleſſedlie our great and good God did deale with our déere ſoueraigne ladie, in cauſing euerie perſon to ſhew their dutie, is a matter of great diſcourſe, and of no little weight and comfort to all good minds that ſhall conſider of the ſame. Such a Lord is our great God, that can frame all things to the beſt, and ſuch a ſoueréigne ladie we haue, that can make the crooked paths ſtreight where ſhe commeth, & draw the harts of the people after hir wherſoeuer ſhe trauelleth. So from maſter Reuets hir highneſſe came to my lord Norths, who was no whit behind anie of the beſt for a franke houſe, a noble heart, and well ordered interteinement. And there was an oration made by a gentleman of Cambridge, with a ſtatelie and a faire cup preſented from the vniuerſitie, all the ambaſſadors of France beholding the ſame. And the gentlemen of the ſhire (as in manie other places) did beare the quéenes meat to the table, which was a great liking & gladneſſe to the gentlemen, & a ſolemne ſight for ſtrangers & ſubiects to looke vpon. From my lord Norths to ſir Giles Allingtons, where things were well, and well liked. From thenſe to ſir John Cuts. From thenſe to M. Kapels, where was excellent good chéere & interteinement. From thenſe to Hide hall, where I heard of no great chéere nor banketting. From thenſe to Rockwood hall, but how the traine was there interteined, I am ignorant of. From thenſe to maſter Stonars, and from thenſe to my lord of Leiceſters houſe, where the progreſſe ended; & (to knit vp all) the good chéere was reuiued, not onelie with making a great feaſt to the quéene and the French ambaſſador, but alſo in feaſting ſolemnelie (at ſeuerall times) the whole gard, on ſundaie and mondaie before the quéene came, at his owne table, vſing ſuch courteſie vnto them for the ſpace of two daies, as was and is worthie of perpetuall memorie. Thus much of the quéenes highneſſe returne, whom God hath ſo well preſerued, that ſhe like a worthie prince to our great comfort proſpereth in peace, to the great diſgrace of the enimies of God, and aduerſaries of our common weale and countrie, wherin God continue hir maieſtie, Amen.

The vniuerſitie of Cambridge preſent a faire and ſtatelie cup to the quéene.

T.C.

The lord of Leiceſters bountifull interteinement.

The quéenes maieſtie, now gone from Norwich, carried awaie with hir all the gladneſſe of the citie, which ſprang from hir preſence; in place whereof ſuccéeded melancholie ſadnes: in ſomuch that the verie aier altered with the change of the countrie chéere procéeding from the departure of hir highnes roiall perſon: which he meant that made theſe verſes, wherwith the deſcription of this progreſſe ſhall end.

Ad ſolem nubibus obductum die lunæ 18. Auguſti, 1578.

Splendide Phœbe redi, cur te ſub nube recondis?
Innuba Pallas adeſt, ſplendide Phœbe redi.
Haſta minax procul eſt, non Gorgonis ora videbis,
Pallas inermis adeſt, ſplendide Phœbe redi.
Scilicet à tanto metuis tibi lumine forſan:
Ne ſuperet radios fœmina Phœbe tuos.
Pulcher Apollo tibi ne ſit regina rubori:
Ipſe decore tuo vincis, & illa ſuo.
Euge redux reducem quia pulſa nocte reducis
Phœbe diem: toto eſt gratius orbe nihil.
Hæc pepulit tetri tenebras noctémque papiſmi,
Et liquidum retulit relligione diem.
Euge nigras nebulas radijs quia ſæpe repellis
Phœbe tuis: pene eſt gratius orbe nihil.
Texuerant remoras diſcrimina mille papiſtæ:
Ne ceptum princeps continuaret iter:
Nec tamen hunc nebulæ potuerunt condere ſolem:
Quamuis tu nebulis cedis Apollo tuis.
Ergô iubar noſtrum repuliſſe obſtaculo cernis:
Sic age, ſol nebulas lumine pelle tuo.
Splendide Phœbe redi, cur te ſub nube recondis?
Innuba Pallas adeſt, ſplendide Phœbe redi.

Eiuſdem in eandem.

Suſtinet, ornat, habet, regnum, literaria, formam,
Prouida, docta, decens, Iuno, Minerua, Venus.
Singula dona trium ſimul Elizabetha dearum
Prouida, docta, decens, ſuſtinet, ornat, habet.
Eſſe deas luſi: diuinam dicimus iſtam:
Quamuis nec liceat nec libet eſſe deam.

To the ſame couerd with cloudes vpon mondaie, being the 18 of Auguſt 1578.

In ſhadowing clouds why art thou cloſd? O Phebus bright retire:
Unſpouſed Pallas preſent is, O Phebus bright retire.
The thretning ſpeare is flong far off, doubt not grim Gorgons ire:
Unarmed Pallas preſent is, O Phebus bright retire.
Perhaps thou art afraid: And why? at this ſo large a light:
Leaſt that a woman ſhould excell, thy beams (O Phebus) bright.
Let not a queene, a virgine pure, which is, and euer was,
O faire Apollo, make thee bluſh: you both in beautie paſſe.
O Phebus ſafe and ſound returne, which, baniſhing the night,
Bringſt backe the daie: in all the world nothing of like delight:
She, onelie ſhe, the darkeneſſe draue of poperie quite awaie:
And by religion hath reſtord the bright and lightſome daie.
O Phebus with thy beams, which foiſt the clouds both blind & (blacke,
The world, in maner all, a thing of like delight doth lacke.
A thouſand dangers and delaies the papiſts had deuiſd,
To thend our princeſſe ſhould abridge hir progreſſe enterpriſd:
Yet this our bright & ſhining ſun, caſt light through euerie cloud:
Although in clouds thou art content, Apollo oft to ſhroud.
Thou ſeeſt our ſunne in comelie courſe, cuts off ech ſtop and ſtaie:
Do thou the like, and by thy light driue euerie cloud awaie.
In ſhadowing clouds why art thou cloſd? O Phebus bright retire:
Unſpouſed Pallas preſent is: O Phebus bright retire.

By the ſame concerning the quéene.

Hir kingdome all by prouidence, queene Juno doth vphold:
And of Minerua ladie learnd, is learned lore extold:
And Uenus faire of countenance, hath beautie vncontrold.
These ſundrie gifts of goddeſſes thrée, Eliſabeth poſſeſſeth:
By prouidence hir peoples peace, and comfort ſhe increaſeth:
Hir learning, learning amplifies: hir beautie neuer ceaſeth.
I did but ieaſt, of goddeſſes to giue them thrée the name:
This ladie maiſt thou goddeſſe call, for ſhe deſerues the ſame:
Although ſhe will not vndertake, a title of ſuch fame.

Mathew Hamont burned at Norwich.

Mathew Hamont, by his trade a ploughwrite of Hetharſet thrée miles from Norwich, was conuented before the biſhop of Norwich, for that he denied Chriſt our ſauiour. At the time of his appearance it was obiected that he had publiſhed theſe hereſies following. That the new teſtament and goſpell of Chriſt are but méere fooliſhneſſe, a ſtorie of man, or rather a méere fable. Item, that man is reſtored to grace by Gods méere mercie, without the meane of Chriſts bloud, death and paſſion. Item, that Chriſt is not God nor the ſauiour of the world, but a méere man, a ſinfull man, and an abhominable idoll. Item, that all they that worſhip him are abhominable idolaters, & that Chriſt did not riſe againe from death to life by the power of his godhead, neither that he aſcended into heauen. Item, that the Holie ghoſt is not God, neither that there is anie ſuch Holie ghoſt. Item, that baptiſme is not neceſſarie in the church of God, neither the vſe of the ſacrament of the bodie and bloud of Chriſt. For the which hereſies he was condemned in the conſiſtorie, and ſentence was pronounced againſt him by the biſhop of [illegible]wich on the thirtéenth daie of Aprill, and therv[illegible]liuered to the ſhiriffes of Norwich. And bicauſe he ſpake words of blaſphemie (not to be recited) againſt the quéenes maieſtie and others of hir councell, he was by the recorder, maſter ſergeant Windham, and the maior ſir Robert Wood of Norwich condemned to loſe both his eares, which were cut off on the thirtéenth of Maie in the market place of Norwich, and afterwards, to wit on the twentith of Maie, he was burned in the caſtell dich of Norwich.

The hereſies that he held.

An Engliſhman made a locke and a keie, weiing but one wheat corne.

This yeare in the moneth of Maie, Marke Scaliot blacke ſmith citizen of London, borne in the pariſh of ſaint Clements Dane without Temple bar, and now dwelling in Cornehill néere vnto Leaden hall, for triall of workemanſhip, made one hanging locke of iron, ſtéele and braſſe, of eleuen ſeuerall péeces, a pipe keie filed thrée ſquare with a pot vpon the ſhaft, & the bow with two eſſes, all cleane wrought, which weied but one graine of gold or wheat corne. He alſo at the ſame time made a chaine of gold of thrée and fortie linkes, to the which chaine the locke and keie being faſtened, and put about a fleas necke, ſhe drew the ſame with eaſe. All which, locke, keie, chaine, and flea, weied but one graine and a halfe. A thing almoſt incredible, but that my ſelfe (amongſt manie others) haue ſéene it, & therfore muſt affirme it to be true.

The biſhop of Winchester deceaſed.

The firſt of Iune deceaſed Robert Horne doctor of diuinitie, biſhop of Winchester, and prelat of the garter, at Winchester place in Southworke, and was buried at Wincheſter. ¶ This man was learned and eloquent, of a round and readie vtterance, ſound in religion and zelous in the truth; in teſtimonie whereof he choſe rather to forſake his natiue ſoile, and to liue a ſtranger in a forren land, than with offenſe of conſcience to tarrie at home within the ſight and hearing of the manifold abhominations which ſupported poperie: ſo that although death haue deuoured his mortall bodie, yet in reſpect of his vertue and godlineſſe, his name ſhall be immortall; according to the truth of this ſentence:

Corpore depoſito viuit virtute ſuperſtes,
De virtute nihil mors violenta rapit.

Iohn wolton biſhop of Exceſter.

Iohn Wolton now liuing, was called to be biſhop of Exceſter, & conſecrated at Lambith by Edmund Grindall archbiſhop of Canturburie, in Auguſt 1579. He is a profeſſor of diuinitie, and a preacher of the goſpell, and vniuerſallie ſéene in all good letters. This William Wolton, being in ſucceſſiue order the eight and fortith that occupied the ſaid ſée, from the firſt that inioied the ſame epiſcopall aduancement, miniſtreth iuſt occaſion to inſert a catalog of all the biſhops of Exceſter as they followed one after another in that ſée, being an apt collection, and verie anſwerable to the deſcription of Exceſter, and the ancient foundation of ſaint Peters church there; mentioned in the third yeare of the reigne of king Edward the ſixt, page 1007, and continued to page 1028.

A catalog of the biſhops of Exceſter collected by Iohn Vowell aliâs Hooker, gentleman.

Werſtanus.

1 WErſtanus, at a prouinciall ſynod holden in Weſſex, in the yeare 905, was conſecrated biſhop of Deuon, and had his ſée at biſhops Tauton: and in the yeare following 906 he died, and was buried in his owne church.

2 Putta, after the death of Werſtanus, was elected and conſecrated biſhop, and had his ſée at Tauton: and taking his iourneie towards Crediton, to ſée and viſit the king (or as ſome ſaie, Wffa [illegible] lieutenant) was by the ſaid Wffas men ſla[illegible] then vpon his death the ſée was remou[illegible] C[illegible]diton.

Eadulphus.

3 Eadulphus, brother to Alpſius duke of Deuon and Cornewall, and founder of Lanceſton, was conſecrated biſhop of Deuon, but inſtalled at Crediton, where he had his ſée, and continued biſhop two and twentie yeares, and then dieng about the yeare 932, he was buried in his owne church.

Ethelgarus.

4 Ethelgarus, in the yeare 932, ſucceeded Eadulphus, and in his time king Athelſtane ſubdued the Corniſh people, reedified this citie, and compaſſed the ſame with a ſtone wall: he founded the monaſterie of ſaint Peters for monks of ſaint Benets order. This Ethelgarus, after he had béene biſhop ten yeares, died, and was buried in his owne church.

Algarus.

5 Algarus, in the yeare 942 after Ethelgarus, was conſtituted & inſtalled biſhop at Crediton, and hauing béene biſhop about ten yeares, died and was buried in his owne church.

Alfwoldus.

6 Alfwoldus, as Matthew Weſtminſter writeth, was next biſhop after Algarus, and conſecrated by the aduiſe of Dunſtane, in the yeare 952. In this time Odogarus earle of Deuon, and father in law to king Edgar, builded the abbeie of Taueſtoke: and king Edgar called home all the monkes of ſaint Peters which were diſperſed, and without anie abbat, and made Sidemannus abbat, who was afterwards biſhop. This Alfwoldus after ſixtéene yeares that he was conſecrated, died and was buried in his owne church.

Alfwolſus.

7 Alfwolſus, as Dicetus affirmeth, was conſecrated biſhop in the yeare of our Lord 969, and after nine yeares died, and was buried in his owne church.

Sidemannus.

8 Sidemannus of an abbat was made a biſhop, in the yeare 978. In this mans time the Danes ouerran and ſpoiled the whole countries of Deuon and Cornewall, burned the towne of Bodmen, and the cathedrall church of ſaint Petrokes, with the biſhops houſe. Wherevpon the biſhops ſée was remoued from thenſe to ſaint Germans, where the ſame continued, vntill the remouing and vniting thereof vnto Crediton. Sidemannus in the twelfe yeare after his conſecration died, and was buried at Crediton in his owne church 990.

Alphredus.

9 Alphredus, whome Dicetus calleth Alfricus, abbat of Malmeſburie, was conſecrated biſhop, and inſtalled at Crediton: he was taken for a learned man, becauſe he wrote two bokes, the one intituled De rebus cœnobij ſui, and the other De rerum naturis. In this biſhops time, king Ethelred endowed the biſhoprike of ſaint Germans with lands, liberties, and priuileges. The Danes made a freſh inuaſion in and vpon all Deuon and Cornewall, burned and ſpoiled the abbie of Ordolphus at Taueſtoke: they beſieged Exceſter, and being remoued from thenſe, were fought withall at Pinneho, about thrée miles from the citie, and ouerthrowne. Alphredus, after he had béene biſhop about nine yeares, died in the yeare 999, and was buried in his owne church.

Alwolfus.

10 Alwolfus (as Dicetus writeth) was the next biſhop. In his time Sweno king of Denmarke, by intiſement of one Hugh then earle of Deuon, came with a great hoſt and beſieged the citie of Exceſter, toke it and burned it, and with great crueltie vſed the people, vntill in the end Almarus then earle of Deuon, and the gentlemen did yéeld and ſubmit themſelues, and ſo obteined peace. This Alwolfus about the fiftéenth yeare of his biſhoprike, in the yeare 1014 died, and was buried in his owne church.

Arnoldus.

11 Arnoldus, by the report of the archdeacon of London, ſucceeded Alwolfus, and was inſtalled at Crediton. In this mans time, king Canutus gaue to Athelwold abbat of S. Peters of this citie great gifts, and ſundrie priuileges, in recompenſe of his fathers great iniuries. Arnoldus in the fiftéenth yeare of his biſhoprike 1030 died, and was buried in his owne church.

Leuigus, or Leuingus.

12 Leuigus or Leuingus abbat of Taueſtoke, and nephue to Brithwaldus biſhop of Cornewall, was choſen the next biſhop, and according to the orders then vſed, conſecrated and inſtalled. He was in great fauour and credit with king Canutus, vpon whome he attended in pilgrimage to Rome; and after his vncle the biſhop of ſaint Germans being dead, obteined of the king that the biſhops ſée was remoued from ſaint Germans vnto Crediton, and both were thereby reduced and vnited into one biſhoprike, and ſo hath euer ſince continued. Hée was after the death of Brithegus biſhop of Worceſter, remoued to that church, and there died, and was buried as ſome ſuppoſe: but ſome affirme, that in the time of Hardicanutus the king, at the accuſation of Alfredus then archbiſhop of Yorke, for that he ſhould be conſenting to the death of Alfredus the ſonne of Ethelred, that he ſhould be depoſed of his biſhoprike there, and ſo did returne vnto Taueſtoke, where he died. But Dicetus affirmeth, that he purged himſelfe of this crime, and by that meanes was reſtored, both to the fauour of the king, and to his bi-ſhoprike againe, and died biſhop of Worceſter. It is recorded that he was biſhop of Crediton fiftéene yeares.

Leofricus.

13 Leofricus, a man deſcended of the bloud and line of Brutus, but brought vp in the land of Lothoringia or Loreine, was ſo well commended for his nobilitie, wiſedome, and learning, that king Edward the Confeſſor had him in great fauour, and made him firſt one of his priuie councell; then lord chancellor of all England: and laſtlie the biſhoprike of this prouince being void, he was made, conſecrated, and inſtalled biſhop of the ſame. By him and by his meanes, the biſhops ſée was remoued from Crediton vnto this citie of Exceſter: for at his requeſt, king Edward togither with quéene Edith his wife came to Exceſter, & remouing the monkes from henſe to Weſtminſter, did alſo remoue the biſhops ſée from Crediton vnto his citie, and did put the biſhop in poſſeſſion. For he conducting the biſhop on the right hand, and the quéene on the left hand, brought him to the high altar of his new church, and there placed him in a ſeat appointed for him. He ſuppreſſed ſundrie houſes or cels of religion within his ſanctuarie, and appropriated and vnited them to his owne church; as alſo by the good liberalitie of the king obteined great reuenues, poſſeſſions, priuileges, and liberties to be giuen vnto the church. In this mans time, William duke of Normandie made a conqueſt of this whole realme, as alſo in the yeare 1068 beſieged this citie of Exceſter, which after by compoſition he reſtored to his former eſtate againe. Alſo in his time, Richard de Brion, a noble man of Normandie, the ſonne of Baldwin of Brion, & of Albred the néece to the Conqueror, was made baron of Okehampton, warden of the caſtell of Exceſter, and vicount of Deuon. This Leofricus, after that he had well and worthilie ruled his church and dioceſſe by the ſpace of thrée and twentie yeares, he ended his daies in peace, and died in the yeare 1073, and was buried in the cemiterie or churchyard of his owne church, vnder a ſimple and a broken marble ſtone, which place by the ſince inlarging of his church is now within the tower of the ſame, where of late, in the yeare 1568, a new monument was erected in the memorie of ſo good, worthie, and noble a perſonage, by the induſtrie of the writer hereof, but at the charges of the deane and chapter.

Oſbertus or Oſbernus.

14 Oſbertus or Oſbernus, a Norman borne, and brother to an earle named William, was preferred to this biſhoprike, and in the yeare 1074 was conſecrated and inſtalled to the ſame. Polydorus writeth, that one Galfrid who ioined with Odo, earle of Kent and biſhop of Baion, againſt William Rufus, ſhould be biſhop of Exon: but it was not, nor could not ſo be. In this mans time, William the Conqueror, and William Rufus his ſonne died. This Oſbertus or Oſbernus, after he had béene biſhop thirtie yeares, was blind, and died, and lieth buried in his owne church.

William Warlewaſt.

15 William Warlewaſt a Norman borne, and chapleine both to the Conqueror and his two ſons, William and Henrie: he was a graue and a wiſe man, and for the ſame was preferred by Henrie the king to this biſhoprike, in the yere one thouſand one hundred and ſeuen, and was conſecrated by Anſelmus archbiſhop of Canturburie, in the moneth of Auguſt the ſame yeare. He firſt began to inlarge his church, which at that time was no bigger than that which is now called the ladie chappell. He founded and builded the monaſterie of Plimpton, and placed therein regular canons: in his latter daies he waxed and became blind. And yet notwithſtanding for his wiſdome the king ſent him in ambaſſage vnto pope Paſchalis the ſecond, wherein he ſo wiſelie dealed, and ſo diſcréetlie behaued himſelfe in his meſſage, that he made a reconciliation betwéene the pope and the king, and returned with great praiſe and commendation. Not long after his returne, and hauing ſmall ioie of the world, he gaue ouer his biſhoprike, and became one of the religious canons in his owne houſe of Plimpton, where he died and was buried, he was biſhop about twentie yeares.

Robert Chicheſter.

16 Robert Chicheſter, deane of Sariſburie, was conſecrated biſhop vnder Anſelmus archbiſhop of Canturburie, Anno 1128, and the eight and twentith yeare of king Henrie the firſt. He was a gentleman borne, and therefore eſtéemed for his zeale in religion, wherein he was deuout according to thoſe daies; and thinking his labours to be beſt imploied that waie, did eftſoons go in pilgrimage, ſometime to Rome, ſometime to one place, ſometime to another; and euer he would bring with him ſome one relike or other. He was a liberall contributor to the buildings of his church. In his time was founded and builded the monaſterie of S. Stephans in Lanceſton, and furthered by Reinold erle of Cornewall; but vnto it this biſhop was an aduerſarie, not for miſliking the worke, but for feare of an intruſion vpon his liberties. Likewiſe at this time was builded the priorie of ſaint Nicholas in Exceſter, by the abbat of Battell, vnto which abbeie this priorie was a cell. In this mans time alſo king Henrie made William Rideuers a Norman (and his kinſman) earle of Deuon; and therewith the lordſhip of Twifordton, and the honor of Plimpton, togither with the third pennie of his reuenues in Deuon, which in the whole was then thirtie marks, whereof this earle had ten. Alſo in this mans time king Henrie died, and king Stephan entred, and tooke vpon him the crowne, whereof inſued great warres. This biſhop, after that he had occupied the place two and twentie yeares, died, and was buried in his owne church. But the monke of Weſtminſter writeth that he ſhould be biſhop ſeuen and twentie yeares, and died in the yéere one thouſand one hundred fiftie and fiue, but he neuer ſaw the records of this church which are to the contrarie.

Robert Warlewaſt.

17 Robert Warlewaſt, nephue to W[illegible] biſhop of this church, deane of Sariſburie, [illegible] conſecrated biſhop by Theobaldus archbiſhop of Canturburie, in the yeare one thouſand one hundred and fiftie, he nothing degenerated from the ſteps of his predeceſſors, but was altogither of the ſame bent and diſpoſition. In his time king Stephan died, and Henrie the ſecond was crowned king. This Robert after that he had occupied this ſée nine yéers or thereabout, died, & was buried at Plimpton by his vncle.

Bartholomeus Iſcanus.

18 Bartholomeus Iſcanus, otherwiſe Bartholomew of Exceſter, was conſecrated biſhop of Exceſter vnder Theobald archbiſhop of Canturburie, in the yeare a thouſand one hundred fiftie nine, he was called Iſcanus of Iſca, which is one of the ancienteſt names of this citie. He was a meane citizens ſon, but being verie apt vnto learning, his parents and friends kept him to ſchoole; and he ſo well profited therein, that he came and proued to be a verie well learned man: and being biſhop he wrote ſundrie bookes, as of predeſtination, fréewill, penance, and others. Of all men he could not brooke nor fauor Thomas Becket archbiſhop of Canturburie for his contempt and diſobedience againſt the king, for the which he ſharplie improoued, rebuked, and inueighed againſt him openlie in the parlement houſe holden at Northampton; and with ſuch effectuall reaſons, and pithie arguments, he did ſo temper the ſame, that the whole parlement relied vnto his iudgement and opinion herein againſt Thomas Becket. And after his death, ſuch was the grauitie, modeſtie, and wiſedome of the man, that he was ſpeciallie choſen to be ambaſſador for the king vnto pope Alexander the third; and ſo wiſelie, and with ſuch diſcretion vſed the ſame, that notwithſtanding his cauſe and meſſage had manie aduerſaries, yet he reconciled the pope and the king, obteined the goodwill and fauour of the pope, and brought his meſſage to good effect. This biſhop was in great familiaritie and acquaintance with Baldwin of Exceſter his countriman, now archbiſhop of Canturburie, who was a poore mans ſonne in this citie; but for his learning aduanced to this eſtate. In this biſhops time, about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred thrée ſcore and eight, William Fitzralfe a citizen of this citie founded a cell for moonks within this citie, and dedicated the ſame to ſaint Alexius, which not long after was vnited to ſaint Iohns within the eaſt gate of the ſame citie. In his time alſo Reinold of Courtneie a nobleman of Normandie, the ſon of Elorus the ſon of Lewes, named Lewes le Groſſe king of France came into this land, and married Hawiſe daughter and heire to Mawd the daughter and heire to Adelis, ſiſter and heire to Richard de Briono the firſt vicount of Deuon, and in hir right was vicount of Deuon. This Bartholomew, after he had béene biſhop about fouretéene yeares, in the yere one thouſand one hundred eightie and foure, died: but where he died, and where he was buried it dooth not apéere. In this biſhops time about the yeare one thouſand one hundred and ſeuentie, one Iohannes Cornienſis a Corniſh man borne, was a famous learned diuine, he was a ſtudent at Rome and other places in Italie, and by that meanes grew into great acquaintance with pope Alexander the third: he wrote diuerſe bookes, and namelie one De incarnatione Chriſti, againſt Peter Lombard, who affirmed, Quòd Chriſtus ſecundum quod homo eſt, aliquid non eſt; and this he dedicated to pope Alexander.

Iohn the chanter.

19 Iohn the chanter of the cathedrall church of this citie was conſecrated and inſtalled biſhop of this church, in the yeare one thouſand one hundred eightie and foure, he was well reported of for his lib[illegible]litie in continuing the buildings of this church, a[illegible]e was nothing inferior to his predeceſſors. In his [illegible]e king Henrie Fitzempreſſe died, and he h[illegible]auing béene biſhop about ſix yeares, died in the [illegible] of our Lord one thouſand one hundred ninetie and one.

Henrie Marſhall.

20 Henrie Marſhall archdeacon of Stafford, the brother to Walter earle marſhall of England, was conſecrated biſhop by Hubert archbiſhop of Canturburie, in the yeare one thouſand one hundred ninetie and one; he finiſhed the building of his church, according to the plot and foundation which his predeceſſors had laid; and that doone, he purchaſed the patronage and lordſhip of Woodburie of one Albemarlie, which he gaue and impropriated vnto the vicars chorall of his church. In this mans time, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred and one, one Simon Thurnaius a Corniſh man borne, brought vp in learning, did by diligence and ſtudie ſo proſper therein, that he became excellent in all the liberall ſciences, and in his daies none thought to be like him. He left Oxenford, where he had béene a ſtudent, and went to Paris, and there became a prieſt, and ſtudied diuinitie, and therein became ſo excellent, and of ſo déepe a iudgement, that he was made chéefe of the Sorboniſts; at length he became ſo proud of his learning, and did glorie ſo much therein, that he would be ſingular, & thought himſelfe to be another Ariſtotle: and ſo much he was therein blinded, and waxed ſo farre in loue with Ariſtotle, that he preferred him before Moſes and Chriſt. But behold Gods iuſt iudgement. For ſuddenlie his memorie failed him, and he waxed ſo forgetfull, that he could neither call to remembrance anie thing that he had doone, neither could he diſcerne, read, or know a letter of the booke. This Henrie, after that he had ſpent and liued twelue yeares in his biſhoprike, he died, and lieth buried in the north ſide of the chancell of his church, in a verie faire toome of marble, in the yeare one thouſand two hundred and ſix.

Simon de Apulia.

21 Simon de Apulia, in the yeare one thouſand two hundred and ſix was inſtalled biſhop of this ſée, of him there remaineth no memoriall at all. In his time were famous Ioſeph Iſcanius, and Alexander Neckam; the one was verie well learned in the Latine and Gréeke tong, and in the liberall ſciences; the other was prior of ſaint Nicholas, and was an vniuerſall man, being a profound philoſopher, an eloquent orator, a pleaſant poet, and a déepe diuine. In this biſhops time the doctrine of eleuation, adoration, reſeruation, and praieng for the dead, being eſtabliſhed by pope Honorius the third, the pariſh churches within this citie were limited, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred twentie & two. In this mans time, in the yeare one thouſand two hundred and twelue, one Iohannes Deuonius, ſo ſurnamed, becauſe he was borne in Deuon, being well bent to good ſtudies, was much commended for his learning and modeſtie. He was familiar and of great acquaintance with Baldwin archbiſhop of Canturburie, and being made abbat of Ford, was in ſuch fauor with king Iohn, that he choſe him to be his confeſſor and chapleine: he was a writer, and compiled diuerſe bookes which were then accounted of. Being dead, he was buried in his abbeie, the people much lamenting the want of ſo good a man. This biſhop hauing ſpent eightéene yeares, died, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred twentie and foure, & was buried in his owne church.

William Brewer.

22 William Brewer, verie ſhortlie after the death of the foreſaid Simon, was elected biſhop, and conſecrated by Stephan Langton archbiſhop of Canturburie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred twentie and foure. He was borne and deſcended of a noble houſe and parentage, being brother to ſir William Brewer knight, the huſband of the eldeſt daughter, & one of the heirs to William de Verona, erle of Deuon; and who alſo was founder of the abbeies of Tor, of Hartland, and other monaſteries. This biſhop ſo wiſelie and diſcréetlie behaued himſelfe, that he was had in great reputation among all men, and in ſpeciall fauour with the king. For king Henrie, hauing giuen his ſiſter ladie Iſabell to wife vnto Frederike the emperor, did commend and betake hir to this biſhop, to be conueied and conducted to the emperor. And ſuch was the fame and good report ſpred of him, that as he paſſed through the countries, they were from place to place receiued with great honor; and being come to the citie of Coleine, the archbiſhop there did not onelie verie honorablie receiue them, but alſo accompanied them vnto the citie of Wormes, where the mariage was ſolemnized. When this biſhop had ſéene the marriage, and all things performed, he tooke his leaue, and was diſmiſſed with great preſents, and honorablie accompanied homewards by the archbiſhop and others. At his returne he was ioifullie receiued of all the noble men about the king, and moſt thankfullie by the king himſelfe, whome the king vſed as his ſpeciall and moſt truſtie councellor in all his weightie cauſes. This biſhop being come home to his owne houſe, and minding (as his predeceſſors had doone) to leaue ſome good memoriall behind him, he made a deane, and conſtituted twentie foure prebendaries within his church. To the one he improprelated Brampton and Coliſton Rawleie; for the others he purchaſed ſo much land, as out whereof he aſſigned to euerie prebendarie foure pounds by the yeare, and of theſe he ordeined his chapter. Alſo in this mans time, in the yeare one thouſand two hundred and fortie, Gilbert Long and Robert his brother citizens of this citie builded and founded the hoſpitall of ſaint Iohns, within the eaſt gate of this citie, for the ſuſtenance of certeine poore folks, called afterwards the poore children of ſaint Iohns, & gaue all their lands and tenements to the ſame, which was ſufficient. The yeare following, the cell of Alerius was remooued and adioined to ſaint Iohns; and then the founders being dead, the charge and gouernement of that houſe was by thoſe founders commended to the maior of this citie, & they thenſeforth were founders and patrons thereof. In the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred fortie and foure, there grew a contention concerning the poore lazer ſicke people of the Magdalen without the ſouth gate of this citie, whoſe maner and vſage was then, with a clapdiſh vpon euerie market daie to reſort and come to the markets, and there to beg euerie mans deuotion: but by reaſon of their ſickneſſe, which was lothſome and abhorred, the peoples deuotion waxed ſhort and ſcant againſt them: as alſo euerie man murmured againſt their going & begging at large. Where vpon the matter being brought into queſtion betwéene the biſhop and this citie, it was concluded that a permutation ſhould be made: and that therefore the biſhops ſhould be patrones, and haue the gouernement of ſaint Iohns, and the maior and his ſucceſſors to be gardians and founders of the hoſpitall of the Magdalen; with a prouiſo, that the proctor of the hoſpitall of the Magdalen ſhould on one daie in euerie moneth come with his box to ſaint Peters church at the time of ſeruice, and there receiue and gather the deuotion of the canons, which is vſed at theſe preſents. This poore houſe remaineth ſtill, but the other for want of good fréends was ſuppreſſed and diſſolued. This biſhop, after he had continued in his church about ninetéene yeares, he died, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred fortie and foure, and lieth buried in the middle of his owne church vnder a plaine marble ſtone.

Richard Blondie.

23 Richard Blondie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred fortie and fiue, was conſecrated and inſtalled biſhop, Bonifacius then being archbiſhop of Canturburie. This Richard was a man of a mild ſpirit, but verie ſtout againſt ſuch as in his time did offer anie iniurie to the church. And in his old yeares being but a weake man, he was much carried and ruled by ſuch as were his officers and about him, who taking the opportunitie of the time, vſed all the meanes they might to inrich themſelues. His chéefeſt officers were one Lodeſwell his chancellor, Sutton his regiſter, Fitzherbert his officiall, and Ermeſtow the kéeper of his ſeale. Theſe with others of the chéefe ſeruants of his houſhold compacted among themſelues, that whileſt the biſhop was yet liuing, who then laie ſicke and verie weake in his bed, to make and conueie vnto themſelues conueiances of ſuch liuelihoods as then laie in the biſhops diſpoſition; and accordinglie made out aduouſons and other ſuch conueiances as to them ſéemed beſt, all which were forthwith ſealed and deliuered according to the orders among them concluded. But theſe their ſubtill dealings were not ſo cloſelie conueied, but that the next biſhop following boolted and found the ſame out; and did not onelie reuerſe all their doings, but alſo did excommunicat them, and who were not abſolued vntill they had doone their penance for the ſame: which was doone at ſaint Peters church openlie, vpon Palmeſundaie, being the ninetéenth daie of March, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred thréeſcore and ſeuen. This biſhop Richard in the twelfe yeare of his biſhoprike, died, and was buried in his owne church.

Walter Broneſcome.

24 Walter Broneſcome, archdeacon of Surreie, was conſecrated biſhop of Exceſter vpon Paſſion ſundaie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred foure ſcore and ſix vnder Bonifacius then archbiſhop. He was borne in this citie of Exon, and was the ſonne of poore parents; but he being of a verie towardneſſe and good diſpoſition, and verie apt to learning, they partlie of themſelues, and partlie by helpe of their friends, did put him to ſchoole and kept him to his booke, wherein he proued and proſpered ſo well that he was verie well learned. At the time of his election he was no prieſt, and therefore not capeable of anie ſuch dignitie: but immediatlie he tooke that order vpon him, and forthwith was conſecrated biſhop. All which being doone within fiftéene daies, it was counted as for a miracle; namelie, that he ſhould be elected biſhop, then made prieſt, and at laſt to be conſecrated within that ſpace. For ſo manie dignities (as they termed it) to be caſt vpon one man in ſo ſhort a time, had not béene lightlie ſéene. He founded the college of Glaſenete in Perrin in Cornswall, and indowed the ſame with faire poſſeſſions and reuenues. He purchaſed the Barton of Rokeſdon and Cliſt, and gaue it to the hoſpitall of S. Iohns within the eaſt gate of the citie of Exceſter. He inſtituted in his owne church the feaſt called Gabriels feaſt; and gaue a péece of land for the maintenance thereof. He alſo did by a policie purchaſe the lordſhip and houſe of Cliſt Sachiſfield, and by a deuiſe did inlarge the Barton thereof, by gaining of Corniſh wood from his deane and chapter: and builded then a verie faire & a ſumptuous houſe, and called it biſhops Cliſt, which he left to his ſucceſſors. Likewiſe he got the patronage of Cliſt Fomeſon, now called Sowton, and annexed the ſame to his new lordſhip, which (as it was ſaid) was in this order. He had a frier to be his chapleine and confeſſor, which died in his ſaid houſe of Cliſt, and ſhould haue bin buried at the pariſh church of Far[illegible]on, bicauſe the ſaid houſe was and is in that pa[illegible] but bicauſe the pariſh church was ſomewhat [illegible], the waies foule, and the weather rainie, or for ſome other cauſes; the biſhop willed and commanded the corps to be carried to the pariſh church of Sowton, then called Cliſt Fomeſon, which is verie néere, and bordereth vpon the biſhops lordſhip: the two pariſhes there being diuided by a little lake called Cliſt. At this time one Fomeſon a gentleman was lord and patrone of Cliſt Fomeſon, and he being aduertiſed of ſuch a buriall towards in his pariſh, and a léech waie to be made ouer his land, without his leaue or conſent required therein, calleth his tenants togither, and goeth to the bridge ouer the lake, betwéene the biſhops land and his, and there méeteth the biſhops men bringing the ſaid corps, and forbiddeth them to come ouer the water. But the biſhops men nothing regarding the ſame, doo preſſe forwards to come ouer the water; and the others doo withſtand and fall at ſtrife about the matter, ſo long, that in the end my lords frier is fallen into the water. The biſhop taketh this matter in ſuch griefe, that a holie frier, a religious man, and his owne chapleine and confeſſor ſhould ſo vnreuerentlie be caſt into the water, that he falleth out with the gentleman, and (vpon what occaſion I know not) he ſueth him in the law, and ſo vexeth and tormenteth him, that in the end he was faine to yéeld himſelfe to the biſhops deuotion, and ſéeketh all waies he could to currie the biſhops good will, which he could not obteine, vntill for his redemption he had giuen and ſurrendred vp his patronage of Sowton with a peece of land, all which the ſaid biſhop annexeth to his new lordſhip. Thus by policie he purchaſed the manor of biſhops Cliſt, by a deuiſe gaineth Corniſh wood, and by power wreſteth the patronage of Sowton. This biſhop after he had occupied this ſee about three and twentie years, died and was buried in his owne church, in a ſumptuous toome of alabaſter.

Peter Quiuill.

25 Peter Quiuill, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred foure ſcore and one, was conſecrated biſhop of this church, vnder Iohn archbiſhop of Canturburie. He firſt inſtituted a chanter and a ſubdeane in his church. To the one he impropriated Painton and Chidleigh, and to the other the rectorie of Egloſehaile in Cornewall, he was a liberall and a ſpeciall benefactor to the hoſpitall of ſaint Iohns in Exceſter as well in goods as in liuelihoods, he firſt began to inlarge & increaſe his church from the chancell downewards, and laid the foundation thereof. In his time in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred foure ſcore and fiue, Walter Lichlade the firſt chanter was ſlaine in a morning as he came from the morning ſeruice, then called the Mattins, which was then wont to be ſaid ſhortlie after midnight. Vpon which occaſion the king came vnto this citie, and kept his Chriſtmaſſe in the ſame, and therevpon a compoſition was made betweene the biſhop and the citie for incloſing of the churchyard, and building of certeine gates there, as appeereth by the ſaid compoſition bearing date in Feſto annunciationis beatæ Mariæ 1286. The king at the ſute of the earle of Hereford, who at his being here was lodged in the houſe of the Greie friers, which then was neere the houſe of S. Nicholas, obteined of the biſhop, that they ſhould be remoued from thenſe to a more wholeſome place, which was to the place without the ſouth gate: wherof after the kings departure grew ſome controuerſie, bicauſe the biſhop refuſed to performe his promiſe made to the king. This man alſo impropriated the pariſh of S. Newleine, and the pariſh of Stoke Gabriell, and vnited the ſame to the office of the chancellor of the cathedrall church; & vnder con[illegible] that the ſaid chancellor ſhould continuallie [illegible] lecture within the ſaid citie, of diuinitie or of [illegible]: and if he ſhould faile to doo this, that [illegible] it might and ſhould be lawfull to the biſhop to [illegible] the ſaid parſonages impropriated, and to beſtow it at his pleaſure, as appeereth by the ſaid grant vnder the ſeales of the ſaid biſhop, deane and chapter, dated the twelfe of the calends of Maie 1283. This biſhop not long after, and in the eleuenth yeare of his biſhoprike, [illegible]; being choked in drinking of a ſirrup, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred ninetie and two, & was buried in his owne church. The Franciſcans or Greie friers of this citie imputed his death to his hard dealing with them. For whereas he had promiſed the king to prouide a conuenient place for them to build their houſe in, and had willed their warden named Drodatus, to ſeeke out and make inquirie for the ſame: yet notwithſtanding when he had ſo doone, bicauſe the ſame was in his ſee, he did ſwarue from his ſaid promiſe, and did vtterlie denie to performe the ſame, by the perſuaſion of one Peter Benefeld, a Dominican or Blacke frier, and Confeſſor vnto the ſaid biſhop. For he enuieng the good ſucceſſe of the Franciſcans, perſuadeth with the biſhop, that in no wiſe he ſhould permit them to inioy the place which they had gotten, nor to build therein; bicauſe it was within his ſee: for ſaith he, as vnder colour of ſimplicitie they creepe into the hearts of the people, and hinder vs poore preachers from our gaines and liuings; ſo be ye ſure, that if the canons put foot within your liberties, they will in time ſo incroch vpon the ſame, as that they will be cleane exempted from out of your libertie, and iuriſdiction. The biſhop being ſoone perſuaded and contented contrarie to his promiſe to yeeld therevnto, denieth the Franciſcans; and vtterlie forbiddeth them to build or to doo anie thing within his ſee or libertie. About two yeares after, the biſhop kept a great feaſt vpon the ſundaie next before ſaint Francis daie, and among others was preſent with him one Walter Winborne one of the kings chiefe iuſtices of the bench; and who was preſent when the biſhop at the requeſt of the king made promiſe to further and to helpe the Franciſcans, and who in their behalfe did now put the biſhop in mind thereof, and requeſted him to haue conſideration both of his owne promiſe and of their diſtreſſe. The biſhop miſliking theſe ſpeeches, waxed ſomewhat warme and offended, and in open termes did not onelie denie to yeeld herevnto, but wiſhed himſelfe to be choked what daie ſoeuer he did conſent or yeeld vnto it. It fortuned that the ſame weeke, and vpon the daie of ſaint Francis eue, the biſhop tooke a certeine ſirrup to drinke, and in too haſtie ſwallowing thereof his breath was ſtopped, and he forthwith died. The Franciſcans hearing thereof, made no little a doo about this matter, but blazed it abrode that ſaint Francis wrought this miracle vpon the biſhop, bicauſe he was ſo hard againſt them.

Thomas Bitton.

26 Thomas Bitton the yeare following was elected biſhop, & the ſee of Canturburie being void, he was conſecrated by Iohn Roman archbiſhop of Yorke. He left no memoriall of anie great things doone by him, ſauing that he continued in the building of his church; as alſo was a fauourer of ſuch learned men as were in his dioceſſe in his time: namelie Robert Plimpton a regular canon of Plimpton, and profeſſor of diuinitie, and who wrote two bookes, Walter of Exon a Franciſcane frier of Carocus in Cornewall, who at the requeſt of one Baldwin of Exceſter wrote the hiſtorie of Guie of Warwike; William of Exceſter doctor of diuinitie and warden of the Franciſcane friers of this citie; Godfrie ſurnamed Cornewall, a ſubtill ſchooleman, and a reader of diuinitie ſometimes in Paris. This biſhop, after fourteene yeares that he had occupied this ſee, died, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred and ſix, and was buried in his owne church.

Walter Stapledon.

27 Walter Stapledon, in the yere of our Lord one thouſand three hundred and ſeauen, being elected biſhop of this citie, was conſecrated by Robert Winchelſeie archbiſhop of Canturburie. He deſcended of a moſt noble parentage, which ioined with his learning, wiſedome, & politike head, did him great credit and fauour with the king, who had him not onelie one of his priuie councell, but alſo made him lord treaſuror of England. At his inthronization or inſtalling he kept a ſolemne obſeruation. For being come firſt to the citie, immediatlie after his conſecration, as ſoone as he came to the eaſt gate, he alighted from his horſſe, and went in on foot, all the ſtreet being couered and laied with blacke cloth; he was led on both ſides with two men of worſhip: and ſir Hugh Courtneie knight, who clamed to be ſteward of his feaſt, went next before him. The feaſt it ſelfe was verie ſumptuous and liberall. A controuerſie was betweene him & the ſaid ſir Hugh Courtneie, concerning his chalenge to be his ſteward, but it was compounded and ended. This biſhop as he grew and increaſed in wealth, ſo he was carefull in the well diſpoſing of part therof. For the increaſe of learning he builded and erected two houſes in Oxenford, the one named Stapledons inne, but ſince Exceſter college, the other Hart hall. He was alſo a ſpe-ciall benefactor vnto the hoſpitall of ſaint Iohns in Exceſter; vnto the which, for the releeuing of certeine poore children therein, he impropriated the rectorie or perſonage of Erneſcome. In the controuerſie betweene his maiſter king Edward the ſecond, and Charles the French king, he was ſent ambaſſadour to the French king, and ioined in commiſſion with the queene, for the treatie of a peace and reconciliation: which though it were obteined, yet he ioining with the Spenſers, who fauoured not the queene, he returned into England; leauing the queene behind him. And whereas they practiſed what they could, to put enimitie betweene the king and hir; and to ſet hir beſides the cuſhion, they themſelues fell into the ſame ſnares, which they had laied for others. For not long after, the queene, by the helpe of the earle of Henauld, and of ſir Iohn his brother, came into England with a great armie. Whereof the king and the Spenſers, being affraied, departed from London to Briſtow, leauing the biſhop in London, and made him cuſtos of the ſame; who requiring the keies of the gates of the citie of the maior, the commoners tooke him and beheaded him, as alſo his brother ſir Richard Stapledon, in Cheapſide, and carried his bodie to his houſe without Templebar, & there buried it in a ſandhill; namelie the fifteenth of October in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred twentie and nine. But the queene forgetting all diſcurteſies, and reuerencing his calling, commanded his corps to ſome more honourable buriall: wherevpon the ſame was taken vp, and brought to this citie, and with great ſolemnitie was buried in his owne church, vpon the eight and twentith of March, where his epitaph by the writer thereof is ſet. Thus after that he had beene biſhop about twentie yeares, he ended his daies.

Iames Barkeleie.

28 Iames Barkeleie, vpon the ſix and twentith of March, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred twentie and ſeauen, before the buriall of his predeceſſor in his owne church, was conſecrated biſhop of this citie. He deſcended of the noble houſe of the lord Barkeleie, and albeit he were reputed to be a verie godlie and a wiſe man, yet he had no time to yeeld the triall thereof. For he died in the fourth moneth after his conſecration, vpon the foure & twentith daie of Iulie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred twentie and ſeauen, and was buried in his owne church as ſome ſay, but ſome thinke he neuer came hither at all.

Iohn Grandeſſon.

29 Iohn Grandeſſon, being in Italie with pope Iohn the two & twentith. After the death of Iames Barkeleie, the king preſented him vnto the pope, who accepted the preſentation, & conſecrated him biſhop of this dioceſſe on the eight of October, Anno 1327. He was borne and deſcended of the ancient houſe of the Grandeſſons, dukes of Burgognie, his father was named Gilbert, the brother of Otho the great lord Grandeſſon. Which Gilbert comming into this land, was well interteined by the king and nobilitie, and had a good liking of the countrie, that by meanes of Henrie earle of Lancaſter, with whome he came into England, he married ladie Sibill, daughter and one of the heires to Iohn Tregos, lord of the caſtell of Ewas, neere Hereford eaſt, and by hir had iſſue fiue ſonnes, and foure daughters; of which this biſhop was one, and was borne in the pariſh of Aſhperton, in the dioceſſe of Hereford. He was from his childhood verie well affected to learning, and became a good ſcholar and profeſſor of diuinitie, of which method he wrote two books, the one intituled Pontificales maiores, and the other Pontificales minores. He was alſo verie graue, wiſe, and politike, and therby grew into ſuch credit with pope Iohn the two and twentith, that he was not onelie of his priuie councell, but alſo Nuntius apoſtolicæ ſedis; and in all matters of weight and importance an ambaſſadour for him to the emperour, to the kings of Spaine, of France, of England, and of all others the mightieſt princes of chriſtendome. And being on a time ſent in an ambaſſage to king Edward the third, he did with ſuch wiſedome and grauitie behaue himſelfe, that the king was rauiſhed in loue with him; and did ſo tenderlie loue and fauour him, that he neuer ceaſſed, vntill he had procured him from the pope, and then he gaue him the archdeaconrie of Notingham, and beſtowed great liuings on him. He made him one of his priuie councell, and in the end preferred him to this biſhoprike. After this, there being ſome diſliking betweene pope Clement the ſixt, and the king; he for his approoued wiſedome was ſent in an ambaſſage to the pope, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred fortie and three, for an intreatie of a peace and an amitie betweene them to be had; and with ſuch wiſedome he did his meſſage, that he obteined his purpoſe, and made a reconciliation. After his returne home to his biſhoprike, he was altogither giuen in dooing ſome good things. He builded & founded the college of ſaint Marie Otrie, and indowed the ſame with great and goodlie liuelihoods, he was a liberall benefactor to the vicars chorall of his owne church, as alſo to the college of Glaſneie in Perrin; he builded the two laſt arches in the weſt end of his church, vauted the roofe of all the church, and fullie performed and ended the buildings of the ſame, and then inriched his ſaid church with plate, ornaments, and great riches. Alſo he builded a verie faire houſe in his ſanctuarie at biſhops Teington, which he gaue and left full furniſhed vnto his ſucceſſors, and did impropriate vnto the ſame the parſonage of Radwaie, to the end as he ſetteth downe in his teſtament, Vt haberent locum vndè caput ſuum reclinarent, ſi fortè in manum regis eorum temporalia caperentur: and which his halſening in the end came partlie to effect. For not onelie the moſt part of the temporalties of this biſhoprike, but this new builded houſe and impropriation are come to be the poſſeſſions and inheritances of temporall men. This biſhop waxed old, and feeling in himſelfe a decaie of nature, made his laſt will and teſtament, wherein he [illegible] ſuch large and bountious legacies to the pop[illegible]perour, king, queene, archbiſhop, biſhops, colleges, churches, and to ſundrie perſons of high eſtates and callings; that a man would maruell, conſidering his great and chargeable buildings & works otherwiſe, how and by what meanes he could haue atteined to ſuch a maſſe of welth and riches; but his wiſedome and policie conſidered, it was eaſie. For firſt, he ſequeſtrateth from himſelfe and out of his houſe the troope of manie men and horſſes, reteining and keeping no more than to ſerue his reaſonable eſtate; his diet was frugall, his receipts great, his expenſes no more than neceſſarie. Moreouer, he had taken and ſet an order with all the eccleſiaſticall perſons of his dioceſſe, that at the time of their deaths, they ſhould leaue and bequeth all their goods to him or to ſome other in truſt, In pios vſus, & towards his chargeable buildings; and ſo well he was beloued, and his doings liked, that they all accepted this his order: by meanes whereof he grew within the courſe of fortie yeares to infinite wealth and riches. He was in all his life time a plaine man, and void of all vaine glorie and pompe; and preuenting that none ſhould be vſed at his buriall, commanded the ſame to be done plainelie & ſimplie; and that none of his executors, chapleins, ſeruants, nor none of his houſhold ſhould weare anie morning blacke cloths at the ſame, but onelie their accuſtomable & common apparell, which then was commonlie greie coloured cloths. This biſhop was no leſſe graue and wiſe, than ſtout and of courage, if occaſion did ſo require. And amongeſt other things this is reported of him; that about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred thirtie and one, Simon Mepham, then archbiſhop of Canturburie, ſent his mandatum to this biſhop, that he would viſit his church & dioceſſe vpon mondaie next after Aſcenſion daie then following. This biſhop (vpon what occaſion it is not written) did refuſe this mandatum, and appealed from the ſame, aduertiſing the archbiſhop that he ſhould not viſit his church nor dioceſſe. Notwithſtanding, the archbiſhop at the time appointed came to this citie, and went to S. Peters church, nothing thinking that anie durſt to withſtand him. But the biſhop knowing of his comming, goeth to the church doore, méeteth the archbiſhop, and forbiddeth him to enter into his church; but the archbiſhop preſſing forward, as with force to enter, the biſhop being then well garded, denied and reſiſted him: wherevpon the archbiſhop departed, and after at a prouinciall counſell holden at London, the archbiſhop complained hereof, but by meanes of the like diſcord betwéene him & his ſuffragans, he preuailed not. In this biſhops time one William of Exceſter, a verie well learned man, was a canon of this church; and he ioining with Nicholas de Ceſena, Okeham, Walſingham, and others, did openlie preach, that Chriſt and his apoſtles were but poore men, and had no temporall poſſeſſions: neither was anie emperor or laie man ſubiect to the pope, but onlie in matters of religion. But when he heard that pope Iohn the thrée and twentith had excommunicated, and would condemne them all for heretikes; this William, to ſaue his liuings, ſecretlie ſhronke awaie from his old companions, and changed his copie, and writeth certeine concluſions againſt them and his owne preachings. Alſo in this biſhops time, about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred and fortie, one Iohn of Bampton, ſo named, bicauſe he was borne at Bampton, in this dioceſſe, and a monke of the order of the Carmelites, was a verie good ſcholar, and firſt did openlie read Ariſtotle in the vniuerſitie of Cambridge, where he was a ſcholar, and afterwards he ſtudied diuinitie, and was m[illegible]ctor: he wrote certeine bookes, which are not extant. This biſhop, after that he had occupied this church about two and fortie yeares, he died vpon S. Swithins daie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred ſixtie and nine, and was buried in a chappell which he builded in the weſt wall of his owne church.

Thomas Brentingham.

30 Thomas Brentingham, after the death of this Iohn Grandeſſon was at one inſtant choſen biſhop of Exceſter and biſhop of Hereford, who refuſing the one tooke the other, and was conſecrated biſhop of Exceſter vpon the tenth daie of March, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred and ſeauentie, being the feaſt daie of Nereus and Achilles, William of Worceſter then archbiſhop of Canturburie. This Thomas was a man verie well learned, and experted both in eccleſiaſticall matters, and in politike gouernement, and in both theſe reſpects greatlie reuerenced and eſtéemed; and for that cauſe, at the parlement holden at Weſtminſter, in the tenth yeare of the reigne of king Richard the ſecond, was choſen one of the twelue péeres of the realme vnder the king. He was a benefactor to the Calenderhaie of the vicars chorall of his owne church, and performed and ſupplied in buildings and otherwiſe, what his predeceſſors had left vndoone. And hauing béene biſhop foure and twentie yeares, he died the third of December, in the yeare of our Lord 1394, and was buried in the north ſide of the bodie of his owne church.

Edmund Stafford.

31 Edmund Stafford vpon the twentith daie of Iune, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred ninetie and fiue, was conſecrated at Lambeth by William Courtnaie archbiſhop of Canturburie. He was borne and deſcended of noble parentage, being brother to Ralfe lord Stafford created earle of Stafford by king Edward the third; he was both wiſe and learned, and for his wiſedome grew into great credit with the king, and was both of his priuie councell, as alſo lord chancellor of England. At the parlement holden at Weſtminſter, the one and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Richard the ſecond, he being then ſpeaker of the higher houſe, made a verie learned and pithie oration, to proue the abſolute authoritie of a king: his theme was, Rex vnus erit omnibus. And hauing diſcourſed at large of the authoritie of a king, he did conclude; Quòd poteſtas regis eſſet ſibi ſola, vnita, annexa, ſolida; and whoſoeuer did by anie meanes impeach the ſame, Pœna legis meritò eſſet plectendus. And for the furtherance of good letters, he did increaſe two fellowſhips in the college of Stapledons inne in Oxford, reformed the ſtatutes of the houſe, and altered the name of it, and called it Exceſter college. After that he had continued biſhop in much honor about thrée and twentie yeares, he died the fourth of September, being the ſeuenth yeare of king Henrie the fift, and lieth buried in his owne church in a verie faire toome of alabaſter.

James Carie.

32 James Carie biſhop of Cheſter, then being at Florence when newes was brought to pope Martin the fift of the ſaid late biſhop Staffords death, was there made biſhop of this church, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred and ninetéene, and alſo conſecrated; but long he inioied not his office, for there he died, and was buried.

Edmund Lacie.

33 Edmund Lacie biſhop of Hereford was tranſlated from thenſe vnto this church in the feaſt of Eaſter, and in the eight yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the fift, in the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand foure hundred and twentie. He was a man verie deuout and religious, but ſubiect to flatterers, who carried him to their pleaſure; he was a liberall benefactor vnto the vicar of Calenderhaie. Great contentions were betwéene him and the citie for liberties, which by arbitrement were compounded. He founded the chapter houſe in his owne church. He was a profeſſor of diuinitie, and verie well learned. For in the ſecond yeare of his biſhoprike, being the ninth yeare of the kings reigne, there was a parlement holden at Weſtminſter, in which great complaints were made againſt the looſe and diſſolute life of the religious men, and eſpeciallie the blacke monks. And this matter being brought to the conuocation houſe, this biſhop as chéefe proloquutor of that aſſemblie, did make a verie learned and a pithie oration before the king, then of purpoſe preſent, and the whole cleargie, much lamenting that the religious men were ſo far ſtraied from the rules of their profeſſions, and the holineſſe of their predeceſſors. And when he had at large diſcourſed the ſame, he deliuered vp certeine articles in writing, praieng for reformation. Which his ſpéeches were ſo effectuallie vttered, and his articles ſo pithilie penned, that both the king and the clergie did not onelie with great liking and allowance praiſe and commend the ſame; but alſo tooke order that there ſhould be a prouinciall councell called out of hand for a reformation. Which was then promiſed, but not performed, by reaſon of the kings death, which not long after followed. But yet in the waie of good ſpéed it was then concluded and agréed, that euerie third benefice, being of the gift of anie of the prelats, or of anie monaſterie, ſhould from thenſeforth for ſeauen yeares be giuen to ſome ſcholar of Oxford or Cambridge. This biſhop, after he had liued fiue and thirtie yeares in this biſhoprike, died and was buried in the north wall of the queere in his owne church. After whoſe death manie miracles were ſaid and deuiſed to be done at his toome, whervpon great pilgrimages were made by the common people to the ſame.

George Neuill.

34 George Neuill ſucceeded Edmund Lacie, and was conſecrated in the feaſt of ſaint Katharine, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred fiftie and fiue, he was of a noble parentage, being the ſecond ſon of Richard Neuill earle of Sariſburie, he finiſhed and ended the chapter houſe which his predeceſſor had begun. And after that he had beene biſhop about ten yeares, he was remooued to Yorke, and made archbiſhop there, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred three ſcore and fiue.

John Booth.

35 John Booth, after the tranſlation of George Neuill to Yorke, was conſecrated biſhop vnder Thomas Burſcher archbiſhop of Canturburie, vpon the two and twentith daie of Februarie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred three ſcore and ſix. He was by profeſſion a ciuillian, and a batchelor of the ſame, he gouerned his church verie well, and builded (as ſome ſuppoſe) the biſhops ſee in the queere. But being werie of the great troubles which were in this countrie betweene king Edward the fourth and the earle of Warwike, he remooued from henſe to his houſe of Horſleigh in Hamſhire, where in the twelfe yere of his biſhoprike he died, vpon the fift of Aprill, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred ſeuentie and eight, and lieth buried at ſaint Clements in London.

Peter Court-neie.

36 Peter Courtneie, immediatlie after the death of John Booth, was preſented to this biſhoprike, and conſecrated by Thomas archbiſhop of Canturburie in Nouember, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred ſeuentie and ſeuen at ſaint Stephans in Weſtminſter; he was the ſon of ſir Philip Courtnie of Powderham, his mother was named Eliſabeth, daughter to Walter lord Hungerford. He for his wiſedome and good behauiour was in great fauor & credit with king Henrie the ſeauenth, by whoſe means he was tranſlated from this church to Wincheſter, in the ninth yeare of his being biſhop here, and in the fift yeare of his being there he died, vpon the twentith daie of December, in the yere one thouſand foure hundred ninetie and one, and lieth buried in his owne church. He finiſhed the north tower of ſaint Peters, and gaue the clocke bell which is in the ſame, and which beareth the name Peter.

Richard Fox.

37 Richard Fox, vpon the remoouing of Peter Courtneie, was conſecrated biſhop of this church, vnder Thomas archbiſhop of Canturburie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred three ſcore and ſix. He was a verie wiſe man, and in great credit and eſtimation with king Henrie the ſeuenth, vnto whome he was a faithfull councellor, and of his councell; with whom he acquainted himſelfe at Paris, when he was there a ſtudent. For king Henrie then erle of Richmond, being at Venice, and aduertiſed how the nobilitie of England was bent to haue him for their king, came from thenſe to Paris, and ſought vnto Charles then king of France for aid and helpe: in which the earle his ſutes this Fox was a ſpeciall trauellor and councellor; and in the end, God giuing the ſucces, the erle obteined the crowne, and hauing had due triall of the fidelitie, wiſedome, & truſt of this biſhop, he made him lord priuie ſeale; and kept and vſed him & his aduiſe in all his weightie matters as well at home as abrode. He being [illegible]baſſador ſundrie times to the kings of France and Scotland, and of a verie hartie good will and loue, the king made him godfather to his ſecond ſon king Henrie the eight. There was a kind of emulation, betweene this biſhop and the earle of Surreie, both of them being verie wiſe and of great ſeruice to the king and commonwealth: howbeit, in ſome diuerſitie of reſpects, the one hauing no iſſue to care for, did deale without anie priuat affection or ſingular gaine; and the other hauing iſſue, was deſirous to aduance his houſe and honor. Theſe affections did breed ſome diſlike betweene them two, yet the king finding a faith vnto himſelfe, and a commoditie to the commonwealth, miſliked it not, if the ſame exceeded his meaſure: and they more warme than commendable for their callings and eſtates. The king then or the councell would deale betwene them for the appeaſing and pacifieng of them, and to them he was both friendlie, louing, and liberall. The one he deliuered out of the tower, pardoned him of his offenſes, reſtored him to his lands, receiued him into ſpeciall fauor, made him of his priuie councell, as alſo lord treaſuror of England, and his generall into Scotland, & augmented his liuelihoods. The other he firſt made biſhop to this church, then remooued him to Bath, and from thenſe vnto Durham, and laſtlie vnto Wincheſter. Eraſmus, in his booke intituled The preacher or Eccleſiaſtes, declareth how that the king vpon a time, wanting ſome peece of monie, was to borow the ſame of the commons, and of the clergie. And for the dealings with the clergie, the matter was by commiſſion committed to this biſhop. Who when they came before him, vſed all the excuſes that they could, to ſhift themſelues from lending of anie monie. Some came verie ſeemelie and well apparelled, and awaited vpon by their men, according to their liuelihoods; and theſe alledged, that they were greatlie charged in hoſpitalitie and houſe keeping, with other charges incident to the ſame, ſo that they had no monie, & therefore could paie none. Some came poorelie and barelie apparelled, and they alledged that their liuelihoods were but ſmall, and yet their charges were great, and by that meanes the world was ſo hard with them that they had it not to ſpare. This biſhop, hauing heard all theſe excuſes, vſed this dilemme. To the richer ſort he ſ[illegible]d; Forſomuch as you are ſo well and ſeemelie ap[illegible] do keepe ſo great houſes, and haue all th[illegible]rie about you; it is a manifeſt argu[illegible]u haue ſome ſtore about you, or elſe you w[illegible] as ye doo: and therefore yee muſt needs l[illegible]e other, who pretended excuſe of their pouer[illegible], he thus replied vnto them; that forſomuch a[illegible] they were ſo bare in their apparell, and ſo [illegible]paring of their expenſes, it muſt needs be that they ſaued their purſſes and had monie, and therefore they muſt needs paie, and ſo adiudged them to lend vnto the prince. Now as he aroſe by learning, ſo he was a great fauorer and furtherer of learning: and for the good increaſe of the ſame he builded and founded Corpus Chriſti colledge in Oxenford. In his latter daies he waxed and was blind, and dieng in Wincheſter, he was there buried in his owne church, after that he had beene biſhop of Exceſter ſix yeers, he was remoued to Bath, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred ninetie and two.

Oliuer King.

38 Oliuer King, immediatlie vpon the transferring of biſhop Fox, was conſecrated biſhop of this church, in Februarie, one thouſand foure hundred ninetie and two, John Morton then archbiſhop of Canturburie. This Oliuer was chapleine to king Henrie the ſeuenth, and deane of Windeſor, and regiſter of the order of the garter. In his time were the rebellions of Joſeph the blacke ſmith in Cornewall, and of Perken Warbecke. This biſhop after that he had occupied this ſee about fiue yeares, he died in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred dred ninetie and ſeuen, and (as ſome ſuppoſe) he was buried at Windeſor.

Richard Redman.

39 Richard Redman, immediatlie vpon the death of biſhop Oliuer King, was tranſlated from his biſhoprike in Wales to this citie; but after fiue yeares he was remooued vnto the biſhoprike of Elie, and inſtalled there in September in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred and one. He was a gentleman borne, and deſcended of a verie worſhipfull houſe, which ioined with his wiſedome and learning, did much increaſe his credit and good report.

John Arundell.

40 John Arundell, next after the tranſlation of biſhop Redman, was remooued from Couentrie and Lichfield vnto this citie, and was inſtalled the fifteenth of March, one thouſand fiue hundred and one. Wherein he ſought not the preferment for anie liuelihoods, but rather deſirous to be a dweller and reſiant in his countrie where he was borne: for he was deſcended of the Arundels of Lanherne in Cornewall, a houſe of great antiquitie and worſhip. He long inioied not his new biſhoprike, for after, two yeares after his inſtalling, he had occaſion to ride vnto London, and there died, and was buried in S. Clements church without Templebar, in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and three.

Hugh Oldham.

41 Hugh Oldham, vpon the death of Arundell, by the preferment of the counteſſe of Richmond and Derbie, vnto whom he was chapleine, was preferred vnto this biſhoprike, and inſtalled in the ſame. He was a man hauing more zeale than knowledge, and more deuotion than learning; ſomewhat rough in ſpeeches, but friendlie in doings. He was carefull in the ſauing and defending of his liberties, for which continuall ſutes was betweene him and the abbat of Taueſtoke; he was liberall to the vicars chorall of his church, and reduced them to the keeping of commons, and towards the maintenance thereof he gaue them certeine reuenues, and impropriated vnto them the rectorie of Cornewood. He albeit (of himſelfe) he were not learned, yet a great fauourer and a furtherer of learning and of learned men. Notwithſtanding, he was ſometime croſſed in his honeſt attempt therein. He firſt was minded to haue inlarged Exceſter college in Oxford, as well in buildings and fellowſhips: but after being a requeſter to the fellowes for one Atkins to be a fellow, in whoſe fauour he had written his letters and was denied, he changed his mind, and his good will was alienated. About the ſame time doctor Smith biſhop of Lincolne was building of the college named Brazen noſe, and was verie willing and deſirous to ioine with him: but being denied to haue the nomination of a founder, his mind was changed. Not long after, being aduertiſed that biſhop Fox of Wincheſter was minded to erect & found a new college, he ioined with him, and contributed vnto him a great maſſe of monie, and ſo a college was builded for ſcholars, and great liuelihoods prouided for them: & then the houſe was named Corpus Chriſti college. Whereof the one of them bare the name of a founder, and the other of a benefactor. Howbeit, ſome diuerſitie was betweene theſe two biſhops at the firſt, to what vſe this college ſhould be imploied. For the founder was of the mind that he would haue made it for a houſe of monks; but the benefactor was of the contrarie mind, and would haue it for ſcholars, alleging that monks were but a ſort of buzzing flies, & whoſe ſtate could not long indure; wheras ſcholars brought vp in learning would be profitable members to the commonwealth, and good ornaments to the church of God, and continue for euer. The founder being a wiſe man, and of a deepe iudgement, when he had pauſed and conſidered hereof, yeeldeth herevnto: and ſo it was concluded betweene them to make and build a college for ſcholars. And forthwith for the good direction, guiding, and gouernement of the ſaid college and ſcholars; ſuch wiſe, good, & politike ſtatutes and ordinances were by good aduiſe and counſell deuiſed, eſtabliſhed, and ordeined; as whereby the ſaid college hath beene, and yet continueth one of the beſt nurſeries for training and inſtructing of good ſcholars in learning within that vniuerſitie. This biſhop and the abbat of Taueſtoke did ſtill contend and continue in law during their liues: and during which ſute this biſhop died, being excommunicated at Rome, and who could not be ſuffered to be buried, vntill an abſolution from Rome was procured for him. After that he had beene biſhop about ſixteene yeares, he died the fiue and twentith of Iune, one thouſand fiue hundred and nineteene, and was buried in his owne church.

John Voiſe

42 John Voiſeie, otherwiſe Harman, ſucceeded Oldham, by the preferment of king Henrie the eight, whoſe chapleine he then was, and deane of his chapell as alſo of this church; he was doctor of the lawes, verie well learned and wiſe, and in great fauour with the king, who ſent him ſundrie times in ambaſſages to forreine princes; he was lord preſident of Wales, & had the gouernement of the kings onlie daughter ladie Marie princeſſe of Wales. Of all the biſhops in the land he was accounted the courtlikeſt and the beſt courtier. And although he were well reported for his learning, yet better liked for his courtlike behauiour, which in the end turned not ſo much to his credit, as to the vtter ruine and ſpoile of the church: for of two and twentie lordſhips and manors, which his predeceſſors had and left vnto him, of a goodlie yearelie reuenue he left but three, & them alſo leaſed out. And where he found fourteene houſes well furniſhed, he left onelie one houſe bare and without furniture, and yet charged with ſundrie fees and annuities; and by theſe means this biſhoprike, which ſometimes was counted one of the beſt, is now become in temporall lands one of the meaneſt, and according to the forepropheſieng of biſhop Grandeſſon, a place ſcarſe left for the biſhop to laie and reſt his head in; and yet neuertheleſſe he was a great fauourer of learned men, and eſpeciallie of diuines, whome he preferred in his church aboue others. He was verie bountious and liberall vnto all men, but eſpeciallie vnto courtiers, vnto his owne kindred and countriemen. Vpon manie he beſtowed much, to the confuſion of ſome of them; and vpon the others he ſpent much by building of a towne called Sutton Colſhull where he was borne, which he procured to be incorporated, and made a market towne, and ſet vp therein making of kearſies, but all which in the end came to ſmall effect. In his time, after the death of king Henrie the eight, there was an alteration of religion by king Edward the ſixt, wherof inſued a rebellion & commotion in this dioceſſe: which in ſome part was imputed to this biſhop, bicauſe he laie farre from it, and dwelled in his owne countrie. Wherevpon he reſigned the biſhoprike into the kings hands, after that he had beene biſhop about thirtie yeares, and liued by the rents of the temporaltie of the biſhoprike, which when he alienated and diſcontinued, he did receiue vnto him for terme of his owne life.

Miles Couerdale.

43 Miles Couerdale, after the reſignation of Voiſeie, was by king Edward made biſhop of this citie, & conſecrated at Lambeth by Thomas Cranmer archbiſhop of Cantorburie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred and fiftie. He was borne in the north countrie, and from his childhood giuen to learning, wherein he profited verie much: he was one of the firſt which profeſſed the goſpell in this land in the time of king Henrie the eight, he tranſlated the bible out of the Hebrue into Engliſh, and wrote ſundrie bookes vpon the ſcriptures. Which doctrine being verie new and ſtrange in thoſe daies, and he verie ſtreightlie purſued by the biſhops, made his eſcape, & paſſed ouer into low Germanie, where he printed the bibles of his tranſlation and ſent them ouer into England, and therof made his gaine wherby he liued. But the biſhops, namelie D. Stokeſleie biſhop of London, when he heard hereof, and minding to preuent that no ſuch bibles ſhould be diſperſed within this realme, made inquirie where they were to be ſold, and bought them all vp; ſuppoſing that by this meanes no more bibles would be had: but contrarie to his expectation it fell out otherwiſe. For the ſame monie which the biſhop gaue for theſe bookes, was ſent ouer by the merchant vnto this Couerdale, and by that meanes he was of that wealth and abilitie, that he imprinted as manie more and ſent them ouer into England; but he was then ſo narrowlie ſought for, that he was driuen to remoue himſelfe out of Flanders into Germanie, and dwelled vnder the Palſegraue of Rhene, where he found much fauour. Firſt he taught yoong children, and hauing learned the Dutch toong, the prince Palatine gaue him a benefice, named Burghſaber, where he continued and liued verie well, partlie by that benefice, and partlie by the liberalitie of the lord Cromewell, who was his good lord and reléeued him verie much. At length, when the religion was altered in England, and the goſpell had a frée paſſage, he returned & did verie much good in preaching of the ſame. And when the commotion in Deuon was for religion, he was appointed to attend the lord Ruſſell, when he came to ſuppreſſe the ſame, and verie ſhortlie for his learning and godlie life was made biſhop of this ſée; who moſt worthilie did performe the office committed vnto him. He preached continuallie vpon euerie holie daie, and did read moſt commonlie twiſe in the wéeke in ſome one church or other within this citie. He was after the rate of his liuings a great kéeper of hoſpitalitie, verie ſober in diet, godlie in life, friendlie to the godlie, liberall to the poore, and courteous to all men, void of pride, full of humilitie, abhorring couetouſneſſe, and an enimie to all wickedneſſe and wicked men: whoſe companies he ſhunned, and whom he would in no wiſe ſhrowd or haue in his houſe and companie. His wife a moſt ſober, chaſt, and godlie matrone; his houſe and houſhold another church, in which was exerciſed all godlineſſe and vertue. No one perſon being in his houſe, which did not from time, to time giue an account of his faith and religion, and alſo did liue accordinglie. And as he had a care for the ſucceſſe in religion, ſo had he alſo for the direction of the gouernement in eccleſiaſticall cauſes. And bicauſe he was not ſkilfull therin, neither would be hindered from his godlie ſtudies, and be incombered with ſuch worldlie matters, which neuertheles he would haue be doone in all vprightneſſe, iuſtice, and equitie; he ſent to Oxford for a learned man to be his chancellor, and by the miniſterie of the writer hereof he procured and obteined one maſter Robert Weſton doctor of the ciuill law, & afterwards lord chancellor of Ireland, vnto whome he committed his conſiſtorie, and the whole charge of his eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction; allowing vnto him, not onelie all the fées therevnto apperteining, but alſo lodged and found him, his wife, familie, horſſe, and man, within his owne houſe, and gaue him a yearelie penſion of fortie pounds. And ſurelie the biſhop was no more godlie and carefull of his part, concerning preaching; but this man alſo was as diligent and ſeuere in dooing of his office, without reproch of being affectionated or corrupted. And notwithſtanding this good man, now a blameleſſe biſhop, liued moſt godlie and vertuous: yet the common people, whoſe old bottels would receiue no new wine, could not brooke nor digeſt him; for no other cauſe, but bicauſe he was a preacher of the goſpell, an enimie to papiſtrie, & a married man. Manie deuiſes were attempted againſt him for his confuſion, ſometimes by falſe ſuggeſtions, ſometimes by open railings, and falſe libels; ſometimes by ſecret backbitings, and in the end practiſed his death by impoiſoning: but by Gods prouidence the ſnares were broken and he deliuered. After that he had béene biſhop about thrée yeares king Edward died, and then quéene Marie hauing the crowne, the religion was altered, and he depriued. And notwithſtanding the malice of prelats and archpapiſts was moſt bitter againſt him, and who had ſworne his death: yet by the goodneſſe of God he was moſt miraculouſlie preſerued, and deliuered from out of their hands, at the ſute and by the meanes of the king of Denmarke: who ſo earneſtlie ſued, & ſo often wrote to the quéene for him, that he was deliuered and ſent vnto him; with whome after that he had ſtaied a while, he went againe into Germanie to the Palſgraue, who moſt louinglie receiued him, placed him againe in his former benefice of Burghſaber, where he continued vntill the death of quéene Marie. And then the preaching of the goſpell being againe receiued, & hauing a frée paſſage, he returned into England; but would neuer returne to his biſhoprike, notwithſtanding it was reſerued for him, & ſundrie times offered him; but liued a priuat life, continuing in London, preaching & teaching the goſpell, ſo long as the ſtrength of his bodie would permit; and at length being verie old and ſtriken in yeares, he died, and was honorablie buried at ſaint Magnus church in London.

John Wolſeie.

44 John Wolſeie, after the depriuation of Miles Couerdale, was reſtored to this church, and for the better ſetling of the Romiſh religion did here ſtaie for a while: but his mind was addicted to his owne countrie, that he returned thither, and made his onlie abode there, practiſing there what he could, to haue the making of kerſies to come to ſome effect; but the ſame being more chargeable than profitable, came to ſmall proofe. This man being verie old died in his owne houſe, with a pang, and was [illegible] in his pariſh church there, in the yeare of our [illegible] thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and fiue.

James Trobleſeild.

45 James Trobleſield ſuccéeded biſhop [illegible]ſeie, and was conſecrated in the yeare of our Lo. one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie & ſix, he was a gentleman borne, and of a good houſe, verie gentle and courteous; he profeſſed diuinitie, but moſt zelous in the Romiſh religion, & yet nothing cruell nor bloodie. And yet that he might not ſéeme to doo nothing, he was contented to proſecute and condemne a giltleſſe poore ſéelie woman, named Agnes Pireſt for religion and hereſie, & who was burned in Southingham for the ſame. It was laied to hir charge (as doth appeare by an indictment taken at Lanceſton, Die lunæ in quarta ſeptimana quadrageſimæ, anno Philippi & Mariæ ſecundo & tertio, before William Stanford then iuſtice of the aſſiſe) that ſhe ſhould denie the reall preſence in the ſacrament of the altar, and that the ſame was but a ſigne and a figure of Chriſts bodie, and that none doth eat reallie the bodie of Chriſt but ſpirituallie. He was verie carefull to recouer ſome part of the lands of his biſhoprike, which his predeceſſor waſted, and did obteine of quéene Marie, to him and to his ſucceſſors, the fée farme of the manor of Crediton. After that he had béene biſhop about two yeares, quéene Marie died; and he was depriued, and liued after a priuat life.

William Alleie.

46 William Alleie, in the ſecond yeare of quéene Eliſabeth, was choſen biſhop, and inſtalled the firſt of Auguſt, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred ſixtie and one. In all quéene Maries time, which were called the Marian daies, he trauelled from place to place in the north countrie, where he was not knowne; and ſometimes by practiſing of phyſike, and ſometimes by teaching of ſcholars, he picked out a poore liuing for himſelfe and his wife, and ſo continued, being not knowne to haue béene a prieſt, during all quéene Maries time: after whoſe death he went to London, and there did read diuinitie lecture in Paules verie learnedlie, and to his great commendation; and from whenſe he was taken and made biſhop of this citie. He was verie well learned vniuerſallie, but his chiefe ſtudie and profeſſion was in diuinitie, and in the toongs. And being biſhop, he debated no part of his former trauels, but ſpent his time verie godlie and vertuouſlie. Upon euerie holie daie (for the moſt part) he preached, and vpon the wéeke daies he would and did read a lecture of diuinitie; the reſidue of his time, and frée from his neceſſarie buſineſſe, he ſpent in his priuat ſtudies, and wrote ſundrie books, whereof his prelections or lectures which he did read in Paules, and his poore mans librarie he cauſed to be imprinted: the like he would haue doone with his Hebrue grammar, and other his works, if he had liued. He was well ſtored, and his librarie well repleniſhed with all the beſt ſort of writers, which moſt gladlie he would impart and make open to euerie good ſcholar and ſtudent, whoſe companie and conference he did moſt deſire & imbrace. He ſéemed at the firſt appéerance to be a rough and an auſtere man, but in verie truth, a verie courteous, gentle, and an affable man; at his table full of honeſt ſpéeches, ioined with learning and pleaſantneſſe, according to the time, place, and companie. All his exerciſes, which for the moſt part was at bowles, verie merrie and pleſant, void of all ſadneſſe, which might abate the benefit of recreation; loth to offend, readie to forgiue, void of malice, full of loue, bountifull in hoſpitalitie, liberall to the poore, and a ſuccourer of the néedie, faithfull to his friend, and courteous to all men; a hater of couetouſneſſe, and an enimie to all euill and wicked [illegible] liued an honeſt, a godlie, and vertuous life. [illegible]allie, he was indued with manie notable good [illegible] and vertues, onelie he was ſomewhat credulous, of a haſtie beléefe, and light of credit, which he did oftentimes miſlike & blame in himſelfe. In his latter time he waxed ſomewhat groſſe, and his bodie full of humors, which did abate much of his wonted exerciſes: and hauing béene biſhop about eight yeares, he died the firſt of Aprill one thouſand fiue hundred and ſeauentie, and was buried in his owne church.

William Bradbridge.

47 William Bradbridge, deane of Sariſburie, was the next biſhop, and conſecrated at Lambeth by Matthew Parker archbiſhop of Canturburie, the eightéenth of March one thouſand fiue hundred and ſeauentie: he was a profeſſor of diuinitie, but not taken to be ſo well grounded as he perſuaded himſelfe, he was zelous in religion, but not ſo forwards as he was wiſhed to be. In his latter daies he delighted to dwell in the countrie, which was not ſo much to his liking, as troubleſome to his clergie, & to ſuch as had anie ſutes vnto him. It was thought he died verie rich, but after his death it proued otherwiſe: he died ſuddenlie, no bodie being about him, at Newton Ferris, the ninth yeare of his biſhoprike, vpon the nine and twentith of Iulie, in the yeare of our Lord 1578, and was buried in his owne church. Thus farre the collection of Iohn Hooker, agréeing with the records.]

I. Stow.

A traitorous fact of Thomas Appletrée.

The ſeuentéenth daie of Iulie the quéenes maieſtie being on the riuer of Thames, about nine of the clocke at night (betwixt hir highneſſe manour of Gréenewich & Dartford) in hir priuie barge, accompanied with the French ambaſſador, the earle of Lincolne, and maiſter vicechamberlaine; it chanced that one Thomas Appletrée, a yoong man, and ſeruant to maiſter Henrie Carie, with two or thrée others, being in a bote on the Thames, rowing vp and downe betwixt the places aforenamed: the foreſaid Thomas had a caliuer or harquebus charged with bullet, and ſhooting at randon, by miſfortune ſhot one of the watermen, being the ſecond man next vnto the bales of the ſaid barge (which ſat within ſix foot of hir highneſſe) cleane through both armes, and mooued him out of his place. For the which fact the ſaid Thomas being apprehended and condemned to death, was on the one and twentith of Iulie brought to the water ſide, where was a gibbet ſet vp, directlie placed betwixt Dartford and Gréenewich. But when the hangman had put the halter about his necke, the right honorable ſir Chriſtopher Hatton capteine of the gard, and one of hir maieſties priuie councell, ſhewed the quéenes maieſties moſt gratious pardon, and deliuered him from execution. This yeare Iohn Fox of Woodbridge, William Wicknete of Portſmouth, and Robert More of Harwich Engliſhmen, hauing béene priſoners in Turkie about the ſpace of thirtéene or fouretéene yéares, with more than two hundred and ſixtie other chriſtians of diuerſe nations, by killing their kéeper, maruellouſlie eſcaped, and returned into their natiue countries.

Iohn Fox an Engliſhman deliuered two hundred and thrée ſcore chriſtians frõ captiuitie of the Turke.

Winds and high waters.

This yeare in the moneths of September and October fell great winds and raging flouds in ſundrie places of this realme, as in the towne of Newport: the cotages were borne downe, the corne loſt, paſture ground ouerwhelmed, and cattell drowned. In the towne of Bedford the water came vp to the market place, where cupboords, cheſts, ſtooles, and fourms ſwam about the houſes; their fewell, corne and haie was wrackt & borne awaie. Alſo the towne of ſaint Edes in Huntingtonſhire was ouerflowed ſuddenlie in the night, when all men were at reſt; & the waters brake in with ſuch force, that the towne was almoſt all defaced; the ſwans ſwam downe the market place, and all the towne about the botes did flote. The towne of Gormancheſter was ſuddenlie ſuppreſt, their houſes flowed full of water, when men were at reſt, and their cattell with other things were deſtroied.

Anno reg. 22.

Sir Thomas Greſham deceaſſed.

The one and twentith of Nouember, ſir Thomas Greſham knight agent to the quéenes highneſſe, who had in his life built the roiall Exchange in London, betwéene ſix and ſeuen of the clocke in the euening, comming from the ſame Exchange to his houſe (which he had ſumptuouſlie builded) in Biſhopſgate ſtréet of London, ſuddenlie fell downe in his kitchin, and being taken vp was found ſpéechleſſe, and preſentlie dead, who afterwards was ſolemnlie buried in his owne pariſh church of ſaint Helen there, where he had prepared for himſelfe a ſumptuous toome or monument, without anie epitaph or inſcription thereupon. This ſir Thomas Greſham in his teſtament (which long before his death he had ordeined) bequeathed diuerſe large legacies not yet performed.

1580

Glouer a murtherer hanged in Cheape.

Dod executed for murther.

The eight and twentith daie of March, one Francis aliàs Marmaduke Glouer was hanged on a gibet ſet vp for that purpoſe by the ſtandard in Cheape, for wilfullie murthering ſergeant Grace after he was by him arreſted. Alſo on the next morrow, being the nine and twentith daie of March, the ſame gibet was ſet vp at Hog lane end vpon eaſt Smithfield, néere vnto the tower of London, thereon to haue hanged one Richard Dod for murthering of miſtreſſe Skinner a widow, in hir houſe there by. But ſir Owen Hopton lieutenant of the tower, cõmanding the officers perteining to the ſhiriffes of London backe againe to the weſt ſide of the croſſe, tooke the ſhiriffe of the out ſhire with the priſoner into an houſe, and after long talke brought the priſoner forth againe, & deliuered him to the officers, to be by them brought backe to London. Then he cauſed the gibet to be taken downe and carried awaie at his pleaſure, and without further contention (to my knowledge) the ſaid Richard Dod was in the after noone of the ſame daie hanged at Tiborne.

A great earthquake.

On the ſixt of Aprill, being wedneſdaie in Eaſter weeke about ſix of the clocke toward euening, a ſudden earthquake happening in London, and almoſt generallie through out all England, cauſed ſuch an amazedneſſe among the people as was woonderfull for the time, and cauſed them to make their earneſt praiers to almightie God. The great clocke bell in the palace at Weſtminſter ſtrake of it ſelfe againſt the hammer with the ſhaking of the earth, as diuerſe other clocks & bels in the ſteeples of the citie of London and elſewhere did the like. The gentlemen of the Temple being then at ſupper, ran from the tables, and out of their hall with their kniues in their hands. The people aſſembled at the plaie houſes in the fields, as at the Woreater (the Theater I would ſaie) were ſo amazed, that doubting the ruine of the galleries, they made haſt to be gone. A peece of the temple church fell downe, ſome ſtones fell from ſaint Paules church in London: and at Chriſts church neere to Newgate market, in the ſermon while, a ſtone fell from the top of the ſame church, which ſtone killed out of hand one Thomas Greie an apprentiſe, and an other ſtone fell on his fellow ſeruant named Mabell Eueret, and ſo bruſed hir that ſhe liued but foure daies after. Diuerſe other at that time in that place were ſore hurt, with running out of the church one ouer another for feare. The tops of diuerſe chimneies in the citie fell downe, the houſes were ſo ſhaken: a part of the caſtell at Biſhops Stratford in Eſſex fell downe. This earthquake indured in or about London not paſſing one minute of an houre, and was no more felt. But afterward in Kent, and on the ſea coaſt it was felt three times; as at Sandwich at ſix of the clocke the land not onelie quaked, but the ſea alſo fomed, ſo that the ſhips tottered. At Douer alſo the ſame houre was the like, ſo that a peece of the cliffe fell into the ſea, with alſo a peece of the caſtell wall there: a peece of Saltwood caſtell in Kent fell downe; and in the church of Hide the bels were heard to ſound. A peece of Sutton church in Kent fell downe, the earthquake being there not onlie felt, but alſo heard. And in all theſe places and others in eaſt Kent, the ſame earthquake was felt three times to moue, to wit, at ſix, at nine, and at eleuen of the clocke.

A water-quake.

A ferrie drowned.

The nineteenth daie of Aprill the ferrie at Lambeth was drowned with fiue men and foure horſſes; other two men and fiue horſſes ſwam to land and were ſaued.

William Lambe eſquier deceaſed, his almeſdeeds.

On the one and twentith of Aprill, in the yeare 1580 departed this life maſter William Lambe eſquier, ſometime gentleman of the chappell in the reigne of king Henrie the eight, citizen of London, and free of the clothworkers. Of this mans almeſdeeds and manifold charities, ſome before, ſome ſince his death put in effectuall practiſe, thus reporteth a memoriall recorded in print, agreeing in truth with his laſt will and teſtament: an extract whereof for others imitation is neceſſarilie here to be inſerted. This gentleman remembring that learning bringeth preferment, yea euen to them which are put baſelie borne, as it pleaſed God to moue him by his good and gratious ſpirit, he proued himſelfe by teſtimonials of his doings a louer of learning, and a fauourer of euerie honeſt profeſſion. For in the towne of Sutton Valens in Kent, this worſhipfull gentleman at his owne coſts and proper expenſes erected a grammar ſchoole for the education of youth in the feare of God, in good maners, in knowledge and vnderſtanding.

The erection of a grammar ſchoole & neceſſarie allowance to the maiſter and vſher.

He alſo weieng with himſelfe, that the labourer ought of right to haue his hire; and that, no man goeth to warre of his owne proper charge, beſides other commodities which he thought meet and neceſſarie, hath allowed the maſter twentie pounds, and the vſher ten pounds, from time to time, as either place ſhall be ſuplied by ſucceſſion, for their yearelie ſtipends and perpetuall penſions. To continue the reherſall of his good deeds in Sutton aforeſaid, note his tender & pitifull heart toward the poore, for whoſe ſuſtentation, maintenance, and reliefe, he hath builded ſix almes houſes for the impotent, and hath giuen ſix pounds to be yearelie paied vnto them for their neceſſarie prouiſion. Moreouer, beſides this charitable deed, to keepe ſtill within the compaſſe of Kent, marke the ſingular loue which this gentleman did beare vnto learning; for the furtherance whereof, and the more incouragement of poore ſcholers, he hath giuen to the ſchoole of Maidſtone ten pounds a yeare for euer, with this caueat or prouiſo, that needie mens children ſhould be preferred to the enioieng of this ſingular benefit.

Almes houſes built for the poore.

Allowance for poore mens children to be kept at ſchole.

The common wealth remembred.

A reliefe to poore clothiers in diuerſe places.

That this gentleman had not onelie a regard for the ſeed-plots of learning, to haue them watered with the ſprings of his bountie: but alſo a prouident eie, and a carefull hart for the profit of the common wealth, the particulars following ſubſtantiallie proue. For, ſeeing in his life time the decaie of ſundrie trades, the ruine of diuerſe occupations, and other inconueniences, which are like to grow to the vndooing of a multitude, except by policie they be preuented: of a meere affection (if I ſaid fatherlie I were not controllable) he hath freelie giuen to the poore clothiers in Suffolke, to the poore clothiers of Bridgenorth in Shropſhire, and to the poore clothiers at Ludlow in the ſaid countie, three [illegible] pounds, to be paid by euen portions, to each [illegible] towne of the ſaid counties one hundred [illegible] a peece, for their ſupportation and maintenance at their worke and occupation. So litle eſteemed he the mucke of this world, in reſpect of do[illegible] good, ſpeciallie when he ſaw old age drawing him to his graue; of which mind it were to be wiſhed all richmen would be (whom God hath made his ſtewards) when they war crooked & bow back[illegible] and (as the poet ſaith)

Obrepit canis rugoſa ſe[illegible] capillis.

London the better by maiſter Lambe.

Furthermore, the well [illegible] weldooing not yet waxing drie, but yeelding [illegible]quor of reliefe verie largelie, hath watered other places. For, as the countrie, ſo likewiſe the citie (the citie I meane of London) hath cauſe, yea iuſt cauſe with open mouth to magnifie the goodneſſe of God, ſo mightilie working in this praiſeworthie eſquier. The memorable monuments, which ſhall liue when he is dead, and ſhall flouriſh when he is rotten, are witneſſes of the loue, which he being a citizen bare vnto this citie. For, let vs begin with the conduit which he of his owne coſts, not requiring either collection or contribution, founded of late in Holborne, not ſparing expenſes ſo it might be ſubſtantiall, not pinching for charges ſo it might be durable and plentifull, as they can teſtifie which ſaw the ſeeking of the ſprings, the maner of making trenches, the ordering of the pipes, lieng in length from the head to the ſaid conduit, more than two thouſand yards: and finallie, the framing of euerie neceſſarie appurtenance he wa ter at the ridge run ning at the andard.

A remembrance of Holborne conduit founded and finiſhed in An. 1577.

tenance thereunto belonging. Beſides this, means is made, by a ſtandard with one cocke at Holborne bridge to conueie the waſt, which doth ſuch ſeruice, the water thereof being both ſweet, pleaſant, and wholſome, as neither rich nor poore can well miſſe. Which great worke as he aduiſedlie attempted, ſo he commendablie finiſhed, hauing diſburſed therabouts, of his owne coſts & charges, to the ſum of 1500 pounds.

rouident conſidera tions.

And yet further note the wiſedome and prouidence of this gentleman, who conſidering that the right vſe of a good thing might cut off manie occaſions of vnthriftines and idleneſſe, and knowing that we are placed in this world to follow the vocation wherevnto we are called: beſides that, ſeeing the hardneſſe of this age wherein we liue, that manie would worke if they had meanes, manie neglect and care not for worke though they haue meanes, ſome would willinglie withſtand pouertie if they might, ſome had rather beg and doo worſſe than giue themſelues to labour, hath beene thus beneficiall to poore women that are glad to take pains, as to beſtow vpon them a hundred and twentie pales, therewith to carrie and ſerue water: an honeſt ſhift of liuing, though ſomewhat toileſome. To deſcend and come downe to other his almeſdeeds, you ſhall vnderſtand that he being a member of the right worſhipfull corporation and ſocietie of Clothworkers, was not forgetfull of that companie, vnto whome he hath giuen his dwelling houſe in London, with other lands, and tenements, to the value of thirtie pounds or thereabouts, by them to be thus beſtowed: to wit, for the hiring of a miniſter to read diuine ſeruice thriſe a weeke, that is, euerie ſundaie, wedneſdaie, and fridaie throughout the yeare, in the chapell or church belonging to his houſe, called by the name of ſaint Iames in the wall by Criplegate: and for foure ſermons there yeerelie to be made and preached, a competent allowance.

oze women benefited by the conduit.

he right worſhipfull Clothwor kers remem bred.

lowance foure erlie ſer ns.

Out of which ſum alſo of thirtie pounds, it is prouided that a deduction be made by the ſaid Clothworkers, for apparelling twelue men, and as manie women, in forme as followeth: that is to ſaie, to euerie one of the twelue men one freeze gowne, one locoram ſhirt, & a good ſtrong paire of winter ſhooes: to the twelue women likewiſe one freeze gowne, one locoram ſmocke, & a good ſtrong paire of winter ſhooes, all readie made for their wearing: remembred alwaies that they muſt be perſons both poore and honeſt, vnto whome this charitable deed ought to be extended. Prouided alſo, that the execution hereof be done the firſt daie of October, orderlie from yeare to yeare for euer whiles the world doth laſt. Moreouer, he hath giuen to thoſe of his companie foure pounds freelie, not for a time, but perpetuallie: and thus doth his bountifulneſſe manie waies appeare. To the pariſh of S. Giles without Criplegate, he hath giuen fifteene pounds to the bels and chime, hauing meant (as it ſeemeth if they had taken time) to be more liberall in that behalfe. The ſaid bels & chime were in his life, & alſo after his deth kept in good order according to his will: but afterwards vpon occaſion ſome of them newlie caſt became ill of ſound & out of tune: a fault in ſome which would be amended. The poore of the pariſh aforeſaid, by their reliefe in his life time ſecretlie miniſtred, haue iuſt cauſe to lament the loſſe of this right bountifull almoner. For by his means their ſuccour was the more: now it is to be feared it will be ſo much the leſſe, by how much it may be ſuppoſed he increſed their reliefe. Thus regarded he not ſo much his priuat thrift, as the cōmon good, giuing therein to the world a teſtimonie of chriſtian prudence, whoſe nature is to prefer the benefit of manie before the profit of one, according to that of the poet:

e poore nd poore a ſmock, a gowne, and a paire of ſhoes, &c.

aint Giles ithout Criplegate bene fited.

Publica priuatis qui ſapit anteferet.

This gentlemans diſtributions are ſo diuerſe, and ſo manie, that the reherſall of them requireth a large diſcourſe. It is well knowen, and that can the worſhipfull companie of the Stationers witneſſe, that this gentleman, for the ſpace of theſe fourteene or fifteene yeares, whiles he liued, was pitifull to the poore of the pariſh of S. Faiths, and other pariſhes: in which ſaid pariſh church, euerie fridaie ordinarilie throughout the yeare, diſtribution was made of their allowance by the hands of the ſaid worſhipfull Stationers, to whome that charge was and is committed: namelie, to twelue poore people twelue pence in monie, and twelue pence in bread. Neither is this charitable deed laid aſleepe, but continued euen to the worlds end, for the perpetuall ſuccor of the poore and impotent, a legacie of ſix pounds, thirteene ſhillings and foure pence, allowed to that end; the beſtowing whereof is in the hands of the ſaid worſhipfull ſocietie of Stationers, the diſtributors of this almeſſe to the poore: who are put in mind to praiſe God for that prouiſion, in this requeſt of the benefactor grauen in mettall, and fixed faſt in the wall hard by his tombe:

Reliefe for the poore people. M. Lambes loue to the worſhipfull Stationers.

Perpetuall prouiſion for the poore.

I praie you all that receiue bread and pence,
To ſaie the Lords praier before ye go hence.

As for Chriſtes hoſpitall, vnto the which he hath prooued himſelfe a fatherlie benefactor, towards the bringing vp of the poore children, he hath giuen ſix pounds, which they ſhall inioie for the terme of fiue hundred yeares. Moreouer (marke the rare liberalitie of this vertuous gentleman) he hath giuen to the ſaid hoſpitall one hundred pounds in readie monie, wherewith to purchaſe lands, that their reliefe, by the reuenues of the ſame, might be perpetuall: a notable deed, and an vndoubted worke of perfect chriſtianitie. As for S. Thomas ſpitle in Southworke, toward the ſuccour of the ſicke and diſeaſed, he hath giuen foure poundes yearelie, and for euer: ſo that we may ſee in all his proceedings with what mercie he was moued, with what pitie pricked: and finallie, in all reſpects how godlie giuen. And here by the waie it is to be noted, that wheras it was reported, that he gaue to the hoſpitall, commonlie called the Sauoie, founded by king Henrie the ſeuenth, to purchaſe lands for the behoofe of the ſaid hoſpitall, one hundred pounds in monie: it is nothing ſo. For his beneficence towards that hoſpitall was ſtaid, not thorough anie default in him; but bicauſe ſuch agreements could not be concluded vpon, as he reaſonablie required. Wherefore his contribution that waie ceaſed, ſore (I dare ſaie) againſt his godlie will. Thus much I was deſired to ſpeake touching that matter, to the intent that nothing but plaine truth might be reported, with the contrarie whereof he was not a little offended.

Reliefe for Chriſtes hoſpitall.

A purchaſe for the ſaid hoſpitall.

Reliefe for S. Thomas ſpittle.

Why he ſtaid his beneficence from the hoſpitall of the Sauoie.

And although offendors deſerue rather to be puniſhed than fauoured, wherevpon by politike gouernement it is prouided, that their bodies apprehended, be committed to appointed places of impriſonment: yet this good gentleman remembring that the holie Ghoſt willeth vs not to withdraw our hand from anie of our brethren in diſtreſſe, conſidering that charitie ſhould not be parciall but indifferent; hath for the releefe of the poore priſoners of the two Counters, of Newgate, of Ludgate, of the Marſhalſeie, of the Kings Bench, and of the white Lion, dealt verie bountifullie, and diſcreetlie: giuing vnto the two Counters, ſix pounds to be paied vnto them both by twentie ſhillings a moneth: and to the other priſons aboue mentioned, ſix mattreſſes a peece, the whole number being two dozen and a halfe. In conſideration of which charitable deed, how deepelie they are bound, if they haue anie ſparkle of grace, to thanke God for his goodneſſe ſhewed vnto them by the miniſterie of this gentleman, all the world maie per-

Priſons for offendors.

Releefe for poore priſoners.

A charitable worke indeed.

Marriage monie for poore maids.

ceiue. It were iniurie offered, to let ſlip vnremembred his mindfulneſſe of poore maides marriages: and how willing he was to helpe them, it appeareth by his good gift of twentie pounds to be equallie diuided among fortie ſuch in number by equall portions of ten ſhillings a péece: with this caueat, that theſe poore maides ſo to be married, ſhould be of good name and fame: wherein marke how in all his bequeſts, wiſedome is ioined as a yokefellow with his bountie.

His loue towards his ſeruants.

Laſtlie, and for concluſion, this diſcréet gentleman, carried awaie with the zeale of a good conſcience, tendering the ſtate of his ſeruants, left them alſo at a reſonable good ſtaie. For beſides their halfe yeares bord fréelie giuen and granted, he hath béene beneficiall to them in diuerſe other reſpects, which I paſſe ouer vnremembred. But alas! theſe ſorowfull ſeruants doo not a little lament the loſſe of ſo louing a maiſter. I omit the hundred & eight fréeſe gownes readie made, which he bequeathed at his funerall to poore people, both men and women: with the diſperſing of the remnant of all his goods after his buriall, where need and reaſon required. And thus you ſée what monuments this gentleman hath left behind him, to beare witneſſe to the world of the fruitfulneſſe of his faith: which if (as ſaint Iames ſaith) it maie be iudged by works, and that it is a dead and a barren faith which declareth not it ſelfe by déeds: then the ſequele maie be this, that the faith wherewith he (of whome this is written) was indued, ſheweth it ſelfe to be the ſame faith which is wiſhed, and I would to God were in the heart of euerie chriſtian. As for his religion, it was ſound; his profeſſion ſincere; his hearing of Gods word, attentiue & diligent; his vſe of praier, deuout: in his ſickeneſſe patient, willing to forſake the world, and to be with Chriſt, in whoſe faith he died; and lieth intoomed in a faire large vawt in ſaint Faiths vnder Paules, this epitaph grauen in braſſe or copper, fixed vpon his graue ſtone, compriſing a note of our mortalitie:

His faith was fruitfull.

As I was, ſo are ye:
As I am, you ſhall be:
That I had, that I gaue:
That I gaue, that I haue:
Thus I end all my coſt:
That I left, that I loſt.

Hitherto concerning maiſter Lambes almeſdéeds, wherein thus much hath at large béene ſpoken for others example, whome as God hath indued with riches: ſo it were to be wiſhed they would vſe them no worſe.] The firſt daie of Maie, after twelue of the clocke in the night, was an earthquake felt in diuerſe places of Kent, namelie at Aſhford, great Chart, &c: which made the people there to riſe out of their beds, and run to the churches, where they called vpon God by earneſt praiers to be mercifull vnto them. Of this earthquake one writeth thus. Manie thouſands haue heard and commonlie it is reported, that latelie in Kent an other earthquake was ſéene and felt, and ſo terriblie and ſore the earth did tremble and quake, that it wakened people that ſoundlie ſlept, and had like to haue rocked them all aſléepe that were awake. So fearefull was the matter, and ſo dreadfull is the wrath of God in time of viſitation, and wicked ſeaſon of iniquitie. This was a pretie naturall cauſe: in déed ſo I thinke. For the naturall diſeaſes of man, and the naughtie filthineſſe of the fleſh (full of luſt and infirmities) cauſed God for the correction of natures inclination, to make Douer, Sandwich, Canturburie, Graueſend, and ſundrie other places tremble and ſhake.

I. Stow.
An earthquake in Kent.

T. C.

Caſtels and ſhips ſéene in the aier.

T. C.

The eightéenth daie of Maie, about one houre before ſun ſetting, diuerſe gentlemen of worſhip, and good credit, riding from Bodman in Cornewall towards Foie, there appeared to their ſéeming in the northeaſt, a verie great miſt or fog, much like vnto the ſea: and the forme of a cloud in the faſhion of ſome great caſtell, with flags, & ſtreamers thereon as it were ſtanding in the ſea, which preſentlie vaniſhed awaie. In whoſe ſtéed, and néere to the ſame place, appeared an other cloud which altered into the likeneſſe of a great argoſie, furniſhed with maſts, and other neceſſaries; and hir ſailes ſéeming full of wind, made hir waie on the ſouthweſt of the caſtell, hauing ſtreamers and flags verie warlike, with two boats at either ſterne. There incontinent appeared againe the forme of a caſtell, and behind the ſame came following on the ſouthweſt ſide, an other great argoſie, furniſhed as the firſt. This being paſt, there appéered thrée or foure gallies with their maſts and flags in warlike ſort, hauing boats at their ſternes; and thereby appeared other ſmall clouds to the number of twelue, which altered into the proportion of the ſaid caſtels, and one following an other, as ſoone as anie of them vaniſhed other came in their roomes; and this continued the ſpace of an houre. Shortlie after the ſights in the aier aforeſaid, a worthie Gentleman in the countrie writ to a right good gentleman in the court, that there was ſéene vpon a downe called Brodwels downe, in Summerſetſhire, thrée ſcore perſonages all clothed in blacke, a furlong in diſtance from thoſe that beheld them; and after their appearing, and a little while tarieng, they vaniſhed awaie; but immediatlie, an other ſtrange companie in like maner, colour and number appeared in the ſame place, and they incountered one an other, and ſo vaniſhed awaie. And the third time appeared that number againe all in bright armour, and incountered one an other, and ſo vaniſhed awaie. Foure honeſt men which ſaw it, reporting the ſame abroad, were examined thereof, before ſir George Norton, to whome they ſware, that thoſe things they had ſéene were true, as here before is rehearſed.

T. C.
Wonders in Wiltſhire an Summerſetſhire.

T. C.

Moreouer, it is crediblie reported of manie honeſt men, that fiue miles from Blonſdon in Wiltſhire, a crie of hounds was heard in the aier, the ſelfe ſame daie that the firſt earthquake was, and [illegible]ſe was ſo great that was made, that they ſéemed thrée or foure ſcore couples: whereat diuerſe [illegible] their greihounds, thinking ſome gentlemen [illegible] béene a hunting in the chaſe, and thought to courſe: yet ſome of thoſe that went out of their houſes, ſéeing nothing below abroad, looked vpwards to the ſkies, and there eſpied in the aier fiue or ſix hounds perfectlie to be diſcerned. Now (to ſaie my fanſie) I doubt not but thouſands hold theſe newes for fables inuented for pleaſure. But I proteſt before God and man, I can beléeue a great deale more ſtranger matter than this, in this ſtrange world: for the people ſo eſtrange themſelues from God by vſing manie ſtrange faſhions, and clapping on new conditions & natures, that except he ſhew ſome miracles, his godhead would quickelie be forgotten on earth, and men would beléeue there were no other world but this.

Haile ſtones of ſtrange ſhapes.

A monſtrous birth.

The thirtéenth of Iune, about ſix of the clocke in the morning, at Shipwaſh within the baronie of Boſhell in Northumberland, there happened a tempeſt of lightning and thunder, after the which, on a ſudden came a great ſhowre of haile, amongeſt the which were found ſtones of diuerſe ſhapes maruellous to behold, as in the likenes of frogs, mattocks, ſwords, horſſe ſhooes, nailes, croſſes of diuerſe ſorts, ſkuls of dead men, &c. The ſeuentéenth day of Iune, in the pariſh of Blaſedon in Yorkeſhire, after a gret tempeſt of lightning & thunder, a woman of foure ſcore yeares old, named Alice Perrin, was deliuered of an hideous monſter, whoſe head was like vnto a ſallet or headpeece, the face like vnto a mans, except the mouth, which was round and ſmall, like vnto the mouth of a mouſe, the fore part of the bodie like to a man, hauing eight legs not one like an other, and a taile halfe a yard long. Which monſter brought into the world, beſides an admiration of the diuine works of God, an aſtoniſhment at his iudgements. But of theſe we may ſaie as a ſtranger ſaid ſometime vpon the like occaſion of prodigies and wonders ſucceſſiuelie inſuing, not without weightie ſignification; to wit, that ſuch things be as tales told to the deafe, verie few weieng in their minds the meaning & effect of ſtrange accidents, and therfore thinke vpon nothing leſſe than a reformation of their wicked life: for the which things ſake God ſendeth theſe and manie ſuch ſignificant warnings, before he taketh the rod in hand, and whippeth vs till we ſmart: we then not looking to the meanes that prouoke this vengeance, as willing to auoid them: but murmuring at the iuſt iudge, vnder whoſe heauie hand we grone, & charging him to be the author of all miſfortunes falling vpon vs: which Homer trulie ſeemeth right well to haue noted in this ſenſe:

Iouis oratio apud Homerum.

Cur ſtulti incuſant mortales numina cœli?
Et ſibi nos dicunt autores eſſe malorum?
Cum præter fati leges in aperta ferantur
Damna, ſuæ mentis proprijs erroribus orti.

Souldiors tranſported into Ireland.

Monſtrous birth.

About the eighteenth daie of Iulie, the lord Greie tooke his voiage towards Ireland as lord deputie thereof, after whom was ſent diuerſe bands of luſtie ſouldiors, both horſſemen and footmen, vnder the leading of expert capteins, of whoſe proſperous and happie ſucceſſe againſt their enimies, the Iriſh and others, diuerſe pamflets haue beene publiſhed, & matter more at large is ſet downe in the hiſtorie of Ireland. The three and twentith of September, at fennie Stanton in Huntingtonſhire, one Agnis wife to William Linſeie was deliuered of an vglie and ſtrange monſter, with a face blacke, the necke red, mouth and eies like a lion, on the forehead a roll of fleſh that might be turned vp with ones finger, on the hinder part of the head a lumpe o[illegible] proportioned like a fether, being hollow, with on[illegible]e growing on the lower part of the cheeke, his bel[illegible] and hard, the armes big, hauing fiue fingers [illegible] thumbe on either hand, and in place of toes on the left foot fiue fingers and a thumbe, on the right foot a thumbe and ſeuen fingers, & in the place of priuitie the ſhape bo[illegible]le & female: a ſtrange ſight to be ſeene, and I[illegible] ſignifieth our monſtrous life, which God[illegible]cie giue vs grace to amend, without procraſtination or putting off from daie to daie. [illegible] poet ſignificantlie ſaith:

Cras vultis, ſed vult hodie vindex Deus, & cras,
Aut non vult, aut vos obruet atra dies.

Blaſing ſtar.

The eight daie of October, immediatlie after the new moone, there appeared a blaſing ſtar in the ſouth, buſhing toward the eaſt, which was nightlie ſeene (the aier being cleere) more than two moneths.

Sergeants feaſt.

The eighteenth of October were made eight ſergeants at law, to wit, William Fleetwood recorder of London, Edward Flowerdue, Thomas Snag, William Periam, Robert Halton, Iohn Clench, Iohn Pickering, Thomas Warmſleie; maiſter Snag before named was ſicke, and therefore was ſwoorne in his chamber at Greies inne, the other ſeuen were ſwoorne at Weſtminſter, and held their feaſt at the new Temple at London.

Proclamation againſt the familie of loue.

The queenes maieſtie being informed, that in ſundrie places of this realme, certeine perſons ſecretlie taught damnable hereſies, contrarie to diuers principall articles of our beleefe and chriſtian faith, who to colour their ſect named themſelues the familie of loue, and then as manie as were allowed by them to be of that familie to be elect and ſaued, and all others of what church ſoeuer they be, to be reiected and damned. And for that vpon conuenting of ſome of them before the biſhops & ordinaries, it was found that the ground of their ſect is mainteined by certeine lewd, hereticall, and ſeditious books, firſt made in the Dutch tong, and laſtlie tranſlated into Engliſh, and printed beyond the ſeas, & ſecretlie brought ouer into the realme, the author whereof they name H. N. &c. And conſidering alſo it is found, that thoſe ſectaries hold opinion, that they may before anie magiſtrat eccleſiaſticall or temporall, or anie other perſon, not being profeſſed to be of their ſect, by oth or otherwiſe denie anie thing for their aduantage: ſo as though manie of them are well knowne to be teachers and ſpreaders abroad of theſe dangerous and damnable ſects; yet by their owne confeſſion they can not be condemned. Therefore hir maieſtie being verie ſorie to ſee ſo great an euill, by malice of the diuell to be brought into this hir realme, and by hir biſhops and ordinaries ſhe vnderſtandeth it verie requiſit, not onelie to haue thoſe dangerous heretiks and ſectaries to be ſeuerelie puniſhed; but that alſo all other meanes be vſed by hir maieſties roiall authoritie, which is giuen hir of God to defend Chriſts church, to root them out from further infecting of hir realme: ſhe hath thought meet and conuenient, and ſo by hir proclamation commandeth, that all hir officers and miniſters temporall ſhall in all their ſeuerall vocations aſſiſt the biſhops of hir realme, and all other perſon to ſearch out all perſons dulie ſuſpected, to be either teachers or profeſſors of the foreſaid damnable ſects, and by all good meanes to proceed ſeuerelie againſt them, being found culpable by order of the lawes eccleſiaſticall or temporall: and that all ſearch be made in all places ſuſpected, for the books and writings mainteining the ſaid hereſies and ſects, and them to deſtroie and burne, &c: as more at large may appeere by the ſaid proclamation, giuen at Richmond the third of October, and proclamed at London on the nineteenth daie of the ſame moneth.

The queenes maieſties purpoſe to root out this peſtilent ſect.

Victorie againſt the Iriſh and other in Ireland.

About this time there arriued vpon the weſt coaſt of Ireland, a certeine companie of Italians and Spaniards, ſent by the pope to the aid of the earle of Deſmond in his rebellion, which fortified themſelues ſtronglie neere vnto Smerwike, in a fort which they called caſtell del Ore, there erecting the popes banner againſt hir maieſtie. Which when the lord Greie of Wilton deputie of Ireland vnderſtood, he marched thitherward, and on the ſirt of Nouember, hearing of the arriuall of the Swift, the Tigre, the Aid, the Merlion, & other of the queenes maieſties ſhips, and alſo of three barks fraughted from Corke and Limerike with vittels, on the morrow after marched towards the fort, vnto the which he gaue ſo hot an aſſault, that on the ninth of Nouember the ſame was yeelded, all the Iriſhmen and women hanged, and more than foure hundred Spaniards, Italians, and Biſcaies put to the ſword; the coronell, capteins, ſecretarie, and others, to the number of twentie ſaued for ranſome. In which fortreſſe was found good ſtore of monie, biſket, bakon, oile, wine, and diuerſe other prouiſions of vittels ſufficient for their companie for halfe a yeare, beſides armour, powder, ſhot, and other furniture for two thouſand men and vpwards.

Anno reg. 23.

Randoll hanged for coniuring.

The eight and twentith daie of Nouember were arreigned in the kings bench, William Randoll for coniuring to know where treaſure was hid in the earth, and goods fellonouſlie taken were become; Thomas Elks, Thomas Lupton, Rafe Spacie, and Chriſtopher Waddington, for being preſent, aiding, and procuring the ſaid Randoll to the coniuration aforeſaid; Randoll, Elks, Sparie, and Waddington were found guiltie, & had iudgement to be hanged; Randoll was executed, the other were repriued. About the 24 of December in the town of Walſham in the countie of Suſſex, a child of eleuen yeers old, named William Withers, laie in a trance for the ſpace of ten daies without anie ſuſtenance, and at the laſt comming to himſelfe he vttered to the ſtanders by manie ſtrange ſpeeches, inueieng againſt pride, couetouſneſſe, coldneſſe of charitie, and other outragious ſins. To behold this child there reſorted diuerſe godlie & zelous preachers, as alſo knights, eſquiers, & gentlemen, all of them hearing and ſeeing that which was wonderfull. And among others that came thither, there was a gentleman of great credit and worſhip, with certeine of his men to heare and behold the child: who hauing eſpied a ſeruingman that had beene there with his maiſter two times, whom he had ſharplie tawnted for his great and monſtrous ruffes, ſpake vnto him verie vehementlie, and told him that it were better for him to put on ſackecloth and mourne for his ſinnes, than in ſuch abhominable pride to pranke vp himſelfe like the diuels darling, the verie father of pride and lieng, who ſought by the exerciſe of that damnable ſinne to make himſelfe a preie to euerlaſting torments in helfire. Wherevpon the ſeruingman, as one prickt in conſcience, ſore ſorowed and wept for his offenſe, rent the band from his necke, tooke a knife and cut it in peeces, and vowed neuer to weare the like againe. This for the ſtrangeneſſe thereof will be condemned as a lie, ſpeciallie of vnbeleeuers and peruers worldlings, whoſe hearts are ſo hardened, that they will not beleeue though one riſe from the dead, or though God ſhould ſpeake vnto them from heauen (as the poet noteth trulie) which he hath doone in times paſt:

Strange ſpeeches of a child.

Pride in great ruffes reproued and reformed in a ſeruingman.

——ſolióque tremendus ab alto
Altitonans cœlo ſigna ſtupenda dedit.

Ab. Hart. in R.L.

About the twelfe daie of Ianuarie proclamation was publiſhed at London, for reuocation of ſundrie the queenes maieſties ſubiects remaining beyond the ſeas vnder colour of ſtudie, and yet liuing contrarie to the lawes of God, and of the realme: and alſo againſt the reteining of Ieſuits and maſſing prieſts, ſowers of ſedition, and other treaſonable attempts, &c. The thirteenth of Ianuarie a man was drawne to ſaint Thomas of Waterings, and there hanged, headed, and quartered, for begging by a licence wherevnto the queenes hand was counterfeted.

Againſt Ieſuits and maſſing prieſts.

One executed for counterfeiting the queenes hand.

On the ſixteenth daie of Ianuarie, the lords and barons of this realme began to ſit in the parlement houſe at Weſtminſter: and on the twentith daie of Ianuarie the queenes maieſtie went from White hall to the parlement houſe by water. Whereas a great chalenge of iuſts was ſignified by waie of deuiſe before hir maieſtie on Twelfe night laſt paſt, to haue beene performed the fifteenth daie of Ianuarie, hir maieſties pleaſure was for diuerſe conſiderations the ſame ſhould be deferred vntill the two and twentith daie of the ſame moneth; on which daie the ſame was moſt couragiouſlie accompliſhed in the accuſtomed place at Weſtminſter, where manie ſtaues were valiantlie broken; but through the great concourſe of people thither repairing, manie of the beholders, as well men as women, were ſore hurt, ſome maimed, and ſome killed, by falling of the ſcaffolds ouercharged.

Parlement at weſtminſter.

Iuſting at weſtminſter.

This yeare about Hallowtide laſt paſt, in the mariſhes of Daneſeie hundred, in a place called Southminſter, in the countie of Eſſex, a ſtrange thing happened. There ſuddenlie appeered an infinite multitude of mice, which ouerwhelming the whole earth in the ſaid mariſhes, did ſheare and gnaw the graſſe by the roots, ſpoiling & tainting the ſame with their venemous teeth: in ſuch ſort that the cattell which graſed thereon were ſmitten with a murreine and died thereof. Which vermine by policie of man could not be deſtroied, till now at the laſt it came to paſſe, that there flocked togither all about the ſame mariſhes ſuch a number of owles, as all the ſhire was not able to yeeld: whereby the marſh holders were ſhortlie deliuered from the vexation of the ſaid mice.

Mice deuoure the graſſe in Daneſeie hundred.

1581

Banketting houſe at weſtminſter.

This yeere (againſt the comming of certeine commiſſioners out of France into England) by hir maieſties appointment, on the ſix and twentith daie of March in the morning (being Eaſter daie) a banketting houſe was begun at Weſtminſter, on the ſouthweſt ſide of hir maieſties palace of White hall, made in maner and forme of a long ſquare, three hundred thirtie and two foot in meaſure about; thirtie principals made of great maſts, being fortie foot in length a peece, ſtanding vpright; betweene euerie one of theſe maſts ten foot aſunder and more. The walles of this houſe were cloſed with canuas, and painted all the outſides of the ſame moſt artificiallie with a worke called ruſtike, much like to ſtone. This houſe had two hundred ninetie and two lights of glaſſe. The ſides within the ſame houſe was made with ten heights of degrees for people to ſtand vpon: and in the top of this houſe was wrought moſt cunninglie vpon canuas, works of iuie and hollie, with pendents made of wicker rods, and garniſhed with baie, rue, and all maner of ſtrange flowers garniſhed with ſpangles of gold, as alſo beautified with hanging toſeans made of hollie and iuie, with all maner of ſtrange fruits, as pomegranats, orenges, pompions, cucumbers, grapes, carrets, with ſuch other like, ſpangled with gold, and moſt richlie hanged. Betwixt theſe works of baies and iuie, were great ſpaces of canuas, which was moſt cunninglie painted, the clouds with ſtarres, the ſunne and ſunne beames, with diuerſe other cotes of ſundrie ſorts belonging to the queenes maieſtie, moſt richlie garniſhed with gold. There were of all maner of perſons working on this houſe, to the [illegible] of three hundred ſeuentie and fiue: two men h[illegible] chances, the one brake his leg, and ſo did [illegible] other. This houſe was made in three weeks and th[illegible]ies, and was ended the eighteenth daie of Apr[illegible] and coſt one thouſand ſeuen hundred fortie and foure pounds, nineteene ſhillings and od monie; as I was credible informed by the worſhipfull maiſter Thomas Graue ſurueior vnto hir maieſties workes, who ſerued and gaue order for the ſame, as appeareth by record.

How this banketting houſe was garniſhed and decked with artificiall deuiſes.

The coſts and charges of the banketting houſe.

On the ſixteenth daie of April arriued at Douer theſe noblemen of France (commiſſioners from the French king to hir maieſtie) Francis of Burbon prince dolphin of Auergne, Arthur Coſſate marſhall of France, Lodouic Luſignian lord of Laneoc, Cauergius Caercongin countie of Tillir, Bertrand Salignacus lord Mot Fenelon, monſieur Panaiſſour, Barnabie Briſſen preſident of the parlement of Paris, Claud Pinart, monſieur Marchmont, monſieur Verate; theſe came from Graueſend by water to London, where they were honorably receiued and interteined; and ſhortlie after being accompanied of the nobilitie of England, they repaired to the court and banketting houſe prepared for them at Weſtminſter, as is afore ſaid, where hir maieſtie

Noblemen of France arriued at Douer.

——(decus illa Britannûm Gemmáque non alijs inuenienda locis) with amiable countenance & great courteſie receiued them: and afterward in that place moſt roiallie feaſted & banketted them. Alſo the nobles & gentlemen of the court, deſirous to ſhew them all courteſie poſſible fitteſt for ſuch eſtates, and to ſport them with all courtlie pleaſure, agreed among them to prepare a triumph, which was verie quicklie concluded: and being deuiſed in moſt ſumptuous order, was by them performed in as valiant a manner to their endleſſe fame and honor. The chiefe or chalengers in theſe attempts were theſe: the earle of Arundell, the lord Windſore, maiſter Philip Sidneie, and maiſter Fulke Greuill, who calling themſelues the foure foſter children of deſire, made their inuention of the foreſaid triumph in order and forme following.

The excellent inuention of the triumph.

The gallerie or place at the end of the tiltyard adioining to hir maieſties houſe at Whitehall, wheras hir perſon ſhould be placed, was called and not without cauſe, The caſtell or fortreſſe of perfect beautie, for as much as hir highneſſe ſhould be there included; whereto the ſaid foſter children laid title and claime as their due by deſcent to belong vnto them. And vpon deniall or anie repulſe from that their deſired patrimonie, they vowed to vanquiſh and conquer by force who ſo ſhould ſeeme to withſtand it. For the accompliſhing whereof they ſent their challenge or firſt defiance to the queenes maieſtie: which was vttered by a boie on ſundaie the ſixteenth of Aprill laſt, as hir maieſtie came from the chappell, who being apparelled in red and white, as a martiall meſſenger of Deſires foſtered children, without making anie preciſe reuerence at all, vttered theſe ſpeeches of defiance from his maſters to hir maieſtie, the effect whereof inſueth.

The firſt defiance or challenge.

Deſire with his longing foſtered children.

Vertuous deſire not to be excluded from perfect Beautie.

The challenge made and how to be tried.

The fortreſſe of Beautie.

O ladie, that doth intitle the titles you poſſeſſe with the honor of your worthineſſe, rather crowning the great crowne you hold, with the fame to haue ſo excelling an owner, than you receiuing to your ſelfe anie increaſe, keeping that outward ornament: vouchſafe with patient attention to heare the words which I by commandement am here to deliuer you, wherein if your ears (vſed to the thankeſgiuing of your people & the due praiſes of the earth) ſhall feele a ſtatelie diſdaine to heare once the ſound of a defie, yet dare I warrant my ſelfe ſo far vpon the replie & deceiuing ſhew of rare Beautie, as that malice can not fall from ſo faire a mind vpon the ſea[illegible]lenger, whoſe mouth is a ſeruant to others [illegible]n. Know yee therefore alonelie princeſſe, that [illegible] (for far off they are neuer) there lies incamped the foure long hapleſſe, now hopefull foſtered children of Deſire: who hauing beene a great while nouriſhed vp with that infectiue milke, and too too much care of their fierie foſterer (though full oft that drie nurſe deſpaire indeuored to weine them from it) being now as ſtr[illegible] that nurture, as they are weake in fo[illegible] [illegible]raged with the valiant counſell of neuer fai[illegible]g Deſire, and by the ſame aſſured, that by right of inheritance euen from euer, the fortreſſe of beautie doth belong to hir foſtered children: laſtlie, finding it blazed by all tongs, ingraued in all hearts, and proued by all eies, that this fortreſſe built by nature is ſeated in this realme: theſe foure I ſaie and ſaie againe, thus nouriſhed, thus animated, thus intituled, and thus info[illegible]d, doo will you by me, euen in the name of iuſtice, that you will no longer exclude vertuous Deſire fro[illegible] perfect Beautie. Whereto if you yeeld (O yeeld for ſo all reaſon requireth) then haue I no more to ſaie, but reioiſe that my ſaiengs haue obteined ſo rightfull and yet ſo bliſſefull a requeſt. But if (alas but let not that be needfull) Beautie be accompanied with diſdainefull pride, and pride waighted on by refuſing crueltie; then muſt I denounce vnto you (wo is me, anſwer before it be denounced) that they determine by requeſt to accompliſh their claime. And bicauſe they will better teſtifie to the world, they haue bin brought vp vnder the wings of honorable Deſire, this honorable forewarning they ſend you; that vpon the foure and twentith daie of this moneth of Aprill they will beſiege that fatall fortreſſe, vowing not to ſpare (if this obſtinacie continue) the ſword of faithfulnes, and the fire of affection. Now if ſo it fall out, the worthie knights of your court (moued with paſſion in themſelues) diſdaine of my ſenders boldneſſe, or parciall liking (which I moſt doubt) to the maieſtie of your eies, will either bid them battell before they approch, or ſuffering them to approch, will after labour to leuie the ſiege; they proteſt to meet them in what ſort they will chooſe, wiſhing onelie it may be performed before your owne eies, whome they know as euen in iudgement as daintie in chooſing: where if ſo they liſt, firſt at the tilt in ſo manie courſes, as your ſelfe ſhall pleaſe to appoint; and then if anie will call them to the courſe of the field with lance and ſword, they hope to giue ſuch true proofes of their valour, as at leſt ſhall make their deſires more noble. Vowing on the other ſide, that if before the night part the fraie, they doo not ouercome all them that come in againſt them, they will yeeld themſelues ſlaues vnto you for euer. This therefore O queene (greater in that you are queene of your ſelfe, than in paſſing the whole compaſſe of the earth) haue I deliuered my charge, not as a challenge to your knights, againſt whome (but in ſo iuſt a cauſe) they acknowledge themſelues vnable to match the meaneſt; but as a plaine proclamation of war, vnles the fortres of Beautie, that hath woone ſo manie to loſe themſelues, be ſpeedilie ſurrendered. And now it ſhall be ſeene what knights you haue, whome Beautie may draw to reſiſt a rightfull title. And I for my poore part moued by that I ſee in you (though I ſerue your enimies) will dailie praie that all men may ſee you, & then you ſhall not feare anie armes of aduerſaries: or if enimies you muſt haue, that either they may haue the mind of them that ſend me, or their fortune in that they haue long deſired.

Urgent cauſes why the challenge was deferd.

The order of the rowling trench with moſt excellent inuentions.

At which daie abouesaid for certeine vrgent occaſions, the ſaid challenge and triumph, by hir maieſties commandement, was deferred till the firſt daie of Maie: at which daie for like cauſes it was further deferred till the next mondaie following, being the eight daie of Maie: and ſo till Whitſun mondaie, when they firſt began to performe it. The ſaid daie being come, the foure foſter children had made preparation to beſiege the fortreſſe of Beautie, and thereto had prouided a frame of wood, which was couered with canuas, and painted outwardlie in ſuch excellent order, as if it had bin verie naturall earth or mould, and caried the name of a rowling trench, which went on wheeles, which waie ſoeuer the perſons within did driue it. Upon the top whereof was placed two cannons of wood, ſo paſſing well coloured as they ſeemed to be in deed two faire field peeces of ordinances, and by them was placed two men for gunners clothed in crimſon ſarcenet, with their baſkets of earth for defenſe of their bodies by them. And alſo there ſtood on the top of the trench an enſigne bearer in the ſame ſute with the gunners, diſplaieng his enſigne, and within the ſaid trench was cunninglie conueied diuerſe kind of moſt excellent muſike againſt the caſtell of Beautie. Theſe things thus all in a readineſſe, the challengers approched, & came from the ſtable toward the tiltyard, one after another in braue & excellent order as followeth.

The earle of Arundels entrie the firſt daie and his attendants.

First, the earle of Arundell entred the tiltyard, all in gilt and ingrauen armour, with capariſons and furniture richlie and brauelie imbrodered, hauing attendant vpon him two gentlemen vſhers, foure pages riding on foure ſpare horſſes, and twentie of his gentlemen. All which aforeſaid were apparelled in ſhort clokes and venetian hoſe of crimſon veluet, laid with gold lace, doublets of yellow ſattin, hats of crimſon veluet with gold bands and yellow feathers, and yellow ſilke ſtockes. Then had he ſix trumpetters that ſounded before him, and one and thirtie yeomen that waited after him apparelled in caſſocke coats, and venetian hoſe of crimſon veluet, laid on with red ſilke and gold lace, doublets of yellow taffatie, hats of crimſon taffatie, with yellow feathers, and yellow worſted ſtockings.

The lord windſors entrie the firſt daie and his attendants.

After him procéded the lord Windſore, in gilt and ingrauen armour, with capariſons and furniture, richlie imbrodered with gold, hauing attendant on him foure pages riding on foure ſpare horſſes, and foure and twentie gentlemen, all apparelled in ſhort cloaks of ſcarlet, lined through with orange tawnie taffatie, and laid about with ſiluer lace, doublets of orange tawnie ſattin, venetian hoſe of orange tawnie veluet, blacke veluet caps, with ſiluer bands and white feathers, and ſiluered rapiers and daggers, with ſcabberds of blacke veluet; foure trumpetters, and two footmen in caſſocke coats and venetian hoſe of orange tawnie veluet, and blacke veluet caps with ſiluer bands and white feathers, foure groomes of his ſtable leading of his foure horſſes, in caſſocke coats and venetian hoſe of orange tawnie taffatie and orange tawnie felts with ſiluer bands, and white feathers. Then had he thrée ſcore yeomen in coats of orange tawnie cloth, with the vnicorne of ſiluer plate on their ſléeues, and orange tawnie felts with ſiluer bands and white feathers.

M. Sidneis entrie, now ſir Philip Sidneie and his attendants.

Then procéded maiſter Philip Sidneie, in verie ſumptuous maner, with armour part blew, and the reſt gilt and ingrauen, with foure ſpare horſſes, hauing capariſons and furniture verie rich and coſtlie, as ſome of cloth of gold imbrodered with pearle, and ſome imbrodered with gold and ſiluer feathers, verie richlie and cunninglie wrought: he had foure pages that rode on his foure ſpare horſſes, who had caſſocke coats, and venetian hoſe all of cloth of ſiluer, laied with gold lace, and hats of the ſame with gold bands and white feathers, and ech one a paire of white buſkins. Then had he a thirtie gentlemen and yeomen, & foure trumpetters, who were all in caſſocke coats and venetian hoſe of yelow veluet, laied with ſiluer lace, yelow veluet caps with ſiluer bands and white fethers, and euerie one a paire of white buſkins; and they had vpon their coats, a ſcrowle or band of ſiluer, which came ſcarfe wiſe ouer the ſhoulder, and ſo downe vnder the arme, with this poeſie, or ſentence written vpon it, both before and behind, Sic nos non nobis.

M. Fulke Greuils entrie with his traine of attendants.

Then came maiſter Fulke Greuill, in gilt armour, with rich and faire capariſons and furniture, hauing foure ſpare horſſes with foure pages riding vpon them, and foure trumpetters ſounding before him, and a twentie gentlemen and yeomen attending vpon him, who with the pages and trumpetters were all apparelled in looſe ierkins of tawnie taffatie, cut and lined with yelow ſarſenet, and laied with gold lace, and cut downe the arme and ſet with loopes and buttons of gold, venetian hoſe of the ſame lined (as aforeſaid) laied with gold lace downe the ſide with loopes and buttons of gold, with ech a paire of yelow worſted ſtockings, and hats of tawnie taffetie with gold bands and yelow feathers. Hauing thus all entered the tiltyard, they procéded on with the rowling trench before them, which ſtaied againſt the quéene, and they paſſed by, as though they would behold the Fortreſſe of beautie; and ſo went about the tilt. At laſt the boie that vttered the firſt defiance pronounced theſe ſpéeches to hir maieſtie.

The ſecond defie or challenge.

If the meſſage latelie deliuered vnto you had béene beléeued and followed (O quéene) in whome the whole ſtorie of vertue is written, with the language of beautie; nothing ſhould this violence haue néeded in your inuiolate preſence. Your eies, which till now haue béene onelie wont to diſcerne the bowed knées of knéeling hearts, and inwardlie turned, found alwaies the heauenlie peace of a ſwéet mind, ſhould not now haue their faire beames reflected with the ſhining of armour, ſhould not now be driuen to ſée the furie of deſire, nor the fierie force of furie. But ſith ſo it is (alas that ſo it is) that in the defenſe of obſtinate refuſall there neuer groweth victorie but by compaſſion; they are come: what néed I ſaie more, you ſée them, readie in hart as you know, and able with hands as they hope, not onelie to aſſailing but to preuailing. Perchance you deſpiſe the ſmalneſſe of number. I ſaie vnto you, the force of deſire goeth not by fulneſſe of companie. Naie rather view with what vnreſiſtable determination themſelues approch, and how not onelie the heauens ſend their inuiſible inſtrument to aid them: but alſo the verie earth the dulleſt of all the elements, which with naturall heauineſſe ſtill ſtriues to the ſléepie centre; yet for aduancing his enterpriſe is content actiuelie (as you ſhall ſée) to moue it ſelfe vpon it ſelfe to riſe vp in height, that it maie the better command the high and highminded fortreſſes. Manie words, when déeds are in the field, are tedious both vnto the ſpeaker and hearer. You ſée their forces, but know not their fortunes; if you be reſolued, it boots not, and threats dread not. I haue diſcharged my charge, which was euen when all things were readie for the aſſault, then to offer partlie a thing not ſo much vnuſed as gratious in beſiegers. You ſhall now be ſummoned to yéeld, which if it be reiected, then looke for the affectionat alarme to be followed with deſirous aſſault. The time approcheth for their approches, but no time ſhall ſtaie me from wiſhing, that howſoeuer this ſuccéed, the world maie long inioie hir chiefeſt ornament, which decks it with hir ſelfe, and hir ſelfe with the loue of goodneſſe.

Meaning the muſike within the mount.

Wherewith the mount moued & roſe vp in height.

The rowling trench moued néere to the quéene.

Which ſpéech being ended, the rowling trench or mount of earth was moued as néere the quéenes maieſtie as might be, which being ſetled, the muſike plaied verie pleaſantlie, and one of the boies being then accompanied with cornets, ſummoned [illegible]treſſe with this delectable ſong, here vnder noted.

The fortreſſe ſummoned in ſong.

Yeeld, yeeld, ô yeeld, you that this fort doo hold, which ſeated is, in ſpotleſſe honors feeld, Deſires great force, no forces can withhold:
then to deſires deſire, ô yeeld ô yeeld.
Yeeld yeeld ô yeeld, truſt not on beauties pride, faireneſſe though faire, is but a feeble ſheeld,
When ſtrong deſire, which vertues loue dooth guide, claimes but to gaine his due, ô yeeld ô yeeld.
Yeeld yeeld ô yeeld, who firſt this fort did make,
did it for iuſt deſires, true children beeld,
Such was his mind, if you an other take,
defenſe herein dooth wrong, ô yeeld ô yeeld,
Yeeld yeeld ô yeeld, now is it time to yeeld, before th'aſſault begin, ô yeeld ô yeeld.

When that was ended, an other boie turning himſelfe to the foſter children and their retinue, ſong this alarme with pleſant voice & ſéemelie countenance.

The alarme ſong.

Alarme alarme, here will no yeelding bee, ſuch marble eares, no cunning words can charme,
Courage therefore, and let the ſtatelie ſee, that nought withſtands deſire, alarme alarme.
Alarme alarme, let not their beauties mooue remorſe in you to doo this fortreſſe harme,
For ſith warre is the ground of vertues loue,
no force, though force be vſed, alarme alarme.
Alarme alarme, companions now begin,
about this neuer conquered wals to ſwarme,
More praiſe to vs we neuer looke to win, much maie that was not yet, alarme alarme.

Alarme alarme, when once the fight is warme, then ſhall you ſee them yeeld, alarme alarme.

The ſhooting off of the two canons, the one with ſweet water, and the other with ſweet powder.

Which ended, the two canons were ſhot off, the one with ſweet powder, and the other with ſweet water, verie odoriferous and pleaſant, and the noiſe of the ſhooting was verie excellent conſent of melodie within the mount. And after that was ſtore of pretie ſcaling ladders, and the footmen threw floures and ſuch fanſies againſt the wals, with all ſuch deuiſes as might ſeeme fit ſhot for deſire. All which did continue till time the defendants came in.

The maner of the defendants comming in.

Then came in the defendants in moſt ſumptuous maner, with euerie one his ſeruants, pages, and trumpetters (hauing ſome more, ſome leſſe) in ſuch order as I haue here vnder placed them, with euerie one his ſundrie inuention, which for that ſome of them be myſticall and not knowne to manie, I omit therefore for breuities ſake to ſpeake of anie. Yet ſuch ſpeeches as were ſpoken or preſented for them to hir maieſtie, ſo manie as were, or at the leaſt as I could come by, I haue here in their order placed them, whereby their inuentions for whome they were ſpoken, are therein plainelie declared. Therefore I referre you to the reading of them hereafter. But thus the defendants entered the tiltyard, one after an other as followeth. Firſt maiſter Henrie Greie, ſir Thomas Perot, maiſter Anthonie Cooke, maiſter Thomas Ratcliffe, maiſter Henrie Knolles, maiſter William Knolles, maiſter Robert Knolles, maiſter Francis Knolles, maiſter Rafe Bowes, maiſter Thomas Kelwaie, maſter George Goring, maiſter William Treſham, maiſter Robert Alexander, maiſter Edward Dennie, maiſter Hercules Meautus, maiſter Edward Moore, maiſter Richard Skipwith, maiſter Richard Ward, maiſter Edward Digbie, maiſter Henrie Nowell, maiſter Henrie Brunkerd. And afterwards in the middeſt of the running came in ſir Henrie Leigh, as vnknowne, and when he had broken his ſix ſtaues went out in like maner againe. So paſſing on one after an other, when ſir Thomas Perot & maiſter Cooke came to the end of the tilt, ouer againſt the queenes maieſtie, one of their pages arraied like an angell [illegible] theſe ſpeeches vnto hir.

The defendants names that run at tilt.

The ſpeech of ſir Thomas Perot and maiſter Cooke to the queene.

Deſpaire, no not deſpaire (moſt high and happie princeſſe) could ſo congeale the frozen knight in the aier, but that deſire (ah ſweet deſire) inforced him to behold the ſun on the earth, whereon as he was gazing with twinkling eie (for who can behold ſuch beames ſtedfaſtlie?) he begun to diſſolue into drops, melting with ſuch delight, that he ſeemed to preferre the lingering of a certeine death before the laſting of an vncerteine life. Such is the nature of ingrauen loialtie, that it chooſeth rather to haue the bodie diſſolued, than the mind diſliked. Thus conſuming with content (a ſweet ſickeneſſe is conceipt) and pining with more than ſpeakeable paſſions, he ſuddenlie beheld that ſun to be beſieged which he ſo deuoutlie ſerued. Wherewith boiling in no leſſe diſdaine, than ſurpriſed with immoderat penſiueneſſe, he vttered theſe words: O Ioue, if thou meane to reſolue nature into contraries; why do I liue to ſee it? If into nothing, why do I liue at all? If the ſhot ſcale the head, there is no reſt; if deſire ouerſhoot dutie, there is no reaſon: and where either of theſe are, there can be no rule. And ſo ſetting more ſighs than maie be numbred by ciphers, this preſent time (ah griefe) this preſent time, that honeſt & faire hearted frozen knight died (what ſaid I) euen that which againe with griefe I muſt ſay died, whoſe ghoſt making ſpeedie paſſage into the Eliſian fields (for what more ſwift than a ſoule) in the midſt of the infernall multitude, with ſchreeches, cries & clamors made both heauen & hell to redouble this eccho: O times, O men, O corruption of maners! The ſun is beſieged, the ſun (O miſchiefe) the ſun is beſieged. Which ſtrange and vnacquainted termes cauſed not onelie murmuring amongſt the ghoſts beneath, but a muſing amongſt the gods aboue: who as well to repreſſe the tumults, which might haue riſen among the ſhadows, as to reuenge the pride which began to grow on the earth, ſent downe an angell with this commandement; Go deſcend, and cauſe Adam and Eue to appeare on the earth in that ſort as they were in paradiſe, that the world may know them & wonder at them. For ſeeing out of their loines haue iſſued thoſe prepoſterous limmes, I know none more fit to correct them. Certes none more willing. They will attempt anie thing for thy ſake, and ſeruice of that earthlie, and yet (O ſtrange conceipt) moſt heauenlie ſun. For as they were before driuen from their deſire, bicauſe they deſired to know the beſt: ſo now ſhall they be driuen vnto their deſire, which they couet to honour moſt. This ſhall be their reward, they ſhall come neere and yet ſhall not ſearch, and be they farre off, it ſhall warme. A cloud maie ſometimes barre their ſight, but nothing ſhall depriue them of the ſafegard: yet command them to be humble in affection, though feruent, leaſt they ſeeme to diſdaine that pride in others which they deſire themſelues.

By the ſun is meant hir maieſtie, called before The fortreſſe of beautie.

Sir Thomas Perot & maiſter Cooke were both in like armour beſet with apples and fruit, the one ſignifieng Adam & the other Eue, who had haire hong all downe his helmet.

The ſun in the higheſt delighteth in the ſhadow which is ſhorteſt, nouriſheth the tree whoſe root groweth deepeſt, not whoſe top ſpringeth loftieſt. This commiſſion and counſell ended, all things were in a moment accompliſhed with ſuch celeritie (for to the gods time is tied) that they were ſped ſo ſoone as they were ſpoken. And now moſt renowmed and diuine ſun, Adam and Eue being preſent, vouchſafe to heare ſomwhat in their behalfs pronounced. Sir knights, if in beſieging the ſunne ye vnderſtood what you had vndertaken, ye would not deſtroie a common bleſſing for a priuat benefit. Will you ſubdue the ſun? Who ſhall reſt in the ſhadow where the wearie take breath, the diſquiet reſt and all comfort? Will ye bereue all men of thoſe gliſtering & gladſome beams? What ſhall then proſper in the ſhining, but you will clime it by the raies? O rare exhalations! Brothers you may be to deſire, but ſons ye are to ill hap, which thinke you can not ſinke deepe inough into the ſea, vnleſſe you take your fall from the ſun. Deſiſt you knights, deſiſt, ſith it is impoſſible to reſiſt: content your ſelues with the ſunnes indifferent ſuccor, ſuffer the iuniper ſhrub to grow by the loftie oke, and clame no prerogatiue where the ſun grants no priuilege; for being of the ſame mettall that others are, the ſun will worke the like effects, as ſhe doth in others. The giants would haue bin gods, if they could haue ſcaled the heauens; and you no leſſe than ſtars could you conquer the ſame: but as their throwing hill vpon hill did manifeſt their pride, but nothing further their pretenſe; ſo your laieng chalenge vpon claime, and conqueſt vpon chalenge, may well proue a will but no worthineſſe; a deſire to reach, but no poſſibilitie to recouer. In which your ſoaring aſſaies if you chance to fall, the onlie comfort you haue is to crie with Phaeton, Magnis excidimus auſis. But if no perſuaſions may moue your minds, know yee proud knights, there are that haue hearts as big as mounteins, and as far aboue you in proweſſe as ye are aboue all in preſumption, yet not ſo vaine (which ye terme valiant) to aſſalt the ſun. And why? bicauſe it is impregnible. We content to inioie the light, yee to eclipſe it; we to reſt vnder the feet, yee to run ouer the head; we to yeeld to that which nothing can conquer, you to conquer that which maketh all men captiues. But were it poſſible that head could deuiſe, courage attempt, or hand execute anie thing that might ſhew the depth of our vnſpotted loialtie, ſome

The angell ſpeaketh to the queene.

He ſpeaketh to the chalengers in the behalfe of the two knights Adam and Eue.

Magnis excidimus auſis, the crie of Phaeton at his fall.

ſhould be ſéene (and for your ſelues to ſoone) that your enterpriſes ſhould be of as ſmall account then, as now they are of likelihood; ſo déepe an impreſſion is ingrauen in our thoughts, for the maieſtie of that ſun which now perſing our eies hath fullie ſubdued our hearts, that we are preſt in hir defenſe to offer the whole world defiance. In proofe whereof I am charged to throw downe this gantlet, which who ſo dareth take vp, ſhall féele both the heat of their iuſt conceiued quarrell, and the reproch of their owne deſerued follie, not by riding in breaking a few ſtaues to end the ſtrife, but at tourneie, or what elſe ſoeuer they can deuiſe, or dare aduenture to win the benefit of Beautie. Thus moſt renowmed & diuine Beautie, whoſe beams ſhine like the ſun, haue Adam & Eue aduentured to defend the ſun. The ſame I call Beautie the light of the world, the maruell of men, the mirrour of nature, on which their incounter if thoſe fauourable gleames may fall, they will not onlie thinke to haue doone good herein, but to be reſtored againe to paradiſe. The one meaneth to repoſe his truſt in a woman, who like Eue cannot be beguiled, the other to reſt on a ſaint which by a ſerpent will not be tempted. This being placed in the garden of your graces, O of all things moſt gratious, where vertues grow as thicke as leaues did in paradiſe, they will take héede to taſt of the forbidden fruit, contented to behold, not coueting to take hold. And for that it hath béene long argued, and no arguing can end, whether the firſt offenſe came by the crudelitie of Adam, or the ſimplicitie of Eue; the one defending his fault by ſound arguments, the other excuſing hirs by ſharpe anſwers: they moſt humblie ſue for this, that either by ſix courſes betwéene them the quarrell may be ended, or by your higneſſe peremptorie ſentence determined. For they both being in the world, are deſirous that one might beare the blame of both. And what herein your excellencie ſhall ſet downe, there is none ſhall gaineſaie; for whenſoeuer the queſtion ſhall be mooued, no other reaſon ſhall be allowed or liked than this; Elizabetha dixit. This ſpeach being thus ended, ſir Thomas Perot and maſter Cooke procéeded backward on the other ſide of the tilt. And when maſter Ratcliſe came likewiſe againſt the quéene, one of his pages pronounced theſe ſpéeches in his maſters behalfe to hir maieſtie.

The defendants gantlet throwne downe, &c.

The defendants ſute and deſire.

M. Ratcliſs ſpéech to the quéene.

So manie were the miſfortunes (moſt renowmed and beautifull princeſſe) of the deſolate knight my maſter, as neither the ſhortneſſe of the time will ſuffer me to repeat, nor the greatneſſe of the myſterie to remember. But let this ſuffice, that ſome there were and ſo manifold, that geometrie whereon the bodie of man hangeth could not beare being intollerable, nor the mind which conſiſteth in arithmetike number being infinit. Thus alwaies croſſed by fortune, whoſe croſſing is no bleſſing, he determined to ſeparate himſelfe as far from ſocietie, as his actions were from ſucceſſe; who wandering through manie deſerts, yet finding as he thought no place deſolate, happened at the laſt to come to a cliffe adioining to the maine ſea, couered all with moſſe, whereon he was walking: much delighted with the ſolitarie ſeat, but not well liking the cold ſituation, he ſuddenlie ſunke into a hollow vault, ſurpriſed at the firſt with feare, but ſéeing it at the laſt a place of ſuccour, he accounted his former miſeries méetlie appeaſed by this preſent fortune. In this den he vſed for his bed moſſe, for his candle moſſe, for his céeling moſſe, and vnleſſe now and then a few coales, moſſe for his meat: a drie food God wot and a freſh, but ſo moiſtened with wet teares, and ſo ſalt, that hard it was to coniecture, whether it were better to féed or to faſt. Here he gaue himſelfe to continuall meditation, ſeparating his mind from his bodie, his thought from his hart, yea diuorcing himſelfe from himſelfe, in ſo much that with his ſtrange diet and new conceits he became ſo inchanted, that neither the remembrance of others, nor a thought touching himſelfe could enter into his mind: an alteration ſeldome heard of, that the place whereas he was ſhrowded in, ſhould make him to forget who he is. Liuing thus a long time, for that no lim ſhould ſéeme ſhort, riſing according to his maner to walke in the moſſe in the griſping of the day, he eſpied vpon the ſhore certeine men either caſt awaie by ſhipwracke, or ouer bord by pirates, vnto whome he went; and perceiuing by their plaints one which laie dead amongſt them to be their maſter, inquired whenſe they were? But they not willing to repeat their miſfortunes, opened the boſome of the gentleman, and pulled out a ſcroll conteining a claime, a challenge, naie a conqueſt of Beautie. At the ſight whereof, ſuddenlie (quoth he) Beautie! and therewithall appalled pauſed, entring by litle and litle out of his preſent melancholies into his former miſfortunes, who as one awaked out of a long dreame began thus to debate. O Beautie, where thy fortreſſe is founded I know, but what theſe brethren ſhould meane I maruell; for as I am aſſured that to win thée none could be ſo fortunate, ſo did I thinke that to claime thée none could be ſo fond; when as thou O diuine Beautie art of euerie one to be deſired, but neuer to be conquered of Deſire. But as the eagle beholding the ſunne, coueteth to build hir neſt in the ſame, and ſo dimmeth hir ſight: ſo they vewing the brightneſſe of Beautie are incenſed to conquere it by Deſire. And what then? Bicauſe ſhe is inuincible ſhall I be indifferent? No, I will forſake this caitiſe cottage, and will take arms to defend that Beauties caſtell. Nothing ſhall remooue me from mine attempt, which being performed, nothing can mooue me. Yea but ſhe hath ſeruants alreadie a number; I but vnles I be there, not the whole number: but manie were famous, but none more faithfull: yet alas, if thou go, thou ſhalt euer be infortunat: better alwaies infortunat, than once diſloiall. Which words being ended, he [illegible] ded whether they would in like caſe aduen[illegible] th one of no leſſe courage than their maſter, but [illegible] lie of greter affection: whoſe ſeruice he hauing vpon ſmall intreatie obteined, for that belike they were deſirous to ſée the euent for the which they had ſuffered ſuch aduentures, he departed to his caue, bewing a ſhield out of the har[illegible] riched onelie with ſoft moſſe: a double ſig[illegible] deſire, thinking that nothing could manifeſt [illegible] ſo well as Pythagoras walnut, a tender rine and a hard ſhell. And now moſt excellent and diuine Beautie, diuine it muſt néeds be that worketh ſo heauenlie, ſith he is called from his ſolitarie caue to your ſumptuous court, from bondage to libertie, from a liuing death to a neuer dieng life, and all for the ſake and ſeruice of Beautie: vouchſafe his ſhield, which is the enſigne of your fame, to be the inſtrument of his fortune. And for proſtrating himſelfe to your féet, he is here readie preſt to aduenture anie aduentures for your gratious fauour.

A moſſie cliffe.

Moſſe and nothing but moſſe.

A claime of conqueſt of beautie conteined in a ſcroll.

A ſimilitude.

Here the boie deliuered M. Ratcliſs ſhield to the quéene.

Here enter the foure ſons of ſir Francis Knolles.

Which ſpéech being ended, he retired backe as the reſt. And after him came the foure ſonnes of ſir Francis Knolles, one after an other, according to their age, and all in like armour: who comming to the end of the tilt, ſtaied till theſe ſpéeches were vttered by one of their pages, who being apparelled like vnto Mercurie, pronounced theſe ſpéeches in the knights behalfes to hir maieſtie.

The ſpéech of the foure ſons of ſir Francis Knolles, pro-

Report hath bruted all abroad, that deſperat Deſire with a woonderfull armie of affections hath laid his ſiege againſt the inuincible fortreſſe of péerenounced by their page being appareled like vnto Mercurie.

leſſe beautie, and that the chiefeſt champions of this moſt famous enterpriſe are foure of fanſies fellowes, foſterbrothers to deſire, and drie nurſt by deſpaire, valiant knights, and honorable perſonages, whoſe hautie hearts deſerue renowme at leaſt, for venturing to win the golden fleece without Medeas helpe. The giants long ago did ſcale the clouds men ſaie, in hope to win the fort of Iupiter. The wanton youth, whoſe waxen wings did frie with ſoaring vp aloft, had ſcapt vnſcorcht if he had kept a meaner gale below. So falles it out in this attempt, deſire vaunts to conquer Beauties fort by force, wherein the goddeſſe keepes continuallie watch and ward, ſo that deſire may deſpaire to win one inch of hir againſt hir will. Hir ſtatelie ſeat is ſet ſo high, as that no leuell can be laid againſt hir walles: and ſooner may men vndertake to hit a ſtarre with a ſtone, than to beat hir braue bulworkes by batterie. No vndermining may preuaile, for that hir fort is founded vpon ſo firme a rocke, as will not ſtir for either fraud or force. And is there anie hope to win by famine ſuch a fort as yeelds continuall food to all hir foes? And though they feed not fat therwith, yet muſt they either feed thereon or faſt: for Beautie is the onlie bait whereon deſire bites; and loue the chiefe reſtoritie that ladie Beautie likes, ſo that ſhe can no more be left without meat, than men can liue without minds. Of all affections that are, deſire is the moſt worthie to woo, but leaſt deſerues to win Beautie: for in winning his ſaint, he looſeth himſelfe: no ſooner hath deſire what he deſireth, but that he dieth preſentlie: ſo that when Beautie yéeldeth once to deſire, then can ſhe neuer vant to be deſired againe. Wherfore of force this principle muſt ſtand, it is conuenient for deſire euer to wiſh, and neceſſarie that he alwais want. O rare and moſt renowmed Beautie, O goddeſſe to be honored of all, not to be equalled of anie, become not now a priſoner: your fortreſſe is inuincible. No doubt deſire will content himſelfe with a fauourable parlee, and wait for grace by loialtie, not chalenge it by lance; although he make neuer ſo braue. The world dooth know that ladie Beautie needs no reſcue to raiſe this ſiege, for that ſhe ſits aboue all reach, hir heauenlie lookes aboue when ſhe ſo liſt can dazell all mens eies. But though ſhe liſt not vſe thoſe meanes, yet it is méete that all hir ſeruants come and ſhew themſelues deuout to doo hir will: perchance hir pleaſure is to ſee the forts tried of theſe foure foſter friends. O happie, ten times happie they whoſe hap ſhall be with fauour of hir deitie, to take in hand this braue attempt: in hope whereof theſe foure legitimate ſonnes of deſpaire, brethren to hard miſhap, ſuckled with ſighes, and ſwathed vp in ſorrow, weaned in wo, and drie nurſt by deſire, long time foſtered with fauourable countenance, and fed with ſweet fanſies, but now of late (alas) wholie giuen ouer to griefe and diſgraced by diſdaine, are come with readie hearts and hands, to proue againſt theſe other foure, that deſire dooth not deſerue one winke of good fauour from ladie Beauties ſmiling eies, for threatning to win hir fort by force. They doubt not the victorie, if onelie they may find ſome like ſhew from their ſaint in fauor of their enterpriſe. If Mercurie haue ſaid amiſſe, blame thoſe bright beams which haue bereft him of his wit; if well, vouchſafe one becke to bid him packe awaie.

Deſire and Beautie.

why deſire deſerues leaſt to win beautie.

The foure ſonnes of ſir Francis Knolles.

These ſpéeches being ended, both they and the reſt marched about the tilt, and ſo going backe to the nether end thereof prepared themſelues to run, euerie one in his turne, each defendant ſix courſes againſt the former challengers: who performed their parts ſo valiantlie on both ſides, that their proweſſe hath demerited perpetuall memorie, and worthilie woon honor both to themſelues and their natiue countrie, as fame hath the ſame reported. When this daies ſport was thus accompliſhed, the boie that vttered the defiances, in theſe few ſpeeches tooke his goodnight of the quéene.

The running at the tilt.

In the triall of this debatefull queſtion (O your ſelfe) what can be ſaid more than is? You ſee that ſeeing begins to faile. Night the ordinarie truce maker, though no truce be treated (if at leaſt your preſence make it not lightſome) will wrap all in hir blacke and mourning weeds, perchance mourning, for that the nobleſt deſire hath beene ſubiect to vndeſerued torments: and therefore theſe knights by the authoritie of darkenes verie vndeſirouſlie are compelled to depart from whence they came. To conclude, thus much they command me in their names to confeſſe, that ſuch excellencie they find in your knights, and in compariſon of them ſuch vnableneſſe in their ſelues, that if deſire did not baniſh deſpaire as a traitor out of his kingdome, it would haue alreadie vndermined their beſt grounded determination: but no inward nor outward wound, no weakeneſſe, no wearineſſe, can dant deſire, nor take awaie the naturall effects that follow it. Therfore hauing left them no other courage than deſire, no other ſtrength than deſire, no other beginning or ending cauſe but deſire, they will continue this hard and hardie enterpriſe to morow. In the meane time they can find no place in their hearts that dooth not wiſh you as ſwéet reſt, as Pſyche was conueied vnto by the gentle Zephyrus, and if it be poſſible by the ſame gheſt viſited. They wiſh that when your lids looke vp, your eies may be brightened, to ſee to morow a better daie than this, and therewithall ſo ſingular ſucceſſe, as you may long, fréelie, and ioyfullie inioy your ſelfe, to the delight of lookers, and woonder of markers. ¶ This ſaid, and all the triumphant ſhewes ended, the knights in verie comelie and conuenient order (as they came) departed:

The boie that vttered the defiance, in this ſpeech tooke his good night of the queene.

Et feſſos ſoluunt artus, molliſſima quaque
Guſtant, & dulci membra quiete fouent.

The next daies ſhew was doone in this order. The foure foſter children of deſire entered in a braue chariot (verie finelie and curiouſlie decked) as men forewearied & halfe ouercome. The charriot was made in ſuch ſort, as vpon the top the foure knights ſat, with a beautifull ladie, repreſenting deſire about them. Whereunto their eies were turned, in token what they deſired. In the bulke of the charriot was conueied roome for a full conſort of muſike, who plaid ſtill verie dolefull muſike as the charriot mooued. The charriot was drawne by foure horſſes according to the foure knights, which horſſes were appareled in white and carnation ſilke, being the colours of deſire. And as it paſſed by the vpper end of the tilt, a herald of armes was ſent before to vtter theſe ſpéeches in the knights behalfe to hir maieſtie.

Here entereth a moſt excellent and braue charriot, with rare, curious, and coſtlie worke with the foure challengers in it, which charriot was verie curiouſlie ſhadowed with fine lawne.

No confidence in themſelues, O moſt vnmatched princeſſe, before whome enuie dieth, wanting all néerenes of compariſon to ſuſteine it, & admiration is expreſſed, finding the ſcope of it void of conceiueable limits, nor anie ſlight regarding the force of your valiant knights, hath incouraged the foſter children of deſire to make this daie an inheritour of yeſterdaies action: but the wing of memorie alas, the ſworne enimie vnto the wofull mans quietneſſe, being conſtantlie held by the hand of perfection, and neuer ceaſſing to blow the cole of ſome kindled deſire, hath brought their inward fire to blaze forth this flame vnquenchable by anie meanes: till by death the whole fewell be conſumed. And therefore not able to maiſter it, they are violentlie borne whither deſire draweth, although they muſt confeſſe (alas) that yeſterdaies braue onſet ſhould come to ſuch a confeſſion, that they are not greatlie companied with hope, the common ſupplier to deſires armie. So as now from ſummoning this caſtell to yéeld, they are fallen lowlie to beſéech you to vouchſafe your eies out of that impregnable fortreſſe, to behold what will fall out betwixt them and your famous knights: wherein though they be ſo ouerpreſſed with the others valour, that alreadie they could ſcarſelie haue béene able to come hither, if the charriot of deſire had not carried them; yet will they make this whole aſſemblie witneſſes ſo farre of their will, that ſooner their ſoules ſhall leaue their bodies than deſire ſhall leaue their ſoules. In that onelie ſtandeth their ſtrength that gaue them their firſt courage, and muſt be their laſt comfort. For what reſiſtance is there, where not onlie they are met with forren enimies, ſuch as ſtatelie diſdeine, which looketh from ſo high a tower to poore deſire, that though (in it ſelfe) it be great, yet in hir eies (ſo ſeated) it ſéemeth ſmall, or ſuch on the other ſide as vnfortunat deſpaire, which maketh the countrie ſo barren where they laie their ſiege, that it would take awaie all the food of fanſie: but euen ciuill warre yeſterdaie grew betwixt them and others who beare the ſame badge of deſire: that they doo ſo, as thus beſtead they are brought to this faire paſſe, to deſire no more, but that this death or ouerthrow maie be ſéene by thoſe eies who are onlie vnhappie, in that they can neither find fellows nor ſée themſelues.

The firſt ſpeech the ſecond daie.

Hope the ſupplier to deſires armie.

Tourneies & barriers couragiouſlie tried.

Which ſpéech being doone, the defendants came in, in ſuch order as they came in the daie before. Therefore I ſhall not need to make a new repetition of the ſame, ſith all hath béene touched alreadie. Then went they to the tourneie, where they did verie noblie, as the ſhiuering of the ſwords might verie well teſtifie; and after that to the barriers, where they laſhed it out luſtilie, & fought couragiouſlie, as if the Gréeks and Troians had dealt their deadlie dole. No partie was ſpared, no eſtate excepted, but ech knight indured to win the golden fléece, that expected either fame or the fauour of his miſtreſſe, which ſport continued all the ſame daie. And towards the euening the ſport being ended, there was a boie ſent vp to the quéene being clothed in aſh coloured garments in token of humble ſubmiſſion, who hauing an oliue branch in his hand, & falling downe proſtrate on his face, and then knéeling vp, concluded this noble exerciſe with theſe words to hir maieſtie.

The laſt ſpéech to the quéene ſignifieng the humble hearted ſubmiſſion of the foure foſter children of deſire.

Moſt renowmed princeſſe of princes, in whome can nothing obteine victorie, but vertue. The foſter children of deſire (but heires onelie to miſfortune) ſend me to deliuer in ſuch words as ſorrow can afford their moſt humble hearted ſubmiſſion. They acknowledge this fortreſſe to be reſerued for the eie of the whole world, farre lifted vp from the compaſſe of their deſtinie. They acknowledge the blindneſſe of their error, in that they did not know deſire (how ſtrong ſoeuer it be) within it ſelfe to be ſtronger without it ſelfe than it pleaſed the deſired. They acknowledge they haue degenerated from their foſterer in making violence accompanie deſire. They acknowledge that deſire receiued his beginning and nouriſhment of this fortreſſe, and therefore to commit vngratefulneſſe in bearing armes (though deſirous armes) againſt it. They acknowledge noble deſire ſhould haue deſired nothing ſo much, as the flouriſhing of that fortreſſe, which was to be eſtéemed according to it ſelfes liking. They acknowledge the leaſt determination of vertue (which ſtands for the gard of this fortreſſe) to be too ſtrong for the ſtrongeſt deſire, & therefore they doo acknowledge themſelues ouercome, as to be ſlaues to this fortreſſe for euer, which title they will beare in their foreheads, as their other name is ingrauen in their hearts. For witneſſe thereof they preſent this oliue branch to your preſence, in token of your triumphant peace, and of their peaceable ſeruitude, whereby they preſent themſelues as bondmen by thoſe bonds, which the loſſe of life can onelie looſe. Onelie from out of that which was theirs they craue thus much, to giue ſome token to thoſe knights, which maie be iudged to haue doone beſt in ech kind of weapon, or who by his deuiſe hath come in beſt ſort in this deſirous ſtrife. This being doone, they being now ſlaues (in whome much dutie requireth) for feare of offenſe, dare ſaie no further; but wiſh from the bottome of their captiued hearts, that while this realme is thus fortified and beautified; deſire maie be your chiefeſt aduerſarie.

An oliue branch preſented to the quéene.

Which ſpéech being ended, hir maieſtie gaue them all praiſe and great thanks, which they eſtéemed ſo well, and thought themſelues rewarded according to their owne wiſhing: and ſo they departed ech one in order, according to the firſt comming in. And thus ceaſſed theſe courtlie triumphes, ſet forth with moſt coſtlie brauerie and gallantneſſe, whereof I maie ſaie as the academicall poet ſometime ſaid at the gratious entering of hir maieſtie into Cambridge:

Hîc cocco murex, aurum ſuperatur ab auro,
Naturam certant vincere quæque ſuam:
Nil ibi ſat pulchrum, quamuis pulcherrima quæque,
Et quamuis vincant omnia, victa iacent.

Croſſe in Cheape defaced.

The one and twentith of Iune in the night, the loweſt images (which were of Chriſts reſurrection, of the virgin Marie, and of kings and biſhops of this realme) about the croſſe in Cheape (being ſix ſquare) on all the ſides, were broken and defaced: wherevpon two daies after, proclamation was made thorough out the citie, that who ſo would bewraie the dooers thereof, ſhould haue fortie crownes for their labour: but nothing came to light. The ſeauen and twentith of Iune, Thomas Butcher brewer, was conuicted in the Guildhall of London, for that he as principall, and others as acceſſaries, to the number of a thouſand perſons, on the fiue and twentith of Iune laſt paſt, about ten of the clocke in the night, with force of armes, in weſt Smithfield of London, & other ſtréets of the citie congregated themſelues, and with diuerſe exclamations, prouoked the people in maner of a rebellion, contrarie to the peace & ſtatutes of the realme. On the eight and twentith of Iune, the ſame Thomas Butcher, being areigned at the Iuſtice hall in the old Baillie, was found giltie, and had iudgement to be whipped on the next market daie from Newgate thorough Smithfield, Long lane, Alderſgate ſtréet, ſaint Martins le grand; & ſo thorough the citie to the bars without Aldgate, & then to be committed to Newgate. On the 30 of Iune, the ſame T. Butcher, being deliuered vnto Iames Maſe and other beadles, to haue receiued execution, as is aforeſaid, he being whipped from Newgate into weſt Smithfield, was there reſcued, taken from the beadles, and ſent to ſhift for himſelfe abrode: for the which fact the one & twentith of Iulie, William Downe, I. Hand, T. Harres, and T. Appowell, thrée ſhoomakers and a brewer, were whipped from Newgate to the middeſt of Smithfield, and there ſet on the pillorie, whereon they ſtood from ten of the clocke to twelue, and from thenſe againe committed to priſon. The thirtéenth of Iulie, Richard Cox doctor of diuinitie, ſometime ſcholemaiſter to king Edward the ſixt, deane of Weſtminſter, and of Chriſts college in Oxenford, and of late biſhop of Elie deceaſſed, and was buried at Elie; whoſe epitaph (alluding to his name and the execution of his charge, wherein he was iuſt) hereafter followeth:

Thomas Butcher whipped and reſcued.

Foure men whipt and ſet on the pillorie.

Biſhop of Elie deceaſſed.

Vita caduca vale, ſalueto vita perennis,
Corpus terra tegit, ſpiritus alta tenet.
In terra Chriſti gallus Chriſtum reſonabam,
Da Chriſte in cælis te ſine fine ſonem.

This

Two men of ſtrange ſtatures to be ſeene.

This yeare were to be ſéene in London two Dutchmen of ſtrange ſtatures, the one in height ſeauen foot & ſeauen inches, in breadth betwixt the ſhoulders thrée quarters of a yard and an inch, the compaſſe of his breſt one yard, an halfe, and two inches; & about the waſt one yard, quarter, and one inch; the length of his arme to the hand a full yard: a comelie man of perſon, but lame of his legs (for he had broken them with lifting of a barrell of béere.) The other was in height but thrée foot, had neuer a good foot, nor anie knée at all, and yet could he danſe a galliard, he had no arme, but a ſtumpe to the elbow or little more on the right ſide, on the which, ſinging, he would danſe a cup, and after toſſe it about thrée or foure times, and euerie time receiue the ſame on the ſaid ſtumpe: he would ſhot an arrow néere to the marke, flouriſh with a rapier, throw a bowle, beat with an hammar, hew with an ax, ſound a trumpet, and drinke euerie daie ten quartes of the beſt béere, if he could get it. About the ſeauentéenth of Julie, I ſaw theſe men in the pariſh of ſaint Peter vpon Cornehill, the taller ſitting on a bench bareheaded, the leſſer ſtood on the ſame bench, and hauing on his head a hat with a feather, was yet the lower. Alſo the taller man ſtanding on his féet, the leſſer (with his hat & feather on his head) went vpright betwéene his legs, and touched him not.

Euerard Hance executed.

The eightéenth of Julie, Euerard Hance, alias Ducket, a ſeminarie prieſt, was in the ſeſſions hall in the old Bailie of London arreigned, where he before the quéenes iuſtices affirmed that himſelfe being now in England was ſubiect to the pope in eccleſiaſticall cauſes, and that the pope hath now the ſame authoritie here in England that he had an hundred yeares paſt, and which he hath now at Rome, with other traitorous ſpéeches: for the which he was condemned to be drawne, hanged, and quartered, and was executed accordinglie on the laſt of Julie.

Men arreigned for not comming to church.

At the ſame ſeſſions were brought from the Fléet, the Gatehouſe, Newgate, and the Counters, ſundrie priſoners, indicted for refuſing to come to church; All which being conuicted by their owne confeſſion, had iudgement according to the ſtatute, to paie [illegible] pounds for euery moneth of ſuch wilfull abſence from the church.

Monſieur duke of Anjou commeth into England.

The firſt of Nouember, monſieur Francis duke of Aniou, the French kings brother, and other nobles of France (hauing latelie arriued in Kent) came to London, and were honourablie receiued, and reteined at the court with banketting, and diuerſe pleaſant ſhewes and paſtimes, of whome more hereafter in place conuenient.

[illegible] A diſcouerie of Edmund Campion dedicated to certeine lords of the councell.

Edmund Campion with diuerſe others arreigned of high treaſon.

The forenamed parties inditement.

The end why his ſaid ſeminaries were ſent ouer into England.

On mondaie being the twentith of Nouember, Edmund Campion, Raſe Sherwin, Lucas Kerbie, Edward Riſhton, Thomas Cotcham, Henrie Orton, Robert Johnſon, Iames Boſgraue. All theſe before named perſons were brought vnto the high barre at Weſtminſter: where they were ſeuerallie, and altogither indicted vpon high treaſon, the ſum whereof followeth in briefe as thus. That theſe perſons, contrarie both to loue and dutie, forſoke their natiue countrie, to liue beyond the ſeas, vnder the popes obedience, as at Rome, Rheimes, and diuerſe other places: where (the pope hauing with other princes practiſed the death and depriuation of our moſt gratious princeſſe, and vtter ſubuerſion of hir ſeat & kingdome, to aduance his moſt abhominable religion) theſe men, hauing vowed their allegiance to the pope, to obeie him in all cauſes whatſoeuer, being there, gaue their conſent; yea vttermoſt furtherance they might, to aid him in this moſt traitorous determination. And for this intent and purpoſe they were ſent ouer to ſeduce the hearts of hir maieſties louing ſubiects, and to conſpire and practiſe hir graces death, as much as in them laie, againſt a great daie, ſet and appointed, when the generall hauocke ſhould be made, thoſe onelie reſerued that ioined with them. This laied to their charge, they boldlie and impudentlie denied. Wherevpon a iurie was impanelled, their owne confeſſions, their owne writings, and credible witneſſes Viua voce produced to their faces, approuing them giltie of the former allegations, as hereafter followeth.

The rebellion in the north, onlie through the popes meanes.

The ſum of the popes bull which our Engliſhmen beyond the ſeas hold as their authoritie to rebell againſt hir maieſtie.

After the indictment was read vnto them, and their anſwer, that it was beyond their power to proue them faultie in ſuch matters, ſo ſtifflie they ſtood in their apparant impudencie; firſt was moued to them ſundrie treaſons paſt, attempted againſt hir maieſtie by thoſe of their ſect and diſpoſition: yet notwithſtanding the vttermoſt of their malice, how mightilie God had defended his choſen Eliſabeth, returning their dealings to their owne deſtruction. Among ſundrie theſe treaſonable practiſes, which the pope, the ancient aduerſarie to hir maieſtie hath at diuerſe times ſet abroch, the rebellion in the north may remaine as a witneſſe of his excéeding malice and ſpite againſt hir grace and gouernement. Wherto let vs ad the bull ſent ouer by John Felton, which traitorouſlie he placed on the biſhop of Londons gate: in which bull, the pope vtterlie excommunicated hir maieſtie, ſhe was an heretike, he had diſpoſſeſſed hir of hir crowne and dominion, ſhe was not the lawfull quéene of this realme, and hir ſubiects were not bound to obeie anie of hir laws or decrées; but they were all frée, and perfectlie diſcharged of their allegiance to hir, ſo that they might lawfullie, when time ſerued ſo conuenient for them, both ſtirre rebellion againſt hir, and alſo enter into armes againſt hir maieſtie. The popes will in this hath bin put in execution, as through the ill demeanor of diuerſe perſons to him affected it was moued in the north, where mainteining themſelues on the authoritie of the pope and his traitorous bull ſecretlie diſperſed abrode, they entred into a plaine and maniſeſt rebellion.

Doctor Sanders his rebellion in Ireland, through whome the people were ſeduced to fight againſt their lawfull princeſſe.

The like was put in practiſe in Ireland through doctor Sanders and other traitors, who there ioined themſelues togither vnder the popes ſtandard, to bring to paſſe their ſecret appointment in this realme. Through their perſuaſions and dealings, the people were moued in the popes name to fight againſt their lawfull princeſſe vnder his banner; and to rebell againſt hir ſo notoriouſlie as they might. The incouragement to this great diſobedience they receiued through doctor Sanders a fugitiue and ranke traitor to his prince and countrie, as alſo through diuerſe Jeſuits both Engliſh and Iriſh, whoſe hypocriticall ſhew of holineſſe and diuelliſh perſuaſions on the behalfe of the pope their maiſter and head, intiſed a multitude of the people there to change their profeſſion in religion, and to yéeld themſelues to the popes authoritie, whereby they ſhould renounce the moſt certeine and iuſt title of hir maieſtie: and when forren forces ſhould be aſſembled there, they to ioine with them in their intent, and ſo traitorouſlie rebell againſt their lawfull ſoueraigne. All theſe practiſes toke their originall from the pope, as well by ſending his ſecret meſſengers, as alſo by his traitorous bull, which being ſent by Pius quintus, is neuertheleſſe confirmed (in the former authoritie) by this pope Gregorie the thirtéenth, and remaineth in hope to take effect at ſome time or other, for which he doth watch opportunitie as conuenientlie as he maie.

This bull remaineth in his former force by this pope, onelie a toleration for the ſtraitneſſe to the ſubiects there in amended.

But God the iuſt auenger of all cauſes, as he hath hitherto preſerued hir maieſtie & this litle Iland from all their malicious attempts and practiſes, and hath deſeruedlie throwne the yoke of their ſhame on their owne necks: ſo will he no doubt continue his fatherlie care, that his children ſhall be preſerued, & their aduerſaries confounded.

Campion deſireth not to heare how theſe treaſons tooke their originall, and how from time to time they haue béene enterpriſed and confounded: wherefore to blind the peoples eies he maketh this counterfeit anſwer.

But ſaith Campion: What is this to vs here preſent? What apperteineth this to our indictment? We are here both ſeuerallie and all togither indicted of high treaſon; and for that that is obiected againſt vs we muſt anſwer. Let not other mens offenſes be laid to our charge, that we ſhould anſwer for other mens falts committed long ſince. Some of vs were then but nouices here in the vniuerſities, and were altogither ignorant of theſe matters. What haue we to doo with anie thing that they did? They that were offendors, let them anſwer to what you can lay againſt them. For vs that be here at this inſtant, you muſt either ſaie; Thou Campion didſt this thing, or thou (naming ſome of the other) committedſt this offenſe, and thervpon bring your proofes and witneſſes, otherwiſe you ſhall neuer be able to touch vs. As for theſe aſſertions, for the ſtrength they haue againſt vs, I will not eſtéeme it worth a penniworth of pippins. And therefore to your indictment.

This anſwer ſo ſmoothlie deliuered, and with ſuch coie lookes and proteſtation of action geſted, that all the ſtanders by gaue perfect notice of the man, both of his nature and diſpoſition, as alſo of his prompt & ingenious wit, to ſhadow an abſolute truth with a ſhew of great wiſedome and learning. For this he knew right well, that before he came to that place, he had wonne a maruellous goodlie report, to be ſuch a man as his like was not to be found, either for life, learning, or anie other qualitie that might beautifie a man. So that by his fauorers and fréends it was blowen abrode, that we had neither doctors, nor others that were worthie to enter diſputation with him, he was ſo farre aboue them all, that they might not deale with him. Hereto doo the great titles which they adorne him withall giue credit, ſaieng thus:

Ex libello quodam famoſo.

Quid? Campiano deerat doctrina perito,
Doctrinæ natus qui penetrale fuit:
Cui fuit in primis ſponſata ſcientia cunis,
Quique puer nulli mente ſecundus erat:
Ingenuas iuuenis qui ſedulus imbibit artes,
Virque videbatur vix habuiſſe parem, &c.

Now being brought vnto a publike triall, it ſtood him vpon to argue ſomewhat of the praiſe that had béene giuen him: wherefore in verie quaint and familiar eloquent gloſes he ſtood vpon quirks and fine deuiſe of ſpéech, thinking as he had deluded manie before, ſo at that preſent he might blind the eies of iuſtice, & acquite himſelfe of his horrible treſons. But as truth ſheweth moſt braue when ſhe goeth bare & naked, and deceipt fineſt when he is cunninglie floriſhed; euen ſo the poore habit of the one diſcouered the proud hart of the other, and confounded his boldneſſe with hir ſacred brightneſſe, giuing all men to vnderſtand, that Veritas vincit omnia. And bicauſe Campion would haue made ſuch a cunning conueiance of the matter, as though it neither might or could attaint him or anie of them: it was giuen him to vnderſtand, that they would not alone touch him in the ſequele of the former cauſes, but them all, and he that thought himſelfe the cléereſt. Wherevpon doctor Sanders and doctor Briſtow, their traitorous writings in defenſe of the popes bull exhibited againſt hir maieſtie, were read vnto them, how they both allowed it, and alſo the rebellion in the north. Afterwards it was manifeſtlie proued to their faces, that Briſtows booke in allowance thereof, named his Motiues, was eſpeciallie commanded to be vſed amongeſt them both at Rome and at Rheimes, euerie one being expreſlie charged not to be without one of theſe bookes.

Doctor Sanders and doctor Briſtows bookes were there read vnto them, wherin moſt traitorouſly they defended the rebellion againſt hir maieſtie.

They denied what one of their owne fellows had confeſſed, & ſubſcribed to, and what euerie one of the witneſſes knew to be moſt certeine.

This with open mouths they altogither denied, ſome that they had neuer ſéene it, and ſome that they neuer heard of anie ſuch commandement: when as Iohn Hart one of their owne fellowes had auouched it, and therevnto ſubſcribed. Beſides, my ſelfe when * I came to Rheimes, ſaw them as common amongſt them, as the litle catechiſme here amongſt children, the inequalitie of the number conſidered. Againe, at Rome they were as common likewiſe in the ſeminarie, and among the Engliſhmen in the citie, for * my ſelfe had it, and one of doctor Allens catechiſmes deliuered me, with great charge to embrace it as my chiefe inſtruction. My companion that went with me had one likewiſe; the reſt of the witneſſes had ſéene how common they were, and in what reuerence and authoritie they eſtéemed them: yet theſe men would with ſhameleſſe faces denie it; yea, and if they might haue béene ſo credited, would haue ſworne againſt it. This manifeſt reproofe they would not grant vnto, but Campion taketh vpon him to wreſt it according vnto his humor, by anſwering that the booke was not ſo ill as they tooke it for, nor deſerued anie ſuch iudgement of preiudice. Now he thought he could not be taken tardie, but ſuppoſed his argument to paſſe vnreproueable; for that in the new imprinting of this booke, ſuch matters as did moſt ſharplie touch them, were abridged, thinking none of the former bookes ſhould come to light. But here Campion ouerſhot himſelfe, for ſo ſlie an anſwer could not couer ſo foule a blemiſh. When they had notably conuicted them of theſe matters, which with obſtinacie they ſtill denied, they came to the intent of their ſecret comming ouer into this realme, which was for the death of hir maieſtie, and ouerthrow of the whole realme, which ſhould be by domeſticall rebellion and forren hoſtilitie; the ſum whereof in briefe is thus. This little Iland, God hauing ſo bountifullie beſtowed his bleſſings vpon it, that except it proue falſe within it ſelfe, no treaſon whatſoeuer can preuaile againſt it, and the pope being hereof verie well perſuaded, by reaſon that all his attempts haue proued of no effect: he hath found out a meane, whereby he aſſureth himſelfe to ſpéed of his deſire. Secret rebellion muſt be ſtirred here at home among our ſelues, the harts of the people muſt be obdurated againſt God and their prince; ſo that when a foren power ſhall on a ſudden inuade this realme, the ſubiects thus ſeduced mu[illegible] with theſe in armes, and ſo ſhall the pope att[illegible] the ſum of his wiſh. And all this muſt be wrought by certeine locuſts of the popes ſeminaries mainteined at Rome & Rheimes, arriuing in England, and diſperſing themſelues into ſuch places, where they thinke themſelues to be ſureſt, ſome in one place, and ſome in another; and diſguiſing themſelues like gentlemen, ſeruingmen, or what apparell they may find méeteſt for them, haue acceſſe to manie and ſundrie places, where hauing reconciled ſome, their fréends muſt likewiſe be of the ſame ſtampe. And ſo, what from father to ſon, huſband and wife, kinſman and acquaintance, a number are ſeduced & brought into their deteſtable dealings. For, after they haue gotten anie litle ground within them to build vpon, then doo they laie vnto them, what a generall bloudie daie is toward England, that the pope and other forren princes haue fullie determined to ouerrun the realme; then better it were for you (ſaie they) to yéeld your ſelues willinglie, than to ſée ſo horrible a ſlaughter, both of your princeſſe, and all that dare preſume to take hir part. Your ſelues, yea and your fréends ſhall abide the ſame hard iudgement, except you ioine with vs in this action. Thus through terrifieng, and a thouſand traitorous fetches they haue; one friend bringeth another, and one kinſman another. So that, as they themſelues will make their boaſt, in ſhort time they doubt not to haue the moſt part of all England: yea and further they preſume, that hir maieſtie thinking hir ſelfe in moſt ſafetie,

* M. A.

Campion anſwered this point ſubtilie, becauſe in the laſt edition of the booke the chiefe matters againſt themſelues were abridged.

The generall determination how to bring to paſſe their intents in this realme.

Their owne confeſſion how they behaue themſelues when they come into England.

ſafetie, ſhall then be ſooneſt of all beguiled & deceiued. Theſe are the men that make themſelues ſo ſound and ſubſtantiall, that they are as true ſubiects to hir maieſtie, as the beſt of vs. Yea, ſaith Campion, neuer ſhall you prooue this, that we came ouer either for this intent or purpoſe: but onelie for the ſauing of ſoules, which meere loue and conſcience compelled vs to doo, for that we did pittie the miſerable eſtate of our countrie. But where are your prooſes (ſaith he) theſe are but quirkes by the waie, our liues I perceiue ſtandeth vpon points of rhetorike, you haue ſhewen vs the antecedent, now let vs haue the Ergo. With this continuall courſe of boldneſſe and impudencie, Campion and his fellowes would grant nothing, but ſtiflie denied euerie cauſe: and Campion he tooke it for a cuſtome to wreſt euerie thing as pleaſed him, ſaieng: that the iurie were not men learned, and therfore cauſes of conſcience ought not to be committed to them, neither was that barre appointed to define on cauſes of conſcience: wherfore, all that you doo (ſaith he) is but to bring vs in odium with the iurie. After this order he deluded the people, appealing ſtill to the deuoutneſſe of his conſcience: bicauſe he ſaw the matter brought to the verie puſh that would generallie conuict them all, for the witneſſes were produced and ſworne, Harts confeſſion and their owne writings before them, ſo that they would remoue them from their ordinarie illuſions.

Campion coloureth their comming ouer, affirming it was for the ſafegard of ſoules.

when he had no other ſhift, he fell into theſe words.

The depoſitiō of G. Eliot.

George Eliot, one of the ordinarie yeomen of hir maieſties chamber, vpon his oth gaue foorth in euidence as followeth. That he, liuing here in England among certeine of that ſect, fell in acquaintance with one Paine a preeſt: who gaue him to vnderſtand of a horrible treaſon intended againſt hir maieſtie and the ſtate, which he did expect ſhortlie to happen, the order how & after what manner in breefe is thus. That there ſhould be leuied a certeine companie of armed men, which on a ſudden ſhould enterpriſe a moſt monſtruous attempt: a certeine companie of theſe armed men ſhould be prepared againſt hir maieſtie, as manie againſt my L. of L. as manie gai[illegible]y L. T. as manie againſt S. F. W. and di[illegible]ther, whoſe names he dooth not well remember. [illegible]e deaths of theſe noble perſonages ſhould be preſen[illegible]ie fulfilled, and hir maieſtie vſed in ſuch ſort, as mod[illegible]ie nor dutie will not ſuffer a ſubiect to rehearſe: but this ſhould be the generall crie euerie where, Queene Marie, queene Marie. It was alſo appointed and agreed vpon who ſhould haue this man of honours roome, and who ſhould haue that office, euerie thing was determined, there wanted nothing but the comming ouer of ſuch preeſts and others, as were long looked for. Vpon this report, this aforenamed George Eliot tooke occaſion to queſtion with this Paine, how they could find in their hearts to attempt an act of ſo great and horrible crueltie, conſidering how high an offenſe it ſhould be to God, beſide great dangers might ariſe thereby. Whereto Paine made anſwer, that the killing hir maieſtie was no offenſe to God, nor the vttermoſt crueltie they could vſe to hir, or anie that tooke hir part, but that they might as lawfullie doo it as to a brute beaſt; and himſelfe would be one of the formoſt in executing of this villanous and moſt traitorous action.

Meaning the [illegible]

A moſt traitorous and villanous anſwer: let euerie true ſubiect to be read with reuerence of the prince.

By this you may perceiue, that the death of hir maieſtie and ouerthrow of this realme was throughlie agreed vpon, and fullie determined: there wanted nothing but opportunitie, for preeſts both then and after came ouer continuallie to further it, ſo much as in them laie. To the ſaid effect did A. M. vtter moſt odious matter, the reading whereof would make anie true Engliſh hart quake & tremble: and to write it, what loiall ſubiect is able to abide? And therefore as deriued from the diuell to his dearlings we omit the ſame; counting it more loialtie to lull ſuch deuiſes and conſultations aſleepe, than to publiſh them to the world in blacke & white: due reuerence to the principall obiects allwaies reſerued. All which abhominable ſtuffe, circumſtances of times, places, perſons, and other particulars dulie pondered, giue euident demonſtration what affection theſe fellowes afford their lawfull queene and countrie: well is he that can imagine moſt againſt hir maieſtie, and highlie is he eſteemed that beareth the moſt traitorous hart to hir. Yet Campion and the reſt of his fellowes they plead ignorance in all theſe cauſes, they bolſter vp one another with large proteſtations, railing words, and ſubtill ſurmiſes: affirming that they were not ſent hither for anie ſuch intent; which is as vntrue, as we know it for truth, that the Lord God liueth in heauen.

So ſore of their good will bewraied, if God did not (as he dailie doth) preuent their purpoſes.

Campion nor his fellowes will grant to anie thing, but raile and vſe bold ſpeeches, wherby their guiltie conſciences were diſcouered.

For this * I am able to ſaie my ſelfe, that at diuerſe other times, it was whiſpered among them in the ſeminarie: that ſhortlie there ſhould be preeſts appointed for England, to win the people againſt the appointed time, when as a great armie ſhould be readie to ioine with them: and Campion, who was then at Praga in Bohemia, he was ſpoken of amongſt them all, to be a rare and ſingular fellow, and therefore generallie was taken for a meet man to be ſent about ſuch a meſſage, ſo that they iudged that he ſhould be ſent for to be a chiefe man in this matter. Well (ſaith Campion) it may be they had ſuch an opinion of me, which in my ſelfe I find not to be deſerued; and it may be that I was appointed to be ſent into England, according as thoſe other preeſts were, for the ſauing of ſoules and benefit of my countrie: muſt it follow then that we are ſent to practiſe the death of the queene, and to ſeeke the ruine of our countrie? Alas, this is a hard caſe, and I deſire you of the iurie to marke it, for theſe are but ſhadowes without anie ſubſtance. This you are to note, that we which enter into that bleſſed ſocietie of the Ieſuites: we doo as it were forſake the world, vowing our ſelues to chaſtitie and ſinceritie of conſcience, to obeie our ſuperiours, and to be readie to go whither they ſhall appoint vs. If they ſend vs to the Indies, or to anie ſuch places, where the people haue not the true catholike faith: we are bound by dutie in conſcience to go whither they appoint vs. And ſhall it then be ſaid that we come for the deſtruction of the prince and countrie, where we ſettle our ſelues? Alas, that were a hard caſe, for chriſtian charitie willeth vs to comfort one another, and if we can to get the ſheepe into the fold which hath long run aſtraie. And when we heare confeſſion, we doo not perſuade them to anie diſobedience; for that is againſt the nature of confeſſion: God forbid that we ſhould once thinke anie ſuch thing.

* M. A.

Campion couereth their traitorous intents vnder the ſauing of ſoules.

A holie kind of life were it not for the B.

Note here the perfect image of hypocriſie.

Behold the ſubtill ſhifts that he found out ſtill to flie vnto, yea though the manifeſt diſproofe laie before them, yet would he find ſome cauill or other: for not onelie the euidence of their generall determination beyond the ſeas was ſhewed them, but alſo the traitorous articles were there read vnto them, which Iohn Hart had copied out for doctor Allen (concerning the proceeding of theſe traitorous cauſes, and for which he went purpoſelie to Rome to confer with the pope about) and ſubſcribed vnto, that they were certeine and true, as alſo their owne confeſſions and writings were laid open before them, approouing them notablie guiltie of the matters aforeſaid, and yet in their lieng pamphlets ſcattered here & there in ſundrie hands, they haue faces of braſſe to report, that matters determined, both by doctor Allen when he came to Rome, and diuers other doctors liuing there in the citie, as alſo diuerſe of the ſeminarie: he likewiſe vnderſtood of the prouiſion for the great daie, that it was generallie ſpoken of among the Engliſhmen: and to be more certeine he kept a iournall or booke of their dailie dealings, noting the daie, time, place, and perſons preſent at their ſecret conferences, and verie much matter hath he iuſtified againſt them. One Cradocke a merchant, when he was in Rome, he vnderſtood the aforeſaid determination, and how that doctor Shellie the Engliſh prior, who is a knight of the Rhodes, for that he ſomewhat ſpake againſt ſuch crueltie to be vſed to his natiue countrie, was ſomewhat miſliked of himſelfe, and had almoſt béene turned out of his office. And this aforeſaid Cradocke being in priſon there for the ſpace of twentie moneths and more: it was ſaid to him, that he might account himſelfe bleſſed of God that he was there, bicauſe he ſhould not ſée the grieuous ruine of his natiue countrie. He that hath but halfe an eie may ſée how theſe matters concord and agrée togither, and noting euerie thing as it lieth, may plainelie ſée their horrible and traitorous deuiſes.

Inſidiæ ſanctos implicuere viros.

Charles Sled, who ſometime ſerued maſter doctor Morton in Rome, in whoſe houſe there was manie

When manifeſt prooſes of their treaſons were laid before them: they would in no wiſe grant their guiltineſſe.

Conſider euerie matter and then iudge how they concord and agrée togither.

A booke which they vſe as their inſtruction, how to anſwer to euerie queſtion ſophiſticallie.

And further, there was a little booke in Latine, which they themſelues brought ouer with them, it was there openlie read vnto them: wherein was certeine rules and orders preſcribed, how they ſhould behaue themſelues here in England, and how if they were demanded of anie thing, they ſhould make anſwer indirectlie: or to take the word it ſelfe, according as it is mentioned in the booke, they muſt anſwer ſophiſticè, whereby is meant as thus. If they be examined as concerning their allegiance to hir maieſtie, they will make their anſwer after this maner; She is our lawfull ſouereigne ladie & quéene, and we obeie hir. But then obiect vnto them; Will you obeie hir, notwithſtanding the popes excommunication, or anie thing that he commandeth to the contrarie? Then will they anſwer: We deſire you not to charge our conſciences, and that you would not enter ſo déepe into our conſciences, we truſt the pope will not command vs anie thing againſt hir: & a hundred ſuch like ſléeueleſſe anſwers they make, neuer agréeing to anie certeintie, but holding the pope in more reuerence than they doo hir maieſtie.

To doo their dutie is a weightie burden to their conſciences, and therefore they abide in their obſtinacie and blindneſſe.

For this conſideration they carrie with them, that if by their ſhew of humilitie, & their deuiſed order of craftie anſwering, they might moue our magiſtrats to haue a good opinion of them, & not to deale ſo ſtrictlie as law and their deſeruing doth worthilie merit: then they might with leſſe ſuſpect go about their holie fathers buſineſſe, in that their ſophiſticall anſwers couered ſo foule an abuſe. And then ſo manie as come after them, purpoſelie ſent about the ſame affaires, ſéeing their paſſage made before them, and being ſchooled after the ſame maner: they might withdraw the hearts of a number of hir maieſties ſubiects, by ſuch meanes as is before largelie expreſſed; ſo that deſtruction ſhould come vpon vs, before we had diſcouered their trecherous dealings. But God be thanked, as all their deuiſes haue had their deſerued ſucceſſe, this ſophiſticall order hath ſped alike with them for companie: and this let them fullie aſſure themſelues, that what meanes ſoeuer they ſéeke againſt their princeſſe and countrie, God will reward them after their owne dealings.

Campion his owne anſwer as concerning his allegiance to hir maieſtie.

To Campion himſelfe the former queſtions were put forth at the barre: and this anſwer he made to them. She is my lawfull ſouereigne ladie & quéene, and I doo obeie hir. But when he was demanded, although the pope did expreſſelie command him the contrarie: if he would neuertheleſſe faithfullie obeie hir? Oh then! they muſt not ſo déepelie enter into his conſcience, that barre was not a barre to define on cauſes of conſcience: that queſtion touched his conſcience, wherefore he flatlie ſaid he might not anſwer it. No, no, he knew full well that the traitorous affaires he came about, would not allow him ſuch a direct anſwer as they had looked for, and gladlie would haue had, that of a Saule they might haue made him a Paule. Wherefore his ſecret and guilefull behauiour made perfect appéerance of his wicked intent, which he ſhadowed vnder the counterfeit cloke of ſauing ſoules, and reconciling his countriemen to the catholike faith, vnder the ſwéet bait of the amiable title of the ſocietie of Ieſus, to which order hauing bequeathed himſelfe (and become a reſolute and obſtinate votarie) he thirſted after the kingdome of heauen; if we maie beléeue their owne report concerning Campion, of whome they ſaie:

Nominis inde tui ſancto deuotus Ieſu
Ille ſodalitio cœlica regna ſitit.

The cauſe why this pope hath tolerated the former bull of Pius Quintus.

Here it can not be greatlie amiſſe, to rehearſe vnto you the cauſe why this pope hath tolerated the former bull, ſéeing this ſophiſticall kind of anſwering grew chieflie thereby. When anie of theſe ſecret meſſengers ſhould be ſent about their holie fathers determination here in England, to reconcile, ſhriue, & win hir maieſties ſubiects to their diuiliſh intent: if ſuch miſaduenture ſhould happen to them, that their ſecret dealings came to the eares of iuſtice, then they fell into the danger of law. Wherefore to ſhadow their ſubtiltie, and to proſecute the effect of their meſſage, the pope thought good to harten them by this ſophiſticall addition. For well we know, & themſelues likewiſe are not ignorant thereof, that being examined, if they ſhould denie the quéenes maieſtie to be their ſupreme princeſſe and gouerneſſe in all cauſes: then they fell into condemnation by hir lawes. Againe, if they denied the authoritie of the pope, as of force they muſt néeds doo, if they will ſéeme themſelues good ſubiects, and manifeſt a dutifull and obedient heart to hir maieſtie: then they breake their vow made to the pope, and ſo fall into his [illegible] and condemnation likewiſe: ſo that this is certeine appointed them, to cleaue faithfullie to the [illegible] and vtterlie to forſake the other.

Our Engliſh doctors conferring with the cardinals found out meanes for this toleration.

Yet that they might haue as much fauour and friendſhip, as the furtherance of ſuch a cauſe required: this hard clauſe (being well ſcanned of diuerſe our Engliſh doctors and others, both at Rome and at Rheimes) was thorough earneſt ſute deliuered to diuerſe of the cardinals, who laieng their heads togither, and throughlie ſearching the bottome of euerie doubt: a toleration for that ſtrict point was found out, which was ordeined as you haue heard before. Then in all the haſt the pope was giuen to vnderſtand thereof, who reſpecting what might be for his benefit, and what might turne to his diſcommoditie, authoriſed them this former toleration, which (God be thanked) carried as ſlender ſtrength as the reſt of his practiſes hath doone. Yet all this being knowne to vs, Campion & his fellowes will grant no knowledge, but pleade ſtill their deuout conſciences. An other of their owne bookes was alſo there read vnto them, wherein was other orders preſcribed them, how they ſhould handle a nobleman, how a gentleman, and how a poore man: which being openlie read before them, gaue all there preſent to vnderſtand, how aſſuredlie they had appointed the courſe for their treaſon. A number of inuincible proofs paſſing againſt them, they came at laſt to the point of their comming ouer; how ſuddenlie, how haſtilie, & all thorough a generall appointment. Campion, he had ſtaid a long time at Praga in Bohemia,

An other booke how to handle all maner of perſons to win them to their intent.

Campion ſent for from Pra ga to go with other preeſts appointed for England.

and on a ſudden he was haſtilie ſent for to Rome: by his owne confeſſion he knew not wherefore, but the meſſage was in ſuch haſt, that he muſt come thither with all ſpeed.

When he came to Rome, he ſtaied there but fiue daies: in which time, receiuing the ſumme of their charge from the pope, as is their vſuall wont, and their father generall deliuering them what he hath in office: he was diſpatched from thenſe with other preeſts, who had their Viaticum from the popes treaſurie, and were all eſpeciallie appointed for England. Theſe preeſts were ſent (as all other are) about the cheefe cauſe, for that none come from thenſe but onelie for that purpoſe. The eſtate of the cauſe before expreſſed, it is too manifeſt, that Campion and his fellowes are guiltie of the matters obiected againſt them. For this you are to remember, that none muſt ſtaie there without they will be preeſts; when they receiue their preeſthood, they enter into their oth, which oth conteineth the ſumme of the treaſon: ſo that all which come from thenſe (hauing taken that oth) come about the execution of the treaſon, in that none but they that are eſpeciallie ſent, can haue their Viaticum of the pope; and then he ſending them, the caſe is too euident.

The prieſts are there onelie mainteined for this purpoſe, and none come from thenſe, but about this cauſe, which prooueth them altogither giltie.

Let not a light iudgement paſſe ouer a matter of ſo great reſpect, let the popes intent of keeping them there be conſidered, the great malice and ſpite that he beareth hir maieſtie and the relme, and then their oth to execute his commandements; all theſe laid togither, diſcouereth the depth of their trecherie. But what anſwereth maiſter Campion to this? He confeſſeth that he was quietlie ſetled at Praga, and little expected anie ſuch haſtie ſending for: beſide that, he went to Rome with great ſpeed, tarrieng there no longer than fiue daies, as is before expreſſed, and that he receiued his Viaticum of the pope, when as he was diſpatched thenſe with other preeſts, purpoſelie appointed for England, and that he came no otherwiſe than they did, nor for anie other intent than for the benefit of ſoules, as he ſtill termed it: but he would not grant that he came for anie treaſon.

Campion granteth, he came as the other prieſts did to reconcile & ſhriue: but he will not allow that he came for anie treaſon.

So that to ſeduce hir maieſties ſubiects, to perſuade them from their duetie and obedience, and to ioine themſelues in ſuch ſort, as their princeſſe and countrie muſt be deſtroied thereby: this is no treaſon in his opinion. Howbeit, Campion and his fellowes pleaded ignorance ſtill, they ſaw and would not ſee, they were ſo craftilie ſchooled. James Boſgraue, he was at Uilna in Polonia, and as he confeſſed himſelfe, he vnderſtood that there was preeſts appointed for England: vpon which report he came awaie from thenſe in verie great haſt. And in his paſſage, he mentioned to one in the ſhip, who was ſworne, and confeſſed the ſame before certeine iuſtices, that there was ſuch matter towards in England, as hath beene before expreſſed: and thereupon he ſought to haue woone him, if his purpoſe could haue taken effect. Campion ſeeing this begun ſomewhat to touch the quicke, and that in truth it diſcouered the dealings of them all: he taketh vpon him to anſwer on his behalfe, for that they all repoſed themſelues on him.

[illegible] Boſ- [illegible] his ha- [illegible] comming [illegible] Uilna, [illegible] he heard [illegible] the prieſts [illegible] appointed for England.

He ſaith, that if Boſgraue did heare ſuch news, that there were papiſts appointed for England, whie ſhould they take hold on ſo ſmall a cauſe? Flieng reports are not to be credited, for albeit he heard ſuch newes, how knew he, if they were certeine or no? Againe (quoth he) the man hath beene long out of England, and he doth not ſpeake Engliſh perfectlie: it maie be then that ſome word maie eſcape him vnawares, which you are not to build vpon, conſidering the defect of the man, for he maie peraduenture ſpeake he knoweth not what. And where you ſaie, that ſuch a one hath auouched before certeine iuſtices, that he vſed ſuch and ſuch words to him; where is the man, we are not to credit a written paper, what know we if it be true or no? Let vs heare him ſelfe ſaie ſo, and then we will beleeue it. See what a number of ſhifts he had cõtinuallie to waſt the time, and all to no pupoſe. The mans owne confeſſion was there, wherto himſelfe had ſubſcribed, and foure or fiue iuſtices ſet their hands to it for the certeintie thereof; yet this was not ſufficient to anſwer them.

Campion frequenteth his accuſtomed order of ſubtill anſwering.

Traitors will neuer beleeue anie truth, eſpeciallie if it touch themſelues.

Robert Iohnſon he was likewiſe at Auinion in France, from whenſe he came alſo in verie great haſt, vpon the report he had heard of prieſts that were appointed for England. Now there is an other thing to be conſidered, that theſe men, ſetled where they were, by their owne confeſſion they muſt not depart from thenſe without they be appointed by their ſuperiors, then it is eaſie to be anſwered, that they came by their ſuperiors apointment at this preſent: and as the generall determination was, ſo they came all for one cauſe & intent. Edward Riſhton, he being here in England, wrote a letter to Richardſon a prieſt, and who is likewiſe condemned amongeſt them; which letter was there openlie read to his face. How there were foure goldſmiths of his occupation latelie come ouer, who indeed were prieſts, and how all things went ſucceſſiuelie forwards. And Campion being in the Tower wrote a letter vnto Pownd likewiſe, wherein he gaue him to vnderſtand that he was verie ſorie, that through his frailtie he had bewraied thoſe, at whoſe houſes he had beene ſo freendlie interteined; wherefore he aſked God hartilie forgiueneſſe, and them all whome he had ſo highlie offended. But (ſaith he) as for the chiefe matter that is as yet vnreuealed, and come racke come rope, neuer ſhall that be diſcouered. A number of matters more were brought againſt them, which to rehearſe, would require a farre more large diſcourſe: but to be breefe, in the end, this was the full and certeine iſſue. That theſe men, when they were beyond the ſeas: the generall agreement and determination amongeſt them, was to worke the death of our moſt gratious princeſſe, to deſtroie hir dominion, and to erect ſuch as pleaſed them when this aforeſaid daie ſhould take effect. And that their comming ouer, was to ſeduce hir louing ſubiects, to win their obedient hearts from hir, ſo that they ſhould be in a readineſſe to ioine with a foren power, and ſo they ſhould likewiſe be deſtroiers of their princeſſe and countrie. And that in the meane while they themſelues ſought to accompliſh hir maieſties death, ſo much as in them laie.

Robert Iohnſon his comming from Auinion in France.

Edward Riſhtons letter to Richardſon one of the condemned.

Campions letter to maiſter Pownd in the Tower.

Campion was reſolute in the chiefe matter.

This was manifeſtlie prooued by verie large and ample euidence, credible witneſſes, and their owne confeſſions and writings: whereon the iurie, hauing wiſelie and diſcreetlie pondered and ſearched and ſeene into the depth of euerie cauſe, worthilie and deſeruedlie gaue them vp all guiltie of the treaſons whereof they were indicted and arreigned. Which being done, after a godlie and comfortable exhortation, perſuading them patientlie to ſuffer and abide the death for them appointed, and to be heartilie ſorie for their greeuous and hainous offenſes, the ſentence of death was pronounced on them: that they ſhould depart to the places from whenſe they came, and from thenſe to be drawne on hurdles to the place of execution, where they ſhould be hanged till they were halfe dead: then to be cut downe, their priuie members to be cut off, and their entrailes taken forth, and to be burned in the fire before their eies: then their heads to be cut off, their bodies parted into foure quarters to be diſpoſed at hir maieſties pleaſure, and the Lord God to receiue their ſoules to his mercie. Afterwards they were conueied from thenſe with botes to a place of landing for them appointed, from whenſe they were conducted to the Tower of London, diuers of them giuing foorth ſundrie lewd and diſhoneſt ſpeeches: as Thomas Coteham, ſeeing ſo manie people to behold them, deſired that fire and brimſtone might fall from heauen, to deſtroie both the citie and all that were in it: with diuerſe other wicked words, which for modeſties ſake I omit here to rehearſe, deſiring God in mercie to giue men better grace.

Sentence of death denounced againſt Campion and his confederats.

A verie holie thing, but verie meet for his deuotion.

On the next daie, being tueſdaie and the one and twentith daie of Nouember, there was brought to the ſaid high barre theſe perſons following; John Hart, Thomas Ford, William Filbie, Laurence Richardſon, John Shert, Alexander Brian, and John Collington. Alexander Brian, he had ſhauen his crowne himſelfe, & made him a croſſe of a peece of a trencher, which he held in his hand openlie & praied to: which when he was rebuked for, he boldlie and ſtoutlie made anſwer; that his crowne was of his owne ſhauing, and he had good hope to doo it againe. In breefe, they were all indicted on the ſelfe ſame treaſons as they were the daie before; and John Harts traitorous ſermon which he made at Rhems againſt hir maieſtie auouched to his face, their owne writings and confeſſions with ſubſtantiall witneſſe produced againſt them, ſo that they were found giltie of their treaſons, as the other were before them, except John Collington, he was quit of the former high treaſon by the Iurie.

Execution of Campion, Sherwin, and Brian.

On fridaie being the firſt of December, Edmund Campion Ieſuit, Ralfe Sherwin, & Alexander Brian ſeminarie prieſts, being condemned for high treaſon againſt hir maieſties moſt roiall perſon, as alſo for traitorous practiſes, touching the ſubuerſion of the true & vndoubted religion here mainteined, with the vtter ruine and ouerthrow of this realme of England, were drawne from the Tower of London on hurdles, to the place of execution appointed, garded with ſuch a ſufficient companie as might expreſſe the honor of iuſtice the larger in that behalfe. Being come to the place of execution, where diuerſe of hir maieſties honorable councell, with manie honorable perſonages, and gentlemen of worſhip and good account, beſide a multitude of people not here to be remembred attended their comming; Edmund Campion was firſt brought vp into the cart, where after the great rumor of ſo manie people ſomewhat appeaſed, he ſpake thus.

Campion in his confeſſion implieth a defenſe of his innocencie.

Firſt he began (the people then preſent expecting his confeſſion) with a phraſe or two in Latine, when immediatlie after he fell into Engliſh in this maner. I am here brought as a ſpectacle before the face of God, of angelles, and of men, ſatiſfieng my ſelfe to die as becommeth a true chriſtian & catholike man. As for the treaſons that haue beene laid to my charge, and I am come here to ſuffer for: I deſire you all to beare witneſſe with me, that thereof I am altogither innocent. Wherevpon anſwer was made to him by one of the councell, that he might not ſeeme to denie th'obiections againſt him, hauing beene prooued ſo manifeſtlie to his face, both by ſufficient witneſſe and euidence. Well my lord (quoth he) I am a catholike man, and a prieſt, in that faith haue I liued hitherto, and in that faith I doo intend to die; and if you eſteeme my religion treaſon, then of force I muſt grant vnto you, as for anie other treaſon I will not conſent vnto. Then was he mooued as concerning his traitorous and hainous offenſe to the queenes moſt excellent maieſtie. Whereto he anſwered; She is my lawfull princeſſe and queene. There ſomwhat he drew in his words to himſelfe, whereby was gathered, that ſomwhat he would haue gladlie ſpoken: but the great timiditie and vnſtable opinion of his conſcience, wherein he was all the time euen to the death, would not ſuffer him to vtter it.

Campion noted to be verie vaineglorious.

Campion deſcribed.

Here is with iudgement a deepe point and high matter to be conſidered, that this man alwaies directing the courſe of his life to a vaineglorious imagination, and alwaies couetous to make himſelfe famous; at this inſtant made a perfect diſcouerie of himſelfe. For being ſomewhat learned, all matters whatſoeuer (as you haue heard before) he bare awaie with a maieſticall countenance, the viſor of vanitie aptlie fitting the face of onelie hypocriſie; what was ſound he would make ſophiſticall, what was the infallible truth of it ſelfe he would carrie in his owne conceipt, and delude the people with a pleaſant quirke, or ſome ſuch ſtuffe, onlie to purchaſe him credit and affection. And he was not to learne to ſet a coragious countenance on euerie ſuch ſlight reaſon, whereby he peruerted manie, deceiued more, and was thought ſuch a champion, as the pope neuer had the like. But now behold the man, whom neither racke nor rope ſhould alter, whoſe faith was ſuch as he boaſted inuincible: feare had caught hold on this braue boaſter, and terror entred his thoughts, whereby was diſcouered his impudent diſſimulations. Now let it with patience be mooued a little, that the outward proteſtations of this man vrged ſome there preſent to teares, not entring into conceipt of his inward hypocriſie to make a plauſible definition of this perillous deceiuer, not by coniecture, but by proofe it ſhall be thus anſwered.

A further deſcription of Edmund Campion.

Edmund Campion, as it is by men of ſufficient credit reported, at what time he ſpent his ſtudie here in England both in the hoſpitall, and alſo at the vniuerſitie of Oxford, was alwaies addicted to a maruellous ſuppoſe in himſelfe of ripe iudgement, prompt audacitie, and cunning conueiance in his ſchoole points: wherethrough he fell into a proud and vaineglorious iudgement, practiſing to be eloquent in phraſe, and ſo fine in his quirks and fantaſticall coniectures, that the ignorant he woon by his ſmooth deuiſes, ſome other affecting his pleaſant imaginations he charmed with ſubtiltie and choked with ſophiſtrie. The learned, who beheld his practiſe and peremptorie order of life, pitieng his follie, and wiſhing him a more ſtated determination, lothed his maners; yet loued the man, bicauſe chriſtian charitie willed them ſo to doo. Now this glorious Thraſo hauing by his libels made himſelfe famous, and vnder ſhew and ſuppoſe of great learning (though indeed being approued, found verie ſimple to the ſpeeches giuen of him) ſubdued manie to affect him verie much, when he was tak[illegible] knew it ſtood him vpon, not to looſe the cred[illegible]e he had woone ſecretlie. Wherefore in his former ridiculous maner, both in priſon, at his arreignment, yea and at his death, he continued the ſame in all points, which the foulneſſe of his treaſons blemiſhed euerie waie.

Campions curious care to keepe the credit he had woone in England.

Now indeed, as our Engliſh nation is both louing and pitifull: ſo manie ſeeing the gifts of God ſo well beſtowed on the man, and by him applied to ſo great abuſe, through naturall kindneſſe bemoned his caſe, wiſhing he had not fallen into ſo traitorous a cauſe. Then was mooued to him againe his treaſons and hainous offenſes againſt the queenes maieſtie, which impudentlie he ſtill denied, ſeeming to vtter words on the behalfe of one Richardſon, one likewiſe of the condemned traitors, taking on his conſcience that it was not he. Which hath bin prooued to the contrarie, for that it is knowne how this Richardſon is he, who diſtributed Campions libels and bookes abroad: and when he was put to his oth, whether it was he or no, he refuſed to ſweare on his behalfe. And becauſe the world might be fullie reſolued, that (notwithſtanding ding all the pretended & colourable meanes he could vſe for his excuſe and innocencie) he was to ſuffer death deſeruedlie as a traitor, &c. There was read to his face in the hearing of the aſſemblie a pamphlet publiſhed by authoritie as followeth.

An aduertiſement and defenſe for truth againſt hir backebiters, and ſpeciallie againſt the whiſpering fauourers and colourers *of Campions and the reſt of his con*federats treaſons.

The true occaſion of Campions & other of his ſtampe comming into England.

Although at the late arreignements at Weſtminſter of Edmund Campion, & other his complices condemned there of ſundrie high treſons, it was manifeſtlie declared and fullie prooued, how they all, vnder pretenſe of the names of Ieſuits, ſeminarie prieſts, & other perſons of like condition, had ſecretlie come into this realme, by ſending of ſundrie perſons authoriſed by the pope, to mooue the people by their ſecret perſuaſions to change their profeſſions in the matter of religion, of long time quietlie eſtabliſhed in this realme, and to be reconciled to the obedience of the pope, and withdrawen from their naturall allegiance due to the queenes maieſtie, and by theſe meanes to be readie in their hearts and minds and otherwiſe prouided, to ioine their forces as well with ſuch as their heads and ſuperiors which ſent them intended ſpeedilie to procure to be ſent into this relme, as with other rebellious ſubiects by them to be there to alſo excited, of purpoſe to depriue hir maieſtie of hir life, crowne, and dignitie; in like maner as latelie hath beene notoriouſlie attempted and put in execution by doctor Sanders an arrant and deteſtable traitor, and whileſt he liued one of the ſaid Campions companions, and by other Engliſh and Iriſh Ieſuits and traitors in Ireland, where they had firſt by their like ſecret meanes and perſuaſions, intiſed a great multitude of people of that land, firſt to change their profeſſion of religion, and to acknowledge the popes authoritie, and to renounce the iuſt authoritie of hir maieſtie; & ſo departing from their allegiance, vpon the arriuall of forren forces they did enter into a manifeſt rebellion, againſt the which almightie God the iuſt auenger of rebels by his goodneſſe hath giuen hir maieſtie (through hir good miniſters) power to the vanquiſhing, not onelie of thoſe forren forces, but alſo of a great number of the rebels there. Yet it [illegible] maliciouſlie, falſelie, and traitorouſlie by ſome of the ſecret fauourers of the ſaid Campion, and [illegible] the ſaid condemned traitors whiſpered in co[illegible] that the offenſes of theſe traitors were but [illegible] ſecret attemptings as Ieſuits, by exhortin[illegible]aching; with ſhriuing, maſſing, and ſuch like [illegible]s, to mooue people to change their religion, & to yeeld their obedience to the pope as Chriſts vicar (although the ſame be of themſelues offenſes verie heinous, and ſeeds of ſedition not allowable by the laws of the realme) whereas in verie truth neuertheleſſe it did manifeſtlie appeere vpon their indictments, and at their arreignements, by ſundrie confeſſions of ſome of their o[illegible]mpanions, and by manie good proofes and witneſſes produced and ſworne before their faces, that their facts whereof they were arreigned and condemned, were ſuch as were in truth hie treſons committed againſt hir maieſties roiall perſon, and againſt the ancient lawes and ſtatutes of this realme, which manie hundred yeres paſt were in force againſt like traitors, and not for facts of doctrine or religion, nor yet for offenſes againſt anie late or new ſtatutes, the ſame being manie conſpiracies at ſundrie times beyond the ſeas, at Rome in Italie and other places, and laſtlie at Rheimes in France, where there are nouriſhed by the popes authoritie in ſeminaries multitudes of Engliſh Ieſuits, ſeminarie prieſts, and fugitiues, whereof their heads and gouernors vſe continuallie in their ſermons, and in their bookes publikelie printed, as traitors to declare their traitorous minds as far forth as they can, to the depriuation of the queenes maieſtie of hir life and crowne: to which ends the ſaid Campion and his ſaid companions, by procurement of their ſaid heads, came ſecretlie into this realme, to mooue the ſubiects to renounce their naturall obedience; & according to a bull of the laſt pope Pius publiſhed to perſuade all ſorts with whom they durſt ſecretlie deale, that hir maieſtie by the ſaid popes excommunication was not the lawfull queene of the realme, nor that the ſubiects were bound to obeie anie of hir lawes or miniſters: but that they were all free, and diſcharged of their obedience and allegiance, and that they might lawfullie, yea that when time might ſerue, they ought to take armes againſt hir maieſtie, as in the late rebellion in the north was manifeſtlie by like meanes put in execution, and as now alſo latelie was notoriouſlie attempted in Ireland, by ſtirring vp the people in the popes name, and vnder his ſtandard to an open generall rebellion. And to haue brought theſe things to paſſe in this realme, was the comming into this realme of the ſaid Campion and his complices moſt manifeſtlie tried and prooued; as if by Gods goodnes by their apprehenſions, after their ſecret wandrings and diſguiſings of themſelues in a great part of the ſhires of the realme, theſe traitors had not beene now ſtaied, and by iuſt puniſhments ordered to be executed, there would haue appeered ſuch miſchiefe as is lamentable to be thought of; to the danger of hir maieſties perſon, and to the hazard and ruine of the whole realme by inuaſion of the ſame with forren enimies, and by raiſing of inward warre within the realme; the end and euent whereof, as of warre ciuill, can not be without great greefe mentioned or imagined.

The euill practiſes of the Ieſuits in Ireland.

The proceeding of iuſtice againſt Campion, [illegible]

Campion and his complices offenſe was ranke treaſon.

The ſum and drift of pope Pius his ſeditious bull.

Much miſchiefe preuented by the timelie attaching of Campion and his like.

And to the further reproofe and condemnation of the ſaid Campion and other the traitours now condemned, they being all ſeuerallie and earneſtlie required at the place of their arreignement to declare what they thought of the ſaid popes bull (by which hir maieſtie was in the popes intention depriued of the crowne) and of doctor Sanders, and of Briſtowes traitorous writings in maintenance of the ſaid bull, and allowance of the rebellion in the north, and of Sanders traitorous actions in Ireland; and being likewiſe demanded what they did thinke if the preſent pope ſhould publiſh the like bull: none of them all, but one onelie named Ruſhton, could be perſuaded by anie their anſwers to ſhew in anie part their miſlikings either of the former bull, or of doctor Sanders, or Briſtowes traitorous writings or actions, or of the pope that now is, if he ſhould now publiſh the like bull againſt hir maieſtie; ſo as they did apparantlie ſhew their traitorous harts ſtill fixed to perſiſt in their diueliſh minds againſt their naturall allegiance: whereof God giue all good ſubiects, being true Engliſhmen borne, grace to beware, and in no ſort to giue eare or ſuccour to ſuch pernicious traitors, howſoeuer they ſhall be couered with hypocriſie, & falſe and fained holines of Rome.

How the traitors ſtood opinioned to the ſaid factious bull, &c.

This aduertiſement read and heard, the time by pitifull delaies began to paſſe awaie, in ſomuch that the executioner was now to fall to his charge: whervpon Campion was exhorted to praie with the people in Engliſh; naie, to doo ſo he was deſired, howbeit he would not: but ſaid his Pater noſter in Latine, and deſired all thoſe of the houſehold of faith to ſaie one Credo for him. Manie indirect anſwers he made, as when he was mooued to aſke the quéene forgiueneſſe, and when the preacher requeſted him to ſhew ſome ſigne of a penitent ſinner, then ſhortlie he replied: You and I, we are not of one religion. After a few ſilent praiers to himſelfe, the cart was drawen awaie, & he committed to the merice of God. There he hanged till he was dead, when being cut downe, he was bowelled and quartered, according as it was appointed by iuſtice. Rafe Sherwin ſéemed a man of better iudgement, more learned, and more obedient; he ſaid the Lords praier in Engliſh, beléeuing in God that made him, in Chriſt his ſonne that ſaued him, and in the Holieghoſt that ſanctified him: and according to the ſaieng of S. Auguſtine, deſired Ieſus, that he would be to him Ieſus, as much to ſaie, as his ſauiour and redéemer. He likewiſe confeſſed himſelfe a catholike man and a préeſt, intending to die in that faith. But when the treaſons were mooued to him, he likewiſe did make deniall thereof. He aſked the quéenes maieſtie forgiueneſſe, and deſired that ſhe might long liue and reigne ouer vs. Then was read to him the booke of the aduertiſement, which before had béene read to Campion, and after a few praiers he likewiſe ended his life. Alexander Brian ſéemed more obſtinat and impious, vſing verie little ſigne of repentance and hartie humilitie: he vſed manie praiers to himſelfe, and ſpake verie little worthie the rehearſall. Iuſtice being executed on him, he and Sherwin were quartered, according as Campion had béene before them.

Rafe Sherwins behauiour at his death.

Alexander Brians demenour at his death.

¶ No ſooner had iuſtice giuen the blow of execution, and cut off the foreſaid offendors from the earth; but certeine enimies to the ſtate politike and eccleſiaſtike, greatlie fauouring them, and their cauſe, which they falſlie gaue out to be religion, diſperſed abroad their libels of moſt impudent deuiſe, tending to the iuſtifieng of the malefactors innocencie, to the heinous and vnrecompenſable defamation of the courſe of iuſtice and iudgement againſt them commenſed and finiſhed: in ſomuch that ſpeaking of the daie whereon they died, they bluſhed not to intitle them martyrs, ſaieng among other things not publiſhable, as in theſe few verſes extracted followeth:

Ex libello quodam famoſo.

Vna dies viuos pariter cæſóſque videbat,
In cœlum miſſos vidit & vna dies:
Aeterniſque breui gaudent pro morte coronis,
Hæc ſunt martyribus dona parata pijs.
Fœlix illa dies menſis fuit illa Decembris,
Martyrijs donans cœlica regna tribus:
Fœlix quæ ſanctum ſuſcepit terra cruorem,
*Quem cæcata odij fuderat ira * tui:*
Supremúmque manens fœlix conſtantia finem,
Atque in conſpectu mors pretioſa Dei, &c.

 Alludit ad Angliam.*

Thus ſlanderouſlie againſt the adminiſtration of iuſtice ſcattered theſe vipers brood their lieng reports, therein to the ſkies aduancing the children of iniquitie as ſpotleſſe; yea forging moſt monſtruous fables, put them in print; as though God and nature had ſuffered violence to their vnappeaſeable indignation, for that men of ſuch integritie forſooth and extraordinarilie ſanctified, ſuffered ſo ſhamefull a death: in ſomuch that it was bruted abroad not by men, but brute beaſts, that on the ſelfe ſame daie wheron Campion was executed, the riuer of Thams did neither eb nor flow, but ſtood ſtill. O miracle! Whether this were a lie or not, as all the world may ſweare it was no truth; this is certeine and vndoubted, that there was found a facultie about Campion a litle before his death, wherein authoritie was giuen him from the biſhop of Rome Gregorie the thirtéenth, to execute the ſentence of the bull publiſhed by Pius Quintus againſt all the quéens maieſties ſubiects as heretiks, &c: and yet this man forſooth (albeit notorious) died not for treaſon but for religion, as with fowle mouths they are not aſhamed to ſaie:

Relligio crimen non mala vita fuit.

Abr. Fl.
 Ex concione apud crucem Paulinam per D. Sellar 6. Feb. 1586.*

But of this matter inough, & now to the proceſſe of Engliſh accidents after this tragicall narration.]

When the quéene of England and the monſieur euen duke of Aniou vnderſtood by report made to hir maieſtie and his highneſſe by monſieur de Pruneaux (who had béene ſent ouer a litle before from the duke to the prince of Orange, and had proſecuted the treatie the former yeares as his ordinarie ambaſſador) what good will and great longing he had found in the prince of Orange, who was come into the Ile of Walkeren with a great number of gentlemen, and with the deputies of the ſtates, and of the chiefeſt of the beſt cities of the low countrie to receiue his highneſſe, and to doo him moſt humble ſeruice: and when they had alſo heard the ambaſſage of the lords of Dhain & Iunius, ſent from the lords of the ſtate to the duke, to ſhew vnto him the excéeding great deſire which all the people had to ſée his highnes, for the preſent ratifieng of the former couenants that had paſſed betwixt them: for accompliſhing whereof it was néedfull that he ſhould paſſe ouer with all ſpéed: whereby the ſame thing was confirmed which had béene declared oft afore by the lord of mount ſaint Aldegond, ordinarie ambaſſador to hir maieſtie and his highnes: vpon the intelligence of theſe things, it was reſolued by hir maieſtie & his highnes, that the monſieur ſhould depart. Wherevpon the quéene calling the lord Howard, commanded him (for the earle of Lincolne was then ſicke) to take vpon him the charge of the admerals ſhip, and to go to Rocheſter, and there to chooſe veſſels méet for tranſporting of the monſieur & his traine, & to furniſh them with men of war, mariners, and all manner of neceſſaries as well of war as of vittels. Which thing was doone with ſuch diligence and ſpéed, that the ſhips being readie with all things in leſſe than eight daies, ſailed out of the riuer of Rocheſter and the Thames, and were conueied to the downes néere to the towne of Sandwich, where the monſieur was to take ſhipping. And for ſo much as the monſieur came into England accompanied but with a few prin[illegible] and lords, & they alſo had left their traine in France, & ſome of the ſame lords were ſent backe againe afterward by his commandement and for his ſeruice; the quéene determined to giue him a companie & traine méet for his greatneſſe, taking his iournie about ſo great & noble exploit. And therfore (as agréeing with hir highneſſe hart) ſhe com[illegible] the earle of Leiceſter maſter of hir horſſes, [illegible] of Hunſdon gouernour of Berwike hir m[illegible] néere kinſman, ——— (cuius fuerat m[illegible]ulchra Reginæ genetrix Henrici [illegible] uxor)

and the lord Howard the vi[illegible]merall (of whom the firſt two were of hir priuie councell, and all thrée were knights of the order of the garter) to attend vpon him, and th[illegible] aſſemble as great a number of Engliſh lords and gentlemen as could be gotten in ſo litle time, to honour him withall: whereunto the ſaid [illegible]ied verie willinglie. And there went with [illegible] accompanie them, the lord Willoughbie, the lord Windſore, the lord Sheffield, the lord Howard, the lord Awdleie ſecond ſonne to the late duke of Norffolke: maſter Philip Sidneie nephue to the forenamed erle of Leiceſter, ſir George Careie, and maſter Iohn & Robert Careie all thrée ſonnes of the ſaid lord of Hunſdon; maſter William Howard brother of the ſaid lord Howard, ſir Thomas Sherleie, ſir Thomas Perot, ſir William Ruſſell, ſir William Drurie, & ſir George Bowſer knights, and a great number of gentlemen; namelie, maſter Henrie Windſore brother to the lord Windſore, maſter Iohn Borough brother to the lord Borough, maſter Walter Ralegh, maſter George Carew, maſter Edward Hobbie, maſter Francis Darcie, maſter Michaell Stanhoope, maſter William Knols maſter Francis Knolles, maſter George Digbie, maſter Thomas Vauaſor, maſter Anthonie Mildemaie, maſter Henrie Nowell, maſter Nicholas Gorges, maſter Michaell Harecourt, maſter Fulke Greuill: ſo as the whole traine that attended vpon the ſaid earle, was to the number of an hundred gentlemen, and more than three hundred ſeruingmen. The lord of Hunſdon had of gentlemen and others togither to the number of a hundred and fiftie: and the lord Howard had as manie; beſides manie more, whereof diuerſe were hir maieſties ſeruants. The queene determined to accompanie the monſieur to the ſea ſide, & yet neuertheleſſe commanded the ſaid lords to keepe their courſe, and to attend vpon his highneſſe to the ſaid place, with all maner of ſolemnities, interteinments, and feaſtings. He on the other ſide deſired and beſought hir maieſtie not to depart from London, as well for that the iournie would be painefull vnto hir; and for that he ſaw the weather faire and wind fauorable, and therefore was loth to looſe anie occaſion of performing his voiage with all ſpeed. But he could not preuaile.

Monſieur duke of Aniou departeth out of England.

 Nempe An[illegible] Henrici 8. ux. ſereniſſ. reginæ Eliſabethæ genetrix.*

The queenes maieſtie lodgeth at Rocheſter.

Wherevpon hir maieſtie tooke hir iournie with hir whole court, the firſt daie of Februarie, & lodged that night at Rocheſter. The next daie abiding ſtill at Rocheſter, hir maieſtie ſhewed him all hir great ſhips which were in that place, into moſt whereof his highneſſe and the prince and lords of his traine entered, not without great admiration of the French lords & gentlemen, who confeſſed that of good right the queene of England was reported to be ladie of the ſeas. Alſo he beheld how all thoſe ſhips were readie furniſhed and well appointed. And hir maieſtie told him that all thoſe veſſels & the furniture of them ſhould doo him ſeruice, when ſoeuer he would imploie them: for the which he moſt humblie thanked hir maieſtie, and ſo after all the great ordinance had beene ſhot off, they returned for that daie againe to Rocheſter. The third day they went to Sittingborne, where being both togither, the queene was ſerued after the Engliſh manner by the greateſt ladies of hir court, and the monſieur after the French manner by the gentlemen of his traine, which ladies and gentlemen dined afterwards togither. Then his highneſſe beſought hir maieſtie againe to go no further, declaring vnto hir that the faire weather paſſed awaie. But notwithſtanding his intreatance the queene went on ſtill to Canturburie. At which place, after one daies tarriance, when ſhe had openlie feaſted all the French nobilitie, either part tooke their leaue of other, not without great griefe and ſhew of verie great amitie, eſpeciallie betweene hir maieſtie and the monſieur. Which thing was perceiued alſo in the lords and gentlemen of both nations, & likewiſe in the ladies, to all whome it was like griefe to depart after they had beene [illegible] and had liued friendlie and brotherlie togither by the ſpace of three moneths, without anie change or alienation of good willes. But the honor which inforced the [illegible], aſſwaged his griefe, and made him to proceed on his iournie with the ſaid prince and lords of both nations.

The queenes maieſtie accompanied the monſieur to Canturburie where they & their traine parted.

The ſixt daie of the ſame moneth, whereas he was determined to haue taken ſhip, he was counſelled to lodge that night of Sandwich, bicauſe the wind was ſomewhat changed. Howbeit, ſome of the Engliſh gentlemen, namelie maſter Killegreie, maſter Diar and diuerſe others, to eſchew thronging at their imbarking went to Douer, and there taking ſhip the ſame night laie a while at anchor, and ſomwhat after midnight ſailed awaie with certeine other veſſels. The ſeuenth daie in the morning about nine of the clocke, his highneſſe tooke the ſea in three great ſhips of war. In the greateſt of them named the Diſcouerer, ſailed the monſieur himſelfe with the erle of Leiceſter, and the lord Howard the viceadmerall; in the ſecond called the Sentinell went the prince Dolphin; and in the third was the countie of Louall, and the lord of Hunſdon. Now as his highneſſe was yet at anchor, there came a poſt from a lord of England, who brought him word that the ſtates of the low countries were reuolted, and namelie the citie of Antwerpe, and therefore he praied him not to depart vntill he had more certeine newes. Notwithſtanding this, his highneſſe determined to depart, and ſo ſailed awaie with fifteene ſhips: and he had ſo faire weather (which continued euen vntill after his entering into Antwerpe, and his feaſting and ſolemne interteinement there) that the heauen, the winds, the ſea, and the earth ſeemed all to fauour his voiage, and to further the gladneſſe which the people ſhewed in receiuing him with ſo great good will.

The prince of Orange taketh order for the interteinment of the monſieur.

In the meane time the prince of Orange, ſeeing the time fit, departed from Middleborough, where he had taried the monſieurs comming ſix weekes and more, and came to Fluſhing to take order for all things that were requiſit for the honorable and commodious interteinement of ſo great a prince. At the which place, vnderſtanding by the letters of the ſaid lords ambaſſadours and others, that the monſieur was departed from London and come to Canturburie; and therefore thinking it would not be long yer he arriued there: he diſpatched monſieur Treſlon his viceadmerall of Zeland, with a litle pinnaſſe called the Chaſe, to go before to meet the monſieur: commanding him that as ſoone as he had diſcouered his fleet, he ſhould giue him a watchword thereof by the ſhot of two cannons. Monſieur Treſlon hauing about noonetide diſcouered the ſhips that were parted from Douer, and thinking that they had beene the great fleet, gaue his watchword, which was the cauſe that a certeine veſſell went forth to the ſea to meet his highneſſe; but anon after perceiuing his error, he returned to Fluſhing, where by and by the fleet of Douer arriued. Then monſieur Treſlon going forth, found the monſieur and the great fleet betweene Newport and Dunkirke: where after ſalutation giuen and taken on either ſide, the monſieur ſtanding vpon the hatches of his ſhip, eſpied his owne ſecretarie named Nephue ſtanding likewiſe vpon the hatches of the Chaſe; to whome he ſent his ſhipbote, commanding him to come aboord to him, which thing he did, and there aduertiſed the monſieur that as concerning the reuolting of the ſtates there was no ſuch matter, but that all things went verie well, & that his highneſſe was waited for with great longing. That daie, by reaſon the wind was turned northeaſt, they could go no further, but were faine to caſt anchor ouer againſt a place called Oſtend, where they paſſed that night, waiting for the tide the next morning. His ſhips were perceiued by them of Fluſhing, where after midnight arriued the lord of S. Aldegond, who aſſured the prince of Orange, that the next morning the monſieur would arriue there with the tide. Wherevpon the prince of Orange and the prince of Eſpinoie with a great number of gentlemen tooke the ſea the next morning: but bicauſe the tide was againſt them, and on the other part the monſieur hauing a ſide wind with him was conſtreined to haſt to the land. By meanes whereof the prince, being not able to come aboord to him with his ſhip, was faine to turne ſaile backe againe to Fluſhing, where the prince Dolphin had taken land alreadie & ſought euerie where for the prince his brother.

Nephue the monſieurs ſecretarie.

The lord of S. Aldegond, the prince of Orange and the prince of Eſpinoie, &c.

When

Embracing of the knee.

The mounſier landeth.

Luſtie diſcharging of guns on all ſides.

When they had imbraced and ſaluted one an other like brethren; the prince of Orange, perceiuing the monſieur to approch verie neere, tooke the water againe. But when he perceiued him to come downe into his bote to take land, he turned backe againe, and hied him ſo faſt that he tooke land before him, and there tarried his comming. As ſoone as he was arriued, while he was yet in his bote readie to come aland, the prince receiued him with great reuerence; and imbracing his highneſſe knee, becauſe he ſaw the weather was cold ſaid vnto him in few words, that he was verie glad to ſee that happie daie, which had beene ſo long expected, wherein he had the honor to behold his highneſſe, and to offer vnto him his moſt humble ſeruice, with goods and life, & all that he had beſides; hoping that by meanes of his highneſſe, that countrie hauing indured ſo great aduerſitie, ſhould now be fullie ſet at libertie. Whereunto the monſieur anſwered verie wiſelie and brieflie. And when he had imbraced him with ſuch honor as was due in reſpect of his age and doings: he came aland, and was brought by the prince to the palace of the citie: howbeit not without great difficultie, by reaſon of the great preaſe of men of war and other people peſtering one an other, the folke of that countrie thronging to ſee his highneſſe, and the Engliſhmen which as then were come downe thither in great numbers preaſing to know the prince of Orange. In the meane while the trumpets and drums ſounded with ſuch noiſe that the aire rang of it, and all the ordinance ſhot off, as well of the queenes ſhips as of the other ſhips, whereof the number was great which laie then in the rode, with ſo great roring and thundering, that they conueied the newes of his highneſſe happie arriuall in the low countrie to Calis, and to other places of France. They of Fluſhing ſhot two peales, with ſo great noiſe by reaſon of the great number of the peeces that are in the towne, that all the ground rang of it. The monſieur found in that place all ſorts of his officers; for his houſhold and his gard of Swiſſes and Frenchmen, departing from Calis and Bullongne foure daies afore, were come to Middleborough.

The monſieur verie ioifullie receiued.

Antwerpe reioiſeth at the monſieurs comming.

The magiſtrates of the citie waited for him at the gates of the citie, who told him by the mouth of their recorder, that they were verie glad of his comming, and thought themſelues happie to ſee him, in hope, that by his guiding and gouernement they ſhould ſee their countrie reſtored to tranquillitie, and ſet vp againe in hir former renowme. The ſtates of Brabant ſpeaking by the mouth of monſieur van Stralen Amptman of Antwerpe, after their welcomming of him, declared with what mind the noble and good cities of Brabant had expected him, beſeeching him moſt humblie to honor the countrie of Brabant with his preſence out of hand. Next then the deputies of the citie of Bruxelles (beſides the declaration which they made of their owne good will, and generallie of all the peoples of that countrie) declared alſo particularlie, with what great goodwill and affection his highneſſe had beene waited for in that citie, the cheefe ſeat of the lords of that countrie; and that after ſo manie miſcheefes which they had ſuffered for withſtanding the tyrannie of the Spaniards, next vnto God they had not anie hope, but in the comming of his highneſſe their prince and lord. Afterward they of Antwerpe were heard, who declared the affection of the people toward his highneſſe, their long longing for him, and the great deſire which they had to ſee their prince and ſoueraigne. The colonels and capteins of the towne ſpake afterward, and declared vnto him how carefullie and diligentlie they had kept the citie, in hope to put it ſhortlie into his hands, and reioiſing likewiſe at his comming.

English lords and their retinues.

Unto all theſe orations his highneſſe anſwered verie ſagelie and brieflie, as vnto all the reſidue, to the well liking and contentment of all that ſtood by. The prince of Orange tarried a while with the monſieur in the towne houſe of the citie: and then taking his leaue went to viſit the princes and lords of both the nations that came with him to ſee how they fared, and to take order that they ſhould want nothing, ſo far forth as the abilitie of the towne of Fluſhing (which is none of the greateſt) could extend, where ſuch prouiſion was made, that all were well lodged and ſerued, notwithſtanding that aboue fiue hundred men of the onelie Engliſh lords were come aland that daie. All that after noone was ſpent in feaſting, in making of bonefires, in fireworks, in ſounding of trumpets, and in all maner of tokens of ioie, which all men vttered vniuerſallie for the comming of ſo great a prince. Alſo the foure members of Flanders, which came by the counſell of the prince of Orange, waited to preſent themſelues vnto him at Middleborough.

Three waies to Middleborough.

The monſieur is met going to Middleborough.

The prince of Orange, perceuing that the monſieur was minded to go the next daie to Middleborough, told him that there were three waies, the one about the caſtell of Ramekins, to enter in at the great chanell of Middleborough by the bout of the foreland; an other by the little chanell through the countrie; and that he had kept ſhips in a readineſſe to go the outer waie, and a great ſort of botes to go the inner waie, becauſe his highneſſe could not iorneie either by coch or on horſſebacke by reaſon of the winter, and there was but onelie one cauſeie whereby folke trauelled ordinarilie on foot. The monſieur beholding the fitneſſe of the time, for indeed it was verie faire weather, and underſtanding that the waie was not paſt a good French league in length, undertooke to go it on foot, and ſo did all the reſt of the princes, lords, and gentlemen, as well of the ſame countrie, as of France and England. A great ſort of the monſieurs houſe, which were lodged alredie at Middleborough, came to meet him, ſpeciallie his gard of Frenchmen and Swiſſers. A good waie out of the towne the magiſtrate of Middleborough came to meet him, as it were, about a third part of the waie, and there making an oration to him, told him of the great and long deſire which all the people had of his comming, and that the people of Middleborough for their owne part thought themſelues greatlie honored, in that he had vouchſafed to come to their citie, offering all dutifulneſſe vnto him. His gard alſo met him in the ſame place, & [illegible] began the Swiſſers to march on in their order [illegible] ſtriking vp their drums after their manner. Moreouer, ſix companies of the citizens well armed and well araied ſtood imbattelled without the towne, who kept their place till the monſieur was paſt, and then they followed after leiſurelie behind.

The deputies of the ſtates of the earledome of Zeland.

The monſieur would do as the companie did.

The deputies of the ſtates of the earledome of Zeland waited his comming at the towne gate; who hauing de[illegible] gladneſſe which they conceiued reioiſ[illegible] at the happie ſucceſe which his highnes had h[illegible]ing the peace in France, and in reſcuing [illegible]ie of Cambraie by his armie and in his owne perſon, and in his paſſing into England, which they knew he had taken vpon him for none other cauſe than for the furtherance of the affaires of thoſe countries; and finallie for that hauing put his perſon in danger of that paſſage, he was now happilie arriued in Zeland, moſt humblie thanking his highneſſe, and declaring what hope they had conceiued of his preſence, and therewithall offering right humblie whatſoeuer their dutie required. At the entrie of the gate one brought him a courſer of Naples, but he determined with himſelfe (ſeeing that the princes and lords had not their horſſes there) to go through with his iornie on foot, and ſo entred into the citie of Middleborough in this order. Firſt went the magiſtrates of the citie with their vnder officers and miniſters of iuſtice. Next them the deputies of the ſtates of Zeland. After them followed diuerſe gentlemen of all the thrée nations, with the deputies of the cities of Brabant, and of the foure members of Flanders. Then marched the Swiſſers after their accuſtomed faſhion; in whoſe traine were a great ſort of noblemen and alſo gentlemen, of whome the moſt part were Engliſhmen of the retinue of the thrée lords ſent thither by the quéene. Behind them inſued as it were in one troope togither, the prince Dolphin, the earle of Leiceſter, the prince of Eſpinoie, the countie de Lauall, the lord of Hunſdon, the lord Howard, and the reſt of the lords. Then came the monſieur himſelfe, hauing on his left hand ſomewhat more than halfe a paſe beneath him, the prince of Orange, of whome he alwaies aſked ſome queſtion. After him followed his gard of Frenchmen, and after them the gard of the prince of Orange; and laſt of all the ſix enſigns that ſtood in battell raie without the citie, and ten others which had marſhalled the ſtréets vnto the market place, where all the reſt of the citizens were imbattelled. Throughout all the ſtréets from the gate to the monſieurs lodging, there were railes, and at euerie tenth paſe on either ſide were burning creſſets. And ſo his highneſſe and all the nobilitie which accompanied him, paſſed on, maruelled to ſée ſo goodlie a citie in ſo little an Ile, and ſo néere to thrée other good towns, not diſtant one from another aboue one league. But moſt of all they wondered at the beautie of the marketſted, and of the common hall of the citie. His highnes lodging was verie well and richlie hanged and furniſhed, conſidering the ſmall reſpit that the inhabitants had, ſo as he was verie well and commodiouſlie lodged, both he and all the princes, noblemen, and gentlemen of all nations that attended vpon him. That euening was paſſed in feaſting, in making of bonfires in the ſtréets, in artificiall fireworks vpon the towers and ſteeples, and in ſounding of trumpets. The next morning the twelue deputies of the foure members of Flanders ſpeaking to his highneſſe by the mouth of monſieur Taiard the recorder of Gant, declared at large the great goodwill of all the people of Flanders towards him, and that like as they had béene of the firſt that had ſent vnto him, ſo they hoped to be of the firſt that ſhould yéeld all humble ſeruice and ſubiection vnto him. Whereunto his highneſſe anſwered verie diſcréetlie, as his cuſtome was. He paſſed the reſt of the time in plaieng at tennis with the prince of Orange, and after with other lords.

The earle of Leiceſter and other Engliſh lords.

Burning creſſets on ech ſide.

The [illegible] Taiard recorder of Gant.

The thirtéenth daie he had a ſolemne feaſt made him in the townehall, where his highneſſe commanded the tables to be prepared of purpoſe, that he might haue the companie of the prince Dolphin, the prince of Orange, the earle of Leiceſter, the prince of Eſpinoie, the countie de Lauall, the lord of Hunſdon, and the lord Howard. For the lords of England were highlie regarded & honored [illegible], both in reſpect of hir maieſtie which ſent the[illegible] alſo for the worthines of their perſons. The feaſt [illegible] excellentlie well furniſhed of all things, & ſpeciallie of tapiſtrie worke & other deuiſes of ſugar; inſomuch that both the Frenchmen and Engliſhmen confeſſed, that they had not béene wont to ſée ſuch manner of ſeruices in their countries. The fourtéenth daie the prince of Orange would néeds go ſée the putting of the ſhips in a readineſſe, which ſhould carrie the monſieur and his traine, which were in number foure and fiftie, and therefore he would haue gone to the foreland of Middleborough. Whereof the monſieur hearing would néeds go with him. On thurſdaie the fiftéenth of that moneth, his highneſſe went to ſée the towne of Ermwiden, which is about halfe a league from Middleborough. And vnderſtanding that the Engliſh lords were gone to ſée the towne of Vere, (called by ſtrangers Camfer by reſon of the paſſage that was ſometime in the towne of Campe which is now drowned) he alſo tooke bote and went thither, where all the companie was verie well receiued by the inhabitants, notwithſtanding that they were taken vnprouided. The ſixtéenth daie his highneſſe was determined to haue taken ſhip, but there aroſe ſo great a ſtorme, that the mariners councelled him to forbeare the ſea for that daie: by reaſon whereof his imbarking was deferred till the next morrow, at which time his highneſſe with all his traine ſailed awaie. He himſelfe was caried in a ſhip painted all ouer with his owne colours beſet with a number of flags and penſils of the armes of Aniou. The reſidue had their accuſtomed flags ſo greatlie feared of the Spaniards, belaied with the colours of the prince of Orange. This fléet came that daie againſt Beerland in the Ile of ſouth Beueland, where they caſt anchor and ſpent that night there. The next daie being arriued luckilie at Liſlo, after manie ſhot of ordinance from the fort and from the ſhips of warre which accompanied his highneſſe, they did caſt anchor againe. He himſelfe went aland, and laie that night in the capteins lodging longing for the morning. This fort of Liſlo is builded a thrée leagues beneath Antwerpe vpon the point of a dike or cauſeie in the pariſh of Liſlo. The place is ſo commodious, that with a muſket a man may eaſilie ſhoot from the one banke of the riuer Skeld to the other; and by reaſon that the ſtreame of the riuer and the tide of the ſea, which paſſeth that waie twiſe a daie, doo make it crooked, that place being occupied by the enimie, might greatlie hinder and annoie the ſailing thereof. And therefore the citizens of Antwerpe following the aduiſe and platforme laid forth by the prince of Orange, beſtowed great coſt in fortifieng that place, which hath a great tower with great bulworks rampires, and ditches, and is ſo well ſtrengthned and flanked to the purpoſe, and hath the water ſo at commandement, that as now it is not to be wone by anie force. The next daie being mondaie, the ninetéenth daie of Februarie, his highneſſe departed thenſe to make his entrie into the renowmed citie of Antwerpe.

A ſolemne feaſt made in the townehall.

The monſieur goeth to ſée the towne of Ermwiden.

The monſieurs ſhips painted with his owne colours.

The fort of Liſlo.

The monſieur prepareth to make his entrie into Antwerpe.

The roiall interteinement of the right high and mightie prince, Francis the French kings onelie brother, by the grace of God duke of Brabant, Aniou, Alanſon, Berrie, &c, into the citie of Antwerpe.

IN all great and ſtatelie ſhewes and aſſemblies, they that are the authors and ſetters forth of them, indeuour to beautifie and commend as much as they can the things which they offer to the ſight of thoſe whome they intend to honour, and of thoſe which reſort thither from ſtrange places, to delight themſelues with the beholding of them. The ancient hiſtoriographers deſcribe vnto vs manie great triumphes, and ſtatelie interteinements of emperours, kings, and great capteins, and they forget not to put into their writings the great coſtlineſſe and charges, and whatſoeuer elſe was ſet forth to the ſhew, to content the eies of the beholders. And albeit that neither gold, ſiluer, pretious ſtones, tapiſtrie, cloth of ſilke, fine linnen, diuerſities of veſſels, nor varietie of paintings were ſpared, but all ſuch things haue inriched thoſe ſhewes: yet notwithſtanding, The fineſt ſhew that can be made what it is.

The triumphs of the Romans excelled all their other ſhewes.

Other ſhews of the Romãs verie gallant.

A compariſon betwéene the pleaſures of the bodie and delights of the mind.

ding, there is not anie thing that hath yéelded greater grace, beautie, and contentment to ſuch aſſemblies, than the multitude and brightneſſe of armorie and of things perteining to martiall affaires, as engines, artillerie, and ſhewes of cities and caſtels beaten downe or taken by force from the enimies. And therefore in the Romane empire (which excelled all the other not onlie in conqueſts, martiall diſcipline, and politike order of gouernment, but alſo in ſumptuouſnes and roialtie) although infinit numbers of publike games and exerciſes were exhibited by them being the greateſt lords of the world, who not onelie ſpared not anie thing that was in their owne power, but alſo made the cities and countries, which were anie waie bound vnto them, to ſend vnto them whatſoeuer rare and exquiſit things they could come by, to ſerue their turnes in the ſhewes which they exhibited to the people: yet notwithſtanding their triumphes haue ſo borne the bell aboue all the reſt, that the word triumphing which commeth thereof, hath béene applied to all high, great, and ſtatelie doings. Not that in their other ſhewes anie thing was ſpared, which might content the eies euen of couetous folke, or ſatiſfie the bloudthirſtie harts of ſuch as tooke no pleaſure but to behold the ſheading of bloud, yea the oftentimes of mans bloud before their eies: but in their triumphings nothing was ſo glorious as the armorie and perſonages of the great capteines that had béene conquerors, which thing contented the beholders far more without all compariſon. And therefore when men intend to betoken the excéeding huge greatneſſe of Rome, they terme it the triumphant Rome, which importeth as much as the rich, wealthie, and victorious Rome, repleniſhed with great numbers of noble capteines, and valiant ſouldiors. And this terme is come of the great numbers of triumphs, which were ſéene there in the times of the Scipios, Paules, Claudies, Metelles, Pompeis, Ceſars, and others. True it is that the other ſhewes alſo were verie glorious and beautifull to behold, and did (I wote not how) tickle the harts of ſuch as were fed with the beholding of their riches and of the infinite numbers of lions, tigres, panthers, beares, and ſwordplaiers incountring one another to the death: but yet the beholding of a goodlie companie of men armed in goodlie armour, marching in good order (beſides the contenting of the ſight, which is far better than to ſée riches) dooth alſo wonderfullie rauiſh mens minds, and driue the beholder into an aſtoniſhment, ſetting him after a ſort beſides himſelfe; and yet neuertheleſſe filling him with a ioy and contentation ſurmounting all others. For as in the pleaſures of the bodie, thoſe ſéeme greateſt which doo moſt alter the ſenſes with their pleaſantnes: ſo fares it alſo with the delights of the mind, which become ſo much the greater, when admiration being matched with them, dooth alſo moreouer rauiſh the vnderſtanding, and ſet a man as it were out of his wits. And therefore when great perſonages (who can better iudge of matters than plaine ſimple folke can) doo make diſcourſe of things that are beautifull and deſireable to behold: they ſpeake of gold, ſiluer, pretious ſtones, pictures, veſſels, tablets, and diuers other exquiſit iewels: but yet they paſſe ouer thoſe things & ſtand not vpon them. But when they come to talke of faire armour, good horſſes, and ſuch other things as belong to knighthood and chiualrie: then they make ſuch tariance vpon them, as they hold it for a thing fullie agréed vpon & granted, that in beautie and glorie nothing is comparable to a goodlie armie.

A queſtiō vndecided touching gallant and glorious ſhewes.

The reſpit that Antwerp had to prouide for this triumphant ſhew.

Onelie this matter remaineth ſtill in queſtion vndecided; namelie, whether is the pleaſanter ſight, to ſée thrée or foure great battels of footmen well appointed in bright armour, well flanked with ſmall ſhot, and with their great ordinance before them: or to ſée as manie ſquadrons of horſſemen, or elſe two or thrée hundred ſhips furniſhed with their flags and banners, and ranged in order as if they were readie to giue battell. But as for the reſt of all goodlie things, all men are fullie agréed that they come nothing néere to anie of thoſe thrée, and much leſſe doo them all thrée togither, if a man might behold them all at once: as it is reported that at one inſtant a man might haue ſéene the great armie of Xerres both footmen and horſſemen ranged in battell raie: and alſo the two fléets of the Perſians and of the Gréekes fighting vpon the ſea by Salamine, where by the wiſedome and valiantneſſe of Themiſtocles, the Gréekes got that famous victorie of the Perſians. In mine opinion that is the cauſe why the glad receiuing and ioifull entering of Francis duke of Brabant into the citie of Antwerpe ſéemed ſo goodlie and roiall to all ſuch as ſaw it: in ſomuch that there hath not béene anie of them which hath not confeſſed that he neuer ſaw the like. And yet were there verie manie preſent at it, as well of the ſame countrie as of ſtrangers, which haue ſéene manie ſtatelie and roiall méetings, both in the ſame citie and in other cities of the low countries, and alſo in other great cities of other countries, as Paris, London, Rone, and Lions: and yet neuertheles the common voice is, that this laſt hath paſſed all the reſt. And trulie the citie had no more but ſix daies reſpit to prepare for it, as I ſaid before: in ſomuch that they could not put to making anie worke of ſilke, nor of gold and ſiluer beaten or wouen, nor anie imbroderie: no nor in ſo ſhort time make anie meane apparell new, nor anie rare coſtlineſſe of imageries, pillers, triumphall arches, or other pageants: but were conſtreined to make a ſhift with ſuch things as they had in a readineſſe aforehand of their owne ſtore.

Paris for multitude of people paſſeth.

Monſieur of Brabant his attire and habit.

In other interteinments there haue in déed béene ſéene great plentie of riches and roialties in attires of kings and quéenes, princes and princeſſes, lords and ladies, citizens and their wiues; but in this interteinment no ſuch were ſéene: howbeit there was not anie groſeneſſe, nor ought that might not well beſéeme the neatneſſe and fineneſſe of that people, although it came nothing neere the ſumptuouſneſſe of other interteinements. As touching triumphall arches, chariots, portraitures, and ſuch other ſhewes; although there were manie wittie inuentions and agreeable to the time: yet haue men ſéene of them in other places, which might match theſe. And as touching the number of their people, although it was great: yet it is well knowen that Paris excéedeth them in that behalfe. But the onlie reaſon of this contentment commeth chéeflie of the great number of people in armour, being not fewer than twentie thouſand, in ſo good and ſo faire armour: and of their order and obedience, and of the ſmall noiſe which all that huge multitude made: in ſomuch that if it had not béene for the thundering of the canons, and the ſounding of trumpets, clarions, halboies, and other inſtruments, there was no more noiſe than is among a councell of graue men. That then was in mine opinion the onlie verie cauſe, which was greatlie furthered by their beholding of the monſieur of Brabant, who repreſenting the ſtatelineſſe of old time, was clothed in a large mantell, with the bonnet of his dukedome vpon his head: ſo that among that great number of people (which were ſo well armed, that thrée of the beſt cities in chriſtendome could not ſhew ſo manie faire armors of their owne) his highneſſe reſembled a pretious ſtone or iewell ſet in fine gold. And bicauſe that they which were the beholders thereof (for they could not be euerie where, The cauſe why this report was publiſhed in print.

nor ſée euerie thing) will be verie glad to vnderſtand of the things that ſo eſcaped them, and delight their minds now with the remembrance of the things which they ſaw before, as they delighted their eies and minds with the beholding of them that daie: and ſtrange nations, to whom the fame of that ſo renowmed daies worke is come, will take pleaſure to vnderſtand the ſame, whereof they could not be beholders. Therefore is this booke ſet forth, for the ſatiſfiing of all men, and alſo to make it knowen to a number of men (who partlie for enimitie, partlie for enuie, and partlie for other ſurmiſes and miſtruſts will not beléeue it) with what mind and affection the prince of Orange, and the other lords and noblemen of Brabant, the good cities, and the ſmall townes, and namelie the moſt renowmed citie of Antwerp, haue receiued their new prince and ſoueraigne lord.

The monſieur ſaileth toward Antwerpe.

The monſieur landeth at a village in Brabant.

The ninetéenth daie of the foreſaid moneth in the forenoone, the monſieur the duke of Anion departed from Liſlo and ſailed towards Antwerpe, hauing in his companie but twentie ſhips, for the reſt had gotten to Antwerpe afore, as well to put themſelues in a readineſſe as for other affaires. And he came about eight of the clocke nigh to the new towne, and paſſing along by the townes ſide, left the foreland of Flanders on his right hand and the towne on his left, and paſſed beyond all the towne and the place where the caſtell was. By the waie he heard all the canons ſhot off from that part of the towne which faceth the riuer, & from a great number of ſhips which rode at anchor there: and he ſaw all the wharfes furniſhed with men of warre of the citie, well armed, who welcommed him with their ſhot, and were anſwered againe by the ſhips of warre that accompanied him, conducted by monſieur de Treſlon and the viceadmerals, and diuerſe capteins of Fluſhing. And ſo the firſt foot that he did ſet on land in Brabant, was at a village called Kiell, which is at the canon wharfe at Antwerpe. The ſtates of Brabant, the magiſtrates of the citie, and diuers other ſtates, comming in like order on horſſebacke to the ſame place with their trumpets, ſergeants and heralds, apparelled in cotes of the armes of Lothier, Brabant, and Limborough, alighted there, and waited on foot at the wharfe to receiue his highneſſe, and to ſhew him the good will and affection of the ſtates and people. But the preaſe of people was ſo great, which reſorted thither to ſée the prince, whome they looked for to be their duke: and againe there were ſo manie impediments in his landing; that it was found better for them by the aduiſe of the prince of Orange to returne backe, and to tarie for his highneſſe vpon a theater which was prepared for him.

A theater erected, for the monſieur to ſhew himſelfe vnto the people.

This theater was ſet vp towards a corner of the caſtell, and opened towards the citie, ſo as his highneſſe being there, might at one time view both the citie and the caſtell, and behold the counterſcarffes: the déepe ditches full of faire water cléere to the verie bottome of the chanell, incloſed on either ſide with hewne ſtone: the great and faire buildings, the goodlie walles, beautifull to looke on and verie thicke: and the broad rampires garniſhed with trées planted by hand, that it reſembled a little foreſt. The monſieur was brought vp to this theater accompanied with the prince Dolphin the onelie ſonne of the duke of Montpanuſer: the earle of Leceiſter, and other Engliſh lords repreſenting the quéene of England: the princes of Orange and Eſpinoie, the countie de Lauall, the other Engliſh lords, the countie de Chateaurour, and a great ſort of the barons, lords and gentlemen, beſides the chiefe magiſtrats and maiſters of the companies of the citie of Antwerpe.

Prince Dolphin, the earle of Leceiſter, &c.

Kiſſing the monſieurs hand.

A chaire of eſtate.

The lords of the ſtate of Brabant waiting vpon the theater, came dutifullie downe to go and méet his highneſſe: which thing he perceiuing, did ſtand ſtill. Then the prince of Orange ſtepped forth to take his place among the ſtates, as one of the chiefe lords and barons of the duchie of Brabant. As ſoone as they had ſaluted his highneſſe, and with great humbleneſſe kiſſed his hand, they mounted vp the ſteps againe with him, after whome followed the princes and lords of France and of England: and when they were come vp aboue, they ranged themſelues on either ſide. There was ſet for the monſieur a chaire couered with cloth of gold, wherein he ſat him downe. And vpon the theater there was likewiſe a trauerſe of cloth of gold, and all the theater was couered with tapiſtrie. On the front of the theater on the higheſt part thereof were the armes of the marqueſhip of the holie empire: and a little beneath them on the right hand did ſtand the armes of Brabant with a wreath of fruits: and on the left hand ſtood the armes of the citie of Antwerpe. Alſo there were ſet vp two banners of ſilke azured with the armes of Anion, & in one partition were written theſe ſame verſes:

Banners with the armes of Anion.

O noble prince, whoſe footſteps faith and gentleneſſe preſerue:
Receiue thou here the honour which thy vertue dooth deſerue.
That theſe low countries maie at length take breath by meanes of thee,
And thou a father to vs all in name and dooings bee.

The ſumme of monſieur de Heſſeiles oration to the monſieur.

After that euerie man had taken his place, and ſilence was made, the ſtates of Brabant began their oration by the mouth of monſieur de Heſſeiles doctor of both the lawes, ſecretarie to the ſaid eſtates, and one of their councell. The ſumme whereof was, that the barons, noblemen, & deputies of the chiefe cities, and of the other good townes, repreſenting the ſtates of the duchie and countrie of Brabant, hauing now the good hap to ſée among them and to behold face to face the prince, in whome next vnto God they had wholie ſet the hope of their deliuerance, and of the eſtabliſhing of their ancient reſt and libertie, did highlie thanke the almightie Lord, which had ſhewed them that fauour: taking it for an aſſured warrant, that he of his infinite goodneſſe and prouidence, had not forgotten nor forſaken their iuſt quarrell: but had choſen his highneſſe to be the defender of his people and the adminiſtrer of his iuſtice: to the end that to Gods glorie, and to his owne honour and renowme, the ſtormes of all troubles, & of all other things that annoied their eſtate, might by the beames of his princelie maieſtie, wiſedome, and proweſſe be chaſed awaie; and the brightneſſe of their former proſperitie heretofore knowne to all nations, be made to ſpring vp & ſhine forth againe. In reſpect whereof they gaue his highneſſe moſt humble thanks for the ſingular loue and good will, which he of his owne onelie motion and princelie diſpoſition had vouchſafed to continue towards them vnto that inſtant, notwithſtanding all the croſſe dealings and practiſes that cunning heads could ſkill to put forth to the hinderance of their affaires, forſomuch as they were not ignorant that for their calamities and miſeries ſakes, nothing could haue fallen in, which could haue made more to the fauour and furtherance of their caſe. Which thing they had eſtéemed and would eſtéeme for euer, as a péereleſſe preſident of his incomparable ſtaiednes and rare conſtancie: for the which, and for the great number of his other benefits and gratious dealings towards them, they were & euer ſhould be bound to acknowledge themſelues indebted to his highneſſe with all faithfull obedience, and were readie that daie (by Gods grace) to ſubmit themſelues to him, as his humble vaſſals and ſubiects. And although they doubted not but that his highneſſe did well vnderſtand, and was fullie ſatiſfied, not onelie of the generall cauſes which had vniuerſallie mooued the ſtates of the prouinces of the low countries togither, to ſue to him for ſuccour, and to put themſelues into his hands: but alſo of the particular cauſes, which the ſtates of that duchie and countrie of Brabant had to renounce their obedience to the king of Spaine: yet notwithſtanding, to the intent to put his highneſſe in remembrance thereof, and to confirme that ſacred reſolution and high enterpriſe of his, builded therevpon; and moreouer to yéeld ſome reaſon of all their dooings to the princes and noblemen, and vnto the reſt of that whole companie, who for the honour of his highneſſe were come thither of courteſie, to further the ſolemnitie of his interteinment: to the intent that at this his repaire thither (which alwaies was called ioifull) they might vtter the more good will and gladneſſe of heart; they would ſaie no more but this, that as long as the dukes of Brabant (ſpeciallie ſince the falling of that duchie into the hands of the dukes of Burgognie, and other the famous anceſtors of his highneſſe) gaue themſelues vnto the gouerning of their ſubiects by themſelues, thereby making it to appéere that they loued them, and were not careleſſe of them; they reaped ſo great commodities and notable ſeruices at their hands, that their names and puiſſances became oftentimes renowmed, yea and ſometimes dreadfull to the greateſt monarchs, kings, and common-wealths of chriſtendome, whereof their warres and conqueſts made proofe: howbeit that of thoſe things, as of matters familiarlie knowne by the hiſtories, it was not requiſit to make diſcourſe in that place and time, which were appointed to greater matters. But after that their dukes and princes either by other allurements, or being withheld in their other countrie and ſeigniories, began to leaue them for a time, and afterward at length to forget them, abandoning them to the pleaſure and will, and ſometimes alſo to the luſt and couetouſneſſe of their vnder officers, whereof the king of Spaine had laſtlie finiſhed and perfected vp the worke, leauing them diſdainefullie as huſbandleſſe and fatherleſſe, vtterlie deſtitute of his preſence by the ſpace of twentie yeares; it came to paſſe, that hauing altered & changed almoſt all the whole ſtate of the countrie, and committed the offices to ſuch as by the lawes and priuileges of the countrie were not capable of them; or rather to ſuch as would giue moſt for them, and yet the vnſatiable couetouſneſſe, malice, and excéeding tyrannicall lordlineſſe of the Spaniards being not contented therewith: in the end, when they had abuſed the whole common-wealth after their owne luſt, they grew into ſo great pride, that they fell to ſnatching of the priuat goods and ſubſtance of the inhabitants, to liuing vpon the labour and ſweat of the poore; yea and to rauiſhing the chaſtitie of mens wiues and daughters: and (to fill vp the meaſure of all abhomination and crueltie) they fell to taking awaie the liues, & to ſucking the bloud of thoſe which ſought by all meanes to pleaſe them. Wherevpon in the end the great and righteous God (who hath a care of his ſeruants) being offended thereat, made that people (who had aforetimes béene of great valour) to call to mind their former ſtate and libertie: and gaue them both will and courage to mainteine the ſame, in ſuch ſort as they had receiued from their forefathers. Which thing they ſaid could not be better doone than by the election which the ſaid ſtates of Brabant, vnited with the other prouinces, had made of his highneſſe perſon to be their prince and lord, of purpoſe to bring all things backe to their former order; hauing firſt ſought (howbeit in vaine) for all remedies of their miſchiefes, and of the diſcouerers of the eſtate, from the cauſes and welſprings thereof. Declaring that the dukes in old time had béene of great valour, proweſſe, and power; and had made manie renowmed voiages and exploits of warre, and that amongeſt others, they had choſen a duke of Aniou heretofore, who had béene equall with the reſt in chiualrie & feats of armes, as their conqueſts and dominions witneſſed: that they had had their princes gentle, mild, gratious, familiar, and fauourable to their ſubiects: and that his highneſſe had in that behalfe alreadie giuen ſuch proofes of his gentleneſſe, truth, and ſoundneſſe, that to their ſéeming, ſome ancient duke of Burgognie was raiſed vp againe vnto them. Inſomuch that in his onelie highneſſe, they firmelie beleued themſelues to haue recouered whatſoeuer good renowme the duks of Brabant, Aniou and Burgognie could haue left vnto them. Wherefore, inſomuch as there remained no more, but to procéed in the performance of the chiefe worke, which it had pleaſed the ſoueraigne God to put into the hands of his highneſſe, and of the ſaid ſtates to performe that daie: they on their part were readie and reſolute to doo him the homage, fealtie, dutie, and obedience, which loiall ſubiects and good vaſſals ought to doo to their rightfull princes: of which ſort they truſted in God without doubting, that his highneſſe was, & that he would promiſe by ſolemne oth vnto God ſo to continue.

The ſtates thankefulnes ſignified.

They acknowledged themſelues indebted to the monſieur.

The ſecretarie vnto the ſtates commeth to the point of the matter.

The king of Spaines officers full of tyrannicall lordlines and villanie.

The cauſe why the ſtates of Brabant made the monſieur their prince & lord.

The ſtates loialtie and fealtie ſignified by their ſecretarie.

Herevnto his highneſſe anſwered in effect, that intending not to hold the ſtates with long talke, but onelie to be mindfull of the honor and good will which they had vouchſafed to yéeld to him, in that among ſo manie other great princes, they had choſen him out to deliuer them from the oppreſſion and tyrannie of the Spaniards, and to rule them according to their cuſtomes, lawes, and priuileges: he thanked them hartilie for it, aſſuring them that the iuſtneſſe and equitie of their caſe, their honourable dealings in his behalfe, and the loue which they had ſhewed him, had made him to reſolue with himſelfe to take vpon him their protection, and the reeſtabliſhing of their ancient libertie, and to hazard therein whatſoeuer abilitie God had put into his hands, and whatſoeuer elſe it ſhould pleaſe the king his lord and brother, and the quéene of England, of their fauour to beſtow vpon him; yea euen to the ſhedding of his owne blood and the ſpending of his life.

The monſieurs anſwer to the foreſaid oration.

The monſieurs promiſe euen to the ſhedding of his blood.

This doone the foreſaid monſieur Heſſels told his highneſſe, how it was the cuſtome there, to proclame openlie before the people in the Dutch toong the points and articles of the ioifull entrance, which the dukes of Brabant are bound to promiſe and ſweare at their admiſſion. Herevpon, when as one held the ſaid articles tranſlated into French, readie to rehearſe them point by point after the proclaming of them in Dutch, forſomuch as the daie was farre ſpent, and communication had béene had thereof alreadie, the monſieur to win time thought it expedient, by the aduiſe of the prince of Orange, that they ſhould be read but onlie in Dutch. Which thing was doone by the ſaid monſieur Heſſels, with a new preface added to the articles, conteining bréeflie the reaſons and cauſes of that dealing. After the reading of the ſaid articles, it was demanded of his highnes whether he liked of them, and whether he were contented to be ſworne to them, or whether it were his pleaſure to be further ſatiſfied of them? Wherevpon he ſaid to the prince of Orange, that forſomuch as he had ſéene the articles, and conferred of them with him as they came by ſhip out of Zeland, he held himſelfe well ſatiſfied with them, and was well contented to ſweare vnto them. Which ſpéech of his was forthwith proclamed, and with further declaration, that for their better contentation his highneſſe was deſirous to haue them all knowne, that although the ſaid articles were read but onelie in Dutch, yet would he of his owne good mind, with aduiſed deliberation and certeine knowledge be ſworne vnto them.

The monſieur is content to ſweare to the articles agréed vpon.

Two oths which dukes of Brabant were accuſtomed to take.

Then did the ſaid monſieur Heſſels recite vnto the people in the Dutch toong, the firſt oth which the dukes of Brabant were of old time accuſtomed and bound to take for the obſeruing of the ſaid articles. Which doone, deliuering the booke wherein it was conteined to meſſier Thierreie de Leiſfield chancellor of Brabant, he read the ſame oth againe openlie in French, & the monſieur ſpake it after him word for word. Then the monſieur Heſſels taking the booke againe, told the people that the dukes of Brabant made an other ſecond oth to the barons, noblemen, cities, boroughs, & all the inhabitants & ſubiects of the countrie, to be to them a good & iuſt prince, and not to deale with them after his owne will, nor by waie of rigor, but by law and iuſtice, & according to their priuileges. Which oth was likewiſe rehearſed in the Dutch toong, & the booke deliuered againe to the ſaid chancellor, and the monſieur repeated the oth after him as he had doone the firſt. Then were the mantle and bonnet of the dutchie brought vnto him, which were crimoſin veluet; the mantle was trailed on the ground, and both of them were furred with powdered ermine turned vp verie brode. The prince of Orange told his highneſſe, that it behooued him to be apparelled in thoſe robes. And when he aſked whether he muſt weare them into the citie? It was anſwered, yea: and that it was the ſolemne attire of the princes and dukes of Brabant of old time. Wherevnto when his highneſſe had agréed, the prince did firſt put vpon him the ſaid mantle, and faſtening the button thereof, ſaid theſe words; My lord, you muſt kéepe this button faſt cloſed, that no man may pull your mantle from you. And then he ſet the bonnet vpon his head, and ſaid vnto him: Sir I praie God you may well kéepe this attire, for now you may well aſſure your ſelfe that you be duke of Brabant.

The mantle and bonnet of the dutchie of Brabant.

The monſieur created duke of Brabant.

Then the ſaid Heſſels told him how the cuſtome requ[illegible]ed that the ſtates ſhould preſentlie be ſworne t[illegible] againe to yéeld him fealtie. Wherevpon he vtte[illegible]o the people the forme of the oth; and then the ſaid chancellor required it of the barons, noblemen, and deputies, and they pronounced it after him according to the maner of the former othes, reuerentlie dooing a[illegible] their homage, and promiſing fealtie and obedi[illegible]. After the taking of the othes on both ſides, as [illegible]ell by the monſieur as by the ſtates of Brabant, while his highneſſe was yet ſtill in his robes of eſ[illegible] the magiſtrates of Antwerpe commanded thei[illegible]order and councellor maiſter Vanderwerke to com[illegible] vp vpon the ſtage, to make him an offer of the marqueſſhip of the ſacred empire, in the name of the citie of Antwerpe, which thing he did as followeth. Moſt gratious lord and prince, the markegraue, ampt ma[illegible] boroughmaſters, and ſkepons, the treaſurors, [illegible] receiuers the chiefe burgeſſes, and quartermaiſters, the [illegible]rdens, and ancients of the handicrafts, togith[illegible]h the coronels, wardens of guilds, and capteins [illegible]he citie, were verie glad when they vnderſtood of your highneſſe happie arriuall in the Ile of Walkeren, as they haue cauſed to be verie largelie and with all humilitie and reuerence ſhewed vnto you, by their deputies ſent to your highneſſe for the ſame purpoſe. But now, forſomuch as they ſée your highneſſe not onelie arriued in the countrie of Brabant, but alſo receiued for duke, and for their prince and lord: their fore-conceiued ioie is greatlie increaſed and made fullie perfect, truſting that by this your comming there will once inſue an end of the deſolations, calamities, and miſeries, whereinto the countrie hath béene brought by the vniuſt gouernement paſt, and by the more vniuſt and wrongfull warre which the enimies hold yet ſtill to bring the whole countrie to deſtruction, with all maner of calamities and oppreſſions which they are able to deuiſe. And therfore they giue your highneſſe moſt humble thanks for the paines & trauell which you haue vouchſafed to take to come into this countrie: yéelding infinitelie like thanks vnto God, for that he hath giuen & ſent them ſuch a prince, as not onelie is of abilitie and power, but alſo is verie willing, and well diſpoſed to defend them from all enimies, & to rule and gouerne them with all good policie & iuſtice, according to the priuileges, lawes, and cuſtoms of the countrie. For although they be ioined in league with the reſt of the ſtates of Brabant, and generallie with all the ſtates of the low countries, & that they haue all entred into armes iointlie togither; yet their ſo dooing hath not béene to exempt and withdraw themſelues from the iuſt gouernement of their lord and prince, but onlie to mainteine their ancient liberties, lawes, and priuileges, that being gouerned according to the ſame, they might liue with all dutifull obedience in good reſt, peace, and tranquillitie. The full accompliſhment of which their deſires, they thinke themſelues to haue moſt happilie obteined, ſith it hath pleaſed God of his infinit grace & mercie to put into your highneſſe heart, to take vpon you the ſoueraigntie of theſe low countries, the dukedome of Brabant, the citie of Antwerpe, and the marqueſſhip of the ſacred empire. For ſéeing that God hath ſtirred them vp ſo great a prince, the brother of a mightie king; they haue no doubt at all, but that your highneſſe wil (by Gods grace) ſoone find means to deliuer theſe countries from the wretched warres wherein they haue béene ſo long plunged.

The ſtates promiſe their homage and obedience.

An offer of the marqueſſhip of the ſacred empire made to the monſieur.

The magiſtrates of Antwerps thankfulneſſe to the monſieur ſignified.

The ſoueraigntie of what places the monſieur had vndertaken.

The markegraue, amptman, boroughmaiſters, ſkepons, and other members of this citie, thinke it not expedient to repeat the cauſes of the warre, and the equitie of the caſe whereon they ſtand; forſomuch as it hath diuerſe times heretofore béene diſcuſſed largelie enough by the generall eſtates: and moreouer béene notablie knowne to the world, and manie waies allowed by your highneſſe. Yet againe therfore with all humble ſubmiſſion and reuerence, they thanke your highneſſe, that it hath pleaſed you to agrée vnto them, and to promiſe the maintenance of their priuileges, lawes, and cuſtoms: yea and of the articles compriſed in the principall compoſition, and in the ioifull entrance into the dutchie of Brabant, aſſuring your highneſſe, that the people of the citie of Antwerpe, and of the marqueſſhip of the holie empire ſhall be, and continue right humble ſubiects to you, euen to the ſpending of their bodies & goods, and whatſoeuer elſe they be able to make for the increaſing of your honour and glorie. Herevnto his highneſſe anſwered verie gratiouſlie, that he thanked thoſe noblemen for their good will and affection towards him; and that he meant to ſhew them by his doings how deſirous he was to gouerne and rule the countrie with good policie and iuſtice. And all this he did at large and with verie great grace. This doone, the ſaid Vanderwerke turning himſelfe to the people cried with a lowd voice, that his highneſſe, as duke of Brabant, Alanſon, Aniou, Berreie, &c: would be ſworne to the citie of Antwerpe, and the marqueſſhip of the ſacred empire, deſiring them to praie vnto God, that by that ſo good and ſolemne déed Gods name might be ſanctified, the ſafetie and proſperitie of the countrie procured, and the honour and glorie of the ſaid duke increaſed.

Antwerpe and the marqueſſhip promiſeth humble ſubiection.

Then was the oth, which his highneſſe ſhould take, read

The oth that the monſieur ſhould take openlie read to the people.

read openlie to the people in the Flemmiſh tong by the ſame Vanderwercke. Which being doone, monſieur the amptman read the ſame oth to his highneſſe in French, and his highneſſe made and performed the ſame in his hands, which the boroughmaſter of the towne of Antwerpe held vp, bicauſe the receiuing of the oth at his hand belonged vnto him. Alſo the ſaid boroughmaſter, whoſe name was ſir Philip of Schoonehouen, kneeling downe before the dukes highneſſe, at the ſame time gaue him a gilt keie in token of ſubiection, and that he might diſpoſe of the citie as of his owne: which keie was deliuered againe by his highnes to the boroughmaſter, to whome he ſaid verie gratiouſlie, that he aſſured himſelfe, that the ſaid boroughmaſter and all the burgeſſes and inhabitants of the citie, would keepe the citie faithfullie for him, as they had doone vntill that inſtant.

A largeſſe caſt among the ſtanders by.

The monſieurs poſie.

A ſhew of mē in armour.

The Frenchmen maruell at the monſieurs ſtrange habiliments, &c.

After the finiſhing and accompliſhment of all the ſaid ſolemnities, the heralds of Brabant and Lotricke (or in the vulgar Brabant, Wallon, Lothier, that is to ſaie Lotharing, or the true Lorraine) cried with a lowd voice, God ſaue the duke of Brabant. And then ſounding the trumpets, they made a largeſſe, caſting a great ſort of peeces of gold and ſiluer among the ſtanders by. Theſe peeces were of two ſorts: the one ſort had on the one ſide the image of the monſieur then duke of Brabant: the other ſort had on the one ſide the armes of Aniou & Brabant, and about the verges was written; Francis of France duke of Brabant. On the otherſide of them all was a deuiſe of the ſunne, with the monſieurs owne inſcription, Cheriſeth and Chaſeth, which is the monſieurs ordinarie poſie. Without the towne were three regiments of the citizens, to the number of a three thouſand men in order of battell, who made a goodlie ſhew with their faire armours and their enſignes diſplated. And they neuer went out of their place vntill all the ceremonies were diſpatched, and that his highneſſe was gone into the citie. Beſides theſe, there was an infinit number of people in the citie, whereof manie were ſtrangers, who maruelled greatlie at theſe ſights, and eſpeciallie the Frenchmen, who wondered to ſee their maſter in that apparell, and ſpake diuerſlie of it, as is woont to be doone in matters that are new and erſt vnſeene. But when they vnderſtood how it was the dukelie apparell, and that he wore it as a repreſentation of antiquitie, the like whereof is worne yet ſtill by the electors of the ſacred empire in their great ceremonies; they were aſtoniſhed, and thought him to be a prince of more ſtatelie countenance and maieſtie than afore: in ſomuch that it was ſaid alowd among them, that ſeeing it was the mantell of the duchie, it ſhould coſt the liues of fiftie thouſand Frenchmen, before it ſhould be plucked from him againe.

The order of the monſieurs entering into Antwerpe.

Lords of England and France well horſſed.

The earle of Leiceſter on the right hand of prince Dolphin.

The companies of the guilds.

As ſoone as the ceremonies were ended, his highneſſe came downe from the theater, and mounted vpon a white courſer of Naples, couered with a coperiſon of veluet richlie imbrodered with gold. And ſo he began to take his waie towards the right renowmed and rich citie of Antwerpe; and was conueied along by the counterſcarſe, vnto the ſumptuous and ſtatelie gate, called Keiſers gate or S. Georges gate, whereat he entered into the good citie of Antwerpe in this ſort. Firſt marched the two ſergeants maiors or marſhals of the citie, accompanied of two purſeuants with the armes of the citie, after whome followed the trumpets with the armes of Brabant. The firſt companie was of Almane merchants commonlie called Eaſterlings, well mounted and well apparelled after the maner of Almane. Next them followed the Engliſh merchants in excellent good order, all apparelled in caſſockes of blacke veluet all of one faſhion. Then came the coronels and capteins of the citie: after whome followed a great number of gentlemen, as well of the ſame countrie as of other nations. Behind them went the bodie of the citie, that is to wit, the wickemaſters, the wardens, the ancient magiſtrate, the maſters of the wardes, the boroughmaſters, deputies, and wardens of the halles, the vſhers, the ſecretaries, the regiſters, the receiuers and treaſurers, the ſchepons, the amptman, & the two boroughmaſters, all apparelled in clokes of blacke veluet, and all of one faſhion. After them came the trumpets of the ſtates of Brabant, Lembourgh, and Lothier, & after them the ſtates themſelues in this order. Firſt went the deputies of the vnder cities. The deputies of the citie of Antwerpe. The deputies of Bruſſels. Then ſucceeded the noblemen of Brabant, as the chancellor of Brabant, and aboue him Lamorall Egmond brother to the countie of Egmond, baron of Gaſebecke. A great number of lords of the ſame countrie, of France, and of England well horſſed and richlie apparelled. The Swiſſers with their drums and fiffes. The monſieurs owne houſhold, among whome were intermingled certeine lords of England. Next this came the countie de Lauall, hauing on either hand an Engliſh lord. The prince of Eſpinote, hauing on his right hand the lord of Hunſdon, & on his left the lord Howard: the prince Dolphin, hauing on his right hand the earle of Leiceſter, & on his left the prince of Orange: the markegraue of Antwerpe bareheaded, bearing the mace of iuſtice: the lord Peterſon baron of Merode, taking vpon him that daie as marſhall of Brabant, and bearing the naked ſword before the dukes highneſſe: then came the duke himſelfe, mounted and apparelled as you haue heard afore. Next behind the duke followed countie Morice of Naſſau ſonne to the prince of Orange, hauing on his right hand countie Philip of Naſſau nephue to the ſaid prince, and ſonne to countie Iohn of Naſſau, and on his left hand the lord Shefield. His highnes was garded by the companies of the guilds, that is to ſaie, by the ancient brotherhoods of the archers, croſſebowes, and harquebuſiers, in ſo goodlie armour, as fairer could not be found. Theſe went afore him and about him on a cluſter without order, like flowre deluces vpon a roiall robe.

An inſcriptiō congratulatorie to the mōſieur.

After them followed the gard of Frenchmen on a like heape, and after them the prince of Oranges gard on foot. Then laſtlie in verie good order came the twentie enſignes of citizens, which had ſtood in order of battell without the towne. [illegible] the gate where his highnes entered, there was a compartement of Doricke worke, wherein was written this title. To Francis the ſonne of Henrie the ſecond, and onelie brother of Henrie the third king of France, called by Gods ſingular prouidence to the ſoueraigne principalitie of the low countries, and to the dukedome of Brabant, and the marqueſſhip of the ſacred empire, which God grant to be moſt happie and luckie vnto him, as to the [illegible] prince whom they haue moſt earneſtlie wiſhed for, and who as now is happilie come into this his moſt ſeruiceable citie, his moſt hartie fauourers: The ſenate & people of Antwerpe.

The chariot of the maiden of Antwerpe deſcribed.

The chariot of the maiden of Antwerpe could not go out of the citie for want of roome to turne in: and therefore it tarried for his highnes at the gate within the citie. This chariot was called the chariot of aliance: wherein ſat a damoſell apparelled in ſatin red and white, which are the colours of Antwerpe: who had in hir left hand a branch of baietree, & on hir head a garland of laurell, in token of victorie againſt the tyrannies of the king of Spaine, and in token of the deliuerance which the people hoped for by meanes of their new prince, through his gratious goodneſſe,

The keies of Antwerpe preſented to the monſieur.

goodneſſe, faithfulneſſe, victoriouſneſſe, and defenſe: to whom with hir other hand ſhée preſented the keies of the towne, according to the verſes written ouer hir head, which ſhall be ſet downe hereafter. Before hir were the armes of the marqueſhip of the holie empire. On hir right hand was Religion apparelled like one of the Sybils, holding in hir one hand an open booke, named the Law and the Goſpell: and in hir other hand a ſword; named Gods word: and on hir left hand was Iuſtice holding a balance and a ſword in hir hand, and ouer the balance was written, Yea and Naie.

Deuiſes.

Wiſedome.

Emblems of peace & tranquillitie.

Before the damoſell ſate Concord, clothed in white, yellow, and orange tawnie, bearing a target vpon hir arme, wherein was painted a crowned ſcepter, with two little ſnakes; and vnder them, two doues, all cloſed in with a garland of oliſe, betokening commendable gouernement with prouidence. Vpon hir head ſhée had a helmet, betokening Wiſedome. In hir hand ſhée caried a lance, with a penon vpon it, on the one ſide whereof were the armes of Aniou crowned with oliſe, and on the other ſide a lambe with a woolfe, and a lion with an ox, to betoken the great peacefulneſſe that is looked for vnder this prince, as well in religion as in matters of ſtate. At Concordes right hand ſat Wiſedome, and at hir left hand Force. In the middeſt of the chariot was a piller richlie made of Corinthian worke, vpon the top whereof was a Hart held betwéene two armed hands, which hart had two wings, betokening Vnion, Faith, and Force: and a ſword with two ſerpents writhing about it, and holding their tailes to their eares; ſignifieng Diſcréet gouernement, and eares ſtopped againſt flatterers. At the foot of the piller was a compartement with the armes of Aniou and Brabant. On the breſt of the lion of Brabant, were the armes of the marqueſhip of the ſacred empire, and of the citie of Antwerpe. Vpon the armes was written Attonement. Vpon the corners of the chariot were two armed images with morians on their heads, attired in orange white and blew. The one of them was named Faithfulnes, and the other Wa[illegible]fulnes. In their hands they had ech of them a ſhie[illegible] wherein were painted two ſwords acroſſe, an[illegible]o doues with a ſheafe of arrowes, betokening [illegible]nion. Vpon one of the ſhields was written, Defenſe: and vpon the other, Offenſe; each of the images had a penon of azure ſilke: in one of the which there was a pellican killing hirſelfe for hir yong birds: and [illegible]he other a hen a brooding hir chickens. Ouer the m[illegible]dens head were theſe verſes ſet:

Diſcréet gouernement.

Attonement.

Faithfulnes. Watchfulnes.

Vnion.

Defenſe. Offenſe.

My rulers [illegible]trage, wickedneſſe, and fu[illegible]s tyrannie,
Haue caſt me backe theſe keies, which I had giuen obedientlie,
Vpon condit[illegible] neuer kept,
ô prince of noble fame,
With better boad of lucke and lot,
receiue thou now the ſame.
Thy godlines and proweſſe haue of right deſerued it.
O treble happie prince to whom theſe countries doo ſubmit
Their ſtate! ô happie Belgike, ô moſt happie like to bee,
Which vnderneath ſo great a prince, maiſt now liue ſafe and free.

A canopie carried ouer the monſieurs head.

Six gentlemen of the citie waited at the gate with a canopie of cloth of gold frized, which they afterward vnfolded & carried it ouer the dukes head, who went vnder it into the towne in the forementioned order. All the ſtréets from the gate to his lodging were ſet on either ſide with armed men vnder their enſignes with their fiffes & drums. The officers caried gilt targets and ſwords in their hands: and all the reſt were armed after the beſt and goodlieſt maner that could be ſéene. His highneſſe procéeded forth on to the corner of the ſtréet called Gaſthouſe ſtréet, that is to ſaie, the Spittlehouſe ſtréet, néere vnto ſaint Georges church, where was a ſhew made in the likeneſſe of a table, verie great and high, which was made by one of the companies of their tragicall and comicall poets, commonlie called amongſt them rhetoricians. The companie was called Care, or as ſome others terme it, the Followſun, after the name of a floure which followeth the ſun, & the ſpéech of the deuiſe was, Growing vp in vertue. The ſhew or table had thrée compartements or partitions. The firſt was the firſt booke of Samuell the fiftéenth chapter, where Samuell chargeth Saule with his diſobedience, & hath a péece of his garment rent off by him, in token that the kingdome ſhould be plucked from Saules houſe & giuen to a better. Whereby was meant, that the ſoueraigntie of thoſe low countries was taken from the king of Spaine for his abhominable periuries, tyrannies, & extortions. In the ſecond compartement was ſet foorth, how Samuell commanded Iſhaie the father of Dauid to bring foorth his ſonnes: of whome God would make one the prince of his people, that is to wit, the yongeſt, which was Dauid. In the third was ſhewed how Dauid being annointed fought with Golias, and ouercame him. The title or ſuperſcription was a Phrygian worke, wherein were written theſe verſes:

A ſhew in the likeneſſe of a table verie great and high, &c.

The ſignification of the ſhewes concerning the K. of Spaine and the monſieur.

As God bereauing Saule of crowne and mace,
Did diſpoſſeſſe him of his kingdome quight,
And after ſet vp Dauid in his place:
So now likewiſe diſpatching from our ſight,
The tyrans which oppreſſed vs by might,
He giueth thee (ô noble duke) the reine
Of theſe our countries, ouer vs to reine.

The front and creſt being garniſhed with baners, ſcutchions of armes, creſſets and torches, caried the dukes deuiſe, Cheriſheth and Chaſeth. And at the foot of the table laie Diſcord cloſed vp in a priſon of lattiſworke, where ſhe was tormented with helhounds and ſerpents; and there were theſe verſes following:

Alanſon whom God Cheriſh aie,
Dooth Chaſe all ire and wrath awaie.

A ſtatelie pageant importãt to the preſent purpoſe.

His highneſſe paſſing foorth ſtill beyond the place called the Thréewaicléet, came to the ſtréet named Hwiuetterſtréet, that is to ſay, the chandellors ſtréet, where was an other ſtatelie pageant with armes, torches, and creſſets, made by an other companie of the rhetoricians, called painters or violers, who had for their deuiſe, Knit togither by ſingleneſſe. In this pageant was painted the néere aliance of Dauid and Ionathas: to betoken the firmeneſſe of the oth mutuallie made by his highnes & the ſtates of Brabant; and the magiſtrats, members, colonels, and capteins of the citie of Antwerpe. In this table was written in a compartement of Phrygian worke:

Like as the faithfull Ionathas did promiſe to defend,
Good Dauid from the harmes which Saule againſt him did intend:
So keepe thou vs (ô gratious prince) which loue to liue in reſt, Againſt the tyrans by whoſe force we haue beene ſore oppreſt.

An oliphant bearing a caſtell of ſtone with ſoldiors and artillerie.

Then went he further to the end of the ſtréet, where the vpholſters ſhops are, which part was full of burning torches & barrels of burning pitch, and ſo came to the Méerebridge. At the entering thereof ſtood an oliphant bearing a caſtell of ſtone with ſouldiers and artillerie. Before the oliphant were painted the armes of the marqueſdome and of the citie, and behind, a ſpeare with a banner of taffetie, with the armes of Aniou in a wreath of laurell, and foure other bannerets of crimſin taffeta, pulled out, wherin were painted the hands of Antwerpe, with this poeſie: Cheriſheth and Chaſeth. And vpon his ſide of his bellie were theſe verſes manifeſtlie written:

Whome light of Phebee heretofore did lead,
I now am drawne awaie,
Her brothers beames to follow in hir ſtead,
A farre more certeine ſtaie.
I thinke my change right gainefull, ſith I ſee, Theſe lower countries vnder him to bee.

From the Merebridge he went along the Mereſtreet, vntill he came to the ward, where were foure companies ranged in order of battell. From thenſe he paſſed to the corner of Clare ſtreet, where was a ſtage made by a companie of rhetoricians called the Oliſe branch, who had for their poſie, Behold grace. Vpon this ſtage ſat a damſell named Antwerpe, bearing in hir boſome a pretie daughter called the Knowledge of God: who held a coffer wherin were priuileges, lawes, franchiſes and truth: which were kept by the Grace of God, and by Prouidence, Wiſdome, Faithfulneſſe, Diligence, Loialtie, Perſeuerance, Vnitie, Good heed, and Order. And aloft was a compartement of Phrygian worke (verie artificiallie handled) wherein were theſe verſes:

A damſell repreſenting Antwerpe holding a coffer of priuileges, &c.

O prince, our father, hope of helpe and ſtaie:
Dame grace, Gods impe, whom here thou ſeeſt to ſtand,
From top to toe faire clad in white araie,
With branch of oliſe in hir heauenlie hand:
Hath willed thee to harbor here within
The ſtatelie walles of ladie Antwerpe, and
The loue of hir with endleſſe fame to win,
By curing of hir griefes with law and right,
And eeke by putting of hir foes to flight.

Somewhat lower towards the midſt, was Neptune with his threetimed mace, riding ouer waues vpon a dolphin, & on his left hand were theſe verſes:

Gods heauenlie grace, and ſoothfull ſkill, reuiuing Antwerpe new,
Through chare defenſe of faithfull league
haue kept hir ſafe, as dew
To thee hir duke innobled both by father and by brother,
Both kings of France, tone gone to God long ſince, ſtill reigning tother.
And therefore bend thou now thy wits, by rightfull force to wreake
Hir cruell foes, which did ſo oft their leagues through falſhood breake.

He paſſed from Clare ſtreet thorough long New ſtreet to ſaint Katharins bridge, right ouer againſt Croſſe ſtreet, where was a triumphall arch cunninglie painted and builded of white ſtone, which was garniſhed with his highneſſes armes, and with torches and creſſets, and with muſike of holboies and clarions. And on the top of it was written: To the happie comming hither of Francis, onelie brother to Henrie the third, ſonne to Henrie the ſecond, grandchild to Francis the firſt, now inueſted duke of Brabant, the prince that hath moſt deepelie deſerued of this their countrie, as a father of the ſame: The ſenat and people of Antwerpe. Vnderneath this in an other compartement of Phrygian worke, was written this: At length yet hinder not this impe to bring the wreeping world againe vnto ſome redreſſe. In paſſing thorough the ſhort New ſtreet, & by the marketſteed, he turned toward the Coopers ſtreet in the ſtreet called Cheeſelane to the great market place, which was full of torches of wax, and of barels of pitch vpon long poles vp to the higheſt windowes, which commonlie are fiue ſtories high. In this market place were imbattelled ſix enſignes, with the enſigne of the youth which was vnder a greene ſtandard, all in the beſt armor that was to be ſeene in anie place of the world. In the middeſt of the citizens was the great giant the founder of the citie of Antwerpe, whoſe curace was azure, and his apparell tawnie white and graie. He bore banners of azure with the armes of Aniou, & had theſe giantlike ſpeeches cōteined in theſe verſes, written before him:

A triumphall arch diuerſlie garniſhed.

Six enſignes with the enſigne of the youth vnder a greene ſtandard.

Feerce furie, moodie rage, vnbridled ire,
Stout force, hot violence, cruell tyrannie,
Nought booted me, ne furthered my deſire:
In keeping of my wiſhed ſouereigntie.
The ſureſt waie for kings to gouerne by,
Is mildneſſe matched with a prudent mind,
To vice ſeuere, to vertue meeke and kind.
For oft the calme and quiet gouernance,
Brings things to paſſe which violence could not win:
Feerceneſſe that caſe will nought at all aduance,
By mildneſſe ſhalt thou better hold folke in.
Outragious ſtorming is not worth a pin,
By mine example therefore haue a care,
All cruell dealings vtterlie to ſpare.

Behind the giant were written theſe verſes:

See you this orped giant here,
ſo huge of limme and bone?
Fame ſaies that Antwerpe was ſometime a thrall to ſuch a one.

This giant was made by cunning to turne his face towards the duke as he paſſed by, and to let fall the armes of Spaine which he held in his hand, & to put vp the armes of Aniou. Alſo there was a ſtage in the ſame market place before the towne houſe, full of nymphs & vertues. But forſomuch as it ſerued chieflie for the daie of his taking of his oth in the citie of Antwerpe, which was the 22 daie of that moneth: it ſhall be ſpoken of more at large hereafter. His highnes departing out of the market place, tooke his waie towards the ſtreet called the High ſtreet, and when he came to the ſtreet called the old Cornemarket; there was a whale carieng Neptune naked with his threeforked mace in his hand, which betokened the great commodities which the citie of Antwerpe receiued by the ſea and by the riuer Schelt. Before this monſter was an other naked man, and by him two other portraitures, the one of nauigation, and the other of merchandize, with a booke of accounts, and a purſſe, ſuch as the factors doo carie with them when they go to receiue monie. Before this Neptune, in a compartement, were written theſe verſes following:

A cunning deuiſe of a giant turning his head.

A whale carieng Neptune & what it betokened.

The lordſhip of the ſeas to thee
the deſtinies behight:
In ſigne whereof I Neptune yeeld
this mace as thine of right:
That Antwerpe hauing rid all lets by thee on ſea and land,
Maie once inioie hir wiſhed fruit, and ſafe from perill ſtaid.

His highneſſe kept on his waie through the High ſtreet, to a place where ſometime was the gate called S. Johns gate, which was taken downe the yeare before: in ſteed whereof there was a triumphall arch of Ionian worke. This arch was wholie applied vnto his highneſſe owne poſie Cheriſheth and Chaſeth. On high ouer it was trained a couering after the maner of a round vaut, wherein was painted the ſun: & vnder the ſun was painted the ſea with ſhips, and the earth clad with hir verdure. Alſo there appeared a cloud on both ſides, ſo as the light of the ſun did ſhine forth and yeeld out his force to the earth. On the outſide of the bowing of the arch were painted three goddeſſes: namelie Flora, who held hir floures in hir hand: Ceres, who had hir corne: and Pomona, who held a horne ſtored with abundance of all things. Likewiſe the earth was clad with greene trees, fruits, and fields, repleniſhed with all fruitfulneſſe: which thing came to paſſe by the heat and operation of the ſun, which was betokened by this word Cheriſheth. On the other ſide being the left hand, hand, were drierie and barren fields, the aire euerie where lowring and cloudie, and the trees and plants withered: which thing was doone by the thrée helhounds, Diſcord, Violence, & Tyrannie, who fled awaie at the ſight of his highnes, according to the ſignification of his other word, Chaſeth. On an other ſide ſtood the ſame poſie againe, Cheriſheth and Chaſeth, by an other meane.

An arch wholie applied to the monſieurs owne poſie.

Cheriſheth.

Chaſeth.

At the right hand ouer the word Cheriſheth was a great field well tilled, with a huſbandmans houſe vpon it. The huſbandman himſelfe being apparelled after the French faſhion was ſowing of corne, and an other by him was ſpreading of mucke. At the left hand was written the word Chaſeth, on which ſide alſo was painted a French capteine in armor following his alies, confederats, and ſouldiors: to doo men to vnderſtand, that by the treaties, leagues, and agréements made with the dukes highneſſe, all tyrannie, violence, and diſcord ſhould be chaſed awaie; and that by the beames of that ſun, the countrie ſhould receiue all peace, proſperitie, and abundance. Vpon the forfront were theſe verſes painted:

The monſieurs poſie interpreted in a ſhew.

Like as the riſing of the ſun dooth chaſe the night awaie,
And with his kindlie heat
  the ground well cheriſh aie:
Euen ſo thy comming (noble prince) dooth chaſe all tempeſts quite,
And folke with chéerefull hope of freedome much delite.

This arch was impoſſed aloft with ſcutchions of the armes of Aniou, compaſſed about with branches of oliue, all vpon azure. Alſo there were diuerſe other ſcutchions, whoſe field was gules bordered with argent, and a great number of burning torches. And the ſaid arch was furniſhed with diuerſe inſtruments of muſicke, and the muſicians themſelues were clad in the colours of the citie. His highneſſe paſſing vnder this triumphall arch, came to a place called the Owuere, that is to ſaie, the banke, where were two companies imbattelled, armed like all the reſidue. And ſo paſſing by the ward there, he went to the place that is right ouer againſt the mint: before the which there was a huge and monſtrous ſea horſe of twentie foot high, vpon whom ſat a nymph called Concord, bearing a ſhield wherein was painted a booke and a rod, which was named, the Rule of truth. In hir hand ſhe bare a flag, wherein was written, Faithfull aliance. This monſter of the ſea was named Tyrannie, and he had a bridle in his mouth with double reines of iron chained called Law and Reaſon. Whereby the dukes highneſſe was doone to vnderſtand, that he was a true Perſeus was to deliuer that countrie from all tyrannie, and afterward to gouerne it by law and reaſon. Ouer againſt the mint gate, where the ſtréet is narroweſt, were two obeliſkes or round ſpires, and betwéene them a triumphall arch with his pillers of Corinthian worke, gilded and inriched with his reléefe vnder him. Vpon the forefront were his highneſſes arms, and likewiſe on the ſides were other armes, with banners, torches, and creſſes. Vnder the armes of his highneſſe were written theſe verſes following:

The ornaments of the arch aloft.

A monſtrous ſea horſe of twentie foot high, & what it ſignified.

Full mightie is that common weale,
  and in a happie caſe,
And bleſt with all commodities
  through Gods moſt heauenlie grace,
Where prince behaues himſelfe as head, and commons him obeie
As members, either carefullie regarding others ſtaie.

From this triumphall arch vnto the palace, that is to wit, all along ſaint Michaels ſtréet, which is a mile in length, ſtood on either ſide thrée ſcore and ten pillers, with a ſpace of two and twentie foot betwéene piller and piller. Euerie piller was twelue foot high, and vpon the pillers was a continuall tarras, & on euerie ech other piller was a creſſet: and on the pillers betwéene were the armes of Brabant, Aniou, and Antwerpe, diuided according to the ſpaces betwéene the ſaid pillers. And the pillers were creſted about with garlands of iuie. On the ſide of the ſtréet towards the palace was a pageant with banners, torches, and pyramides; vpon the vppermoſt part of one of the ſides whereof was a crane, and vpon the other ſide a cocke: giuing knowledge as well to the heads as to the members, that watchfulneſſe is néedfull. A little ſpaniell betokening faithfulneſſe, & a little lambe betokening peace, were painted accompanied with the Sybils; which repreſented wiſedome, loue, faithfulneſſe, obedience, vertue and honor, without the which no true peace can continue. And all theſe were guided by the light of the holie ghoſt, which was reſembled by a certeine brightneſſe that diſcouered the chiefe inſtruments of diſcord, namelie Enuie and Slander, who péered out behind, Enuie gnawing hir owne heart, and Slander hauing double heart, double tong, and double face, howbeit with ſmall effect. For on the two ſides of this pageant were two counterfets, on the one ſide Hercules, & on the other Dauid, as it were in copper, hauing gotten the vpper hand of Goliah, betokening ſtrength and ſtowtneſſe: and vnderneath was Concord, who held Diſcord in a chaine with collars about his necke: which Diſcord offering with his one hand an apple of gold, and with his other hand threatning men with his force and tyrannie, was yet neuertheleſſe driuen into the dungeon of ſorrow, where he is kept priſoner by Concord, who kéepeth the doore faſt ſhut: betokening the ſame thing which the countrie looketh for at his highneſſe hand according to his poſie Cheriſheth and Chaſeth. Vpon the forefront of the compartement made of Phrygian worke were theſe verſes following painted out in moſt liuelie forme:

Thrée ſcore and ten pillers, with a ſpace of two and twentie foot betwéene each.

Proper emblems and their meanings.

Enuie and Slander.

Concord holding Diſcord in a chaine, &c.

O let the earth the kiſſings ſweet of peace and iuſtice ſee,
And let hir powre hir riches foorth
  in all mens boſoms free:
Let godlines and faithfulnes go matched arme in arme,
And let the bond of endles loue keepe all things knit from harme.

Before the duke came at ſaint Michaels, where the palace was prepared for his highneſſe, the daie was ſo farre ſpent, that they were faine to light vp their creſſets & torches, which caſt ſo great and cléere a light through the whole towne, that the dukes highneſſe, and the princes and lords which accompanied him, and likewiſe the ſouldiors with their gliſtering armors, were ſéene more cléerelie than at anie time of the daie. And as the multitude of people was verie great in the citie, ſo the néerer that his highneſſe drew to his palace, the greater ſtill did the number grow. So at length the duke of Brabant and Aniou entred into his palace in the order afore mentioned, hauing moreouer a two or thrée hundred as well of offendors as of baniſhed folke which followed him bareheaded and fettered, crauing mercie. The heralds did caſt péeces of gold and ſiluer abrode, as they had doone at the méetings of all the ſtréets as they paſſed through them. At the entrie of the palace was an arch of twentie foot high, reſting vpon thrée pillers of Phrygian worke; and vpon the top thereof was a compartement wherein were the thrée graces, that is to wit, Vertue, Glorie, and Honor, who offered vnto his highneſſe an oliſe branch, in token of peace, a laurell bough in token of victorie, and a crowne which was ſent him from heauen. And Light with torches and creſſets as cléere as the noone daie.

Thrée graces Vertue, Glorie, and Honor in a compartement.

vnder the compartement were written theſe verſes:

O prince whoſe merits paſſe his praiſe, whoſe vertues haue no peeres,
Whoſe mind ſurmounts his fortune far,
whoſe thews exceed his yeeres:
Take gentlie heere this oliue branch, this laurell bough and crowne,
Three preſents giuen thee by three nymphs, and ſent from heauen downe.

¶ The oth made by Francis duke of Brabant to the members of the right renowmed citie of Antwerpe, and the oth made by them againe vnto his highneſſe.

Twentie or thirtie thouſand harquebuſſes ſhot off.

The duke of Brabant being come into his palace, cauſed a peale of a twentie or thirtie thouſand harquebuſſes to be ſhot off, and then all the companies (ſauing thoſe which were to watch that night) began to withdraw themſelues apace. Which thing was doone in ſuch order and with ſuch ſilence, that in leſſe than halfe an houre all the citie was diſarmed; after which maner they had alſo armed themſelues in leſſe than an houre without anie noiſe in the morning. The princes alſo and the lords withdrew themſelues to their lodgings, and then was all the great ordinance of the towne ſhot off twiſe, as it had béene at the dukes firſt comming to the citie, that all the towne ſéemed to be on fire. Creſſets were lighted and fires made for ioie through all the ſtréets and méetings, waies, and vpon the ſtéeples, in ſo great number and ſo continuallie, that all the night reſembled the daie: in ſo much that when they that were without the towne looked vp into the ſkie, they thought the element was all on fire. Theſe bonefires continued euerie night vntill the next thurſdaie; on which daie his highneſſe tooke his peculiar oth to the towne of Antwerpe, in dooing whereof theſe ſolemnities inſuing were obſerued. The amptman, boroughmaiſters, and ſkepons of Antwerpe came to the ſaid palace of S. Michaell the next thurſdaie being the two and twentith daie of the ſame moneth: at which place they made humble ſute vnto his highneſſe, that as he had vouchſafed to giue his oth to the ſtates of Brabant and the marqueſdome of the ſacred empire, and likewiſe to receiue theirs; ſo it might pleaſe him to giue his oth that daie peculiarlie to the citie of Antwerpe, and likewiſe to take theirs at the place of old time accuſtomed. Whereunto when the duke had aſſented, they tooke their waie in the ſame order that had béene obſerued at his entring into the towne; ſauing that the lord Edward de Claſtro ambaſſador for Don Antonio king of Portugall, was that daie in the latter companie of the princes and lords. And ſo they marched along the ſaid ſtréet of ſaint Michaell to the great marketſted, where the ſumptuous common houſe of the citie is, and bicauſe that on the daie of his entrance in, it was not poſſible for him to take a perfect view of all the ſhews, by reaſon that the night ouertooke them, they were preſented vnto his highnes againe, as well in the place before the mint, as in other places. Alſo there were two pageants more prepared, which were deuiſed both in one daie; the one was mount Parnaſſus wheron ſat Apollo apparelled like the ſun, and accompanied with the nine muſes plaieng vpon diuerſe kinds of inſtruments, and with ſweet voice ſinging a certeine ditie togither written in commendation of his highneſſe. This pageant was in the ſtréet called the High ſtréet, ouer againſt the ſtréet named Reiner ſtréet. Right ouer againſt this pageant was an other on the ſide of the ſtréet called the Flax market, which was a moſſie rocke ouergrowen with drie and withered trées, wherin appeared a caue verie hideous, darke, and drierie to behold, & in the ſame laie lurking the thrée helhounds, Diſcord, Violence, and Tyrannie: who féeling Apollos beames, and hearing the ſwéetneſſe and harmonie of the voices and inſtruments, ſhronke awaie and hid themſelues in the déepeſt of the dungeon, and afterward péered out againe to harken whether that melodie and harmonie continued ſtill or no, minding to haue come foorth againe, and to haue troubled the common wealth, if the ſame had ceaſſed.

The night reſembled the daie.

Solemnities vſed while the monſieur was taking his peculiar oth to Antwerpe.

Two pageants, one of mount Parnaſſus, and the other a moſſie rocke.

A ſcaffold hong with ſcarlet and richlie adorned.

His highneſſe paſſed on, and with verie much adoo came to the great market place, by reaſon of the infinit multitude of people, which could not be put aſunder without great paine. As ſoone as he was alighted from his horſſe, he went vp a ſcaffold which had béene ſet vp for the ſame purpoſe, in the middeſt of the market place hard by the towne houſe; before whome went the magiſtrate of the citie, and a great number of princes, lords, and gentlemen. This ſcaffold being great and large of the heigth of fortie foot, was hanged with ſcarlet. Vpon it was a cloth of eſtate, the backe whereof was cloth of gold frized, vnder the which was a chaire of the ſame. The daie of his firſt comming thither, there had béene preſented vnto him on the right ſide, Wiſedome offering him a golden ſcepter: on his left ſide, Iuſtice offering him the ſword of iuſtice from aboue the chaire: and behind him Clemencie offering him the cap of the dukedome. Before the chaire as it were at the foot of it, were Obedience, Faithfulnes, Loue of God, & Reuerence. And by the chaire ſides there were with them, Concord, Sageneſſe, Valiantnes, Good will, Truth, Pittifulneſſe, Perſeuerance, and Reaſon, of whome two on either ſide held ech of them a torch of virgin wax, & they were all appareled like nymphes. But on this daie when his highneſſe went vp to this ſtage, the nymphes were awaie; and in ſtéed of them, the chaire was garniſhed on both ſides with pillers. On the right ſide betwéene the pillers was a lion holding a naked ſword, to betoken the authoritie of the magiſtrate. Aboue the lion was an egle féeding hir yoong, and turning hir ſelfe towards the ſhining of the ſunne, as taking hir force of the prince. On the left ſide was an ox with a yoke on his necke, and aboue him a hen brooding hir chickens, and by hir a cocke. The ox with his yoke ſignified obedience, & the cocke and the hen betokened the watchfulneſſe, care, and defenſe of the ſuperior. The ſaid ſcaffold was garniſhed with banners of azure beaten with the armes of Aniou, and with banners of gewles beaten with the armes of Antwerpe, and with creſſets and torches. And aboue among the armes were written theſe verſes in verie [illegible] & legible letters:

A chaire of eſtate of cloth of gold frized.

Beautifull emblems about the chaire of eſtate, & what they ſignified.

At length thou art com[illegible] and ioifull we be,
Thy preſence long looked here preſent to ſee.

1 Of triumphs, though ſtatelie, kings boaſt but in vaine,
Vnleſſe they by iuſtice vprightlie doo raine.

2 Nought booten law, authoritie,
or ſage forecaſt of wit,
Vnleſſe to lawfull gouernement folke doo their force ſubmit.

3 God, God is he the harts of kings which holdeth in his hand,
He, He it is that higheſt things
dooth make too fall or ſtand.
When he with gratious looke beholds a people: they inioy
A goodlie ruler, vnder whom no troubles them annoy.

1 A little vnder, at the right hand vnder the armes of Brabant, were theſe verſes.

2 On the left hand vnder the armes of Antwerpe was written thus.

3 This was written ſomewhat lower.

But if miſliking make him frowne, then makes he them a preie
To tyrants, vnder whom they taſt of ſorrow euerie daie.

From this ſcaffold he might behold before him an infinit number of people, readie to be ſworne vnto him: and alſo thrée companies of baniſhed and condemned men in fetters, and bareheaded, crauing mercie at his hand, which was granted vnto them. Moreouer all the houſes about the market ſtead had creſſets burning on high before them. Now then, after that roome and ſilence was made, their councellor and recorder Vanderwerke propounded the matter as followeth. Right gratious lord and prince, the markegraue, the amptman, the boroughmaſters, the ſkepons, the treaſurors, the receiuers, the old deputies, the chiefe burgeſſes, the quartermaſters, the wardens, the ancients of the handicrafts, the coronels, the wardens of the guilds, and the capteines of the citie, your highneſſes moſt humble and obedient ſubiects, are excéeding glad to ſée that you, whome they haue alreadie receiued for duke of Brabant, and for their ſouereigne lord and prince, are readie to make your oth vnto this citie, and to receiue it at the hand of the magiſtrats, burgeſſes and citizens thereof, in reſpect of the citie it ſelfe, and of the marqueſdome of the ſacred empire: aſſuring themſelues that your highneſſe will be vnto them a good, righteous, and lawfull prince, to gouerne them according to their franchiſes, lawes, and cuſtomes: and promiſing mutuallie on their behalfe to your highneſſe, to be good, loiall, and faithfull ſubiects vnto you, to ſpend all their goods, yea and their liues in your ſeruice, and in the maintenance of your dignities, rights and preheminences. And like as God hath put into your highnes mind, to take vpon you, firſt the protection and defenſe, and ſecondlie the whole ſouereingtie of the low countries and prouinces, which haue entered into league with you, vpon hope that the ſame God will of his gratious goodneſſe and mercie ſo bleſſe and proſper your dealings and enterpriſes: as that they ſhall out of hand ſée the effect of that communication in the bleſt degrée, to [illegible] accompliſhment of your roiall and heroicall deeds, both in the generall, and alſo in the particular deliuerance of the countrie from the calamities and miſeries of war: whereby they ſhall haue the better cauſe to acknowlege the great good turnes and benefits receiued at your highneſſe hand, and to honor, loue, and ſerue [illegible] the verie protector of the land and father of the countrie.

Baniſhed and condemned men in fetters crauing mercie pardoned.

All promiſes kept on the monſieurs part, they could do no leſſe.

When Vanderwerke had made an end, and the dukes highneſſe had anſwered him conformablie to that which he had ſpoken without the towne, the ſaid Vanderwerke told the people alowd, that the duke was readie to take and receiue his oth, at the hand of the magiſtrate, and of all the people and inhabiters of the citie of Antwerpe, and that God had vouchſafed to ſend them a prince of ſo rare and heroicall vertues, of ſo great puiſſance, and the onelie brother of ſo great a king; that they might well hope, that the ſame God would inable him to rid theſe countries within a while from the great number of calamities and miſeries wherwith they were oppreſſed. And forſomuch as his highneſſe had béene receiued with ſolemne deliberation of the ſtates confederate, yea and with ſolemne reſolution of all the members of that citie, and God had commanded men to loue, honour and obeie their princes: he exhorted the people to yéeld him all humble obedience according to Gods commandement. To which intent, the oth as well which his highneſſe ſhould make to the people, as which the people ſhould make to his highneſſe, ſhould be read vnto them; praieng God to giue ſuch grace vnto his highnes, as he following the ſame, might well rule and gouerne; and vnto the burgeſſes and citizens of Antwerpe, as they might performe their obedience, like good, loiall, and faithfull ſubiects: that Gods name might be ſanctified, to the benefit, proſperitie, and ſafegard of the citie, and to the great increaſe of the dukes puiſſance, honour, and glorie. Then the ſame Vanderwerke read the oth which was to be made by the duke, with the ſtile of the duke of Brabant, and all his othertitles. Which oth was read to his highnes in French, and receiued by ſir Philip Schonehouen, lord of Waneroe, boroughmaſter without the citie.

[illegible] his people [illegible] his oth magiſ[illegible] & people [illegible] Antwerpe.

God ſucceſſe wiſhed to the mutuall oth-takers.

The monſieurs oth red in French.

Which being doone, the ſaid Vanderwerke read the oth which the magiſtrate and people were to make, which was repeated word for word by the magiſtrats and a great number of people which were within the hearing of it. And this oth was exacted of the magiſtrate and people of Antwerpe by the amptman in the name and by the commandement of the duke. Vpon the finiſhing of theſe ſolemnities, the duke himſelfe did caſt two or thrée handfuls of gold and ſiluer among them, & then the heralds cried A larges, and the trumpets and drums were ſounded euerie where, and manie inſtruments of muſike were plaied vpon, as had béene doone afore at his firſt arriuall. When he was come downe from the ſcaffold, he went to the townehouſe with all the princes, lords, and gentlemen, which were verie manie: where he was receiued by the worſhipfull of the citie, and dined openlie at a verie ſumptuous and roiall feaſt prepared for him: and ſo that daie paſſed in great ioy, contentation and admiration, as well of his highnes & his companie, as of all the reſt of the people. Towards night were ſhot off two peales of great ordinance againe, and the fires of ioy were continued much greater, and more in number than afore.

The monſieur caſteth largeſſe of gold & ſiluer among the people.

Two peales of great ordinance with other ſignes of ioy.

Thus ended the ioifull and roiall interteinement of the right noble prince Francis, ſonne and brother to the king of France, by the grace of God duke of Brabant. The reſt of the wéeke and the daies following, the lords of the priuie councell, the officers of the aides, of the exchekers, of the chambers of the accounts, and of the other corporations, colleges, and communalties came to viſit his highnes, and to offer him their humble ſeruice, promiſing all faithfulnes and obedience: all whome he receiued verie gratiouſlie to their contentation, anſwering them ſo aduiſedlie, with ſo good grace & fitneſſe, without omitting anie point of that which he had purpoſed: that all men not onelie wondered at him, but alſo were inforced to honour and loue him, and to ſet forth his praiſes among the people. Finallie the deputies of the reformed churches of both the languages, being preſented vnto him by the prince of Orange, were gentlie heard, and they ſpake to him as followeth.

What was doone by the waie of courteous dutie when all the triumphs were ended.

Sir, we be ſent vnto your highnes by the reformed churches of this citie, as well of the language of low Dutchland, as of the French, to ſhew vnto you with all humilitie, reuerence and ſubiection, that we haue thanked and ſtill doo thanke God with all our hart, for vouchſafing to bring your highneſſe ſo happilie hither. And this our ioie is matched with the ioie of all other folks, as we hope your highneſſe hath vnderſtood by the glad and ioifull receiuing and interteining of you. Alſo ſir we hope, that as the great honour and felicitie which theſe countries haue atteined vnto (wherein few countries are able to match them) haue béene purchaſed vnder the ſoureignetie and gouernement of the right renowmed princes, the dukes of Burgognie, which iſſued out of the moſt noble houſe of France: ſo vnder your guiding and gouernement being of the ſame houſe, the ancient renowme of the ſame dignitie ſhall be reco-uered by your proweſſe, and mainteined by your wiſdome. It is little more than three hundred yeares ago, that theſe countries being gouerned by ſundrie dukes, earles, and lords, had not atteined the renowme which other nations haue ſince that time ſo much wondered at. The firſt that began to giue increaſe to it was Philip duke of Burgognie, ſurnamed the hardie, who was brother to king Charles the fift, the ſonne of king John, and grand ſonne of king Philip of Valois: of which kings your highnes is lineallie deſcended from the father to the ſonne. For the firſt duke of Orleance, of whome your highneſſe is lineallie deſcended from the father to the ſonne, was the ſonne of king Charles the fift; and as now there be no more heires males of the ſaid duke of Orleance, but onelie your highnes and the king your brother. Whereby it falleth out, that the dukes of Burgognie are great vncles to your highnes by the fathers ſide. And therefore we doubt not but you will follow the footſteps of their vertues, in reſtoring the ſtate of the countrie to hir ancient renowme and dignitie: and alſo mainteine and increaſe the honour whereunto it hath beene aduanced, by thoſe noble princes your vncles.

Dukes of Burgognie iſſued out of the houſe of France.

Under whom the ſtate hath beene aduanced.

Philip duke of Burgognie ſurnamed the hardie.

The ſecond duke vnder whom this ſtate hath beene greatlie aduanced, was John the ſecond: neuertheleſſe it came not to full perfection, vntill the time of Philip the ſecond. In which perfection it was mainteined by Charls the laſt duke of Burgognie ſo long as he liued. The ſaid Philip the ſecond, to whom the honour of ſtabliſhing that ſtate moſt peculiarlie belongeth, was one of the moſt knightlie and valiant princes of his time. He wan the victorie in nine foughten fields, in moſt of the which he was put to the triall and hazard of his perſon, by fighting with his owne hands. He was a verie ſage prince, and ſuch a one as had to deale with the greateſt princes in chriſtendome: of whome ſome were his aduerſaries, and yet he behaued himſelfe ſo wiſelie, that he atchiued all things to his honour whatſoeuer he tooke in hand. Alſo he was verie rich: inſomuch that for all his warres which laſted aboue thirtie yeares, he left behind him more ſubſtance and readie monie, than anie other prince of his time, as the writers of the hiſtories of that age doo witnes vnto vs. And yet notwithſtanding, for all theſe great vertues & qualities of his, he was not named Philip the ſage, nor Philip the valiant, nor Philip the rich, but Philip the good. So well doo all folke by generall conſent vnderſtand, which is the vertue that beſt beſeemeth and becommeth a great prince, & is beſt liked of his people: namelie, that a prince be good and louing to his ſubiects. Surelie ſir, all men hope that your highnes will follow the example of that good prince, the firſt bringer of the ſtate of this countrie to perfection, a right noble and renowmed prince of the houſe of France. And we praiſe God, for that as manie as haue had the honour to come into your highnes preſence, yeeld record that you haue verie great likelihoods of theſe vertues, which we praie God ſo to accompliſh and make perfect in you, as all his people may to your great honor receiue the perfect and ripe fruits of them. And this doo all the reſt of the people deſire as well as we.

Duke John the ſecond, and Philip the ſecond, aduancers of the ſtate.

Philip the ſecond a verie rich prince, ſurnamed Philip the good.

He directeth his ſpeech to the monſieur.

Howbeit, we haue a moſt humble ſute to make peculiarlie to your highnes, which we moſt humblie beſeech you to grant. The thing that induceth vs to doo it, is that you beare the name of Francis. For as oft as we heare that name named: the remembrance of that great king Francis your highneſſe grandfather commeth to our mind. He was a right valiant, couragious noble and godlie prince: and yet notwithſtanding all the nations of the earth did by one common conſent surname him the father of learning. For of a truth, ſince that emperour and great king of France, called Charles the great, there was neuer anie king of France that ſo highlie fauoured learning, as this great king Francis. And as the ſaid king Charles was the founder of the famous vniuerſitie of Paris, ſo was king Francis the reſtorer therof againe: and both of them to their great coſts & charges called men of excellent knowledge thither out of ſtrange countries, to teach the languages & all kinds of arts & ſciences. The houſe of this great king Francis was as an vniuerſitie, and his table was a place of conference concerning all maner of learning. And like as other great princes of his time following his example, inriched their dominions and kingdomes with learned men and learning: ſo we moſt humblie beſeech your highnes to follow the example of this great king your grandfather in dooing the like, and to make ſingular account of learning, and to take the profeſſours thereof vnder your protection. True it is ſir, that through the malice of men, warre is commonlie the ouerthrower of learning. But if a great prince ſet himſelfe againſt the miſchiefe, he may eaſilie ſtop it. Our deſire is not that your highneſſe ſhould neglect the exerciſe of chiualrie, for to giue your ſelfe to ſtudie; but to follow ſo the one, as the other be not left off and forgotten. For as we haue ſeene manie commonweales floriſh ſo long as they profeſſed chiualrie and learning togither: and yet haue fallen into the hands of their enimies, euen in the chiefe flowre of their ſkill in ſciences, by reaſon of their diſcontinuing of their former trade of armes, after which maner it fell to the Athenians to come into ſubiection to the kings of Macedonie: ſo the people which haue profeſſed armes alone without learning, haue alwaies become barbarous, cruell, and vtterlie deſtitute of all humanitie, as we ſee at this daie by the Tartars and Moſcouits. And therefore to our ſeeming, a man may well ſaie, that chiualrie is the foundation and ſinewes of a commonweale: and that learning garniſheth and beautifieth the bodie thereof with liuelie and freſh colours, ſeruing it for inrichments and ornaments. In reſpect wherof, as we meant not to deſire your highneſſe to forget th[illegible] which make profeſſion of chiualrie, whome you o[illegible] to embrace as your ſtrength: ſo we moſt humblie beſeech you to vouchſafe to ſuccour learning, and to mainteine learned men with your gratious fauour.

A ſute moued to yͤ monſieur.

Francis the monſieurs grandfather commended.

A good ſute to the mõſieur, & the like of all princes and great men to be preferred and granted.

Learning and chiualrie muſt go togither.

Sir, verie needfull cauſes mou[illegible] vs to make this humble petition to your highneſſe: for that we being profeſſors of learning, ough[illegible] haue learning in ſingular eſtimation, and to pro[illegible] if it be poſſible for vs) that the fruite of the thin[illegible] which we haue inioied for a time, may be conueied to our poſteritie: and ſecondlie for the oth[illegible]ſe which we haue taken at the time of our proceding in our degrees, which is, to mainteine an[illegible] further the ſchooles and learning of the vniuerſitie, in what degree ſoeuer we come vnto. And therefore we hope that your highneſſe will doo vs the honour to take this moſt humble requeſt of ours in good part. As touching our owne perſons, we promiſe your highneſſe all obedience, faithfulneſſe, and ſubiection: and that according to our ſmall abilitie, we will doo our indeuor towards ſuch as we may haue acceſſe vnto, that they alſo may yeeld obedience to your highneſſe, and to the magiſtrates whome it ſhall pleaſe you to ſet ouer the people. And here to make an end, we hartilie praie God to preſerue your highnes a long time in happie eſtate among this people, and to giue you the grace to rule and gouerne them iuſtlie and vprightlie, to rid them out of the hands of their enimies, to mainteine them long in moſt happie peace,

Cauſes that moued the making of this ſute.

He ſpeaketh in the behalfe of all the reſt of like profeſſion and facultie.

and to reſtore this ſtate againe to the ancient dignitie, greatneſſe, renowme, and felicitie: that after your deceaſſe you maie leaue a moſt bleſſed and famous remembrance among all nations. And for the bringing hereof to paſſe, we yet againe beſéech the king of kings and great prince of princes, to make you as valiant as Dauid, as wiſe as Salomon, and as zelous of his glorie as Ezechias.

The monſieur ſpeaketh well whatſoeuer his meaning was.

Herevnto the duke anſwered, that he was verie glad to ſée ſuch a conſent of all the people in the receiuing of him: and that he hoped ſo to rule and gouerne them, as they ſhould not be diſappointed of the hope which they had conceiued of his gouernement, which he would faſhion out after the paterne of his predeceſſors and great vncles, who had gouerned theſe countries ſo happilie. And he thanked them for their good will & loue, praieng them to continue the ſame, and promiſing to take them into his protection togither with the reſt of the people in generall: & that as he had heretofore a ſingular regard of learned men, ſo would he be willing to continue the ſame hereafter.

A good beginning in prince and people.

After this maner began this great prince to gouerne that people with great authoritie and modeſtie; and the people to yéeld vnto him verie willing and honorable obedience: and all men hope both generallie and particularlie, that God will giue him the grace ſo to hold on in that ſo holie and commendable gouernement, as that by his example he ſhall ſhew to all princes and to all others that come after him, how greatlie the iuſt and lawfull gouernement auaileth: and that the people on their ſide ſhall ſhew what maner of obedience, loue, and conſtancie is due to good princes: in which vertues there was neuer yet anie people that could ſkill to ſurmount them, neither ſhall anie hereafter, by the helpe of the great God, and euerlaſting father of our ſauiour Jeſus Chriſt, to whome with the vnitie of the holie ſpirit be all glorie for euer and euer, Amen.]

John Paine executed at Chelmſford.

A blaſing ſtarre.

John Paine prieſt being indicted of high treaſon for words by him ſpoken, was arreigned and condemned at Chelmſford on the laſt daie of March, and was there executed on the ſecond daie of Aprill, according to the qualitie of his offenſe, and as law had awarded. In the moneth of Maie, namelie, on the [illegible]éenth daie at night, about ten of the clocke, a blaſing ſtarre appeared, deſcending in the northweſt, the beard whereof ſtreamed into the ſoutheaſt.

Execution of Thomas Ford, John Shert and Robert Johnſon prieſts of the popes order.

On mondaie being the eight & twentith of Maie, Thomas Ford, John Shert, and Robert Johnſon prieſts, hauing béene before indicted, arreigned, and as well by their owne teſtimonie, as alſo ſufficient witneſſes produced to their faces, found giltie, and condemned for high treaſon intended, practiſed, and appointed againſt hir maieſties moſt roiall perſon, as alſo for the vtter ruine, ouerthrow, and ſubuerſion of hir peaceable and well gouerned realme, themſelues being ſent as inſtruments, to deale for and in the behalfe of the pope, in this diſloiall and traitorous cauſe; according as iuſtice had before determined, were drawne vpon hurdles from the Tower of London to the place appointed for execution; hauing béen ſo long time ſpared, by hir maieſties moſt roiall and princelie regard of mercie, to trie if either the feare of God would take place in them, conſideration and reſpect of their owne duties moue them, or the méere loue and accuſtomed clemencie of hir maieſtie might win them, to acknowledge hir to be their lawfull ſoueraigne, and themſelues hir ſubiects bound to ſerue hir, notwithſtanding any pretenſe or authoritie to the contrarie, & not for matter of their popiſh ſuperſtition. All this notwithſtanding they remained giuen ouer to their owne wickednes, and ſwallowed vp in the gulfe of their vndutifull affection, which cauſed iuſtice to ſtep before mercie, committing them to the reward of their lewd and vnnaturall dealing.

To perſeuere in wickednes is no conſtancie but obſtinacie.

Conſolation miniſtred to them as they went to their deaths.

All the waie as they were drawne, they were accompanied with diuers zealous and godlie men, who in mild & louing ſpéeches made knowne vnto them, how iuſtlie God repaieth the reprobat, how fatherlie againe he receiueth the obedient, how he ouerthroweth the vngodlie in their owne deuiſes, and protecteth his choſen in all ſtormes and afflictions. In remembrance of all theſe, to bethinke themſelues of their wickedneſſes paſſed, and to ſhew ſuch hartie and zealous repentance for the ſame, that albeit they had ſo gréeuouſlie treſpaſſed, yet in contrite and humble ſorrowing they might be gratiouſlie receiued into his heauenlie fauour, whome they had moued and ſtirred by their vnreuerent regard, to ſmite and chaſten with the rod of his furie. Among which godlie perſuaſions, maiſter ſhiriffe himſelfe, both learnedlie and erneſtlie labored vnto them, mouing all good occaſions he might deuiſe to change the obſtinacie he perceiued in them, into a chriſtianlike humilitie and repentance; but theſe good indeuors tooke no wiſhed effect, their owne euill diſpoſition ſo blinded them, that there was no waie for grace to enter.

The ſhiriffe himſelfe trieth what he can doo to conuert them.

When they were come beyond ſaint Giles in the field, there approched vnto the hurdle one of their owne ſect, and a prieſt (as himſelfe had confeſſed) who in this maner ſpake vnto the priſoners: O gentlemen be ioifull in the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, for this is the daie of your triumph and ioie. Being aſked whie he vſed ſuch words, he ſaid vnto the priſoners againe; I pronounce vnto you; yea, I pronounce a full remiſſion and pardon vnto your ſoules. Vſing theſe and other traitorous ſpéeches, hold was laid on him. When as maiſter ſhiriffe demanded what he was, he anſwered; He was the voice of a crier in the wilderneſſe, and that he was ſent to prepare the Lords waie. And notwithſtanding ſuch meanes of reſiſtance as himſelfe vſed, he was deliuered vnto Thomas Norris purſeuant, who brought him vnto Newgate, where he confeſſed vnto him that he was a prieſt, and that he had ſo long diſſembled, as he would now leaue off and doo ſo no more.

He was the eccho of a falſe and antichriſtian voice.

Thomas Ford his words touching his innocencie.

Being come to the place of execution Thomas Ford was firſt brought vp into the cart, when as he began in this maner. Whereas I am come hither to die, for matters laid vnto my charge of treaſon, which ſhould be conſpired againſt the quéene, within theſe two yeares or ſomewhat more: I giue you to vnderſtand, that of anie ſuch matter I am innocent & frée, for that I can prooue my comming into England to be fiue yeares ſince. Whereupon maiſter ſhiriffe ſpake vnto him and ſaid; Ford, haue mind on God, and aſke him and hir maieſtie heartilie forgiueneſſe, whome thou haſt ſo highlie offended; thou dooſt but delude the people, for it is manifeſtlie knowen how thou art guiltie of the matters laid to thy charge, here be thine owne anſwers to ſhew, affirmed vnder thine owne hand, and other witneſſes to reproue thee. Whereupon * I my ſelfe was called foorth, who iuſtified the cauſes to his face, that at his arreignement was laid to his charge, and he euidentlie and plainelie found guiltie thereof. Then were his anſwers whereto he had ſubſcribed read vnto him, which is in the booke latelie ſet foorth by authoritie. Whereupon he tooke occaſion to tell a long circumſtance of a certeine queſtion moued at Oxford, as concerning taking armes againſt hir maieſtie, which horrible treaſon he ſéemed to approoue thereby.

* The writer of this pamphlet, who ſéemed to be acquainted with all their dealings.

Then maiſter ſhiriffe willed him to aſke hir maieſtie forgiueneſſe, offering him to ſtand his friend

A ſhameleſſe negatiue voice to a manifeſt charge of offenſe, and euident conuiction.

John Shert his vaine ſpéeches at the ſight of Tom Fords dead bodie diſmembred.

Sherts oration to the people iuſtifieng the forme of a godlie martyrs death.

Note Sherts obſtinacie.

in atteining hir graces mercie, if he would change his former traitorous mind, to become a true and faithfull ſubiect, acknowledging hir to be his lawfull ſoueraigne ladie, notwithſtanding anie thing that anie pope could ſaie or doo to the contrarie. Whereto he anſwered; I haue not offended hir maieſtie, but if I haue, I aſke hir forgiueneſſe and all the world; and in no other treſon haue I offended than my religion, which is the catholike faith, wherein I will liue and die. And as for the quéenes maieſtie, I doo acknowledge hir ſupremaſie in all things temporall, but as concerning eccleſiaſticall cauſes, I denie hir; that onelie belongeth to the vicar of Chriſt, the pope. In briefe, he granted to nothing, but ſhewed himſelfe an impious and obſtinat traitor, and ſo he remained to the death, refuſing to praie in the Engliſh toong, mambling a few Latine praiers, deſiring thoſe that were Ex domo Dei to praie with him, & ſo he died. In the meane time that he hanged, which was till he was dead, ſo great is the mercie of our gratious princeſſe, John Shert was brought from off the hurdle to the gallowes, where ſéeing Ford hanging, he began with holding vp his hands, as the papiſts are wont to doo before their images; O ſwéet Tom, O happie Tom, O bleſſed Tom. Then being ſtaied, Ford was cut downe & caried to the place where his bodie ſhould be quartered. In which time Shert was brought vp into the cart, where looking towards the dead bodie of Ford, he fell downe on his knées, and held vp his hands vnto it, ſaieng againe: O happie Tom, O bleſſed Tom, thy ſwéet ſoule praie for me; O deare Tom, thy bleſſed ſoule praie for me. For which words being rebuked, the executioner lifted him vp on his féet, when as he prepared him to his confeſſion, ſaieng; I am brought hither to this place, to die a death which is both ſhamefull & ignominious, for which I thanke thée my Lord God, who framing me to thine owne ſimilitude and likeneſſe, haſt bleſſed me to this good end. There being ſtaied, becauſe he ſéemed to prolong the time to ſmall purpoſe, the ſhiriffe willed him to remember himſelfe, for what cauſe he was come thither, how he had offended the quéenes maieſtie, and that he was now to aſke hir forgiueneſſe. Beſides, he might receiue hir princelie mercie; whereto with an hypocriticall outward boldneſſe, but an inward fainting feare (as afterward euerie one plainelie beheld) he gaue this anſwer: What (maiſter ſhiriffe) ſhall I ſaue this fraile and vile carcaſſe, and damne mine owne ſoule? No, no, I am a catholike, in that faith I was borne, in that faith will I die, and here ſhall my blood ſeale it.

Shert is peremptorie in his ſpéech to iuſtifie his religion.

Hudling vp of praiers mangled and péeced togither after the popiſh maner.

Then maiſter ſhiriffe ſpake vnto him, ſaieng; By the waie as we came you ſwore an oth, for which you willed me to beare witneſſe that you were heartilie ſorie: now I praie you let me be a witneſſe, that you are heartilie ſorie for offending the quéens maieſtie. Whie ſir (quoth he) I haue not offended hir, without it be in my religion; and if I haue offended hir, then I aſke hir forgiueneſſe. Maiſter ſhiriffe vpon this ſaid vnto him; Is this the fruit of your religion, to knéele to the dead bodie of thy fellow, and to deſire his ſoule to praie for thée? Alas, what can it either profit or hinder thée? Praie thou to God, and he will helpe thée. Maiſter ſhiriffe (quoth Shert) this is the true catholike religion, and whoſoeuer is not of it is damned. I deſire his ſoule to praie for me, the moſt glorious virgin Marie to praie for me, and all the holie companie of heauen to praie for me. At which words the people cried; Awaie with the traitor, hang him, hang him. O Shert (quoth maiſter ſhiriffe) forſake that whore of Rome, that wicked Antichriſt, with all his abhominable blaſphemies and treacheries, and put thy whole confidence in Jeſus Chriſt. Whereto he anſwered; O maiſter ſhiriffe, you little remember the daie when as you & I ſhall ſtand both at one barre, and I come as witneſſe againſt you, that you called that holie and bleſſed vicar of Chriſt the whore of Rome. At which words the people cried againe; Hang him, hang him, awaie with him. Then he beganne his Pater noſter in Latine, and before he had fullie ended two petitions of it he fell into the Créed, and then to the Pater noſter againe, afterward he ſaid the Aue Maria, which doone, knocking himſelfe on the breaſt, ſaieng, Ieſus eſto mihi Ieſus, the cart was drawen awaie, and he committed to the mercie of God. But then, to manifeſt that his former boldneſſe was but méere diſſembling and hypocriſie, he lifted vp his hands, and caught hold on the halter: ſo that euerie one perceiued his faire outward ſhew, and his ſoules inward diſfigured nature, alſo how loth he was and vnwilling to die. Whereby he ſhewed that he was not indued with the audacitie and ſtout reſolution of the heathen, who for morall vertues ſake caſt themſelues into dangers, manie times deadlie; holding opinion, that he beareth but a counterfeit ſhew of vertue that ſhrinketh at anie torment, at anie hazard, at anie death, & therefore ſaid:

——virtus
Per ſcopulos durum fortis anhelat iter.

Robert Johnſon being brought vp into the cart, maiſter ſhiriffe, according as he had before, both declared vnto him hir maieſties mercie if he would repent; and alſo willed him to be ſorie for his offenſes againſt hir: whereof he ſéemed to make ſmall eſtimation, denieng the treaſons according as the others had doone, and appealing likewiſe vpon his religion. Then was the * writer hereof called forth, who gaue him to vnderſtand, how notablie he was approoued guiltie at his arreignment, & euerie matter ſufficientlie handled, how according as the reſt were, he was confounded to his face. Whereunto he would make no other anſwer, but ſaid; Well well, (quoth he) calling the partie by his name, God forgiue the. Then were his anſwers read vnto him, as they had béen before to the other two, he not yéelding deniall, but ſaid he ſpake them & would do it againe. Then was Athanaſius Créed mooued to him, which he granted to be the catholike faith, whereof the pope was vicar, and that there was no other catholike faith, but onelie his. Whie (quoth the preacher) the pope is not named in it. I know not that (quoth he againe) I haue not read it. Then maiſter ſhiriffe deſired him to ſaie his praiers in Engliſh, and he with all the companie would praie with him: which he refuſing to doo, in his Latine praiers the cart was drawne awaie, and he committed to Gods mercie. And thus was iuſtice miniſtred, and that execution to Gods glorie & the eaſe of the common wealths gréefe diſpatched.

* who ſéemed acquainted with all their practiſes.

Execution of Luke Kirbie, William Filbie, Thomas Coteham, and Laurence Richardſon, préeſts of the popes order.

On the wedneſdaie following, which was the thirtith daie of Maie, in the ſame maner as I haue before expreſſed, Luke Kirbie, William Filbie, Thomas Coteham, & Laurence Richardſon, were committed from the tower of London, to the place of execution; and as the other were on the mondaie before aſſociated and accompanied with diuerſe learned and godlie preachers; euen ſo were theſe, as to ſaie, maſter Charke, maſter Herne, and diuerſe others, who all the waie applied ſuch godlie and chriſtian perſuaſions vnto them (as had not the child of perdition ſo maruellouſlie blinded them) were of force to haue woone them into grace and mercie. The ſpéeches they vſed to them by the waie were néedleſſe here to ſet downe, for that they did eſpeciallie concerne cauſes to root out that wicked opinion in them, and to eſtabliſh a ſound and perfect faith in place thereof; but euen as it was in the other, ſo it did agrée in them. But Luke Kirbie ſéemed to chalenge the * writer hereof as ſufficient to proue nothing againſt him, which he did bicauſe it was ſuppoſed he was not there preſent: but what paſſed betweene him & the ſaid writer, you ſhall heare hereafter. They being come to the place of execution, William Filbie was brought vp into the cart, where conforming himſelfe vnto the death, his wicked treſons were moued vnto him, which obſtinatelie and impudentlie he denied. Then was he demanded if he would acknowledge the queenes maieſtie his ſoueraigne princeſſe, and ſupreme head vnder Chriſt of the church of England? No (quoth he) I will acknowledge no other head of the church than the pope onlie. Wherevpon his anſwers were read vnto him, and he not denieng them in anie point, euen as they were wicked and impious, euen ſo he remained in them, ſtill appealing that it was for his religion that he died, and not for anie treaſon. But the contrarie was proued vnto his face, as well by ſufficient proofes, as alſo by the traitorous anſwers, whereto he had ſubſcribed with his owne hand. At laſt, as he was deſired, he praied for the queenes maieſtie, that God might bleſſe hir, and incline hir heart to mercie toward the catholikes, of which ſocietie he was one. Then they opening his boſome, found there two croſſes, which being taken from him were held vp, and ſhewed to all the people, beſide his crowne was ſhauen. So after a few ſilent Latine praiers to himſelfe, the cart was drawne awaie.

who was an former (as pretended) all their ings.

hat manifeſt and vndoubted tokens of a reſolute voterie to the pope his idol.

The next was Luke Kirbie, who being brought vp into the cart, offered long circumſtance of ſpeech, as concerning that he was come thither to die, hoping to be ſaued in the bloud of Chriſt: and much matter, which were needleſſe here to rehearſe. Afterward, he began to ſaie, that there were none could approoue him to be a traitor: neither had he at anie time attempted anie thing preiudiciall to hir maieſtie, and that his aduerſaries, naming them by ſpeciall name, could not vpbraid him with anie thing. Wherevpon maſter ſhiriffe told him that one of them was there, and aſked him if he would haue him called to him. I ſee him (quoth he) yonder, and let him ſaie what he can againſt me. Then was the * partie bidden come ſomewhat neere him, to whom he began in vehement ſort to ſaie, Conſider with thy ſelfe how vntrulie thou haſt charged me, with that which I neuer ſaid nor thought. Beſides, thou knoweſt that when thou cameſt to the Tower to me, before maſter lieutenant, & another who was there preſent then, thou waſt demanded what thou thoughteſt of me, and what thou couldeſt ſaie againſt me? When as thou madeſt anſwer, thou kneweſt no harme by me, neither couldeſt thou at anie time ſaie otherwiſe of me than well: wherevpon thou waſt aſked, wherefore thou reporteſt otherwiſe at my arreignement? Then the ſhiriffe ſaid vnto him; Who can beare thee witnes of this? Quoth he againe; He ſpake it before maſter lieutenant, and an other was by then. Then was he demanded what other he was that was preſent? Which (after long trifling) he ſaid was a keeper, & named him. Whereto the ſaid writer made anſwer as followeth. Maſter Kirbie, I wiſh and deſire you, in the feare of God, to remember your ſelfe: for this is not a place to report an vntruth, neither to ſlander anie man otherwiſe than you are able to proue. When as I came vnto the Tower, & made knowne to maſter lieutenant for what cauſe I was ſent to ſpeake with you, you were brought into a chamber by your keeper: and what I then moued, your ſelfe verie well knoweth, as concerning my allowance being the popes ſcholer: where what anſwer you made, I haue trulie, and according as you anſwered, alreadie ſet downe in print. Maſter lieutenant neither moued anie ſuch words to me, as here you reported, and I call God to my witneſſe, that not a motion of anie ſuch matter was once offered to me by maſter lieutenant, or by your keeper. Your ſelfe then vttered, that at ſundrie times in the ſeminarie there were diuerſe lewd words ſpoken, which might better haue beene ſpared; and denied that you were not in my chamber, when as I lieng ſicke in my bed, the traitorous ſpeeches were moued by them, which were then preſent, whereof your ſelfe was one, with diuerſe other matters which you ſpake vnto me, which maſter lieutenant himſelfe heard, and your keeper being preſent. But if this be true which you ſaie, that it may be proued there were either ſuch words moued vnto me, or anie ſuch anſwer made by me, I offer to ſuſteine what puniſhment the law ſhall afford me. Then falling to an other matter, for that this redounded to his owne confuſion (as maſter lieutenant can well witneſſe) he began to talke of my being at Rome, what freendſhip he had ſhewed vnto me, and had doone the like vnto a number of Engliſhmen, whome he well knew not to be of that religion, both by his owne purſe, as alſo by freending them to ſome of the popes chamber, he made conueiance for them thenſe ſometime going fortie miles with them: when (quoth he) had my dealings bin knowne, I ſhould hardlie haue bin well thought of: and I knew well inough that you were neuer bent to that religion, albeit they thought the contrarie. Yea I knew well inough when you departed thenſe, that your diſpoſition was contrarie to ours, and concealed it to my ſelfe.

The deceiuer and ſpier of all their plots and dealings, as he pretended.

One of theſe two muſt needs be in a foule errour: for both holding contraries could not ſpeake truth.

Repetitio beneficy eſt exprobratio.

O Kirbie (quoth maſter ſhiriffe) this is verie vnlike, that you could afford ſuch fauour to anie, who were contrarie to that religion that you profeſſed. No, no, if you knew anie ſuch there, you would rather helpe to perſecute them than pitie them, as it is the nature of you all. M. Kirbie (quoth this writer) it is verie vnlike that you had anie ſuch ſecret knowledge of me, either of my religion, or how I was ſecretlie bent as you ſeeme here to profeſſe: for had I beene ſuch a one as you would perſuade theſe here you knew me to be, would you haue deliuered me thoſe ſilken pictures hallowed by the pope which you did: and moreouer, make knowen vnto me ſundrie of your friends here in England, to whome I ſhould conueie them? O ſir (quoth he) I confeſſe indeed I deliuered to thee ſuch pictures, but thou knoweſt I gaue thee two Iulies to go buy them with, I did it bicauſe I knew thee to be ſuch a one, and therfore I did miſdoubt thee, for I would not credit thee with my hallowed pictures. M. Kirbie (quoth the other) to denie your owne doings is maruellous impudencie: did not you in your chamber deliuer me certeine ſilken pictures, which you told me at Stukleis being there, were hallowed by the pope, and what indulgences were alowed them? One of them, which was a crucifix, you gaue me; the other you willed me deliuer to your freends at Rheimes and in England. And bicauſe they were too few (as in deed I thinke they were no more but fiue) you gaue me two Iulies, to go into the citie to buie more, which I did: and hauing brought them to you, three or foure of the faireſt you tooke from me, promiſing to get them hallowed at the next benediction: the other in deed you gaue me, and I tooke them with me. How ſaie you now Kirbie (quoth maſter ſhiriffe) would you haue credited him with ſuch matters, had you not ſuppoſed him to be one of your owne ſect? Maſter ſhiriffe (quoth he) what I haue ſaid, I know verie well. And after he was gone from Rome I ſent fifteene ſhillings to Rheimes to be deliuered to him, but he was departed thenſe towards England, before it came.

Maſter ſhiriffes words vttered by the waie of interception.

This was great & verie mercifull forbearance to let all this talke paſſe to and fro at the place of execution.

Men indeed vſe to repoſe their truſt in ſuch, whom they ſuppoſe to be like themſelues.

Then maſter ſhiriffe ſaid to him againe; You ſtand vpon theſe points verie much, which there is none that are here, but will iudge to be vntrue: thou heareſt what he hath ſaid vnto thée, and we haue heard that thou denieſt euerie thing. What ſaieſt thou to thy treaſons, wherefore thou art come hither to die? Wilt thou be ſorie for them? aſke God and hir maieſtie forgiueneſſe, for ſhe is mercifull, and we will carie thée backe againe if we ſhall perceiue in thée anie ſuch motion, that thou wilt forſake thy former wickedneſſe, and become a good and faithfull ſubiect. At theſe words the people among themſelues almoſt generallie ſaid: O excéeding mercie and fauour! what a gratious princeſſe haue we, who affoordeth ſuch mercie vnto thoſe that haue ſo ill deſerued? Can there be a princeſſe of greater pitie, of more clemencie or tenderneſſe to be found in all the world? No.

Mercie offered to Kirbie notwithſtanding his conuiction of treaſon.

Principe nil iſta mitius orbis habet.

Then Field the preacher in the booke read his anſwers to him, whereto he had ſubſcribed with his owne hand: Whether the pope might lawfullie depoſe hir maieſtie, or had anie authoritie to take the title of hir crowne and dignitie awaie from hir? Whereto Kirbie anſwered: This is a matter diſputable in ſchooles, and therefore I may not iudge of it. I thinke this with my ſelfe, that if anie prince fall by infidelitie into turciſme, atheiſme, paganiſme, or anie ſuch like, that the pope hath authoritie to depoſe ſuch a prince. And being asked, if hir maieſtie were in anie ſuch? He ſaid, he knew his owne conſcience. An other preacher being by ſaid vnto him, that the prince receiued his authoritie from God, and that he was to be ſuppreſſed by none, but onelie by God. Againe, that Salomon ſaid: By me (meaning by God) kings reigne, and princes decrée iuſtice. By me princes rule, and the nobles and all the iudges of the earth. Againe, S. Paule ſaith: Let euerie ſoule be ſubiect to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God, and the powers that be, are ordeined of God. Whoſoeuer therefore reſiſteth the power, reſiſteth the ordinance of God, & they that reſiſt, ſhall receiue to themſelues iudgement. For princes are not to be feared for good works but for euill. Wilt thou then be without feare of the power? doo well, ſo ſhalt thou purchaſe praiſe of the ſame. For he is the miniſter of God for thy wealth; but if thou doo euill, feare, for he beareth a ſword not for naught, for he is the miniſter of God to take vengeance on him that dooth euill. If then the pope be a ſoule, he is to be obedient to the higher powers. And being a ſubiect vnto God, as all other princes be, he muſt not take vpon him what belongeth to God. As for the authoritie that hir maieſtie hath, ſhe hath receiued it from God; neither is the pope, or anie earthlie prince to depriue hir thereof, but onelie God. Againe, when Ieſus was brought before Pilat, Pilat ſaid vnto him; Knoweſt thou not that I haue power to crucifie thée, and haue power to looſe thée? To the which Ieſus anſwered: Thou couldeſt haue no power at all againſt me, except it were giuen thée from aboue. Thus maie you ſée, that what prince ſoeuer ruleth vpon earth, hath his power and authoritie onelie from God: and not that anie mortall man can vſe the authoritie of a prince at his pleaſure. How ſaie you to this? Whereto he would make no anſwer, but ſéemed to demand of them, if they would denie, that if a prince were in paganiſme, atheiſme, or gouerned by infidelitie: that ſuch a prince might not lawfullie be depoſed? Which the learned preachers anſwered in learned ſort, approuing that as the power was of God, ſo princes were not to be depoſed by anie, but onelie by God.

To ſuch as are proditoriouſlie minded it is a matter diſputable: but to a good ſubiect a matter determinable.

Prou.8.15,16.

Rom.13.1,2,3,4.

This counſell of the apoſtle they had not the grace to follow.

Iohn.19.10,11.

This demand implieth a kind of ſuſpicion or ſecret charge that hir maieſtie is ſuch a one.

No (quoth Kirbie againe) hath it not béene diſputed in ſchooles for theſe fiue hundred yeares, and will you denie it? O maiſter Crowleie, maiſter Crowleie; and there paused: as if that maiſter Crowleie had agréed with him in ſuch a monſtruous error. But maiſter Crowleie himſelfe gaue one to vnderſtand, that at ſuch time as he conferred with the ſaid Kirbie in the tower, about the ſame argument, that his anſwer was vnto him: If anie prince fell into anie ſuch kind of error, that prince were corrigible, but of whome? Not of anie earthlie prince, but of that heauenlie prince, who gaue him his authoritie, and ſéeing him abuſe it anie waie, correcteth him in his iuſtice. For by his attributing to the pope this authoritie, he witneſſed him to be antichriſt, in that he will depoſe princes at his pleaſure, and exalt himſelfe aboue all that is called God, and forgiue men their ſinnes at his pleaſure likewiſe. All this was not ſufficient to mollifie the obſtinate mind of Kirbie, but he would perſiſt ſtill in this diuelliſh imagination. Maiſter ſhiriffe and the preachers, ſéeing him wauering, and not able to yéeld anie reaſon for his arrogant opinion, laboured as much as in them laie to change it: when all would not ſerue, they deſired him in hartie and humble maner to praie vnto God, to aſke hir maieſtie forgiueneſſe, for the treaſons wherein he had offended hir. Whereunto he anſwered, that he had not offended in anie treaſon, to his knowledge. Wherevpon they ſhewed him his treaſons, which were adiudged by the people worthie of greater puniſhment, than he was at that time to ſuffer; yet would not he acknowledge them, but praied to God for hir maieſtie, that ſhe might long rule in hir authoritie, to confound all hir enimies: and that his hart was frée from anie treaſon to hir maieſtie. Then preparing himſelfe vnto his praiers, the preachers deſired him to praie in Engliſh with them, and to ſaie a praier after them; wherein, if he could find anie fault, he ſhould be reſolued thereof. O (quoth he againe) you and I were not one in faith, therefore I thinke I ſhould offend God, if I ſhould praie with you: at which words, the people began to crie, Awaie with him: ſo he ſaieng his Pater noſter in Latine, ended his life.

Not of the pope then, be like, who is not to ſerue into other princes prouinces, &c.

Vox populi Dei, vox ſertur eſſe Dei.

Then was Laurence Richardſon brought vp into the cart, & to him Thomas Coteham to be executed togither. But Coteham ſéemed to vtter ſuch words as though there had béene hope he would haue forſaken his wickedneſſe, ſo that the halter was vntied, and he brought downe out of the cart againe. In which time Laurence Richardſon prepared him to death, confeſſing himſelfe a catholike, and that he would beléeue in all things as the catholike church of Rome did, vnto the pope he allowed the onelie ſupremaſie. In which traitorous o[illegible]tion, after certeine Latine praiers, he was committed to God. Then was Coteham brought vp to the cart againe, & the good opinion had of him before changed into that obſtinat nature that was in him all, ſaieng to maſter ſhiriffe, that before he came into England, he was armed for India, and that whether if he might be ſuffered he would paſſe with as much conuenient ſpéed as might be. Then looking to the bodie of Laurence Richardſon, whereon the executioner was vſing his office, he lifted vp his hands and ſaid; O bleſſed Laurence praie for me, thy bleſſed ſoule Laurence praie for me: for which words both the preachers and the people rebuked him, telling him that he ought to praie to none, but to God onelie; all helpe of man was but in vaine. Whereto he anſwered, he was aſſured that he could praie for him. In bréefe, his treaſons being moued to him, he denied all, albeit his owne handwriting was there to affirme it. He praied for hir maieſtie, and ſaid his Pater noſter & Aue Maria: and as the cart was drawing awaie he ſaid; in manus tuas * Domine commendo ſpiritum meum, and then he died. Thus did the broome of iuſtice ſwéepe awaie theſe noiſome cobwebs, noiſome both to church and common Laurence Richardſon and Thomas Coteham their geſtures and ſpeeches at their deaths.

For he was not ſo furniſhed for England as to his ſeruices ſo eaſilie to papiſtrie.

* He ſhould haue ſaid Demon.

commonwealth, as being of the diuels hatching, but nurſſed and foſtered of poperie, to inſnare and trap ſeelie ſoules, as the ſpider doth the flie: from whome the Lord God deliuer euerie member of his church.

Philip Price hanged in Fleetſtreet for killing of a ſergeant.

On the ſecond daie of Iune, Philip Priſe was hanged in Fleetſtreet for killing one of the ſhiriffes ſergeants that had arreſted him. This man at his death, as inwardlie touched with ſorrow for the offenſe which he had committed and died, gaue ſuch apparant tokens and notes of a repentant mind; that partlie with his ſpeeches which were patheticall, and partlie with his teares which were plentifull, as alſo with his vehement ſighs and greeuous grones, ioined with diuerſe other geſtures (great ſignes of inward grace) he ſo mooued the beholders, that manie which beheld him, pitied his wofull end, moſt yea in maner all (whereof ſome were ſuch as a man would haue thought had neuer a teare to ſhed at ſuch a ſight, hauing viewed diuerſe the like and more lamentable ſpectacles) with wet eies beheld him, and yet in heart reioiſed that he died reconciled to God. On the eight and twentith of Iune, Peregrine Bartie lord Willoughbie of Grobie appointed ambaſſador to Frederike the ſecond king of Denmarke with the garter, whereunto he had beene elected & choſen a long time before, tooke his leaue of the queenes maieſtie at Greenewich; with whome ſir Gilbert Dethicke alias Garter principall king of armes was ioined in commiſſion, for the inueſting of the ſaid king into the order; and Robert Glouer alias Summerſet herald was alſo preſent, and gaue his attendance in the ſame voiage, as likewiſe did a competent number of gentlemen and yeomen, in all to the number of ſix and fiftie perſons, beſides mariners, &c. The ſaid lord ambaſſador prepared himſelfe towards Kingſtone vpon Hull, where he imbarked with his whole traine on the fourteenth daie of Iulie, and proſperouſlie arriued at Elſenore in Denmarke on the one and twentith daie of the ſame moneth, where he was honorablie interteined.

Lord Willoughbie ambaſſador ſent into Denmarke.

The lord ambaſſadors oration in Latine to the king of Denmarke, &c.

On the thirteenth daie of August he preſented himſelfe before the king in his caſtell of Croneborough, made his firſt ſpeech vnto him in Latine; which [illegible]h being ended, the lord Willoughbie deliuered vnto the king hir maieſties letters, and withall the commiſſion for the kings inueſture into that honorable order [illegible] of the garter. Which letters the king opened, and [illegible] deliuered them to Henrie Ramelis his chancellor for Ge[illegible] manie to read, whom he commanded to anſwer [illegible]ords former oration. From the king my lord was c[illegible]ueied to the queenes preſence, vnto whome alſo he [illegible]liuered hir maieſties letters with ſalutations [illegible]t daie being thurſdaie the [illegible]teenth of Au[illegible]e king roiallie prepared, receiued [illegible]es of [illegible] order with his owne hands, and with great cõtentment accepted and ware the garter, the collar, and the George, when as my lord concluded the whole dedication with ſundrie welwiſhings. In the end whereof he [illegible]t the king in mind of the oth and thankefull acceptation of the order to be teſtified by a publike inſtrument, as was before promiſed, whereunto the king anſwered by his chancellor Nicholas Kaas with manie effectuall words: and immediatlie in ſigne of ioie, a great volee was diſcharged of all the great ſhot in his caſtell, and the lord ambaſſador with all his traine was roiallie feaſted & rewarded. On thurſdaie the ſixteenth daie of August, the king tooke my lord ambaſſador forth on hunting two leagues from Elſenore, and there in the dinner time vttered manie louing ſpeeches. And after, to wit, on the one and twentith of September the lord ambaſſador with all his traine imbarked at Einden, and arriued at Bromeholme in Norffolke on thurſdaie the] ſeauen and twentith daie of September.

[illegible] inueſted into the right honorable order of the garter,

Miſfortune by gunpowder.

On the nineteenth daie of Iulie certeine ferkins of gunpowder to the number of ſeauen, and as manie or more ferkins of ſturgeon laden in a car vpon Gallie keie neere vnto the Tower of London, ſome ſmall portion of the ſame powder being ſhed on the ground, the horſſe in the ſaid carre ſtroke fire with his foot, and fired all togither, where-through the ſturgeon was blowen awaie, ſome into the Thames, ſome elſewhere: one ferkin was driuen through a lome wall that was borded ouer, but all was ſpoiled and loſt, the crane on the wharffe with the houſes neere adioining ſhattered, manie men and horſſes ſore blaſted; the three men and ſeauen horſſes died thereof. On the twelfe daie of Auguſt there aroſe a great tempeſt of lightening, thunder, whirlewind, and raine, with hailestones faſhioned like to the rowels of ſpurs two or three inches about in the countie of Norffolke, betweene the market townes of north Walſham and Worſted (the towne wherein the making of worſteds commonlie called Norwich worſted was firſt practiſed and tooke their beginning) which tempeſt beat the corne flat vnto the ground, rent vp manie great trees, and ſhiuered them in peeces, or wond them like withies. At Hening more than a mile from Worſted, the weſt doore of the church, weieng more than three hundred pound weight, was lifted off the hookes, and throwne ouer the font, within one yard of the chancell doore; the top of the church was riuen vp, and the lead as it were blowen awaie; fiue webs of lead were ruffled vp togither, like as they had beene clouts of linnen cloth, and blowen into the field without the churchyard. Alſo at eaſt Ruſſen were manie barnes blowen downe, and houſes vncouered.

Strange tempeſt in Norffolke.

Anno reg. 25.

Terme kept at Hertford.

This yeare Michaelmaſſe terme was reiourned from the vtas thereof, vntill the fourth returne of the ſame called Menſe Michaelis, and from the ſaid returne vntill the returne commonlie called Craſtino animarum next inſuing, & then reiorned from Weſtminſter to the caſtell of Hertford in Hertfordſhire, there to begin in the ſaid Craſtino animarum, and to be continued till the end of the ſame terme, which was done accordinglie, where was plentie of good viands to be had for monie, but lodging hard and ſcant; beſides the long and plaſhie waie that manie had vnto their hoſts, and then peraduenture ſleepe in the chimneie corner, or vpon the hard boords with a pillow vnder their heads. Was not this a good amends?

Thames water conueied ouer ſaint Magnus ſteeple.

This yeare Peter Moris free deniſon, hauing made an engine for that purpoſe, conueied Thames water in pipes of lead ouer the ſteeple of ſaint Magnus church, at the north end of London bridge, and ſo into diuerſe mens houſes in Thames ſtreet, new Fiſh ſtreet, and Graſſe ſtreet, vp vnto the northweſt corner of Leaden hall (the higheſt ground of the citie of London) where the waſte of the firſt maine pipe ran firſt this yeare one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and two on Chriſtmaſſe euen: which maine pipe being ſince at the charges of the citie brought vp into a ſtandard there made for that purpoſe, and diuided into foure ſeuerall ſpouts ran foure waies, plentifullie ſeruing to the vſe of the inhabitants neere adioining that will fetch the ſame into their houſes, and alſo clenſed the chanels of the ſtreets, north towards Biſhopſgate, eaſt towards Aldgate, ſouth towards the Bridge, and weſt towards the Stocks market. No doubt a great commoditie to that part of the citie, and would be farre greater, if the ſaid water were mainteined to run continuallie, or at the leaſt, at euerie tide ſome reaſonable quantitie, as at the firſt it did; but ſince is much aſlaked, thorough whoſe default I know not, ſith the engine is ſufficient to conueie water plentifullie: which being well conſidered by Barnard Randolph eſquier, common ſergeant of the citie of London: he being aliue, gaue and deliuered to the companie of the fiſhmongers in London a round ſum to be imploied toward the conducting of Thames water for the good ſeruice of the commonwealth in conuenient order. Other legacies verie liberallie and bountifullie he gaue by his teſtament to be laid out in works of charitie, as I haue noted more at large hereafter in due place, vpon occaſion of recording the daie of his death. The publication of whoſe acts, as alſo of diuerſe others, if they may moue the rich of this world to part with ſome ſmall portion of their ſtore to the like chriſtian vſes, I ſhall be glad, and thinke my paines worth the printing: otherwiſe I ſaie with one that perſuading this age to walke worthie of their calling, and doubting his words ſhould be but wind, concluded with this interrogatiue diſtichon:

Juſtice Randolph his charitie.

Sed quid verba miſer non proficientia per do?
Quid iuuat in vacuos miſſa loquela notos?

This yeare 1582 was there inſtituted and firſt founded a publike lecture or leſſon in ſurgerie, to begin to be read in the college of phyſicians in London, in Anno 1584, the firſt daie of Maie, againſt that time new reedified in a part of the houſe that doctor Linacre gaue by teſtament to them, by John Lumleie lord Lumleie, and Richard Caldwell doctor in phyſicke, to the honour of God, the common profit of hir maieſties ſubiects, and good fame, with increaſe of eſtimation and credit of all the ſurgians of this realme. The reader thereof to be a doctor of phyſicke, and of good practiſe and knowledge, and to haue an honeſt ſtipend, no leſſe than thoſe of the vniuerſities erected by king Henrie the eight, namelie of law, diuinitie, and phyſicke, and lands aſſured to the ſaid college for the maintenance of the publike leſſon; wherevnto ſuch ſtatutes be annexed as be for the great commoditie of thoſe which ſhall giue and incline themſelues to be diligent hearers for the obteining of knowledge in ſurgerie, as whether he be learned or vnlearned that ſhall become an auditor or hearer of the lecture, he may find himſelfe not to repent the time ſo imploied. Firſt twiſe a weeke thorough out the yeare; to wit, on wedneſdaies and fridaies, at ten of the clocke till eleuen, ſhall the reader read thrée quarters of an houre in Latine, and the other quarter in Engliſh, wherein that ſhall be plainlie declared for thoſe that vnderſtand not Latine, what was ſaid in Latine. And the firſt yeare to read Horatius Morus tables, an epitome or briefe handling of all the whole art of ſurgerie, that is, of ſwellings or apoſtems, wounds, vlcers, boneſetting, and healing of bones broken, termed commonlie fractions, and to read Oribaſius of knots and Galen of bands, ſuch workes as haue béene long hid, and are ſcarſelie now a daies among the learned knowen, and yet are (as the anatomies) to the firſt enterers in ſurgerie and nouices in phyſicke; but amongſt the ancient writers and Grecians well knowne. At the end of the yeare in winter to diſſect openlie in the reading place all the bodie of man eſpeciallie the inward parts for fiue daies togither, as well before as after dinner; if the bodies may ſo laſt without annoie.

Publike lecture of ſurgerie founded in London, & preſentlie red (as alſo in the life of the founder) by doctor Forſter, to his high praiſe & credit.

What exerciſes are to be followed in the ſaid college by the will of the founder.

The firſt yeares exerciſes.

The ſecond yeare to read Tagaultius inſtitutions of ſurgerie, and onelie of ſwellings or apoſtems, and in the winter to diſſect the trunke onelie of the bodie, namelie from the head to the loweſt part where the members are, and to handle the muſcles eſpeciallie. The third yeare to read of wounds onelie of Tagaultius, and in winter to make publike diſſection of the head onelie. The fourth yeare to read of vlcers onlie the ſame author, and to anatomize or diſſect a leg and an arme for the knowledge of muſcles, ſinewes, arteries, veines, griſtles, ligaments, and tendons. The fift yeare to read the ſixt booke of Paulus Ægineta, and in winter to make anatomie of a ſkeleton, & therwithall to ſhew & declare the vſe of certeine inſtruments; as Scamnum Hippocratis, and other inſtruments for ſetting in of bones. The ſixt yeare to read Holerius of the matter of ſurgerie, as of medicines for ſurgians to vſe. And the ſeuenth yeare to begin againe, and continue ſtill. A godlie and charitable erection doubtleſſe, ſuch as was the more néedfull, as hitherto hath béene the want and lacke ſo hurtfull: ſith that onelie in ech vniuerſities by the foundation of the ordinarie and publike leſſons, there is one of phyſicke, but none of ſurgerie, and this onelie of ſurgerie and not of phyſicke, I meane ſo as phyſicke is now taken ſeparatelie from ſurgerie, and that part which onelie vſeth the hand as it is ſorted from the apothecarie. So that now England may reioiſe for thoſe happie benefactors & ſingular welwillers to their countrie, who furniſh hir ſo in all reſpects, that now ſhe may as compare for the knowledge of phyſicke ſo by means to come to it, with France, Italie, and Spaine, and in no caſe behind them but for a lecture in ſimples, which God at his pleaſure may procure, in mouing ſome hereafter in like motion and inſtinct to be as carefull and beneficiall as theſe were to the helpe and furtherance of their countrie. ¶ At the publication of this foundation, which was celebrated with a goodlie aſſemblie of doctors collegiats and licentiats, as alſo ſome maſters of ſurgerie, with other ſtudents, ſome whereof had béene academicall; doctor Caldwell ſo aged that his number of yéeres with his white head adding double reuerence to his perſon (whereof I may well ſaie no leſſe than is left written of a doctor of the ſame facultie verie famous while he liued,

The second yeares exerciſes.

The third yeares, and fourth yeares exerciſes.

The fift and ſixt yeares exerciſes, and ſo to continue with Repetitio principij.

Conſpicienda ætas, ſed & ars prouectior annis, Famáque Pæonio non renuenda choro) euen he, notwithſtanding his age and impotencie, made an oration in Latine to the auditorie, the ſame by occaſion of his manifold debilities vnfiniſhed at the direction ſpeciallie of the preſident, who (after a few words, ſhortlie and ſwéetlie vttered) gaue occaſion and opportunitie to D. Forſter, then and yet appointed lecturer, to deliuer his matter, which he diſcharged in ſuch methodicall maner, that ech one preſent indued with iudgement, conceiued [illegible] hope of the doctor, touching the performance of all actions incident vnto him by that place, [illegible] ſome of them continued his auditors in all wea[illegible]rs, and ſtill hold out; whoſe diligence he requited with the imparting of further knowledge than the ſaid publike lecture doth afford. When the aſſ[illegible] diſſolued, and the founder accompanied [illegible] was taken for the due preferring [illegible] this eſtabliſhed exerciſe: inſomuch that D. Caldwell, and D. Forſter, to furniſh the auditors with ſuch bookes as he was to read, cauſed to be printed the epitome of Horatius Morus firſt in Latine: then in Engliſh, which was tranſlated by the ſaid doctor Caldwell. But before it was halfe perfected, the good old doctor fell ſicke, and as a candle goeth out of it ſelfe, or a ripe apple falling from the trée, ſo departed he out of this world at the doctors commons, where his vſuall lodging was; & was verie worſhipfullie buried. But of his death hereafter, in the yeare 1584: where the date of his deceaſe being mentioned, matter worth the reading ſhall be remembred.]

Ab. Fl. Spectator & auditor.

Doctor Gifford preſident of the college of phyſicians.

Francis of Valois, the kings onlie brother, duke of Louthier, Brabant, Limbourgh, Gelders, Anion, Alanſon, &c: earle of Flanders, Holland, Zeland, &c: marqueſſe of the ſacred empire, lord of Friſeland, &c: hauing now indifferentlie well (with his his good ſucceſſes had in the vittelling, and remouing the ſeges of Cambrete and Lochem, and winning the townes of Alaſt and Endonan) gotten the harts of the people, and by that meanes placed his Frenchmen in Dunkirke, Winerburgh, Dirmide, Dermond, Wilnord, and other places, thought now (being yoong & euill counſell) to make himſelfe a more abſolute prince, as though it were too baſe a thing for his highneſſe to rule with the aduiſe of the eſtates of the countries. Wherfore hauing come to him out of France the marſhall Biron, with great troops of Swiſſers and Frenchmen, he now cauſeth them all at one time; to wit, on the ſeuenth of Ianuarie, to inuade ſo manie townes as they could make themſelues maiſters of; which with them tooke effect in the aboue named townes, but at Bridges they were put out. And at Antwerpe on the ſaid ſeuenth daie, vnder the pretenſe to muſter his armie without the towne, vpon the verie noone time of the daie, when the citizens were at dinner, he cauſeth two gates (as vncerteine by which he would go) to be opened for him, and the chaines ouerthwart the ſtréets to be vnchained, which (for ſome ſuſpicion had of the Frenchmen without) were locked: then he iſſued out with all his court and a great number of gentlemen, verie braue, mounted on great horſſes aboue two hundred, manie of them being ſecretlie armed vnder their garments, and comming to ſaint Iames gate. At the bridge without met him certeine of his companies of horſſemen and footmen, who ſtaied themſelues on both ſides the waie, making as it were a lane for the duke to paſſe by with a few of his: who being paſt them, made a token to them with his cap, to inuade the citie: wherevpon his men killed the watch, with the coronell Wierendell, that ſtood bare headed to ſée their prince paſſe. Then entred the gate ſeuentéene enſignes of footmen, and foure coronels of horſſemen, the Swiſſers following, & the duke crieng to them, March, march, La ville eſt gagnee, mais me pillon point. Being thus ſtronglie entred they cried, Ville gagnee viue la meſſe, and tooke in on both ſides the bulworks, turned the ordinance towards the citie, & came by diuers ſtréets almoſt to the midſt of the citie. The citizens at dinner hearing the alarum, verie furiouſlie iſſued out, with ſuch weapons as firſt came to their hands, and ſet vpon them, firſt, by the bylanes, other ſome chained vp the ſtréets, and ſo b[illegible]ed them from going anie further. They [illegible] againſt the ſoldiors that were entred the citie with moſt v[illegible] ſhot. In the meane ſpace the citizens néere a[illegible]out the gate with their harquebuſſers beſtow[illegible]mall ſhot as thicke as haile out of windowes v[illegible] gate, where firſt they killed a horſſe, and then d[illegible]s men entring, which troubled the other following, that a great number was euen in the verie gate killed [illegible]nd ſo heaped one vpon another that the gate was [illegible]pped; wherby all that were entred within the citie, in leſſe than in one houres ſpace were killed or taken priſoners. Wherein the citizens behaued themſelues ſo valiantlie, & ſo manlie, that manie for lacke of leaden pellets, tooke their monie out of their purſes, bowed it with their téeth, and put it in ſtead of pellets in their harquebuſſers:

Francis of Valois attempteth diuerſe exploits, the iſſue whereof fell out to his miſfortune.

The monſieurs ambition ſpreading like a canker.

The French gentlemen bare armor vnder their garments: with good meaning no doubt.

The monſieur was glad a while notwithſtanding the conſequent danger.

Sic ſeſe & ſobolem charam, cum vxore mariti
Defendunt, Gallis ne præda voracibus eſſent. T.

Noblemen & other French taken priſoners.

Noblemen of France ſlaine.

In this ſkirmiſh of ſo litle ſpace were ſlaine aboue 1530 Frenchmen horſſemen and footmen, told at the burieng, and more than two thouſand priſoners taken, amongſt the which were the earle Fernaugus, the biſhop of Conſtance, and manie other notable perſonages. And amongſt the dead were the earle of ſaint Agnau and his ſonne, the earle of Chaſteaurouſſe, the ſonne of the marſhall of France Biron: monſieur de Saiſonall gouernor of Wilnord, the ſonne of the lord Miraubrau, and others. A maruellous act of citizens in their defenſe without anie ſoldiors, againſt old ſoldiors and tried men of armes, and number of ſo great nobilitie. A maruellous continencie & clemencie of rough citizens againſt their enimies, in kéeping their hands from the killing of priſoners whome they had in their power, and ſurelie a woonderfull worke of God.

The prince of Orange with others had refuſed to go foorth, and his danger was not ſmall; with other gentlemen more, and lords of the religion. The prince Dolphin, the earle Lamall and others were with the duke lookers on, and interceſſors for their friends whom they reckoned dead. After that fact, the duke with his campe was forced for lacke of vittels and neceſſaries, to retire him with his armie toward Machlin, and from thenſe with great difficultie paſſing great waters, with loſſe of manie a man got to Dermond, where he was kept in by the generall Norris, with thrée and twentie enſignes Engliſhmen and Scots, ſo that he lacked vittels and neceſſaries, whereby he was forced, as alſo to haue his priſoners reſtored, to enter into a treatie with the eſtates, to ſurrender all the townes by his men poſſeſſed, and to retire him to Dunkirke: where further with the eſtates, by interceſſion of princes was hoped a reconcilement to be made. But he ſéeing the countrie vnwilling, and finding himſelfe ſicke (as it was thought) of melancholie, he retired from Dunkirke toward France. And ſo as he was retired, the prince of Parma for king Philip, cauſed Dunkirke to be beſieged, few Frenchmen left within it. And as the ſtates Generall and the prince of Orange would haue ſent thither to reſcue the towne, the marſhall Biron with his Frenchmen and Swiſſers, the Flemings chéeflie they of Gaunt, partlie for hatred of the French, and partlie that manie now were become Spaniſh, would not ſuffer him to come ouer into Flanders, whereby Dunkirke was forced to ſurrender: and this loſſe being imputed to the duke, increaſed his ſickeneſſe, ſo that he died at Chaſteau Thierie the tenth of Iulie 1583, & was roiallie buried at ſaint Diones by Paris.

Francis duke of Aniou and Alanſon retireth.

Generall Norris with 23.enſignes.

Francis duke of Alanſon and of Aniou ſickeneth.

Abr. Fl. ex lib. cui tit. Regret funebre, contenant le diſcours de la mort de Monſeigneur fils de France, frere vnicque, du roy.

¶ But before we paſſe the abſolute cõmemoration of the monſieur, ſith in ſome remembrances we haue atteined to a perfection, it ſhall not be amiſſe héere to annex the manner of his ſickneſſe, as alſo the verie ſpéeches which he vttered, as they are reported by Iames Berſon Pariſien, preacher to the French king, and to the ſaid monſieur, in a diſcourſe by him publiſhed, vnder the title of A funerall complaint, &c. Wherein whatſoeuer is ſpoken, deſerueth the greater credit, for that the ſaid Berſon was vpon his owne certeine knowledge able to giue out the truth, and therfore intimateth to the readers of his treatiſe, that they are not to looke for either flatteries, or hautie, proud, and lieng arguments: he being the man who aſſuredlie was able to anſwer and beare witnes of the pietie, religion, and departure of monſieur, a ſonne of France, and the kings onelie brother in the fauor of God, as the ſame vpon whome he repoſed himſelfe concerning his conſcience, ſoule and ſaluation; and hauing from the beginning of his ſickenes adminiſtred vnto him the holie ſacrament, and did aſſiſt him to the end. You are therfore to vnderſtand, that after * my ſaid lords croſſe haps and danger of life in the low countries, and his returne into his duchie of Caſtle Thierie, his naturall & brotherlie reſolution taken to go alone to Paris, there to yéeld himſelfe to his maieſties armes, a déed to be accounted and taken as a ſtrong bulworke againſt whatſoeuer the popular and enuious ſlanders: after his returne home he conceiued an extreame contentation in dailie hearing of ſermons, yea not ſatiſfied with the onelie hearing of them, he greatlie delited to talke of the ſame, alſo to haue the ſame repeated vnto him. Thus did our Lord in conuenient time diſpoſe his ſoule, which he purpoſed ſhortlie to viſit in his next ſickeneſſe, and that was an ague that continued without equalitie vntill the thirteenth of March, and then he fell into ſo ſtrange a iudgement, that all euen the phyſicians began to doubt of him. For a flux of bloud iſſued ſo continuallie out of his noſe and mouth, that they were ſtill forced to hold him a baſen, whereinto he voided the pure and cleere bloud. When all men were as it were aſtonied thereat, himſelfe began with a perfect mind and vnderſtanding to ſaie; My friends, helpe me, will you ſuffer a chriſtian prince thus to die? Now is the time come that God will call me to account: cauſe monſieur Berſon to come hither.

* Meaning Berſon the monſieurs preacher and the writer of this diſcourſe.

The maner of the monſieurs ſickeneſſe.

When I came, ha monſieur Berſon (ſaid this good prince) I am dead, I muſt acknowledge my God; my frend flatter me not, I will reconcile my ſelfe. Alas I am a great ſinner, will not God haue mercie on me? Will not he forgiue me? I anſwered, There is no dout my lord but vpon humbling your ſelfe before his holie maieſtie with contrition, you ſhall obteine remiſſion of your ſinnes. My lord, you are verie ſicke, I will not flatter with you, but your whole life and your ſelfe reſteth in the hands of God. Sickenes is naturall, or ſent by God for a warning; if your diſeaſe be naturall there is hope: we will vſe all means for remedie. On the one ſide the phyſicians are here readie, who ſhall imploie themſelues. On the other ſide, all the world is in praier & deuotion for your health. If it proceedeth from God, it is a warning to you for the reſt of your life, to the end to draw you neerer to him, either elſe to aduertiſe you of your naturall condition: that is, that you are mortall & muſt once paie this debt, and reſtore your ſoule to God who lent it to you, at whatſoeuer time he ſhall call for it. Now my lord, ſith we can not certeinlie diſcerne the one from the other, is it not beſt for you to conforme your will to Gods will. Alſo in caſe God granteth you to ouerliue this ſickeneſſe, are you not reſolued to better your life, and to liue more in his feare than before? Againe, if he be determined to call you out of this world, are not you content to go into Abrahams boſome, and there to reſt vnder the protection of his mercie? Reſolue your ſelfe my lord, you haue a goodlie ſoule.

Berſons words of comfort to the monſieur, whether his diſeaſe were naturall, or proceeding from God.

The monſieurs reſolute to die.

I am (ſaid this good prince) fullie reſolued in the will of my God, let him doo with me whatſoeuer ſhall pleaſe him: onelie that he will vouchſafe to haue mercie on me. I wold reconcile me but I ſhall hardlie ſpeake: and in truth the bloud ſtill belched out into the baſen which * I held with one hand, whileſt with a handkercher in the other I wiped from his face and breſt a great cold ſweat that euen ſmelt of death: as alſo I perceiued his noſtrils to be cloſed vp, his eies ſunke, and heard the ratling and bloud that ſtopped him vp. Euerie bodie being gone forth I ſaid vnto him, My lord ſtraine not your ſelfe to ſpeake much, onelie begin with the chiefeſt matters, and thoſe that moſt trouble your conſcience, and for the reſt I will inſtruct you. Then ioining his hands and lifting vp his eies vnto heauen, he began to ſigh, mourne, and ſob with extreame contrition and griefe, which when I perceiued, I ſtill indeuoured to aſſure him in talking to him of God and of the merits of the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt, wherein the greater delight that he conceiued, the more did he deteſt himſelfe as a moſt miſerable ſinner: then might you haue ſeene among much ſweat which as pearles ran downe his haire and beard, the great teares trickeling downe his eies, whiles with great paine he accuſed himſelfe.

* Namelie Berſon.

After this, diuerſe ſpeeches paſſed with certeine actions betweene the monſieur and Berſon, which to omit is leſſe offenſiue than to publiſh. To proceed then, the monſieur lieng in his agonie, bethought him (amongeſt other things) of his familie, and ſaid; Alas I mone none but my poore ſeruants, & withall, that I ſhall die without celebration of mine Eaſter: will not the Lord grant me that grace? Then * I promiſed him that God would heare ſo iuſt a petition, and therefore willed him a while to haue patience, it ſhould not be the firſt miracle that euer our Lord had wrought. Hauing thus ſpoken, certeine ceremonies were ſolemnlie commenſed and finiſhed, not without manie ſpeeches interchanged betweene the monſieur and Berſon; inſomuch that (ſaith he) I can not rehearſe all that he ſaid vnto me; but this I dare aſſure you, that if his health had continued, I was thereby in hope of moſt profitable effects to all chriſtendome, and to the eſtate and quietneſſe of our France. But we were not worthie, our ſinnes crieng for vengeance to God, who as he puniſheth nations by giuing them wicked princes, ſo doth he alſo chaſtiſe them by taking from them the good, euen at ſuch time as they are readie to releeue vs, and afterward we haue cauſe to lament and mourne.

* Berſon who was then buſie about certeine ceremonies incident to the time and his office.

Great hope conceiued of the monſieur if he had not beene preuented with death.

His health after this firſt fit continued a while, but by reaſon of a crum of bread that ſtucke in the vuula, and thereby procured a violent cough with ſpitting of bloud, he fell into it againe, and from thenſeforth kept his bed, ſometimes well and ſometimes ill, yet eating his meat reaſonablie well, howbeit gathering no force to the ſubſtance of his bodie. Finallie, the ſame daie that the phyſicians (after the view of the operation of a medicine) had conceiued a better opinion of him than before; being ſaturdaie the ninth of Iune about eight of the clocke at night, he was taken with a maruellous ſhortneſſe of wind, and a paine in one of his ſides: and ſeeing himſelfe ſo taken before anie man ſpake to him, he ſent for me, ſaieng; Now is the time that I muſt die, you haue greatlie abuſed me; howbeit they vſed all diligence. But about midnight, when there was no further hope, they ſent for me. When I was come I found the good prince laid in his eſtate, of whome true I had no other opinion but that death was at hand, and therefore was verie importunat to ſpeake vnto him, fearing leaſt he ſhould haue died without the ſacrament, which ſo greatlie he had longed for.

The monſieur falleth into an extremitie of his maladie, and paſt hope of recouerie.

One commendable matter I noted in [illegible]litie there preſent, which was th[illegible]ce was not one but did importunatlie vrge [illegible]ke vnto him of God: for mine owne part I [illegible]e vnpatient, & euerie one was in feare to [illegible]rſt. One there was that willed me to change my apparell, & to put on a blacke garment, leaſt he ſhould conceiue anie miſtruſt. How (ſaid I) can [illegible] ſo doo? He hath ſent for me, and knoweth my clothing: if by my ſpeech he ſhould know me, and then find my clothing changed, he will enter a greater apprehenſion of death than before: therefore conſider of it, if anie thing fall out amiſſe, it will be a perpetuall reproch to vs all. In the end monſieur Fougier his ſteward a verie wiſe man ſo ordered the matter, and with ſuch diſcretion, that he brake with him of it. At that time was he ouercome with a drowſie ſleepe, and ſtill holden with a ſhort wind, accompanied with continuall ſweats, and ſometime would aſke; Doo men die thus? On the tenth daie of Iune which was ſundaie, after diuers ceremoniall actions diſpatched, and ſpeeches to and fro vttered, with pitifull ſighs on all ſides of inward ſetled ſorow; the monſieur deſired that he might ſleepe a while: but his ſleepe was not long yer he awaked, when betwixt him and Berſon (all the reſt being gone) ſomething was ſaid and doone, which (belike) was not for euerie eare & eie to heare or ſee. In the end, Berſon perceiuing by manifeſt indications, that death preaſed vpon him, vſed theſe words to the monſieur, ſome (of likelihood) being then within the hearing. My lord, in the beginning of your ſickeneſſe, you & I made a ioint promiſe vnto God, wherwith I am burdened: now therefore I doo vnburden my ſelfe thereof, vnleſſe you will helpe to burden me againe. We are witneſſes that you haue loued God: now is the time that you muſt acknowledge him, you are verie ſicke, but your ſoule is ſound in your bodie. If it pleaſe our good God to grant you life, he granteth it to the end you ſhould amend; ſo ſhould your ſelfe be happie, and we content that you ſhould liue. If he vouchſafe to call you into paradiſe, how bleſſed ſhall you be, or where may you be better? So that whatſoeuer happen, be it life, be it death, ſtill ſhall you be content and happie. Reſolue your ſelfe therefore wholie in the will of God. All we here are your faithfull ſeruants, and thoſe who euermore haue deſired to be ſo fortunate as to be honored with your commandements; whoſe eies and eares haue alwaies beene open to heare and obeie you, and to fulfill your will; neuer did you command anie thing, but you were immediatlie obeied. Now know you, that your ſelfe are Gods ſeruant; him you muſt obeie, and to his will muſt you wholie reſolue your ſelfe: whether it be his will you ſhould liue, or is his pleaſure you ſhould die ſtill ſaie: His will be doone.

Doo men die thus? ſaith the monſieur drawing to his end.

Berſons words to the monſieur in the hearing of diuerſe gentlemen preſent.

Then with a forced ſpeech this good prince ſaid: His will be doone. Take no care my lord ſaid I, for anie worldlie matters. Greatneſſe, riches, and renowme doo periſh. Paradiſe is to be found and poſſeſſed. It is a great matter to be a kings ſonne, but it is much greater to be the child of God. You are now as a child new borne, you want nothing but the food of the children of God: you haue no more to doo, but to communicat in the pretious bodie of our Lord: it is here readie, would you not gladlie haue it? I will cauſe you eaſilie to vſe it. He anſwered yes. Then taking the holie ſacrament I began to ſaie vnto him: My Lord Ieſus the heauenlie word and euerlaſting ſonne of God, in old time inuiſible, but in the end viſiblie manifeſt himſelfe to the world in humane fleſh, by taking vpon him our viſible and paſſible nature: but becauſe he was not perpetuallie to remaine in this humane vale, reuiuing and aſcending into heauen, we had him no longer to touch and handle carnallie and viſiblie. And therefore to the end not to faile of his promiſe, that he would be ſtill with vs vntill the conſummation of the world; he hath giuen vs inuiſiblie his pretious bodie & bloud vnder theſe holie ſignes and ſacraments, that by the communion in ſuch and ſo pretious a gift, we might be ſtrengthened in his loue, & through his grace be defended againſt all temptations & ſtumbling blocks of our ſaluation: like Elias, who in the ſtrength of the food for him miraculouſlie ordeined, after his ſleepe trauelled long iournies, euen vntill he did ſee God. Receiue therefore this ſigne and teſtimonie of the remiſſion of your ſinnes, and when you ſhall be preſented before the maieſtie of God, it ſhall be vnto you a badge and token that you belong vnto him.

His will (meaning Gods) be doone, ſaith the monſieur with a forced ſpeech on his death bed.

The inſtitution and vſe of the ſacrament of the bodie and bloud of Chriſt.

Then lifting vp his eies and looking all about him, this good prince opened his mouth, which preſentlie I moiſtened with his drinke, & ſo gaue him the holie ſacrament, and againe powred in ſome of his drinke to ſwallow it withall, which he did both deuoutlie and couragiouſlie; inſomuch that afterward he did eat & ſpeake better than he had doone all the night & morning before, to the great contentation of all the companie: in whoſe preſence I did againe exhort him ſaieng: Now my lord, behold you are armed with the cheefe of all your deſire, I beſeech you comfort your ſelfe in the Lord. It is a great fauour that he hath ſhewed you, in making you (as it appeareth) inheritor vnto the faith, pietie, and chriſtianitie of the kings of France, whoſe faith and deſcent you doo hold.

Let your ſoule now reioiſe, yea although you ſhould now die. Thinke what a contentation vnto you it ſhall be, to be diſcharged from ſo manie worldlie affaires, what a pleaſure to exchange this mortall life for an immortall, glorious and perdurable life; feare no lets: the waie is alreadie beaten, alreadie are they paſſed the ſame, whoſe greatneſſe & faith you doo inſue. The patriarchs doo tarie for you, the prophets doo call you: the apoſtles doo ſtretch foorth their armes vnto you: the martyrs doo inuite you: the confeſſors doo ſolicit you: the virgins doo giue you place: all the ſaincts doo looke for you. We haue diſcharged all the duties of faithfull ſeruants, and ſuch as loue you hartilie. And hauing thus ſpoken, with a demand or two made, and their anſwers added: Berſon, being the mouth of the reſidue, ſaid of the monſieur drawing on; that they (meaning himſelfe and the companie preſent) waited but for the houre of his death: yet had he one houre and a halfe to liue. So ſoone as we were goone, he deſired to haue his head laid lower: his chamberleine immediatlie called to vs for helpe, & ſuddenlie he gaue vp the ghoſt: my ſelfe Iames Berſon, at the diſſolution of his ſweet ſoule from his louelie bodie, vſing theſe words: Go and paſſe on chriſtian ſoule, and returne to him that hath created thee, &c.

Berſons exhortatorie ſpeeches to the monſieur, preparing and ſetling himſelfe to Godward.

He went awaie ſo ſweetlie that it could hardlie be perceiued, inſomuch that ſome who could not be perſuaded that he was dead (for his eies were open and cleere, and his countenance no whit changed) held a looking glaſſe to his mouth, but there was no ſigne of life: others feeling his pulſes, imagined they did beat, but that was bicauſe they were ſtrained euen to the nailes ends. At this word, He is gone, oh what pitie! oh God what tears! what ſighes! what ſobs! all was diſſolued into howling and cries: thoſe that in armor were forwardeſt, were now readieſt in teares, ſundrie ſwooned in the chamber, at the ſound hereof the towne quaked, the caſtell ſounded moſt lamentable voices: yea my ſelfe hauing loſt all courage was forced to open the poole of my head, and to vnſtop the gate of my hart, to the end with teares and lamentations to diſcharge that affection which I bare vnto him.

The monſieurs departure out of this world like a lamp, whoſe light faileth for want of oile.

About foure of the clocke, when all were departed I tooke the linnen wherein he was lapped from about the bodie of this good prince, then did I laie and order it honeſtlie and with reuerence handled it, ſome of vs alſo had ſo good hap as to kiſſe his hands & head. Oh my good lord and maſter, neuer durſt I haue beene ſo bold, had it not beene for the confidence you repoſed in me: alas whie was it ſo late before I did know you, to ſerue you ſo ſmall a time? Infinitlie am I forced to print you in my remembrance, ingraue you in my ſoule, and to burie you in my hart, for that you vouchſafed to make mine eares gardians of that which reſted in your conſcience. Mourne, mourne with me my maſters, and all ye the officers of his houſe: we haue loſt the beſt maſter in the world, for euer ſhall the tenth daie of Iune beare witneſſe of our miſhap: hereafter ſhall we neuer vpon that daie haue occaſion to hold merie feaſt betweene twelue and one of the clocke, the houre of the deceaſe of ſo deſired a prince. The yeare 1584 is indeed a yeare of reuolution. France, France, quarter thine armes, & in lieu of lions ſow in teares: for the Lord taketh from vs all our noble & honorable, Maruellous ſignes of inward loue & rooted affectiō towards the monſieur departed.

These be verie θρηνῳδία & Lachrymarum fontes indeed.

and taketh the good to depriue vs of them, for my part I will beare thee companie. Moreouer for his treſpaſſes I doo giue him flowres, and for his bodie in aſhes the lamentations of Flanders, at the leaſt I inherit in his right an example of vertue, accounting my ſelfe infinitlie bounden vnto their maieſties, who gaue me to doo the ſeruice apperteining to my miniſterie, vnto a prince that loued me ſo much, and in whoſe houſe all men honored me, whoſe orator I doo moſt deuoutlie reſt, deſiring them to haue patience, though for recompenſe they haue no more but my ſelfe. Requieſcat in pace. This is all that we purpoſed to ſaie touching the monſieur, hauing omitted much that is not communicable, & now will we turne our pen vpon paſſage to England, noting occurrents of our owne.]

For he was preacher, &c. to the mounſieur and loſt dimidium animæ ſuæ by his death.

Ground remoued.

The thirteenth daie of Ianuarie, in the pariſh of Ermitage in a place called Blacke more in Dorſetſhire, a peece of ground conteining three acres remoued from the place where it was firſt planted, and was caried cleane ouer an other cloſe, where alder and willow trees grew, the ſpace of fortie goad (euerie goad conteining fifteene foot) and hath ſtopped vp an high waie that directed towards the market towne of Cerne; and yet notwithſtanding the hedges wherewith it was incloſed, inuiron it ſtill, and the trees ſtand thereon bolt vpright, ſauing one oke tree, that is well nigh twentie goads remooued: the place whereas the ground had his being at the firſt is left like vnto a great hollow pit.

Eight perſons killed by the fall of a ſcaffold at the beare garden, a warning to prophaners of the ſabboth daie.

The ſame thirteenth daie of Ianuarie, being ſundaie, about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, the old and vnderpropped ſcaffolds round about the beare garden, commonlie called Paris garden, on the ſouthſide the Thames, ouer againſt the citie of London, ouercharged with people fell ſuddenlie downe, whereby to the number of eight perſons men and women were ſlaine, and manie other ſore hurt and bruſed. A freendlie warning to all ſuch as more delight themſelues in the crueltie of beaſts, to ſee them rent one an other; than in the works of mercie, which are the fruits of a true profeſſed faith, and ought to be the ſabboth daies exerciſe: and not onelie a warning to works of mercie, but a watchword to put vs in mind how we violate the ſabboth daie, the Lords owne daie, which he ſanctified himſelfe, that we by his example might ſanctifie the ſame, and not prophane it with ſuch gentiliſme as we doo, as though God would not call vs to a reckoning for abuſing his holie ordinances, and falſifieng the glorious title of chriſtians in our odious actions: for the which God will ſeuerelie expoſtulat with vs, and with indignation demand of vs why we take his lawes in our mouths, & renounce them in our minds, & why we let them ſwim in our lips, and ſlip from our liues, as the vaine Iewes did, vnto whome God ſaid in diſpleaſure as followeth:

Eob. Heſſ. in Pſal. 50.

Quid de lege mea declamas ore profano?
Non hoc officij debuit eſſe tui:
Cùm tamen & mores & leges oderis æquas,
Et verbi officium negligis omne mei.

William Bruiſtar and Marie Breame ſmothered to death.

On the third of Februarie being ſundaie, William Bruiſtar habardaſher (a man of more than threeſcore yeares old) being lodged ouer the ſouthweſt porch of ſaint Brides church in Fleetſtreet, with a woman named Marie Breame (whome the ſame Bruiſtar had bailed out of Bridewell) were both found ſmothered to death, in maner following. On the ſame ſundaie in the morning, a marriage being ſolemnized in that church, a ſtrong ſauour was felt, which was thought to haue beene the burning of old ſhooes or ſuch like, in ſome gentlemans chamber there about, thereby to ſuppreſſe the infection of the plague. But in the afternoone before euening praier, the pariſhioners eſpied a ſmoke to iſſue out of Bruiſtars chamber, and thervpon made haſt to the doore, which they found faſt locked, and were forced to breake it open, but could not enter, till they had ripped vp the lead and roofe of the chamber to let out the ſmothering ſtench: which being doone, they found Bruiſtar dead, ſitting on a ſettle by his beds ſide (in his apparell, and cloſe truſſed) his right thigh & right arme vp to the elbow burnt or ſcorched with the fire of a ſmall pan of coales that ſtood before him, but now being cleane quenched with the dampe or lacke of aire. The woman alſo laie dead ouer the pan, ſo that hir armes were likewiſe burnt, with the nether part of hir bodie before to hir breſt, and behind to the ſhoulders, and nothing elſe in the chamber burnt, but the bottome of the ſettle wheron Bruiſtar ſat. Of this lamentable accident people talked diuerſlie, and pamphlets were publiſhed to make the ſame more knowne: howbeit, to leaue the certeine meanes of the euent to his knowledge that vnderſtandeth and ſeeth all things, let it be a warning to all ages ſo to liue, as that an honeſt report may attend their death, & ſhame flie from them as a cloud before the wind:

Sic ſapient, ſic non inſipientes erunt.

1583

A man and a woman hanged at Shoolane end.

On the ſixteenth of Aprill about ſix of the clocke in the morning, Thomas Worth & Alice Shepheard, were hanged on a gibbet at Shoolane end in Fleetſtreet, for killing of a prentice in the ſame Shoolane.

The gunpowder houſe in Fetterlane blowne vp.

Alſo on the ſame daie about eight of the clocke in the morning, a gunpowder houſe, called the ſigne of the gun in Fetterlane neere vnto Fleetſtreet, and diuerſe other houſes neere adioining, were blowne vp, with the ſpoile of fiftie hundred weight of powder: two men and one woman were ſlaine, & diuerſe other perſons, as well men as women and children were ſore hurt; ſome blaſted with the flame, ſome bruſed with the fall of timber vpon them, &c.

Palatine of Siradia in Poland came into England.

Albertus Alaſco, free baron of Laſco, Vaiuode, or palatine of Siradia in Poland, arriued at Harwich in Eſſex, and on the laſt of Aprill came by water to Winchester houſe in Southworke, where he remained for the moſt part of his abode heere: of whome more hereafter at his returne into his [illegible]one countrie.

Elias Thackar, and Iohn Coping hanged at B[illegible]

Elias Thackar tailor was hanged at [illegible]int Edmunds burie in Suffolke on the fourth of I[illegible]ne, and Iohn Coping ſhoomaker on the ſixt of the ſa[illegible] moneth, for ſpreading and mainteining certeine bookes ſeditiouſlie penned by one Robert B[illegible]wne againſt the receiued booke of Engliſh common praier, eſtabliſhed by the lawes of this realme their bookes (ſo manie as could be found were burned before them.

Thomas Ratcliſe earle of Suſſex deceaſed.

This yeare on the ni[illegible] of Iune deceaſed Thomas Ratcliſe earle of S[illegible]x, lord chamberleine to hir maieſtie, and knig[illegible] of the garter, at Barmundſeie in the borough of Southworke beſides London, and was on the [illegible]ght of Iulie next following conueied through [illegible]e ſame citie of London toward Newhall in E[illegible] there to be buried in forme folowing. Firſt wen[illegible]n foot before him fortie and fiue poore men in blacke gownes, then on horſſebacke one hundred and twentie ſeruingmen in blacke coats, then ninetie and fiue gentlemen in blacke gownes or clokes, beſides the heralds at armes and other, which bare his helme, creaſt, ſword, coat of armes, and banners of armes, &c. Then the deceaſed earle, couered with a pall of blacke veluet, in a chariot likewiſe couered with blacke veluet, drawne with foure goodlie geldings; next after was led the earles ſteed couered with blacke veluet, then ſir Henrie Ratcliſe the ſucceeding erle chiefe mourner, and eight other lords all in blacke, then the lord maior and his brethren the aldermen of London riding in murraie gownes, then on foot the gentlemen of Greis in, and laſt of all the worſhipfull companie of the merchant tailors of London in their liueries, uerties, for that the ſaid earle was a brother of their companie, as manie noble men, and famous princes, kings of this realme before him had béene; as more at large is declared in * the ſummarie of the chronicles of England, in the eightéenth yeare of king Henrie the ſeuenth. The maior and aldermen, the gentlemen of Greis in, and the merchant tailors accompanied the corps to the barres without Aldgate, and returned. This was the end of that nobleman, who (whiles he liued) aduentured lim and life againſt the enimies of the Engliſh commonwelth, and therefore in reſpect of his excellent ſeruices, deſerued no leſſe remembrance than is alreadie extant of him in print, whereof this following is a parcell:

*I.Stow.

——ſatrapas præclarus, fortis & audax,
Eliſabetha tui ſpecioſi corporis acer
Et fidus cuſtos, diſcrimen adire paratus
Quodlibet, inuicto Mauortis pectore campo:
Cui virtus perſæpè herbam porrexit Hibernus,
Quem pugnis fulgens ornat victoria parta
Sanguineis, ſed laus huic maxima iudicis æqui.

Edmund Grindall archbiſhop of Canturburie deceaſſed.

Edmund Grindall doctor of diuinitie archbiſhop of Canturburie deceaſſed at Croidon in Surrie on the ſixt daie of Julie, & was there buried. This good man in his life time was ſo ſtudious, that his booke was his bride, and his ſtudie his bridechamber, wherevpon he ſpent both his eieſight, his ſtrength, and his health, and therefore might verie well not actiuelie but paſſiuelie be named as (he was) Grindall: for he groond himſelfe euen to his graue by mortification. Of whome much might be ſpoken for others imitation (ſith the vſe of the hiſtorie, is to inſtruct ſuccéeding ages) but this ſhall ſuffice, that as his learning & vertue were inſeparable companions; ſo the reward of both is the good name which he hath left behind him as a monument perpetuall, bicauſe vertue was the founder of the ſame: according to the true ſaieng of the late poet importing no leſſe:

Ale. Ne[illegible] B.L.

Virtutis merces eadem & labor, illa tropheum eſt,
Soláque dat nigræ vincere mortis iter:
Nam niſi virtutis quæratur gloria factis,
Omnis in extremos eſt abitura rogos.

[illegible] Ran[illegible] nine [illegible] pounds.

[illegible]rnard Randolfe eſquier, common ſargeant to [illegible] citie of London, deceaſſed on the ſeauenth of Au[illegible]ſt. This man in his life time, ſomewhat before his death, gaue and deliuered to the companie of the Fiſhmongers in London the ſumme of nine hundred pounds, of good and lawfull monie of England to be imploied towards the conducting of Thames [illegible], ceſternin[illegible] ſame in lead, and caſtelling with ſtone in th[illegible]ſhes of ſaint Marie Magdalene, and ſaint [illegible]las cold abbeie, néere vnto old Fiſhſtréet, ſeaue[illegible]ndred pounds. The other two hundred pounde[illegible] o[illegible]ie for euer yearelie the ſumme of ten pounds, that [illegible]owards the maintenance of a poore ſcholar in the vni[illegible]erſitie of Oxenford yearelie foure pounds. Towa[illegible]s the mending of the high waies in the pariſh of [illegible]ſehurſt, in the countie of Suſſex, where the ſaid B[illegible]nard was borne, euerie yeare foure pounds. And to the poore people of the pariſhes of ſaint Nicholas Oliue in Bredſtréet and ſaint Marie Magdalene néere to old Fiſhſtréet fortie ſhillings, to wit, twentie ſhillings to either pariſh for euer. More he willed and bequeathed by his laſt will and teſtament to be beſtowed in land or annuities, to the reléefe of the poore inhabiting in the wards of Quéenehiue, and caſtell Bainard in the citie of London, and in the aforeſaid pariſh of Tiſehurſt in the countie of Suſſex, the ſumme of one thouſand pounds.

Searouers apprehended and executed.

This yeare in the moneth of June, were ſent to the ſeas, a ſhip called the barke Talbot, and a ſmall barke, both manned with a hundred men, vnder the charge of William Borough eſquier, clerke of hir maieſties nauie, for the apprehending of certeine outragious ſearouers, who for that they were manie in number, and well appointed (contemning the ſmall ſtrength that was ſet out againſt them) ſo boldlie behaued themſelues, as that ſhortlie after it was confidentlie bruted, that they had vanquiſhed in fight the ſaid ſhip and barke. But within few daies after, beyond all expectation, they were by the ſaid William Borough and his companie diſcomfited and taken, to the number of ten ſaile (whereof thrée were priſes) & ſome of the chiefe pirats, namelie Thomas Walton aliàs Purſer, Clinton Atkinſon, William Ellis, William Valentine aliàs Bagh, Thomas Beuen and foure more, on the thirtith of Auguſt were hanged at Wapping in the ooze beſides London. Walton as he went to the gallowes rent his venecian bréeches of crimſin taffata, and diſtributed the ſame péecemeale, to ſuch his old acquaintance as ſtood néere about him: but Atkinſon had before giuen his murrie veluet dublet with great gold buttons, and the like coloured veluet venecians laid with great gold lace (apparell too ſumptuous for ſearouers) which he had worne at the ſeas, & wherein he was brought vp priſoner from Corfe caſtell in the Ile of Porbeke to London, vnto ſuch his fréends as pleaſed him, before he went to Wapping.

A briefe deſcription of Clinton Atkinſon and his parentage.

¶ This Clinton Atkinſon (a perſonable fellow, tall of ſtature and well proportioned, of acceptable behauiour when he kept ſhop for himſelfe, being a frée man of London, and like enough to doo well if he had taken good waies) had his name of the late earle of Lincolne now deceaſſed, who chriſtened him being an infant, & by whoſe ſpeciall meanes (being growne a proper man) he was not long before ſaued from the like death, and yet thorough want of grace making relapſe, fell within danger of law. He deſcended of honeſt parents, his father ſpeciallie being a man of verie honeſt name, one that loued the truth, for the teſtimonie whereof he forſooke his owne natiue countrie, leading a hard life with his familie beyond the ſeas in quéene Maries daies: & returning to England at the inthronization of our gratious quéene Eliſabeth in the ſeat roiall, was made miniſter, in which vocation he died in Gods fauour, and the good opinion of his neighbors, leuing behind him (among other ſonnes) this his eldeſt, ſorted (as you ſée) to the ſhame, which malefactors of that qualitie, and ſo conuinced, can not auoid. This auoweth he that knew the man as well as the right hand from the left. Where (to conclude) we are to marke that it is not alwaies true, that good parents haue good children: for here is an example of degeneration, procured not by euill education (for this Clinton wanted no good bringing vp) but by bad companie and libertie, the verie ſpoile of many a one that otherwiſe might liue & thriue. Wherin by the way we are to wonder at the counſels of God, who ſuffreth children ſo much to varie from their parents in qualitie, as if they had not receiued their birthright, but were baſtards & changlings: but to end with the prophet Dauids ſaieng:

Companie & libertie bring manie to miſerie.

Intima conſilij non penetranda Dei.

An heretike John Lewes burned at Norwich. Sée pag. 1299.

On the eightéenth daie of September, John Lewes, who named himſelfe Abdoit, an obſtinate heretike, denieng the godhead of Chriſt, and holding diuers other deteſtable hereſies (much like to his predeceſſor Matthew Hamont) was burned at Norwich. On the two and twentith of September Albertus de Laſco, palatine of Siradia in Poland, before ſpoken of, now when he had well viewed the order of our Engliſh court and nobilitie; with other places of this realme, eſpeciallie the vniuerſitie of Oxenford, &c: taking leaue of hir maieſtie, and of the nobilitie, he departed towards Poland. But before we make entrance into further occurrents, it ſhall not be amiſſe to touch ſome neceſſarie circumſtances of remembrance.

Palatine of Siradia in Poland returned.

A deſcription of Albertus his perſon, apparell, &c.

This Albertus in the eies of the moſt, whereof ſome knew him, that might hardlie commend him, eſtéemed him a man for making well proportioned, of an indifferent tall ſtature, of countenance amiable, and complexion Engliſh like, hauing a white beard of ſuch length and bredth, as that lieng in his bed, and parting it with his hands, the ſame ouerſpred all his breſt and ſhoulders, himſelfe greatlie deliting therein, and reputing it an ornament: as for his qualities (apparant vnto the world) they were generous, his vtterance ſwéet, his wit plauſible, in the knowledge of toongs well ſéene: his ordinarie attire ſcarlet, but when he preſented himſelfe to hir maieſtie, a robe or gowne of purple veluet, with other habiliments and furniture agréeable; his ſhooes of a ſtrange faſhion, ſuppoſed of ſome not altogither vnlike Chaucers. Finallie, a gallant fellow he was, & (as might be gathered by ſome words ſpoken by him in * open audience) more Martiall than Mercuriall; verie actiue in reſpect of his age, and alſo ſtudious in diuerſe faculties, &c.

* At Oxenford, where he termed the Latine that he ſpake Militare Latinum, that is, ſouldiers Latine.

The lord Norris his daughter maried to ſir A. Paulet his eldeſt ſonne.

Touching the interteinement which he had at Oxenford, and how the vniuerſitie did congratulate his comming, it is ſomewhat worth the noting. In the moneth of June, the ſaid Albertus de Laſco, comming from the marriage of the lord Norris his daughter, with ſir A. Paulets eldeſt ſonne at Ricot, he put himſelfe on the waie to Oxenford; wherof the vniuerſitie (doctor Houenden then vicechancellor, & maiſter Leiſon with maiſter Edes proctors) hauing intelligence, prouided for his conuenient receiuing: inſomuch that in the waie to Oxenford, there met him doctor Weſtfailing, who gréeted him with a pithie ſalutation. In like ſort did the maior and his bréthren, in whoſe behalfe for the whole citie, the towne clerke a worſhipfull maiſter of art, pronounced his ſhort and ſententious ſpéech in Latine, not without ſome gratulatorie gift from that corporation. On the eaſt gate wherat he entered, ſtood a conſort of muſicians, who for a long ſpace made verie ſwéet harmonie, which could not but mooue & delight:

Inſcia plebs populúſque arrectis auribus aſtat,
Dulciſerúmque rudi ſuſcipit aure melos.

The welcomming of Albertus to the vniuerſitie of Oxenford, with a partlie deſcription of his interteinment.

All vp the high ſtréet vnto ſaint Maries church, on either ſide the waie, were decentlie marſhalled ſcholers in their gownes & caps, batchelors and maiſters in their habits and hoods. At ſaint Maries the orator of the vniuerſitie (notable in his facultie) preſented him a booke, in which were cloſelie couched verie rich and gorgeous gloues. From thenſe he marched to Chriſts church, where he was whileſt he abode in the vniuerſitie moſt honourablie interteined. And the firſt night being vacant, as in which he ſought rather reſt in his lodging than recreation in anie academicall paſtimes, ſtrange fire works were ſhewed, in the great quadrangle, beſides rockets and a number ſuch maner of deuiſes. On the ſecond daie, his firſt dinner was made him at Alſoules college, where (beſides dutifull receiuing of him) he was ſolemnelie ſatiſfied with ſcholerlie exerciſes and courtlie fare. This night & the night inſuing, after ſumptuous ſuppers in his lodging, he perſonaly was preſent with his traine in the hall, firſt at the plaieng of a pleaſant comedie intituled Riuales; then at the ſetting out of a verie ſtatelie tragedie named Dido, wherein the quéenes banket (with Eneas narration of the deſtruction of Troie) was liuelie deſcribed in a marchpaine patterne, there was alſo a goodlie ſight of hunters with full crie of a kennell of hounds, Mercurie and Iris deſcending and aſcending from and to an high place, the tempeſt wherein it hailed ſmall confects, rained roſewater, and ſnew an artificiall kind of ſnew, all ſtrange, maruellous, & abundant.

Raine of roſewater, and haile of ſugar confects, &c.

Moſt of the actors were of the ſame houſe, ſix or ſeauen of them were of ſaint Johns, & thrée or foure of other colleges & hals. His ſecond dinner the third daie was at Magdalen college, with oratorie welcomming & bountifull feaſting. His third dinner the fourth daie at New college. The eloquent ſpéech in Gréeke Latine and Dutch with his owne vnſtudied anſwer thervnto, & all other before rehearſed, are not to be omitted; nor the publike philoſophie, phyſike, and diuinitie diſputations, in all which thoſe learned opponents, reſpondents, & moderators, quited themſelues like themſelues, ſharplie and ſoundlie, beſides all other ſolemne ſermons & lectures. At afternoone the fourth & laſt daie, he went towards Woodſtocke manour, and without the north gate by the waie he was inuited vnto a banket at ſaint Johns college, where the gates & outward wals ouercouered with thouſands of verſes, & other emblematicall poetries then offered him, argued their hartie goodwils: but his haſting to his iournies end cauſed him not to tarie the delicat banket; yet onelie ſtaieng the deliuerie of a ſwéet oration and his owne quicke wittie replie therevnto, he departed immediatlie, accompanied for a mile or two with the moſt of thoſe reuerend doctors and heads of houſes all on horſſebacke, where the orator againe gaue him an orators farewell. And this is the ſumme of his interteinement, not deliuered in ſuch ſort as the dignitie of the ſame requireth; howbeit ſufficient for a ſudden remembrance.

Doctor Whitegift archbiſhop of Canturburie.

On the thrée & twentith daie of September, John Whitegift doctor of diuinitie, ſometimes maiſter of Trinitie colledge in Cambridge, and afterwards biſhop of Worceſter, was at Lambhith tranſlated to the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, where he at his comming to Lambehith (as alſo elſewhere he alwaies did) gaue euident teſtimonies both of mindfulneſſe and thankefulneſſe for his aduancements: as by the thrée tables hanging at the vpper end [illegible] this great chamber appeareth: their poſition in th[illegible]t. In the midſt hir maieſties armes roiall arti[illegible]llie wrought, with as much cunning as the pain[illegible] by his pencill could deſcribe them: and vnder [illegible]em this diſtichon of thankeſgiuing, and welwiſhing:

Neſtoreos fœlix regat Eliſabetha per annos,
*Quæ mihi munificè * Candid[illegible] do[illegible] dedit.*

Alluſio, ad D. archiep. nomen.

On the right ſide, the armes of the ſée of Canturburie of azure, a pall ſiluer [illegible]ſhed with croſſes formie fiche ſable ouer a croſſe [illegible]tile gold: to the lower end whereof this diſt[illegible] fairelie fixed:

En leue multiplici premeretur [illegible]a: corpus,
Ni baculus Chriſti grande [illegible]t onus.

Ab. Hart. quondam Cant. & Trinitarius.

On the left ſide are placed [illegible] ancient armes of the ſée of Worceſter, from [illegible]e which he was tranſlated, which are of ſiluer [illegible]n torteaux, foure, thrée, two, one: with this diſ[illegible]on therevnto annexed:

Qui crucis ærumnas p[illegible]ur, poſt fata triumphat,
Lilia ſic ſpondent fuluis coniuncta talentis.]

Ouer & aboue the arms of both the ſaid ſé[illegible]s his graces poſie, Vincit qui patitur: a deſerued poſie, and iuſtified by his actions. The tenth of October at Caſter, a towne in Norffolke néere the ſea coaſt, about two miles from Yarmouth, there was a fiſh of woonderfull length, by force of the wind (being then eaſterlie) driuen a ſhore, the length whereof was from the necke vnto the taile ſeuentéene yards and one foote, hauing a big head; for the chap of the iaw was thrée yards and a quarter in length, with téeth of thrée quarters of a yard compas, great eies, and two great holes ouer them to ſpout out water, hir taile was fourtéene foot broad, &c: ſhe laie in the ſands, and was ſonken therein a yard and a halfe déepe, déepe, and yet was ſhe aboue the ſands ſo high, that a lather of fourtéene ſtaues would but reach to the top of hir backe; ſo that in thickneſſe from the backe to the bellie, ſhe was foure yards and a halfe. John Slade, ſometime a ſchoolemaiſter, and John Bodie a maiſter of art of Oxford, being both indicted and condemned of high treaſon, were drawne, hanged, and quartered: Slade at Wincheſter on the thirtith daie of October, and Bodie at Andouar on the ſecond daie of Nouember.

A monſtrous fiſh taken in Norffolke.

Slade and Bodie executed.

An. Reg. 26. Horſſeſtealers hanged, ten at once in Smithfield.

About this time, one named Ditch a notable horſſeſtealer, was apprehended at the ſeſſions holden for the goale deliuerie at Newgat, on the fourth of December, ninetéene times indicted, whereof he confeſſed eightéene: who alſo betwéene the time of his apprehenſion and the ſaid ſeſſions, appeached manie for ſtealing of horſſes, whereof (diuerſe being apprehended) ten of them were condemned, and hanged in Smithfield on the ſixt daie of December, being Fridaie, and horſſe market there. He alſo holpe diuerſe more to their horſſes againe which had béene ſtolne from them, taking of euerie one of them ten ſhillings the péece or more that ſo recouered their horſſes: wherby he made fiftéene pounds of currant monie towards his charges. James earle of Deſmond in Ireland, ſecretlie wandering without anie ſuccour as a miſerable begger, being taken in his cabbin by one of the Iriſhrie, his head was cut off, and ſent into England, where the ſame (as the head of an archrebell) was ſet vpon London bridge on the thirtéenth daie of December. Looke for the manner of his rebellion and his death more at large ſet downe in the hiſtorie of Ireland.

Deſmonds head ſet on London bridge.

Nantwich in Cheſhire [illegible]

The tenth daie of December, through negligence of vndiſcréet perſons, brewing in the towne of Nantwich, in a place called Waterlode; the fire being careleſlie left, tooke hold (as ſhould ſéeme) vpon ſome ſtraw, or ſuch light matter, & ſo burſt foorth to the roofes of the houſe, and in ſhort time ſo increaſed, [illegible] from the weſt end of the towne (the wind at weſt) the flame was diſperſed ſo furiouſlie in[illegible] towne on the ſouthſide, that in ſhort ſpace a [illegible] part of the ſaid ſouthſide and ſome of the eaſt[illegible] was burned downe to the ground. Which fire [illegible]ning at ſix of the clocke in the euening, and continuing till ſix of the clocke in the morning following, neuer ceaſed burning, till it had conſumed aboue the number of two hundred houſes, beſides [illegible] houſes, barnes, ſtables, &c: in all about ſix [illegible] houſes, [illegible] that by eſtimation of manie, the [illegible] of houſes [illegible] goods amounted to aboue thir[illegible] thouſand [illegible] as more at large appeared by [illegible] par[illegible] of that matter. About this time, John [illegible] furious yoong man of Elſtow in Wa[illegible] of [illegible] diſcouered and taken in his waie com[illegible]ull intent to kill the quéenes maieſtie (wh[illegible] long proſper to reigne ouer vs) confeſſed the [illegible], and that he was moued therevnto in his [illegible] ed in [illegible]erteine traitorous perſons his kinſmen and alies, and alſo by often reading of certeine ſeditious bookes latelie publiſhed, for the which the ſaid Someruile, Edward Arden a ſquire of Parkehall in Warwikeſhire, Marie Arden his wife (father and mother in law to the ſaid Someruile) and Hugh Hall prieſt, being with other before indicted at Warwike, were on the ſixtéenth of December arreigned in the Guildhall of London, where they were found guiltie and condemned of high treaſon. On the nintéenth of December, John Someruile, and Edward Arden, being brought from the tower of London to Newgate of the ſame citie, and there ſhut vp in ſeuerall places: within two houres after, Someruile was found (deſperatlie) to haue ſtrangled himſelfe. And on the morrow being the twentith of December, Edward Arden was drawne from Newgate into Smithfield, and there hanged, boweiled, and quartered: whoſe head with Someruiles was ſet on London bridge, and his quarters on the gates of the citie; but the bodie of Someruile was buried in the Morefields, néere vnto the windmils without Moregate. A dreadfull example of Gods heauie iudgement vpon thoſe two offendors; but ſpeciallie againſt the laſt, whome God deliuered to a reprobat mind, inſomuch that his owne hands became his hangman, preuenting the office of the common executioner, who ſhould haue performed that laſt action vpon him: whereof the iuſtice of God in vengeance made himſelfe the finiſher and fulfiller. Thus much by the waie of terror, that the remembrance hereof, by the reading & reporting of the ſame, maie make men euill minded, amazed at the rigorous reuengement which God taketh (when he ſéeth his due time) vpon the wicked: after his long ſufferance and patience moſt wickedlie abuſed; whereof the poet ſaith:

Someruile, Arden, and others arreigned.

Arden executed.

Vltio procedit (fateor) diuina gradatim,
Nec quoties peccant fulmina vibrat eis:
Supplicij verò iuſta grauitate rependit
Turpia, quæ longo tempore facta tulit.

This booke for the time that it was in requeſt, ſet peoples toongs on worke, and filled their minds with ſtrange conceipts.

In this yeare 1583 (which ſhould haue béene noted in the fore part of the yeare) by the meanes of a certeine aſtrologicall diſcourſe, vpon the great and notable coniunction of the two ſuperior planets, Saturne and Jupiter, prognoſticated to be the eight and twentith of Aprill; the common ſort of people, yea and no ſmall multitude of ſuch as thinke ſcorne to be called fooles, or counted beggers, whileſt they were in expectation of this coniunction, were in no ſmall imaginations, ſuppoſing that no leſſe would haue béene effectuated, than by the ſaid diſcourſe was propheſied. Into theſe fanſies not void of feare and miſtruſt they were drawne with the more facilitie, for that they had read, and heard, & pondered, and ſuſpected, and in part beléeued the predictions of ſuch euents as ſhould enſue by influence of that coniunction. For it was termed the great and notable coniunction, which ſhould be manifeſted to the ignorant ſort, by manie fierce and boiſterous winds then ſodenlie breaking out. It was called the greateſt and moſt ſouereigne coniunction among the ſeuen planets: why ſo? Becauſe lawes, and empires, and regions are ruled by the ſame: which foretelleth the comming of a prophet, & the deſtruction of certeine climats and parts of the earth, and new found hereſies, and a new founded kingdome, and damages through the peſtilence, and abundant ſhowers: which dooth prognoſticat the deſtinie of a great and mightie king, much ſorrow & heauineſſe to men, loſſes to rich and noble men, yea and theſe too which are accounted and reputed like to prophets, and a multitude of locuſts: which dooth foreſhew, that weightie and woonderfull things ſhall come into the world: which dooth threten continuall ouerflowes of waters, and particular deluges in ſome countries: finallie, which menaceth much miſchiefe. The publication, oft reading, and talking of this coniunction, with the remembrance of the inſtant wherin it ſhould be, made manie (when the daie foretold was come) to looke for ſome ſtrange apparition or viſion in the aire; and withall, put them in mind of an old and common propheſie, touching the yeare 1588, which is now ſo rife in euerie mans mouth. That yeare was manie hundred yeares ago foretold and much ſpoken of amongſt aſtrologers, who haue as it were, Vnanimi conſenſu, prognoſticated, that either a maruellous fearfull & horrible alteration of empires, kingdoms, ſegniories and eſtates, togither likewiſe with other moſt woonderfull, and verie extraordinarie accidents,

Why it was called the great coniunction.

Touching the yeare of woonders, gathered to be 1588.

dents, as extreame hunger and peſtilence, deſperat treaſons and commotions ſhall then fall out, to the miſerable affliction and oppreſſion of huge multitudes: or elſe, that an vtter and finall ouerthrowe and deſtruction of the whole world ſhall inſue: which propheſie is conteined in theſe verſes following:

Leouitius Regiomontanus.

Poſt mille expletos à partu Virginis annos,
Et poſt quingentos rurſus ab orbe datos:
Octogeſimus octauus mirabilis annus
Ingruet, is ſecum triſtia [illegible]
Si non hoc anno totus malus occidet orbis,
Si non in nihilum terra, fretúmque ruet:
Cuncta tamen mundi ſurſum ibunt atque retrorſum,
Imperia, & luctus vndique grandis erit.

So that by this propheſie, either a finall diſſolution, or a wonderfull horrible alteration of the world is then to be expected. All theſe conſiderations laid togither, as well the prediction of the coniunction in expectation, as alſo the dreadfull euents, which were to inſue therevpon: and vpon the necke of theſe, the great yeare of 1588 in euerie mans mouth, the more frequent and common by occaſion of a booke extant vnder the title of the end of the world, and the ſecond comming of Chriſt, made diuerſe diuerſlie affected; inſomuch that ſome conuerſing and conferring, looked for no leſſe than was propheſied; and talking verie religiouſlie, ſeemed as though they would become ſanctified people: howbeit, the day of the coniunction being paſt, with a certeine countercheck againſt the ſaid aſtrologicall diſcourſe in ſome points defectiue, and no ſuch euents palpablie perceiued as were prognoſticated; people fell to their former ſecuritie, and condemned the diſcourſer of extreame madneſſe and follie: whereof no more but this, Scientia nullum habet ſibi inimicum præter ignorantem.

The great yeare of 1588 is more talked of than feared.

When people ſaw nothing in the aire (as they looked for) they fell to deriſion.

1584

Cartar executed for printing a traitorous booke.

On the tenth of Ianuarie in the yeare 1584 at a ſeſſions holden in the iuſtice hall in the old bailie of London for goale deliuerie of Newgate, William Cartar of the citie of London was there indicted, arreigned, and condemned of high treaſon, for printing a ſeditious and traitorous booke in Engliſh, intituled A treatiſe of ſchiſme: and was for the ſame (according to ſentence pronounced againſt him) on the next morrow, which was the eleuenth of Ianuarie, drawne from Newgate to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered. And forthwith againſt ſlanderous reports, ſpread abroad in ſeditious books, letters and libels, thereby to inflame the hearts of our countriemen, and hir maieſties ſubiects: a booke was publiſhed, intituled, A declaration of the fauourable dealing of hir maieſties commiſſioners, &c. Which booke I haue thought good in this place to ſet downe (for the better inſtruction of the reader) euen as the ſame was printed and publiſhed, and thus it followeth.

A declaration of the fauorable dealing of hir maieſties commiſſioners, for the examining of traitors.

A declaration of the fauourable dealing of hir maieſties commiſſioners appointed for the examination of certeine traitors, and of tortures vniuſtlie reported to be done vpon them for matters of religion.

To the reader.

GOod reader, although hir maieſties moſt mild and gratious gouernement be ſufficient to defend it ſelfe againſt thoſe moſt ſlanderous reports of heatheniſh and vnnaturall tyrannie and cruell tortures, pretended to haue beene executed vpon certeine traitors, who latelie ſuffered for their treaſon, and others, as well ſpread abroad by rungates, Ieſuits, and ſeminarie men in their ſeditious bookes, letters, and libels, in forren countries and princes courts, as alſo inſinuated into the hearts of ſome of our owne countriemen and hir maieſties ſubiects: yet for thy better ſatiſfaction I haue conferred with a verie honeſt gentleman, whom I knew to haue good and ſufficient meanes to deliuer the truth againſt ſuch forgers of lies and ſhameleſſe ſlanders in that behalfe, which he and other that doo know and haue affirmed the ſame will at all times iuſtifie. And for thy further aſſurance and ſatiſfaction herein, he hath ſet downe to the vew of all men theſe neceſſarie notes following.

Touching the racke and torments vſed to ſuch traitors as pretended themſelues to be catholikes, vpon whom the ſame haue beene exerciſed, it is affirmed for truth, and is offered vpon due examination ſo to be prooued, to be as followeth. Firſt, that the formes of torture in their ſeueritie or rigour of execution, haue not beene ſuch and in ſuch maner performed, as the ſlanderers and ſeditious libellers haue ſlanderouſlie & maliciouſlie publiſhed. And that euen the principall offendor Campion himſelfe, who was ſent & came from Rome, and continued here in ſundrie corners of the realme, hauing ſecretlie wandered in the greateſt part of the ſhires of England in a diſguiſed ſort, to the intent to make ſpeciall preparation of treaſons; and to that end and for furtherance of thoſe his labours, ſent ouer for more helpe and aſſiſtance, and cunninglie and traitorouſlie at Rome before he came from thenſe, procured toleration for ſuch prepared rebels to keepe themſelues couert vnder pretenſe of temporarie and permiſſiue obedience to hir maieſtie the ſtate ſtanding as it doth; but ſo ſoone as there were ſufficient force whereby the bull of hir maieſties depriuation might be publikelie executed, they ſhould then ioine all togither with that force vpon paine of curſſe and damnation: that verie Campion, I ſaie, before the conference had with him by learned men in the Tower, wherin he was charitablie vſed, was neuer ſo racked, but that he was preſentlie able to walke, and to write, and did preſentlie write and ſubſcribe all his confeſſions, as by the originals thereof may euiden[illegible] appeare.

The ſlanderous report concerning the extreame vſe of yͤ racke conuinced.

Campion and Briant were too fauourablie [illegible] offences.

A horrible matter is alſo made of the ſtar[illegible] of one Alexander Briant, how he ſhould eat claie [illegible] the wals, gathered water to drinke from the [illegible]pings of houſes, with ſuch other falſe oſtentati[illegible] of immanitie: where the truth is this, that wh[illegible] Briant ſuffered in want of food, he ſ[illegible] the ſame wilfullie & of extreame impudent ob[illegible]ſtinacie, againſt the mind and liking of thoſe th[illegible] dealt wi[illegible]. For certeine traitorous writin[illegible] being fo[illegible]bout him, it was thought con[illegible] confe[illegible] of hands to vnderſtand who[illegible] they were, and therevpon he being in hir [illegible] commanded to write, which [illegible] and being permitted to him t[illegible] would himſelfe, in theſe termes; that [illegible] not to write one thing, he might write [illegible] what he liſted (which to doo being charg[illegible] maieſties name was his dutie, and to refuſe was diſloiall and vndutifull) yet the man would by no meanes be induced to write anie thi[illegible] at all. Then was it commanded to his keeper [illegible] ue vnto him ſuch meat, drinke, and other conuenient neceſſaries as he would write for, and to forbeare to giue him anie thing for which he would not write.

But Briant being thereof aduertiſed and oft mooued to write, perſiſting ſo in his curſt heart by almoſt two daies and two nights, made choiſe rather to lacke food, than to write for the ſuſtenance which he might readilie haue had for writing, & which he had indeed readilie and plentifullie ſo ſoone as he wrote. And as it is ſaid of theſe two, ſo is it to be ſaid of other; with this, that there was a perpetuall care care had, & the quéenes ſeruants the warders, whoſe office and act it is to handle the racke, were euer by thoſe that attended the examinations ſpeciallie charged, to vſe it in as charitable maner as ſuch a thing might be.

The curſt & ſtubborne hart of Briant.

Secondlie it is ſaid, and likewiſe offered to be iuſtified, that neuer anie of theſe ſeminaries, or ſuch other pretended catholikes, which at anie time in hir maieſties reigne haue béene put to the racke, were vpon the racke or in other torture demanded anie queſtion of their ſuppoſed conſcience; as what they beléeued in anie point of doctrine or faith, as the maſſe, tranſubſtantiation, or ſuch like: but onelie with what perſons at home, or abroad, and touching what plats, practiſes and conferences they had dealt about attempts againſt hir maieſties eſtate or perſon, or to alter the lawes of the realme for matters of religion, by treaſon or by force, and how they were perſuaded themſelues, and did perſuade other touching the popes bull and pretenſe of authoritie, to depoſe kings and princes; and namelie, for depriuation of hir maieſtie, and to diſcharge ſubiects from their allegiance, expreſſing herein alwaie the kinglie powers and eſtates, and the ſubiects allegiance ciuillie, without mentioning or meaning therein anie right that the quéene as in right of the crowne hath ouer perſons eccleſiaſticall being hir ſubiects. In all which caſes, Campion and the reſt neuer anſwered plainelie, but ſophiſticallie, deceiptfullie and traitorouſlie, reſtraining their confeſſion of allegiance onelie to the permiſſiue forme of the popes toleration. As for example, if they were aſked, whether they did acknowledge themſelues the quéenes ſubiects and would obeie hir, they would ſaie, Yea: for ſo they had leaue for a time to doo. But adding more to the queſtion, and they being aſked, if they would ſo acknowledge & obeie hir anie longer than the pope would ſo permit them; or notwithſtanding ſuch commandement as the pope would or might giue to the contrarie: then they either refuſed to obeie, or de[illegible] anſwer; or ſaid, that they could not anſwer [illegible] queſtions without danger. Which verie an[illegible] without more ſaieng, was a plaine anſwer to [illegible]ſonable vnderſtanding, that they would no[illegible]r be ſubiects, nor perſuade other to be ſubiects, th[illegible]e pope gaue licence. And at their verie arreignement, when they labored to leaue in the minds of the people and ſtanders by, an opinion that they were to die, not for treaſon, but for matter of faith and conſcience [illegible] doctrine, touching the ſeruice of God, without [illegible] attempt or purpoſe againſt hir maieſtie, they [illegible]t that they were true ſubiects, and did and [illegible] and ſerue hir maieſtie. Immediatlie, to [illegible]r that hypocriticall and ſophiſticall ſpeac[illegible] to a perpetuitie of their obedience, [illegible] as the pope ſo permitted, or no; they were [illegible] in place of iudgement aſked by the quéenes [illegible] councell, whether they would ſo obeie and [illegible]ects, if the pope commanded the contra[illegible] plainlie diſcloſed themſelues in anſwer, ſa[illegible]g by the mouth of Campion: This place (meaning the court of hir maieſties Bench) hath no power to inquire or iudge of the holie fathers authoritie: and other anſwer they would not make.

Ergo it is falſe which the infamous libeller hath ſet abrode, Religio crimen non male viſa fuit.

This is conſonant to the report ſet downe before in the diſcouerie [illegible]

What allegiance theſe fellows meant to hir maieſtie may appéere by theſe words of Campion, being the mouth of the reſt.

Thirdlie, that none of them haue béene put to the racke or torture, no not for the matters of treaſon, or partnerſhip of treaſon or ſuch like, but where it was firſt knowen and euidentlie probable by former detections, confeſſions, and otherwiſe, that the partie ſo racked, or tortured, was giltie, and did know, and could deliuer truth of the things wherewith he was charged: ſo as it was firſt aſſured, that no innocent was at anie time tormented, and the racke was neuer vſed to wring out confeſſions at aduenture vpon vncertenties, in which dooing it might be poſſible that an innocent in that caſe might haue bin racked.

Fourthlie, that none of them hath béene racked or tortured, vnleſſe he had firſt ſaid expreſlie, or amounting to aſmuch, that he will not tell the truth, though the quéene command him. And if anie of them being examined did ſaie he could not tell, or did not remember, if he would ſo affirme in ſuch maner as chriſtians among chriſtians are beléeued; ſuch his anſwer was accepted, if there were not apparant euidence to prooue that he wilfullie ſaid vntrulie. But if he ſaid that his anſwer in deliuering truth, ſhould hurt a catholike, & ſo be an offenſe againſt the charitie, which they ſaid to be ſinne, & that the quéene could not command them to ſin, & therfore how ſoeuer the quéene commanded, they would not tell the truth, which they were knowen to know, or to ſuch effect: they were then put to the torture, or elſe not.

As namelie Campion, of whom an infamous libeller reporteth (in commendation forſooth of his conſtancie) Non ſecreta mea tortus licèt ore fatebor.

Fiftlie, that the procéeding to torture was alwaie ſo ſlowlie, ſo vnwillinglie, & with ſo manie preparations of perſuaſions to ſpare themſelues, and ſo manie meanes to let them know that the truth was by them to be vttered, both in dutie to hir maieſtie, and in wiſedome for themſelues, as whoſoeuer was preſent at thoſe actions, muſt néedes acknowledge in hir maieſties miniſters, a full purpoſe to follow the example of hir owne moſt gratious diſpoſition: whome God long preſerue.

Thus it appéereth, that albeit by the more generall lawes of nations, torture hath béene, and is lawfullie iudged to be vſed in leſſer caſes, and in ſharper maner for inquiſition of truth in crimes not ſo néere extending to publike danger, as theſe vngratious perſons haue committed, whoſe conſpiracies and the particularities thereof it did ſo much import and behooue to haue diſcloſed: yet euen in that neceſſarie vſe of ſuch procéeding, inforced by the offendors notorious obſtinacie, is neuertheleſſe to be acknowledged the ſwéet temperature of hir maieſties mild and gratious clemencie, and their ſlanderous lewdneſſe to be the more condemned, that haue in fauour of hainous malefactors, and ſtubborne traitors, ſpred vntrue rumors and ſlanders, to make hir mercifull gouernement diſliked, vnder falſe pretenſe and rumors of ſharpeneſſe and crueltie to thoſe, againſt whom nothing can be cruell, and yet vpon whom nothing hath béene doone but gentle and mercifull.

The execution of iuſtice in England for maintenance of publike and chriſtian peace, againſt certeine ſtirrers of ſedition, and adherents to the traitors and enimies of the realme, without anie perſecution of them for queſtions of religion, as is falſlie reported and publiſhed by the fautors and foſterers of their treaſons.

IT hath béene in all ages and in all countries a common vſage of all offendors, for the moſt part, both great and ſmall, to make defenſe of their lewd and vnlawfull facts by vntruths, and by colouring and couering their déeds (were they neuer ſo vile) with pretenſes of ſome other cauſes of contrarie operations or effects: to the intent not onelie to auoid puniſhment or ſhame, but to continue, vphold, and proſecute their wicked attempts, to the full ſatiſfaction of their diſordered and malicious appetites. And though ſuch hath béene the vſe of all offendors, yet of none with more danger than of rebels and traitors to their lawfull princes, kings, and countries. Of which ſort of late yeares are ſpeciallie to be noted certeine perſons naturallie borne ſubiects in the realme of England and Ireland, who hauing for ſome good time profeſ-

All offendors couer their faults with contrarie cauſes.

Rebels do moſt dangerouſlie couer their faults.

Rebellion in England and Ireland.

profeſſed outwardlie their obedience to their ſoueraigne ladie quéene Eliſabeth, haue neuertheleſſe afterward béene ſtirred vp and ſeduced by wicked ſpirits, firſt in England ſundrie yeares paſt, and ſecondlie and of later time in Ireland, to enter into open rebellion, taking armes and comming into the field againſt hir maieſtie and hir lieutenants, with their forces vnder banners diſplaied, inducing by notable vntruths manie ſimple people to follow and aſſiſt them in their traitorous actions.

The rebels vanquiſhed by the quéens power.

Some of the rebels fled into forreine countries.

And though it is verie well knowen, that both their intentions and manifeſt actions were bent to haue depoſed the quéenes maieſtie from hir crowne, and to haue traitorouſlie ſet in hir place ſome other whome they liked, whereby if they had not béene ſpéedilie reſiſted, they would haue committed great bloodſheds and ſlaughters of hir maieſties faithfull ſubiects, and ruined their natiue countrie: yet by Gods power giuen vnto hir maieſtie, they were ſo ſpéedilie vanquiſhed, as ſome few of them ſuffered by order of law according to their deſerts, manie & the greateſt part vpon confeſſion of their faults were pardoned, the reſt (but they not manie) of the principall, eſcaped into forren countries, & there, bicauſe in none or few places rebels and traitors to their naturall princes and countries dare for their treaſons chalenge at their firſt muſter open comfort or ſuccour, theſe notable traitors and rebels haue falſelie informed manie kings, princes and ſtates, and ſpeciallie the biſhop of Rome, commonlie called the pope (from whom they all had ſecretlie their firſt comfort to rebell) that the cauſe of their flieng from their countries was for the religion of Rome, and for maintenance of the ſaid popes authoritie: whereas diuerſe of them before their rebellion liued notoriouſlie, the moſt part of their liues, out of all good rule, either for honeſt maners, or for anie ſenſe in religion, as they might haue béene rather familiar with Catiline, or fauourers to Sardanapalus, than accounted good ſubiects vnder anie chriſtian princes. As for ſome examples of the heads of theſe rebellions, out of England fled Charles Neuill earle of Weſtmerland, a perſon vtterlie waſted by looſeneſſe of life, and by Gods puniſhment euen in the time of his rebellion bereaued of his children that ſhould haue ſucceeded him in the earledome, and his bodie now eaten with vlcers of lewd cauſes (as his companions doo ſaie) that no enimie he hath can wiſh him a viler puniſhment: a pitifull loſſe to the realme of ſo noble a houſe, neuer before in anie age atteinted for diſloialtie. And out of Ireland ran awaie one Thomas Stukeleie, a defamed perſon almoſt thorough all chriſtendome, and a faithleſſe beaſt rather than a man, fléeing firſt out of England for notable piracie, and out of Ireland for trecheries not pardonable, which two were the firſt ringleaders of the reſt of the rebels, the one for England, the other for Ireland.

Rebels pretend religion for their defenſe.

Ringleaders of rebels, Charles Neuill earle of Weſtmerland, and Thomas Stukeleie.

The effect of the popes bull againſt the quéene of England.

But notwithſtanding the notorious euill and wicked liues of theſe & others their confederats, void of all chriſtian religion, it liked the biſhop of Rome, as in fauour of their treaſons, not to colour their offenſes, as themſelues openlie pretend to doo, for auoiding of common ſhame of the world: but flatlie to animate them to continue their former wicked purpoſes, that is, to take armes againſt their lawfull quéene, to inuade hir realme with forren forces, to purſue all hir good ſubiects & their natiue countries with fire and ſword: for maintenance whereof there had ſome yeares before, at ſundrie times, procéeded in a thundering ſort, buls, excommunications, and other publike writings, denouncing hir maieſtie being the lawfull quéene, and Gods annointed ſeruant not to be the quéene of the realme, charging and vpon paines of excommunication commanding all hir ſubiects to depart from their naturall allegiances, whereto by birth and by oth they were bound: prouoking alſo and authoriſing all perſons of all degrées within both the realmes to rebell. And vpon this antichriſtian warrant, being contrarie to all the lawes of God and man, & nothing agréeable to a paſtorall officer, not onelie all the rable of the foreſaid traitors that were before fled; but alſo all other perſons that had forſaken their natiue countries, being of diuerſe conditions and qualities, ſome not able to liue at home but in beggerie, ſome diſcontented for lacke of preferments, which they gaped for vnworthilie in vniuerſities and other places, ſome bankerupt merchants, ſome in a ſort learned to contentions, being not contented to learne to obeie the laws of the land, haue manie yeares running vp and downe, from countrie to countrie, practiſed ſome in one corner, ſome in an other, ſome with ſéeking to gather forces and monie for forces, ſome with inſtigation of princes by vntruths, to make warre vpon their naturall countrie, ſome with inward practiſes to murther the greateſt, ſome with ſeditious writings, and verie manie of late with publike infamous libels, full of deſpitefull vile termes and poiſoned lies, altogither to vphold the foreſaid antichriſtian and tyrannous warrant of the popes bull.

The practiſes of the traitors rebels, and fugitiues to execute the bull.

Seminaries erected to nurſſe ſeditious fugitiues.

And yet alſo by ſome other meanes, to further theſe inuentions, bicauſe they could not readilie preuaile by waie of force, finding forren princes of better conſideration & not readilie inclined to their wicked purpoſes, it was deuiſed to erect vp certeine ſchooles which they called ſeminaries, to nouriſh and bring vp perſons diſpoſed naturallie to ſedition, to continue their race & trade, and to become ſéedmen in their tillage of ſedition, and them to ſend ſecretlie into theſe the quéenes maieſties realmes of England & Ireland vnder ſecret maskes, ſome of prieſthood, ſome of other inferiour orders, with titles of ſeminaries for ſome of the meaner ſort, and of Ieſuits for the ſtagers and ranker ſort and ſuch like, [illegible] ſo warilie they crept into the land, as none [illegible] the markes of their prieſthood with them. Bu [illegible] uers corners of hir maieſties dominions theſe [illegible] naries or ſéedmen and Ieſuits, bringing with [illegible] certeine Romiſh traſh, as of their hallow [illegible] ar, their Agnus Dei, their graines, and manie kind of beads, and ſuch like, haue as tillagemen laboured ſecretlie to perſuade the people to allow of the popes foreſaid buls and warrants, & of [illegible] abſolute authoritie ouer all princes and coun [illegible] s, and ſtrikin [illegible] manie with pricks of conſcien [illegible] obeie the ſa [illegible] whereby in proceſſe of ſmall [illegible] wicked and dangerous, traitorous, & [illegible] had not béene by Gods goodneſſe eſpied [illegible], there had followed imminent danger [illegible] ors in the realmes, and a manifeſt [illegible] deſtruction of great multitudes of chriſtians.

The ſeminarie fugitiues come ſecretlie into the realme to induce the people to obeie the popes bull.

For it can no [illegible] dent that ſo manie as ſhould haue béene indu [illegible] ouſlie perſuaded to haue obeied that wicke [illegible] arrant of the popes, and the contents thereof, would haue béene forthwith [illegible] their harts and conſciences ſecret traitors, and for to be in déed errant and open traitors: there ſhould haue wanted nothing but opportunitie to féele their ſtrength & to aſſemble themſelues in ſuch numbers with armour and weapons, as they might haue preſumed to haue béene the greater part, and ſo by open ciuill warre to haue come to their wicked purpoſes. But Gods goodneſſe, by whome kings doo rule, and by whoſe blaſt traitors are commonlie waſted and confounded, hath otherwiſe giuen to hir maieſtie as to his handmaid and deare ſeruant, ruling vnder him, the ſpirit of wiſedome and power, whereby by ſhe hath cauſed ſome of theſe ſeditious ſeedmen and ſowers of rebellion, to be diſcouered for all their ſecret lurkings, and to be taken and charged with theſe former points of high treaſon, not being dealt withall vpon queſtions of religion, but iuſtlie by order of lawes, openlie condemned as traitors.

Sowers of ſedition taken, condemned, & executed for treaſon.

At which times, notwithſtanding all maner gentle waies of perſuaſions vſed, to mooue them to deſiſt from ſuch manifeſt traitorous courſes and opinions with offer of mercie; yet was the canker of their rebellious humors ſo deepelie entered and grauen into the harts of manie of them, as they would not be remooued from their traitorous determinations. And therefore as manifeſt traitors in mainteining and adhering to the capitall enimie of hir maieſtie & hir crowne (who hath not onelie beene the cauſe of two rebellions alreadie paſſed in England and Ireland, but in that of Ireland did manifeſtlie wage and mainteine his owne people, capteins, and ſouldiers vnder the banner of Rome, againſt hir maieſtie, ſo as no enimie could doo more) theſe I ſaie haue iuſtlie ſuffered death not by force or forme of anie new lawes eſtabliſhed, either for religion or againſt the popes ſupremaſie, as the ſlanderous libellers would haue it ſeeme to be; but by the ancient temporall lawes of the realme, and namelie by the laws of parlement made in king Edward the third his time, about the yeare of our Lord 1330, which is aboue two hundred yeares and more paſt, when the biſhops of Rome and popes were ſuffered to haue their authoritie eccleſiaſticall in this realme, as they had in manie other countries. But yet of this kind of offendors, as manie of them, as after their condemnations were contented to renounce their former traitorous aſſertions; ſo manie were ſpared from execution, & doo liue ſtill at this daie: ſuch was the vnwillingnes in hir maieſtie to haue anie bloud ſpilt, without this verie vrgent, iuſt, and neceſſarie cauſe proceeding from themſelues.

The ſeditious traitors condemned by the ancient lawes of the realme, made two hundred yeres paſt.

Perſons condemned, ſpared from execution, vpon refuſall of their traitorous opinions.

And yet neuertheleſſe, ſuch of the reſt of the traitors as remaine in forren parts, continuing ſtill their rebellious minds, and craftilie keeping themſelues alofe off from dangers, ceaſſe not to prouoke ſundrie other inferiour ſeditious perſons, newlie to ſteale ſecretlie into the realme, to reuiue the former ſeditious practiſes, to the execution of the popes foreſaid bull againſt hir maieſtie and the realme, pretending when they are apprehended, that they came onelie into the realme by the commandement of their ſuperiors, the heads of the Ieſuits, to whome they are bound (as they ſaie) by oth againſt either king or countrie, and here to informe or reforme mens conſciences from errors in ſome points of religion, as they thinke meet. But yet in verie truth, the whole ſcope of their ſecret labours is manifeſtlie prooued, to be ſecretlie to win all people, with whom they dare deale; ſo to allow of the popes ſaid buls, and of his authoritie without exception, as in obeieng thereof, they take themſelues fullie diſcharged of their allegiance and obedience to their lawfull prince and countrie: yea, and to be well warranted to take armes to rebell againſt hir maieſtie, when they ſhall be therevnto called; and to be readie ſecretlie to ioine with any forren force that can be procured to inuade the realme, whereof alſo they haue a long time giuen, and yet doo for their aduantage, no ſmall comfort of ſucceſſe. And ſo conſequentlie the effect of their labours is to bring the realme not onelie into a dangerous warre againſt the forces of ſtrangers (from which it hath beene free aboue three and twentie or foure and twentie yeares, a caſe verie memorable and hard to be matched with an example of the like) but into a warre domeſticall and ciuill, wherein no bloud is vſuallie ſpared, nor mercie yeelded, and wherein neither the vanquiſhor nor the vanquiſhed can haue iuſt cauſe of triumph.

The forren traitors continue ſending perſons to moue ſedition in the realme.

The ſeditious fugitiues labour to bring the realme into a warre externall and domeſticall.

And forſomuch as theſe are the moſt euident perils that neceſſarilie ſhould follow, if theſe kind of vermine were ſuffered to creepe by ſtealth into the realme, and to ſpred their poiſon within the ſame, howſoeuer when they are taken, like hypocrits, they colour and counterfeit the ſame with profeſſion of deuotion in religion: it is of all perſons to be yeelded in reaſon, that hir maieſtie and all hir gouernours and magiſtrats of iuſtice, hauing care to mainteine the peace of the realme (which God hath giuen in hir time, to continue longer than euer in anie time of hir progenitors) ought of dutie to almightie God the author of peace, and according to the naturall loue and charge due to their countrie, and for auoiding of the flouds of bloud, which in ciuill warres are ſeene to run and flow, by all lawfull meanes poſſible, as well by the ſword as by law, in their ſeuerall ſeaſons to impeach and repell theſe ſo manifeſt and dangerous colourable practiſes, and works of ſedition and rebellion.

The dutie of the queene and all hir gouernors to God and their countrie, is to repell practiſes of rebellion.

And though there are manie ſubiects knowne in the realme, that differ in ſome opinions of religion from the church of England and that doo alſo not forbeare to profeſſe the ſame: yet in that they doo alſo profeſſe loialtie and obedience to hir maieſtie, and offer readilie to hir maieſties defenſe, to impugne & reſiſt anie forreine force, though it ſhould come or be procured from the pope himſelfe: none of theſe ſort are for their contrarie opinions in religion proſecuted or charged with anie crimes or paines of treaſon, nor yet willinglie ſearched in their conſciences for their contrarie opinions, that ſauour not of treaſon. And of theſe ſorts, there haue beene and are a number of perſons, not of ſuch baſe and vulgar note as thoſe which of late haue beene executed, as in particular, ſome by name are well knowne, and not vnfit to be remembred. The firſt and chiefeſt by office was doctor Heth, that was archbiſhop of Yorke, and lord chancellor of England in queene Maries time; who at the firſt comming of hir maieſtie to the crowne, ſhewing himſelfe a faithfull and quiet ſubiect, continued in both the ſaid offices, though in religion then manifeſtlie differing; and yet was he not reſtreined of his libertie, nor depriued of his proper lands and goods, but leauing willinglie both his offices, liued in his owne houſe verie diſcreetlie, and inioied all his purchaſed lands during all his naturall life, vntill by verie age he departed this world, and then left his houſe and liuing to his friends. An example of gentleneſſe neuer matched in queene Maries time.

None charged with capitall crimes, being of a contrarie religion, and profeſſing to withſtand forreine forces.

The like did one doctor Poole that had beene biſhop of Peterborough, an ancient graue perſon, and a verie quiet ſubiect. There were alſo others that had beene biſhops and in great eſtimation, as doctor Tunſtall biſhop of Dureſme, a perſon of great reputation, and alſo whileſt he liued of verie quiet behauiour. There were alſo other, as doctor White & doctor Oglethorpe, the one of Wincheſter, the other of Carlill, biſhops, perſons of courteous natures, and he of Carlill ſo inclined to dutifulnes to the queenes maieſtie, as he did the office at the conſecration and coronation of hir maieſtie in the church of Weſtminſter: and doctor Thurlebie, & doctor Watſon yet liuing, one of Elie, the other of Lincolne, biſhops: the one of nature affable, the other altogither ſowre, and yet liuing. Whereto may be added the biſhop then of Exceſter, Turberuile, an honeſt gentleman, but a ſimple biſhop, who liued at his owne libertie to the end of his life: and none of all theſe preſſed with anie capitall paine, though they mainteined the popes authoritie againſt the lawes of the realme. And ſome abbats, as maiſter Feckenam yet liuing, a perſon alſo of quiet and courteous behauiour, for a great time. Some alſo were deanes, as doctor Borall deane of Windſore, a perſon of great modeſtie, learning and knowledge: doctor Cole deane of Paules, a perſon more earneſt than diſcreet: doctor Reinolds deane of Exceſter, not vnlearned, and manie ſuch others, hauing borne office & dignities in the church, & that had made profeſſion againſt the pope, which they onelie began in queene Maries time to change: yet were theſe neuer to this daie burdened with capitall peanes, nor yet depriued of anie their goods or proper liuelods; but onelie remoued from their eccleſiaſticall offices, which they would not exerciſe according to the lawes. And moſt of them, & manie other of their ſort for a great time were deteined in biſhops houſes in verie ciuill and courteous maner, without charge to themſelues or their friends, vntill the time that the pope began by his buls & meſſages, to offer trouble to the realme by ſtirring of rebellion. About which time onlie, ſome of theſe aforenamed, being found buſier in matters of ſtate tending to ſtir troubles, than was meete for the common quiet of the realme, were remoued to other more priuat places, where ſuch other wanderers as were men knowne to moue ſedition, might be reſtreined from common reſorting to them to increaſe trouble; as the popes bull gaue manifeſt occaſion to doubt: and yet without charging them in their conſciences or otherwiſe, by anie inquiſition to bring them into danger of anie capitall law: ſo as no one was called to anie capitall or bloudie queſtion vpon matters of religion, but haue all inioied their life as the courſe of nature would: and ſuch of them as yet remaine, may (if they will not be authors or inſtruments of rebellion or ſedition) inioie the time that God and nature ſhall yeeld them without danger of life or member.

Names of diuerſe eccleſiaſticall perſons profeſſing contrarie religion, neuer charged with capitall crimes.

The late fauorers of the popes authoritie were the chiefe aduerſaries of the ſame, by their doctrines and writings.

And yet it is worthie to be well marked, that the chiefeſt of all theſe and the moſt of them, had in time of king Henrie the eight, and king Edward the ſixt, either by preaching, writing, reading, or arguing, taught all people to condemne, yea to abhorre the authoritie of the pope: for which purpoſe they had many times giuen their othes publikelie, againſt the popes authoritie, and had alſo yeelded to both the ſaid kings the title of ſupreame hed of the church of England next vnder Chriſt, which title the aduerſaries doo moſt falſelie write and affirme, that the queenes maieſtie now vſeth: a manifeſt lie & vntruth, to be ſeene by the verie acts of parlement, and at the beginning of hir reigne omitted in hir ſtile. And for proofe that theſe foreſaid biſhops and learned men had ſo long time diſauowed the popes authoritie, manie of their books and ſermons againſt the popes authoritie remaine printed both in Engliſh and Latin to be ſeene in theſe times, to their great ſhame and reproofe to change ſo often, but ſpeciallie in perſecuting ſuch as themſelues had taught and ſtabliſhed to hold the contrarie. A ſin, neere the ſin againſt the holie ghoſt.

A great number of laie perſons of liuelod being of a contrarie religion, neuer charged with capitall crime.

There were alſo and yet be a great number of others, being laie men of good poſſeſſions and lands, men of good credit in their countries, manifeſtlie of late time ſeduced to hold contrarie opinions in religion for the popes authoritie: and yet none of them haue beene ſought hitherto to be impeached in anie point or quarell of treaſon, or of loſſe of life, member or inheritance. So as it may plainelie appeare, that it is not, nor hath beene for contrarious opinions in religion, or for the popes authoritie alone, as the aduerſaries doo boldlie and falſlie publiſh, that anie perſons haue ſuffered death ſince hir maieſties reigne. And yet ſome of theſe ſort are well knowne to hold opinon, that the pope ought by authoritie of Gods word to be ſupreame and onelie head of the catholike church through the whole world, and onelie to rule in all cauſes eccleſiaſticall, and that the queenes maieſtie ought not to be the gouernour ouer anie hir ſubiects in hir realme being perſons eccleſiaſticall: which opinions are neuertheleſſe in ſome part by the lawes of the realme puniſhable in their degrees. And yet for none of theſe points haue anie perſons beene proſecuted with the charge of treaſon, or in danger of life.

No perſon charged with capitall crime for the onelie maintenance of the popes ſupremaſie.

Foure points of treaſon.

Such cõdemned onelie for treaſon, as mainteine the effects of the popes bull againſt hir maieſtie and the realme.

And if then it be inquired, for what cauſe theſe others haue of late ſuffered death, it is trulie to be anſwered as afore is often remembred, that none at all were impeached for treaſon to the danger of their life, but ſuch as did obſtinatlie mainteine the contents of the popes bull afore mentioned; which doo import, that hir maieſtie is not the lawfull queene of England, the firſt and higheſt point of treaſon: and that all hir ſubiects are diſcharged of their oths and obedience; a ſecond high point of treaſon: and all warranted to diſobeie hir and hir lawes; a third and a verie large point of treaſon. And thereto is to be added a fourth point moſt manifeſt, in that they would not diſallow the popes hoſtile proceedings in open warres againſt hir maieſtie in hir realme of Ireland, where one of their companie doctor Sanders, a lewd ſcholer and ſubiect of England, a fugitiue and a principall companion and conſpirator with the traitors and rebels at Rome, was by the popes ſpeciall cõmiſſion a commander, as in forme of a legat, and ſometime a burſor or paiemaſter for thoſe wars. Which doctor Sanders in his booke of his church monarchie, did afore his paſſing into Ireland openlie by writing, gloriouſlie auow the foreſaid bull of Pius Quintus againſt hir maieſtie, to be lawfull; and affirmeth that by vertue thereof one doctor Morton, an old Engliſh fugitiue and conſpirator, was ſent from Rome into the north parts of England, which was true, to ſtirre vp the firſt rebellion there, whereof Charles Neuill the late earle of Weſtmerland was a head capteine.

Doctor Sanders maintenance of the popes bull.

The perſons that ſuffered death, were condemned for treaſon & not for religion.

And thereby it may manifeſtlie appeere to all men, how this bull was the ground of the rebellions both in England and Ireland, and how for maintenance thereof, and for ſowing of ſedition by warrant [illegible] allowance of the ſame, theſe perſons were iuſtlie condemned of treaſon, and lawfullie executed by the ancient lawes temporall of the realme, without charging them for anie other matter than for their practiſes and conſpiracies both abroad and at home againſt the queene and the realme, [illegible] for the mainteining of the popes foreſaid auth[illegible] and bull, publiſhed to depriue hir maieſtie of [illegible] crowne, and for withdrawing and reconciling [illegible] hir ſubiects from their naturall allegiance due to hir maieſtie and to their countrie, and for mouth[illegible] them to ſedition: and for no other cauſes or queſt[illegible]ns of religion were theſe perſons condemned; a[illegible]ough true it is, that when they were charged [illegible]nced of theſe points of conſpiracies and treaſons, they would ſtill in their anſwers colourablie pretend their actions to haue beene for religion: but in deed and truth they were manifeſted to be for the procurement and maintenance of the rebellions and wars againſt hir maieſtie and hir realme.

The diuerſitie betwixt truth and falſhood.

And herein is now the manifeſt diuerſitie to be ſeene and well conſidered betwixt the truth of hir maieſties actions, & the falſhood of the blaſphemous aduerſaries: that where the factious partie of the pope the principall author of the inuaſions of hir maieſties dominions, doo falſelie allege that a number of perſons, whom they terme as martyrs, haue died for defenſe of the catholike religion; the ſame in verie truth may manifeſtlie appeere to haue died (if they ſo will haue it) as martyrs for the pope, but yet as traitors againſt their ſoueraigne and queene in adhering to him, being the notable and onelie open hoſtile enimie in all actions of warre againſt hir maieſtie, hir kingdomes and people: and that this is the meaning of all theſe that haue ſo obſtinatlie mainteined the authoritie and contents of this bull, the verie words of the bull doo declare in this ſort, as doctor Sanders reporteth them.

I ſhall proue that the maintenors of the bull are directlie guiltie of treaſon.

Pius Quintus pontifex maximus, de apoſtolicæ poteſtatis plenitudine, declarauit Eliſabetham prætenſo regni iure, necnon omne & quocunque dominio, dignitate, priuilegióque priuatam: itémque proceres, ſubditos & populos dicti regni, ac cæteros omnes qui illi quomodocunque iurauerunt, à iuramento huiuſmodi ac omni fidelitatis debito, perpetuò abſolutos: That is to ſaie, Pius Quintus the greateſt biſhop, of the fulneſſe of the apoſtolike power, declared Eliſabeth to be bereaued or depriued of hir pretended right of hir kingdome, and alſo of all and whatſoeuer dominion, dignitie and priuilege: and alſo the nobles, ſubiects and people of the ſaid kingdome, and all others which had ſworne to hir anie maner of wais, to be abſolued for euer from ſuch oth, and from all debt or dutie of fealtie, &c: with manie threatning curſings, to all that durſt obeie hir or hir laws. As for execution hereof, to proue, that the effect of the popes bull and meſſage was a flat rebellion, it is not amiſſe to heare what the ſame doctor Sanders the popes firebrand in Ireland alſo writeth in his viſible church monarchie, which is thus.

Doctor Mortons ſecret ambaſſage frō Rome to ſtir the rebellion in the north.

Pius Quintus pontifex maximus, Anno Domini 1569 reuerendum presbyterum Nicolaum Mortonum Anglum in Angliam miſit, vt certis illuſtribus viris authoritate apoſtolica denuntiaret, Eliſabetham quæ tunc rerum potiebatur, hæreticam eſſe: ob eámque cauſam, omni dominio & poteſtate excidiſſe, impunéque ab illis velut ethnicam haberi poſſe, nec eos illius legibus aut mandatis deinceps obedire cogi: That is to ſaie, Pius Quintus the greateſt biſhop, in the yeare of our Lord 1569, ſent the reuerend prieſt [illegible]olas Morton an Engliſhman into England, [illegible] ſhould denounce or declare by the apoſtolike [illegible]itie to certeine noblemen, Eliſabeth, who [illegible]as in poſſeſſion, to be an heretike: & for that [illegible] to haue fallen from all dominion and power, and that ſhe may be had or reputed of them as an ethnike, and that they are not to be compelled to obeie hir lawes or commandements, &c. Thus you ſee an ambaſſage of rebellion from the popes holineſſe, the ambaſſador an old doting Engliſh prieſt, a fugitiue and conſpirator, ſent (as he ſaith) to ſome noble men, and th[illegible]ere the two earles of Northumberland and We[illegible]rland, heads of the rebellion. And after this, he followeth to declare the ſucceſſe therof, which I dare ſaie he was ſorie it was ſo euill, with theſe words.

Qua denuntiatione n[illegible]les viri adducti ſunt, vt de fratribus liberandis cogit[illegible]derant, ac ſperabant illi quidem catholicos omnes ſumm[illegible]turos eſſe: verùm etſi aliter quàm illi expectabant res euenit, quia catholici omnes nondum probè cognouerant, Eliſabetham hæreticam eſſe declaratam, tamen laudanda illorum nobilium conſilia erant: That is: By which denuntiation, manie noblemen were induced or led, that they were boldened to thinke of the freeing of their brethren, and they hoped certeinlie that all the catholikes would haue aſſiſted them with all their ſtrength: but although the matter happened otherwiſe than they hoped for, bicauſe all the catholikes knew not that Eliſabeth was declared to be an heretike, yet the counſels and intents of thoſe noblemen were to be praiſed. A rebellion and a vanquiſhing of rebels verie ſmoothlie deſcribed.

This noble fact here mentioned was the rebellion in the north: the noblemen were the earles of Northumberland and Weſtmerland: the lacke of the euent or ſucceſſe was, that the traitors were vanquiſhed, and the queenes maieſtie and hir ſubiects had by Gods ordinance the victorie: and the cauſe why the rebels preuailed not, was bicauſe all the catholikes had not béene dulie informed that the queenes maieſtie was declared to be (as they terme it) an heretike: which want of information, to the intent to make the rebels mightier in number and power, was diligentlie and cunninglie ſupplied by the ſending into the realme of a great multitude of the ſeminaries and Ieſuits, whoſe ſpeciall charge was to informe the people thereof, as by their actions hath manifeſtlie appéered. A ſupplement to amend the former errour.

And though doctor Sanders hath thus written, yet it may be ſaid by ſuch as fauoured the two notable Ieſuits, one named Robert Perſons (who yet hideth himſelfe in corners to continue his traitorous practiſe) the other named Edmund Campion (who was found out being diſguiſed like a roiſter and ſuffered for his treaſons) that doctor Sanders treaſon is his proper treaſon in allowing of the ſaid bull, and not to be imputed to Perſons and Campion. Therefore to make it plaine that theſe two by ſpeciall authoritie had charge to execute the ſentence of this bull, theſe acts in writing following ſhall make manifeſt, which are not fained or imagined, but are the verie writings taken about one of their complices, euen immediatlie after Campions death: although Campion before his death would not be knowen of anie ſuch matter. Whereby may appéere what truſt is to be giuen to the words of ſuch pſeudomartyrs.

Perſons and Campion are offendors as doctor Sanders is, for allowance of the bull.

Facultates conceſſæ pp. Roberto Perſonio & Edmundo Campiano, pro Anglia, die 14 Aprilis, 1580.

PEtatur à ſummo domino noſtro explicatio bullæ declaratoriæ per Pium Quintum contra Eliſabetham & ei adhærentes, quam catholici cupiunt intelligi hoc modo; vt obliget ſemper illam & hæreticos, catholicos verò nullo modo obliget rebus ſic ſtantibus, ſed tum demum quando publica eiuſdem bullæ executio fieri poterit. Then followed manie other petitions of faculties for their further authorities, which are not néedfull for this purpoſe to be recited: but in the end followeth this ſentence as an anſwer of the popes. Has prædictas gratias conceſſit ſummus pontifex patri Roberto Perſonio, & Edmundo Campiano in Angliam profecturis, die 14 Aprilis, 1580. Præſente patre Oliuerio Manarco aſſiſtente. The Engliſh of which Latine ſentences is as followeth.

*Faculties granted to the two fathers Robert Per*ſons and Edmund Campion, for England, the fourteenth daie of Aprill, 1580.

LEt it be asked or required of our moſt holie lord, the explication or meaning of the bull declaratorie made by Pius the fift againſt Eliſabeth, & ſuch as doo adhere or obeie hir, which bull the catholikes deſire to be vnderſtood in this maner: that the ſame bull ſhall alwaies bind hir and the heretikes; but the catholikes it ſhall by no meanes bind, as matters or things doo now ſtand or be: but hereafter, when the publike execution of that bull maie be had or made. Then in the end the concluſion was thus added. The higheſt pontife or biſhop granted theſe foreſaid graces to father Robert Perſons & Edmund Campion, who are now to take their iournies into England, the 14 daie of Aprill; in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred and eightie. Being preſent the father Oliuerius Manarke aſſiſtant.

Faculties granted to Perſons and Campion by pope Gregorie the thirteenth Anno 1580.

By what authoritie Campion came into England.

Hereby it is manifeſt, that authoritie Campion had to impart the contents of the bull againſt the queenes maieſtie, howſoeuer he himſelfe denied the ſame: for this was his errand.

And though it be manifeſt that theſe two Ieſuits, Parſons and Campion, not onelie required to haue the popes mind declared for the bull; but alſo in their owne petitions ſhewed how they and other catholikes did deſire to haue the ſaid bull to be vnderſtood againſt the queene of England: yet to make the matter more plaine how all other Ieſuits and ſeminaries; yea how all papiſts naming themſelues catholikes, do or are warranted to interpret the ſaid bull againſt hir maieſtie and hir good ſubiects, howſoeuer they will diſguiſe it, you ſhall ſee what one of their fellowes, named Hart, who was condemned with Campion and yet liueth, did amongſt manie other things declare his knowledge thereof the laſt daie of December in the ſame yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and eightie, in theſe words following. The bull of Pius Quintus (for ſo much as it is againſt the queene) is holden amongeſt the Engliſh catholikes for a lawfull ſentence, and a ſufficient diſcharge of hir ſubiects fidelitie, and ſo remaineth in force: but in ſome points touching the ſubiects, it is altered by the preſent pope. For where in that bull all hir ſubiects are commanded not to obeie hir, and ſhe being excommunicate and depoſed, all that do obeie hir are likewiſe innodate and accurſſed, which point is perillous to the catholikes: for if they obeie hir, they be in the popes curſſe, and if they diſobeie hir, they are in the queenes danger: therefore the preſent pope to releeue them hath altered that part of the bull, and diſpenſed with them to obeie and ſerue hir, without perill of excommunication: which diſpenſation is to indure but till it pleaſe the pope otherwiſe to determine.

Harts confeſſion of the interpretation of the bull of Pius Quintus.

A concluſion that all the infamous bookes againſt the queene and the realme, are falſe.

Wherefore to make ſome concluſion of the matters before mentioned, all perſons both within the realme and abroad, maie plainelie perceiue that all the infamous libels latelie publiſhed abroad in ſundrie languages, and the ſlanderous reports made in other princes courts of a multitude of perſons, to haue beene of late put to torments and death onelie for profeſſion of the catholike religion, and not for matters of ſtate againſt the queenes maieſtie, are falſe and ſhameleſſe, and publiſhed to the maintenance of traitors and rebels. And to make the matter ſeeme more horrible or lamentable, they recite the particular names of all the perſons, which by their owne catalog exceed not for theſe fiue and twentie yeares ſpace, aboue the number of threeſcore, forgetting or rather with their ſtonie and ſenſeleſſe harts not regarding, in what cruell ſort in the time of queene Marie, which little exceeded the ſpace of fiue yeares, the queenes maieſties reigne being fiue times as manie, there were by impriſonment, torments, famine, and fire, of men, women, maidens, and children, almoſt the number of foure hundred, beſides ſuch as were ſecretlie murthered in priſons: and of that number, aboue twentie that had beene archbiſhops, biſhops, and principall prelats or officers in the church lamentablie deſtroied; and of women aboue threeſcore, and of children aboue fortie, and amongeſt the women, ſome great with child, and one, out of whoſe bodie the child by fire was expelled aliue, and yet alſo cruellie burned: examples beyond all heathen crueltie.

Difference of the ſmall numbers that haue beene executed in the ſpace of fiue and twentie yeares, from the great numbers in fiue yeares of queene Maries reigne.

And moſt of the youth that then ſuffered cruell death, both men, women, and children (which is to be noted) were ſuch, as had neuer by the ſacrament of baptiſme, or by confirmation, profeſſed, or was euer taught or inſtructed, or euer had heard of anie other kind of religion, but onelie of that which by their bloud and death in the fire they did as true martyrs teſtifie. A matter of an other ſort to be lamented in a chriſtian charitie with ſimplicitie of words, and not with puffed eloquence, than the execution in this time of a verie few traitors; who alſo in their time, if they exceeded thirtie yeares of age, had in their baptiſme profeſſed, and in their youth had learned the ſame religion which they now ſo bitterlie oppugned. And beſides that, in their opinions they differ much from the martyrs of queene Maries time: for though they which ſuffered in queene Maries time continued in the profeſſion of the religion wherein they were chriſtened, and as they were perpetuallie taught; yet they neuer at their death denied their lawfull queene, nor mainteined anie of hir open and forren enimies, nor anie procured rebellion or ciuill warre, nor did ſow anie ſedition in ſecret corners, nor withdrew anie ſubiects from their obedience, as theſe ſworne ſeruants of the pope haue continuallie doone.

And therefore all theſe things well conſidered, there is no doubt, but all good ſubiects within the realme do manifeſtlie ſee, and all wauering perſons (not being led cleane out of the waie by the ſeditious) will hereafter perceiue, how they haue beene abuſed to go aſtraie. And all ſtrangers, but ſpeciallie all chriſtian potentats, as emperours, kings, princes, and ſuch like, hauing their ſouereigne eſtates, either in ſucceſſion hereditarie, or by conſent of their people, being acquainted with the verie truth of theſe hir maieſties late iuſt and neceſſarie actions, onelie for defenſe of hir ſelfe, hir crowne, and people, againſt open inuadours, and for eſchewing of ciuill warres, ſtirred vp by rebellion, will allow in their owne like caſes, for a truth and rule (as it is not to be doubted but they will) that it belongeth not vnto a biſhop of Rome as ſucceſſour of ſaint Peter, and there[illegible] paſtour ſpirituall, or if he were the biſhop [illegible] chriſtendome, as by the name of pope h[illegible]meth; firſt by his bulles or excommunicatio[illegible] this ſort at his will in fauour of traitors a[illegible]bels, to depoſe anie ſouereigne princes, being lawfullie inueſted in their crownes by ſucceſſion in bloud, or by lawfull election; and then to ſtirre ſubiects againſt their naturall lords, to make warres, and to diſpenſe with them for their oths in ſo dooing, or to excommunicat faithfull ſu[illegible]ts for obeieng of their naturall princes, & la[illegible] himſelfe to make open warre, with his owne ſo[illegible]ers, againſt princes mouing no force againſt h[illegible]m.

An aduertiſement vnto all princes of countries abroad.

For if theſe high tragicall powers ſhould be permitted to him to exerciſe, [illegible] ſhould no empire, no kingdome, no countrie, [illegible]tie or towne be poſſeſſed by anie lawfull title, le[illegible]r than one ſuch onelie an earthlie man, ſit[illegible] (as he ſaith) in ſaint Peters chaire at Rome, wo[illegible]s for his will and appetite (without warrant from God or man) thinke meet and determine: an authoritie neuer challenged by the [illegible]ord of lords the ſonne of God, Ieſus Chriſt our onelie Lord and ſauiour, and the onelie head of his church, whileſt he was in his humanitie vpon the earth; nor yet deliuered by anie writing or certeine tradition from ſaint Peter, from whome the pope pretendeth to deriue all his authoritie; nor yet from ſaint Paule the apoſtle of the gentils: but contrariwiſe by all preachings, precepts and writings, conteined in the goſpell and other ſcriptures of the apoſtles, obedience is expreſſelie commanded vnto all earthlie princes; yea, euen vnto kings by eſpeciall name, and that ſo generallie, as no perſon is excepted from ſuch dutie of obedience, as by the ſentence of ſaint Paule euen to the Romans, appeareth, Omnis anima ſublimioribus poteſtatibus ſit ſubdita, that is, Let euerie ſoule be ſubiect to the higher powers: within the compaſſe of which law or precept, ſaint Chryſoſtome being biſhop of Conſtantinople, writeth, that Euen apoſtles, prophets, euangeliſts, and monks are comprehended.

The authoritie proclamed by the pope not warranted by Chriſt, or by the two apoſtles Peter and Paule.

And for proofe of ſaint Peters mind herein, from whome theſe popes claime their authoritie, it can not be plainelier expreſſed, than when he writeth thus, Proinde ſubiecti eſtote cuiuis humanæ ordinationi, propter Dominum, ſiue regi, vt qui ſupereemineat, ſiue præſidibus ab eo miſſis, that is, Therefore be you ſubiect to euerie humane ordinance or creature for the Lord, whether it be to the king, as to him that is ſupereminent, or aboue the reſt, or to his preſidents ſent by him. By which two principall apoſtles of Chriſt, theſe popes the pretenſed ſucceſſors, but chieflie by that which Chriſt the ſonne of God the onelie maiſter of truth ſaid to Peter and his fellow apoſtles, Reges gentium dominantur, vos autem non ſic, that is, The kings of the gentils haue rule ouer them, but you not ſo, maie learne to forſake their arrogant and tyrannous authorities in earthlie and temporall cauſes ouer kings and princes, and exerciſe their paſtorall office: as ſaint Peter was charged thriſe at one time by his Lord and maiſter, Paſce oues meas, Féed my ſhéepe, and peremptorilie forbidden to vſe a ſword, in ſaieng to him, Conuerte gladium tuum in locum ſuum, or Mitte gladium tuum in vaginam, that is, Turne thy ſword into his place: or, Put thy ſword into the ſcabbard.

All which precepts of Chriſt and his apoſtles were dulie followed and obſerued manie hundred yeares after their death, by the faithfull and godlie biſhops of Rome, that dulie followed the doctrine and humilitie of the apoſtles, and the doctrine of Chriſt, and were holie martyrs, and thereby dilated the limits of Chriſts church and the faith more in the compaſſe [illegible] hundred yeares, than the latter popes haue [illegible] with their ſwords and curſſes theſe fiue hundred [illegible]ares, and ſo continued vntill the time of one [illegible]ildebrand, otherwiſe called Gregorie the [illegible]nth, about the yeare of our Lord, one thouſand [illegible]ſcore and fourtéene; who firſt began to vſurpe that [illegible]ind of tyrannie, which of late the late pope called Pius Quintus, and ſince that time Gregorie now the thirteenth hath followed, for ſome example as it ſeemeth: that is, where Gregorie the ſeuenth, in [illegible] yeare of [illegible] Lord one thouſand thrée ſcore and [illegible]téene, or [illegible]out, preſumed to depoſe Henrie the fourth, [illegible] emperor then being; Gregorie the thir[illegible] this time, would attempt the like ag[illegible]rie the eights daughter and heire quée[illegible]h, a ſoueraigne, and a maiden quéene, h[illegible] crowne immediatlie of God.

An[illegible] to the [illegible] yeare to princes, or to their go[illegible] example, what was the fortunat ſucceſſe th[illegible] gaue to this good chriſtian emperor Henrie, [illegible] the proud pope Hildebrand, it is to be no[illegible] [illegible] when the pope Gregorie attempted to depo[illegible] this [illegible]oble emperor Henrie, there was one Rodulph a noble man, by ſome named the count of Réenfield, that by the popes procurement vſurped the name of the emperor, who was ouercome by the ſaid Henrie the lawfull emperor, and in fight hauing loſt his right hand, he, the ſaid Rodulph, lamented his caſe to certeine biſhops, who in the popes name had erected him vp, and to them he ſaid, that the ſelfe ſame right hand which he had loſt, was the ſame hand wherewith he had before ſworne obedience to his lord and maiſter the emperor Henrie; and that in following their vngodlie counſels, he had brought vpon him Gods heauie and iuſt iudgements. And ſo Henrie the emperor preuailing by Gods power, cauſed Gregorie the pope by a ſynod in Italie to be depoſed, as in like times before him his predeceſſor Otho the emperor had depoſed one pope Iohn for manie heinous crimes: & ſo were alſo within a ſhort time thrée other popes, namelie, Sylueſter, Bennet, and Gregorie the ſixt, vſed by the emperor Henrie the third, about the yeare of our Lord, one thouſand fortie and ſeuen, for their like preſumptuous attempts in temporall actions againſt the ſaid emperors.

An. Do. 1074. The iudgement of God againſt the popes falſe erected emperor.

Pope Gregorie the ſeuenth depoſed by Henrie the fourth.

Manie other examples might be ſhewed to the emperors maieſtie, and the princes of the holie empire now being, after the time of Henrie the fourth: as of Henrie the fift, and Frederike the firſt, and Frederike the ſecond, and then of Lewes of Bauar, all emperors, cruellie and tyrannouſlie perſecuted by the popes, and by their buls, curſſes, and by open wars, and likewiſe to manie other the great kings and monarchs of chriſtendome, of their noble progenitors, kings of their ſeuerall dominions. Whereby they may ſée how this kind of tyrannous autoritie in popes to make warres vpon emperors & kings, and to command them to be depriued, toke hold at the firſt by pope Hildebrand, though the ſame neuer had anie lawfull example or warrant from the lawes of God of the old or new teſtament: but yet the ſucceſſes of their tyrannies were by Gods goodneſſe for the moſt part made fruſtrat, as by Gods goodneſſe there is no doubt, but the like will followe to their confuſions at all times to come.

Henrie the fift. Frederike the firſt. Frederike the ſecond. Lewes of Bauar, emperors.

And therefore, as there is no doubt, but the like violent tyrannous procéedings by anie pope in maintenance of traitors and rebels, would be withſtood by euerie ſoueraigne prince in chriſtendome in defenſe of their perſons and crownes, and maintenance of their ſubiects in peace: ſo is there at this preſent a like iuſt cauſe that the emperors maieſtie, with the princes of the holie empire, and all other ſoueraigne kings & princes in chriſtendome, ſhould iudge the ſame to be lawfull for hir maieſtie being a quéene, and holding the verie place of a king and a prince ſoueraigne ouer diuers kingdoms and nations; ſhe being alſo moſt lawfullie inueſted in hir crowne: and as for good gouerning of hir people, with ſuch applauſe and generall allowance, loued, and obeied of them; ſauing a few ragged traitors, or rebels, or perſons diſcontented, whereof no other realme is frée, as continuallie for theſe fiue & twentie yeares paſt hath béene notablie ſéene, and ſo publikelie marked, euen by ſtrangers repairing into this realme, as it were no cauſe of diſgrace to anie monarch and king in chriſtendome, to haue hir maieſties felicitie compared with anie of theirs whatſoeuer: and it maie be, there are manie kings and princes could be well contented with the fruition of ſome proportion of hir felicitie.

Whatſoeuer is lawfull for other princes ſoueraignes, is lawfull for the quéene and crowne of England.

And though the popes be now ſuffered by the emperor, in the lands of his owne peculiar patrimonie, and by the two great monarchs, the French king and the king of Spaine, in their dominions and territories (although by manie other kings not ſo allowed) to continue his authoritie in ſundrie caſes, and his glorious title to be the vniuerſall biſhop of the world, which title Gregorie the great aboue nine hundred yeares paſt, called a prophane title, full of ſacrilege, and a preamble of antichriſt: yet in all their dominions & kingdoms, as alſo in the realme of England, moſt notablie by manie ancient lawes it is well knowne, how manie waies the tyrannous power of this his exceſſiue authoritie hath béene, and ſtill is reſtreined, checked and limited by lawes and pragmatikes, both ancient and new, both in France and and Spaine and other dominions: a verie large field for the lawyers of thoſe countries to walke in and diſcourſe.

The title of vniuerſall biſhop is a preamble of antichriſt.

And howſoeuer the popes canoniſts, being as his bombarders, doo make his excommunications and curſſes appeare fearefull to the multitude and ſimple people: yet all great emperors and kings aforetime, in their owne caſes, of their rights and roiall preeminences, though the ſame concerned but a citie or a poore towne, and ſometime but the not allowance of ſome vnworthie perſon to a biſhoprike or to an abbeie, neuer refrained to deſpiſe all popes curſſes or forces; but attempted alwaies, either by their ſwords to compell them to deſiſt from their furious actions, or without anie feare of themſelues, in bodie, ſoule, or conſcience, ſtoutlie to withſtand their curſſes, and that ſometime by force, ſometime by ordinances and lawes: the ancient hiſtories whereof are too manie to be repeated, and of none more frequent and effectuall than of the kings of France. And in the records of England doth appeare, how ſtoutlie the kings & the baronadie of England from age to age, by extreame penall laws haue ſo repelled the popes vſurpations, as with the verie name of premunires his proctors haue béene terrified, and his cleargie haue quaked, as of late cardinall Wolſeie did prooue.

But leauing thoſe that are ancient, we may remember how in this our owne preſent or late age, it hath béene manifeſtlie ſéene, how the armie of the late noble emperour Charles the fift, father to king Philip that now reigneth, was not afraid of his curſſes, when in the yeare of our Lord 1527, Rome it ſelfe was beſieged and ſacked, and the pope then called Clement, and his cardinals, to the number of about thirtie and thrée, in his mount Adrian or caſtell S. Angelo, taken priſoners and deteined ſeauen moneths or more, and after ranſomed by Don Vgo di Moncada a Spaniard, and the marqueſſe of Guaſto, at aboue foure hundred thouſand duckets, beſides the ranſomes of the cardinals which was much greater; hauing not long before time béene alſo (notwithſtanding his curſſes) beſieged in the ſame caſtell by the familie of the Colonies and their fautors his next neighbours being then imperialiſts, and forced to yeeld to all their demands. Neither did king Henrie the ſecond of France, father to Henrie now king of France, about the yeare 1556, feare or regard the pope or his court of Rome, when he made ſeuerall ſtrict edicts againſt manie parts of the popes claimes in preiudice of the crowne and cleargie of France, retracting the authoritie of the court of Rome greatlie to the hinderance of the popes former profits. Neither was the armie of king Philip now of Spaine, whereof the duke of Alua was generall, ſtriken with anie feare of curſſing, when it was brought afore Rome againſt the pope, in the yeare of our Lord 1555, where great deſtruction was made by the ſaid armie, and all the delicat buildings, gardens, and orchards, next to Rome walles ouerthrowne, wherewith his holineſſe was more terrified than he was able to remooue with anie his curſſes. Neither was quéene Marie the quéenes maieſties noble late ſiſter, a perſon not a little deuoted to the Romane religion, ſo afraid of the popes curſſings; but that both ſhée and hir whole councell, and that with the aſſent of all the iudges of the realme, according to the ancient lawes, in fauour of cardinall Poole hir kinſman, did moſt ſtrictlie forbid the entrie of his bulles, and of a cardinals hat at Calis, that was ſent from the pope for one frier Peito, an obſeruant pleaſant frier, whom the pope had aſſigned to be a cardinall in diſgrace of cardinall Poole: neither did cardinall Poole himſelfe at the ſame time obeie the popes commandements, nor ſhewed himſelfe afraid, being aſſiſted by the quéene, when the pope did threaten him with paine of curſſes and excommunications; but did ſtill oppoſe himſelfe againſt the popes commandement, for the ſaid pretended cardinall Peito: who notwithſtanding all the threatenings of the pope, was forced to go vp and downe in the ſtréets of London like a begging frier, without his red hat: a ſtout reſiſtance in a quéene for a poore cardinals hat, wherin ſhe followed the example of hir grandfather king Henrie the ſeuenth, for a matter of Allum, wherein the king vſed verie great ſeueritie againſt the pope.

1527 Rome ſacked, and the pope Clement takē priſoner by the emperors armie.

1550 King Henrie the ſecond of France his edicts againſt the pope and his courts of Rome.

The beſieging of Rome and the pope by the duke of Alua and king Philips armie.

Quéene Marie and cardinall Poole reſiſted the pope.

D. Peito a begging frier.

So as howſoeuer the chriſtian kings for ſome reſpects in policie can indure the pope to command where no harme nor diſaduantage groweth to themſelues, yet ſure it is, and the popes are not ignorant, but where they ſhall in anie ſort attempt to take from chriſtian princes anie part of their dominions, or ſhall giue aid to their enimies, or to anie other their rebels, in thoſe caſes, their bulles, their curſſes, their excommunications, their ſentences and moſt ſolemne anathematicals, no nor their croſſe keies, or double edged ſword, will ſerue their turnes to compaſſe their intentions. And now, where the pope hath manifeſtlie by his bulles and excommunications attempted aſmuch as he could, to depriue hir maieſtie of hir kingdomes, to withdraw from hir the obedience of hir ſubiects, to procure rebellions in hir realms, yea to make both rebellions and open warres with his owne capteines, ſouldiers, banners, enſignes, and all other things belonging to warre: ſhall this pope Gregorie or anie other pope after him, thinke that a ſoueraigne quéene, poſſeſſed of the two realmes of England and Ireland, ſtabliſhed ſo manie yeares in hir kingdomes as thrée or foure popes haue ſit in their chaire at Rome, fortified with ſo much dutie, loue and ſtrength of hir ſubiects, acknowledging no ſuperiour ouer hir realms, but the mightie hand of God: ſhall ſhe forbea[illegible] feare to withſtand and make fruſtrate his vnl[illegible] attempts, either by hir ſword or by hir law[illegible] put his ſoldiers inuadors of hir realme to the [illegible] martiallie, or to execute hir lawes vpon hir ow[illegible]bellious ſubiects ciuillie, that are prooued to b[illegible] chiefe inſtruments for rebellion, & for his ope[illegible] This is ſure, that howſoeuer either he ſitting in his chaire with a triple crowne at Rome, or anie other his proctors in anie part of chriſtendome, ſhall re[illegible]new theſe vnlawfull attempts: a[illegible]ightie God [illegible] king of kings whom hir maieſt[illegible]e honoreth [illegible] acknowledgeth to be hir onl[illegible]eigne Lord and protector, & whoſe lawes and [illegible] o[illegible] ſon Ieſus Chriſt ſhe ſéeketh to de[illegible], [illegible]ill no doubt but deliuer ſufficient power into hi[illegible]aidens hand his ſeruant quéene Eliſabeth, to [illegible]ſtand and co[illegible]und them all.

The kings of chriſtendome neuer ſuffer popes to abridge their titles or rights, though they ſuffer them to haue rule ouer their people.

The

And where the ſedition[illegible] t[illegible] of infamies & lies haue ſounded forth, an[illegible]ne that haue ſuffered for treaſon, t[illegible] martyrs for religion: ſo may they alſo at this tim[illegible] (if they liſt) ad to their forged catalog the headleſſ[illegible] bodie of the late miſerable earle of Deſmond, the head of the Iriſh rebellion: who of late, ſecretlie wandering without ſuccour, as a miſerable begger, was taken by one of the Iriſhrie in his caben, and in an Iriſh ſort, after his owne accuſtomed ſauage maner, his head cut off from his bodie: an end due to ſuch an archrebell. And herewith to remember the end of his chiefe confederats, may be noted for example to others, the ſtrange manner of the death of doctor Sanders the popes Iriſh legat, who alſo wandering in the mountains in Ireland without ſuccor, died rauing in a frenſie. And before him, one Iames Fitzmoris the Additaments to the popes martyrologe.

The ſtrange ends of Iames earle of Deſmond, D. Sanders, Iames Fitzmoris.

the firſt traitour of Ireland next to Stukeleie the rakehell, a man not vnknowen in the popes palace for a wicked craftie traitor, was ſlaine at one blow by an Iriſh noble yoong gentleman, in defenſe of his fathers countrie which the traitor ſought to burne. A fourth man of ſingular note was Iohn of Deſmond, brother to the earle, a verie bloodie faithleſſe traitor, & a notable murderer of his familiar friends, who alſo wandring to ſeeke ſome preie like a woolfe in the woods, was taken & beheaded after his owne vſage, being (as he thought) ſufficientlie armed with the popes buls and certeine Agnus Dei, & one notable ring with a pretious ſtone about his necke ſent from the popes finger (as it was ſaid) but theſe he ſaw ſaued not his life. And ſuch were the fatall ends of all theſe, being the principall heads of the Iriſh warre and rebellion, ſo as no one perſon remaineth at this daie in Ireland a knowen traitor: a worke of God and not of man.

Iohn of Deſmond.

Iohn Someruile.

To this number they may (if they ſeeke number) alſo ad a furious yoong man of Warwikeſhire, by name Someruile, to increaſe their kalendar of the popes martyrs, who of late was diſcouered and taken in his waie, comming with a full intent to haue killed hir maieſtie, whoſe life God alwaies haue in his cuſtodie. The attempt not denied by the traitor himſelfe, but confeſſed, and that he was mooued therto in his wicked ſpirit, by intiſements of certeine ſeditious and traitorous perſons his kinſmen and alies, & alſo by often reading of ſundrie ſeditious vile bookes latelie publiſhed againſt hir maieſtie, and his end was in deſperation to ſtrangle himſelfe to deth: an example of Gods ſeueritie againſt ſuch as preſume to offer violence to his anointed. But as God of his goodneſſe hath of long time hitherto preſerued hir maieſtie from theſe and the like treacheries: ſo hath ſhe no cauſe to feare, being vnder his protection, ſhe saieng with king Dauid in the pſalme: My God is my helper and I will truſt in him, he is my protection, and the ſtrength or the power of my ſaluation. And for the more comfort of all good ſubiects againſt the ſhadowes of the popes bulles, it is manifeſt to the world, that from the beginning of hir maieſties reigne, by Gods ſingular goodneſſe, hir kingdom hath inioied more vniuerſall peace, hir people increaſed in more numbers, in more ſtrength, and with greater riches, & with leſſe ſickeneſſe, the earth of hir kingdomes hath yeelded more fruits, and generallie all kind of worldlie felicitie hath more abounded ſince and during the time of the popes thunders, bulles, curſes and maledictions, than in anie other long times before, when the popes pardons and bleſſings came [illegible] into the realme: ſo as his curſſes and maledictions haue turned backe to himſelfe and his fautors, [illegible] it may be ſaid to the bleſſed queene Eliſabeth of England and of hir people, as was ſaid in Deuteronomie of Balaam; The Lord thy God would [illegible] Balaam, but [illegible] turne his maledictions or [illegible] into benedictions or bleſſings: the reaſon [illegible] bicauſe thy God loued thee.

[illegible]

Although theſe former reaſons are ſufficient to perſuade all kind of reaſonable perſons to allow of hir maieſties actions, to be good, reaſonable, lawfull and neceſſarie: yet bicauſe it may be, that ſuch as haue by frequent reading of falſe artificiall libels, and by giuing credit to them, vpon a preiudice or foreiudgement afore grounded, by their rooted opinions in fauour of the pope, will reſt vnſatiſfied: therfore as much as may be, to ſatiſfie all perſons as farre forth as common reaſon may warrant, that hir maieſties late action in executing certeine ſeditious traitors, hath not proceeded for the holding of opinions, either for the popes ſupremaſie, or againſt hir maieſties regalitie; but for the verie crimes of ſedition and treaſon: it ſhall ſuffice brieflie, in manner of a repetition of the former reaſons, to remember theſe things following.

Reaſons to perſuade by reaſon the fauourers of the pope, that none hath beene executed for religion but for treaſon.

The firſt reaſon.

Firſt, it cannot be denied, but that hir maieſtie did for manie yeares ſuffer quietlie the popes bulles and excommunications without puniſhment of the fautors thereof, accounting of them but as of words or wind, or of writings in parchment waied downe with lead, or as of water bubbles, commonlie called in Latine Bullæ, & ſuch like: but yet after ſome proofe that courage was taken therof by ſome bold and bad ſubiects, ſhe could not but then eſteeme them to be verie preambles, or as forerunners of greater danger: and therefore, with what reaſon could anie miſlike, that hir maieſtie did for a bare defenſe againſt them, without other action or force, vſe the helpe of reuiuing of former lawes, to prohibit the publication or execution of ſuch kind of bulles within hir realme?

The ſecond reaſon.

The bull of Pius Quintus ſet vp at Paules.

Secondlie, when notwithſtanding the prohibition by hir lawes, the ſame bulles were plentifullie (but in ſecret ſort) brought into the realme, and at length arrogantlie ſet vpon the gates of the biſhop of Londons palace neere to the cathedrall church of Paules the principall citie of the realme, by a lewd perſon, vſing the ſame like a herald ſent from the pope: who can in anie common reaſon miſlike, that hir maieſtie finding this kind of denunciation of warre, as a defiance to be made in hir principall citie by one of hir ſubiects, auowing and obſtinatlie mainteining the ſame, ſhould according to iuſtice cauſe the offendor to haue the reward due to ſuch a fact? And this was the firſt action of anie capitall puniſhment inflicted for matter ſent from Rome to moue rebellion, which was after hir maieſtie had reigned about the ſpace of twelue yeares or more: a time ſufficient to prooue hir maieſties patience.

The firſt puniſhment for the bull.

The third reaſon.

Thirdlie, when the pope had riſen vp out of his chaire in his wrath, from words and writings to actions, and had contrarie to the aduiſe giuen by ſaint Barnard to one of his predeceſſors, that is, when by his meſſages he left Verbum, and tooke Ferrum, that is, left to feed by the word, which was his office, and began to ſtrike with the ſword which was forbidden him, and ſtirred hir noblemen and people directlie to diſobedience and to open rebellion, which was the office of Dathan and Abiram, and that hir lewd ſubiects by his commandement had executed the ſame with all the forces which they could make or bring into the field: who with common reaſon can diſallow that hir maieſtie vſed hir roiall lawfull authoritie, and by hir forces lawfull ſubdued rebels forces vnlawfull, and puniſhed the authors thereof no otherwiſe than the pope himſelfe vſeth to doo with his owne rebellious ſubiects, in the patrimonie of his church, as not manie moneths paſſed he had beene forced to intend? And if anie prince of people in the world would otherwiſe neglect his office, and ſuffer his rebels to haue their wils; none ought to pitie him, if for want of reſiſtance and courage he loſt both his crowne, his head, his life, and his kingdome.

Rebellion in the north.

The fourth reaſon.

Fourthlie, when hir maieſtie beheld a further increaſe of the popes malice, notwithſtanding that the firſt rebellion was in hir north parts vanquiſhed, in that he interteined abroad out of this realme, the traitors and rebels that fled for the rebellion, and all the rable of other the fugitiues of the realme, & that he ſent a number of the ſame in ſorts diſguiſed into both the realmes of England and Ireland, who there ſecretlie allured hir people to new rebellions, and at the ſame time ſpared not his charges to ſend alſo out of Italie by ſea, certeine ſhips with capteines of his owne, with their bands of ſouldiers, furniſhed with treaſure, munition, vittels, enſignes, banners, and

The inuaſion of Ireland by the pope.

and all other things requiſite to the warre, into hir realme of Ireland, where the ſame forces with other auxiliar companies out of Spaine landed, and fortified themſelues verie ſtronglie on the ſea ſide, and proclamed open warre, erecting the popes banner againſt hir maieſtie: may it be now aſked of theſe perſons, fauourers of the Romiſh authoritie, what in reaſon ſhould haue béene done by hir maieſtie otherwiſe, than firſt to apprehend all ſuch fugitiues ſo ſtolen into the realme, and diſperſed in diſguiſing habits to ſow ſedition, as ſome prieſts in their ſecret profeſſion, but all in their apparell as roiſters or ruffians, ſome ſcholers, like to the baſeſt common people, and them to commit to priſons, and vpon their examinations of their trades and hants, to conuince them of their conſpiracies abroad, by teſtimonie of their owne companions, and of ſowing ſedition ſecretlie at home in the realme? What may be reaſonablie thought was méet to be doone with ſuch ſeditious perſons, but by the lawes of the realme to trie, condemne and execute them? And ſpeciallie hauing regard to the dangerous time, when the popes forces were in the realme of Ireland, and more in preparation to follow as well into England as into Ireland, to the reſiſtance whereof hir maieſtie and hir realme was forced to be at greater charges, than euer ſhe had béene ſince ſhe was quéene thereof. And ſo by Gods power, which he gaue to hir on the one part, ſhe did by hir lawes ſuppreſſe the ſeditious ſtirrers of rebellion in hir realme of England, and by hir ſword vanquiſhed all the popes forces in hir realme of Ireland, excepting certeine capteines of marke that were ſaued from the ſword, as perſons that did renounce their quarrell, and ſéemed to curſſe or to blame ſuch as ſent them to ſo vnfortunate and deſperate a voiage.

The popes forces vanquiſhed in Ireland.

The politike aduerſaries ſatiſfied,

But though theſe reaſons, grounded vpon rules of naturall reaſon, ſhall ſatiſfie a great number of the aduerſaries (who will yéeld that, by good order of ciuill and chriſtian policie and gouernement, hir maieſtie could nor can doo no leſſe than ſhe hath doone, firſt to ſubdue with hir forces hir rebels and traitors, and next by order of hir lawes to correct the aiders & abettors, & laſtlie to put alſo to the ſword ſuch forces as the pope ſent into hir dominions) yet there are certeine other perſons, more nicelie addicted to the pope, that will yet ſéeme to be vnſatiſfied: for that, as they will tearme the matter, a number of ſillie poore wretches were put to death as traitors, being but in profeſſion ſcholers or prieſts, by the names of ſeminaries, Ieſuits, or ſimple ſcholemaiſters, that came not into the realme with anie armour or weapon, by force to aid the rebels and traitors, either in England or in Ireland in their rebellions or wars; of which ſort of wretches the commiſeration is made, as though for their contrarie opinions in religion, or for teaching of the people to diſobeie the lawes of the realme, they might haue béene otherwiſe puniſhed and corrected, but yet not with capitall paine. Theſe kinds of defenſes tend onelie to find fault rather with the ſeueritie of their puniſhments, than to acquit them as innocents or quiet ſubiects.

Obiection of the papiſts, that the perſons executed, are but ſcholers and vnarmed.

But for anſwer to the better ſatiſfaction of theſe nice and ſcrupulous fauourers of traitors, it muſt be with reaſon demanded of them (if at leaſt they will open their eares to reaſon) whether they thinke that when a king being ſtabliſhed in his realme, hath a rebellion firſt ſecretlie practiſed, and afterward openlie raiſed in his realme by his owne ſeditious ſubiects; and when by a forren potentate or enimie the ſame rebellion is mainteined, and the rebels by meſſages and promiſes comforted to continue, and their treaſons againſt their naturall prince auowed; and conſequentlie when the ſame potentat and enimie, being author of the ſaid rebellion, ſhall with his owne proper forces inuade the realme and ſubiects of the prince that is ſo lawfullie and peaceablie poſſeſſed: in theſe caſes, ſhall no ſubiect fauouring theſe rebels, and yéelding obedience to the enimie the inuador, be committed or puniſhed as a traitor; but onelie ſuch of them, as ſhall be found openlie to carrie armour and weapon? Shall no ſubiect, that is a ſpiall and an explorer for the rebell or enimie againſt his naturall prince, be taken and puniſhed as a traitor, bicauſe he is not found with armour or weapon; but yet is taken in his diſguiſed apparell, with ſcrolles and writings, or other manifeſt tokens, to proue him a ſpie for traitors, after he hath wandered ſecretlie in his ſouereignes campe, region, court, or citie? Shall no ſubiect be counted a traitor, that will ſecretlie giue earneſt and preſt monie to perſons to be rebels or enimies, or that will attempt to poiſon the vittels, or the founteins; or ſecretlie ſet on fire the ſhips or munition, or that will ſecretlie ſearch and ſound the hauens and créeks for landing, or meaſure the depth of ditches, or height of bulworks and walles, bicauſe theſe offendors are not found with armor or weapon? The anſwer I thinke muſt néeds be yéelded (if reaſon and experience ſhall haue rule with theſe aduerſaries) that all theſe and ſuch like are to be puniſhed as traitors: and the principall reaſon is, bicauſe it can not be denied, but that the actions of all theſe are neceſſarie acceſſaries, and adherents proper to further and continue all rebellions and warres. But if they will denie, that none are traitors that are not armed, they will make Iudas no traitor, that came to Chriſt without armour, colouring his treaſon with a kiſſe.

Manie are traitours though they haue no armour nor weapon.

Now therefore it reſteth to applie the facts of theſe late malefactors that are pretended to haue offended but as ſcholers, or bookemen; or at the moſt but as perſons that onelie in words and doctrine, and [illegible] with armour did fauour and helpe the rebels and enimies. For which purpoſe let theſe perſons be termed as they liſt, ſcholers, ſcholemaiſters, bookmen, ſeminaries, prieſts, Ieſuits, friers, beadmen, Romaniſts, pardoners, or what elſe you will, neither their titles, nor their apparell hath made them traitors, but their traitorous ſecret motions & practiſes: their perſons haue not made the warre, but their directions and counſels haue ſet vp the rebellions. It is trulie to be pondered, that the verie cauſes finall of theſe rebellions and warres, haue béene to depoſe hir maieſtie from hir crowne: the popes bull hath roared it ſo to be. The cauſes inſtrumentall are theſe kind of ſeminaries and ſedmen of ſedition: their ſecret teachings and reconciliations haue confirmed it. The fruits and effects thereof are by rebellion to ſhed the bloud of all hir faithfull ſubiects: the rewards of the [illegible] (if they could preuaile) ſhould be the [illegible] of all the nobilitie, the clergie, and [illegible] communaltie, that would (as they are [illegible] of God, by their birth, and othes) defend [illegible] naturall gratious quéene, their natiue countrie, their wiues, their children, their familie, and their houſes.

The applica[illegible] ſch[illegible] [illegible] others, [illegible] are traitors without [illegible]

And now examine theſe which you call vnarmed ſcholers and prieſts, wherefore they firſt fled out of the realme, why they liued and were conuerſant in companie of the principall rebels and traitors at Rome, and in their places, where it is proued that they were partakers of their conſpiracies? Let it be anſwered why they came thus by ſtealth into the realme? Why they haue wandered vp & downe in corners in diſguiſed ſort, changing their titles, names and maner of apparell? Why they haue intiſed and ſought to perſuade by their ſecret falſe reaſons, the people to allow and beléeue all the actions and attempts whatſoeuer the pope hath done, or ſhall do, to be lawfull? Why they haue reconciled and withdrawne ſo manie people in corners from the lawes of the realme to the obedience of the pope, a forreine potentate and open enimie, whome they know to haue alreadie declared the quéene to be no lawfull quéene, to haue mainteined the knowne rebels and traitors, to haue inuaded hir maieſties dominions with open warre? Examine further, how theſe vagarant diſgiſed vnarmed ſpies haue anſwered, when they were taken and demanded what they thought of the bull of pope Pius Quintus, which was publiſhed to depriue the quéenes maieſtie, and to warrant hir ſubiects to diſobeie hir: whether they thought that all ſubiects ought to obeie the ſame bull, and ſo to rebell? Secondlie, whether they thought hir maieſtie to be lawfull quéene of the realme, notwithſtanding the ſaid bull or anie other bull of the pope? Thirdlie, whether the pope might giue ſuch licence as he did to the earls of Northumberland and Weſtmerland, and other hir maieſties ſubiects to rebell as they did? Or giue power to doctor Sanders a naturall borne ſubiect, but an vnnaturall worne prieſt, to take armes and moue warres as he did in Ireland? Fourthlie, whether the pope may diſcharge the ſubiects of hir maieſtie, or of anie other princes chriſtened, of their oths of obedience? Fiftlie, whether the ſaid traitorous prieſt doctor Sanders or one Briſtow a rebellious fugitiue, did in their bookes write trulie or falſlie, in approuing the ſaid bull of Pius Quintus, and the contents thereof? Laſtlie, what were to be doone, if the pope or anie other aſſigned by him, would inuade the realme of England, and what part they would take, or what part anie faithfull ſubiect of hir maieſtie ought to take? To theſe few queſtions verie apt to trie the truth or falſhood of any ſuch ſeditious perſons, being iuſtlie before condemned for their diſloialtie, theſe lewd vnarmed traitors I ſay would in no wiſe anſwer directlie herto, as all other faithfull ſubiects to anie chriſtian prince ought to do.

Six queſtions to trie traitors from ſcholers.

As as they by refuſall to anſwer directlie to theſe queſtions onelie, might haue béene iuſtlie conuinced as giltie of treaſon: ſo yet were they not thervpon condemned, but vpon all their other former actions committed both abroad & in the relme, which were no leſſe traitorous than the actions of all other the ſpies and traitors, and of Iudas himſelfe afore remembred, which had no armor nor weapon, and yet at all times ought to be adiudged traitors. For theſe diſguiſed perſons (called ſcholers or prieſts) hauing béene firſt conuerſant of long time with the traitors beyond the ſea in all their conſpiracies, came hither by ſtealth in time of war and rebellion by commandement of the capitall enimie the pope or his legats, to be ſecret eſpials and explorers in the realme for the pope, to deliuer by ſecret Romiſh tokens, as it were an earneſt or preſt, to [illegible] that ſhould be in readines to ioine with rebels or open enimies, and in like ſort with their hallowed baggages from Rome to poiſon the ſenſes of the ſubiects, powring into their hearts malicious and peſtilent opinions againſt hir maieſtie and the lawes of the realme; and alſo to kindle and ſet on fire the hearts of diſcontented ſubiects with the flames of rebellion, & to ſearch & ſound the depths and ſecrets of all mens inward intentions, either againſt hir maieſtie, or for hir: and finallie, to bring into a beadroll, or as it were into a muſter roll, the names and powers with the dwellings of all them that ſhould be readie to rebell, and to aid the forreine inuaſion.

The traitors condemned for treaſon, not for religion.

Theſe kinds of ſeditious actions for the ſeruice of the pope and the traitors and rebels abroad, haue made them traitors: not their books, nor their beads, nor their cakes of ware which they call Agnus Dei, nor other their relikes, no nor yet their opinions for the ceremonies or rites of the church of Rome: and therefore it is to be certeinelie concluded, that theſe did iuſtlie deſerue their capitall puniſhments as traitors, though they were not apprehended with open armour or weapon. Now if this latter repetition, as it were of all the former cauſes and reaſons afore recited, may not ſerue to ſtop the boiſterous mouthes, and the peſtiferous tongs, and venemous breaths of thoſe that are infected with ſo groſſe errors, as to defend ſeditious ſubiects, ſtirrers of rebellion againſt their naturall prince and countrie; then are they to be left without anie further argument of the almightie God, as perſons that haue couered their eies againſt the ſunnes light, ſtopped their eares againſt the ſound of iuſtice, and oppreſſed their hearts againſt the force of reaſon, and as the pſalmiſt ſaith: They ſpeake lies, they are as venemous as the poiſon of a ſerpent, euen like the deafe adder that ſtoppeth his eares.

Vnreaſonable and obſtinate perſons are left to Gods iudgement.

Wherefore with chriſtian charitie to conclude, if theſe rebels and traitors, and their fautors would yet take ſome remorſe and compaſſion of their naturall countrie, and would conſider how vaine their attempts haue béene ſo manie yeares; and how manie of their confederats are waſted by miſeries and calamities, and how none of all their attempts or plats haue proſpered, and therefore would deſiſt from their vnnaturall practiſes abroad: and if theſe ſeminaries, ſecret wanderers, and explorators in the darke, would imploie their trauels in the works of light and doctrine according to the vſage of their ſchooles, and content themſelues with their profeſſion and deuotion: and that the remnant of the wicked flocke of the ſeedmen of ſedition would ceaſe from their rebellious, falſe and infamous railings and libellings, altogether contrarie to chriſtian charitie: there is no doubt by Gods grace (hir maieſtie being ſo much giuen to mercie and deuoted to peace) but all colour and occaſion of ſhedding the bloud of anie more of hir naturall ſubiects of this land, yea all further bodilie puniſhment ſhould vtterlie ceaſe. Againſt whoſe malices, if they ſhall not deſiſt, almightie God continue hir maieſtie with his ſpirit and power long to reigne and liue in his feare, and to be able to vanquiſh them all, being Gods enimies, and eſpeciallie hir rebels and traitors both at home & abroad, & to mainteine & preſerue all hir naturall good louing ſubiects, to the true ſeruice of the ſame almightie God, according to his holie word & will. Manie other things might be remembred for defenſe of other hir maieſties princelie, honorable, and godlie actions in ſundrie other things, wherein alſo theſe and the like ſeditious railors haue of late time without all ſhame, by fained and falſe libels ſought to diſcredit hir maieſtie & hir gouernement: but at this time, theſe former cauſes and reaſons alleged by waie of aduertiſements, onelie for maintenance of truth, are ſufficient to iuſtifie hir maieſties actions to the whole world in the caſes remembred. Magna eſt veritas, & praualet: Great is truth, and ſhe ouercommeth.

2. Eſd. 4.

On the two and twentith of Ianuarie, Iohn Watſon biſhop of Winchester deceaſed at Wolſeie, and was buried at Winchester on the ſixteenth daie of Februarie; a man he was well taught by the art which he profeſſed and practiſed, to eſteeme this life as it is, euen tranſitorie & verie vaine; wherin as men are the further ſtept in age, ſo ſhould they be the leſſe deſirous to liue, and take death comming timelie (which is, when as naturall heate and the moiſture radicall are decaied) in ſuch good part, as no thing more acceptable. But who thinkes his death to come timelie; but the godlie wiſe, who haue learned, that as men haue daies of life decréed, ſo they haue daies of death determined; according to the tetraſtichon, which that famous man Ioachimus Camerarius (an excellent man and of ſingular note) made a little before his departing out of this world:

Biſhop of Winchester deceaſed.

Morte nihil tempeſtiua eſſe optatius aiunt,
Sed tempeſtiuam quis putat eſſe ſuam?
Qui putat ille ſapit; quoniam vt ſolatia vitæ,
Sic & quiſque ſuæ tempora mortis habet.

Fiue executed for treaſon.

On the ſeuenth of Februarie were arreigned at Weſtminſter, Iames Fenne, George Haddocks, Iohn Munden, Iohn Nutter, and Thomas Homerford: all fiue were found guiltie of high treaſon, and had iudgement to be drawne, hanged, bowelled, and quartered, and were executed at Tiborne on the twelfedaie of Februarie.

A. F. ex add. G. C.

Maiſter Walter Raleigh his viage for the diſcouerie of that land which lieth betwéene Norembega and Florida.

¶ In this yeare, 1584, euen at the prime of the yeare, namelie in Aprill, maiſter Walter Raleigh eſquier, a gentleman from his infancie brought vp and trained in martiall diſcipline, both by land and ſea, and well inclined to all vertuous and honorable aduentures, hauing built a ſhip and a pineſſe, ſet them to the ſea, furniſhed with all prouiſions neceſſarie for a long viage, and committed the charge of them to two gentlemen (his owne ſeruants) the one called Philip Amadis, the other Arthur Barlow, with direction to diſcouer that land which lieth betwéene Norembega and Florida in the weſt Indies; who according to their commiſſion, made as ſufficient a diſcouerie thereof as ſo ſhort a time would permit: for they returned in Auguſt next following, and brought with them two ſauage men of that countrie, with ſundrie other things, that did aſſure their maiſter of the goodneſſe of the ſoile, and of great commodities that would ariſe to the realme of England, by traffique, if that the Engliſh had anie habitation, and were planted to liue there. Wherevpon, he immediatlie prepared for a ſecond viage, which with all expedition (nothing at all regarding the charges that it would amount vnto) did preſentlie ſet in hand.

Philip Amadis, and Arthur Barlow.

Two ſauage men and other things brought from the ſaid land diſcouered.

Maiſter Walter Raleigh prepareth for a ſecond viage to the ſaid land late diſcouered.

This countrie of Norembega aforeſaid (and the land on this ſide of it) ſir Humfrie Gilbert, brother to ſir Walter Raleigh, a man both valiant and well experienced in martiall affaires, did attempt to diſcouer, with intention to ſettle an Engliſh colonie there, in the yeare 1578: hauing in his companie his two brethren, Walter and Carew Raleighs, Henrie Knolles, George Carew, William Carewe, Edward Dennie, Henrie Nowell, Miles Morgan, Francis Knolles, Henrie North, and diuerſe other gentlemen of good calling, and ten ſailes of all ſorts of ſhipping, well and ſufficientlie furniſhed for ſuch an enterpriſe, weighed anchor in the weſt countrie, & ſet to the ſea. But God not fauoring his attempt, the iournie tooke no good ſucceſſe: for all his ſhips inforced by ſome occaſion or miſchance, made their preſent returne againe; that onelie excepted, wherein his brother Walter Raleigh was capteine, who being deſirous to doo ſomewhat woorthie honor, tooke his courſe for the weſt Indies, but for want of vittels and other neceſſaries (néedfull in ſo long a viage) when he had ſailed as far as the Ilands of Cape de Verde vpon the coaſt of Affrica, was inforced to ſet ſaile and returne for England. In this his viage he paſſed manie dangerous aduentures, as well by tempeſts as fights on the ſea; but laſtlie he arriued ſafelie at Plimouth in the weſt countrie in Maie next following. Sir Humfreie Gilbert notwithſtanding this vnfortunate ſucceſſe of his firſt attempt, enterpriſed the ſaid viage the ſecond time, and ſet to the ſea with thrée ſhips and pineſſes, in the yeare 1584, in the which iournie he loſt his life; but in what ſort no man can witneſſe. For being by force of foule weather ſeparated from his companie, he was neuer heard of afterwards.]

Gentlemen that aſſociated ſir Humfreie Gilbert in his viage to Norembega 1578.

The viage hath not wiſhed ſucceſſe.

Maiſter Walter Raleigh ſailed as far as Cape de Verde, &c. and arriueth in ſafetie at Plimouth.

Sir Humfrie Gilberd ſeuered from his companie, dead, and neuer heard of.

Ab. Fl. horum omnium maximè conſcius.

The deceaſſe of D. Caldwell phyſician of whom there is former mẽtiõ, pag. 1349.

¶ In this yeare, and the twentith daie of Maie departed out of this life that famous father of phyſicke and ſurgerie, the Engliſh Hippocrates and Galen, I meane doctor Caldwell, and was buried on the ſixt of Iune immediatlie following at S. Benets church by Paules wharfe, at the vpper end of the chancell: his bodie was verie ſolemnelie accompanied to the church with a traine of learned and graue doctors, beſides others of that facultie, the heralds of armes dooing him ſuch honour at his funerall as to him of dutie apperteined. Of this mans rare loue to his countrie hath béene ſpoken before, where mention is made of the inſtitution of a ſurgerie lecture perpetuallie to be continued for the common benefit of London, and conſequentlie of all England: the like whereof is not eſtabliſhed nor vſed in anie vniuerſitie of chriſtendome (Bononie and Padua excepted) and therefore the more to be eſtéemed. Indéed the like inſtitution was in towardneſſe, whiles Francis the French of that name the firſt liued: but when he died, as the court that he kept in his time was counted a vniuerſitie, but after his deth made an exchange thereof with another name: ſo likewiſe diſcontinued or rather vtterlie brake off that purpoſed inſtitution of a ſurgerie lecture at Paris: ſo that in this point London hath a prerogatiue excelling the vniuerſities.

The court of Francis the firſt a vniuerſitie, &c: pag. 1343.

The diſtributions of D. Caldwell in his life time: and his bequeſts after his death.

This D. Caldwell in his laſt will and teſtament gaue manie great legacies to a great number of his pooreſt kinſfolkes, as alſo vnto others nothing alied vnto him. He gaue in his life time two hundred pounds to be lent gratis foreuer to the Clothiers in Burton, whereby clothing might be mainteined, the poore artificers ſet on worke, and the poore citizens in Lichfield alſo benefited: the corporation of the ſaid towne being bound for the receiuing and deliuering thereof euerie fiue yeares to the yongeſt and pooreſt occupiers. He gaue great ſummes of monie to the poore towneſhips in Staffordſhire where he was borne, both towards the reléeuing of their priuat eſtate, as alſo to the reparing of their bridges and amending of their high waies, for the commoditie of all the countrie. He left large ſums of monie to be emploied by his executors at their diſcretion, where charitie moued; as alſo to the publiſhing of ſuch learned bookes of phyſicke and ſurgerie (with ſundrie chargeable formes grauen in copper and finiſhed in his life) as he meant (if he had liued) to ſée extant.

His commentaries vpon ſome part of Paulus Aegineta, and other bookes.

Diuerſe good works in his [illegible] he had doone, and hath left order to be doone after his death: which was verie mild and ſtill, not vnlike the deceaſſe of a babe in the cradle; hauing béene [illegible] with no extremitie of ſickneſſe (his * ordi[illegible] infirmitie excepted which was intermiſſiue) [illegible] either might wring him or wearie him to [illegible] vnpatient. So that he died as ſléeping, hauing [illegible] left behind him both credit of lerning, cunning, & other good ornaments, the very beautie of his age, which was exactlie found by true computation to be thréeſcore and fouretéene, in which yeare he died; as may be gathered by his counterfet ſo naturallie conueied into colours, with his white beard, the hollowneſſe of his chéekes, the wrinkels of his browes, the liuelie ſight of his eies, and other acceſſaries; and all within a module, the circumference whereof excéedeth not ſix inches, if it amount to ſo much in exact meaſure, as a man beholding the ſaid repreſentation, would ſweare that it were not poſſible for art to draw more néere in imitation to nature. So that this doctor dieng in ſo ripe an age, was committed to holie ground, where he reſted in peace, his cote armour bearing witneſſe

* His ordinarie infirmitie was the colicke, which tormented him excéedinglie.

His age and counterfet which ſéemed to be made 1571, and in the yeare of his age 59.

of

The armes of Caldwell blaſoned.

of his anceſtrie: for he beareth azure, a croſſe forme fiche or, within an vrle of ſtars or: the ſecond argent, a feſſe indented ſable charged with foure leuſes heads eirant raſed or: the third as the ſecond, and fourth as the firſt quarterlie. Alſo he beareth to his creſt on a toſſe or and azure, a cocks head argent, couped, membred geules ſupporting * a croſſe forme fiche or, betwéene two wings ſable, and mantled geules doubled argent.

* The croſſe forme fiche was the cote of Cadwallader the laſt king of Britains, in An. Dom. 680.

In further memorie of whome (ſo long as the church wherein he lieth buried dooth ſtand, and the monuments therein bleſſed from ſacrilegious hands) there remaineth fixed in the wall ouer his graue, a copperplate wherein his ſaid cote armour is workemanlie grauen, with the armes of the phyſicians college ſo vnder it, as they are knit vnto it. On either ſide of this latter ſcutchion are ſet certeine binding bands and other inſtruments of ſurgerie in their right formes, with their proper vſe alſo to be practiſed vpon ech member; be the ſame head, leg, arme, hand, or foot: all workemanlie wrought, & vnder the ſame a memoriall grauen for wiſhed perpetuitie:

Caldwallus iacet hic patriæ ſtudioſus alumnus,
Chirurgis Chiron, Hippocrates Medicis:
Heracles laqueis dum faſcia membra reuincit,
Galenus priſcæ laudis & artis amans:
Chirurgis ſtabilem lecturam condidit, illi
Præfecit Medicos, quos ea turba colat:
Plintheus hinc aſtat laqueus, Carcheſius, inde
Faſcia; quæ ſtudij ſunt monumenta ſui:
Felix Chirurgus patronum qui tibi talem
Nactus es, & felix qui dolet æger erit.

Laquei	Plintheus	1
	Charcheſius	2
Faſcia	Totum caput cingens	3
	Rhombus	4
Machinamenta	Scamnum Hippocratis	5
	Gloſſocomium	6

Quem tibi vinxiſti charum dum vita manebat,
Tecum Melpomene poſt tua fata canet.
Ric. Forſterus.

These figures 1,2,3,4,5,6, haue relation to certeine marks, named in the mullet, the cinquefoile, the flourre delice, the hãd, the creſſant or moone, and the pauſe, grauen in the copper plate, which [illegible]

Francis Throckemorton arreigned and condemned of high treaſon.

In this yeare of our Lord 1584, on the one and twentith daie of Maie, Francis Throckemorton eſquier, was arreigned in the Guildhall of the citie of London, where being found guiltie of high treaſon, he was condemned and had iudgement accordinglie, to be drawne, hanged, boweled, and quartered. A diſcouerie of whoſe treaſons, practiſed and attempted againſt the quéens maieſtie and the realme, were afterward; to wit, in the moneth of Iune, publiſhed as followeth.

A true and perfect declaration of the treaſons practiſed and attempted by Francis Throckemorton, la[illegible] of London, againſt the queenes mai[illegible] and the realme.

WHereas there haue béene verie lewd and ſlanderous brutes and reports giuen out, of the due and orderlie procéedings held with Francis Throckemorton latelie arreigned & condemned of high treaſon at the Guildhall in London, the one and twentith daie of Maie laſt, whereby ſuch as are euill affected toward hir maieſtie, and the preſent gouernement, haue indeuoured falſelie and iniuriouſlie to charge hir maieſtie and hir faithfull miniſters with crueltie and iniuſtice vſed againſt the ſaid Throckemorton, by extorting from him by torture, ſuch confeſſions as he hath made againſt himſelfe, & by inforſing the ſame to make them lawfull euidence to conuict him of the treaſons therein ſpecified: albeit hir maieſties ſubiects in generall, calling to mind the mild and temperate courſe ſhe hath held all the time of hir moſt happie reigne, might rather impute hir clemencie and lenitie vſed towards all ſorts of offendors to a kind of fault, than tax hir with the contrarie: yet ſuch as allow of practiſes and treaſons againſt hir maieſtie, doo allwaies interpret both of the one and of the other, according to the particular affections that doo poſſeſſe them, that is, to the worſt. And forſomuch as the caſe of Throckemorton at this time hath béene ſubiect to their ſiniſter conſtructions; and conſidering that lies and falſe brutes caſt abroad are moſt commonlie beléeued, vntill they be controlled by the truth: it hath béene thought expedient in this ſhort diſcourſe to deliuer vnto your view and conſideration, a true and perfect declaration of the treaſons practiſed and attempted by the ſaid Throckemorton againſt hir maieſtie and the realme, by him confeſſed before his arreignement, whereby hir maieſtie was iuſtlie and in reaſon perſuaded to put him to his triall.

But how can their interpretations be found, whoſe iudgements are corrupt?

You ſhall likewiſe perceiue what courſe hath béene held with him by hir commiſſioners to bring him to confeſſe the truth: with what impudencie and how falſelie he hath denied his ſaiengs and confeſſions: and laſtlie, how by a new ſubmiſſion and confeſſion of his ſaid treaſons ſince his condemnation, he endeuoureth to ſatiſfie hir maieſtie, and to ſhew the reaſons that mooued him to denie the firſt, which he affirmeth and confirmeth by the laſt: which may in reaſon ſatiſfie, though not all; yet ſuch as are not foreſtalled, or rather forepoiſoned and infected with the lies and vntruths alreadie ſpred and deliuered in fauour of the traitor & his treaſons. You ſhall therefore vnderſtand, that the cauſe of his apprehenſion grew firſt vpon ſecret intelligence giuen to the quéenes maieſtie, that he was a priuie conueier and receiuer of letters to and from the Scotiſh quéene: vpon which information neuertheleſſe diuerſe moneths were ſuffered to paſſe on, before he was called to anſwer the matter, to the end there might ſome proofe more apparant be had to charge him therewith directlie: which ſhortlie after fell out, and therevpon there were ſent vnto his houſes in London, and at Leuſham in Kent, to ſearch and apprehend him, certeine gentlemen of no meane credit and reputation: of whome, two were ſent to his houſe by Paules wharfe, where he was apprehended, & ſo by one of them conueied preſentlie awaie; the other remaining in the chamber to make ſearch for papers, writings, &c: which might giue proofe of his ſuſpected practiſes.

The premiſſes being all ſufficient cannot but anſwer anie circumſtance touching this traitor.

In that ſearch, there were found the two papers conteining the names of certeine catholike noblemen and gentlemen, expreſſing the hauens for landing of forren forces, with other particularities in the ſaid papers mentioned, the one written in the ſecretarie hand (which he at the barre confeſſed to be his owne handwriting) and the other in the Roman hand, which he denied to be his, and would not ſhew how the ſame came vnto his hands: howbeit in his examinations he hath confeſſed them both to be his owne handwriting: and ſo they are in truth. There were alſo found among other of his papers, twelue petidegrées of the deſcent of the crowns of England, printed and publiſhed by the biſhop of Roſſe, in the defenſe of the pretended title of the Scotiſh quéene his miſtreſſe: with certeine infamous libels againſt hir maieſtie printed and publiſhed beyond the ſeas: which being found in the hands of a man ſo euill affected, comparing the ſame with his dooings and practiſes againſt hir maieſtie, you will iudge the purpoſe wherefore he kept them.

The biſhop of Roſſe an enimie to the Engliſh ſtate.

Shortlie after his apprehenſion, he was examined by ſome of hir maieſties priuie councell, how he came by the ſaid two papers of the hauens: and he moſt impudentlie denied with manie proteſtations that he neuer ſaw them, affirming they were none of his, but were foiſted in (as he termed it) among his papers by the gentlemen that ſearched his houſe. Notwithſtanding being more earneſtlie preſſed to confeſſe the truth, he ſaid they had béene left (he knew not how) in his chamber by a man of his, who not long before was departed out of the realme, named Edward Rogers, alias Puttebie, by whome they were written. And to make this deuiſe to carie ſome colour of truth, after his committing vnto the Tower, he found the meanes to get thrée cards, on the backeſide of which cards he wrote to his brother George Throckemorton to this effect. I haue béene examined by whome the two papers, conteining the names of certeine noblemen and gentlemen, and of hauens, &c: were written; & I haue alleged them to haue béene written by Edward Puttebie my man, of whoſe handwriting you know them to be: meaning by this deuiſe to haue had his brother confirme his falſhood.

A colour of truth to countenance a manifeſt lie.

Theſe cards were intercepted, and thereby the ſuſpicion before conceiued of his practiſes increaſed. Wherevpon, as vpon other iuſt cauſe and matter againſt him, hauing béene ſundrie times brought before ſome of the principall perſonages of hir maieſties moſt honourable priuie councell; and by them with all induſtrie examined, and perſuaded in verie mild and charitable maner, to confeſſe the truth, promiſing to procure pardon for him, in caſe he would bewraie the depth of his practiſes: but no perſuaſion preuailing, hir maieſtie thought it agréeable with good policie, and the ſafetie of hir roiall perſon and ſtate, to commit him ouer to the hands of ſome of hir learned councell and others hir faithfull ſeruants and miniſters, with commiſſion to them, to aſſaie by torture to draw from him the truth of the matters appearing ſo weightie as to concerne the inuading of the realme, &c. Theſe men by vertue of that commiſſion, procéeded with him, firſt as the councell had formerlie doone by waie of perſuaſion, to induce him to confeſſe: but finding that courſe not to preuaile, they were conſtreined to commit him to ſuch as are vſuallie appointed in the Tower to handle the racke, by whome he was laied vpon the ſame, and ſomewhat pinched, although not much: for at the end of thrée daies following, he had recouered himſelfe, and was in as good plight as before the time of his racking; which if it had then or anie other time béene miniſtred vnto him with that violence that he and his fauourers haue indeuoured ſlanderouſlie to giue out, the ſignes thereof would haue appeared vpon his lims for manie yeares.

The maner of procéeding againſt Throckemorton by commiſſion.

At this firſt time of torture he would confeſſe nothing, but continued in his former obſtinacie and deniall of the truth. The ſecond time that he was put to the racke, before he was ſtrained vp to anie purpoſe, he yéelded to confeſſe anie thing he knew, in the matters obiected againſt him: wherevpon he was looſed. And then the commiſſioners procéeded with him according to ſuch interrogatories as had béene deliuered vnto them: which for the more breuitie ſhall here be omitted, the intent of this declaration tending onelie to diſcouer vnto you the treaſons and treacherous dealings of the ſaid Francis Throckemorton as well before as ſince his impriſonment, for your better knowledge of the man, and manifeſtation of the due and iuſt procéedings held with him by hir maieſties commiſſioners appointed vnto that ſeruice. And here you are to note, that when he was firſt preſſed to diſcouer by whome the plots of the hauens were ſet downe, and to what purpoſe; he began (without anie further interrogation miniſtred) by waie of an hiſtoricall narration, to declare that at his being at Spaw in the countrie of Liege certeine yeares paſt, he entered into conference with one Iennie a notorious knowne traitor, touching the altering of the ſtate of the realme here, and how the ſame might be attempted by forren inuaſion, and to the like effect had ſundrie conferences with ſir Francis Englefield in the low countries, who dailie ſolicited the Spaniſh king in Spaine, and his gouernors in the ſaid countries, to attempt the inuading of the realme, continued a courſe of practiſing againſt hir maieſtie & the ſtate, by letters betwéene ſir Francis Englefield & himſelfe, till within theſe two yeares laſt paſt, and that he did from time to time acquaint ſir Iohn Throckemorton his late father with his traitorous practiſes, who (as he ſaid) ſéeing no probabilitie of ſucceſſe in them, diſſuaded him from anie further medling with thoſe practiſes.

The intent of this declaration what it is.

Iennie a notorious knowne traitor, a conferrer with Throckmorton.

He hath further confeſſed, that he vſed his fathers aduiſe & opinion in ſetting downe the names of the catholike noblemen & gentlemen, and did acquaint him with the deſcription of the hauens for the landing of forces, which he conceiued and put in writing onelie by view of the map, & not by particular ſight or ſuruei of the ſaid hauens.

Item, he hath alſo confeſſed, that vpon the intermiſſion of writing of letters, and the accuſtomed intelligences paſſed betwéene ſir Francis Englefield and him, he was made acquainted by his brother Thomas Throckemorton, by letters and conference, and by Thomas Morgan by letters (two of the principall confederats and workers of theſe treaſons reſiding in France) with a reſolute determination agréed on by the Scotiſh quéene and hir confederats in France and in other forren parts, and alſo in England, for the inuading of the realme.

Sir Franci Englefield, Thomas Throckmorton, and Thomas Morgan.

That the duke of Guiſe ſhould be the principall leader and executor of that inuaſion.

That the pretention (which ſhould be publikelie notified) ſhould be to deliuer the Scotiſh quéene to libertie, & to procure euen by force from the quéenes maieſtie a tolerance in religion for the pretended catholikes. But the intention (the bottome thereof ſhould not at the firſt be made knowne to all men) ſhould be vpon the quéenes maieſties reſiſtance, to remooue hir maieſtie from hir crowne and ſtate.

[illegible]

That the duke of Guiſe had prepared the forces, but there wanted two things, monie, and the aſſiſtance of a conuenient partie in England, to ioine with the forren forces; and a third thing, how to ſet the Scotiſh quéene at libertie without perill of hir perſon.

The ſpeciall meanes wanting.

For the firſt thing wanting, that is, monie; meſſengers were ſent from forren parts both to Rome and Spaine, & their returne dailie expected to their liking. And the Spaniſh ambaſſadour to incourage the Engliſh to ioine both in purſe & perſon, did giue out, that the king his maiſter would not onlie make ſome notable attempt againſt England, but alſo would beare halfe the charge of the enterpriſe. For the ſecond thing, that is, the preparing of a ſufficient partie in England, to receiue and to ioine with the forren forces, one eſpeciall meſſenger was ſent ouer into England in Auguſt laſt, vnder a counterfeit name from the confederats in France, to ſignifie the plat and preparation there, and to ſolicit the ſame here.

The Spani ambaſſadour words tending to this inuaſion.

That Thomas Throckemorton his brother made him priuie to his negotiation at his laſt being here in England; and that therevpon Francis Throckemorton tooke vpon him to be a follower and meanes for the effectuating thereof among the confederats in England, with the helpe of the Spaniſh ambaſſadour, whome he inſtructed how and with whome to deale for the preparing of a conuenient partie here within the realme, for that himſelfe would not be ſéene to be a ſounder of men, leaſt he might be diſcouered, and ſo indanger himſelfe and the enterpriſe, knowing that the ambaſſadour being a publike perſon, might ſafelie deale therein without perill.

Landing places by forren forces about Arundell in Suſſex.

That the duke of Guiſe and other heads of the enterpriſe had refuſed ſome landing places, and made ſpeciall choiſe of Suſſex, and about Arundell in Suſſex, both for the néere cut from the parts of France, where the duke did or beſt could aſſemble his force, and for the opportunitie of aſſured perſons to giue aſſiſtance, &c.

That he, taking vpon him the purſute of this courſe, ſhewed the whole plot and deuiſe of the hauens for landing to the Spaniſh ambaſſadour, who did incourage him therin; he promiſing, that if he might haue reſpit vntill the next ſpring, the ſame ſhould be doone more exactlie.

That at the time of Thomas Throckemortons being here, leaſt the negotiation of the enterpriſe, by ſome caſualtie, might faile in the onelie hand of one man Thomas Throckemorton, there was alſo from the confederats ſent ouer into Suſſex, Charles Paget, vnder the name of Pope aliàs Spring, and thereof an aduertiſement couertlie ſent vnto Thomas Throckemorton, both that Thomas might vnderſtand it, and not be offended that an other was ioined with him in his labour.

Charles Paget vnder the name of Pope aliàs Spring a confederat in this action.

That the Spaniſh ambaſſador, by aduertiſements from the confederats, was made priuie to this comming of Charles Paget vnder the name of Pope, and yet knowne to him to be Charles Paget.

That the ſaid ambaſſador did, according to his ſaid aduertiſements, know & affirme that Charles Paget was come ouer to view the hauens and countrie for landing of ſuch forren forces about Arundell, and ſpeciallie to ſound and conferre with certeine principall perſons for aſſiſtance.

The ſame ambaſſadour alſo knew and affirmed, that Charles Paget had accordinglie doone his meſſage, and had ſpoken with ſome principall perſons here according vnto his commiſſion, and was returned.

He moreouer confeſſed that there was a deuiſe betwéene the Spaniſh ambaſſadour and him, how ſuch principall recuſants here within the realme, as were in the commiſſion of the peace in ſundrie counties, might vpon the firſt brute of the landing of forren forces, vnder colour and pretext of their authoritie and the defenſe of hir maieſtie, leuie men, whome they might after[illegible]oine to the forren forces, and conuert them again[illegible] maieſtie.

This would be heard and therefore [illegible] by publike [illegible].

In theſe few [illegible] is brieflie compriſed the whole effect of his confeſſion made at large, without anie interrogatorie particularlie miniſtred, other than vpon the two papers before mentioned, conteining the names of men and hauens. And here you are to note, that at [illegible] time of his apprehenſion, there was no knowledge or doubt had of theſe treaſons, or of his priuitie vnto them; but onelie an information and ſuſpicion deliuered and conceiued of ſome practiſe betwéene him and the Scotiſh quéene, as is before mentioned. For the diſcouering whereof, after he had béene ſundrie times vpon his allegiance commanded to declare his doings in conueieng and receiuing of letters to and from hir; he did voluntarilie confeſſe that he had written diuerſe letters vnto hir, and had conueied manie to and fro, betwéene hir and Thomas Morgan in France, by whoſe meanes he was firſt made knowne to hir, and that he had receiued as manie letters from hir. He alſo declared the effect of his letters to hir, & of hirs to him: which letters betwéene them were alwaies written in cipher, and the cipher with the nullities and marks for names of princes and councellors he ſent vnto the quéenes maieſtie written with his owne hand. He alſo deliuered the names of ſome, by whome he conueied his letters vnto the Scotiſh quéene, as by one Godfrie Fulgeam, who fled the realme immediatlie vpon Throckemortons apprehenſion; and one other perſon, whome he deſcribed by his ſtature, ſhape, and apparell, and the man ſince apprehended and examined, hath confeſſed the ſame: the mans name is William Ardington.

Throckemorton wrote diuerſe letters to Marie the Scotiſh quéene.

Godfrie Fulgeam was glad to crie Fugiam.

The ſumme and effect of the moſt part of theſe confeſſions, although they were at the time of his arreignement opened and dilated by hir maieſties ſergeant, atturneie, and ſolicitor generall at the bar, and therefore ſéeme not néedfull to be repeated here; yet becauſe the purpoſe of this diſcourſe is to ſhew ſufficient proofe, that the matters conteined in his ſaid confeſſions, are neither falſe nor feigned (as Francis Throckmorton moſt impudentlie affirmed at his triall, alledging that they were méere inuentions of himſelfe by policie to auoid the torture) they haue béene here inſerted, to the end you may the better iudge of the proofes, preſumptions, and circumſtances following, by comparing the matters with their accidents, and conſequentlie ſée the falſhood of the traitor, the iuſt and honorable procéedings of hir maieſtie, and the honeſt and loiall indeuors of hir miniſters imploied in the diſcouering of the treaſons.

The cauſe why Throckmortons confeſſions are here mentioned.

Firſt, it is true and not denied by himſelfe, that he was at Spaw about the time by him mentioned, and had conference with Ienneie in that place, and with ſir Francis Englefield in Flanders, and that he hath written letters to ſir Francis, and receiued letters from him: for if he ſhould denie the ſame, he were to be conuinced by good proofe: for it hath béene noted in him by manie of his countriemen, Engliſh ſubiects, that both in thoſe parts and in France, he did continuallie aſſociat himſelfe with Engliſh rebels and fugitiues. If then you conſider with whome he hath conuerſed beyond the ſeas, and compare his religion with theirs, you will iudge of his conuerſation accordinglie. And it is to be ſuppoſed, that thoſe men, knowne to be continuall practiſers againſt the quéenes maieſtie and this realme, from whenſe for their treaſons and vnnaturall demeanours they are worthilie baniſhed, will not in their conuenticles and méetings forget to bethinke them of their baniſhment, and how they might be reſtored to their countrie, whereunto no deſert in hir maieſties life time (which God long continue) can well (without hir maieſties great mercie) reſtore them.

Throckemorton was at Spaw, and elſewhere, &c.

Then I praie you, what conferences might maiſter Throckemorton haue with ſir Francis Englefield, with Ienneie, with Liggons, with Owen, and with ſuch like, who were his dailie companions in France and in the low countries? He hath written letters to ſir Francis Englefield. To what purpoſes? He haunted continuallie two ambaſſadors in London, by whoſe meanes he ſent and receiued letters to and from beyond the ſeas dailie. To whome, and from whome? Euen to and from Thomas Morgan, and Thomas Throckemorton at Paris, men knowne to hir maieſtie and hir councell to be notorious practiſers, verie inward with the duke of Guiſe, and contriuers of the treaſons and deuiſes for the inuaſion intended. And for verie certeine knowledge thereof, we néed not be beholding to Francis Throckemorton onelie (although he hath ſaid much of them) but to others of better credit than himſelfe.

This is a principall marke whereat they ſhoot, and therefore they cannot but meditat vpon the meanes.

That the duke of Guiſe did vndertake the enterpriſe to inuade the realme with a forren power, to be defraied by the pope and king of Spaine (a part of maiſter Throckemortons confeſſion) and he in truth the firſt diſcouerer thereof to hir maieſtie: if he will ſay that it was but inuention, it will approue falſe. For ſince he diſcouered the ſame, there haue béene diuerſe aduertiſements thereof ſent to hir maieſtie from forren princes hir highneſſe louing neighbors and alies; as alſo by other good meanes and intelligences from hir ambaſſadors and ſeruants reſiding in other countries. If he denie (as he hath done) that he neuer had knowledge of anie ſuch matter when he confeſſed the ſame, it hath no likelihood of truth: for Throckemorton was neuer knowne to be a prophet to foretell things De futuro.

The duke of Guiſe his enterpriſe to inuade the realme.

The Spaniſh ambaſſador and Throckemorton did often times conuerſe and conferre.

He reſorted often to the Spaniſh ambaſſador, at the leaſt twiſe a wéeke when he was in London: this often repaire could not be to conferre with the ambaſſador for the exchange of monie for his brother, as he pretended at his arreignement: there was ſome other cauſe. When he was apprehended, he had a caſket couered with gréene veluet, verie cunninglie conueied out of his chamber by a maidſeruant of the houſe, taken vp vnder a beds ſide in his chamber (one of the gentlemen who were ſent to apprehend him then being in the chamber, & vnknowing thereof) which caſket not long after his apprehenſion, was by one Iohn Meredith a follower of Throckemorton, conueied to the hands of the Spaniſh ambaſſador. And why to him? If the matters therein might well haue abidden the light, why ſhould not the caſket haue béene kept ſtill at home? And if not there, why not ſent to ſome other place of ſafetie, as well as to the Spaniſh ambaſſador? It is to be conceiued, that this caſket was not conueied thither without the direction of Francis Throckemorton, though caried by Meredith, who did well know of what moment the matters were that were within the caſket, & of what danger to Throckemorton if they had béene diſcloſed; & therefore meant to beſtowe them in a ſafe place where they could not readilie be had (as he thought) and with a perſon not vnacquainted with the qualitie of them. After the deliuerie of the caſket, Meredith fled: for in truth he was priuie to the treaſons, and a fellow practiſer in them. To whome Francis Throckemorton, being taken ſhort at the time of his apprehenſion, and forced to run vp a ſtaire to deface a letter, which he was then in writing to the Scotiſh quéene in cipher (as he hath confeſſed) being ſuddenlie apprehended, and ſo forced to depart awaie preſentlie out of his houſe, deliuered priuilie into the hands of Meredith, either the cipher by the which he was writing his letter to the Scotiſh quéene, or a letter in cipher by him written vnto hir: therefore he truſted Meredith as a man priuie to his doings.

Throckemorton ſurpriſed and put to a narrow ſhift.

Feare is an ordinarie tormentor of a guiltie conſcience.

You are alſo to vnderſtand, that Throckemorton was in verie great feare of the diſcouering of this caſket after his apprehenſion. For remaining two or thrée daies priſoner in the houſe of one of the gentlemen that were ſent to apprehend him, before he was committed to the Tower, he was permitted to talke with a ſolicitor of his law cauſes, who brought him certeine bookes drawne, or other like papers written, which he made ſhew to peruſe. But that was not the matter why he ſent for his ſolicitor: for in peruſing the bookes, he conueied into them a little péece of paper, vpon the which he had written with a cole; I would faine know whether my caſket be ſafe: or to the like effect. The ſolicitor departing from him, and reſorting to Throckemortons houſe, not far diſtant from the place where he remained priſoner, opening his papers, did ſhake out this péece of paper, which he tooke vp and deliuered to one of Francis Throckemortons men; but the caſket was alreadie conueid to the Spaniſh ambaſſador. Wherby you wil perceiue what care he had of the caſket, & how much it might import him to haue the writings or matters within the ſame concealed. He being examined touching the caſket, and what was in the ſame, he denied at the firſt that euer he had anie ſuch caſket; but finding afterwards that the caſket was diſcouered, he confeſſed the caſket, and ſaid there were certeine letters therein that came to his hands for the Scotiſh quéene from Thomas Morgan at Paris, and other letters and papers, but confeſſed not all, as it is ſuppoſed. That Charles Paget came ouer into the realme to euill purpoſes, as Throckemorton doth declare in his confeſſion, could not be inuented: for euen at the ſame time that he mentioneth, Paget came ouer, in ſecret and ſuſpicious maner, ſtaied not aboue fiftéene daies, indeuored in a ſort to find the diſpoſition of William Shellie eſquier, how he might ſtand affected to giue aſſiſtance to the treaſons, although Paget diſcouered not directlie his traitorous intents to Shellie: therefore all Throckemortons confeſſions were not forged or inuented.

The clouds of lies cannot ſo darken the truth but it will appeare.

How William Shellie ſtood affectioned to theſe treaſonable plots.

But bicauſe the two papers produced at his arreignement, conteining the deſcription of the hauens for the commodious landing of forces, doo moſt apparantlie condemne him, and are a manifeſt argument of his priuitie to the whole treaſon; you may not forget that he acknowledged one of the papers written in the ſecretarie hand, to haue béene of his owne dooing, but denied the other written in the Romane hand. In the which, vnder the title of Cheſhire, &c: is ſaid, Vpon the landing of forren ſupplies, Cheſter ſhall be taken. But what in your opinions might be vnderſtood by that ſentence, Cheſter ſhall be taken, when you ſhall compare the paper in the ſecretarie hand with the other written in the Romane hand, intituled; The names of noblemen and gentlemen in euerie countie fit to be dealt withall in this matter (which in truth were both one, although the Romane were ſomewhat more inlarged) the queſtion is to be aſked, What matter? The anſwer followeth neceſſarilie, To aſſiſt the forren forces that ſhall come to inuade the realme: for that there is an other title in that paper ouer the names of the hauens, &c: Hauens in euerie coaſt fit for the landing of forces. Now iudge you, to what end theſe names of men and deſcriptions of hauens, the entries, capacities, what winds bring vnto them from Spaine, France, and Flanders, were written and ſet downe by Throckemorton: the papers are both of his owne handwriting, and the ſecretarie but a proiect or copie of the Romane.

Certeine words and clauſes of letters treaſonable.

Is it not likelie (thinke [illegible]) that he would acquaint the Spaniſh amba[illegible] with theſe papers (as he hath confeſſed) when [illegible] made him partaker of the reſt of his traitorous practiſes & deuiſes, as you haue heard, and thought his caſket of treaſons to be moſt ſafelie committed to his hands? It may be thought that there is no [illegible] of ſo ſimple vnderſtanding, that [illegible] to the contrarie, vnleſſe he be parcialie affected to excuſe the treaſons. And now to ſhew vnto you what mind this man hath caried towards hir maieſtie; you are to be informed that Francis Throckemorton, after he had diſcouered to hir maieſtie his courſe of practiſing, repenting himſelfe of his plaine dealing in the bewraieng thereof, ſaid to ſome of the commiſſioners vpon occaſion of ſpeach; I would I had béene hanged when I firſt opened my mouth to declare anie of the matters by me confeſſed. And being at other times ſent vnto by hir maieſtie with offer of pardon, if he would diſcloſe the whole packe and complices of the treaſons; he vſed this argument to perſuade hir maieſtie, that he had confeſſed all, ſaieng that Sith he had alreadie brought himſelfe by his confeſſions within the danger of the lawes, to the vtter ruine of his houſe and familie, he wondered why there ſhould be anie conceit in hir maieſtie, that he had not declared all. But to perſuade ſuch as were ſent vnto him fo[illegible]ſe purpoſes, the rather to beléeue that he could vtt[illegible]r no more, at one time he vſed theſe ſpéeches following with great vehemencie: Now I haue diſcloſed the ſecrets of hir who was the déereſt thing vnto me in the world (meaning the Scotiſh quéene) and whom I thought no torment ſhould haue drawen me ſo much to haue preiudiced as I haue doone by my confeſſions. I ſée no cauſe why I ſhould ſpare anie one, if I could ſaie ought againſt him: and ſith I haue failed of my faith towards hir, I care not if I were hanged.

What mind Throckemorton hath caried towards hir maieſtie.

This vehement ſpeach importeth ſome ſecrets of great moment betwéene Throckemorton and the Scotiſh quéene.

And when he began firſt to confeſſe his treaſons, which he did moſt vnwillinglie, after he was entered into the declaration of them before all the commiſſioners, vpon aduiſement he deſired he might deliuer his knowledge but to one of them onelie: wherevnto they yéelded. And therevpon remoouing aſide from the place where he ſat by the racke, he vſed this prouerbe in Italian, Chi a perſo la fede, a perſo l'honore, that is, He that hath falſed his faith, hath loſt his reputation; meaning thereby (as it may be conceiued) that he had giuen his faith to be a traitor, and not to reueale the treaſons: & then he began to confeſſe as you haue heard. By this diſcourſe, conteining the principall heads of his treaſons, and the profes and circumſtances of the ſame, you that are not tranſported with vndutifull minds and affections, will cléerelie perceiue how impudentlie and vntrulie he denied at his arreignement the truth of his confeſſions, charging hir maieſtie with crueltie, and hir miniſters with vntruths in their procéeding againſt him. But the cauſe that mooued him thereto, was the vaine conceit he had taken that his caſe was cléere [illegible], by the intermiſſion of the time betwéene his [illegible]ſion made and his arreignement, grounding [illegible]ſelfe vpon a ſtatute of the thirtéenth yeare of hir ma[illegible]ties reigne, in the which there are certeine treaſons [illegible]ecified and made of that nature, that no perſo[illegible] ſhalbe arreigned for anie of thoſe offenſes committed within anie of the quéenes maieſties dominions, vnleſſe the offendor be thereof indicted within [illegible] moneths next after the ſame offenſe committed; and the offen[illegible] ſhall not be arreigned for the ſame, vnleſſe two ſuffic[illegible] be proued by the teſtimonie and oth of [illegible]ſent witneſſes, or his voluntarie confeſſion withou[illegible] violence: wherein he was greatlie de[illegible]ued. F[illegible] was made manifeſt vnto him by the [illegible]ther of the iudges in commiſ[illegible] [illegible] treaſons were puniſhable [illegible]hich admitted no ſuch li[illegible] [illegible] Herein his ſkill failed him, and forgot [illegible] giuen vnto him by ſome of the commiſſion[illegible] [illegible] his misfortune for ſundrie good gif[illegible] [illegible]ind appearing in him) aſſured him that there [illegible] no waie ſo readie for him to redéeme his life, as by ſubmiſſion and acknowledging of his offenſe, which for a time after he had confeſſed his treaſons he was contented to follow, and now eftſoones after his condemnation by a new ſubmiſſion to the quéens maieſtie the fourth of Iune had reſumed that courſe. The ſubmiſſion verbatim, written with his owne hand, followeth.

The cauſe [illegible] his ar[illegible]reignement.

Theſe giftes in him were Vt venenum in [illegible]

To hir moſt excellent maieſtie, euen to hir owne roiall hands.

Throckemortons ſubmiſſion in a letter, anſwering Ad verbum with MOſt excellent prince, and my moſt gratious ſoueraigne, ſith to me the moſt miſerable of all your maieſties poore diſtreſſed ſubiects, being iuſtlie condemned by the ordinarie and orderlie courſe of your maieſties laws, there reſteth no further meane of defenſe but ſubmiſſion: vouchſafe, moſt excellent prince, gratiouſlie to accept the ſame, which proſtrate in all humilitie I here preſent vnto the hands of your moſt excellent maieſtie; beſeeching the ſame, that as iuſtice hath beene deriued from your highneſſe, as from the founteine, to the triall of mine actions: ſo I may receiue from the ſame ſpring, ſome drop of grace and mercie for the great & grieuous offenſe, wherof I reſt by your maieſties lawes iuſtlie condemned: ſome part, I ſaie, of that your accuſtomed gratious clemencie, wherof moſt your diſtreſſed ſubiects haue taſted, and few beene depriued. And albeit the inconſiderate raſhneſſe of vnbridled youth hath withdrawen me from that loiall reſpect, which nature & dutie bound me to owe vnto your maieſtie, as to my lawfull & naturall dread ſoueraigne; and that the naturall care in me of the defenſe of my life mooued me latelie to the vntrue & vndutifull gainſaieng of ſome ſuch points as had beene before by me in moſt humble ſort confeſſed: neuertheleſſe, I moſt humblie beſeech your moſt excellent maieſtie, that in imitation of God, whoſe image (both in reſpect of the happie place you hold, as alſo in regard of your ſingular wiſdome and other the rare and ſingular vertues & perfections wherwith God & nature hath plentifullie indued you) you repreſent vnto vs here in earth, it may pleaſe your maieſtie to commiſerate the lamentable eſtate of me now the moſt miſerable of all your maieſties ſubiects and gratiouſlie to grant vnto me remiſſion and forgiuenes, that not onelie doo moſt humblie confeſſe my ſelfe worthie of death; but alſo in ſhew of my repentance and ſorowfull afflicted mind, doo not craue at your maieſties hands the prolonging of my life, if the ſame ſhall not ſtand with your gratious good pleſure; but rather deſire the trebling of the torment iuſtlie by your maieſties lawes impoſed vpon me, if the ſame may be anie ſatiſfaction to your maieſtie for the heinous crime whereof I remaine by your maieſties lawes iuſtlie condemned; or anie mitigation of your maieſties indignation worthilie conceiued againſt me, that deſire not to liue without your fauour; and dieng will wiſh from my hart, that my end may be the beginning of your maieſties ſecuritie, and my death the preſeruation of your life, and the increaſe both to your maieſtie, and to this your moſt flouriſhing commonwelth, of all the moſt happie bleſſings of almightie God.

his owne handwriting.

He ſueth for vndeſerued mercie to hir maieſtie in his miſerie, in whoſe fauour he might haue liued by loialtie.

Your maieſties moſt wofull ſubiect in that he hath offended you:

Francis Throckemorton.

He ſent vnto hir maieſtie, togither with the ſaid ſubmiſſion, a declaration written likewiſe with his owne hand, conteining the effects of the moſt principall points of his treaſons formerlie confeſſed: retracting onelie the accuſation of his father, and ſome other particularities of no moment to cléere him of his treaſons, the effect wherof followeth in his owne words, as he ſet them downe.

A declaration, &c: written by Throckemorton to the quéenes maieſtie.

The declaration which Throckmorton ſent to hir maieſtie, with his letter of ſubmiſſion.

THe onelie cauſe why I coined the practiſe firſt by me confeſſed, and vniuſtlie touched my father, was, for that partlie I conceiued that the paper written ſo long ſince, could not now by law haue touched me: but principallie, for that I was willing thereby to colour the ſetting downe of thoſe names and hauens in Romane hand, which were written long after the time by me confeſſed vpon occaſion of conference betweene the Spaniſh ambaſſador and me of this latter practiſe. Mine intelligence with the Scotiſh queene began a little before Chriſtmas was two yeares: the cipher I had from Thomas Morgan in France; the firſt letter I receiued by Godfrie Fulgeam, by whome alſo came all ſuch others as I after receiued for the moſt part, vnleſſe it were ſuch as came to me by F. A. his hands, who as he told me, receiued them of the fellow by me ſpoken of in my former confeſſions, whoſe name, I proteſt before God, I know not, nor whenſe he is. And for ſuch letters as came vnto me in the abſence of Fulgeam, they were incloſed vnder a couerture from Fulgeam, and were deliuered me by the hands of Robert Tunſtead his brother in law, vnto whome I deliuered ſuch as I had for the Scotiſh queene, couered with a direction vnto Fulgeam: and once I remember or twiſe I ſent by one of my men called Butler, letters for the Scotiſh queene to the houſe of the ſaid Tunſtead, neere Buckeſtones, couered with a direction to Tunſtead, and vnder a letter to Fulgeam. In ſuch letters as came to me from the Scotiſh queene, were incloſed letters to F. A. manie times, and moſt times ſome for Thomas Morgan. Hir letters to me conteined, ⁊c.

William Irdington.

But before I returned mine anſwer vnto hir, I vnderſtood of the death of the duke of Lenox, and withall heard from Morgan, with whome all mine intelligence was (for with my brother, I neuer had anie, other than that the matters by me written to Morgan were by him imparted vnto my brother moſt times) that by the perſuaſion of the pope and the king of Spaine, the duke of Guiſe had yeelded to performe the iournie in perſon: and that it was thought that the next waie to atteine libertie for the Scotiſh queene, and to reforme Scotland, was to begin here in England. And therefore he deſired to know from me, whether in mine opinion catholikes would not backe any ſuch force as ſhould be ſent, conſidering a demand of tolerance in religion for them ſhould inſue the well performing of the ſaid enterpriſe, and what I thought the force would amount vnto, both of horſſe and footmen, and where I thought to be the fitteſt landing. Mine anſwer was, that as then, I ſaw no great probabilitie of the good ſucceſſe of ſuch an enterpriſe, for that the catholikes were timorous, diſperſed, the matter perillous to be communicated vnto manie, without which I ſaw not how anie eſtimat could be made of the forces: beſides, that it was an imminent danger vnto the Scotiſh queene, whereof I ſaw no remedie.

The next way to atteine libertie for the Scotiſh queene, ⁊c.

I tooke notice of this matter in my next letters to the Scotiſh queene, whoſe anſwer was, that ſhe latelie heard of that determination, ⁊c. Vpon my former anſwer vnto Morgan, he deſired me, that I would conferre with the Spaniſh ambaſſador, to whom I ſhould be recommended from thenſe. Hereupon the ſaid ambaſſador ſent for me, and brake with me in this matter, aſſuring me that in his opinion he found it verie eaſie to make great alteration here with verie little force, conſidering the diſuſe in men to warre, and troubles would ſo amaze them (as he thought) that they would be as ſoone ouerthrowne as aſſailed: ⁊ he could not thinke but in ſuch a caſe catholikes would ſhew themſelues, ſith the purpoſe tended to the obteining for them libertie of conſcience: and therefore he deſired me to acquaint him, what I thought men would doo in ſuch a caſe, and where I thought the fitteſt landing, and what holds in theſe parts were eaſieſt to be ſurpriſed. I anſwered him, that (as it ſeemed) the enterpriſe ſtood vpon great vncerteinties, if it depended of the knowledge of a certeine force to be found here, which no man could aſſure him of, vnleſſe he had ſounded all the catholikes, which was not poſſible without a maniſeſt hazard of the diſcouerie of the purpoſe. For as for anie great perſonage, I know no one to be drawne to this action, that could carrie anie more than his ordinarie retinue: the onlie waie in ſuch a caſe was (I told him) for ſuch as would be drawne into this matter, and were of credit in their countries, to leuie forces vnder colour of the princes authoritie.

The peſtilent perſuaſion of the Spaniſh ambaſſador to preſer this pernicious enterpriſe.

But for that theſe things depended vpon vncerteine grounds, which was not fit to be vſed in ſo great an action, I ſaid it was to be reſolued, that the force to be ſent ſhould be of that number, that what backing ſoeuer they ſhould find here, they might be able of themſelues to incounter with anie force that might be prouided to be ſent againſt them, and therfore they could not be leſſe than fifteene thouſand men. For the place of their landing, I ſaid it depended much vpon the force that ſhould be ſent: for if that were in great number, it mattered not where they landed: if in a ſmall companie, then was it requiſit that it ſhould be in the countries beſt affected, ⁊ furtheſt from hir maieſties principall forces, which I ſaid to be in the northerne parts on either ſide. To the danger of the Scotiſh queene by me obiected, he ſaid he knew no remedie, vnleſſe ſhe might be taken awaie by ſome two hundred horſſe, which I told him I ſaw not to be poſſible: for that I knew not anie gentleman in thoſe parts (which were men, if anie, to performe it) that I durſt wiſh to be made acquainted with the matter before hand.

The reſolution was fruſtrate as alſo the later of the plot: ſuch was Gods iuſtice to perſecute ⁊ ſupplant both the one and the other.

Finallie, our concluſion was, that I ſhould informe him of the hauens as particularlie as I could: and within few daies after, finding by him th[illegible] force intended hither, was farre inferior vnto t[illegible] ſpake of; and that there was ſome different betweene the pope ⁊ the king of Spaine for the [illegible]arge, I told him that the ſureſt courſe and of leaſt d[illegible]ger were, to ſend a ſupplie into Scotland, where a [illegible]ll force would breed a great alteration, and th[illegible] the[illegible]ing there eſtabliſhed by the good liking of the k[illegible] that I thought it was in him by a continuall war[illegible]curſions ſo to annoie this ſtate, as hir ma[illegible]ritie here ſhould be forced to yeeld the libertie of t[h]e Scotiſh queene, and what ſhould thereupon haue beene reaſonablie demanded for the benefit of the catholikes here. And herein I ſaid it would [illegible]eat fur[illegible]rance, if at the ſame time ſon[illegible] Ireland: where although the[illegible] that the former forces [illegible] charge be ſo great to hir [illegible] great a[illegible]caſion of diſperſing of [illegible], as a much leſſe companie than was [illegible] firſt by me, would (being landed here in a[illegible]nt place) ſhake the minds of men generallie, and be of force (if anie thing) to draw them to ſhew themſelues in the furtherance of the purpoſe.

W[illegible] this ([illegible]) [illegible]turall ſub[illegible] [illegible]ts opinion, or not rather the conceipt of a tyrannous traitor?

He vtterlie reiected the purpoſe for Ireland, and diſliked not the purpoſe for Scotland; but ſtill he was in mind to haue forces landed here: and therefore deſired me verie earneſtlie to inquire particularlie of the hauens on the ſide of Cumberland and Lancaſhire, and what men were dwelling there that were well affected in religion, and what places eaſie to be taken, and what apt for fortification. The next time that I went to the Spaniſh ambaſſador, he found himſelfe greeued that he vnderſtood matters were determined in France without his priuitie: and told me that Perſons the Ieſuit was gone vnto Rome, ſent (as he thought) to vnderſtand the popes minde. Soone after came ouer my brother Thomas, to make an end of our account, and to perſuade me to come ouer, aſſuring me that for ought he could ſee in likelihood, the enterpriſe was neuer like to take effect. In the time of his being here, and while I interteined intelligence with the Scotiſh queene concerning hir libertie, the Spaniſh ambaſſador ſent for me, and told me of the comming ouer of Mope to view Suſſex and the hauens, and as he thought, to taſt the beſt of account there: whereat he ſeemed to be aggreeued, for that ſuch matters had not beene left to him, being one whome they in France made beleeue that they relied vpon principallie in this enterpriſe. Afterwards, the ambaſſador told me, that it was Charles Paget, and that he was returned, but where he had beene he knew not, and at the ſame time I receiued a letter from Morgan, that it was Paget: but aſſuring me, and ſo willed me to aſſure the ambaſſador, that his comming was not to moue anie man, but onelie to view the countrie, for that the mouing of anie man was referred vnto him. I did ſo, and he intreated me to remember him for thoſe foreſaid names and hauens, saieng, that ſo it were doone exactlie by the ſpring, it would ſuffice: for that ſooner he ſaw no likelihood of the execution of the enterpriſe.

This Spaniſh ambaſſador had no good meaning in mouing this requeſt.

This Mope was Charles Paget otherwiſe named Spring: as before.

My brother hauing made an end of his account with me, returned with this reſolution betweene vs (I proteſt before God) that if the enterpriſe ſucceeded not betweene this and the next ſpring now paſt, that I would ſettle my things here and go ouer. And for this cauſe, he being gone, I went downe into the countrie, both to ſell and take order for my lands in thoſe parts, as alſo to fetch the draught of gentlemen and hauens for the moſt part of England, which had beene ſet downe by me aboue two yeares ſince, and left behind me at Feckenham in my ſtudie. Not finding the draught at Feckenham, I returned to London, where I found the note of names in ſecretarie hand, which I carried to the Spaniſh ambaſſador, and there drew that other in Romane hand in his ſtudie, putting downe Cheſter to be taken, in reſpect of the eaſineſſe as I thought, and the rather to giue him incouragement in the matter, I left it with him, promiſing him that by the next ſpring I would perfect it, if I taried ſo long; making knowne vnto him, that I was had in ſuſpicion, and my determination to be gone: but he preſſed the contrarie of me, aſſuring me, that if the enterpriſe proceeded not, he would then alſo depart.

Throckmortons purpoſe if his enterpriſe ſucceeded not by the next ſpring.

Whether ſir Francis Englefield were a dealer in this practiſe or no, I know not: but ſure I am (for ſo the Spaniſh ambaſſador told me) that ſir Francis had intelligence with the ſaid ambaſſador all the time of his being here. The Spaniſh ambaſſador told me that he heard the people of Northwales were generallie well affected, and therefore he deſired to haue the hauens of that countrie: I told him that hereafter I would helpe him thereunto, although no good might be expected there, for the reaſons by me ſet downe in my firſt confeſſion: and hereupon the daie before mine apprehenſion, the ambaſſador ſent me backe the ſaid paper in Romane hand, deſiring me to ſet downe the ſame at my leaſure more exactlie, which was the cauſe that it was not in my greene veluet caſket. The writings in my caſket were ſuch as were by me confeſſed, and came vnto my hands as I haue confeſſed.

Sir Francis Englefield whither excuſable or no.

¶ I moſt humblie beſeech hir moſt excellent maieſtie, that the extremitie which I haue alreadie ſuſteined, and the cauſes by me diſcouered, to the ſafetie of hir maieſtie and the ſtate, not made knowne (as hath appeared) by anie other meane than by my ſelfe, may craue at hir hands the extending of hir gratious commiſeration towards the releeuing of the lamentable eſtate of me, hir maieſties poore diſtreſſed ſubiect, and mine, if God for mine offenſes forbid not the ſame.

Throckmortons ſute for commiſeration to hir maieſtie.

Now iudge all ye, that be not peruerſlie affected whether Throckmorton be iuſtlie condemned, and whether his confeſſions (though as he pretended, extorted from him by violence) be of force in law againſt him. He conſpired to ouerthrow the ſtate, to bring in ſtrangers to inuade the realme, to remoue hir maieſtie from hir lawfull & naturall right and inheritance to the crowne of England, and to place a ſtranger in hir ſeat. But this laſt point, for placing of a ſtranger, will (perchance) be denied: then note, that in the whole courſe of the practiſe, the greateſt barre to the proſecution of the enterpriſe, was, they found no waie how to put the Scotiſh queene in ſafetie. Then, if theſe dangerous treaſons be diſcouered by torture (the onelie meanes left vnto princes to diſcouer treaſons and attempts againſt their ſtates and perſons, where they find apparant matter to induce ſuſpicion, as in the caſe of Throckmorton, vpon ſight of the plots of hauens, &c) may the law touch the traitor or not? If anie man hold this queſtion negatiuelie, hold him for a friend to traitors and treaſons, and an enimie to the queenes maieſtie, whome God long preſerue, and confound hir enimies: Amen.

A recapitulation of ſome treaſonable enterpriſes by Throckmorton.

On the tenth daie of Iulie next following, the ſame Francis Throckmorton was conueied by water from the Tower of London to the Blacke friers ſtaires, and from thenſe by land to the ſeſſions hall in the old bailie without Newgate, where he was deliuered to the ſhiriffes of London, and then laid on a hurdle, from whence he was drawne to Tiburne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered.

Throckmorton executed.

The ninteenth daie of Iulie, Robert baron of Denbigh, the onelie ſonne and heire of Robert earle of Leiceſter, departed this mortall life, being then of the age of three yeares and ſomewhat more, at Wanſted in Eſſex, the ſolemnitie of whoſe funerall was there honorablie kept on the firſt of Auguſt; and after, his bodie was conueied to Warwike, & there in the chappell of Richard Beauchampe earle of Warwike his anceſtor honorablie intoomed, on the one and twentith of October. In memorie of whom (but not as an epicedium, nor yet as an epitaph) theſe verſes of fit inuention and deuiſe may well be vſed:

Robert baron of Denbigh deceaſſed.

O puer, ô expreſſa patrum ſed maior imago,
Nunc bona cum domino ſpes tumulata iacet:
Sic roſa, ſic teneræ ſulco reſecantur ariſtæ,
Candida ſic primo lilia vere cadunt.

In this yeare, an ancient and charitable citizen of London named D. S. embroderer to the queenes maieſtie (whome God from bare eſtate had aduanced to a degree of credit, hauing his wife aliue, and by hir onelie eight children, ſix of them maried, whoſe children counted togither made aboue the number of twentie) this man (I ſay) notwithſtanding theſe great occaſions by multiplied generations might haue prouoked him to gather and laie vp againſt his death, ſuch worldlie wealth, as they thereby might reape profit after his deceaſe: yet remembring himſelfe, that chriſtians are not placed in this world to benefit their children onlie, but alſo to doo good to the houſhold of faith, whereof none are more likelie to be members than the godlie poore, did laie out the moſt part of his ſubſtance (when he was three ſcore yeares of age) in and about the building of ſix proper houſes in forme of a quadrangle, with theſe words in faire great letters round about the ſame:

The charitable deeds of D. S.

The poore widowes Inne here you may ſee,
Where ſix poore widowes haue houſeroome free:

Theſe letters are placed about the qua drats or ſquares of the building.

And twentie ſhillings yeerelie paid,
During our liues for our further aid:
Though gift be but bare & came from ſmall ſtore,
Deſpiſe not the giuer but praiſe God therefore.
Woorke whileſt thou haſt breath:
No waie to life but Chriſts death.

Vpon the front of the building, ouer the doore or gate of entrance, are theſe words of well wiſhing grauen in ſtone: GOD SAVE OVR NOBLE QVEENE ELISABETH CHEEFE FOVNDER OF THIS WORKE. The originall of this foundation was in this maner. The ſaid D. S. did purchaſe certeine old houſes in the ward of caſtell Bainard, in the citie of London, and pulling them downe to the ground, did (vpon his owne charges) build vpon the ſame ground ſix little houſes all of bricke and ſtone, as ſtronglie as he could deuiſe to continue, euerie houſe hauing thrée ſeuerall roomes one ouer the other: wherein he placed ſix poore widows immediatlie after they were builded, that is, in euerie houſe one widow, chooſing them within the pariſh where the ſaid houſes doo ſtand; being ſuch as haue liued in good name and fame all the daies of their liues, and ſo doo continue, and are of the age of thrée ſcore yeares or thereabouts, before they ſhall be admitted to dwell in anie of them: & being thus admitted, and remaining widowes, they haue their dwelling frée during their liues, and twentie ſhillings a péece beſide, paid them quarterlie by fiue ſhillings euerie quarter, to buie them wood & coles. And this he trulie paieth them during his owne life, and his wife ſhall doo it likewiſe if ſhe doo out liue him during hir life; and after both their deceaſes, he hath made it ouer vnto Chriſts hoſpitall to performe the ſame for euer. For the performance of the premiſſes, he hath left vnto the ſaid hoſpitall ſufficient rents, as well to paie the ſaid ſix pounds yearelie vnto the ſaid ſix poore widowes; as alſo to kéepe the ſaid houſes in reparations and buildings for euer, with ſome ouerplus vnto the ſaid hoſpitall.

Six houſes of perpetuall reléefe, founded vpon S. Peters hill in Baniard caſtell ward.

Rents left in perpetuitie for the maintenance of the ſaid houſes.

And to the intent that his good and charitable prouiſion ſhould by no miſbehauiour be abuſed, but decent and agréeable to the age of the parties there ſeated, he made certeine ordinances and rules, to be obſerued and kept by thoſe ſix poore widowes which doo dwell or héereafter ſhall dwell in anie of thoſe ſix houſes, ſtanding vpon ſaint Peters hill, in the ward of caſtell Bainard, erected by the ſaid D. S. embroderer to our moſt gratious and noble quéene Eliſabeth, Anno 1584.

Ordinances of the founder to be inuiolablie obſerued.

1 Firſt, I will that they ſhall be ſuch widowes as ſhall be giuen to ſerue God, before all other exerciſes, and ſuch as haue liued in good name and fame, and ſo doo continue; no blaſphemers of the name of God, no drunkards, no ſcolds, nor anie diſquiet perſons, but of good and godlie conuerſation, to the better example of others. They ſhall be of the age of thréeſcore yeares, or of ſix and fiftie yeares at the leaſt, before they ſhall be admitted to dwell in anie of the ſame houſes. And if anie of them ſhall fortune to marrie, they ſhall depart out of the ſame houſe or houſes wherein ſhée or they doo dwell, before they doo marrie, and neuer to be admitted to dwell in anie of the ſame houſes againe.

What kind of widowes are to be admitted into theſe houſes.

2 Alſo, they nor anie of them ſhall not lodge, nor ſuffer to be lodged or harboured by daie nor yet by night, anie manner of perſon, neither man, nor woman, nor child, within anie of their houſes, but onelie themſelues; without it be in ſome great extremitie of ſickneſſe, when as of neceſſitie ſome honeſt ancient woman a kéeper, may watch with anie of them for a night or two vpon great neceſſitie; or elſe not lodge, harbour, kéepe, or mainteine, or ſuffer to be lodged, harboured, kept, or mainteined, neither by daie nor yet by night, any maner of perſon, although they be neuer ſo néere of bloud or kindred; but if anie of them ſhall ſo doo, ſhe or they ſhall preſentlie auoid out of hir or their houſes within twentie daies next after anie ſuch offenſe committed, & neuer to be admitted to dwell in anie of the ſaid houſes after. My meaning is not but that they may come the one of them vnto the others houſe, or their friends, to be merie together (when they ſhall thinke méete) louinglie, as honeſt neighbours vſe to doo at houres conuenient, and ſo to depart in good order.

Whom they may lodge and not lodge.

3 Alſo, they ſhall be no kéepers of ſicke perſons in other houſes which ſhall be ſicke of the plague, or of anie infectious ſickeneſſe, for bringing of infected clothes among themſelues: nor they ſhall not ſuffer anie other folkes to haue anie recourſe by their meanes, to waſh anie bucks or other clothes, neither woollen or linnen at the well, nor in anie other part of the ſame yards but onelie themſelues, for annoieng of the tenants with filth & foule waters running through their yards & houſes there adioining. And if anie of the reſt of the ſaid widowes doo or ſhall know that anie of them or more, haue offended anie of theſe articles aforeſaid, and doo not ſhew the ſame vnto ſuch perſons as ſhall haue authoritie to correct and amend the ſame: then all ſuch perſons ſhall be in the like danger as the partie that hath ſo offended, if it may be proued that they did know thereof: and if they or anie of them ſhall offend in anie of theſe articles, they ſhall be put from their houſes as is aforeſaid, and not be admitted anie more into anie of them.

An order for the auoiding of infection, ſickneſſe, annoiance, &c.

4 Alſo, I will that they and either of them, ſhall moſt vſuallie vſe the pariſh church of ſaint Benets, néere Paules wharfe, and eſpeciallie vpon the ſabboth daie, and vpon mondaie, wedneſdaie, and fridaie, in euerie wéeke; if there be anie ſeruice in the ſame church on the ſaid daies: and if they or anie of them ſhall be abſent from the ſame church at ſeruice time, being in the citie, and being not ſicke, they ſhall paie two pence for euerie time ſo offending, which ſhall be put into the poores box among themſelues, or into the poores box in the ſaid pariſh church.

What weeke daies they are to repaire to the church.

5 Alſo, I will that none of them doo occupie anie water aboue the ſtaires of anie of the ſame houſes, for decaieng of the ſame houſes, and periſhing of the ſéelings: and if anie of them ſhall ſo offend, ſhe or they ſhall loſe the fiue ſhillings that they ſhould receiue the next quarter daie following, by vertue of my will.

Conuenient vſe of water, &c.

6 Alſo, I will haue them to put in two ſufficient ſuerties to be bound in twentie pounds before they be admitted into anie of the ſame houſes, to performe theſe articles, or elſe to auoid the ſaid houſes within twentie daies (as is aforeſaid) quietlie.

Performance of theſe ordinances [illegible]

7 Alſo, I will that the two widowes that doo or ſhall dwell in the two houſes next the ſtréet on either ſide of the gate, ſhall hang out one lanthorne betwéene them both, and a whole candell in it burning, according vnto the cuſtome in the citie of London vſed in the winter ſeaſon; that is to ſaie, the one widow one wéeke to hang it out, and the other widow another wéeke, and ſo to continue from time to time, and the ſaid lanthorne to be mainteined by thoſe two widowes that ſhall haue the hanging of them out. And I will that they doo mainteine them to be faire, large, and cléere lanthorns: and for the prouiſion of the candels, I will that the other foure widowes dwelling in the other foure houſes, ſhall buie either of them one pound of cotton candels, and deliuer them vnto the two widowes that ſhall hang out the lanthorne, ſo as alwaies there ſhall not be aboue ten candels in the pound. And if any of the ſame widows ſhall not performe this my meaning, I will that twiſe ſo much more as will performe the premiſſes, ſhall be ſtaid out of the fiue ſhillings that they or either of them ſhould receiue the next quarter daie following, by vertue of my laſt will and teſtament.

An order for lanthorne and candle light in winter.

God grant that they which are better able, may haue no leſſe good will to doo the like, or better, that the godlie poore may be relieued here on earth, vpon whom, be it litle or much that is beſtowed; Chriſt Ieſus no doubt will reward it a hundred fold in heauen: and who would not by workes of faithfull charitie, endeuour to dwell in God, whome the ſcripture calleth charitie? Conſidering that the apoſtle exhorteth all chriſtians in no caſe to forget to doo good and diſtribute, ſith with ſuch ſacrifices he is well pleaſed.

The loue of the Lōdoners to the queenes maieſtie.

A parlement at weſtminſter.

An. Reg. 27.

On the 12 daie of Nouember, the quéens maieſtie (returning after hir progreſſe) came to hir manor of S. Iames, where the citizens of London, to the number of two hundred of the graueſt ſort in cotes of veluet, and chaines of gold, on horſſebacke, and a thouſand of the companies on foot (hauing with them a thouſand men with torches readie there to giue light on euerie ſide for that the night drew on) receiued and welcomed hir grace. And on the foure and twentith daie of the ſame moneth, hir maieſtie and the lords rode to the parlement, which was that daie begun at Weſtminſter.

Addition of Fr. Thin.

An act for the maintenance of Rocheſter ſtone bridge procured by ſir Roger Manwood.

Sir Roger Manwood a friend to the commonwealth.

¶In the foreſaid parlement held at Weſtminſter, were manie neceſſarie lawes ordeined for the commonwealth, amongſt which was one ſpeciall act procured by ſir Roger Manwood knight chiefe baron of the excheker, for the maintenance of the famous ſtone bridge of Rocheſter. And here bicauſe there is mention made of ſir Roger Manwood & Rocheſter bridge; I thinke it conuenient (ſith I haue alwaies determined to ſet forth what ſoeuer might come to my mind and pen touching my ſwéet and natiue countrie of Kent, and ſuch perſons of the ſame as either by honorable deſcent in that countrie, or by office of hie place in the commonwealth, or by worthie remembrance deſerue not to be forgotten) to ſpeake ſomewhat of the ſame ſir Roger Manwood, and ſuch things as he hath doone for that countrie, eſpeciallie ſith maſter Lambard a man of rare iudgement hath not forgotten to treat of him in his booke of the perambulation of Kent vnder the title of Sandwich. Wherfore thinking him worthie remembrance for that which he hath doone in his owne countrie of Kent, I enter in diſcourſe of him a Kentiſhman in this ſort.

The place & [illegible] ſir Roger [illegible] and bringing vp.

Diſſolution of chanteries.

Sir Roger Manwood reader in the inner temple.

He erected a faire ſchoole-houſe of brick and ſtone.

This man being borne at Sandwich in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred and fiue and twentie, was firſt inſtructed in the grammar ſchoole of that towne, as then but a meane thing and taught by a chanterie préeſt of the foundation of one Thomas Ellis. Afterwards, when as by diſſolution of chanteries in the time of king Edward the ſixt this chanterie ſchoole was taken awaie, & the children of the townes people being manie in number were forced to be taught in the grammar ſchooles far diſtant from Sandwich, to the great charges of their parents (whereby manie poore mens children for capacitie and paines taking méet for learning, were put by the courſe of learning, which otherwiſe might haue prooued learned and become good members of the commonwealth) the ſaid ſir Roger Manwood by ſtudie in the law, and reader in the inner temple, well conſidering the ſame (and minding to reſtore to Sandwich towne his birth place, a better grammar ſchoole than that wherein he was firſt brought vp) did in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and thrée, vpon his owne charges procure from the deane & chapter of Chriſts church of Canturburie a vacant place (hauing manie broken ſtone walles) néere to the towne gate in Sandwich called Canturburie gate. In which void roome adioining to the riuer of Delfe is now erected a faire ſchoolehouſe (for the ſchoolemaſter, vſher, & certen boording ſcholers) framed all of bricke & ſtone. For perpetuall continuance of which ſchoole, the ſaid ſir Roger Manwood (now lord chiefe baron) in the yeare of our Lord 1586 procured letters patents from the quéene for incorporating and aſſurance of the ſame ſchoole (with other lands and reuenues thereto belonging) to the maior and his brethren of Sandwich and to their ſucceſſors for euer, by the name of the gouernours of the frée grammar ſchoole of Roger Manwood in Sandwich; aſſuring to the ſaid gouernors of his owne land the cléere yearelie value of 22 pounds and more. Further, therunto procuring of his brother Thomas Manwood (ſometime maior of Sandwich) the cléere yearelie value of ten pounds of lands and tenements; and alſo of one Thomas Compſon (iurat of Sandwich) eight pounds by yéere De claro, of his owne lands and tenements, in the groſſe ſumme amounting to fourtie pounds by yeare, which lands being ſufficientlie aſſured to the ſaid gouernours, with conuenient dwelling for the maſter, and vſher, lodging for ſixtéene boording ſcholers, and with ſome beneuolence of parents for the teaching of their children, is a large endowment for perpetuall maintenance of the ſame grammar ſchoole.

He procureth leters patents &c: for the maintenance of the ſame in perpetuitie.

The ſumme of 40 pounds allowed yearelie, &c: to the maintenance of the ſaid grammar ſchoole.

Two ſcholers roomes obteined in Cambridge & two in Oxford for ſuch ſcholers as remooue from the ſaid ſchoole to either of the vniuerſities.

Seuen almes houſes by him founded for the releefe of the honeſt aged.

Sir Roger Manwoods toome.

Beſides which, for the further benefit of the ſame ſchoole, the ſame ſir Roger Manwood hath obteined two ſcholers roomes in Gonuile and Caius college in Cambridge, and two other ſcholers roomes in Lincolne college at Oxford, with penſion of foure markes yearelie to euerie of the ſaid foure ſcholers to be remooued from that ſchoole of Sandwich, and to be placed in thoſe colleges, from time to time as often as anie of the ſame college ſcholers roomes ſhall be void, and that anie ſcholer ſhall be méet to come from that ſchoole of Sandwich. Beyond all which that he hath doone for recompenſe of his birth place, with a frée grammar ſchoole for the education of the youth there, he alſo for reliefe of age hath néere vnto his dwelling place of ſaint Stephans in Hackington pariſh (adioining to Canturburie) built in the yeare of our redemption 1573, a faire row of ſeuen almes houſes of bricke, placing in euerie of the ſame almes houſes poore folkes, ſuch as are counted to be honeſt & good. For perpetuall maintenance of which almes perſons he hath endowed that building with a yéerelie allowance of the value of foure pounds by yeare (to euerie of the ſame almes men & houſes) in monie, bread, & fewell. And in the ſame pariſh church néere to thoſe almes houſes he hath newlie erected an Ile, where his toome is made and placed, & in that church a new roome of ſeuen pewes and ſeates for the almes people to be beſtowed in, togither by themſelues.

A houſe of correction for luſtie idle perſons.

The ancient bridge of Rocheſter, when builded and by whom.

Diuerſe opinions concerning the firſt founding of ỹ ſaid bridge.

Likewiſe for ſetting to worke of middle age, whereby they may eſchew idleneſſe, this ſir Roger Manwood did in the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie and eight, build a new houſe of correction in the Weſtgate ſtréet in the ſuburbs of Canturburie. And moreouer, whereas Rocheſter bridge ſtanding on the riuer of Medweie, being famouſlie built of ſtone (in the time of king Richard the ſecond as is moſt likelie; though ſome attribute the ſame to the time of Edward the third) by one ſir Robert Knolles knight, with the helpe of Iohn lord Cobham of Cobham, and Margaret Courtneie his wife, being two of the principall benefactors thereunto, after the decaie of a wodden bridge (firſt erected ouer the ſame riuer ſome hundred yeares before that of ſtone) had (for the perpetuall maintenance of the ſame ſtone bridge) the ancient contributarie lands

How the ſaid bridge began to decaie, and what meanes are vſed for the reparing of the ſame.

lands (giuen for the ſupport of the wodden bridge) after the ruine of the ſame wodden bridge reduced (by act of parlement holden in the one and twentith of Richard the ſecond) to the maintenance of the ſame new ſtone bridge; and that ſundrie manors, lands, tenements, & rents in Kent, London, & Eſſex, were by deuiſe of ſundrie perſons aſſured for the vpholding of the ſame new ſtone bridge: yet by want of due circumſpection this new ſtone bridge became in ſo great decaie, that in the latter time of queene Marie, and begining of hir maieſtie now reigning, collection was made vpon all horſſemen, & carriages paſſing ouer that bridge in manner of a tole or tax: and more, by reaſon of the queenes commiſſion, an vniuerſall taxation was made in nature of a tenth and fifteenth ouer all the countrie of Kent, and the citie of Canturburie, for and towards the reparations of the ſame bridge.

Sir Roger Manwoods deuiſed remedie for the keeping of the ſaid bridge well repared.

All which being an vnwilling burthen, & griefe to the people, togither with the reuenues of the bridge lands, did not yet ſuffice to ſaue the ruine of that famous ſtone bridge, vntill by the carefull trauell of the ſaid ſir Roger Manwood (then a iuſtice in the common plees) a remedie was found therefore without iniurie to anie perſon, and without exaction of anie paſſenger. Which remedie was, that all the manors, lands, tenements, and rents, belonging vnto the bridge, ſhould be freed from all leaſes thereof, made at ſmall rents; and the ſame lands ſo let to be dulie improoued to a higher rate, the ſame being a matter anſwerable to right and reaſon; conſidering the cauſe of the firſt gift of thoſe lands then ſufficient, and the now dearth of things, which made it inſufficient to ſupport the ſaid bridge) the ſtone, timber and other ſtuffe, for repare of the ſame bridge, with the works, wages, and carriages concerning it, being now growne to farre greater prices than in old time they were. Which deuiſed remedie to vndo the old leaſes, was much impugned by manie perſons of wealthie hauior, receiuing great profit by thoſe old vnder rented leaſes.

This deuiſed remedie tending to ſo good a purpoſe was impugned.

All which notwithſtanding, this Roger Manwood proſecuted the ſame to a good ſucceſſe: for he making to appeare before the lords of the councell, and the reſt of the iudges of the realme (in the preſence of ſuch as inioied theſe old leaſes, and of their learned councell, and other fauourers) that the ſaid manors, lands, and tenements, belonging to the ſaid bridge, were giuen to the wardens & communaltie, owners of the contributorie lands; and that their old leaſes made by the wardens onelie, without conſent of the communaltie, were not good in law: the farmers ſubmitted themſelues to ſurrender their old inſufficient leaſes, and to take ſuch as might be auailable in law of the ſame lands. Whereby the yearelie reuenues of the bridge lands grew to be of more value than triple that which they were before: and yet the old farmers had new leaſes vnto their owne contentation; bicauſe the ſame are not ſo improoued, but that they are as reaſonablie letten as other priuat mens lands be.

The yearelie reuenues of the ſaid bridge amount vnto more in value by triple than they were before.

To which deuiſe a further remedie was then added, and ſet forth by the ſaid iuſtice Manwood, who for perpetuall ſupplie (when need ſhould be) procured that the ancient contributorie lands, almoſt growne into obliuion, ſhould be to that end reduced into a conuenient order anſwerable vnto right and iuſtice. And likewiſe (for good direction in yearelie elections of wardens, and other officers, with the accounts, prouiſion, works, and other ſuch neceſſaries required for perpetuall maintenance of that bridge) obteined an act of parlement in the eighteenth yeare of this queenes reigne, as appeareth in the printed booke of ſtatutes: wherein were manie things ordeined for the good ordering of the ſaid bridge, and the officers belonging thereunto. After all which a charge of fiue hundred pounds was of record demanded and leuied vpon the wardens of the ſaid bridge, for arerages of the ſtipends of chanterie prieſts, ſometime ſeruing in the chappell at the eaſt end of the ſaid bridge, to the great damage and ouerthrow of the bridge; had not the ſaid iuſtice Manwood by his trauell vpon due and lawfull triall at the aſſiſes, deliuered & diſcharged the bridge of that great demand; as appeareth by record in the court of the exchequer, before the ſaid ſir Roger Manwood came to be chiefe baron there. And yet abuſe and ſlackeneſſe being had in theſe things, the wardens (notwithſtanding that great beneuolence and releeſe was at ſundrie times and of ſundrie perſons procured vnto the ſaid bridge, by the carefull and diligent trauell of Thomas Woten of Bocton Maleherbe of Kent eſquier, a deere father and fauourer of his countrie, as well at the times of the elections of the wardens, and the accounts of the officers) were forced to diſburſe great ſums of their owne monie from time to time, to diſpatch the needfull charges and works required for the bridge, without anie conuenient allowance of the contributorie perſons, at the yearelie elections of the wardens, and without due regard had for order of the ſaid lands, belonging and contributorie to the bridge.

An act of parlement obteined for the behoofe of the ſaid bridge.

Maiſter Thomas Woten of Kent eſquier a father and fauourer of his countrie.

For auoiding wherof the ſaid ſir Roger Manwood, then & now lord chiefe baron of the exchequer, procured to pas another act of parlement, in the ſeuen & twentith yeare of hir maieſtie reigne, wherein is further prouiſion made for the ſaid bridge, as in the printed booke of ſtatutes at large appeareth. By which fullie prouided meanes and by reaſonable following the preſidents of the works and accounts (written in great * ligear books by the ſaid chiefe baron, and William Lambard eſquier, in the yeare next after the ſaid laſt mentioned act of parlement of the ſeauen and twentith of the queenes reigne, they then executing the office of wardens) all needfull reparations be ſo done, and prouiſion before hand ſo made, as it is now growne out of all controuerſie, that the ſaid famous ſtone bridge of Rocheſter euer is like to laſt, according to the intent of the firſt building, and the indowment thereof for the good and beneficiall ſeruice of the commonwealth. This ſir Roger Manwood, hauing had before an other wife iſſued of the gentlemanlie familie of the Theobalds, is at this daie ioined in marriage with Eliſabeth (deſcended of an ancient and worſhipfull familie) the daughter of John Copinger of Alhallowes in the countie of Kent eſquier which Eliſabeth, being a woman of ſuch rare modeſtie and patience, as hir verie enimies muſt needs confeſſe the ſame: occaſioned theſe verſes following to be compoſed touching hir & hir huſband the ſaid ſir Roger Manwood:

* Sir Roger Manwood and maiſter William Lambard eſquier wardens of the ſaid bridge.

Eliſabeth (daughter of John Copinger eſquier) ſecond wife to ſir Roger Manwood, hir modeſtie, &c.

Scaccarij prothobaro (Manwoode) beatum
Quem faciunt leges, lingua, loquela virum:
Coniuge fœlicior tamen es, quæ nata Copinger
Egregia eſt ſumma fœmina digna viro:
Quæ viduata thoro Wilkins, coniunctáque Manwood,
Coniugibus coniux eſt ſociata binis.]

The earle of Lincolne deceaſſed.

In the moneth of Januarie deceaſſed Edward Fines lord Clinton, earle of Lincolne, and lord admerall of England, knight of the garter, and one of hir maieſties priuie councell, a man of great yeeres, and ſeruice, as well by ſea as land, he was buried at Windſor, leauing manie children behind him honorablie married. Of this noble man (whiles he liued) one to whome the honorable lords of the court were not obſcurelie knowne, writing of the * peaceable regiment of the queenes maieſtie, & compriſing in an orderlie diſcourſe their high places of ſeruice to the

* Eirenarchia ſiue Eliſabetha. C.O.

the crowne, amongeſt others, ſpeaketh verie commendablie and deſeruedlie of this deceaſſed earle, who (at ſuch time as the ſaid booke was publiſhed vnder the title aforenamed) had beene lord great admerall of England thirtie yeares, and of councell vnto three princes: alwaies of vnſpotted report ſpeciallie for allegiance, and therefore as ſingularlie beloued in his life; ſo accordinglie bemoned at his death. The words that concerne this noble mans memoriall are thus extant, to the aduancement of his honour, teſtified by report of two Engliſh poets:

O Clintone tuæ conceſſa eſt regia claſſis
Tutelæ, totos ter denos circiter annos:
Conſuluiſſe tribus (nec & hæc tibi gloria parua)
Principibus, veterum ſatraparum ſanguine clares,
Multa gerens pelagò præclarè, multáque terris:
Hunc decorat comitem grandi Lincolnia faſtu.

And before this, namelie in the yeare 1564, at what time the ſaid noble man was honored with the title of Præfectus maris, and attendant vpon hir maieſtie in preſence, at hir being in Cambridge, where ſhe was magnificallie interteined with all hir troope of lords and traine of ladies, &c: thus did an academike write in praiſe of the forenamed earle:

Regnatórque maris Clintonus, cuius in vndis
Excellens nomen præcipuúmque decus:
Ille mihi Neptunus, aquas mouet ille tridente,
Hunc Triton, hunc pelagi dij, deæq́; colunt.

Jeſuits, ſeminaries, and maſſing prieſts ſet ouer the ſeas and baniſhed out of this realme of England for euer.

On the one and twentith daie of Januarie, one and twentie Jeſuites, ſeminaries, and other maſſing prieſts, late priſoners in the Tower of London, Marſhalſee, and Kings bench, were ſhipped at the Tower wharffe, to be conueied towards France, & baniſhed this realme for euer, by vertue of a commiſſion from hir maieſtie, as may more fullie appeare by that which followeth.

A vew of the ſaid commiſſion from the queenes maieſtie.

Whereas the queenes moſt excellent maieſtie, foreſeeing the danger that hath and might grow vnto the realme, by acceſſe of Jeſuits and ſeminarie prieſts, and other like wandering and maſſing prieſts comming hither to ſeduce and withdraw hir louing ſubiects from their due obedience to God and hir maieſtie; and therewithall, traitorouſlie to practiſe the mouing and ſtirring of rebellion within the realme, as hath appeared by ſufficient proofe againſt them, and by confeſſion of ſundrie of themſelues; for the which diuerſe of the ſaid Jeſuits and ſeminaries haue beene tried, condemned, and executed by the ordinarie and orderlie courſe of hir maieſties lawes, and yet they haue not refrained dailie to practiſe and attempt the like treaſons. Hir maieſtie notwithſtanding, following the accuſtomed courſe of hir princelie clemencie, liking rather for this time to haue them onelie baniſhed out of the realme, than to ſuffer the iuſtice of hir lawes to be executed againſt them (although they haue deſerued the ſame in the higheſt degree) hath giuen power to vs of hir maieſties priuie councell & others, by commiſſion and warrant vnder the great ſeale of England, bearing date the fifteenth daie of this preſent month of Januarie, to ſee this hir purpoſe and determination for their baniſhment put in execution. By vertue whereof, we haue proceeded thervnto, and haue committed to the charge of theſe bearers, William Bolles one of hir maieſties yeomen of hir chamber, and Anthonie Hall, the perſons whoſe names doo follow, that is to ſaie, James Boſgraue, John Hart, Edward Ruſhton, Jaſpar Heiwood, William Tedder, Samuell Coniers, Arthur Pits, William Warmington, Richard Slake, William Hartlie, Richard Norris, William Dean, William Biſhop, Robert Nutter, Thomas Stephanſon, John Coliton, Chriſtopher Tomſon, Thomas Worthington, John Barns, William Smith, clearks, being Jeſuits, ſeminaries, and other wandering and maſſing prieſts, and Henrie Orton gentleman: all which haue beene apprehended in this realme, to be by them imbarked, and tranſported beyond the ſeas, according to ſuch direction as they haue receiued in that behalfe.

The queenes maieſties mercie notable.

The names of ſuch Jeſuites (Jeſuits, I ſhould ſay) as by vertue of the queenes commiſſion were baniſhed out of the queenes dominions.

Theſe ſhall be therefore by the authoritie aforeſaid, to will and require you, and in hir maieſties name ſtrictlie to charge and command you, and euerie of you hir maieſties officers, as well within the realme of England and Ireland, as in anie other parts of hir maieſties dominions and countries, to whome it may and ſhall apperteine, not onelie to ſuffer them to paſſe vnder the charge of the ſaid William Bolles and Anthonie Hall: but alſo that in caſe by contrarietie of winds, or extremitie of weather, they ſhall be after their imbarking, driuen into anie port or creeke within anie of your iuriſdictions, that vpon the ſight of this paſport ye aid and aſſiſt the ſaid Bolles, and Anthonie Hall, if they ſhall ſo require you, in ſeeing them ſafelie reteined, committed, & kept in cuſtodie (if they ſhall come aland) till ſuch time as they the ſaid William Bolles and Anthonie Hall may with ſafetie put againe into the ſea, to tranſport them to ſuch place beyond the ſea, as by our direction they are appointed; and to ſuffer them efſoones to imbarke and depart, without ſtaie or interruption. Foreſeeing, that they the ſaid Jeſuits and ſeminaries, and other the wandering and maſſing prieſts aforeſaid, nor anie of them, nor the ſaid Henrie Orton be ſuffered to conueie or tranſport out of the realme, anie thing that by the lawes be prohibited or forbidden. Whereof (as of the reſt commanded herein) we require you not to faile, as you will anſwer to the contrarie at your perils. Giuen vnder our hands at Greenewich the twentith daie of Januarie, in the ſeuen and twentith yeare of hir maieſties reigne. ¶ Now followeth a certificat of the maiſter that tranſported the forenamed one and twentie baniſhed perſons, as followeth.

A further charge vpon the ſaid ſeminaries touching tranſportation.

To the right honorable lords and o-thers of hir maieſties moſt honorable priuie councell, and all other officers to whome it may apperteine.

These may be to certifie, &c: that William Bolles, yeoman vſher of hir maieſties chamber, and Anthonie Hall of London ſkinner, hauing imbarked at the Tower wharffe of London, the one and twentith daie of Januarie 1584 one and twentie perſons being baniſhed men into my barke called the Marie Martin of Colcheſter, to be tranſported and conueied into Normandie, for ſixteene of which ſaid one and twentie perſons they had compounded with me aforehand. The ſame William Bolles and Anthonie Hall haue ſatiſfied and paid me for all their paſſages and vittels, and haue alſo hired at Douer an experimented pilot for the coaſts of Normandie; which ſaid Bolles and Hall with the ſaid baniſhed men in their charges, after their being by contrarie winds driuen to ſtaie againſt Erith, at Grauesend, in Tilberie hope, at Lee, at the Spaniard, at the Downes, at Douer, and at Rie, were by force of weather and chaſe of pirats driuen to Bullen, and there arriued all ſafelie the ſecond day of Februarie 1584, and thenſe ſent the ſaid baniſhed men, ſome by horſſe, but moſt on foot, with conducts to Abbiuiſe in the coaſts of Normandie. Witneſſe my hand herevnto this fift of Februarie, 1584. ¶ By me Matthew Strut.

A certificat to the lords of the councell, &c: concerning the foreſaid matter.

An other certificat, written and directed into England by the ſaid baniſhed men.

A certificat worthie to hang vpon perpetuall record, wherein the Jeſuits do acknowledge the exceeding courteous and bountifull vſage ſhewed vnto them at and in their baniſhment, &c. Note good reader note.

TO all magiſtrats, officers, & miniſters, within the realme of England or elſewhere, to whome it may in anie wiſe apperteine: this may be to giue certification, that we whoſe names are here vnder written, who were imbarked at the Tower wharffe of London the one and twentith daie of Januarie 1584, and there receiued into the charge of maiſter William Bolles, and maiſter Anthonie Hall, by commiſſion from their lordſhips and other hir maieſties moſt honorable priuie councell, haue béene by them the ſaid William Bolles and Anthonie Hall verie friendlie & honeſtlie intreated, and with carefull diligence ſafelie conducted, tranſported, & conueied to the prouince of Normandie, & by them left this third daie of Februarie, according to the Engliſh computation, in the yeare of Chriſt 1584, which ſaid Bolles and Hall haue in our preſence paid the maiſter of the barke which tranſported vs for his whole fraught and vittels in the ſhip, for the time of our remaining abroad: and generallie ſo well vſed vs in all reſpects, that we can not but acknowledge our ſelues much beholding to them & fullie ſatiſfied, in hauing béene committed to the charge of ſo courteous officers, ſith the caſe ſtandeth ſo with vs that we are baniſhed our countrie contrarie to our deſires, wherein we take no little griefe of mind. For teſtimonie whereof, we haue herevnto ſet our ſeuerall hands this preſent third daie of Februarie 1584. Jaſpar Halwood, Edward Ruſhton, John Hart, &c.

¶ O Lord what a mercifull quéene is this, in ſuch ſort to forgiue and forget iniuries, yea treaſonable iniuries, as by baniſhment onelie to chaſtiſe them, that deſerued extreame puniſhment? Yea with a baniſhment ſcarſe fitlie to be ſo termed; ſith in the execution thereof there was ſuch clemencie ſhewed, as that the baniſhed by their owne confeſſions haue left acknowledged vnder their owne handwriting, a notable kind of courteſie receiued by the meanes of hir maieſtie. And therefore they cannot but in conſcience commend hir highneſſe tender affection ſo gratiouſlie exchanged for ſeuere affliction; inſomuch that it may rightlie be reported of hir highneſſe, which the poet ſpake of Ceſar, that is to ſaie:

Ouid. lib. 1. de Pont.

Eſt piger ad pœnas princeps, ad præmia velox,
Cuique dolet quoties cogitur eſſe ferox.

Earle of Derbie ambaſſador into France.

Henrie earle of Darbie appointed to be hir maieſties ambaſſador, to Henrie the third French king, and to inueſt him with the order of the garter, tooke his leaue of the quéenes maieſtie at Gréenewich on the twentith daie of Januarie, and with him ſuch gentlemen as were preſent, were admitted to kiſſe hir highneſſe hand. Maiſter Robert Cooke Clarenceaux appointed to attend in that voiage in place of Garter, whoſe roome was void, and Robert Glouer Sumerſet herald likewiſe appointed to that iournie, were referred to the two and twentith daie of the ſame moneth. Noble men and gentlemen attending on the earle of Derbie; the lord Sands with eight ſeruants, the lord Windſore eleuen ſeruants, maiſter Scroope ſonne and heire to the lord Scroope two ſeruants, maiſter Windſore brother to the lord Windſore thrée ſeruants, ſir Richard Sherborne thrée ſeruants, ſir Randolph Brereton ſix ſeruants, maiſter Clarenceaux for Garter foure ſeruants, maiſter Anthonie Cooke foure ſeruants, maiſter Gerard ſonne and heire to ſir Thomas Gerard, maiſter Fléetwood, maiſter Nudigate, maiſter Stallage gentleman vſher, the quéenes ſeruants. Maiſter Sumerſet herald of armes two ſeruants, maiſter Crompton, maiſter Smith, maiſter Denton, maiſter Thomas Mils one ſeruant. The earls owne; maiſter Thomas Arden ſtuard two ſeruants, maiſter Fox controllor one ſeruant, maiſter Newton gentleman vſher one ſeruant, maiſter Philips chapleine one ſeruant, maiſter Alexander gentleman of the horſſe one ſeruant, maiſter Morecroft phyſician one ſeruant. The earls waiting gentlemen; maiſter Dawnie ſonne and heire to ſir John Dawnie one ſeruant, maiſter Legh ſon and heire to ſir Piers a Legh one ſeruant, maiſter Warren one ſeruant, maiſter Thomas Shereborne ſonne to ſir Richard Shereborne, maiſter Doilie had one ſeruant, maiſter Macket one ſeruant, maiſter Richard Starkie one ſeruant, maiſter Stanlie one ſeruant, maiſter Brierton, maiſter Hanmer one ſeruant, maiſter Flood one ſeruant, maiſter Saliſburie one ſeruant, maiſter Buſhie my lords page, maſter Downes one ſeruant, maiſter Francis Starkie one ſeruant, maiſter Baptiſt one ſeruant, maiſter Randolph one ſeruant, maiſter Culler, maiſter Chambers one ſeruant, maiſter Foxton, maiſter Ruſſell one ſeruant. The earles yeomen fiftie. This traine had to carie trunks, males, and cheſts, fiue carts and a wagon throughout from Calis to Paris, beſides the earls ſumpter horſſe and gardeuiands on horſſe backe.

Attendants vpon the ſaid ambaſſador.

The lord ambaſſadour paſſeth from London to Grauesend, and ſo to Douer, and arriueth at Calis.

On the ſix and twentith daie of Januarie, the earle with his traine paſſed from London to Grauesend in a tiltboat called a light horſſeman, and there taking poſt horſſes rid to Sittingborne, and there lodged, from whenſe they rid to Douer, where they imbarked and landed at Calis on the firſt of Februarie, the earle of Derbie lord ambaſſador, with the lords Sands and Windſor tranſported in the quéens ſhip named the Scout, the other gentlemen & traine in craiers of Douer to the number of eight in the whole, where they were all receiued and welcomed to the towne by monſieur de Gourdan gouernour thereof, and reſted there the next daie: on which daie at night the ſaid earle, barons, and principall gentlemen were inuited to a ſupper, by the ſaid monſieur de Gourdan, which was prepared for them in a merchants houſe in verie ſumptuous ſort and great interteinement, and after ſupper muſicke and danſing, ſome ladies and gentlewomen of the towne being purpoſelie brought to the place to interteine and to danſe with the noblemen and others.

Monſieur de Gourdan gouernour of Calis interteineth the ambaſſadour.

On the third of Februarie, the whole traine went from Calis to Bullogne to bed, there they were verie well interteined, the gouernours deputie preſenting the earle with certeine pots of wine of ſundrie ſorts. On the fourth of Februarie they rid to Monſtrell to bed, and there were likewiſe preſented. On the fift they went to Albeuill to bed, and were met with one hundred and fiftie ſhot of harquebuzers at the entrie of the towne, where on either ſide the ſtréets were made ranks of ſhot all the way as they paſſed to their lodging, & after marched oft about the market place, giuing manie a voléе of ſhot till it waxed darke, the gouernor of the towne preſenting ſundrie ſorts of wine. And the daie following they tooke their iournie to Amiens to bed, where of monſieur Creuicure called Boniuet, lieutenant of Picardie for the king, accompanied with an hundred gentlemen, and beſt citizens, met the earle halfe a mile without the towne, and ſo rid talking with him & his traine. That night the ſaid Creuicure preſented the earle with great ſtore of verie large and good freſh waterfiſh, and the towne with wine of diuerſe ſorts, Monſieur Creuicure lieutenant of Picardie meeteth the lord ambaſſadour, &c.

ſorts, and the daie following being ſundaie, the ſaid Creuecure inuited the earle to dinner, which dinner was greatlie commended. After dinner his lordſhip & traine went to Brethnill to bed, the next daie to Cleremont, where he ſtaied tueſdaie, and on wedneſdaie the tenth of Februarie to Luzarch.

Sir Edward Stafford the quéenes ambaſſador reſident with the French king, &c.

On the 11 he went to S. Deniſe, where by the waie his lordſhip was met by ſir Edward Stafford, hir maieſties ambaſſador reſident with the French king, who brought with him diuerſe gentlemen of England, to the number of thirtie horſſe, and ſo accompanied him to S. Deniſe where they kept companie all the daie following being fridaie. On ſaturdaie his lordſhip made his entrie into Paris, about two or thrée of the clocke at after noone, there being of the lord ambaſſadors traine more than two hundred horſſe; and midwaie betwéene ſaint Deniſe and Paris, there met with their lordſhips ſent from the king, the duke of Montpenſier a prince of the bloud, the lords of Cauignie, le Chapelle aux Vrſins, countie de Lude, de Pienne, de Malicorne, de la Moth Fenelon, who had ſometimes béene ambaſſador liger in England, Deſtrie, D'abin, de Fontaines, de Cormiſſon, the marques of Curton, the countie de Grignan, all councellors in the councell, & knights of the holie ghoſt. The duke of Tremouille, the counties de Briſſac, de Creance, Sancerre, and of Laſuze, with a great number of lords and barons, gentlemen of the chamber, which all were cõmanded by the king to mount on horſſebacke, and accompanie the ſaid duke de Montpenſier, who met the earle of Derbie and the Engliſh traine midwaie betwixt Paris and ſaint Deniſe, and did accompanie him vnto hoſtell de Longueuille, ſometime called the hoſtle of Anion. At his lordſhips entrie into the ſaid lodging, the ſiers de Marle and de Gonaix maiſtres de hoſtell to his maieſtie, gaue him to vnderſtand how they were appointed by the king to haue care of his good vſage and interteinement, who likewiſe had appointed meſiers de la Moth Fenelon, the marques de Curton, & the countie de Grignan, to kéepe his lordſhip companie at all times. And ſo was his [illegible]p with the other lords and gentlemen lodged in t[illegible] ſaid hoſtell de Longueuille, where was thrée tab[illegible] verie ſumptuouſlie furniſhed for them all of [illegible]gs coſt; the one table in the great chamber for the [illegible]ds and gentlemen, ſeruants to hir maieſtie; the other in the hall for the erle of Derbies gentlemen; and the third in a gallerie beneath for gentlemens ſeruants, beſides liuerie into euerie chamber, both of wax, wood, wine, and ſuch like, in as great plentie as could be deſired.

The lord ambaſſadors interteinment, &c.

The ſtatelie & the honorable receiuing of the lord ambaſſadour before he came to preſence & audience of the French king.

On ſundaie the fouretéenth of Februarie after the Engliſh account, and the foure and twentith after the French reckoning, the ſaid earle betwixt the houres of two and thrée in the after noone, went from his lodging by a poſterne through the garden, which is néere to the Louure, accompanied with the ſaid lords de la Moth Fenelon, de Curton, and Grignan, togither with the ſier de Gondie, & the ſaid de Marle, and de Gonaix, and found the capteins of the regiment of the kings gard, making two ranks on either ſide of the ſtréet, beginning from the poſterne to the Louure gate, who welcõmed him in the kings behalfe. Without the gate of the ſaid Louure he was receiued by the lieutenants of the great prouoſt of France & his archers; at the Louure gate by the ſier de Montegnie capteine thereof to his maieſtie and his archers; which archers togither with thoſe of the great prouoſt made two ranks from the ſaid gate of the Louure to the foot of the ſtaiers. From the foot of the ſtaiers his lordſhip was receiued by the ſier de Perdillon the French lieutenant of the Swiſſers of the kings gard, which from the foot of the ſaid ſtaiers to the doore of the hall, made two ranks for his lordſhips paſſage. At the entrie of the hall, his lordſhip was receiued by the ſier de Chaſteau viaux knight of the holie ghoſt, and capteine of the archers of the kings gard; who likewiſe from the ſaid doore vnto the doore of the antichamber made two ranks. From the doore of the antichamber, his lordſhip was receiued by the ſier de Combault of the holie ghoſt, chiefe maſter de hoſtell to the king, and by the other maſters of the hoſtell to his maieſtie, and by his gentlemen waiters; and there in the ſaid antichamber all the ſaid earle of Derbies officers and gentlemen wearing liueries were appointed to ſtaie, and the quéenes ſeruants that procéeded next after them, and before the ſaid earle went ſtill forward. At the entrie of the chamber of eſtate his lordſhip was receiued by the ſier de Liencourt knight of the holie ghoſt, chiefe eſcuir of the kings eſcuir, and the other eſcuttes of the eſcuir togither, with the lieutenant of the hundred gentlemen of his maieſtie, who made likewiſe two ranks for his lordſhips paſſage from that chamber doore to the chamber of audience, euerie of them bearing halberds in their hands. At the entrance of the antichamber, his lordſhip was receiued by the duke Joieulx, accompanied with the gentlemen of the kings chamber ordinarie, who made two ranks from that chamber doore to the doore of the chamber roiall.

The chamber roiall, & maner of receiuing and conducting of the lord ambaſſadour therevnto, and other notable obſeruations.

Into the ſaid chamber roiall firſt entred all the gentlemen, the quéenes maieſties ſeruants, the lords that had receiued and accompanied the ſaid earle and lords: and the ſaid duke de Joieulx accompanied the ſaid earle of Derbie euen vnto the bars that ſtood about the edge of the haltpaſe, or mounting floore in the ſame chamber, where the king ſtood at his beds féet, accompanied without the ſaid barriers on his right hand with the cardinals of Bourbon, Vandoſme, and Joieulx; and on the left hand with the lords, the princes of Contie, the countie de Soiſſons, and duke Montpenſier, princes of the bloud: the dukes de Neuers, Delbeuſe, de la Tremouille, de Retz, monſieur le chancellor, ſier de Vilequier, du Bouchaie, de la Valette, Dantragues, de la Chapelle aux Vrſins, Chauignie, la Vauguion, countie de Mauleurier, Clermont, Dantragues, de Larchaut, and other knights of the holie ghoſt, and councellors of the eſtate in great number. The ſaid earle with the lord ambaſſador ordinarie of England alonelie entered within the ſaid haltpaſe within the barriers vnto his maieſtie, of whom they were receiued with great courteſie, & as amiable countenance as could be. And the earle deliuered the quéenes maieſties letters vnto the king with great reuerence, and then making rehearſall of that he had in charge to ſaie, the ſaid ambaſſador preſented vnto the king the lords Sands and Windſor, with other the Engliſh knights and gentlemen; which all one after an other mounted vpon the haltpaſe, kiſſed their hands, & did their reuerence vnto the king. Then the erle tooke his leaue, and was conducted by all the lords & capteins that had before receiued him, and conueied him vnto the place where they had firſt receiued him. Afterwards he went to ſalute the quéene mother, and at the entrance into hir antichamber he was receiued by monſieur de Lanſac knight of the holie ghoſt, and knight of honour vnto the ſame quéene, whome he found accompanied with hir néece the princeſſe of Loraine ſtanding at hir beds head, the princeſſes of Conde and Jontie, and the duches of Neuers ſtanding at the beds féet, the ducheſſes Duſez, and of Rez, and other ladies and gentlewomen in great number. From thenſe his lordſhip was conueied to the quéene Regents chamber, at the entrance whereof he was receiued by the countie de Fieſque knight

The earle of Darbie & ſir Edward Stafford, &c. are courteouſlie receiued of the king.

The lord ambaſſador ſaluted the quéene mother.

The lord ambaſſadour conueied to the quéene Regents chamber.

of the holie ghoſt, and hir knight of honour, finding hir accompanied with the ducheſſes of Montpenſier and Ioieulx, who ſtood at hir beds féet, the ladie of Rolden hir ladie of honour and other ladies and gentlewomen alſo in great number, and then returned to the foreſaid hoſtell de Longueuille.

The French king inueſted into the order of the garter.

On mondaie the fiftéenth of Februarie, the king by monſieur le Moth Fenelon told the lord ambaſſador his mind touching the receipt of the order, that he intended to receiue it on thurſdaie following in the after noone, at the Auguſtine friers, which was doone accordinglie with a mantle of blew veluet, and a hood, and collar of the order, with a booke of the ſtatutes of the order, which all were inueſted vpon the king in a place called maiſon de Nautralles; but the oth was miniſtred vnto the king in the friers church, Magnificat being then ſoong, or ſinging. On ſundaie the eight and twentith of Februarie, the ambaſſador with his traine tooke their leaue, at whoſe returne from the court to his lodging he was preſented that night with a rich cupboord of plate, worth twelue hundred pounds at the leaſt; and vnto maiſter Clarenceaux was giuen a chaine of gold worth one hundred and twentie pounds and better, of two hundred thirtie and ſix links; to maiſter Sumerſet a chaine of one hundred and fiftie links, worth one hundred marks; and to Thomas Mils a chaine of the ſame value.

Gifts of roiall magnificence beſtowed and receiued.

On the thurſdaie following, the earle with his traine ſet forward homewards from Paris vnto ſaint Deniſe, and ſo were lodged all the waie in the ſame lodgings that before they had béene receiued in, and arriued proſperouſlie in England, from Bullogne to Douer, on fridaie the twelfe day of March; and on the tueſdaie following were brought to the quéenes maieſties preſence at Gréenewich, who gratiouſlie welcommed them home.

William Parrie hanged and quartered at Weſtminſter.

This yeare on the ſecond daie of March being tueſdaie, William Parrie was drawne from the Tower thorough the citie of London to Weſtminſter, and there in the palace court, hanged, boweled, and quartered, for high and horrible treaſons by him practiſed, as maie appeare by the diſcourſe that followeth, publiſhed vpon his execution, to giue generall intimation of his notorious trecheries vnto all the quéenes maieſties ſubiects.

A true and plaine declaration of the horrible treaſons practiſed by William Parrie againſt the queenes maieſtie, and of his conuiction and execution for the ſame, the ſecond of March 1584, according to the accompt of England.

A deſcription of William Parrie.

This William Parrie, being a man of verie meane and baſe parentage, but of a moſt proud and inſolent ſpirit, bearing himſelfe alwaies far aboue the meaſure of his fortune, after he had long led a waſtfull and diſſolute life, and had committed a great outrage againſt one Hugh Hare, a gentleman of the inner temple, with an intent to haue murthered him in his owne chamber, for the which he was moſt iuſtlie conuicted, ſéeing himſelfe generallie condemned with all good men for the ſame, and other his miſdemeanors, he left his naturall countrie, & gaue himſelfe to trauell into forren parts beyond the ſeas. In the courſe of this his trauell he forſooke his allegiance and dutifull obedience to hir maieſtie, and was reconciled, and ſubiected himſelfe to the pope. After which, vpon conference with certeine Ieſuits and others of like qualitie, he firſt conceiued his moſt deteſtable treaſon to kill the quéene (whoſe life God long preſerue) which he bound himſelfe by promiſe, letters, and vowes, to performe and execute: and ſo with this intent he returned into England in Ianuarie one thouſand fiue hundred foure ſcore & thrée; and ſince that did practiſe at ſundrie times to haue executed his moſt diueliſh purpoſe and determination: yet couering the ſame ſo much as in him laie with a veile and pretenſe of great loialtie vnto hir maieſtie.

William Parrie reconciled to the pope: and of his treaſon In ſuperlatiuo gradu.

O papiſtical diſſimulation

Immediatlie vpon his returne into England, he ſought to haue ſecret acceſſe to hir maieſtie, pretending to haue ſome matter of great importance to reueale vnto hir: which obteined, and the ſame ſo priuatlie in hir highneſſe palace at Whitehall, as hir maieſtie had but one onelie councellor with hir at the time of his acceſſe, in a remote place, who was ſo far diſtant, as he could not heare his ſpéech. And there then he diſcouered vnto hir maieſtie (but ſhadowed with all craftie and traitorous ſkill he had) ſome part of the conference and procéeding as well with the ſaid Ieſuits, and other miniſters of the popes, as eſpeciallie with one Thomas Morgan a fugitiue, reſiding at Paris, who aboue all others did perſuade him to procéed in that moſt diueliſh attempt (as is ſet downe in his voluntarie confeſſion following) bearing hir maieſtie notwithſtanding in hand, that his onelie intent of procéeding ſo farre with the ſaid Ieſuits, and the popes miniſters, tended to no other end, but to diſcouer the dangerous practiſes deuiſed and attempted againſt hir maieſtie by hir diſloiall ſubiects and other malicious perſons in forren parts: albeit it hath ſince appeared moſt manifeſtlie, as well by his ſaid confeſſion, as by his dealing with one Edmund Neuill eſquier, that his onelie intent of diſcouering the ſame, in ſort as he craftilie and traitorouſlie did, tended to no other end, but to make the waie the eaſier to accompliſh his moſt diueliſh and wicked purpoſe.

Thomas Morgan a fugitiue and furtherer of Parries purpoſe,

Edmund Neuill not ignorant of this attempt

And although anie other prince but hir maieſtie (who is loth to put on a hard cenſure of thoſe that proteſt to be loiall, as Parrie did) would rather haue procéeded vnto the puniſhment of a ſubiect that had waded ſo farre, as by oth and vow to promiſe the taking awaie of hir life (as he vnto hir maieſties ſelfe did confeſſe) yet ſuch was hir goodneſſe, as inſtead of puniſhing, ſhe did deale ſo gratiouſlie with him, as ſhe ſuffered him not onelie to haue acceſſe vnto hir preſence: but alſo manie times to haue priuat conference with hir, and did offer vnto him vpon opinion once conceiued of his fidelitie towards hir (as though his wicked pretenſe had béene, as he proteſted, for hir ſeruice) a moſt liberall penſion. Beſides, to the end that he might not grow hatefull to the good and well affected ſubiects of the realme (from whome he could in no ſort haue eſcaped with ſafetie of his life, if his diueliſh purpoſe had béene reuealed) hir maieſtie did conceale the ſame, without communicating it to anie creature; vntill ſuch time as he himſelfe had opened the ſame vnto certeine of hir councell; and that it was alſo diſcouered that he ſought to draw the ſaid Neuill to haue béene a partie in his diueliſh and moſt wicked purpoſe.

O gratious queene and to too fauourable euen to thin enimies!

A verie rare example, and ſuch as dooth more ſet forth the ſingular goodneſſe and bountie of hir maieſties princelie nature, than commend (if it be lawfull for a ſubiect to cenſure his ſoueraigne) hir prouidence ſuch as ought to be in a prince and perſon of hir maieſties wiſdome and qualitie. And as the goodneſſe of hir maieſties nature did hereby moſt manifeſtlie ſhew it ſelfe to be rare in ſo extraordinarie a caſe, and in a matter of ſo great perill vnto hir owne roiall perſon: ſo did the malice of Parrie moſt euidentlie appeare to be in the higheſt and extreameſt degrée, who notwithſtanding the ſaid extraordinarie grace and fauour extended towards him, did not on-

The malice Parrie groweth to an extremitie of miſchiefe againſt the queene, lie perſuade the ſaid Neuill to be an aſſociat in the ſaid wicked enterpriſe: but did alſo verie vehementlie (as Neuill confeſſeth) importune him therein as an action lawfull, honourable, and meritorious, omitting nothing that might prouoke him to aſſent thereunto. But ſuch was the ſingular goodneſſe of almightie God (who euen from hir maieſties cradle by manie euident arguments hath ſhewed himſelfe hir onelie and eſpeciall protector) that he ſo wrought in Neuils heart, as he was mooued to reueale the ſame vnto hir maieſtie, and for that purpoſe made choice of a faithfull gentleman and of good qualitie in the court, vnto whome vpon mondaie the eight of Februarie laſt paſt, he diſcouered at large all that had paſſed betwéene Parrie and him, who immediatlie made it knowne to hir maieſtie. Wherevpon hir highneſſe pleaſure was, that Neuill ſhould be examined by the earle of Leiceſter, and ſir Chriſtopher Hatton: who in the euening of the ſame daie did examine him, and he affirmed conſtantlie all which he had before declared to the ſaid gentleman.

Neuill diſcouereth the intended treaſon againſt hir maieſtie.

In the meane time, hir maieſtie continued hir ſingular and moſt princelie magnanimitie, neither diſmaied with the rareneſſe of the accident, nor appaled with the horror of ſo villanous an enterpriſe, tending euen to the taking awaie of hir moſt gratious life (a matter eſpeciallie obſerued by the councellor that was preſent at ſuch time as Parrie after his returne did firſt diſcouer vnto hir maieſtie his wicked purpoſe; who found no other alteration in hir countenance, than if he had imparted vnto hir ſome matter of contentment) which ſheweth manifeſtlie how ſhe repoſeth hir confidence wholie in the defenſe of the almightie. And ſo hir maieſtie, following the wonted courſe of hir ſingular clemencie, gaue order that Parrie the ſame mondaie in the euening (though not ſo knowne to him) ſhould be ſent vnto maiſter ſecretaries houſe in London, he being then there; who according vnto ſuch direction as he receiued from hir maieſtie, did let him vnderſtand, that hir highneſſe (in reſpect of the good will ſhe knew he bare vnto the ſaid Parrie, & of the truſt that Parrie did outwardlie profeſſe to repoſe in maiſter ſecretarie) had made eſpeciall choice of him to deale with him in a matter that concerned hir highlie, and that ſhe doubted not, but that he would diſcharge his dutie towards hir, according vnto that extraordinarie deuotion that he profeſſed to beare vnto hir.

Did euer anie man read or heare of the like magnanimitie in a woman?

Parrie is committed to the cuſtodie & examination of ſir Francis Walſingham.

And therevpon he told him that hir maieſtie had béene aduertiſed that there was ſomewhat intended preſentlie againſt hir owne perſon, wherewith ſhe thought he could not but be made acquainted, conſidering the great truſt that ſome of hir worſt affected ſubiects repoſed in him: and that hir pleaſure therefore was, that he ſhould declare vnto him his knowledge therein: and whether the ſaid Parrie himſelfe had let fall anie ſpéech vnto anie perſon (though with an intent onelie to haue diſcouered his diſpoſition) that might draw him in ſuſpicion, as though he himſelfe had anie ſuch wicked intent. But Parrie with great and vehement proteſtations denied it vtterlie. Wherevpon maiſter ſecretarie, the rather to induce him to deale more plainelie in a matter ſo important, declared vnto him, that there was a gentleman of qualitie euerie waie as good or better than himſelfe, and rather his friend than enimie, that would auouch it to his face: yet Parrie perſiſted ſtubbornelie in his former deniall, and iuſtification of his owne innocencie, and would not in anie reſpect yéeld that he was partie or priuie to anie ſuch motion, enterpriſe, or intent.

Parrie denieth with proteſtations whatſoeuer is demanded of him.

Being lodged that night at M. ſecretaries houſe, the next morning he deſired earneſtlie to haue ſome further ſpéech with maiſter ſecretarie: which granted, Parrie declared to him that he had called to remembrance that he had once ſome ſpéech with one Neuill a kinſman of his (ſo he called him) touching a point of doctrine conteined in the anſwer made to the booke, intituled, The execution of iuſtice in England; by which booke it was reſolued, that it was lawfull to take awaie the life of a prince, in furtherance of the catholike religion: but he proteſted that they neuer had anie ſpéech at all of anie attempt intended againſt hir maieſties perſon. Which deniall of his (at two ſundrie times after ſo much light giuen him) doth ſet forth moſt apparantlie both the iuſtice and prouidence of God: his iuſtice, for that (though he was one of a ſharpe conceipt) he had no power to take hold of this ouerture, thereby to haue auoided the danger that Neuils accuſation might bring him into by confeſſing the ſame, as a thing propounded onelie to féele Neuils mind, whome before he had reported vnto maiſter ſecretarie he found a perſon diſcontented, and therefore his confeſſion might to verie great purpoſe haue ſerued to haue cléered himſelfe touching the intent: his prouidence, for that of his great mercie he would not ſuffer ſo dangerous and wicked a member to eſcape and liue to hir maieſties perill.

Parrie is deſirous to haue ſome ſpéech with maiſter ſecretarie.

The ſame daie at night, Parrie was brought to the earle of Leiceſters houſe, and there eftſoons examined before the ſaid earle of Leiceſter, maiſter vicechamberlaine, and maiſter ſecretarie: he perſiſted ſtill in his deniall of all that he was charged with. Wherevpon, Neuill being brought before him face to face, iuſtified his accuſation againſt him. He notwithſtanding would not yet yéeld to confeſſe it, but verie proudlie and inſolentlie oppoſed his credit againſt the credit of Neuill, affirming that his no, was as good as Neuils yea, & as by way of recrimination, obiected the crime to Neuill himſelfe. On the other ſide, Neuill did with great conſtancie affirme all that he had before ſaid, and did ſet downe manie probable circumſtances of the times, places, and maners of their ſundrie conferences, and of ſuch other accidents as had happened betwéene them in the courſe of that action: wherevpon Parrie was then committed to the Tower, and Neuill commanded by their honors to ſet downe in writing vnder his hand, all that which before he had deliuered by words: which he did with his owne hand as followeth.

Parrie is examined before certeine lords of the councell, &c.

Neuill chargeth Parrie ſo preciſelie, that he is committed to the Tower.

Edmund Neuill his declaration the tenth of Februarie, 1584, ſubſcribed with his owne hand.

William Parrie the laſt ſummer, ſoone after his repulſe in his ſute for the maiſterſhip of ſaint Katharins, repaired to my lodging in the White friers, where he ſhewed himſelfe a perſon greatlie diſcontented, and vehementlie inueighed againſt hir maieſtie, and willed me to aſſure my ſelfe, that during this time and ſtate, I ſhould neuer receiue contentment. But ſith, ſaid he, I know you to be honorablie deſcended, and a man of reſolution, if you will giue me aſſurance, either to ioine with me, or not to diſcouer me, I will deliuer vnto you the onelie meanes to doo your ſelfe good. Which when I had promiſed him, he appointed me to come the next daie to his houſe in Feuterlane: & repairing thither accordinglie, I found him in his bed; where vpon he commanded his men forth, and began with me in this order.

Note the malicious humor of Parrie becauſe he might not obteine preferment to his liking.

My lord ſaid he (for ſo he called me) I proteſt before God, that thrée reaſons principallie doo induce me to enter into this action which I intend to diſco-

A triple reaſon that moued Parrie to his pretended treaſon.

Parrie counted it an act meritorious to murther hir maieſtie.

ner vnto you: the replanting of religion, the preferring of the Scottiſh title, and the aduancement of iuſtice, wonderfullie corrupted in this commonwealth. And thereupon entred into ſome diſcourſes, what places were fit to be taken to giue entrance to ſuch forren forces as ſhould be beſt liked of, for the furtherance of ſuch enterpriſes as were to be vndertaken. And with theſe diſcourſes he paſſed the time, vntill he went to dinner: after which, the companie being retired, he entered into his former diſcourſes. And if I be not deceiued (ſaid he) by taking of Quinborough caſtell, we ſhall hinder the paſſage of the quéenes ſhips forth of the riuer. Wherevnto when he ſaw me vſe no contradiction, he ſhooke me by the hand. Tuſh (ſaid he) this is nothing: if men were reſolute, there is an enterpriſe of much more moment, and much eaſier to performe: an act honorable, and meritorious to God and the world. Which ſéeing me deſirous to know, he was not aſhamed to vtter in plaine termes, to conſiſt in killing of hir maieſtie: wherein, ſaith he, if you will go with me, I will looſe my life, or deliuer my countrie from hir bad and tyrannous gouernment. At which ſpéeches finding me diſcontented, he aſked me if I had read doctor Allens booke, out of which he alledged an authoritie for it. I anſwered, no, and that I did not beléeue that authoritie. Well (ſaid he) what will you ſaie, if I ſhew further authoritie than this, euen from Rome it ſelfe, a plaine diſpenſation for the killing of hir, wherein you ſhall find it (as I ſaid before) meritorious? Good couſine ſaid I, when you ſhall ſhew it me, I ſhall thinke it verie ſtrange, when I ſhall ſée one to hold that for meritorious, which another holdeth for damnable. Well, ſaid Parrie, doo me but the fauour to thinke vpon it till to morrow: and if one man be in the towne, I will not faile to ſhew you the thing it ſelfe: and if he be not, he will be within theſe fiue or ſix daies; at which time if it pleaſe you to méete me at Chanon row, we may there receiue the ſacrament to be true ech to other, and then I will diſcouer vnto you both the partie, & the thing it ſelfe. Whervpon I praied Parrie to thinke better vpon it, as a matter of great charge both of ſoule and bodie. I would to God, ſaid Parrie, you were as perfectlie perſuaded in it as I am! for then vndoubtedlie you ſhould doo God great ſeruice.

O villanous perſuaſion or inducement to be acceſſarie to the treaſon!

Note Parries peſtilent humor of malice againſt hir maieſtie.

Not long after eight or ten daies (as I remember) Parrie comming to viſit me at my lodging in Herns rents in Holborne, as he often vſed, we walked forth into the fields, where he renewed againe his determination to kill hir maieſtie, whom he ſaid he thought moſt vnworthie to liue, and that he wondered I was ſo ſcrupulous therein. She hath ſought, ſaid he, your ruine and ouerthrow, why ſhould you not then ſéeke to reuenge it? I confeſſe (quoth I) that my caſe is hard, but yet am I not ſo deſperat as to reuenge it vpon my ſelfe, which muſt néeds be the euent of ſo vnhoneſt and vnpoſſible an enterpriſe. Vnpoſſible, ſaid Parrie! I wonder at you, for in truth there is not anie thing more eaſie: you are no courtier, and therefore know not hir cuſtomes of walking with ſmall traine, and often in the garden verie priuatlie, at which time my ſelfe may eaſilie haue acceſſe vnto hir, and you alſo when you are knowen in court. Vpon the fact we muſt haue a barge readie to carie vs with ſpéed downe the riuer, where we will haue a ſhip readie to tranſport vs if it be néedfull: but vpon my head, we ſhall neuer be followed ſo far. I aſked him; How will you eſcape forth of the garden? For you ſhall not be permitted to carie anie men with you, and the gates will then be locked, neither can you carie a dag without ſuſpicion. As for a dag (ſaid Parrie) I care not: my dagger is enough. And as for mine eſcaping, thoſe that ſhall be with hir, will be ſo buſie about hir, as I ſhall find opportunitie enough to eſcape, if you be there readie with the barge to receiue me.

Theſe doubts were of aduantage to Neuill, but meanes of reprochfull ruine to Parrie.

Note the traitorous practiſe of Parrie laid downe in order as it ſhould haue béene doone.

But if this ſéeme dangerous in reſpect of your reaſon before ſhewed, let it then reſt till hir comming to ſaint James, and let vs furniſh our ſelues in the meane time with men and horſſe fit for the purpoſe: may ech of vs kéepe eight or ten men without ſuſpicion? And for my part, ſaid he, I ſhall find good fellowes that will follow me without ſuſpecting mine intent. It is much, ſaid he, that ſo manie reſolute men maie doo vpon the ſudden, being well appointed with ech his caſe of dags: if they were an hundred waiting vpon hir, they were not able to ſaue hir, you comming on the one ſide, and I on the other, and diſcharging our dags vpon hir, it were vnhappie if we ſhould both miſſe hir. But if our dags faile, I ſhall beſtirre me well with a ſword per ſhe eſcape me. Wherevnto I ſaid: Good doctor giue ouer this odious enterpriſe, & trouble me no more with the hearing of that, which in heart I loth ſo much. I would to God the enterpriſe were honeſt, that I might make knowne vnto thée whether I want reſolution! And not long after, hir maieſtie came to ſaint James, after which, one morning (the daie certeine I remember not) Parrie reuiued againe his former diſcourſe of killing hir maieſtie, with great earneſtneſſe and importunitie perſuading me to ioine therein: ſaieng he thought me the onelie man of England like to performe it, in reſpect of my valure, as he termed it.

Marke the [illegible] of Parrie to accompliſh his treaſon by o[illegible] [illegible]

Neuill reſolued at no hand to be partaker with Parrie in his treaſon.

Whereupon I made ſemblance as if I had béene more willing to heare him than before, hoping by that means to cauſe him to deliuer his mind to ſome other that might be witneſſe thereof with me, wherein neuer the leſſe I failed. After all this, on ſaturdaie laſt being the ſixt of Februarie, betwéene the houres of fiue and ſix in the after noone, Parrie came to my chamber, and deſired to talke with me apart, whereupon we drew our ſelues to a window. And where I had told Parrie before, that a learned m[illegible] whom I met by chance in the fields, vnto whom I p[illegible]onded the queſtion touching hir maieſtie, had anſw[illegible]me that it was an enterpriſe moſt villanous an[illegible]nable, willing me to diſcharge my ſelfe of [illegible]arrie then deſired to know that learned ma[illegible] name, and what was become of him, ſaieng after a ſcornefull maner; No doubt he was a verie wiſe man, and you wiſer in beléeuing him: [illegible] further, I hope you told him not that I had anie [illegible] from Rome. Yes in truth, ſaid I. Whereupon [illegible]rie ſaid, I would you had not named me, nor ſpo[illegible]en of anie thing I had from Rome! And thereupon he earneſtlie perſuaded me eftſoones to depart beyond the ſeas, promiſing to procure me ſafe [illegible]age into Wales, and from thenſe into Britaine, whereat we ended. But I then reſolued not to doo ſo, but to diſcharge my conſcience, and laie open this his moſt traitorous and abhominable intention againſt hir maieſtie: which I reuealed in ſort as is before ſet downe.

Edmund Neuill.

Parries voluntarie confeſſion in the hearing of certein lords, &c.

After this confeſſion of Edmund Neuill, William Parrie the eleuenth daie of Februarie laſt, being examined in the Tower of London, by the lord Hunſdon lord gouernour of Berwike, ſir Chriſtopher Hatton knight vicechamberleine to hir maieſtie, and Francis Walſingham knight principall ſecretarie to hir maieſtie, did voluntarilie and without anie conſtraint, by word of mouth make confeſſion of his ſaid treaſon, and after ſet it downe in writing all with his owne hand in his lodging in the Tower, and ſent it to the court the thirtéenth of the ſame, by the lieutenant of the Tower. The parts whereof concerning his maner of dooing the ſame, and the treaſons wherewith he was iuſtlie charged are here ſet downe, word for word, as they are written and ſigned with his owne hand & name, the eleuenth of Februarie, 1584.

The voluntarie confeſsion of William Parrie, in writing all with his owne hand.

¶The voluntarie confeſsion of William Parrie, doctor of the lawes (now priſoner in the Tower) & accuſed of treaſon by Edmund Neuill eſquier, promiſed by him (with all faith & humilitie) to the queenes maieſtie, in diſcharge of his conſcience and dutie towards God and hir. Before the lord Hunſdon lord gouernor of Berwike, ſir Christopher Hatton knight vicechamberlaine, ſir F. Walſingham knight principall ſecretarie, the thirteenth of Februarie, 1584.

Parrie.

...icke, good and gratious ...die, whoſe ...ard hap it ...as to interteine ſo bad & graceleſſe a ſeruant.

IN the yeare 1570 I was ſworne hir maieſties ſeruant, from which time vntill the yeare 1580, I ſerued, honored, and loued hir with as great readineſſe, deuotion and aſſurance as anie poore ſubiect in England. In the end of that yeare, and vntill Midſummer 1582, I had ſome trouble for the hurting of a gentleman of the Temple. In which action I was ſo diſgraced and oppreſſed by two great men (to whome I haue of late béene beholden) that I neuer had contented thought ſince. There began my misfortune, and here followeth my wofull fall. In Iulie after, I laboured for licence to trauell for thrée yeares, which (vpon ſome conſideration) was eaſilie obteined. And ſo in Auguſt, I went ouer with doubtfull mind of returne, for that being ſuſpected in religion, and not hauing receiued the communion in two and twentie yeares, I began to miſtruſt my aduancement in England. In September I came to Paris, where I was reconciled to the church, and aduiſed to liue without ſcandale, the rather for that it was miſtruſted by the Engliſh catholikes, that I had intelligence with the greateſt councellour of England. I ſtaid not long there, but remooued to Lions (a place of great traffike) where, bicauſe it was the ordinarie paſſage of our nation to and fro betwéene Paris and Rome, I was alſo ſuſpected.

Parrie ſueth for licence to trauell beyond ſea, and obteineth it.

To put all men out of doubt of me, and for ſome other cauſe, I went to Millaine, from whenſe as a place of ſome danger (though I found fauour there) after I had cléered my conſcience, and iuſtified my ſelfe in religion before the inquiſitor, I went to Venice. There I came acquainted with father Benedicto Palmio, a graue and a learned Ieſuit. By conference with him of the hard ſtate of the catholikes in England, & by reading of the booke De perſecutione Anglicana, and other diſcourſes of like argument, 1 I conceiued a poſſible meane to relieue the afflicted ſtate of our catholikes, if the ſame might be well warranted in religion and conſcience by the pope, or ſome learned diuines. I aſked his opinion, he made it cléere, commended my deuotion, comforted me in it, and after a while made me knowen to the Nuntio Campeggio, there reſident for his holineſſe. By his meanes I wrote vnto the pope, preſented the ſeruice, and ſued for a paſport to go to Rome, and to returne ſafelie into France. Anſwer came from cardinall Como, that I might come, and ſhould be welcome. I miſliked the warrant, ſued for a better, which I was promiſed: but it came not before my departure to Lions, where I promiſed to ſtaie ſome time for it.

Parrie iuſtifieth himſelfe in religion before the inquiſitor of Millaine.

Parrie is reſolued in the point of his trecherous purpoſe.

And being indéed deſirous to go to Rome, and loth to go without countenance, I deſired Chriſtofero de Salazar, ſecretarie to the king catholike in Venice, who had ſome vnderſtanding (by conference) of my deuotion to the afflicted catholikes at home and abroad, to commend me to the duke di Noua terra gouernour of Millaine, and to the countie of Oliuaris Embi, then reſident for the king his maſter in Rome: which he promiſed to doo effectuallie for the one, and did for the other. And ſo I tooke my iournie towards Lions, whither came for me an ample paſport (but ſomewhat too late) that I might come & go In verbo pontificis per omnes iuriſdictiones eccleſiaſticas, abſq; impedimento. I acquainted ſome good fathers there of my neceſſitie to depart towards Paris by promiſe, & praied their aduiſes vpon diuerſe points, wherein I was well ſatiſfied. And ſo aſſuring them that his holineſſe ſhould heare from me ſhortlie, it was vndertaken that I ſhould be excuſed for that time.

Note with what felowes, enimies to God and his church, Parrie linketh himſelfe.

In October I came to Paris, where (vpon better opinion conceiued of me amongſt my catholike countriemen) I found my credit well ſetled, and ſuch as miſtruſted me before, readie to truſt and imbrace me. And being one daie at the chamber of Thomas Morgan a catholike gentleman (greatlie beloued and truſted on that ſide) amongſt other gentlemen, talking (but in verie good ſort) of England, I was deſired by Morgan to go vp with him to another chamber, where he brake with me, and told me that it was hoped and looked for, that I ſhould doo ſome ſeruice for God and his church. I anſwered him I would doo it, if it were to kill the greateſt ſubiect in England: whom I named, and in truth then hated. No no, ſaid he, let him liue to his greater fall and ruine of his houſe: 2 it is the quéene I meane. I had him as I wiſhed, and told him it were ſoone doone, if it might be lawfullie doone, and warranted in the opinion of ſome learned diuines. And ſo the doubt once reſolued (though as you haue heard I was before reaſonablie well ſatiſfied) I vowed to vndertake the enterpriſe, for the reſtitution of England to the ancient obedience of the ſée apoſtolike. Diuers diuines were named, doctor Allen I deſired, Parſons I refuſed. And by chance came maſter Wats a learned prieſt, with whome I conferred, and was ouerruled.

Note the diueliſh conference betwéene Morgan and Parrie.

Parrie voweth to vndertake the killing of the quéene.

3 For he plainelie pronounced (the caſe onelie altered in name) that it was vtterlie vnlawfull: with whome manie Engliſh prieſts did agrée as I haue heard, if it be not altered, ſince the booke made in anſwer of the execution of the Engliſh iuſtice was publiſhed, which I muſt confeſſe hath taken hard hold in me, and (I feare me) will doo in others, if it be not preuented by more gratious handling of the quiet and obedient catholike ſubiects, whereof there is *good and greater ſtore in England than this age will extinguiſh. Well, notwithſtanding all theſe doubts, I was gone ſo far by letters and conference in Italie, that I could not go backe, but promiſed faithfullie to performe the enterpriſe, if his holineſſe vpon my offer & letters would allow it, & grant me full remiſſion of my ſinnes. 4 I wrote my letters the firſt of Ianuarie 1584, by their computation, tooke aduiſe vpon them in confeſſion of father Aniball a Codreto a learned Ieſuit in Paris, was louinglie imbraced, commended, confeſſed, and communicated at the Ieſuits at one altar with the cardinals of Vandoſmi and Narbone; whereof I praied certificat, and incloſed the ſame in my letter to his holines, to lead him the rather to abſolue me, which I required by my letters, in conſideration of ſo great an enterpriſe vndertaken without promiſe or reward.

* O Lord what a lamentable hearing is this!

Parrie is now become altogither paſt grace, and growne reſolute with Iudas to kill the Lords anointed.

5 I went with Morgan to the Nuntio Ragazzoni, to whome I read the letter and certificat incloſed, ſealed it, & left it with him to ſend to Rome: he promiſed great care of it, and to procure anſwer; and ſo louinglie imbraced me, wiſhed mée good ſpéed, and promiſed that I ſhould be remembred at the altar.

6 After this I deſired Morgan, that ſome ſpeciall man might be made priuie to this matter, leaſt he dieng, and I miſcarieng in the execution, and my intent neuer trulie diſcouered, it might ſticke for an euerlaſting ſpot in my race. Diuerſe were named, but none agréed vpon for feare of bewraieng. 7 This being doone, Morgan aſſured me, that ſhortlie after my departure, the L. Fernehurſt (then in Paris) ſhould go into Scotland, and be readie vpon the firſt newes of the quéens fall, to enter into England with 20 or 30000 men to defend the quéene of Scotland (whom, and the king hir ſonne, I doo in my conſcience acquit of anie priuitie, liking, or conſent to this, or anie other bad action, for anie thing that euer I did know.)

A priuiſo for a Scotiſh inuaſiō after the deuiſe of Parrie executed.

I ſhortlie departed for England, and arriued at Rie in Ianuarie 1583, from whenſe I wrote to the court, aduertiſed ſome, that I had a ſpeciall ſeruice to diſcouer to the quéens maieſtie. 8 Which I did more to prepare acceſſe and credit, than for anie care I had of hir perſon, though I were fullie reſolued neuer to touch hir (notwithſtanding anie warrant) if by anie deuiſe, perſuaſion, or policie ſhe might be wrought to deale more gratiouſlie with the catholikes than ſhe dooth, or by our maner of procéeding in parlement meaneth to doo, for anie thing yet ſéene. I came to the court (then at Whitehall) praied audience, had it at large, and verie priuatlie diſcouered to hir maieſtie this conſpiracie, much to this effect, though couered with all the ſkill I had: ſhe tooke it doubtfullie, I departed with feare. And amongſt other things, I cannot forget hir maieſties gratious ſpéech then vttered touching the catholikes, which of late, after a ſort I auowed in parlement: ſhe ſaid to me that neuer a catholike ſhould be troubled for religion or ſupremaſie, ſo long as they liued like good ſubiects. Whereby I miſtruſted that hir maieſtie is borne in hand, that none is troubled for the one or the other. It may be trulie ſaid that it is better than it hath béene, though it be not yet as it ſhould be.

Note the villans ill mind to hir maieſtie.

Note hir maieſties vndeſerued gratiouſnes to pretended catholikes.

In March laſt, while I was at Gréenewich (as I remember) ſuing for ſaint Katharines, came letters to me from cardinall Como, dated at Rome the laſt of Ianuarie before, whereby I found the enterpriſe commended, and allowed, and my ſelfe abſolued (in his holineſſe name) of all my ſinnes, and willed to go forward in the name of God. That letter I ſhewed to ſome in court, who imparted it to the quéene: what it wrought, or maie worke in hir maieſtie, God knoweth: onelie this I know, 9 That it confirmed my reſolution to kill hir, and made it cléere in my conſcience, that it was lawfull and meritorious. And yet was I determined neuer to doo it, if either policie, practiſe, perſuaſion, or motion in parlement could preuaile. I feared to be tempted, and therefore alwaies when I came néere hir, I left my dagger at home. 10 When I looked vpon hir maieſtie, & remembred hir manie excellencies, I was greatlie troubled: and yet I ſaw no remedie, for my vowes were in heauen, my letters and promiſes in earth, and the caſe of the catholike recuſants and others little bettered.

Note Parries reſolution by letters from cardinall Como.

Sometimes I ſaid to my ſelfe: Why ſhould I care for hir? What hath ſhe doone for me? Haue I not ſpent ten thouſand markes ſince I knew hir ſeruice, and neuer had penie by hir? It maie be ſaid, ſhe gaue me my life. But I ſaie (as my caſe ſtood) it had béene tyrannie to take it: and I feare me it is little leſſe yet. If it pleaſe hir gratiouſlie to looke into my diſcontentments, would to Ieſus Chriſt ſhe had it, for I am wearie of it. And now to come to an end of this tragicall diſcourſe. In Iulie I left the court, vtterlie reiected, diſcontented, and as hir maieſtie might perceiue by my paſſionate letters, careleſſe of my ſelfe. I came to London: doctor Allens booke was ſent me out of France: 11 It redoubled my former conceipts, euerie word in it was a warrant to a prepared mind. It taught that kings maie be excommunicated, depriued, and violentlie handled. It prooueth that all warres ciuill or forren, vndertaken for religion, is honourable. Hir maieſtie maie doo well to read it, and to be out of doubt (if things be not amended) that it is a warning, and a doctrine full dangerous. This is the booke I ſhewed, in ſome places read, and lent to my couſine Neuill (the accuſer) who came often to mine houſe, put his finger in my diſh, his hand in my purſe, and the night wherein he accuſed me, was wrapped in my gowne, ſix moneths at leaſt after we had entered into this conſpiracie: in which ſpace hir maieſtie, and ten princes in ſeuerall prouinces might haue béene killed. God bleſſe hir maieſtie from him: for before almightie God I ioie and am glad in my ſoule, that it was his hap to diſcouer me in time, though there were no danger néere.

Parrie is in a mammering what to doo as maie be noted by theſe ſpéeches interrogatorie.

Parrie deſperat.

How long the conſpiracie was in handling yer it was detected.

And now to the matter of our méetings. He came to me in the beginning of Auguſt, and ſpake to me in this or the like ſort: Couſine, let vs doo ſomewhat, ſith we can haue nothing. I offered to ioine with him, and gladlie heard him, hoping bicauſe I knew him to be a catholike, that he would hit vpon that I had in my head: but it fell not out ſo. He thought the deliuerie of the quéene of Scotland eaſie, preſuming vpon his credit and kinred in the North: I thought it dangerous to hir, and impoſſible to men of our fortunes. He fell from that to the taking of Berwike: I ſpake of Quinborough and the nauie, rather to interteine him with diſcourſe, than that I cared for thoſe motions, my head being full of greater matter. 12 I told him that I had another maner of enterpriſe, more honourable and profitable vnto vs, and the catholikes commonwealth, than all theſe, if he would ioine in it with me, as he preſentlie vowed to doo. He preſſed to know it, I willed him to ſléepe vpon the motion: he did ſo, and (belike ouertaken) came vnto me the next morning to my lodging in London, offered to ioine with me, and tooke his oth vpon a bible, to conceale and conſtantlie to purſue the enterpriſe for the aduancement of religion: which I alſo did, and meant to performe: the killing of the quéene was the matter.

Note the actions that ſhould haue béene commenſed and finiſhed in this conſpiracie.

This oth and [illegible] of the like qualitie and nature are violable Salua interim anima.

The maner and place, to be on horſſebacke, with eight or ten horſſes, when ſhe ſhould ride abroad about ſaint Iames, or ſome other like place. It was once thought fit in a garden, and that the eſcape would be eaſieſt by water into Shepeie, or ſome other part: but we reſolued vpon the firſt. This continued as agréed vpon manie moneths, till he heard of the death of Weſtmerland, whoſe land and dignitie (whereof he aſſured himſelfe) bred belike this conſcience in him to diſcouer a treaſon in Februarie, contriued and agréed vpon in Auguſt. If it coſt him not an ambitious head at laſt, let him neuer truſt me. He brought a tall gentleman (whome he commended for an excellent piſtolier) to me to Chanon Row, to make one in the match: but I refuſed to deale with him, being loth to laie my head vpon ſo manie hands.

The death of Weſtmerland reported.

M. Neuill hath (I thinke) forgotten, that he did ſweare to me at diuerſe times, that all the aduancement ſhe could giue, ſhould ſerue but for hir ſcourge, if euer time and occaſion ſhould ſerue: and that although he would not laie hand vpon hir in a corner, his hart ſerued him to ſtrike off hir head in the field. Now leauing him to himſelfe, thus much (to make an end) I muſt confeſſe of my ſeſe: I did meane to trie what might be doone in parlement, to doo my beſt to hinder all hard courſes, to haue praied hearing ring of the quéenes maieſtie, to moue hir (if I could) to take compaſſion vpon hir catholike ſubiects, and when all had failed, to doo as I intended. If hir maieſtie by this courſe would haue eaſed them, though ſhe had neuer preferred me, I had with all comfort and patience borne it: 13 but if ſhe had preferred me without eaſe or care of them, the enterpriſe had held. ¶ God preſerue the quéene, & incline hir mercifull hart to forgiue me this deſperat purpoſe, and to take my head (with all my hart) for hir better ſatiſfaction.

Parrie chargeth Neuill with grieuous ſpeeches of curſſed diſloialtie.

W. Parrie.

God (no doubt) will preſerue good quéene Eliſabeth, though a thouſand ſuch traitors as Parrie conſpire hir death to their owne deſtruction.

After which, for the better manifeſting of his treaſons, on the fouretéenth of Februarie laſt paſt, there was a letter written by him to hir maieſtie, verie voluntarilie, all of his owne hand, without anie motion made to him. The tenor whereof, for that which concerneth theſe his traitorous dealings, is as followeth.

A letter written by Parrie to hir maieſtie.

Parries purpoſe conceiued in Venice, continued in Lions, reſolued in Paris, to be executed in England.

Your maieſtie maie ſee by my voluntarie confeſſion, the dangerous fruits of a diſcontented mind: & how conſtantlie I purſued my firſt conceiued purpoſe in Venice, for the releefe of the afflicted catholikes, continued it in Lions, and reſolued in Paris to put it in aduenture, for the reſtitution of England to the ancient obedience of the ſee apoſtolike. You maie ſee withall how it is commended, allowed, and warranted in conſcience, diuinitie, and policie, by the pope and ſome great diuines: though it be true or likelie, that moſt of our Engliſh diuines (leſſe practiſed in matters of this weight) doo vtterlie miſlike and condemne it.

Neuill charged by Parrie to be acceſſarie to the treaſon.

The enterpriſe is preuented, and conſpiracie diſcouered, by an honourable gentleman my kinſman, and late familiar friend, maiſter Edmund Neuill, priuie and by ſolemne oth (taken vpon the bible) partie to the matter, wherof I am hardlie glad, but now ſorie (in my verie ſoule) that euer I conceiued or intended, how commendable or meritorious ſo euer I thought it. God thanke him, and forgiue me, who would not now (before God) attempt it (if I had libertie and oportunitie to doo it) to gaine your kingdome. I beſeech Chriſt that my death and example maie as well ſatiſfie your maieſtie, and the world, as it ſhall glad and content me.

Compare theſe warnings with the turmoiles in Anno 1585, 1586, ſpecialie about Auguſt.

[illegible]cotland is your priſoner, let hir be ho[illegible]ie intreated, but yet ſurelie garded. The French king is French, you know it well enough, you will find him occupied when he ſhould doo you good; he will not looſe a pilgrimage to ſaue you a crowne. I haue no more to ſaie at this time, but that with my hart & ſoule I doo now honour & loue you, am inwardlie ſorie for mine offenſe, and readie to make you amends by my death and patience. Diſcharge me A culpa but not A pœna, good ladie. And ſo farewell, moſt gratious and the beſt natured and qualified queene that euer liued in England. From the Tower, the fourteenth of Februarie, one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and foure.

W. Parrie.

Parries guiltie conſcience exonerateth it ſelfe by voluntarie confeſſion.

After which, to wit, the eightéenth of Februarie laſt paſt, Parrie, in further acknowledging his wicked and intended treaſons, wrote a letter all of his owne hand in like voluntarie maner to the lord treaſuror of England, and the earle of Leiceſter, lord ſteward of hir maieſties houſe, the tenor wherof is as followeth.

William Parries letter to the lord treaſuror, and the earle of Leiceſter.

My lords, now that the conſpiracie is diſcouered, the fault confeſſed, my conſcience cleared, and mind prepared patientlie to ſuffer the paines due for ſo hainous a crime; I hope it ſhall not offend you, if criing Miſerere with the poore publicane, I leaue to deſpaire with curſſed Caine. My caſe is rare and ſtrange, and for anie thing I can remember, ſingular: a naturall ſubiect ſolemnlie to vow the death of his naturall queene (ſo borne, ſo knowne, and ſo taken by all men) for the releefe of the afflicted catholikes, and reſtitution of religion. The matter firſt conceiued in Venice, the ſeruice (in generall words) preſented to the pope, continued and vndertaken in Paris, and laſtlie commended and warranted by his holineſſe, digeſted and reſolued in England, if it had not beene preuented by accuſation, or by hir maieſties greater lenitie and more gratious vſage of hir catholike ſubiects.

A traitor of ſingular note by his owne confeſſion was Parrie.

An offenſe ſufficient to hang 1000 traitors without drop of mercie.

This is my firſt and laſt offenſe conceiued againſt my prince or countrie, and dooth (I cannot denie) conteine all other faults whatſoeuer. It is now to be puniſhed by death, or moſt gratiouſlie (beyond all common expectation) to be pardoned. Death I doo confeſſe to haue deſerued, life I doo (with all humilitie) craue, if it may ſtand with the queenes honor, and policie of the time. To leaue ſo great a treaſon vnpuniſhed were ſtrange; to drawe it by death in example were dangerous; a ſworne ſeruant to take vpon him ſuch an enterpriſe vpon ſuch a ground, and by ſuch a warrant, hath not beene ſeene in England; to indict him, arreigne him, bring him to the ſcaffold, and to publiſh his offenſe, can doo no good; to hope that he hath more to diſcouer than is confeſſed, or that at his execution he will vnſaie anie thing he hath written, is in vaine; to conclude, that it is impoſſible for him in time to make ſome part of amends, were verie hard, and againſt former experience.

Parrie had more gloſing rhetorike than faithfull obedience.

The queſtion then is, whether it be better to kill him, or (leaſt the matter be miſtaken) vpon hope of his amendment to pardon him. For mine owne opinion (though parciall) I will deliuer you my conſcience. The caſe is good queene Eliſabeths, the offenſe is committed againſt hir ſacred perſon, and ſhe may (of hir mercie) pardon it without preiudice to anie. Then this I ſay in few words, as a man more deſirous to diſcharge his troubled conſcience, than to liue: Pardon poore Parrie and releeue him; for life without liuing is not fit for him. If this may not be, or be thought dangerous, or diſhonorable to the queenes maieſtie (as by your fauors, I thinke it full of honor and mercie) then I beſeech your lordſhips (and no other) once to heare me before I be indicted, and afterwards (if I muſt die) humblie to intreat the queenes maieſtie to haſten my triall and execution: which I praie God (with all my heart) may prooue as honorable to hir, as I hope it ſhall be happie to me, who will while I liue (as I haue doone alwaies) praie to Ieſus Chriſt for hir maieſties long and proſperous reigne. From the Tower the eighteenth of Februarie, 1584.

W. Parrie.

God Lord with what heart might Parrie hope after anie thing but death, hauing béene ſo capitall a traitor?

And where in this meane time ſir Francis Walſingham ſecretarie to hir maieſtie, had dealt with one William Creitchton, a Scot for his birth, and a Jeſuit by his profeſſion, now priſoner alſo in the Tower, for that he was apprehended with diuerſe plots for inuaſions of this realme, to vnderſtand of him, if the ſaid Parrie had euer dealt with him in the parties beyond the ſeas touching that queſtion, whether it were lawfull to kill hir maieſtie or not. The which at that time the ſaid Creitchton called not to his remembrance: yet after vpon better calling it to mind, vpon the twentith daie of Februarie laſt paſt, he wrote vnto maiſter ſecretarie Walſingham thereof voluntarilie, all of his owne hand, to the effect following.

Creitchton apprehended with diuerſe plots for inuaſions of this realme.

William Creitchtons letter to ſir Francis Walſingham, Febr. 20.

Right honorable ſir, when your honor demanded me if maiſter Parrie did aske me, if it were leaſon to kill the queene; in deed and veritie, then I had no remembrance at all thereof. But ſince, thinking on the matter, I haue called to mind the whole faſhion of his dealing with me, and ſome of his arguments: for he dealt verie craftilie with me, I dare not ſay maliciouſlie. For I did in no wiſe thinke of anie ſuch deſeine of his, or of anie other, and did anſwer him ſimplie after my conſcience and knowledge to the veritie of the queſtion. For after that I had anſwered him twiſe before, Quòd omninò non liceret; he returned late at euen by reaſon I was to depart earlie in the next morning toward Chamberie in Sauoie where I did remaine, and being returned out of the cloſſe within one of the claſſes of the college, he proponed to me of new the matter, with his reaſons and arguments.

Note Creitchtons report of Parries craft and malice.

Firſt he alleged the vtilitie of the deed for deliuering of ſo manie catholikes out of miſerie, and reſtitution of the catholike religion. I anſwered, that the ſcripture anſwereth thereto, ſaieng: Non ſunt facienda mala, vt veniant bona. So that for no good, how great that euer it be, may be wrought anie euill, how little that euer it be. He replied that it was not euill to take awaie ſo great euill, and induce ſo great good. I anſwered, that all good is not to be done, but that onelie: Quòd bene & legitimè fieri poteſt. And therefore, dixi Deum magis amare aduerbia, quàm nomina. Quia in actionibus magis ei placent bene & legitimè, quàm bonum. Ita vt nullum bonum liceat facere, niſi bene & legitimè fieri poſſit. Quòd in hoc caſu fieri non poteſt. Yet said he, that ſeuerall learned men were of the opinion, Quòd liceret. I anſwered, that they men perhaps were of the opinion, that for the ſafetie of manie in ſoule and bodie, they would permit a particular to his danger, & to the occult iudgement of God: or perhaps ſaid ſo, mooued rather by ſome compaſſion and commiſeration of the miſerable eſtate of the catholikes, nor for anie ſuch doctrine that they did find in their bookes. For it is certeine, that ſuch a thing is not licit to a particular, without ſpeciall reuelation diuine, which exceedeth our learning and doctrine. And ſo he departed from me. Out of the priſon in the Tower, the 20 of Februarie.

Creitchtons reaſons to repell Parries traitorous allegations.

Deum magis amare aduerbia quàm nomina.

Creitchton holdeth Parries attempt vnlawfull: note.

Your honors poore ſeruitor in Chriſt Ieſu, W. Creitchton priſoner.

ANd where alſo the ſame Parrie was on the ſame twentith daie of Februarie examined by ſir Francis Walſingham knight, what was become of the letter conteined in his confeſſion to be written vnto him by the cardinall de Como: he then anſwered, that it was conſumed and burnt. And yet after, the next daie following, being more vehementlie vrged vpon that point in examination (becauſe it was knowne that it was not burnt) he confeſſed where he had left it in the towne: wherevpon, by Parries direction it was ſent for, where it had beene lapped vp togither with other friuolous papers, and written vpon the one ſide of it; The laſt will of William Parrie. The which letter was in the Italian toong as hereafter followeth, with the ſame in Engliſh accordinglie tranſlated.

Parrie ſaith and vnſaith like a traitor to ſhift off the heauie charge of treaſon.

Amon Signore, mon ſignor Guglielmo Parrie.

Mon Signore, la Santita di N.S. ha veduto le lettere di V.S. del primo con la fede incluſa, & non può ſe non laudare la buona diſpoſitione che ſcriue di tenere verſo il ſeruitio & beneficio publico, nel che la Santita ſua leſſorta di perſeuerare, con farne riuſcire li effetti che V.S. promette: & accioche tanto maggiormente V.S. ſia aiutata da quel buon ſpirito che l'ha moſſo, le concede ſua beneditione, plenaria indulgenza & remiſſione di tutti li peccati, ſecondo che V.S. ha chieſto, aſſicurandoſi che oltre il merito, che n'hauera in cielo, vuole anco ſua Santitata conſtituirſi debitore a reconoſcere li meriti di V.S. in ogni miglior modo che porta, & cio tanto piu, quanto che V.S. vſa maggior modeſtia in non pretender niente. Metta dunque ad effetto li ſuoi ſanti & honorati penſieri, & attenda a ſtar ſano. Che per fine io me le offero di core, & le deſiderio ogni buono & felice ſucceſſo. Di Roma a 30 di Gennaro, 1584.

Cardinall de Como his animating letter to Parrie to perſeuere in his diueliſh deuiſe.

But as God would, Parries enterpriſe wanted that wiſhed Buono & felice ſucceſſo.

Al piacer di V.S.
N. cardinali di Como.
Al Sig. Guglielmo Parri

Cardinall de Comos letter to D. Parrie, 30. Ian. 1584 by account of Rome.

MOn ſignor, his holineſſe hath ſeene your letter of the firſt, with the certificat included, and cannot but commend the good diſpoſition & reſolution which you write to hold towards the ſeruice and benefit publike: wherein his holines dooth exhort you to perſeuere, & to bring to effect that which you haue promiſed. And to the end you may be ſo much the more holpen by that * good ſpirit which hath mooued you therevnto, he granteth vnto you his bleſſing, plenarie indulgence and remiſſion of all your ſinnes, according to your requeſt. Aſſuring you, that beſides the merit that you ſhall receiue therfore in heauen, his holines will further make himſelfe debtor to acknowledge our deſeruings in the beſt maner that he can: and ſo much the more, in that you vſe the greater modeſtie in not pretending anie thing. Put therefore to effect your * holie and honorable purpoſes, and attend your health. And to conclude, I offer my ſelfe vnto you hartilie, and doo deſire all good and happie ſucceſſe. From Rome the 30 of Ianuarie, 1584.

A good clergie in the meane time that allow treaſons in this ſort.

* Good ſpirit, naie, malignant ſpirit & more than diabolicall.

* Naie curſſed and abhominable purpoſes, with deſtruction of the [illegible] ker.

At the pleaſure of your ſignorie,
N. Ca[illegible]

VPon all which former accuſation, declaration, confeſſions and proofes, vpon mondaie the two and twentith daie of Februarie laſt paſt, at Weſtminſter hall, before ſir Chriſtopher Wraie knight chiefe iuſtice of England, ſir Gilbert Gerrard knight maſter of the rolles, ſir Edmund Anderſon knight chiefe iuſtice of the common plées, ſir Roger Manwood knight chiefe baron of the excheker, ſir Thomas Gawdie knight one of the iuſtices of the plées before hir maieſtie to be holden, & William Periam one of the iuſtices of the common plées, by vertue of hir maieſties commiſſion to them and others in that behalfe directed: the ſame Parrie was indicted of high treaſon, for intending and practiſing the death and deſtruction of hir maieſtie, whome God long proſper, and preſerue from all ſuch wicked attempts. The tenor of which indictment appeareth more particularlie in the courſe of his arreignment following.

Parrie conuented, and arreigned at Weſtminſter hall the 22 of Februarie.

The maner of the arreignment of William Parrie the 25 of Februarie 1584, at Weſtminſter

The names of ſuch perſonages of ho hip and worſhip as had the triall of Parrie arreigned.

minſter, in the place where the court commonlie called the Kings bench is vſuallie kept by vertue of hir maieſties commiſſion of oier. and terminer, before Henrie lord Hunſdon gouernour of Barwike, ſir Francis Knolles knight treaſuror of the queenes maieſties houſhold, ſir Iames Croft knight comptrollor of the ſame houſhold, ſir Chriſtopher Hatton knight vicechamberleine to hir maieſtie, ſir Chriſtopher Wraie knight chiefe iuſtice of England, ſir Gilbert Gerrard knight maſter of the rols, ſir Edmund Anderſon knight chiefe iuſtice of the common plees, ſir Roger Manwood knight chiefe baron of the exchecker, and ſir Thomas Hennage knight treaſuror of the chamber.

The lieutenant of the tower returneth his precept.

The indictment againſt Parrie wherein his heinous treaſon appeareth.

FIrſt thrée proclamations for ſilence were made, according to the vſuall courſe in ſuch caſes. Then the lieutenant was commanded to returne his precept, who did ſo, and brought the priſoner to the bar, to whome Miles Sands eſquier clerke of the crowne ſaid; William Parrie hold vp thy hand: and he did ſo. Then ſaid the clerke of the crowne; Thou art here indicted by the oths of twelue good and lawfull men of the countie of Midleſex, before ſir Chriſtopher Wraie knight and others, which tooke the indictment by the name of W. Parrie, late of London gentleman, otherwiſe called W. Parrie, late of London doctor of the law, for that thou as a falſe traitor againſt the moſt noble and chriſtian prince, quéene Eliſabeth thy moſt gratious ſoueraigne and liege ladie, not hauing the feare of God before thine eies, nor regarding thy due allegiance (but being ſeduced by the inſtigation of the diuell, and intending to withdraw and extinguiſh the hartie loue and due obedience, which true & faithfull ſubiects ſhould beare vnto the ſame our ſoueraigne ladie) diddeſt at Weſtminſter in the countie of Midleſex on the firſt daie of Februarie, in the ſix and twentith yeare of hir highneſſe reigne, and at diuerſe other times and places in the ſame countie, maliciouſlie, and traitorouſlie conſpire and compaſſe, not onelie to depriue and depoſe the ſame our ſoueraigne ladie of hir roiall eſtate, title and dignitie; but alſo to bring hir highneſſe to death and finall deſtruction, and ſedition in the realme to make, and the gouernement thereof to ſubuert, and the ſincere religion of God eſtabliſhed in hir highneſſe dominions to alter and ſupplant.

Parrie ſent letters to Gregorie the 13 biſhop of Rome: and what was the ſcope of them.

And that, whereas thou William Parrie, by thy letters ſent vnto Gregorie biſhop of Rome, diddeſt ſignifie vnto the ſame biſhop thy purpoſes and intentions aforeſaid, and thereby diddeſt praie and require the ſame biſhop to giue thée abſolution; that thou afterwards, that is to ſaie, the laſt day of March in the ſix and twentith yeare aforeſaid, diddeſt traitorouſlie receiue letters from one called cardinall de Como, directed vnto thée William Parrie, whereby the ſame cardinall did ſignifie vnto thée, that the biſhop of Rome had peruſed thy letters, and allowed of thine intent; and that to that end he had abſolued thée of all thy ſinnes, and by the ſame letter did animate and ſtir thée to procéed with thine enterpriſe; and that there vpon, thou, the laſt daie of Auguſt in the ſix and twentith yeare aforeſaid, at ſaint Giles in the fields, in the ſame countie of Midleſex, diddeſt traitorouſlie confer with one Edmund Neuill eſquier, vttering to him all thy wicked and traitorous deuiſes, and then and there diddeſt moue him to aſſiſt thée therein, and to ioine with thée in thoſe wicked treaſons aforeſaid, againſt the peace of our ſaid ſoueraigne ladie the quéene, hir crowne and dignitie. What ſaieſt thou William Parrie, art thou guiltie of theſe treaſons whereof thou ſtandeſt here indicted, or not guiltie?

Parrie mooued Neuill to aſſiſt him in his treaſons.

Parries anſwer to the indictment, wherein he confeſſeth it.

Then Parrie ſaid; Before I plead not guiltie, or confeſſe my ſelfe guiltie, I praie you giue me leaue to ſpeake a few words: and with humbling himſelfe began in this maner. God ſaue quéene Eliſabeth, & God ſend me grace to diſcharge my dutie to hir, and to ſend you home in charitie. But touching the matters that I am indicted of, ſome were in one place, and ſome in another, and doone ſo ſecretlie, as none can ſée into them, except that they had eies like vnto God: wherefore I will not laie my bloud vpon the iurie, but doo mind to confeſſe the indictment. It conteineth but the parts that haue béene openlie read, I praie you tell me. Wherevnto it was anſwered, that the indictment conteined the parts he had heard read, & no other. Wherevpon the clerke of the crowne ſaid vnto Parrie; Parrie, thou muſt anſwer directlie to the indictment, whether thou be guiltie or not.

Parrie confeſſeth that he is guiltie of all things conteined in the indictment.

Then ſaid Parrie, I doo confeſſe that I am guiltie of all that is therein conteined: and further too, I deſire not life, but deſire to die. Vnto which the clerke of the crowne ſaid; If you confeſſe it, you muſt confeſſe it in maner and forme as it is compriſed in the indictment. Wherevnto he ſaid; I doo confeſſe it in maner and forme as the ſame is ſet downe, and all the circumſtances thereof. Then the confeſſion being recorded, the quéenes learned councell being readie to praie iudgement vpon the ſame confeſſion, maſter vicechamberleine ſaid: Theſe matters conteined in this indictment, and confeſſed by this man, are of great importance; they touch the perſon of the quéenes moſt excellent maieſtie in the higheſt degrée, the verie ſtate and weldooing of the whole commonwealth, and the truth of Gods word eſtabliſhed in theſe hir maieſties dominions, and the open demonſtration of that capitall enuie of the man of Rome, that hath ſet himſelfe againſt God and all godlineſſe, all good princes and good gouernement, and againſt good men. Wherefore I praie you for the ſatiſfaction of this great multitude, let the whole matter appéere, that euerie one may ſée that the matter of it ſelfe is as bad as the indictment purporteth, and as he hath confeſſed.

Sir Chriſtopher Hattons collection out of Parries indictment.

Whereto in reſpect that the iuſtice of the realme hath béene of late verie impudentlie ſlandered, all yéelded as a thing neceſſarie to ſatiſfie the world in particular, of that which was but ſummarilie compriſed in the indictment, though in the law, his confeſſion ſerued ſufficientlie to haue procéeded therevpon vnto iudgement. Wherevpon the lords and others the commiſſioners, hir maieſties lerned councell, and Parrie himſelfe agréed, that Parries confeſſion (taken the eleuenth and thirtéenth of Februarie 1584, before the lord of Hunſdon, maſter Vicechamberleine, and maſter Secretarie) and cardinall de Como his letters, and Parries letters to the lord treaſuror and lord ſteward, ſhould be openlie read.

Certeine ſpeciall matters vnder writing read in open audience of the multitude for their ſatiſfaction.

And Parrie, for the better ſatiſfieng of the people and ſtanders by, offered to read them himſelfe: but being told how the order was, that the clerke of the crowne ſhould read them, it was ſo reſolued of all parts. And then maiſter vicechamberleine cauſed to be ſhewed to Parrie his ſaid confeſſion, the cardinals letter, and his owne letter aforeſaid: which after he had particularlie viewed euerie leafe thereof, he confeſſed, and ſaid openlie they were the ſame. Then ſaid maiſter vicechamberleine; Before we procéed to ſhew what he hath confeſſed, what ſaie you (ſaid he to Parrie) is that which you haue confeſſed here true, and did you confeſſe it fréelie and willinglie of your ſelfe, or was there anie extort means vſed to draw it from you? Surelie (ſaid Parrie) I made that confeſſion fréelie without anie conſtraint, and that is all true, and more too: for there is no treaſon that hath béene ſince the firſt yeare of the quéene anie waie touching religion, ſauing receipt of Agnus Dei, and perſuading of others, wherein I haue not much dealt, but I haue offended in it. And I haue alſo deliuered mine opinion in writing, who ought to be ſucceſſor to the crowne: which he ſaid to be treaſon alſo.

Parries confeſſion was not Coacta but Voluntaria: ergo more credible.

Parries confeſſion of his treaſons was read by his owne aſſent. A letter of cardinall di Como vnto Parrie alſo read.

Then his confeſſion of the eleuenth and thirtéenth of Februarie, all of his owne handwriting, and before particularlie ſet downe, was openlie and diſtinctlie read by the clerke of the crowne. And that doone, the cardinall di Como his letter in Italian was deliuered vnto Parries hand, by the direction of maiſter vicechamberleine, which Parrie there peruſed, & openlie affirmed to be wholie of the cardinals owne handwriting, and the ſeale to be his owne alſo, and to be with a cardinals hat on it: and himſelfe did openly read it in Italian, as before is ſet downe. And the words bearing ſenſe as it were written to a biſhop or to a man of ſuch degrée, it was demanded of him by maiſter vicechamberleine, whether he had not taken the degrée of a biſhop? He ſaid, No: but ſaid at firſt, thoſe tearmes were proper to the degrée he had taken: and after ſaid that the cardinall did vouchſafe as of a fauour to write ſo to him. Then the copie of that letter in Engliſh as before is alſo ſet downe, was in like manner openlie read by the clerke of the crowne, which Parrie then acknowledged to be trulie tranſlated. And therevpon was ſhewed vnto Parrie his letter of the eightéenth of Februarie, written to the lord treaſuror, and the lord ſteward: which he confeſſed to be all of his owne handwriting, and was as before is ſet downe.

Parries letter of the eightéenth of Februarie to the lord treaſuror and the earle of Leiceſter read.

These matters being read openlie for manifeſtation of the matter, Parrie praied leaue to ſpeake; whereto maiſter vicechamberleine ſaid: If you will ſaie anie thing for the better opening to the world of thoſe your foule and horrible facts, ſpeake on: but if you meane to make anie excuſe of that which you haue confeſſed, which elſe would haue béene and doo ſtand proued againſt you; for my part, I will not ſit to heare you. Then hir maieſties atturnie generall ſtood vp and ſaid: It appeareth before you my lords, that this man hath béene indicted and arreigned of ſeuerall moſt heinous and horrible treaſons, and hath confeſſed them, which is before you of record: wherefore there reſteth no more to be doone, but for the court to giue iudgement accordinglie, which here I require in the behalfe of the quéenes maieſtie. Then ſaid Parrie, I praie you heare me for diſcharging of my conſcience; I will not go about to excuſe my ſelfe, nor to ſéeke to ſaue my life, I care not for it, you haue my confeſſion of record, that is inough for my life: and I meane to vtter more, for which I were worthie to die; and ſaid: I praie you heare me, in that I am to ſpeake to diſcharge my conſcience. Then ſaid maiſter vicechamberleine; Parrie, then doo thy dutie according to conſcience, and vtter all that thou canſt ſaie concerning thoſe thy moſt wicked facts.

The quéenes atturnie requireth iudgement.

Then ſaid Parrie: My cauſe is rare, ſingular and vnnaturall, conceiued at Venice, preſented in generall words to the pope, vndertaken at Paris, commended and allowed of by his holineſſe, and was to haue béene executed in England, if it had not béene preuented. Yea, I haue committed manie treaſons, for I haue committed treaſon in being reconciled, and treaſon in taking abſolution. There hath béene no treaſon ſince the firſt yeare of the quéenes reigne touching religion, but that I am guiltie of (except for receiuing of Agnus Dei, & perſuading as I haue ſaid) and yet neuer intended to kill quéene Eliſabeth. I appeale to hir owne knowledge and to my lord treaſurors and maiſter ſecretaries. Then ſaid my lord of Hunſdon: Haſt thou acknowledged it ſo often, and ſo plainelie in writing vnder thy hand, and here of record; and now, when thou ſhouldeſt haue thy iudgement according to that which thou haſt confeſſed thy ſelfe guiltie of, dooeſt thou go backe againe, and denie the effect of all? How can we beléeue that thou now ſaieſt?

Parrie had for his credit more time ſaid verie ſecretlie, that he had béene ſolicited beyond the ſeas to commit the fact, but he would not doo it, wherewith he craftilie abuſed both the quéenes maieſtie, & thoſe two councellors, whereof he now would helpe himſelfe with theſe ſpeches againſt moſt manifeſt proofs.

Then ſaid maſter vicechamberleine; This is abſurd, thou haſt not onelie confeſſed generallie, that thou wert guiltie according to the indictment, which ſummarilie, and yet in expreſſe words dooth conteine that thou haddeſt traitorouſlie compaſſed and intended the death & deſtruction of hir maieſtie: but thou alſo ſaidſt particularlie that thou wert guiltie of euerie of the treaſons conteined therein, whereof the ſame was one in plaine & expreſſe letter ſet downe, and read vnto thée; Yea thou ſaiedſt that thou wert guiltie of more treaſons too beſide theſe; And diddeſt thou not vpon thy examination voluntarilie confeſſe, how thou waſt mooued firſt thervnto by miſlike of thy ſtate after thy departure out of the realme? And that thou diddeſt miſlike hir maieſtie for that ſhe had doone nothing for thée? How by wicked papiſts and popiſh bookes thou wert perſuaded that it was lawfull to kill hir maieſtie? How thou wert by reconciliation become one of that wicked ſort, that held hir maieſtie for neither lawfull quéene, nor chriſtian? And that it was meritorious to kill hir? And diddeſt thou not ſignifie that thy purpoſe to the pope by letters, and receiuedſt letters from the cardinall, how he allowed of thine intent, and excited thée to performe it, and therevpon diddeſt receiue abſolution? And diddeſt thou not conceiue it, promiſe it, vow it, ſweare it, and receiue the ſacrament that thou wouldeſt doo it? And diddeſt not thou therevpon affirme, that thy vowes were in heauen, and thy letters and promiſes on earth to bind thée to doo it? And that what ſoeuer hir maieſtie would haue doone for thée, could not haue remooued thée from that intention or purpoſe, vnleſſe ſhe would haue deſiſted from dealing as ſhe hath doone with the catholikes, as thou calleſt them? All this thou haſt plainelie confeſſed; and I proteſt before this great aſſemblie, thou haſt confeſſed it more plainelie & in better ſort, than my memorie will ſerue me to vtter: and ſaieſt thou now, that thou neuer meanteſt it?

Maiſter vicechamberleins ſpeeches, prouing manifeſtlie Parries traitorous intentions.

Note all the charge of maiſter vicechamberleine to be a recapitulation of all or moſt the treaſons of Parrie.

Ah (ſaid Parrie) your honors know how my confeſſion vpon mine examination was extorted. Then both the lord Hunſdon and maſter Vicechamberleine affirmed, that there was no torture or threatning words offered him. But Parrie then ſaid, that they told him, that if he would not confeſſe willinglie, he ſhould haue torture. Wherevnto their honors anſwered, that they vſed not anie ſpéech or word of torture to him. You ſaid, ſaid Parrie, that you would procéed with rigour againſt me, if I would not confeſſe it of my ſelfe. But their honors expreſſlie affirmed that they vſed no ſuch words. But I will tell thée, ſaid maſter Vicechamberleine, what we ſaid; I ſpake theſe words: If you will willinglie vtter the truth of your ſelfe, it may doo you good, and I wiſh you to doo ſo; if you will not, we muſt then procéed in ordinarie courſe to take your examination. Wherevnto you anſwered, that you would tell the truth of your ſelfe. Was not this true? Which then he yéelded vnto. And herevnto, hir maieſties attournie generall put Parrie in remembrance what ſpéeches he vſed to the lieutenant of the Tower, the quéenes maieſties ſergeant at law, M. Gaudie, and the ſame attournie on ſaturdaie the twentith of Februarie laſt at the Tower, vpon that he was by them then examined by order from the lords: which was, that he acknowledged he was moſt mildlie and fauourablie dealt with, in all his examinations: which he alſo at the bar then acknowledged to be true.

Parrie chargeth the lords of the councell with vntruth.

Parrie reproued of falſe ſpéeches, and ſo by himſelfe alſo confeſſed.

Then maiſter vicechamberleine ſaid, that it was

The magnanimitie of the queenes maieſtie notified by ſir Chriſtopher Hatton.

wonder to ſee the magnanimitie of hir maieſtie, which after that thou haddeſt opened thoſe traitorous practiſes in ſort as thou haſt laid it downe in thy confeſſion, was neuertheleſſe ſuch, and ſo far from all feare, as that ſhe would not ſo much as acquaint anie one of hir highneſſe priuie councell with it, to his knowlege, no not vntill after this thine enterpriſe diſcouered and made manifeſt. And beſides that which thou haſt ſet downe vnder thine owne hand, thou diddeſt confeſſe, that thou haddeſt prepared two Scotiſh daggers fit for ſuch a purpoſe: and thoſe being diſpoſed awaie by thee, thou diddeſt ſaie that an other would ſerue thy turne. And withall, Parrie, diddeſt thou not alſo confeſſe before vs how wonderfullie thou wert appalled and perplexed vpon a ſudden at the preſence of hir maieſtie at Hampton court this laſt ſummer, ſaieng that thou diddeſt thinke thou then ſaweſt in hir the verie likeneſſe and image of king Henrie the ſeuenth? And that therewith, and vpon ſome ſpeaches vſed by hir maieſtie, thou diddeſt turne about and weepe bitterlie to thy ſelfe? And yet diddeſt call to mind that thy vowes were in heauen, thy letters and promiſes on earth; and that therefore thou diddeſt ſaie with thy ſelfe, that there was no remedie but to doo it? Diddeſt thou not confeſſe this? The which he acknowledged.

The lord of Hunſdons ſpeches conuincing Parrie manifeſtlie of his treaſon.

Then ſaid the lord Hunſdon; Saieſt thou now, that thou diddeſt neuer meane to kill the queene? Diddeſt thou not confeſſe, that when thou diddeſt vtter this practiſe of trecherie to hir maieſtie, that thou diddeſt couer it with all the ſkill thou haddeſt; and that it was doone by thee, rather to get credit and acceſſe thereby, than for anie regard thou haddeſt of hir perſon? But in truth thou diddeſt it, that thereby thou mighteſt haue better opportunitie to performe thy wicked enterpriſe. And wouldeſt thou haue run into ſuch feare as thou diddeſt confeſſe that thou wert in, when thou diddeſt vtter it, if thou haddeſt neuer meant it? What reaſon canſt thou ſhew for thy ſelfe? With that he cried out in a furious maner: I neuer meant to kill hir: I will laie my bloud vpon queene Eliſabeth and you, before God and the world: and therevpon fell into a rage and euill words with the queenes maieſties attourneie generall. Then ſaid the lord Hunſdon; This is but thy popiſh pride & oſtentation, which thou wouldeſt haue to be told to thy fellowes of that faction, to make them beleeue that thou dieſt for poperie, when thou dieſt for moſt horrible and dangerous treaſons againſt hir maieſtie, and thy whole countrie. For thy laieng of thy bloud, it muſt lie on thine owne head, as a iuſt reward of thy wickedneſſe. The lawes of the realme moſt iuſtlie condemne thee to die out of thine owne mouth, for conſpiring the deſtruction both of hir maieſtie, and of vs all: therefore thy bloud be vpon thee: neither hir maieſtie, nor we at anie time ſought it; thy ſelfe haſt ſpilt it.

Parries reclamation of outrage and impatientneſſe.

Parrie abuſeth the honorable and worſhipfull of the bench with termes vncouth and darke ſpeches.

Then he was aſked what he could ſaie, why iudgement of death ought not to be awarded againſt him? Whereto he ſaid, he did ſee that he muſt die, becauſe he was not ſetled. What meaneſt thou by that, ſaid maiſter vicechamberleine? Said he, Looke into your ſtudie, and into your new bookes, and you ſhall find what I meane. I proteſt (ſaid his honor) I know not what thou meaneſt: thou dooeſt not well to vſe ſuch darke ſpeeches, vnleſſe thou wouldeſt plainelie vtter what thou meaneſt thereby. But he ſaid, he cared not for death, and that he would laie his bloud amongſt them. Then ſpake the lord chiefe iuſtice of England, being required to giue iudgement according to law, and ſaid; Parrie, you haue beene much heard, and what you meane by being ſetled, I know not; but I ſee you are ſo ſetled in poperie, that you cannot ſetle your ſelfe to be a good ſubiect. But touching that you ſhould ſaie to ſtaie iudgement from being giuen againſt you, your ſpeeches muſt be of one of theſe kinds; either to proue the indictment (which you haue confeſſed to be true) to be inſufficient in law; or elſe to pleade ſomewhat touching hir maieſties mercie, why iuſtice ſhould not be doone of you. All other ſpeeches wherein you haue vſed great libertie, is more than by law you can aſke. Theſe be the matters you muſt looke to, what ſaie you to them? Whereto he ſaid nothing.

More libertie of ſpeech giuen to Parrie than by law was allowable.

Parries treaſons recapitulated by the lord chiefe iuſtice, both for maner and matter.

Then ſaid the lord chiefe iuſtice; Parrie, thou haſt beene before this time indicted of diuerſe moſt horrible and hatefull treaſons, committed againſt thy moſt gratious ſouereigne, and natiue countrie: the matter moſt deteſtable, the maner moſt ſubtill and dangerous, and the occaſions and meanes that lead thee therevnto moſt vngodlie and villanous. That thou diddeſt intend it, it is moſt euident by thy ſelfe. The matter was the deſtruction of a moſt ſacred and an anointed queene thy ſouereigne and miſtreſſe, who hath ſhewed thee ſuch fauour, as ſome thy betters haue not obteined: yea, the ouerthrow of thy countrie wherein thou wert borne, & of a moſt happie common-wealth whereof thou art a member, and of ſuch a queene, as hath beſtowed on thee the benefit of all benefits in this world (that is to ſaie) thy life, hertofore granted thee by hir mercie when thou hadſt loſt it by iuſtice & deſert. Yet thou hir ſeruant ſworne to defend hir, menteſt with thy bloudie hand to haue taken awaie hir life, that mercifullie gaue thee thine, when it was yeelded into hir hands. This is the matter wherein thou haſt offended.

The occaſions and meanes that induced Parrie to theſe treaſons.

The maner was moſt ſubtill and dangerous, beyond all that before thee haue committed anie wickedneſſe againſt hir maieſtie: for thou making ſhew as if thou wouldeſt ſimplie haue vttered for hir ſafetie the euill that others had contriued, diddeſt but ſeeke thereby credit & acceſſe, that thou mighteſt take the apter opportunitie for hir deſtruction. And for the occaſions and meanes that drew thee on, they were moſt vngodlie and villanous: as the perſuaſions of the pope, of papiſts, and popiſh bookes. The pope pretendeth that he is a paſtor, when as in truth he is far from feeding of the flocke of Chriſt, but rather as a woolfe ſeeketh but to feed on & to ſucke out the bloud of true chriſtians, and as it were thirſteth after the bloud of our moſt gratious and chriſtian queene. And theſe papiſts and popiſh bookes, while they pretend to ſet forth diuinitie, they doo indeed moſt vngodlie teach and perſuade that which is quite contrarie both to God and his word. For the word teacheth obedience of ſubiects toward princes, & forbiddeth anie priuat man to kill; but they teach ſubiects to diſobeie princes, & that a priuat wicked perſon may kill. Yea & whome? a moſt godlie queene, & their owne naturall and moſt gratious ſouereigne. Let all men therfore take heed how they receiue any thing from him, heare or read anie of their bookes, and how they confer with anie papiſts. God grant hir maieſtie, that ſhe maie know by thee, how euer ſhe truſt ſuch like to come ſo neere hir perſon!

The danger & damnableneſſe of popiſh bookes either read or liſtened vnto of papiſts, &c.

The forme of iudgement againſt the traitor pronounced by the lord cheefe iuſtice.

But ſee the end, and why thou diddeſt it, and it will appeare to be a moſt miſerable, fearefull, and fooliſh thing: for thou diddeſt imagine, that it was to releeue thoſe that thou calleſt catholikes, who were moſt likelie amongſt all others to haue felt the worſt of it, if thy diueliſh practiſe had taken effect. But ſith thou haſt beene indicted of the treaſons compriſed in the indictment, and therevpon arreigned, and haſt confeſſed thy ſelfe guiltie of them; the court dooth award, that thou ſhalt be had from henſe to the place whenſe thou diddeſt come, and ſo drawne through the open citie of London vpon an hurdle to the place of execution, and there to be hanged and let downe aliue, and thy priuie parts cut off, and thy entrals taken out and burnt in thy ſight, then thy head to be cut off, and thy bodie to be diuided in foure parts, and to be diſpoſed at hir maieſties pleaſure: and God haue mercie on thy ſoule.

Parrie rageth at the iuſtice bar without all reuerence.

Parrie neuertheleſſe perſiſted ſtill in his rage and fond ſpeach, and raginglie there ſaid, he there ſummoned quéene Eliſabeth to anſwer for his bloud before God: wherewith the lieutenant of the Tower was commanded to take him from the barre: and ſo he did. And vpon his departure, the people ſtriken as it were at heart with the horror of his intended enterpriſe, ceaſed not, but purſued him with outcries, as; Awaie with the traitor, awaie with him, & ſuch like: wherevpon he was conueied to the barge, to paſſe to the Tower againe by water: & the court was adiorned. After which, vpon the ſecond daie of this inſtant March, William Parrie was by vertue of proceſſe in that behalfe awarded from the ſame commiſſioners of oier and terminer, deliuered by the lieutenant of the Tower erlie in the morning vnto the ſhiriffes of London and Middleſex, who receiued him at the Tower hill, and therevpon, according to the iudgement, cauſed him there to be forthwith ſet on the hurdle: from whenſe he was drawne therevpon through the middeſt of the citie of London, vnto the place for his execution in the pallace at Weſtminſter: where, hauing long time of ſtaie admitted vnto him before his execution, he moſt maliciouſlie and impudentlie, after ſome other vaine diſcourſes eftſoons & often deliuered in ſpeach, that he was neuer guiltie of anie intention to kill quéene Eliſabeth, and ſo (without anie requeſt made by him to the people to pray to God for him, or praier publikelie vſed by himſelfe for ought that appeared: but ſuch as he vſed, if he vſed anie, was priuat to himſelfe) he was executed according to the iudgement. And now for his intent, how ſoeuer he pretended the contrarie in words, yet by theſe his owne writings, confeſſions, letters, & manie other proofes afore here expreſſed, it is moſt manifeſt to all perſons, how horrible his intentions and treaſons were, and how iuſtlie he ſuffered for the ſame: and thereby greatlie to be doubted, that as he had liued a long time vainelie and vngodlie, and like an atheiſt and godleſſe man, ſo he continued the ſame courſe till his death to the outward ſight of men. ¶ Here endeth the true and plaine courſe and proceſſe of the treaſons, arreſt, arreignement, and execution of William Parrie the traitor.

William Parrie the traitor executed.

Parrie (euen at the time of his death) ſéeketh to cleare and purge himſelfe as innocent of the treaſons for the which he was condemned.

An addition not vnneceſſarie for this purpoſe.

Forſomuch as Parrie in the aboundance of his proud and arrogant humour, hath often both in his confeſſion, and letters, pretended ſome great and grieuous cauſes of diſcontentment againſt hir maieſtie, and the preſent ſtate: it ſhall not be impertinent, for better ſatiſfaction of all perſons, to ſet forth ſimplie and trulie, the condition and qualitie of the man, what he was by birth and education, and in what courſe of life he had liued. This vile and traitorous wretch was one of the yoonger ſonnes of a poore man, called Parrie ap Dauid: he dwelled in Northwales in a little village called Northop in the countie of Flint: there he kept a common alehouſe, which was the beſt and greateſt ſtaie of his liuing. In that houſe was this traitor borne, his mother was the reputed daughter of one Conwaie a prieſt, parſon of a poore pariſh called Halkin in the ſame countie of Flint: his eldeſt brother dwelleth at this preſent in the ſame houſe, and there kéepeth an alehouſe as his father did before him. This traitor in his childhood ſo ſoone as he had learned a litle to write and read, was put to ſerue a poore man dwelling in Cheſter, named John Fiſher, who profeſſed to haue ſome ſmall ſkill and vnderſtanding in the law. With him he continued diuerſe yeares, and ſerued as a clerke, to write ſuch things as in that trade, which his maſter vſed, he was appointed.

A deſcription of Parrie both by linage perſon, education, and qualitie, &c.

Parrie baſelie borne and baſelie brought vp.

During this time, he learned the Engliſh tong, and at ſuch times of leaſure as the poore man his maſter had no occaſion otherwiſe to vſe him, he was ſuffered to go to the grammar ſchoole, where he got ſome litle vnderſtanding in the Latine tong. In this his childhood he was noted by ſuch as beſt knew him, to be of a moſt villainous and dangerous nature & diſpoſition. He did often run awaie from his maſter, and was often taken & brought to him againe. His maſter, to correct his peruerſe and froward conditions, did manie times ſhut him as priſoner in ſome cloſe place of his houſe, and manie times cauſed him to be chained, locked, and clogged, to ſtaie his running awaie. Yet all was in vaine: for about the third yeare of hir maieſties reigne, for his laſt farewell to his poore maſter, he ran awaie from him, and came to London to ſéeke his aduentures. He was then conſtreined to ſéeke what trade he could to liue by, and to get meat and drinke for his bellie, and clothes for his backe.

Parrie a verie runnagate and vagarant rakehell in his yoong yeares.

His good hap in the end was to be interteined in place of ſeruice aboue his deſert, where he ſtaied not long, but ſhifted himſelfe diuerſe times from ſeruice to ſeruice, and from one maſter to another. Now he began to forget his old home, his birth, his education, his parents, his friends, his owne name, and what he was. He aſpired to greater matters, he challenged the name and title of a great gentleman, he vaunted himſelfe to be of kin and alied to noble and worſhipfull, he left his old name which he did beare, and was commonlie called by in his childhood, & during all the time of his abode in the countrie, which was William ap Harrie (as the maner in Wales is.) And bicauſe he would ſéeme to be in déed the man which he pretended, he tooke vpon him the name of Parrie, being the ſirname of diuerſe gentlemen of great worſhip and hauiour. And bicauſe his mothers name by hir father a ſimple prieſt, was Conwaie: he pretended kinred to the familie of ſir John Conwaie, and ſo thereby made himſelfe of kin to Edmund Neuill.

Note Parries ambition, and how the prieſt forgetteth that euer he was pariſh clerke.

Being thus ſet forth with his new name and new title of gentleman, and commended by ſome of his good fauorers, he matched himſelfe in mariage with a widow in Southwales, who brought him ſome reaſonable portion of wealth. She liued with him but a ſhort time, and the welth he had with hir laſted not long: it was ſoone conſumed with his diſſolute and waſtfull maner of life. He was then driuen to his wonted ſhifts, his creditors were manie, the debt which he owed great, he had nothing therewith to make paiment, he was continuallie purſued by ſergeants and officers to arreſt him, he did often by ſleights and ſhifts eſcape from them. In this his néedie and poore eſtate, he ſought to repare himſelfe againe by a new match in mariage with another widow, which before was the wife of one Richard Heiwood.

Parrie matcheth himſelfe in marriage with a widow in Southwales.

Parrie a ſhifter, in debt & danger; he marrieth a rich widow, &c.

This matter was ſo earneſtlie followed by himſelfe, and ſo effectuallie commended by his fréends and fauourers, that the ſillie woman yéelded to take him to husband: a match in euerie reſpect verie vnequall and vnfit. Hir wealth and yearelie liuelihood was verie great, his poore and baſe eſtate worſe than nothing, he verie yoong, ſhe of ſuch age as for yeares ſhe might haue béene his mother. When he had thus poſſeſſed himſelfe of his new wiues wealth, he omitted ted nothing that might ſerue for a prodigall, diſſolute, and moſt vngodlie courſe of life. His riot and exceſſe was vnmeaſurable, he did moſt wickedlie deflowre his wiues owne daughter, and ſundrie waies pitifullie abuſe the old mother: he caried himſelfe for his outward port and countenance (ſo long as his old wiues bags laſted) in ſuch ſort, as might well haue ſufficed for a man of verie good hauiour and degrée. But this laſted not long, his proud hart & waſtfull hand had ſoone powred out old Heiwoods wealth.

Parrie deflowreth his wiues owne daughter, and ſundrie waies abuſeth the old mother.

He then fell againe to his wonted ſhifts, borowed where he could find anie to lend, and ingaged his credit ſo far as anie would truſt him. Amongſt others, he became greatlie indebted to Hugh Hare, the gentleman before named. Who after long forbearing of his monie, ſought to recouer it by law. For this cauſe Parrie conceiued great diſpleaſure againſt him, which he purſued with all malice, euen to the ſéeking of his life. In this murtherous intent, he came in the night time to M. Hares chamber in the Temple, broke open the doore, aſſaulted him, and wounded him grieuouſlie, and ſo left him in great danger of life. For this offenſe he was apprehended, committed to Newgate, indicted of burgularie, arreigned, and found guiltie by a verie ſubſtantiall iurie, and condemned to be hanged, as the law in that caſe requireth.

Parrie condemned for burgularie, is pardoned of the quéene.

He ſtanding thus conuicted, hir maieſtie of hir moſt gratious clemencie, and pitifull diſpoſition, tooke compaſſion vpon him, pardoned his offenſe, & gaue him his life, which by the law & due courſe of iuſtice he ought then to haue loſt. After this he taried not long, but pretending ſome cauſes of diſcontentment, departed the realme, and trauelled beyond the ſeas. How he demeaned himſelfe there from time to time, and with whome he conuerſed, is partlie in his owne confeſſion touched before. This is the man, this is his race, which he feared ſhould be ſpotted if he miſcaried in the execution of his traitorous enterpriſe, this hath béene the courſe of his life, theſe are the great cauſes of his diſcontentment.

Parrie pretended a conſcience of religion, being vtterlie prophane and of no religion.

And whereas at his arreignement and execution, he [illegible]ended great care of the diſobedient popiſh ſubiects of this realme, whom he called catholikes, and in verie inſolent ſort ſéemed to glorie greatlie in the profeſſion of his pretenſed catholike religion: the whole courſe and action of his life ſheweth plainelie, how prophanelie & irreligiouſlie he did alwaies beare himſelfe. He vaunted, that for theſe two and twentie yeares paſt he had béene a catholike, and during all that time neuer receiued the communion: yet before he trauelled beyond the ſeas, at thrée ſeuerall times within the compaſſe of theſe two and twentie yeares, he did voluntarilie take the oth of obedience to the quéenes maieſtie, ſet downe in the ſtatute made in the firſt yeare of hir highneſſe reigne; by which, amongſt other things, he did teſtifie and declare in his conſcience, that no forreine prince, perſon, prelat, ſtate, or potentat, hath or ought to haue anie iuriſdiction, power, preeminence, or authoritie, eccleſiaſticall or ſpirituall, within this realme; and therfore did vtterlie renounce & forſake all forren iuriſdictions, powers, and authorities, and did promiſe to beare faith and true allegiance to the quéenes highneſſe, hir heires and lawfull ſucceſſours.

Parries voluntarie oth (thriſe taken in 22 yeares) of obedience to hir maieſtie.

With what conſcience or religion he tooke that oth ſo often, if ſo be he were then a papiſt in déed, as ſince the diſcouerie of his treaſons he pretended, let his beſt fréends the papiſts themſelues iudge. But perhaps it may be ſaid, that he repented thoſe his offenſes paſt: that ſince thoſe thrée oths ſo taken by him, he was twiſe reconciled to the pope, and ſo his conſcience cleared, and he become a new man, and (which is more) that in the time of his laſt trauell, he caſt awaie all his former lewd maners: that he changed his degrée and habit, and bought or begged the graue title of a doctor of law, for which he was well qualified with a little grammar ſchoole Latine: that he had plenarie indulgence and remiſſion of all his ſinnes, in conſideration of his vndertaking of ſo holie an enterpriſe as to kill quéene Eliſabeth, a ſacred annointed quéene, his naturall and ſoueraigne ladie: that he promiſed to the pope, & vowed to God to performe it: that he confirmed the ſame by receiuing the ſacrament at the Ieſuits, at one altar with his two beaupéeres, the cardinals of Vandoſme and Narbone: and that ſince his laſt returne into England, he did take his oth vpon the bible to execut it. Theſe reaſons may ſéeme to beare ſome weight in déed amongſt his friends the Ieſuits, and other papiſts of ſtate, who haue ſpeciall ſkill in matters of ſuch importance.

And this is moſt like, for what will not the pope diſpenſe withall?

Parries two beaupéers the cardinals of Vandoſme & Narbone.

But now latelie in the beginning of this parlement in Nouember laſt, he did eftſoones ſolemnelie in publike place take the oth before mentioned, of obedience to hir maieſtie. How that maie ſtand with his reconciliations to the pope, and with his promiſes, vowes, and oth to kill the quéene, it is a thing can hardlie be warranted, vnleſſe it be by ſome ſpeciall priuilege of the popes omnipotencie. But let him haue the glorie he deſired, to liue and die a papiſt. He deſerued it, it is fit for him, his death was correſpondent to the courſe of his life, which was diſloiall, periured, and traitorous towards hir maieſtie; and falſe and perfidious towards the pope himſelfe, and his catholikes, if they will beléeue his ſolemne proteſtations which he made at his arreignement and execution, that he neuer meant nor intended anie hurt to hir highneſſe perſon. For if that be true, where are then his vowes which he ſaid were in heauen, his letters and promiſes vpon earth? Why hath he ſtollen out of the popes ſhop ſo large an indulgence and plenarie remiſſion of all his ſinnes, and meant to performe nothing that he promiſed? Why was his deuotion and zele ſo highlie commended? Why was he ſo ſpeciallie praid for and remembred at the altar? All theſe great fauours were then beſtowed vpon him without cauſe or deſert: for he deceiued the pope, he deceiued the cardinals and Ieſuits with a falſe ſemblance and pretenſe to doo that thing which he neuer meant.

What a notable diſſembler was this?

Parrie periured towards hir maieſtie & perfidious to the pope, &c.

No truſt nor certeine dealing vſed by Parrie to nor fro.

But the matter is cléere, the conſpiracie, and his traitorous intent is too plaine and euident: it is the Lord that reuealed it in time, and preuented their malice: there lacked no will or readineſſe in him to execute that horrible fact. It is the Lord that hath preſerued hir maieſtie from all the wicked practiſes and conſpiracies of that helliſh rable: it is he that hath moſt gratiouſlie deliuered hir from the hands of this traitorous miſcreant. The Lord is hir onelie defenſe in whome ſhe hath alwaies truſted, he will defend hir maieſtie, and fulfill for hir ſake no leſſe than good king Dauid (ſundrie times aſſalted with falſeharted enimies) and all loiall ſubiects will hartilie praie for; namelie ſuch vengeance and heauie meaſure of iudgement to be proportioned and allotted them, as is wiſhed againſt the malicious wicked in the eight and fiftith pſalme, effectuallie ſet downe by the Paraphraſt in theſe words following:

Confringe malas (ô Deus) impudens
Os comminutis contere dentibus:
Et rictibus ſæuis hiantes
Hos inhibe catulos leonum, &c.
Senſim liqueſcant, tardigradus velut
Limax: acerbo funere deſerant
Vitale lumen, more fœtus
Ante ſuum pereuntis ortum, &c.

Buch. in pſalm. 58.

A few

A few obſeruations gathered out of the verie words and writings of William Parrie the traitor, applied to prooue his traitorous coniuration, with a reſolute intent, imagination, purpoſe, and obſtinate determination to haue killed hir maieſtie, our moſt gratious ſoucreigne: whom the Lord hath ſaued, and euer maie he ſaue by his mercie.

THis William Parrie the traitor, 1 confeſſeth to haue conceiued the treaſon at Venice, by conference with B. Palmio, of whome he ſtill thinketh ſo well, as he can not but ſpeake of him with reuerend mention; whereas, if he had neuer thought, or did now forethinke the treaſon, he would rather curſſe the time that euer he met with ſuch a bloudie and treacherous ghoſtlie father. Well, this graue and learned frier Palmio (ſaith he) made the matter cléere in religion and conſcience, and commended the traitors deuotion. This treaſon Parrie ſo apprehended, as he wrote preſentlie to the pope, preſenting the ſeruice. 2 Returning to Paris, he conferred with Morgan, vowed to performe it for reſtitution of England, &c. 3 Being diſſuaded (as the credible man writeth) by Wats, he replied that he was gone ſo farre, as he could not go backe, but promiſed faithfullie to performe the enterpriſe, if the pope would vpon his offers and letters allow it, and grant remiſſion, &c.

Benedicto Palmio a Ieſuit, mentioned before, pag. 1385.

Thomas Morgan and Wats the one termed a catholike gentleman, pag. 1385.

Where this by the waie is to be noted, that if the opinions of theſe Engliſh prieſts (as he will néeds make vs beléeue) were differing from the pope, and our Engliſh Ieſuits, varieng from Ieſuit Palmio and others beyond ſea Ieſuits, in the queſtion of murthering a prince: ſome of them at leaſt would haue giuen loiall intelligence of ſuch a treaſon conceiued and nouriſhed in that man, who had made ſo manie priuie both beyond and on this ſide the ſea, as could not be diſſuaded from his purpoſe, but euer departed with a reſolution contrarie vnto theſe cold diſſuaders. It were no good policie to truſt this popiſh traitor, but rather to ſuſpect all pope created prieſts to be of the ſame mind with their ſupreame head, and all Engliſh Ieſuits to conſent with forren Ieſuits their fellow members. They be all of one order and vow, they haue one ſuperior; and if they had deteſted this fact in déed, ſome of them, ſéeing the wretch to perſiſt, muſt néeds haue bewraied it, and not to ſuffer him to go on headlong in ſuch a ſinne, leauing hir roiall perſon to the will and malice (as much as in them laie) of a murthering ruffian.

They cannot be found in loialtie that are vnſound in religion: Ergo how can they giue Caeſar his right, that denie God his due and true ſeruice?

But to prooue his intent with continuance and growing of the ſame, 4 Againe he writeth letters to the pope, in Ianuarie one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and foure by that account, tooke aduiſe vpon them in confeſſion of A. Codreto, was commended, againe confeſſed, tooke the ſacrament (verelie Cruentum ſacramentum, & ſacrificium cruoris) at the Ieſuits, at one altar, with the cardinals of Vandoſmi and of Narbone. Hereof he had certificat to the pope, which he ſent incloſed in his letters to his holineſſe, to lead him to abſolue him; which he required in conſideration of ſo great an enterpriſe vndertaken without reward. 5 The letter and certificat he read to Ragazzoni, and left with him to be ſent to the pope, who wiſhed him good ſpéed, promiſing he ſhould be remembred at the altar. 6 He doubteth, leaſt if Morgan died, and he miſcarried in the execution (as he did, God be thanked, and choked in the halter, notwithſtanding their remembrance at the altar) and his intent neuer trulie diſcouered; that is to ſaie, that he did it for the catholikes, it might be a ſpot in his race. Marke here the verie word (intent) in his owne confeſſion. 7 Morgan aſſureth him, that the lord Fernehurſt ſhould go into Scotland, and be readie to enter vpon the firſt newes of our quéenes fall. Thus much for his intent beyond the ſea, and before his coniuration diſcouered.

Aniball a Ieſuit in Paris, of whome before, pag. 1385.

Ragazzoni the Nuntio: ſée before, pag. 1385.

Sée before pag. 1386.

Vpon his arriuall in England, he wrote to court, that he had a ſpeciall ſeruice of diſcouerie vnto the quéene: but with what intent, let his owne words ſpeake, 8 More to prepare acceſſe and credit, than for anie care had of hir perſon. Admitted vnto hir gratious audience, he diſcouered the coniuration; yet in what maner, let himſelfe ſaie, euen couered with all the ſkill he had. This intent was with déepe treaſon: for (as he ſaith) ſo he did, he diſcloſed onelie ſo much as he thought good and neceſſarie to ground in hir highneſſe a ſetled confidence towards him, whereby he might effect his traitorous intent with better opportunitie, and his owne ſafetie. He bewraied himſelfe ſo farre as he might couer his chiefe drift, manie principall things concealed, nothing of lord Fernehurſt with his Scotiſh forces, &c. 9 Receiuing from the pope himſelfe commendation and allowance of his enterpriſe, of incouragement, and plenarie indulgence by no meaner man than cardinall di Como, though he ſhewed the letter to hir maieſtie; not for anie care of hir perſon, but for his better acceſſe & credit, as the reſt, yet let his owne words tell what his intent was at the verie receiuing and ſhewing of the ſame letter. Forſooth (ſaith he) this letter confirmed his reſolution to kill the quéene, making it cléere in his conſcience, as a thing lawfull and meritorious.

Sée before, pag. 1386.

Cardinall di Como, of whom ſée before, pag. 1385. and his letter to Parrie, pag. 1388.

Now is his intent grown to a reſolution, not doutfull, but cléere in conſcience, not alone lawfull, but meritorious. Papa dixit, a cardinall is Nuntio. What other thing is this, than for the pope and his cardinals, like an other Antoninus Commodus, to make one Inter ſicarios & gladiatores? The diuell inforcing this traitors heart to execute his intent, 10 He was troubled looking vpon the quéene, and remembring hir excellencies: yet he ſaw no remedie, his vowes were in heauen, his letters and promiſes on earth. Yea, he ſtroue to cloſe his eies at theſe excellencies, and obſtinated his hart by ſéeking reaſons to quench all ſparks of humanitie and allegiance ariſing in his thoughts. For thus reaſoneth he againſt his conſcience; Why ſhouldeſt thou care for hir? What hath ſhe doone for thee? Haſt thou not ſpent ten thouſand marks, &c. What more diueliſh intent could poſſeſſe a traitor, than to labour to ſuppreſſe a ſmall remaine of conſcience, abhorring to kill ſo excellent a perſonage, which God ſtirred vp in his thoughts to his ſuffer condemnation? 11 Doctor Allens booke redoubled his former conceipts, euerie word was a warrant to a prepared mind.

Sée before, pag. 1386.

Sée before, pag. 1386. part of Parries voluntarie confeſſion.

Sée how the ſmooth words of that catholike booke are interpreted and conceiued. One ſpirit occupieth the catholike reader with the catholike writer, and therefore can beſt expound the writers ſenſe in his readers mouth, euen to be a booke fraught with emphaticall ſpeaches of energeticall perſuaſion to kill and depoſe hir maieſtie, and yet dooth the hypocrite writer, that traitor catholike, diſſemble and pretend otherwiſe. 12 Parrie ſuffering repulſe in a ſute for S. Katharins, communeth with maiſter Neuill, recommendeth the enterpriſe as honorable & profitable to the catholike common-weale. Being preiudiced in opinion of Allens booke (as before) he commendeth it, and deliuereth it to Neuill, thereby to worke the ſame vile intent in him which it had alreadie confirmed in himſelfe. He tooke now an other oth vpon the bible, after the maner of a proteſtant, to purſue the enterpriſe, and ment (he ſaith) to performe it, ſo far foorth as the place and maner of dooing was appointed. This ſecond coniuration he neuer bewraied in ſix moneths, till accuſed by Neuill, and then at firſt denied it.

Note the pernicious dealing of Parrie euerie waie hurtfull, Tam principi quàm populo, deinceps ſibimet et proditori ſummo. pag. 1386.

13 Finallie, to declare his height of malice, he ſaith, if the quéene had preferred him neuer ſo greatlie, yet muſt this bloudie enterpriſe haue holden, except ſhe had reléeued the catholikes. Was this no intent, which neither benefit nor bountie could ſtaie? Which neither feare of God, nor reuerence of excellencie could repell? Which neither dread of puniſhment, nor tract of time could remooue? Did he conceiue it, conferre and aduiſe of it, vow himſelfe to the execrable ſeruice, preſent and offer it, harden his heart againſt others diſſuaſions, beat backe contrarie motions of his owne conſcience, go ſo farre as he could not go backe, promiſe it faithfullie, receiue a church ſacrament therevpon, make certificat thereof, propound himſelfe the end and reaſon of his intent, diſcourſe vpon the contingent ſequele, preuenting the ſpot of his race, receiue letters of allowance, commendation, incouragement, and abſolution, could he vow in heauen, and promiſe on earth, could he doo all this in a thing which he meant not?

All theſe circumſtances proue that Parrie was reſolute, and prepared both in hart and by hand to put in practiſe his conceiued vnnaturall treaſon.

Could he reſolue and confirme his reſolution of a thing which he intended not; yea, could he intend & meane (for all theſe be his owne words) that which he neuer meant nor intended? could he redouble his conceits, and haue a prepared mind for that he intended not? Would ſuch a craftie traitor practiſe with others by perſuaſiue ſpeach, & traitorous booke in ſuch a matter, as the onelie broching thereof muſt capitallie indamage his kinſman and friend, and withall laie his owne head in his friends hand? And yet notwithſtanding, either he meant this treaſon, either elſe he little loued his friend, to tempt him ſo dangerouſlie; whom yet, he ſaith, he loued ſo, as to ſuffer his finger in his diſh, & his hand in his purſſe. But which is aboue all, would anie man ſweare againe on the bible, appoint time and place, conceals it with as much perill as if he had doone it; would he denie it, would ſo ambitious a man diſcontent himſelfe with all preferment, for the atchiuing of that which he meant not? Was this miſchiefous courſe, begun and continued, a long time, at home and abroad, in manie kingdomes, communicated with manie perſons, of ſeuerall nation and qualitie, as pope, cardinall, Nuntio, frier, prieſt, kings ſecretarie and ambaſſadors, all this while not meant? Was it frankelie and voluntarilie confeſſed meant, finallie, recorded by pleading guiltie in maner & forme with all circumſtance, and yet could he die an innocent for intent?

How could this [illegible] be vnmeant by intent; the premiſſes conſidered.

All this falling vpon no ſimple man, but vpon one, not now the firſt time holding vp his hand at barre, & vpon a doctor of law, the verie hood whereof is able to giue a man more iudgement, than to ſlip without light in all theſe things: I know not how he maie be excuſed without ſtrong ſuſpicion of the excuſer. And if a prince may not iudge a wicked ſeruant out of his owne mouth, nor determine an offenſe by two or thrée mouthes, it were a notable world for traitors and murtherers, thus to haue all procéedings ſet looſe, as well of our common lawes, which condemne vpon all euidences, as of the ciuill lawes, which giue capitall ſentence vpon confeſſion onelie: yea, Moſes wiſedome is ouerreached, and Chriſtes equitie in his euangelicall parable againſt the lewd ſeruant not vſing his talent is eluded. All this is alſo ratified by voluntarie letters of his to hir maieſtie apart, and to hir honorable councell. And if anie Italianat papiſt neuertheleſſe will néeds beléeue this repugnancie of his laſt ſpeaches, let him yet take this one note of him, whereby to conſider how credible a man he crediteth.

A dilemma or reaſon of aduantage, concluding that Parrie died a periured traitor.

Either Parrie meant this monſtrous murther according to his vowes in heauen, and ſworne promiſes in earth, and ſo died a deſperat traitor, proteſting the contrarie in his laſt words vpon his ſoule and damnation: or elſe was he periured, to the foule abuſe of pope & all poperie, moſt execrablie prophaning Gods name by promiſing, ſwearing, vowing, &c: that which he meant not. Neceſſarilie therefore muſt he periſh vpon periured treaſon, or wrecke vpon deſperat deieration. Nothing auoideth this dilemma, but a popiſh bull of diſpenſation, which if he had, I know not how princes may not as ſafelie ſuffer woolues and beares come to their preſence, as ſuch papiſts. And verie like it is that Parrie had a ſpeciall bull, either elſe was it comprehended in his indulgence, that he might take othes contrarie to his catholike conſcience, as he did the oth of ſupremaſie in the beginning of the laſt parlement. Which if his coniuratours had not béene priuie with what intention he did ſweare, he neuer durſt haue taken it, leaſt they ſhould haue now bewraied him as a man ſworne againſt the pope, therefore not to be truſted. But the truth is, this papiſt Parrie was both a traitor, and a manifold periured traitor, whome (with all other of the like ſtampe) we leaue to the finall iudgement of God at the laſt and dreadfull doome: regiſtring (in the meane time) a proper epigram, and of no leſſe fit than true deuiſe, in memorie of the ſaid capitall traitor, requiting that propheticall poſie concerning Daruell Gatheren and frier Forreſt, of whome you ſhall read in the thirtéenth yeare of king Henrie the eight; this of Parrie being as followeth:

William Parrie
Was ap Harrie
By his name:
From the alehouſe
To the gallows
Grew his fame.

Gotten weſtward
On a baſtard
As is thought:
Wherefore one waie
Kin to Conwaie
Hath he ſought.

Like a beaſt
With inceaſt
He begon:
Mother maried
Daughter caried
Him a ſonne.

Much he borrowed
Which he ſorrowed
To repaie:
Hare his good
Bought with blood
As they ſaie.

Yet for paiment
Had arrainment
Of his detter:
Shee that gaue him
Life to ſaue him
Hangd a better.

Parrie his pardon
Thought no guardon
For his woorth:
Wherefore ſought
That he mought
Trauell foorth.

Which obtained
He remained
As before:
And with raſhnes
Shewd his baſhnes
More and more.

He did enter
To aduenter
Euen hir death:
By whoſe fauor
He did euer
Draw his breath.

It was pittie
One ſo wittie
Malcontent:
Leauing reaſon
Should to treaſon
So be bent.

But his gifts
Were but ſhifts
Void of grace:
And his brauerie
Was but knauerie
Vile and baſe.

Wales did beare him
France did ſweare him
To the pope:
Venice wrought him
London brought him
To the rope.

Wherewith ſtrangled
And then mangled
Being dead:
Poles ſupporters
Of his quarters
And his head.

In this yeare one thouſand fiue hundred eightie & foure, ſir Walter Mildmaie knight, one of hir maieſties moſt honorable priuie councell, founded a college in the vniuerſitie of Cambridge, and named it Emmanuell college. ¶ The ſame was ſometimes a houſe of friers, and came to king Henrie the eight by diſſolution, as appeareth by the ſequeale, being an extract out of a ſubſtantiall and large booke written in parchment (which I haue ſeene, and whenſe I had this tranſcript) conteining the entrie or inrolment of certeine letters patents, writings and euidences touching the ſaid college. Firſt the premiſſes came vnto king Henrie the eight by act of parlement touching the diſſolution of monaſteries; & afterwards the ſaid king by letters patents vnder the great ſeale of England, dated Decimo ſexto Aprilis, anno triceſimo quinto regni ſui, did grant the ſame to Edward Elrington and Humfreie Metcalfe, and to the heires of the ſaid Edward for euer. After that, the ſaid Edward Elrington and Humfreie Metcalfe by their deed pold dated Quarto Martij, anno triceſimo ſexto Henrici octaui, did grant the premiſſes to William Sherwood gentleman & his heires for euer. Then George Sherewood gentleman, ſonne and heire to William Sherwood by deed pold dated Viceſimo nono Septembris, anno viceſimo tertio Eliſabethæ reginæ, did grant the premiſſes to Robert Tailor eſquier and to his heires for euer.

Abr. Fl. ex lib. manuſcripto.

Situs nuper domus fratrum prædicatorũ vocata le Blacke-friers in villa Cantabrigiæ.

And afterwards, the ſaid Robert Tailor by deed pold dated Duodecimo Iunij, anno viceſimo quinto Eliſabethæ reginæ, did grant the premiſſes to Richard Culuerwell citizen & mercer of London and Laurence Chaderton of Cambridge bachelor of diuinitie, and their heires for euer. And after that, the premiſſes were conueied to ſir Walter Mildmaie, who hath conuerted the ſame into a ſeedplot of learning, for the benefit of the church & common-wealth: ſo that the ſtudents maie verie trulie ſaie this, and more too, of ſo good, ſo honorable, and vertuous a founder:

——— fluuijs dum creuerit æquor,
Dúmque vagas ſtellas paſcet vterque polus,
Dum ſteriles altis luſtrabunt montibus vmbræ,
Virtutis ſtabit fama decúſque tua.

1585

The parlement diſſolued.

On the nine and twentith daie of March, which was in the yeare of Chriſt 1585, the parlement was diſſolued: at the breaking vp whereof, the queenes maieſtie in the parlement houſe made an oration, to ſuch effect as followeth.

The queenes maieſties oration in the parlement houſe.

The queenes maieſties oration in the parlement houſe.

MY Lords and ye of the lower houſe, my ſilence muſt not iniurie the owner ſo much, as to ſuppoſe a ſubſtitute ſufficient to render you the thanks that my heart yeeldeth you: not ſo much for the ſafe keeping of my life (for which your care appeareth ſo manifeſt) as for the neglecting your priuat future perill, not regarding other waie than my preſent ſtate. No prince herein (I confeſſe) can be ſurer tied, or faſter bound than I am, with the linke of your good will; and can for that, but yeeld a hart & head to ſeeke for euer all your beſt. Yet one matter toucheth me ſo neere, as I may not ouerſkip: religion, the ground on which all other matters ought to take roote, and being corrupted may marre all the tree: and that there be ſome faultfinders with the order of the cleargie, which ſo may make a ſlander to my ſelfe & the church, whoſe ouer ruler God hath made me; whoſe negligence can not be excuſed, if anie ſchiſmes or errors hereticall were ſuffered.

O the care that hir maieſtie hath of true religion, the lord of life lengthen hir graces life.

Thus much I muſt ſaie, that ſome faults and negligences may grow and bee (as in all other great charges it happeneth) and what vocation without? All which if you my lords of the cleargie doo not amend, I meane to depoſe you: looke you therfore well to your charges; this may be amended without heedleſſe or open exclamation. I am ſuppoſed to haue manie ſtudies, but moſt philoſophicall: I muſt yeeld this to be true, that I ſuppoſe few (that be no profeſſors) haue read more. And I need not tell you, that I am ſo ſimple that I vnderſtand not, nor ſo forgetfull that I remember not; & yet amongſt my manie volumes, I hope Gods booke hath not beene my ſildomeſt lectures, in which we find that, which by reſon (for my part) we ought to beleeue, that ſeeing ſo great wickednes & griefs in the world, in which we liue but as waie-faring pilgrims, we muſt ſuppoſe that God would neuer haue made vs but for a better place, and of more comfort than we find here. I know no creature that breatheth, whoſe life ſtandeth hourelie in more perill for it than mine owne, who entered not into my ſtate without ſight of manifold dangers of life and crowne, as one that had the mightieſt and greateſt to wreſtle with. Then it followeth, that I regarded it ſo much as I left my ſelfe behind my care.

Hir maieſties reuerend eſtimation of Gods word and ſacred ſcriptures.

And ſo you ſee that you wrong me too much (if anie ſuch there be) as doubt my coldneſſe in that behalfe. For if I were not perſuaded that mine were the true waie of Gods will, God forbid I ſhould liue to preſcribe it to you. Take heed, leſt Eccleſiaſtes ſaie not too true; They that feare the horie froſt, the ſnow ſhall fall vpon them. I ſee manie ouer bold with God almightie, making too manie ſubtill ſcannings of his bleſſed will, as lawiers doo with humane teſtaments: the preſumption is ſo great as I may not ſuffer it (yet mind I not hereby to animate *Romaniſts, which what aduerſaries they be to mine eſtate is ſufficientlie knowne) nor tolerate new fangledneſſe. I meane to guide them both by Gods true rule: in both parts be perils, and of the latter I muſt pronounce them dangerous to a kinglie rule, to haue euerie man according to his owne cenſure to make a doome of the validitie and priuitie of his princes gouernement, with a common veile and couer of Gods word, whoſe followers muſt not be iudged but by priuat mens expoſition, God defend you from ſuch a ruler that ſo euill will guide you. Now I conclude, that your loue and care neither is nor ſhall be beſtowed vpon a careleſſe prince, but ſuch as for your good will paſſeth as litle for this world as who careth leaſt; with thanks for your free ſubſidie: a manifeſt ſhew of the aboundance of your good wils, the which I aſſure you, but to be imploid to your weale, I could be better pleaſed to returne than receiue.

O moſt princelie reſolution and perſuaſion!

* The God of vengeance and iuſtice roote them out, that the Lords annointed maie be free from all feare of hurt.

What ſubiect would thinke life and lands too deere to loſe (if need were) for ſo gratious a queene?

This is the ſumme of hir maieſties oration vttered in a ſolemne aſſemblie, and well worthie the recording, as teſtifieng no leſſe in ſinceritie and truth, than euerie good ſubiect may ſeale vnto himſelfe, and laie his hand vpon his hart to be faithfullie meant for his ſecuritie. Wherein is ſpeciallie to be noted the religious care which hir maieſtie hath vowed to haue of the propagation and ſupportation of the goſpell; according to that which is reported of hir by waie of propheſie in the viſion of queene Anne in a dreame; where (after a repetition of miſeries foretold to befall in queene Maries daies) theſe words are inferred:

Ecce malis tantis tua parua medebitur infans,
Iámque tenella geret poſt ſceptrum patris adulta,
Solamen magnum patriæ, ſolamen amicis:
Qua regnante diu, cœlis ea fata feruntur,
Britanni populus fœlix, erit Anglia fœlix,
Et longa tali ſub principe pace fruetur.

C. O. in ſua Eliſabetha.

Papa relegatus fallax ad littora Tybris
Auſonij, propria ditione iubebitur eſſe
Contentus, vanúmque domi protrudere merces.
Hic iuris papalis erit tum terminus Anglis.
Veſtra dabit proles papæ immedicabile vulnus,
Non poſt idolis genua incuruare licebit
Amplius, aut ſtatuis benè olentia thura cremare,
Hinc papa incaſſum furibunda mouebitur ira,
Dentibus infrendens & quæret tollere prolem
Παρθένον inſidijs ſtructis, quæ numine cœli
Protectore ſuo ſemotis hoſtibus æuum
Pace colet, ſeros ornabit honoribus annos,
Pace ſuos placida ciues: ſua regna beabit.
Non tamen in claram bacchari deſinet atrox
Reginam, pus ore vomens & virus vt aſpis,
Promittet cælum verbis (quis crederet illud?)
Principis obſequium quicunque reliquerit vltrò,
Cum pacto hoc miſeros reuera in Tartara mittat, &c.

Abr. Flem.

The death of pope Gregorie the thirteenth: read of this popes practiſes againſt England in Parries treaſons, pag. 1382, &c.

¶ In this yeare of Grace, on the eleuenth of Aprill died pope Gregorie the thirteenth, termed the laſt & lewd pope of that name; one that wanted not the waies to applie his vſurped ſupremaſie to the common abuſe of all christendome, according to the receiued cuſtome of his predeceſſors; who rather than they would abide anie be it neuer ſo ſmall an eclipſe of their worldlie pompe, all the world ſhalbe ſet togither by the ears, in ſo much that heauen & earth ſhall ring with the noiſe of the tumults. This is he that (among other acts by him vndertaken & doone) after the old Romane or Iulian kalendar was by popiſh arguments accuſed & charged with manifold imperfections, whereinto by continuance of time it fortuned to fall, thruſt foorth into the world a reformed kalendar, exhibited to his holineſſe by one Antonie Lillie doctor of arts & phyſicke, wherein (by a certeine new cycle of epacts by one Aloiſius the ſaid Antonies brother germane deuiſed, and to an vndoubted rule of the golden number directed, as alſo to whatſoeuer magnitude or greatneſſe of the yeare of the ſunne aplied) all things that in the old kalendar were faultie, may by conſtant reaſon and for euer to laſt [illegible]eſtored; that the kalendar once reformed accor[illegible]o this plot, need neuer hereafter either to be al[illegible]ed or amended. Howbeit, in commending the [illegible]fect reformation of this new kalendar, whereby not on[illegible] all things erronious are aboliſhed; but alſo ſuch [illegible]eſight is had of the time to come, that the calculation of this kalendar ſhall neuer hereafter ſeeme ſubiect vnto change: an occaſion of ſome demands may hereof ariſe, touching chriſtian libertie; namlie; Whether the church be tied to a certeine time according to the reformed calculation aſtronomicall, in the celebration of yearelie feſtiuals? Whether it be lawfull for the biſhop of Rome to reforme the time and the kalendar? Whether the church of Chriſt be bound by neceſſitie of religion to receiue that kalendar, at the firſt originall beginning proceeding from the pope, though the ſame afterwards were ſet foorth vnder another title? Whether it profiteth or be requiſit that for the keeping of peace and concord, in contracts, bargainings, and intercourſe of traffike and merchandize; the one partie ſhould ſubmit himſelfe to that kalendar, whervnto the pope hath yoked his popelings; and perſuaded manie more to doo the ſame, &c. Although theſe and the like interrogatories may be made againſt the papiſts; yet bicauſe to giue an inſtance is not to anſwer a doubt, it is to be wiſhed that this kalendar were throughlie ſifted by ſome ſound and ſober mathematician, and the three heads, whereof this new reformed kalendar of Gregorie dooth conſiſt, diſprooued: which three heads, repeated by Gregorie in his bull before the ſaid kalendar, are theſe.

The pope is here baſe by his owne preſumptuous & proud enterpriſes to impeach chriſtian libertie.

This hath beene done in ſuch ſort by a mathematician ſtranger, that he is bold to challenge anie holding the contrarie opinion to a reproofe of his examination.

1 The reſtoring and coupling of the equinoctiall in the ſpring to the one and twentith daie of March, with ſuch a caueat giuen, that from thenſe, as from the proper and fixed ſeat, it may not poſſiblie hereafter at anie time remooue. 2 The correction of the golden number by the cycle of epacts, in ſuch ſort, that the numbers of epacts may ſhew not onelie the daie of the new moone in euerie moneth of all years; but alſo, and that principallie the terme of Eaſter: that is, the certeine & iuſt daie of the verie next full moone following after the equinoctiall of the ſpring; and that euerie yeare without error or deceipt. 3 The verie iuſt and certeine ſundaie of Eaſter, that ought to be celebrated and kept on the verie next ſundaie after the full moone, which dooth follow firſt after the iuſt equinoctiall of the ſpring. Theſe three heads being ſo anatomized and opened by mathematicians as were meet, it ſhould be found in the end, that this new kalendar, in all and euerie part thereof, euen wherin it is beſt reformed, or ſo thought to be, is manie waies faultie, & erronious in the verie grounds: in which qualitie leauing it, as not to be put to the touch in a publike chronicle, but otherwiſe to be had in triall, Gregorie the preferrer thereof is now to be handled by deſcription, which is no fiction or imagined fable, but deriued out of an oration or funerall ſermon in Rome, at the buriall of his holineſſe, conteining his maners, life, deeds, and laſt words at his death: togither with the lamentations of the cardinals and whole Romiſh clergie: otherwiſe to be intituled as followeth:

Vide M. Michaelem Mæſtlinum Gœppingenſem in Tubingenſi academia mathematicum, &c.

A ſermon full of papiſticall adulation, and matter ſufficient to procure the wiſe and vertuous minded to contemne ſuch groſſe and palpable blindneſſe, and all perſons to laugh at the Romaniſts abſurd and erronious follies.

There is nothing ſo certeine as death, either vncerteine as the moment thereof. Wherefore the holie doctor ſaith: Keepe thy ſelfe continuallie in that eſtate wherin thou deſireſt to die. And the prouerbe goeth, that manie a one thinketh himſelfe in perfect helth, when he beareth death in his boſome. To ſaie the truth, we doo continuallie carrie death about with vs, it is in vs immediatlie after we take life and mouing in our mothers wombe; and wherſoeuer we walke, it is ſtill at our heeles: if we take horſſe, it is with vs: if we be on the water, it is the guide of our ſhip: ſo as we can neuer ſate death to be abſent from vs: for our ſelues are verie death, and no part of our bodie immortall. Wherefore thoſe that ſuppoſe themſelues to liue in this world, are far deceiued in their owne opinions, and the pilgrimage of man in this world is but a ſhadow of life, which vnto vs ſeemeth life, but in deed is none. The better therefore to deſcribe the ſaid ſhadow, I will make an abſtraction of the dead time of mans age, from the full and greateſt age that a creature can liue in the world.

A good and plauſible beginning, if the proceeding were agreeable.

Firſt, the longeſt age that man can liue is but ſixtie years. From ſixtie years we muſt deduct the nights, for man when he ſleepeth liueth not. Beſide that, ſleepe is termed the image of death: ſo that deducting the nights, which comprehend one halfe of the time, man liueth but three ſcore yeares in the world. Whiles man liueth theſe ſixtie yeares, he liueth but the one halfe of them, for if he haue one daie of mirth and quiet, he hath another of ſorrow and care, bicauſe griefe dooth ſtill ſecretlie creepe into mirth. And anie perſon troubled with cares and vexed in mind, dooth rather die than liue. We muſt therfore take from the ſixtie yeares aforeſaid the one halfe, and ſo there remaine but thirtie. Now, let vs ſee whether in the Popiſh diuines doo rather imitate anie ouns than the prophet Dauid, who ſetteth downe the age of man to conſiſt of 70. yeares.

A further examination of mans age by popiſh learning.

ſpace of ſix ſcore yeares a man may not paſſe awaie ten at the leaſt in ſickeneſſe, miſchances, or other infirmities? I may tell you there is no man that liueth ſix ſcore yeares in the world, but at ſeuerall times and during the ſaid age he hath aboue ten yeares infirmitie: and therefore we muſt take from the thirtie yeares which are the remainder of mans life yet ten yeares, & then there are but twentie left, which are now the twentie yeares of his life. We muſt take them at his infancie & in his oldeſt age: that is, ten yeares from his verie childhood, & the other ten from his extreame old age. But ſith aſwell in infancie as in extremitie of age there is no life, but rather a liuing death; I conclude, that man hath not one onelie houre of life in this world, alſo that whoſoeuer ſeeketh life in this world dooth much deceiue himſelfe. In heauen therefore it is that we muſt aſſure our ſelues to liue, and ſeeke for life; but not vpon earth where death dooth continuallie haunt vs. For we ought to die to the world, to the end to be borne in Ieſus Chriſt; according to the ſoueraigne ſentence and decree, O ye inhabitants of Rome we ſee your great biſhop and mine is dead: behold our crowne is fallen: our lodeſtar vaniſhed awaie, and our light extinguiſhed.

Happie newes to the true church, when the members of antichriſt decreaſe.

And for mine owne part, O miſerable man, who am depriued of him, of two things I wiſh for one, that is, either neuer to remember the good that we haue loſt; either elſe calling the ſame to mind, to find ſome one that were able to giue me comfort correſpondent to the greatneſſe of the heauineſſe wherinto I am fallen. And indeed my ſelfe doo now come into the pulpit vpon two ſeuerall occaſions meere contrarie ech to other, to wit, to reherſe the gretnes of the good that is taken from vs, & to comfort thoſe that ſuſteine the loſſe: naie rather, to doo two things which ſeeme to repugne ech other. For if it be true that nothing dooth more aggrauate the griefe of the loſſe, than the remembrance of the value of the thing loſt; then dooth nothing ſeeme more contrarie to the comfort of the liuing, than the praiſes of him that is dead, as in this caſe, wherein ſo far doo the merits of the deceaſed exceed, that the arrowes which pearſe his hart that is depriued of him are the more ſharpe and grieuous. Howbeit ſome man would anſwer, that contrariwiſe by the commendations of him that is departed, we doo declare that he is not dead, but liueth, and thus we may by litle and litle aſſwage the ſorrow of our loſſe and damage in whatſoeuer maner.

This is no adulation to a dead carrion, what did this fellow (thinke you) to the beaſt when he was aliue?

But as it were hard for a painter in the face of a ſorrowfull perſon to repreſent a ſmiling countenance, ſo dooth it ſeeme to me a difficult enterpriſe to vndertake to comfort a man by rehearſing the vertues of him that is taken awaie from vs: and that the more, if we ſhould enter into conſideration of him that is ſpoken of: of your ſelues that are the hearers: and of me that doo make the diſcourſe: for in each of theſe three, the ſame circumſtances that ſeeme to make mine enterpriſe eaſie, are thoſe that indeed doo yeeld it moſt difficult and troubleſome. As if a man ſhould in reſpect of him ſaie, that if the multitude of his great vertues doo ſeeme to abridge my labour, in ſeeking ſome argument whereupon to ground his praiſes: ſo contrariwiſe the aboundance of ſo great vertues doo hold me ſo ſhort, that I can not certeinelie reſolue vpon the choice of one onlie whereupon worthilie to commend him. For you, if a man ſhould ſaie, in that you all knew him and vſed him to your great profit, it ſhould ſeeme ſufficient for me onelie to decipher matters: ſo contrariwiſe your own perfect knowlege, togither with your dealings with him, would ſufficientlie open vnto you all my defaults in diſplaieng of him. And for mine owne part, if infinit courteſies and great fauors, wherewith he hath alwaies gratified me, doo ſeeme without ſeeking anie cuning to breed in me as much affection as is requiſit: ſo by contrarie reaſon, the great fauours and benefits, wherewith he hath alwaies gratified me, doo not leaue me anie cunning meanes to hinder me from hauing greater affection than is heere to be required of me. And this was the principall reaſon that mooued me ſomewhat to refuſe this ſo honorable a commiſſion, and vnto me in manie other reſpects moſt welcome, and to requeſt you to appoint and commit to ſome other the charge to diſcourſe hereupon, and to leaue vnto me teares and lamentations onelie.

A compariſon abuſed to the commendation of lewd pope Gregorie.

Childiſh reaſons and worſe diuinitie.

How did this fellow flatter Gregorie aliue, whom he ſo magnified being dead?

But now vnto thee, Oh my good maſter and father (for ſo will I alwaies call thee) doo I turne my ſelfe. Maie it be poſſible that this my oration, which latelie in thy life thou diddeſt harken vnto, ſhould now be imploied in praiſing of thee being dead, either that this my toong, which imploieng me to the ſeruice of this countrie, thou diddeſt too greatlie honor, ſhould now be occupied, alas, in lamentations for thy ſo hurtfull death to all chriſtendome? And what? Haſt thou then brought me ſo ioifullie to Rome, to the end here to celebrate thy funerals? Oh how that commiſſion to read Hieremie might well forſhew vnto me (but I perceiued it not) that my lecture thereof ſhould end in lamentations, and now behold that diuination accompliſhed! See Quomodo ſedet ſola ciuitas, how the citie ſitteth deſolat, notwithſtanding it be Plena populo, full of people: alſo how this ſpouſe, the church of Rome, who by great brightnes ſeemed to be Domina gentium, ladie of nations, now hauing loſt thee, Eſt facta quaſi vidua, is made as it were a widow: and as a widow all dipped in teares and lamentations, willeth me to celebrate the praiſes of hir deere ſpouſe, which ſhe all wholie togither can not celebrate: wherein although I can not (as in truth I am not able) atteine to the leaſt parcell of thy deſerts, which are not well to be expreſſed, yet at all aduentures I aſſure my ſelfe, O happie ſoule, that as in thy life time thou diddeſt pardon me a number of other imperfections, ſo now thou wilt likewiſe forgiue me this: I know that as thou wert accuſtomed, thou wilt make better accompt of the good will than of the gloſe and pompe of words, and as diſcreet ſhalt well ſee, that not onelie I, but alſo that no orator is able to atteine to the type of thy commendations.

A fit child and ſcholer for ſo bad a father and maiſter.

No ſpouſe but a ſtrumpet ſpotted with ſpirituall fornication.

Beaſtlie and blaſphemous diuinitie, fit for ſo lewd a biſhop; and [illegible] carued a [illegible]

Among the which my lords, and ye my hearers, I doo freelie confeſſe, that I haue greatlie doubted whether I were beſt to begin, as I take the maner to be, at the greatneſſe and eminencie of the familie from whenſe he is extract: and at the firſt I was purpoſed ſo to doo, and that the rather bicauſe it is not yet ſcarſe two months ſince that my ſelfe heard him in this temple, diſcourſe how our ſauiour Ieſus Chriſt was content to be borne of a mother though poore, yet noble, and deſcended of a noble race; alſo that nobilitie was verie effectuall euen to ſpirituall life, as it may be ſaid of him that is noble, that whether it be through conformitie or reſemblance of mind with his predeceſſors, either thorough the remembrance of ſuch things as they haue doone, either elſe through the effect of good bringing vp, or for what other reaſon he is better diſpoſed to doo well; that nobilitie ſerueth him as a ſpur to goodneſſe and a bridle to euill: alſo that as the pretious ſtone being ſet in gold maketh a greater ſhew than in iron, euen ſo the ſame vertuous deeds do giue a more effectuall example, when they proceed from noble perſonages than from men of baſe eſtat, with other things which he ſpake to the ſame purpoſe.

Noblie borne (no doubt) was this Gregorie, otherwiſe called Hugh the good fellow.

A ſimilitude of a pretious ſtone ſet in gold, and vertues in perſonages noblie deſcended.

Howbeit I will not ſpeake thereof, in that it might be accompted raſhneſſe in me, euen in Rome to ſeeke to make his holineſſe familie more famous than it is. It may be that ſome may ſaie that this familie doth want glorious titles, preeminence, riches, poſſeſſions, iuriſdictions, pretentions of rights, patronages, ancient petidegrees of their predeceſſors, commendations of learning, praiſe of armes, noble and famous aliances either in Italie or without, and to be briefe, all ſuch things collected into one, as being ſeuerallie taken are ſufficient to ſet a faire ſhew vpon a whole progenie. Notwithſtanding all theſe things which are terreſtriall & too common with others, and for the cauſes aforeſaid his holineſſe perceiuing (as he perceiued all things) that it is not inough for a horſſe to be of a good race, except himſelfe be alſo good, and that they are happie and wiſe, who as the ſea, doo not receiue the ſweetneſſe of this vaine glorie of the riuers of their predeceſſours, but returning their courſe and ſwelling ouer the mouths of the riuers themſelues, can yeeld to their forerunners the reward of firme and permanent commendation; ſo of that great nobilitie which he had brought foorth of his mothers wombe with him, he did therin onelie yeeld thankes to God, for that his actions with their circumſtances, thereby, and in reſpect thereof, were more notable and exemplarie.

Gregorie perceiued all things: but it would be knowen how.

Oh moſt happie perſon, who in the middeſt of ſo great eminencie of birth, could ſo well ſubdue pride, and in himſelfe giue example vnto other! Euen like vnto the pearle, which although it lieth in the bottome of the ſea, yet keeping it ſelfe cloſe in the ſhell, and neuer opening vntill it aſcendeth to receiue the dew of heauen, we find therein no ſmell, no ſauour, or drop that taſteth of hir ſea; but being pure, cleare and white, it ſeemeth to be formed euen in heauen. We muſt not therfore take commendations of this people at the tranſitorie things of the ſea of this world, and although he be therein extract of a moſt noble birth, yet will I not ſaie anie more thereof as of that which is none of his.

A long ſimilitude moſt fondlie and moſt ridiculouſlie applied.

But diſcourſing and ſpeaking of that which properlie apperteineth to himſelfe, I would aſke whethe[illegible]s mind commanded not his bodie? Alſo whether [illegible] were poſſible to find a bodie more withered, afflic[illegible], macerated, dried vp, or pale through the effect of auſtere and hard penance? Other mens bodies (O chriſtian hearers) are for the moſt part wiſhed to be of this or that forme, bicauſe they yeeld ſuch or ſuch inclination to the mind. But in this I will ſhew you a matter woorth the noting; that is, that here the caſe was altered, for it was the mind that miniſtred inclination to the bodie: ſo that being waxen altogither ſpirituall, had not extreame need forced him, he neuer deſired meat, drinke, or bodilie reſt: and he liued in ſuch ſort as it was a miracle (whereof, alas, we haue but too ſoone ſeene the iſſue) how he could liue ſo manie yeeres, but rather liuing was dead. And for my part I aſſure you, I neuer, euen in the hart of ſummer, kiſſing his holie hands (good God ſhall I neuer doo ſo more?) found them other than cold, wherein there was no heat, except the ſame proceeded of ſome exceſſe or immoderate labor, or of ſome motion of a ſudden feuer. O moſt deere bodie! O moſt holie members! But looke yet once againe vpon them, O ye Romane people, and ſaie: Are not theſe the verie hands which ſo often haue bin ioined togither, and lifted vp to praie and offer ſacrifice for vs? Be not theſe the feet that haue trauelled ſo far for our ſakes? Is not this the head that neuer imagined anie thing but for our benefit? Is not this the heart that burned in loue of vs? O deere members! O members ſo deere! What? Shall you then go vnder the earth? And what? Muſt you be buried? Alas my God! who is that thou haſt taken awaie from vs? And wherefore doo ye hide your ſelues? For my part, none but onlie death ſhall euer plucke out of my heart the liuelie image of that ſo well beloued countenance: eſpeciallie in this act, wherein with your eies toward heauen as it were ſmiling, and with an angelicall countenance I ſee you depart and remaine dead.

[illegible]ake this [illegible] that Gregorie was mortified [illegible]

Jeſu! what a wonder is this? and well worthie to be placed in Legenda aurea.

The head which ſought to ouerthrow the true church, to diſſuade ſubiects from their allegiance to their prince, and to mainteine his owne pompe and glorie.

But it is time for vs (O chriſtian hearers) to proceed to matters of greater importance, which are ſo manie & withall ſo intangled one within an other, that I could not find anie more fit meane to part and diuide them; neither doo I thinke that we can take anie better courſe, than the verie courſe of his holie life: and there to begin. When he was a little child he was verie deuout, and it is well knowne that God, euen in his firſt youth, wrought in him maruellous ſignes of ſingular goodneſſe. The like is read of ſaint Baſill, ſaint Gregorie, ſaint Dominike, ſaint Francis, and manie others, as was to be ſeene in this yoong child (ſaie they that doo remember it) namelie, that at his returne from the college, all the delite that that age vſed to take in anie other thing, he tooke onelie in framing of little altars, adorning of ſmall chapels, and counterfeiting of holie things. Matters, which although the wiſeſt maie thinke too baſe for this place, and for the occaſion now miniſtred, yet would I not onelie not diſdaine, but alſo take great and ſingular pleaſure in the ſame.

For all that is hitherto ſpoken is verie ridiculous, idle and meere lip labour.

Notes that he would in time prooue a ſtrong piller of idolatrie.

And although ſome doo ſaie, that among ſuch ſerious affaires ſuch ſmall trifles ſhould haue no place; yet doo I delite to ſhew how commendable, not onelie graue matters, but euen ſuch ſmall things were in him. Concerning the reſt, according to the proportion of his age, or rather beyond the reach of that age (as occaſions doo increaſe ſo muſt my ſtile ariſe) his holineſſe being paſt the inferiour ſchooles, and comming to ſtudie the law, it is not poſſible to make an end of writing with what modeſtie and grauitie he there paſſed the yeares of his ſtudie: he was apparelled in clerks attire, but, which was of greater importance, he obſerued clergie maners, much continencie, & (as is ſuppoſed) perpetuall virginitie, with modeſt behauiour, no vanitie, continuall ſtudie: theſe were his exerciſes. And to be briefe, although thorough our miſhaps, the vniuerſitie wherin he ſtudied were not vſuallie either the quieteſt or the holieſt in the world, yet might the writing of Nazianzen concerning the great Baſill and the towne of Athens be applied to him. Like as there is one riuer, which flowing thorough the ſea, taketh no bitterneſſe thereof; alſo a certeine beaſt that liueth in the fire and conſumeth not: euen ſo he with great quietneſſe paſſing theſe troubles, and with ſoueraigne vertues ſuch vices, did firſt and moſt worthilie atteine to the doctorall degree, & afterward was called to Rome, and made cardinall, onelie thorough deſert, for his learned ſtudies, and not by fauour, as the moſt part doo now vſuallie practiſe.

The continencie and virginitie of the popiſh clergie doth conſiſt in keeping of concubines.

Note how Gregorie is extolled by waie of compariſon.

A happie departure, a bleſſed iournie for all the holie church, but eſpeciallie for this great citie of Rome, which haue receiued ſo great benefits and ſo much comfort at his hands. Notwithſtanding, whatſoeuer affaires he had in hand, yet did he dailie applie his ſtudie at a certeine houre, & ſo continued his ſtudie euen to his death, with ſo deepe iudgement and good ſucceſſe, that although his intellectuall habitudes had not beene verie farre ſurmounted & darkened thorough the maruellous brightneſſe of his morall and theologicall vertues: yet in reſpect of his learning and ſtudie onelie, he deſerued great praiſe, and in truth he was neuer other than moſt learned and a great fauourer of learned men. Who did euer ſhew them more pleaſure, or receiue them more

A great ſtudent was Gregorie, but in no good facultie.

Better had that liberalitie béne exhibited to théeues than to ſacrilegious beaſts &c.

courteouſlie? Beſides the ſeminaries and colleges, as well at Pauie as here, the lectures, the ſtipends, with ſuch & ſo manie things done to the behoofe of learning, and beſides the books which he hath of himſelfe written: and now that the bridle of his modeſtie doth no longer deteine, I hope, as my ſelfe haue ſéene them, ſo comming to light, all the world ſhall behold them, and in them perceiue as in himſelfe whether were more his holie writings or good maners. This loue of learning and holineſſe of life he practiſed ſo diligentlie in himſelfe, that thorough Gods grace, and the inſpiration of the holie ghoſt, he was in reſpect of his vertues, knowledge, and holie life, elected pope, and his name from Hugh good Companion, was changed and called Gregorie the thirteenth. During his papaſie he liued ſo religiouſlie and deuoutlie, that the whole life of a man were little enough to rehearſe the ſame. But herein I repoſe my ſelfe vpon that zeale which I perceiue in euerie one to commend him, whereby I maie ſhortlie ſée ſo manie poeſies, verſes, and rimes, with ſuch hiſtories, ſo manie orations, and volumes to his honor, that all theſe things, as well ſuch as I can not touch, as the reſt which I mention and ſpeake of, ſhall brieflie be deciphered and liuelie ſet forth.

Gregorie a good companion to traitors, but an ill companion to the godlie.

It is vnpoſſible (if you will beléeue this flattering paraſite) to rehearſe Gregories works &c.

For to rehearſe all the holie works of our good ſhéepheard, or to indeuour to ſet forth that verie patterne of a biſhop which he hath expreſſed in himſelfe, to ſaie truth, I thinke vnpoſſible, and much leſſe to beléeue that the verie ſummarie of thoſe things that he hath doone maie be drawne into anie annals or chronicle. Neither can I conceiue anie means to atteine thereto, vnleſſe ſome one haue in forme of remembrances béene dailie collecting the courſe of his déeds and works. For my part in this ſhort diſcourſe that I haue to proſecute, as one not able to reſtreine the whole ſea, I will go ſée if I maie gather the water at the riuers and brooks from whenſe this ſea doth ariſe, that is, from his vertues, which in him haue wrought ſo manie holie works. Notwithſtanding I might at once in generall words ſaie, that all vertues beſéeming a biſhop, which ſaint Paule & others do ſpeake of, were to be found in him.

The woolfe is dead, and the ſhéepe want a good ſhéepheard.

Alas how this holie paſtor burning in loue, made himſelfe leane for you, O ye poore artificers, ladies, yoong infants, and poore beggers! Alas ye all haue loſt your father, the ſhéepheard is dead, & the ſhéepe remaine a preie to the wolues. How ſoeuer it is, hereof maie we plainelie ſée O Rome, that he bare thée ſingular good will: and in déed (for I will not conceale thy commendation) it is euident that thou diddeſt anſwer his good will with reciprocall amitie, witneſſe this thy aſſemblie: theſe ſobs & theſe teares do teſtifie thy acknowledging thereof, beſides all other things, alas, too bitter and too ſwéet togither; euen the night of his departure was to you and to me infortunate. O great, O great pitie, what could be ſéene more worthie compaſſion and teares, than the fearefull ſtirre of the people? It ſéemed, when the moſt horrible ſound of the bell called Aue Maria, that gaue notice of his death, to the end to praie to God for him, ſent furies to all both men and women.

How could the pope néed the praiers of men, ſith himſelfe can forgiue ſinnes?

One ran here, an other there, ſome two togither, others without order or reaſon: all wept, all cried, all howled out, ſaieng: Ah, good God whereto are we brought? What ſhall become of vs? If the infection doth afflict vs, who ſhall praie for vs? Ah that we had not deſerued it! Oh how God is wroth with vs! With manie other exclamations ſufficient to haue rent the marble ſtones, and clouen the wals in ſunder. He was a man of much praier and reading, as euer was anie, and in priuat behauior had not his like. Two things there were that made him wonderfull wiſe. The one, he would in all affaires heare counſell. The other, he had ſtill recourſe vnto praier. Truelie he was as wiſe as holie. I confeſſe that in reſpect of his example onelie, I learned to vnderſtand this place of ſaint Paule concerning his care of all the churches: Quis infirmatur & ego non infirmor? Quis ſcandalizatur & ego non vror? Who is weake and I am not ſicke? Or who is offended and I burne not? And that which followeth.

Two things made Gregorie wiſe if you will beléeue the reporter.

Two imaginations in Gregories head toward his death.

Some traitorous deuiſe for the perſecution of the goſpell.

To be briefe, toward the end of his daies, and being hore haired, he conceiued two excellent imaginations. The one, concerning that great and wonderfull college that is now at building in your Rome, for the teaching (a wonderfull matter) of all languages in the world. The other, the ſame which he propounded and began to put in execution touching the recouerie of the goods of the catholike apoſtolike Romiſh church. The ſame was it which he did ſo highlie commend to the clergie, yea to the chriſtian princes, and vnto his ſucceſſor, to the end that the Romane ſée might recouer the full brightneſſe of hir glorie, and to depriue the enimie of mankind of that innumerable gaine of ſoules, that through his ſubtiltie he doth dailie make. Theſe were his laſt words when he left vs with the water in our eies, and ſorrow in our harts, for the loſſe of a thing of ſo great value. Neuertheleſſe, ſith it is to no purpoſe to wéepe, it reſteth that we do two things. The one, that ſo much as in vs lieth, we indeuour to reteine thoſe notable inſtitutions, and walke in that path which he hath preſcribed for vs. The other, that we haue recourſe to God with praier, that he will ſend vs a ſucceſſor worthie him: and that as Simplician ſucceeded ſaint Ambroſe, ſo to this Ambroſe an other Simplician in vertue and holineſſe maie ſucceed.

God root out all of that ſucceſſion, & giue his truth frée paſſage againſt poperie.

This is that ſmall matter, Oh bleſſed ſoule, which my fooliſh and vnméete toong is able this day to vtter of thée in middeſt of theſe ſighs and lamentations. Now ſhall it ceaſe: howbeit, at time conuenient, both this daie and euer, my heart ſhall diſcourſe of thée. Oh wretch that I am! O ye Romane people, to whome happeneth ſtill the contrarie of that which happened to the Romane ſouldior, that was wounded and maimed vpon one of his leg [illegible] t a certeine victorie that he obteined. For he ſaid [illegible] at at euerie ſtep that he ſet, and vpon the leaſt pa [illegible] that he felt of his leg, he called to mind the moſt honorable blaſon of his glorie: but I contrariwiſe, in the leaſt commendations that I may obteine, ſhall thinke vpon my loſſes. For when ſoeuer I ſhall boaſt, that I haue béene ſeruant to ſuch a holineſſe, and ſo great a perſonage, I muſt neceſſarilie withall remember what a good I am depriued of. Let vs therefore praie to our good God, that it may pleaſe him of his grace with his holie ſpirit to inſpire the moſt reuerend cardinals, the electors of the holie apoſtolike and Romiſh ſée, to the end his holineſſe ſucceſſor, ſucceeding in the holie ſée; may likewiſe ſucceed in thoſe vertues and holineſſe, wherewith he was indued and repleniſhed.

Alacke good ſoule tha[t] haſt loſt thy ſolace and comfort.

¶ This is the paraſiticall and flattering* ſermon of a popeling, patched togither like a beggers mantle of ſundrie rotten rags diuerſlie colored: wherein there is as much learning as wit; and as much of both as of truth and goodneſſe in this praiſer and the praiſed: of whome (becauſe it is ſinne againſt the holie ghoſt to ſpeake otherwiſe than according to the motion of a good and ſound conſcience) an epitaph imprecatorie (as fit for him as a pudding for a friers mouth) is here placed as a concluſion of this his memoriall, and appliable vnto all and euerie one of that antichriſtian and diabolicall ſucceſſion;

* Faithfullie tranſlated out of the French copie printed at Paris for Peter Jabert dwelling in Harpe ſtreet, with yͤ kings priuilege 1585.

Albus an ater (lector) cognoſcere ſi vis
Papa, tibi dicam qua ratione licet;
Tu metamorphôſin lepidam ſpectabis: olorem

Fac papam, coruus protinus ater erit.
Vt quocunque meat ſordes teſtudo relinquit,
Sic immundiciem linquit vbique ſuam.
Monſtrum tale vorax abſorbeat ergò barathrum,
Atque Deo pœnas tempus in omne luat.

Sixtus quintus pope of Rome next after Gregorie the good felow & boun companion.

When this Gregorie was deceaſed, ſhortlie after (leaſt the ouerlong vacancie of the ſacred and apoſtolike ſée ſhould preiudice the Romiſh prelaſie and cleargie) the ſucceſſion came to Sixtus Quintus, who according to the diſpoſition of his predeceſſors) indeuoring to mainteine the title of his ſupremaſie, and to beare rule ouer mens conſciences, as though peremptorie authoritie had by priuilege paſſed vnto the biſhops of that ſée to controll and giue the checke to all chriſtendóme; one iot or minute whereof the beaſt now reſiding at Rome not meaning to relinguiſh, but rather to fortifie and aduance, vndertooke to intermedle with princes of renowme, as proffering to bring them within the compaſſe of his iuriſdiction: inſomuch that falling to the extreame point of his antichriſtian power, he let flie (but as papershot) his excommunications, thinking that if anie thing were able to daunt and appall the courages of mightie men, this were the waie. But herein Sixtus Quintus was fooliſied, for proofe whereof behold an anſwer to the excommunication latelie denounced and publiſhed by the ſaid Sixtus Quintus, pope of Rome ſo called, againſt two chriſtian princes vndernamed, and ſent to Rome as followeth.

Excommunication a perillous bolt to ſhoot at princes.

The anſwer of Henrie king of Nauarre, and Henrie prince of Conde, to the excommunication of Sixtus Quintus, now pope, &c.

The popes excommunications againſt forren princes are to be reckned but as papershot.

Henrie by the grace of God king of Nauarre, prince of Bearne, chiefe péere and prince of France, oppoſeth himſelfe againſt the excommunication of Sixtus Quintus, terming himſelfe pope of Rome, auouching the ſame to be falſe, and appealeth to the court of peeres of France, of whome he hath the reputation to be the firſt in degrée. And as concerning the crime of hereſie, whereof he is falſlie accuſed by the ſaid excommunication, he auoweth and affirmeth, that my lord the pope, ſauing his holineſſe and reuerence, hath therein moſt falſelie and wickedlie lied: and that the pope himſelfe is an heretike, which he offereth to prooue publikelie in a generall or common councell lawfullie aſſembled. Where if he ſhall refuſe to appeare and ſubmit himſelfe, as by his owne canons and decrées he is ſpeciallie bound, the ſaid king dooth and will hold and repute him a verie antichriſt, and in that qualitie of antichriſt denounceth perpetuall warre againſt him: proteſting in the meane time, the popes wicked ſentence to be vnlawfull and inſufficient, and to proſecute againſt him and his ſucceſſors (for reparation of honor) reuenge of the iniurie thereby offered to him and all the princes of his bloud, as the lewdneſſe of the act and the preſent neceſſitie doo require. For if in times paſt, the princes and kings his progenitors haue béene able to chaſtiſe the inſolencie and arrogancie of ſuch companions as the pope is, when they forgat their duties, and excéeded the limits of their vocation and place, confounding and intermixing their ſpirituall iuriſdiction with the temporall: the ſaid king of Nauarre being in ſtate nothing inferior to them, dooth hope, that God will giue him the grace to reuenge the wrong and iniurie hereby doone to his ſoucreigne, his familie and bloud, and to the ſupreame courts and ſeats of iuſtice and parlement in France, vpon the ſaid pope and his ſucceſſors: and to that end and purpoſe he imploreth the aid, ſuccour, and aſſiſtance of all true chriſtian kings, princes & common-weales, whome this caſe dooth concerne, together with the alies and confederats of the crowne of France, againſt the tyrannie and vſurpation of the ſaid pope, and of the aſſociated conſpirators againſt the ſtate of their ſoucreigne, enimies to God, France, and the common peace and quiet of chriſtendome. The like proteſtation is alſo made by Henrie of Burbon prince of Conde, vnto whome the excommunication likewiſe reacheth. ¶ Fixed and ſet vp vpon the Paſquile at Rome to the view of all men.

The king of Nauarre giueth the pope the lie.

The king of Nauarre denounceth perpetuall warre againſt the pope.

This their forgetfulneſſe is willfull, as agreeable to their ambitious humor.

The king of Nauarre imploreth the aid of all chriſtian kings, &c: againſt the tyrannie and vſurpation of the pope.

¶ Thus farre of two popes, who though they be but prophane prieſts, & méere forreners to England both by birth and belæfe; yet ſith they haue béene ouerbold to buſie themſelues with the affaires not onelie of other chriſtian princes, but alſo with the ſtate of our nation, wherinto they haue had too far an inſight, by the aid of certeine vnnaturall and degenerat people; manie of them being fugitiues, and carieng about them euen in their boſome a conſcience beſpotted with ſinnes of excéeding horror and heinouſneſſe: in conſideration hereof, as alſo of other practiſes tending to an vniuerſall deſolation of truth and louers of truth, as alſo to the diſſolution of ciuill policie and deſtruction of our moſt gratious ſouereigne ladie quéene Eliſabeth, the lords annointed and lieutenant, principall within hir owne dominions: what faithfull ſubiect can but note them; howbeit, none otherwiſe than the reports of them haue paſſed vnder manie eies and through manie hands, printed euen in forren ſpeach, before the ſame were publiſhed in Engliſh. At which popes, meaning now to make a ſtop, we will come againe to matters of our owne.

Abr.Fl.ex chirographo D.G. w.il.iis.

Sir walter Raleighs chargeable voiage to the foreſaid land latelie diſcouered, and by the quéenes maieſtie named Virginia.

¶ In this yeare 1585, euen in Aprill, at the pleaſant prime, ſir Walter Raleigh knight, being incouraged by the reports of his men of the goodneſſe of the ſoile and the fertilitie of the countrie, which they had diſcouered this yeare laſt paſt, and now by hir maieſtie called Virginia, with knightlie courage counteruaileable to his double deſire of honour, by vndertaking hard aduenturs, furniſhed to his great charges eight ſailes of all ſortes, and immediatlie ſet them to the ſea, ordeining ſir Richard Gréenfield his kinſman (a gentleman of verie good eſtimation both for his parentage and ſundrie good vertues, who for loue he bare vnto ſir Walter Raleigh, togither with a diſpoſition that he had to attempt honorable actions worthie of honour, was willing to hazard himſelfe in this voiage) his lieutenant, inioining him either to tarrie himſelfe, or to leaue ſome gentleman of good worth with a competent number of ſoldiers in the countrie of Virginia, to begin an Engliſh colonie there. Who with the ſhips aforeſaid, hauing in his companie ſir Iohn Arundell, Thomas Candiſh, Rafe Lane, Edward Gorges, Iohn Stuklie, Edward Stafford, Philip Amadis, Arthur Barlow, Thomas Heriot, and diuerſe other gentlemen with a competent number of ſouldiers, departed from London in Aprill aforeſaid. But after they had ſailed certeine numbers of leagues at the ſea, by force and violence of fowle weather they were ſeparated one from another; ſo that ſir Richard Gréenefield being ſingled from his fléet, all alone arriued in the Iland of Hiſpaniola in the weſt Indies, about the middeſt of Iune following, where he determined reſolutelie to remaine, vntill he had built a bote (for he had loſt his owne bote in the tempeſts aforeſaid.)

Sir Richard Gréenefield lieutenant to ſir walter Raleigh for this voiage.

Gentlemen that aſſociated ſir Richard Gréenefield.

Sir Richard Gréenefield ſingled from his companie by fowle weather arriueth in Hiſpaniola.

Whereupon immediatlie after his landing, finding a place to his liking, he eſconſed himſelfe in deſpite of the Spaniards, who by all poſſible means did there beſt indeuour by proffering of ſundrie ſkirmiſhes, The valiantneſſe of ſir Richard Gréenefield againſt the Spaniards.

A parlée tending to the concluding of an amitie betwéene the Engliſh and Spaniſh.

What kind of cattell for vittelling ſir Richard Gréenefield tranſported to Virginia.

Sir Richard Gréenefield méeteth with the reſt of his fléet and is in danger of ſhipwracke.

ſhes, to inforce him to retire to his ſhip: but he nothing appalled with their brags kept his ground. Twelue daies after his arriuall there, after Thomas Candiſh arriued at the ſame place, where ſir Richard Gréenefield was enſconſing of himſelfe, to the great reioiſing both of themſelues & their companies. The Spaniards finding it too hard for them (notwithſtanding their multitudes) to remoue theſe few reſolute Engliſhmen by violence, came to a parlée, and in the ſame concluded an amitie, that the one nation might in ſafetie traffike with the other. Now when ſir Richard Gréenefield had taried in that Iland almoſt a moneth, and had built his bote, reuittelled himſelfe, and laden his ſhips with horſſes, mares, kine, ſhéepe, ſwine, &c: to tranſport with him to Virginia (bicauſe theſe ſorts of cattell heretofore were not to be found in that countrie) he departed thenſe; and in his waie he made diſcouerie of manie Ilands and hauens vpon the continent adioining, and arriued ſafelie in the new diſcouered countrie (where he met with the reſt of his fléet that attended his comming thither) about the middeſt of Julie next inſuing, not without great danger of ſhipwracke. For at the verie entrance into the harborough, his ſhip ſtrake on the ground, and did beat ſo manie ſtrokes vpon the ſands, that if God had not miraculouſlie deliuered him, there had béene no waie to auoid preſent death. In this danger his ſhip was ſo bruſed, that the ſaltwater came ſo aboundantlie into hir, that the moſt part of his corne, ſalt, meale, rice, biſket, & other prouiſions that he ſhould haue left with them that remained behind him in the countrie was ſpoiled.

Sir Richard Gréenefield eſtabliſheth an Engliſh colonie in Virginia by commiſſion.

Sir Richard Gréenefield deſcrieth a Spaniſh ſhip, chaſeth and ſurpriſeth hir.

An other voiage reſolued vpon by ſir Walter Raleigh for the ſupplie of thoſe that were left in Virginia.

After he had remained there certeine daies, according to his commiſſion from ſir Walter Raleigh, he began to eſtabliſh a colonie, appointing maiſter Rafe Lane (a gentleman of good account) generall of thoſe Engliſh which were to remaine there, being in all to the number of an hundred and ſeauen perſons, amongſt whom diuerſe gentlemen remained; namelie, Philip Amadis, Edward Stafford, Peruin, Kendall, Prideaux, Acton, Heriot, and others. When he had taken ſufficient order for the eſtabliſhing of maſter Lane and his companie aforeſaid, leauing with them as much of all prouiſions as his plentie would giue him leaue, he weighed anchor for England. But in his returne, not hauing ſailed manie leagues from the coaſt of Virginia, he deſcried a tall ſhip of foure hundred tuns or thereabouts, making the ſame courſe that he did, vnto whom he gaue chaſe, and in few houres by goodneſſe of ſaile ouertooke, and by violence wan, richlie laden with ſugar, hides, ſpices, and ſome quantitie of gold, ſiluer, and pearle: ſhe was the viceadmerall of the fléet of Sancto Domingo that yere for Spaine. After this good fortune, hauing a merie gale, not manie daies after he arriued at Plimmouth in October next inſuing; where ſir Walter Raleigh méeting with him, did preſentlie reſolue vpon another voiage, to ſupplie Rafe Lane, and his companie that were left with him in Virginia, the next ſpring following: which accordinglie was performed with all expedition.]

Foure thouſand men trained vp with ſhot in the citie of London.

Skirmiſh before the quéens maieſtie at Gréenewich.

The Londoners commended.

In Aprill about the fourtéenth daie, by commandement of hir maieſties moſt honorable priuie councell, the citizens of London appointed out of the companies of the ſame citie to the number of foure thouſand men, with armour, enſignes, drums, fifes, and other furniture for the warres, the greater part thereof (or almoſt all of them) were ſhot, the other were pikes and halberds in faire corſlets: all thoſe to be trained vp vnder expert capteins, with ſergeants of the bands, wiflers, and other neceſſarie officers, muſtered and ſkirmiſhed dailie at the Miles end, and in ſaint Georges field, and on the eightéenth daie of Maie (hauing ouernight ſet forward out of ſaint Georges field) muſtered in the parke at Gréenwich, and ſkirmiſhed before the quéenes maieſtie, who gaue to them great thankes for their actiueneſſe and paines: ſith hir maieſtie might perceiue the appliableneſſe of thoſe hir people, euen in paſtime not void of perill, to delight hir eies and reioiſe hir hart; eſtéeming nothing too déere to part withall, ſo it might anie waies concerne dutie to hir highneſſe. In diſcharge whereof as ſhe hath no forwarder ſubiects in hir land, ſo to diſcouer, inquire, and perſecute the diſloiall none readier, euen to the hazzard of their liues, for the ſafetie of hir life, which is the life of the whole land, and the prop of true religion: in reſpect whereof we ſaie and praie with the well wiſhing ſubiect, that vpon ſéeing & hearing of hir highneſſe, fell into ſuch an admiration of hir excellencie, that he left theſe verſes among manie after his godlie death:

Inclyte da longum dici, Deus, Eliſabetha Eſt,
Eliſabetha tua Eſt, relligióque tua Eſt:
Da Deus haud vnquam dici, Fuit Eliſabetha, Eliſabetha Fuit, relligióque Fuit.

Fr. Thin.

A league of amitie betwéene England and Scotland eſtabliſhed: Edward Wotton eſquier ambaſſador.

The Wottons an ancient familie, and of ſpeciall name in diuerſe kings reignes.

Sir Robert Wotton of Bocton Malherbe in Kent, a man of ſingular note.

¶ On the nintéenth of Maie being Aſcenſion éeue, Edward Wotton eſquier, deſcended of a worthie parentage, was ambaſſador into Scotland, to eſtabliſh a league of amitie betwéene the two nations of England and Scotland: whome I will now leaue in that countrie executing his commiſſion, and turne my pen to ſome perſons of that ſurname, who for their ſingularitie of wit & lerning, for their honour and gouernement in and of the realme about the prince, and elſewhere at home and abroad, deſerue ſuch commendations, that they merit Nineo ſignari lapillo. In treating of whome I will neither make mention of the antiquitie of that worſhipfull familie from the firſt originall, nor yet treat of Richard Wotton, liuing in the time of Edward the firſt, the father of John Wotton coroner of Dunſtable an officer of great account in thoſe daies and father to an other John Wotton, &c: nor of Richard Wotton or Wocton, an officer of the exchecker in the time of Edward the ſecond, nor of ſir Nicholas Wotton knight, liuing about the daies of Richard the ſecond, nor of anie other Wottons [illegible] of this Edward Wotton is deſcended: but o[illegible] of ſuch Wottons his anceſtors, who of late time liued within the compaſſe of my memorie, and were the ſonnes of ſir Robert Wotton of Bocton Malherbe in Kent knight, deſeruing not to be forgotten, in that he was father to two ſuch worthie ſonnes, as I doo not remember that euer England nouriſhed at one time for like honour, diſpoſition of mind, fauour and ſeruice to their countrie.

Sir Edward Wotton and Nicholas Wotton doctor of both lawes, the rare ſonnes of a rare father.

Sir Edward Wotton one of king Henrie the eights priuie councell.

Sir Edward Wotton refuſeth to be lord chancellor of England.

The ſonnes of this ſir Robert Wotton, whereof we intend to intreat, were ſir Edward Wotton knight the eldeſt, and Nicholas Wotton doctor of both lawes the yonger ſonne. Whereof the firſt being a man of great eſtimation in the countrie for his orderlie and wiſe managing of the priuat affaires of his countrie of Kent, was for his fidelitie and good carriage in ſmall things made lord and ruler of great things. For king Henrie the eight, vnderſtanding the grauitie of the man, his rare wit, déepe iudgement, great experience, and other parts required in a ſound councellor, did admit this ſir Edward into his owne boſome, and made him of his priuie councell: whoſe modeſt mind being ſo farre eſtranged from deſire of honour, as that he would not accept it by great inforcement (a vertue verie rare, and ſuch as declareth a noble mind iudiciallie grounded vpon the truth of diuine philoſophie) refuſed the honorable place of the chancellorſhip of England, accounting that the vertue of the mind made a man honorable, and not the honorable place. For Chryſoſt. de reparatione lapſi.

ius ſaith ſaint Chryſoſtome; Honor verus virtus animi eſt, hic honor nec à Cæſaribus præſtatur, neque adulatione conquiritur, neque pecunia præparatur; nihil fucati in ſe habet, nihil ſimulati, nihil occulti huius honoris ſucceſſor eſt, nullus eſt accuſator: nullus ingratus.

Bernard in ſer. quadrageſ.

Wherefore not being ambitious of honour (after which the beſt do often hunt, although ſuch gréedie deſire of honour and ambition be, as ſaith Barnard, Futile malum, ſecretum virus, peſtis occulta, doli artifex, mater hypocriſis, liuoris parens, vitiorum origo, tinea ſanctitatis, excæcatrix cordium, ex remedijs morbos creans, ex medicina languorem generans) did further increaſe his honour and aduance him to greater credit; as appeareth by this, that king Henrie the eight, whom this man had long and faithfullie ſerued in his life time, made him one of his executors, and the diſpoſer of his teſtament at the time of his death; with whom alſo in the ſame authoritie he ioined his brother doctor Nicholas Wootton, a man of no leſſe merit than the other, and rightlie deſeruing to be here ioined in remembrance with his brother after their deaths, ſince almoſt equall honor, like loue, the ſame authoritie in the common-weale, one bloud, and one Chriſt did ioine them togither in perfect amitie during their liues: of which Nicholas Wootton I will not ſpeake anie more (except that as his brother refuſed the chancellorſhip, ſo he in the beginning of the reigne of this quéene refuſed the biſhoprike of Canturburie) but that which the worthie gentleman Thomas Wootton of Bocton Malherbe eſquire now liuing (ſonne to the ſaid ſir Edward, and nephew to the ſaid Nicholas, this Thomas being a great and faſt fauorer of his countrie, not vnthankefull vnto him therefore) hath ſet downe in a ſtatelie and rich toome of curious workemanſhip, formed after the order of a pyramis, and placed in the church of Canturburie, on which is ingraued in a faire ſtone of marble this epitaph following: wherin his birth, his parents, his honors at home, his ambaſſages abroad, and other things neceſſarie the knowledge are faithfullie ſet downe.

Nicholas Wotton doctor of both lawes refuſeth to be archbiſhop of Canturburie: a rare note in him (as alſo in his brother) of contentation with their eſtates.

Thomas Wotton of Bocton Malherbe (ſonne to the ſaid ſir Edward) a great regarder of his progenitors eſtimatiõ.

Epitaphium ſepulchri Nicholai Wootoni primi poſt monaſterior. diſſolutionem Cantuar. decani.

Nicholaus Woottonus Roberti Woottoni equitis aurati ex A[illegible] Belknappæ filius, vtriuſq; iuris doctor, eccleſiæ huius primus [illegible]témq; metropolitanæ eccleſiæ diui Petri Eboracenſis de[illegible] Henrico 8. Eduardo 6. Mariæ & Eliſabethæ Angliæ regibus à ſecretis concilijs; ad Carolum 5. Cæſarem bis, ad Philippum Hiſpaniarum regem ſemel, ad Franciſcum primũ Francorum regem ſemel, ad Henricum ſecundum eius filium ter, ad Mariã Hungariæ reginam Belgarum præſidem ſemel, ad Gulielmum Cleuenſem ducem bis, legatione functus. Renouatæ pacis inter Anglos, Francos, & Scotos, inter Guinas & Arderam anno. 1540. ſimiliter, & ad caſtrum Cameracenſe anno. 1559. Deniq; Edinburgi Scotiæ anno 1560. oratorum vnus. hîc tandem ferè ſeptuagenarius requieſcit. Hæc ille ante mortem & ante morbum quaſi fatalem diem præſentiens, & cygneam cantionem propheticè canens, ſua manu in muſeo ſcripta reliquit.

Annus ætatis cùm è vita exceſſiſſet.

Qui apud tales principes (diuina prouidentia gubernante) laudabiliter, & in tot ac tantis cauſis (quarum magnitudo grauiſſima, vtilitas publica fuit) feliciter bonam vitæ ſuæ partem conſumpſit; eum virum ſapientem & experientiſſimum ipſa inuidia iudicare debet. Quàm ſemper ab omni contentione honorum fuerit alienus, illud declarat, quòd ad hanc eccleſiaſticam dignitatem non ambitione vlla ſua inflammatus, nec amicorum opera vſus, aſpirauit: ſed eam vtramq; Henricus octauus (hominis merito & virtute prouocatus) vltro detulit. Cùmq; idem rex illuſtriſſimus morbum læthalem ingraueſcere perſentiret, & Eduardi principis ſanè excellentiſſimi, adhuc tandem pueri & reipublicæ adminiſtrandæ imparis, imbecillam ætatem ſenili prudentia ſecretioris concilij ſui, regendam exiſtimaret, ille inſtituit, hunc Nicholaum (abſentem tunc in Francia legatum) & vnum eſſe voluit. Eduardi regi iam medio regni curriculo propè confecto, vnus è primarijs ſecretarijs fuit, quem locum tenere potuiſſet, niſi & ſuis & aſſiduis amicorum precibus abdicandi veniam impetraſſet. Corpus illi erat gracile quidem & paruum ſed erectum, habitudo ſana, vultus liberalis, victus exquiſitus, quem ſemel tantùm in die capere conſueuerat: valitudo adeo firma vt rarò morbum aliquem ſentiret: animus verò totus libris ac literis dicatus: artium medicinæ, iuriſprudentiæ, & theologiæ ſtudio intentus: linguarum Romanæ, Italicæ, Gallicæ, & Germanicæ inferioris cognitione pulchrè exornatus. Ita vir iſte genere clarus, legationibus clarior, domi ac foris clariſſimus, honore florens, labore fractus, ætate confectus; poſtquam decanus huius eccleſiæ annis 25. dies 293. præfuiſſet, Londini Ianuarij 26. anno noſtræ ſalutis 1566. piè & ſuauiter in Domino obdormiuit. Thoma Woottono nepote hærede relicto, qui ei hoc monumentum non honoris ergò quo abundauit viuus & floreſcit mortuus, ſed amoris cauſa quem memoria colet vt debet ſempiterna, conſecrauit.

Homo ſumma laude dignus Woottonus vel ipſa inuidia iudice.

Dignitatis gradus quibus Woottonus iſte eſt inſignitus regnantibus diuerſis principibus.

Rerum quarundam in iſto Woottono memorabilium luculenta deſcriptio.

Videlicet eccleſiæ Chriſti Cantuarienſis.

Monumentum in demortui memoriam amoris ergò extructũ

In which epitaph it appeareth what he was, & how greatlie learned and reuerenced for the ſame. Wherfore néeding not to ſpeake anie more of him, ſith I ſhall not be able with due maieſtie of ſtile to expreſſe his worthineſſe; I will yet, leauing what other wiſe his merit might challenge to be ſpoken, note one ſtrange and rare thing, which to my remembrance neuer happened to anie one man before the ſame; being this, that he had not onelie béene councellor to foure kings and quéenes of England following in ſucceſſion of time, but alſo that he had béen thirtéene ſeuerall times ambaſſador and orator to diuerſe princes for the affaires of the publike wealth, and the princes honor. Thus leauing this worthie doctor with his nephue Thomas Wootton, father to Edward Wootton ſent ambaſſador to Scotland, which occaſioned me to treat thus much of the Woottons, I conclude, that it is a ſingular bleſſing of God, not commonlie giuen to euerie race, to be beautified with ſuch great and ſuccéeding honor in the deſcents of the familie. Whereof this Edward Wootton now liuing, hath in the life of his father giuen great proofe of continuance to deſcend to their poſteritie, in that he in theſe his yoong yeares, hath béene (after his trauell ouer the moſt part of Europe) twiſe imploied in ambaſſages for the ſeruice of his countrie; firſt to the king of Portingall, & now to the king of Scots: with whome I will at this time ſet end to this diſcourſe of the Woottons.]

This is touched in the former epitaph among other his preferments.

Commendation of Edward Wootton, in reſpect of his great traueling ouer the moſt part of Europe and his imploiments in ambaſſages &c.

On the one and twentith daie of Iune, Henrie Perſie earle of Northumberland, priſoner in the Tower of London vpon vehement ſuſpicion of high treaſon, was there found dead, and alſo of his owne diuelliſh intent, and of his malice before pretended to haue murthered himſelfe, as more manifeſtlie and at large may appeare, by an inquiſition made by a ſubſtantiall iurie, taken before the coroner as followeth verbatim with the record.

Earle of Northumberland found to haue murthered himſelfe in the tower of London.

¶ A copie of the ſaid inquiſition.

AN inquiſition taken at the citie of London, that is within the tower of London, in the pariſh of Alhallowes Barking, in the ward of the Tower of London, on Mondaie being the one and twentith daie of Iune, in the yeare of the reigne of our ſoueraigne ladie Eliſabeth by the grace of God quéene of England, France, and Ireland, defendor of the faith &c, the ſeuen and twentith: before William Squier gentleman coroner to our ſaid ſoueraigne ladie the quéene within the citie of London and the liberties of the ſame, vpon the view of the bodie of Henrie Perſie knight, late earle of Northumberland, late priſoner there within the Tower of London aforeſaid, for ſuſpicion of high treaſon by him ſuppoſed to be doone, there lieng dead, and ſlaine: by the othes of Nicholas Whéeler, Simon Horſepoole, Thomas Gardener, William Leaueſon, Owen Morgan, Henrie Lodge, William Abraham, William Horne, Thomas Ruſſell, Iohn Porter, Robert Dowe,

A queſt of inquirie vpon his violent & voluntarie death.

Dowe, Anthonie Hall, William Curtis, Thomas Wood, Matthew Dolman, Thomas Martin, Richard Sleford, John Trot, Philip Smith, Thomas Tailor, and Henrie Bowdler, of good and lawfull men of the ſame ward, and of thrée other wards to the ſame ward next adioining, as the maner and cuſtome is in the citie aforeſaid, to inquire how, in what maner, and when the ſaid Henrie Perſie late earle of Northumberland came to his death.

The verdict of the iurie deliuered vpon their oths.

Which iurie doo ſaie vpon their oths, that on the one & twentith daie of this inſtant moneth of Iune, in the yeare of the reigne of our ſouereigne ladie Eliſabeth by the grace of God quéene of England, France, and Ireland, defendor of the faith, &c: the ſeuen and twentith aforeſaid, and long before the foreſaid Henrie late earle of Northumberland priſoner in the Tower of London ſituat in the pariſh of Alhallows Barking aforeſaid, in the ward of the Tower of London aforeſaid, for ſuſpicion of high treaſon aforeſaid, by him againſt our ſouereigne ladie the quéene ſuppoſed to be committed; and the foreſaid earle ſo remaining priſoner, and being placed in a certeine chamber within the Tower of London aforeſaid, there priſoner remaining, imagining and intending himſelfe diueliſhlie and feloniouslie to kill and murther before the foreſaid one & twentith daie of Iune: that is to ſaie, the ſixtéenth daie of Iune in the ſeuen and twentith yeare aforeſaid, did prepare a certeine dag of iron and ſtéele of the value of ten ſhillings: and alſo certeine bullets of lead, and a certeine quantitie of gunpowder, conteined in a certeine ſmall box, and cauſed the foreſaid gun, the bullets of lead and the gunpowder to be brought into the foreſaid chamber vnto him the ſame earle of Northumberland, and to be deliuered to the ſame earle then and there by the hands of Iames a Price yeoman, to execute his diueliſh and felonious purpoſe and intention.

The meanes that the earle made and prepared to deſtroie himſelfe.

Which dag aforeſaid, the foreſaid earle cauſed ſecretlie to be hidden in a certeine mattris vnder the bolſter of his bed in the chamber aforeſaid, and then and there, the foreſaid one and twentith daie of Iune in the ſeuen and twentith yeare aforeſaid, betwéene the houres of twelue and one in the night of the foreſaid one and twentith daie of Iune, thinking and intending to proſecute and follow his diueliſh intention and purpoſe aforeſaid, did bolt the doore of the foreſaid chamber, and the inner part of his ſaid chamber towards himſelfe, leaſt anie man ſhould foreſée or withſtand his diueliſh, felonious, and malicious intent: and the ſaid doore of his foreſaid chamber, being ſo bolted; the ſame earle then and there into his bed himſelfe did laie; and vpon this afterward, that is to ſaie, the foreſaid one and twentith daie of Iune, in the ſeuen & twentith yeare aforeſaid, about the houres aforeſaid, within the Tower of London aforeſaid, ſituat and being in the pariſh of Alhallows Barking aforeſaid, in the ward of the Tower of London aforeſaid, not hauing the almightie God or his feare before his eies, but being moued and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the diuell, of his malice afore pretended; did take vp into his hands the foreſaid dag of iron and ſtéele, then and there made readie, charged with gunpowder, and thrée bullets of lead, and the foreſaid dag to the left part of his breaſt néere vnto the pappe of the ſame part of his breſt, then and there feloniouslie and diueliſhlie did put, and vpon the ſame part of his breſt the foreſaid dag did diſcharge.

This conſenteth with the diſcourſe following, wherein the ſame matter is more largelie handled.

The order of the action that was the earls deſtruction.

By reaſon of the violence of which gunpowder, and of the foreſaid thrée bullets of lead, the foreſaid earle into his bodie and heart, and through his chinebone, euen into his right ſhoulder, himſelfe then and there with the foreſaid bullets of lead feloniouslie and voluntarilie did ſtrike; giuing vnto himſelfe then and there one mortall wound, of the depth of twelue inches, and of the bredth of two inches: of which mortall wound aforeſaid, the foreſaid earle within the Tower of London aforeſaid, the daie, yeare, pariſh, and ward aforeſaid, inſtantlie died. And ſo the iurie dooth ſaie vpon their oths aforeſaid, that the foreſaid earle, the daie, yeare, and place aboue written, of his diueliſh intent aforeſaid, and of his malice before pretended, feloniouslie and voluntarilie himſelfe did kill and murther in manner and forme aforeſaid, againſt the peace of our ſouereigne ladie the quéene, hir crowne and dignitie. But what goods and cattels the foreſaid earle in the time of the felonie and murther to himſelfe aforeſaid committed, had, or as yet hath, the iurie knew not, &c: in witneſſe whereof, &c.

The bredth and depth of his wound.

¶ This was the verdict of the iurors, wherby the manner how, and the matter whereby the earle diſpatched himſelfe is trulie declared: which being taken for truth (as deſeruing no leſſe, the parties wellworthie of credit) it remained to prouide for the beſtowing of his wretched carcaſe, which on the thrée and twentith daie of Iune was buried in ſaint Peters church within the ſaid Tower of London. This was the end of that graceleſſe earle, the manner of whoſe murther, and part of his treaſons are here dilated, as the ſame was publikelie deliuered in the Starchamber, and after publiſhed in a booke intituled;

Henrie earle of Northumberland buried in the Tower.

A true and ſummarie report of the declaration of ſome part of the earle of Northumberlands treaſons, deliuered publikelie in the court at the Starchamber by the lord Chancellor and others of hir maieſties moſt honorable priuie councell, & councell learned, by hir maieſties ſpeciall commandement, togither with the examinations & depoſitions of ſundrie perſons touching the maner of his moſt wicked and violent murther committed vpon himſelfe with his owne hand, in the Tower of London, the 20 daie of Iune, 1585.

Malice, among other eſſentiall properties perteining to hir ouglie nature, hath this one not inferior to the reſt and the l[illegible]ſt, incredulitie, wherewith ſhe commonlie poſſeſſeth the minds and affections of all th[illegible]at are infected with hir, ſo blinding the eies & iudgement of the beſt and cleareſt ſighted, that they cannot ſée or perceiue the bright beames of the truth, although the ſame be deliuered with neuer ſo great puritie, proofe, circumſtance and probabilitie. It is ſaid that no truth paſſeth abroad vnaccompanied with hir contrarie; and as they go, truth is euer conſtreined to yéeld the precedence and preheminence to hir yokefellow falſhood, whoſe lodging is alwaies firſt made and prepared without a harbenger in the corrupt nature of mankind, by whome ſhe is firſt receiued, interteined and harbored at all times: whereof in our dailie experience there happen manie and dangerous demonſtrations, eſpeciallie in matters of the higheſt moment, tending to excuſe or accuſe the actions of the greateſt perſonages.

Incredulitie an eſſentiall propertie of malice.

Truth and falſhood commonlie concur & are oppoſite.

There was of late deliuered in publike by perſons of honour, credit, and reputation, a large declaration of certeine treaſons practiſed by the late earle of Northumberland, of the maner of his vntimelie death, being with his owne hand murthered in the Tower, and of the cauſes that wrought him thereunto. The particularities whereof are ſuch and ſo manie, as for the helpe of my memorie (comming then to the Starchamber by occaſion, and not looking for anie ſuch preſence of the nobilitie and priuie councell as I found there at that time, and not looking for anie ſuch cauſe of that nature to haue béene handled there that daie) I tooke notes of the ſeuerall matters

An ingredience into the hiſtorie of Northumberland.

ters declared by the lord chancellor, maiſter attourneie, and ſolicitor generall, the lord chiefe baron, and maiſter vicechamberlaine: for (as I remember) they ſpake in order as they are here marſhalled, and therefore I place them in this ſort, and not according to their precedence in dignitie.

The maner of the earles making awaie of himſelfe not generallie beleued.

Vpon the hearing of the treaſons with their proofs and circumſtances, and the deſperat maner of the earles deſtruction deliuered in that place, and by perſons of that qualitie, I ſuppoſed no man to haue beene ſo void of iudgement or the vſe of common reaſon, that would haue doubted of anie one point or particle thereof, vntill it was my chance (falling in companie with diuerſe perſons at ſundrie times, as well about the citie of London as abroad) to heare manie men report variablie and corruptlie of the maner and matter of this publike declaration, poſſeſſing the minds and opinions of the people with manifeſt vntruths: as, that the earle had beene vniuſtlie deteined in priſon without proofe or iuſt cauſe of ſuſpicion of treaſon: and that he had beene murthered by deuiſe and practiſe of ſome great enimies, and not deſtroied by himſelfe. Theſe ſlanderous reports haue miniſtred vnto me this occaſion to ſet forth vnto thy view and conſideration (gentle reader) this ſhort collection of the ſaid treaſons and murther, as neere vnto the truth as my notes taken may lead and permit me, with the view of ſome of the examinations them ſelues concerning this cauſe for my better ſatiſfaction ſince obteined. Which I haue vndertaken for two reſpects: the one, to conuince the falſe and malicious impreſſions and conſtructions receiued and made of theſe actions, by ſuch as are in heart enimies to the happie eſtate of hir maieſties preſent gouernement: the other, becauſe it may be thought neceſſarie for the preuenting of a further contagion like to grow (by this creeping infection) in the minds of ſuch as are apt (though otherwiſe indifferent) in theſe and the like rumors, to receiue the bad as the good, and they the moſt in number. Wherein if I haue ſeemed more bold than wiſe, or intermedled my ſelfe in matters aboue my reach, and not apperteining vnto me, I craue pardon where it is to be asked, and commit my ſelfe to thy friendlie interpretation to be made of my ſimple trauell and dutifull meaning herein.

The cauſe whie the collection of Northumberlands treaſons and ſelfe-murther was publiſhed.

Vpon the three and twentith daie of Iune laſt, aſſembled in the court of Starchamber, ſir Thomas Bromleie knight lord chancellor of England, William lord Burleigh lord treaſuror of England, George earle of Shrewſburie lord marſhall of England, Henrie earle of Derbie, Robert earle of Leiceſter, Charles lord Haward of Effingham lord chamberlaine, Henrie lord Hunſdon lord gouernor of Berwike, ſir Francis Knollis knight treaſuror, ſir Iames Croft knight comptrollor of hir maieſties houſhold, ſir Chriſtopher Hatton knight vicechamberlaine to the queenes maieſtie, the lord chiefe iuſtice of hir maieſties bench, the maiſter of the rolles, and the lord chiefe baron of the excheker, and others. The audience verie great of knights, eſquiers, and men of other qualitie, the lord chancellor began briefelie and ſummarilie to declare, that whereas Henrie late earle of Northumberland, for diuerſe notable treaſons and practiſes by him taken in hand, to the danger not onelie of hir maieſties roiall perſon, but to the perill of the whole realme, had beene long deteined in priſon, and looking into the guilt of his owne conſcience, and perceiuing by ſuch meanes of intelligence, as he by corrupting of his keepers and other like deuiſes had obteined, that his treaſons were by ſundrie examinations and confeſſions diſcouered, grew thereby into ſuch a deſperat eſtate, as that therevpon he had moſt wickedlie deſtroied & murthered himſelfe. Which being made knowen to the lords of hir maieſties priuie councell, order was therevpon taken, and direction giuen to the lord chiefe iuſtice of England, the maiſter of the rolles, and the lord chiefe baron of the excheker, to examine the maner and circumſtances of his death, which they with all good indeuor and diligence had accordinglie performed. And leaſt through the ſiniſter meanes of ſuch perſons as be euill affected to the preſent eſtate of hir maieſties gouernement, ſome bad and vntrue conceipts might be had as well of the cauſe of the earles deteinement, as of the maner of his death: it was therefore thought neceſſarie to haue the truth thereof made knowen in that preſence: and then he required hir maieſties learned councell there preſent to deliuer at large the particularities both of the treaſons, and in what ſort the earle had murthered himſelfe. Then began Iohn Popham eſquier, hir maieſties attourneie generall, as followeth.

Perſons of honour and worſhip aſſembled in the Starchamber, in whoſe audience Northumberlands caſe was canuaſſed.

Examinants appointed for and about the manner of Northumberlands ſelfe murther.

The earle of Northumberland about the time of the laſt rebellion in the north, in the eleuenth yeare of hir maieſties reigne (then called by the title of Henrie Perſie knight) had vndertaken the conueieng awaie of the Scotiſh queene: for the which (as appeareth by a record of the fourteenth yeare of hir maieſties reigne) in the court of hir maieſties bench he was indicted, he confeſſed the offenſe, and put himſelfe to hir maieſties mercies. At which time, vpon his ſaid confeſſion, ſubmiſſion, and faithfull promiſe of his dutie and allegiance to hir highneſſe from thenſeforth, the queenes maieſtie of hir mercifull nature was pleaſed, not to looke into his offenſe with the extremitie of hir lawes; but dealt therein as by waie of contempt onelie, as may appeare by the record: the effect whereof was then ſhewed in the court, vnder the hand of one of the clerkes of hir maieſties ſaid bench, In hæc verba.

Maiſter atturnie, namelie Iohn Popham diſcouereth the earles treaſonable practiſes.

An extract of the ſaid record conteining the ſaid earles indictment.

Memorandum, that Henrie Perſie late of Tinmouth in the countie of Northumberland knight, was indicted in the terme of Eaſter, in the fourteenth yeere of hir maieſties reigne, for that hee with diuers others did conſpire for the deliuering of the queene of Scots out of the cuſtodie of the erle of Shrewſburie. Vpon which indictment the ſame Henrie Perſie did confeſſe the offenſe, and did put himſelfe to the queenes mercie: and therevpon iudgement was after giuen by the court, that the ſaid Henrie ſhould paie to the queene for a fine for his ſaid offenſe, fiue thouſand marks, as appeareth by the record thereof in court.

Middleſex.

The erle confeſſeth his offenſe, and is put to 5000 marks fine.

Per Micha.14. & 15. Eliſabethæ reginæ, rotulo quinto inter placiſta reginæ. Concordat cum recordo.

Per Io. Iue.

By this record it maie appeare that the earle had his hand in that rebellion. But for a further proofe thereof, it is moſt manifeſtlie diſcouered in a certeine tract written by the biſhop of Roſſe (wherein he ſheweth how faithfullie he behaued himſelfe in the managing of thoſe treaſons, at and about the time of that rebellion) that the ſaid earle was in effect as farre plunged into the ſame, as the late earle his brother, howſoeuer he wound himſelfe out of the danger thereof at that time. Notwithſtanding theſe traitorous practiſes, the queenes maieſtie was contented to remit all within a ſhort time, and then accepted

The earle a dealer in rebellion as his brother (therfore executed) was.

cepted moſt gratiouſlie of him both in honor and fauor, though vnworthilie beſtowed vpon him, for that he vtterlie forgetting thoſe graces and fauors receiued at hir maieſties mercifull hands, with a graceleſſe reſolution was contented to enter into a new plot now latelie contriued, not onelie for the deliuering of the Scotiſh quéene, but for the inuading of the whole realme, the ouerthrow of the gouernment, aſwell concerning the ſtate of religion, as otherwiſe, the danger of hir maieſties ſacred perſon, and aduancing of the ſaid Scotiſh quéene to the regall crowne and ſcepter of this realme, wherevnto hir maieſtie is lineallie and lawfullie borne and deſcended, and wherein God of his mercie continue hir long in happie ſtate of gouernement, to the increaſe of hir owne glorie, and the comfort of hir louing and obedient ſubiects.

A ſumme of the traitorous purpoſes whereinto the earle was entered with a graceleſſe reſolution.

Then did maiſter Atturneie enter into the particularities of the treaſons, leauing manie parts thereof vntouched, becauſe the caſe ſtood ſo as it was not then conuenient to reueale them (as he ſaid) in reſpect that they touched ſome other perſons vndealt withall at that time, ſhewing that Throckemortons treaſons were not old, but freſh in euerie mans memorie, and how far forth they reached vnto the earle, he declared. And for that the treaſons of Throckemorton tended eſpeciallie to the inuading of the realme with forren forces, the purpoſe of that inuaſion long before intended, is prooued by ſundrie examinations and confeſſions taken héere within the realme, aſwell of hir maieſtes owne ſubiects as others, by letters intercepted, written from and to the conſpirators abroad and at home, and by other good aduertiſements and intelligences had from forren parts diſcouering the ſame. He declared that in a letter written from doctor Sanders to doctor Allen out of Spaine, in the yeare 1577, it is ſet downe among other things, that the ſtate of Chriſtendome ſtood vpon the ſtout aſſailing of England.

The treaſons of Throckmorton communicable with the earle.

That in a letter ſent to the ſaid Allen from Rome, touching audience giuen by the pope to the ambaſſadors of certeine forren princes, betwéene the pope & whom a league was agréed on againſt the quéenes maieſtie, there were incloſed certeine articles conteining in effect, that the realme ſhould be inuaded with twentie thouſand men at the charge of the ſaid pope and princes, that hir maieſtie ſhould be depoſed, and ſome Engliſh catholike elected king. That it was confeſſed that the comming ouer of ſo manie prieſts into the realme, was to win great numbers to the catholike partie, to ioine (if opportunitie ſerued) either with forren inuaſion, or with tumult at home. That at Narbonne in Prouince, there was met an Engliſhman, being the head preacher there, who gaue intelligence to one of hir maieſties ſubiects, that the realme ſhould ſhortlie be inuaded by a forren king, and the popiſh religion reſtored: and ſaid further, that prieſts came into England and diſperſed themſelues in countries, to make their partie ſtrong. A meſſage was ſent in Nouember 1581, to doctor Allen from a ſubiect of this realme, by a ſeminarie prieſt then returning beyond the ſeas: that whereas he had receiued word from Allen at Alhallontide before, that men and all things were in a readineſſe, if the place of landing might be knowne: that Allen ſhould forthwith ſend word whether things were in ſuch readineſſe or not: and if they were, he would then ſend him ſuch perfect inſtructions as he could. One Paine executed for treaſon, confeſſed that this realme could not continue in the ſtate wherein it was, for that the pope had a ſpeciall care thereof, and would in ſhort time either by forren princes, or by ſome other meanes worke a change of things here.

An inuaſion of this land by twentie thouſand men concluded vpon.

Paine with all of his accurſſed ſtampe ſhall (I hope in God) be found falſe prophets.

From hense, maiſter Atturneie fell into the treaſons confeſſed by Francis Throckemorton, ſhewing that the ſtate of this realme had béene often preſented to the conſideration of a forren prince, who after long hearkening to the motion, had reſolued to yéeld what furtherance he might, and to giue all aids neceſſarie for the reforming of religion, ſo they might be backed by ſuch as were well affected within this countrie. That the duke of Guiſe had ſolicited for two yeares together the pope and other princes, to ſupplie him with forces: but being croſſed by the death of a great perſonage, it was now growne to this paſſe, if there could be a partie found in England to ioine in that action, and conuenient places and meanes for landing, and other things neceſſarie, there ſhould be a ſupplie for Guiſe of forren ſtrength. Francis Throckemorton was recommended from beyond the ſea to Don Barnardino de Mendoza, ambaſſador reſident for the Spaniſh king here in England, who acquainted Throckemorton what plot was laid for the enterpriſe of the duke of Guiſe, and that he was willed to conferre with Throckemorton in the matter, who therevpon acquainted the ſaid ambaſſador with the plot of the hauens, and with the noble men and gentlemen that he had ſet downe as fit to be dealt withall in that cauſe. Throckemorton ſaid, that the bottome of this enterpriſe (which was not to be knowne to manie) was, that if a toleration of religion might not be obteined without alteration of the gouernement, that then the gouernment ſhould be altered, & the quéene remoued. That the Scotiſh quéene was made acquainted from the duke of Guiſe with the intention to relieue hir by theſe forces.

Francis Throckmorton recommended to Don Barnardino de Mendoza & made acquainted with that which coſt him his life.

It was in debate betwéene Throckemorton and the Spaniſh ambaſſador, how the Scotiſh quéene might be deliuered, as by an enterpriſe to be made with a certeine number of horſſes: and it was told Francis Throckemorton by his brother Thomas Throckemorton, that it was a principall matter in debate beyond the ſeas, how ſhe might be deliuered with ſafetie: the lacke of reſolution wherin, was the principall ſtaie of the execution of the attempt of inuaſion. Mendoza told Francis Throckemorton about Bartholomewtide 1583, that one Pope was come into England to ſound the earle of Northumberland, and other principall men in Suſſex: and about the end of September following, the ſame Mendoza told him, that Pope was Charles Paget, and that he came not onelie to ſound the men, but to view the places, the hauens, the prouiſions and meanes, and néerneſſe and commoditie of mens abidings that ſhould ioine with the forren forces. It was deuiſed, that ſuch noble men and others, as would be contented to aſſiſt the forren forces (being iuſtices of peace & of credit in their countries) might by colour of their authoritie leuie men as for hir maieſties defenſe, and yet emploie them to aſſiſt the forren forces. The lord Paget was made acquainted with this deuiſe, and anſwered, that it was a good courſe, and that he had thought vpon it before. Mendoza told Throckemorton, that Charles Paget had béene in Suſſex, and had ſpoken with thoſe that were there, and that he came to moue the earle of Northumberland and others. The night before Throckemorton was apprehended, he came to the lord Paget, and deſired him that he would not acquaint the earle of Northumberland and certeine others (whome he named) with ſuch matters as had paſſed betwéene them two, touching the practiſe of this inuaſion: and the lord Paget willed him to deale as wiſelie for his part as he would doo for himſelfe, and all ſhould be well: but (quoth the lord Paget) the earle of Northumberland knoweth

Francis Throckmortons owne confeſſions doo confirme the report of theſe practiſes, ſée pa. 1374, 1375.

Francis Throckmorton deſireth the lord Paget not to make the earle priuie to the conſultations of them two.

knoweth you well enough. It was once agreed among the confederats, that the duke of Guiſe ſhould land in Suſſex, being ouer againſt Deepe and Normandie: which after was miſliked, becauſe thoſe parts laie too neere to hir maieſties greateſt force and ſtore, and that the people thereabout for the moſt part were proteſtants.

Maiſter attourneie ſhewed further, that in ſummer laſt, there was taken vpon the ſeas, ſailing towards Scotland, a Scotiſh Ieſuit, about whome there was found a diſcourſe written in Italian of a like enterpriſe to be attempted againſt England, which ſhould haue beene executed in September or October then laſt paſt: wherein aſſurance is made that the earles of Northumberland and Weſtmerland, Dacres that is dead, whom they termed lord Dacres, and of all the catholike lords and gentlemen in the north parts (where the inuaſion ſhould haue beene attempted) ſetting it downe, that it is not ſaid by coniecture that theſe men are aſſured, but that it is certeinlie knowne that they will ioine with the forren forces. In the ſaid diſcourſe it is alſo affirmed that the prieſts diſperſed in the realme, can diſpoſe of the other catholikes of the realme, as they ſhall be ordered: and that the popes excommunication ſhould be renewed and pronounced againſt hir maieſtie, and all thoſe that ſhall take hir part: and that all ſuch ſhould be holden traitors that did not ioine with that armie by a daie.

In the North parts ſhould the purpoſed inuaſion of this land haue beene made.

When maiſter attourneie had thus prooued the purpoſe of inuaſion, he proceeded to the proofe of Charles Pagets comming ouer about the practiſe and proſecution of that enterpriſe. And firſt, that Paget came to Petworth in September 1583, was ſecretlie receiued, and brought in the night late to the earle of Northumberland into his gallerie at Petworth, by one of the earles ſeruants: where the earle and he had ſecret conference together by the ſpace of a large houre: from thenſe Paget was likewiſe conueied backe into the towne by the ſame ſeruant, and there lodged all that night, and the next night following was conueied ſecretlie to a lodge in the earles parke at Petworth, called Conigar lodge, where he was kept with like ſecrecie by the ſpace of eight daies or thereabouts: and the ſeruant by whome Paget was thus conueied, was by the ſaid earle inioined and commanded in no wiſe to diſcouer Pagets being there. The earle of Northumberland, vpon the arriuall of Charles Paget, ſent for the lord Paget with the priuitie of this ſeruant, who was made beleeue that Charles came ouer to ſet things in order, and to paſſe certeine deeds and conueiances betweene the lord Paget and him. The lord Paget came to Petworth, ſtaied there two nights, lodged in the earles houſe, conferred with Charles Paget, and with the earle togither ſundrie times.

Charles Pagets comming ouer about the proſecution & practiſe of the foreſaid enterpriſe prooued.

The earle after his apprehenſion, being at ſeuerall times examined what cauſes or affaires had paſſed betweene the lord Paget and Charles his brother, when they were together at Petworth, anſwered one while, that they paſſed certeine deeds and conueiances; and another while, that there was onelie a will or teſtament ſigned and ſealed betweene them: he confeſſed that he ſet his hand vnto the will, but knew not what the ſame conteined. All which appeared to be falſe, for that it hath fallen out by occaſion of ſeizure of the lands and goods of the lord Paget (after his departure out of the realme) that he had diſpoſed of his lands and goods by an other courſe of aſſurance executed at London: and therefore their pretenſe of the paſſing of deeds & will at Petworth, was but a deuiſe, to ſhadow their traitorous conſpiracies.

The earle examined and found therein to faulter and double.

And for better proofe thereof, it was alleaged by maſter attorneie, that Charles Paget returning from Petworth to the houſe of one William Dauies, neere to the place where Paget had landed in Suſſex, and tooke ſhipping againe at his departure beyond the ſeas, ſent to William Shelleie eſquire, reſiding then at his houſe at Michelgroue, diſtant about a mile from the houſe of William Dauies, to come vnto him (who within few daies before had beene at the lodge at Petworth with the ſaid Paget) and now at their meeting in a coppice neere to Dauies houſe, Paget entred into ſpeech and diſcourſe with him of diuers matters, and at the laſt among other things, he began to be inquiſitiue of the ſtrength and fortification of Porteſmouth, and what forces and ſtrength hir maieſtie had in the other parts weſtward.

William Shelleie an actor in this purpoſed tragedie, & what conſultations paſſed betweene him and Charles Paget.

Paget brake out and declared vnto him that forraine princes would ſeeke reuenge againſt hir maieſtie of the wrongs by hir doone vnto them, & would take ſuch time and opportunitie as might beſt ſerue them for that purpoſe, and ſaid that thoſe princes diſdeined to ſee the Scotiſh queene ſo kept & vſed here as ſhe was, and would vſe all their forces for hir deliuerie: that the duke of Guiſe would be a dealer therin, and that the earle of Northumberland would be an aſſiſtant vnto them, willing Shelleie whatſoeuer ſhould happen, to follow the earle of Northumberland, affirming that there was not a noble man in England of conduct and gouernment like to the ſaid earle; ſaieng further, that the earle of Northumberland was affected to the Scotiſh queene, & would do what he could for hir aduancement: that the duke of Guiſe had forces in a readineſſe to be emploied for the altering of the ſtate of religion here in England, and to ſet the forenamed Scotiſh queene at libertie.

God preuented this plot by the fatall end of the earle as he will in time diſappoint all the complices.

Shelleie gathered by theſe and other ſpeeches which paſſed betweene him & Paget, that Paget had dealt with the earle as a chiefe partie, and a man forward in theſe actions: and Paget confeſſed that he came ouer to breake and deale in theſe matters. Paget deliuered further, that the catholikes would all ioine for ſo good a purpoſe, for that it would be a meanes to reforme religion. He ſaid, the ſtir ſhould be in the North parts, becauſe Suſſex was not conuenient, as well for that there were no ſafe landing places, as for that it was ſo neere London, where the queenes maieſtie would be readie to reſiſt them, and that whenſoeuer anie ſtir ſhould be, the earle of Northumberland would not ſtaie in Suſſex, but would into the North parts.

The north parts appointed to be the receptacle of all the intended broile.

When maſter attorneie generall had in this ſort laid downe the particularities of the treaſons and traitorous practiſes of the confederates for this purpoſed inuaſion; then Thomas Edgerton eſquire, hir maieſties ſollicitor, to prooue the earle guiltie of theſe treaſons by the circumſtances of his own proceedings, ſhewed that the erle knowing how far himſelfe was touched with the ſaid treſons, & in what degree of danger he ſtood if they ſhould haue bin reuealed, found his onelie hope of ſafetie to conſiſt in the cunning concealing of them, & therfore he indeuored to couer them by all the poſſible meanes he could deuiſe. And firſt by conueieng awaie of the lord Paget, a man not onelie priuie to the practiſes and treaſons handled by Francis Throckmorton, but alſo to the treaſons of his brother Charles, wherein the earle and the lord Paget were doubtleſſe both confederats with Charles, made acquainted by him with the cauſes of his comming ouer, as principall men with whome he dealt in thoſe matters at Petworth.

Maiſter ſollicitor, namelie Thomas Edgerton, prooueth the earle giltie, &c.

The lord Paget conueied ouer ſea by the earles meanes & vpon what occaſion.

The occaſion that prouoked the earle to conueie awaie the lord Paget, grew vpon the apprehenſion of Throckmorton, who being committed to the Tower, and charged with high matters, was in caſe to be delt withall by waie of extremitie to be made to confeſſe the treaſons charged vpon him; in reuealing whereof, Charles Pagets comming to Petworth, and the cauſe of his repaire thither could not be conceled. No man at this time within the realme could accuſe the earle of theſe confederacies, but the lord Paget onlie, who ſtood in danger to be diſcouered by Francis Throckmorton: the ſafetie therefore of the earle reſted altogither vpon the lord Pagets departing out of the realme. Which was procured by the earle with ſo great expedition, as that Throckmorton being cōmitted to the Tower about the ſeuenth daie of Nouember 1583, the earle made meanes the twelfe daie to haue the lord Paget prouided of ſhipping in all haſt by William Shelleie, wherin the earle vſed ſuch importunat intreatie, & ſent ſo often to haſten the preparation of the ſhip, that the ſame was prouided, and the lord Paget imbarked by the 14. of the ſame moneth following, or thereabout.

This was a ſhift but yet ſuccourleſſe, as appeareth by the ſequele.

The departure of the lord Paget ſoone after diſcouered, and how, and by whom he was conueied awaie: hir maieſtie vpon good cauſe taking offenſe thereat, the earle being then at London had notice thereof, and of the confeſſions of Throckmorton (who began to diſcouer the treaſons) came preſentlie down to Petworth, ſent immediatlie for William Shelleie, who comming to him to Petworth the next morning about dinner time, met the earle in a dining parlour readie to go to his dinner. The earle tooke Shelleie aſide into a chamber, and as a man greatlie diſtracted and troubled in mind, entred into theſe ſpæches: Alas I am a man caſt awaie! And Shelleie demanding what he ment by thoſe ſpéeches, the earle anſwered: The actions I haue entred into, I feare will be my vtter vndooing, and therevpon deſired Shelleie to kéepe his counſell, and to diſcouer no more of him than he muſt néeds. The earle moreouer at this méeting intreated William Shelleie to conueie awaie all ſuch as he knew to haue béene emploied and were priuie of the lord Pagets going awaie, and of Charles Pagets comming ouer, which was accordinglie performed by Shelleie: and the earle for his part conueied awaie a principall man of his own, whom he had often vſed in meſſages into France, and had béene of truſt appointed by the earle, to attend on Charles Paget, all the time of his ſtaie at Connigar lodge.

The earle and Shelleie conferre, and as men diſmaied for the diſcouerie of their dealings are extreame penſiue.

Maiſter ſolicitor purſuing the matters that made the earles practiſes and deuiſes for the concealing of his treaſons manifeſt, declared further: that after the earle and Shelleie had obteined ſome libertie in the Tower after their firſt reſtreint: the earle found meanes to haue intelligence with Shelleie, & was aduertiſed from him of all that he had confeſſed in his firſt examinations, taken before they were laſt reſtreined: ſince which time, the earle by corrupting of his kéeper hath practiſed to haue continuall aduertiſements as before, as well of things doone within the Tower as abroad: in ſo much as by his ſaid kéeper he had ſent and conueied twelue ſeuerall letters out of the Tower within the ſpace of nine or ten wéekes, and one of thoſe on ſundaie the twentith daie of Iune in the morning, when he murthered himſelfe the night following.

What deſerued the kéeper that would be corrupted by an offendor ſo malicious?

By the ſame corruption of his kéepers he ſent alſo a meſſage to William Shelleie by a maidſeruant in the Tower, by the which he required him to ſtand to his firſt confeſſions, and to go no further; for ſo it would be beſt for him, and he ſhould kéepe himſelfe out of danger. Wherevnto Shelleie returned anſwer by the ſame meſſenger, that he could hold out no longer, that he had concealed the matters as long as he could, and willed the earle to conſider that there was a great difference betwéene the earles eſtate and his: for that the earle in reſpect of his nobilitie was not in danger to be dealt withall in ſuch ſort as he the ſaid Shelleie was like to be, being but a priuat gentleman, and therefore to be vſed with all extremitie to be made confeſſe the truth: wherefore he aduiſed the earle to deale plainlie, and to remember what ſpéeches had paſſed at his houſe at Petworth, when Charles Paget came laſt thither.

The earle and Shelleie communicat their minds by meſſage.

Iames Price by the ſame corruption of the earls kéeper came to William Shelleie on the fridaie or ſaturdaie before Trinitie ſundaie laſt, and told him that the erle was verie deſirous to vnderſtand how farre he had gone in his confeſſions: and at Prices inſtance, Shelleie did ſet downe in writing the effect of the ſaid confeſſions, and ſent the ſame to the ſaid earle: who vpon the ſight therof, perceiuing the treaſons reuealed and diſcouered, and knowing thereby how heinous his offenſes were, fearing the iuſtice and ſeueritie of the lawes, and ſo the ruine and ouerthrow of his houſe, fell into deſperation, & ſo to the deſtruction of himſelfe. For confirmation whereof, it was confeſſed by one Iaques Pantins, a groome of the earles chamber, who had attended on the earle in the Tower by the ſpace of ten wéeks before his death, that he had heard the earle often ſaie, that maiſter Shelleie was no faithfull fréend vnto him, and that he had confeſſed ſuch things as were ſufficient to ouerthrow them both: that he was vndoone by Shelleies accuſations, affirming that the earle began to deſpaire of himſelfe, often with teares lamenting his cauſe, which the earle ſaid to procéed onlie of the remembrance of his wife and children, ſaieng further, that ſuch matters were laid vnto his charge, that he expected no fauour, but to be brought to his triall, and then he was but a loſt man: repeating often that Shelleie had vndoone him, and ſtill miſtruſting his cauſe, wiſhed for death.

Iames Price a meſſenger to and fro betwéene the earle & Shelleie.

The earle becommeth deſperat and forceth not to deſtroie himſelfe.

Herewith maiſter ſolicitor concluded, and then ſir Roger Manwood knight, lord chiefe baron of hir maieſties excheker, entered into the deſcription of the earles death, and in what ſort he had murthered himſelfe: ſhewing firſt how the ſame had béene found by a verie ſubſtantiall iurie choſen among the beſt commoners of the citie, impanelled by the coroner vpon the view of the bodie, and diligent inquirie by all due meanes had according to the law, and declared, that vpon the diſcouerie of the intelligence conueied betwéene the earle and Shelleie, it was thought neceſſarie for the benefit of hir maieſties ſeruice, by ſuch of hir highneſſe moſt honourable priuie councell, as were appointed commiſſioners to examine the courſe of theſe treaſons, that Iaques Pantins attending vpon the earle, and the earles corrupt kéepers ſhould be remooued.

Sir Roger Manwood deſcribeth the maner how the earle murthered himſelfe.

Wherevpon Thomas Bailiffe gentleman, ſent to attend on the earle of Northumberland, vpon the remoouing of Palmer and Iaques Pantins from about the ſaid earle (who from the beginning of his laſt reſtreint attended on him) for the reaſons laſtlie before mentioned, was by the lieutenant of the Tower on the ſunday about two of the clocke in the after noone (being the twentith of Iune) ſhut vp with the earle, as appointed to remaine with him, and ſerue him in the priſon for a time, vntill Palmer, Pantins, and * Price, then committed cloſe priſoners, might be examined, how the earle came by ſuch intelligences as were diſcouered to haue paſſed betwéene the earle and Shelleie, and betwéene the earle and others. Bailiffe ſerued the earle at his ſupper, brought him to his bed about nine of the clocke, and after ſome ſeruices doone by the earles commandement, Thomas Bailiffe the one & twentith of Iune 1585. depoſed.

Palmer, Pantins and Price committed cloſe priſoners.

* This Price is ſuppoſed to be miſtaken for Edward Brice.

mandement, departed from the earle to an vtter chamber, where he laie part of that night: and being come into his chamber, the earle roſe out of his bed and came to his chamber doore, and bolted the ſame vnto him in the inner ſide, ſaieng to Bailiffe, he could not ſleepe vnleſſe his doore were faſt.

O deſperat diſſimulation!

About twelue of the clocke at midnight, Bailiffe being in a ſlumber, heard a great noiſe, ſéeming vnto him to be the falling of ſome doore, or rather a péece of the houſe: the noiſe was ſo ſudden and ſo great, that he ſtarted out of his bed, and crieng vnto the earle with a lowd voice, ſaid: My lord, know you what this is? The earle not anſwering, Bailiffe cried and knocked ſtill at the earles doore, ſaieng, My lord, how doo you? But finding that the earle made no anſwer, continued his crieng and calling, vntill an old man that laie without, ſpake vnto him, ſaieng, Gentleman, ſhall I call the watch, ſéeing he will not ſpeake? Yea (quoth Bailiffe) for Gods ſake. Then did the old man riſe, & called one of the watch, whome Bailiffe intreated with all poſſible ſpéed to call maiſter lieutenant vnto him. In the meane time Bailiffe heard the earle giue a long and moſt gréeuous grone, and after that, gaue a ſecond grone: and then the lieutenant (being come) called vnto the earle, who not anſwering, Bailiffe cried vnto the lieutenant to breake open the earles chamber doore bolted vnto him in the inner ſide, which was doone, and then they found the earle dead in his bed, and by his bed ſide a dag, wherewith he had killed himſelfe.

He could not anſwer hauing diſcharged the dag into his bodie.

Sir Owen Hopton knight, examined vpon his oth, affirmed that on ſundaie laſt at night, leſſe than a quarter of an houre before one of the clocke after midnight, he was called vp by the watch to come to the earle of Northumberland, who had béene called vnto by maiſter Bailiffe his kéeper, and would not ſpeake as the watch told him. Wherevpon the ſaid ſir Owen went preſentlie to the earles lodging, opened the vtter doores, till he came vnto the chamber where maiſter Bailiffe laie, which was next to the earles bedchamber. Bailiffe ſaid to this examinat as he came in, that he was wakened with a noiſe as it were of a doore or ſome great thing falling, & that he had called on the earle, and could haue no anſwer. And this examinat going to the earls chamber doore, finding the ſame bolted faſt on the other ſide within the earles lodging, ſo as he could not go into the earle, this examinat called on the earle, telling him the lieutenant was there, and praied his lordſhip to open the doore.

Sir Owen Hopton knight, lieutenant of the Tower, 1585.

But this examinat hauing no anſwer made vnto him, and finding the doore faſt bolted in the inner ſide of the earles chamber with a ſtrong iron bolt, ſo as they could not enter into the ſame out of the lodging where the ſaid Bailiffe laie, without breaking vp the chamber doore, cauſed the warders which were with this examinat, to thruſt in their halberds, and to wreſt the doore thereby, as much as they could, and withall to run at the doore with their féet, & with violence to thruſt it open, which they did accordinglie. And when this examinat came into the chamber, in turning vp the ſhéets, he perceiued them to be bloudied: and then ſearching further, found the wound, which was verie néere the pap, not thinking at the firſt ſight, but that it had béene doone with a knife.

The warders with their halberds wreſt and wring at the earles chamber doore.

The place of the bodie where the earle had wounded himſelfe.

This examinat went therevpon preſentlie to write to the court, and tooke the warders into the vtter chamber, & left them there vntill he returned, bolting the doore of the earles bedchamber on the outſide. And as ſoone as this examinat returned from writing of his letter to the court, he ſearched about the chamber, and found the dag in the floore, about thrée foot from the bed, néere vnto a table that had a gréene cloth on it, which did ſomewhat ſhadow the dag: and after, turning downe the bed cloths, found the box in the which the powder and pellets were, on the bed vnder the couerlet; and ſaith, that the chamber where the earle laie, hath no other doore but that one doore which was broken open as aforeſaid, ſaue one doore that went into a priuie, which hath no maner of paſſage out of it: and that the earles lodging chamber, and the entering to the priuie, are both walled round about with a ſtone wall, and a bricke wall, and that there is no doore or paſſage out of or from the ſaid earles bedchamber or priuie, but that onelie doore which was broken open by the appointment of this examinat. The warders that were with this examinat at the entrie into the priſon, and the breaking vp of the earles chamber doore, and the dooing of the other things aforeſaid, were Michaell Sibleie, Anthonie Dauies, William Riland, and Iohn Potter, and one Iohn Pinner this examinats ſeruant was there alſo.

The dag found in the floore, and the box and pellets in the bed.

This is a manifeſt proofe and full of ſufficient credit, that none could come at him to doo him violence.

For the proofe and confirmation of the ſeuerall parts and points of this depoſition, Sibleie, Dauies, Riland, Potter and Pinner were depoſed, and they Viua voce affirmed ſo much thereof to be true, as was reported by the examination of the lieutenant, concerning the comming of the lieutenant vnto the earles chamber, the breaking vp of the doore being bolted with a ſtrong bolt on the inner ſide, the finding of the earle dead vpon his bed, the dag lieng on the ground, the powder and pellets in a box on the bed vnder the couerlet, with the reſt of the circumſtances therevnto apperteining. They affirmed alſo, that there was but one doore in the earles chamber, ſauing the doore of the priuie, which togither with the chamber was ſtronglie walled about with ſtone and bricke: and further (as I remember) the lord chiefe baron confirmed the ſame, hauing viewed the chamber himſelfe where the earle lodged, and was found dead.

Deponents Viua voce, confirming the lieutenants depoſition vpon his examination.

Iaques Pantins in his examination of the one and twentith of Iune confeſſeth, that Iames Price deliuered the dag to the earle his maiſter in this examinats preſence: wherevpon he preſentlie ſuſpected that the earle meant miſchiefe to himſelfe, and therefore did his indeuour to perſuade the earle to ſend awaie the dag, and told the earle that he knew not how the diuell might tempt his lordſhip, & that the diuell was great; but could by no meanes preuaile with the earle in that behalfe: and ſaith moreouer, that the earle required him to hide the dag, and he therevpon hanged the ſame on a naile within the chimneie in the earles bedchamber, where the earle thinking the ſame not to be ſufficientlie ſafe in that place, it was by the earles appointment taken from thenſe, and put into a ſlit in the ſide of a mattreſſe that laie vnder the earles bed, néere to the beds head, and that the ſame ſundaie morning that the earle murthered himſelfe at night, he ſaw the dag lieng vnder the earles beds head. The dag was bought not manie daies before of one Adrian Mulan a dagmaker, dwelling in eaſt Smithfield, as by the ſaid Mulan was teſtified Viua voce vpon his oth, in the open court, at the time of the publike declaration made of theſe matters in the Starchamber.

Of whom the dag was bought.

All theſe particularities conſidered, with the depoſitions and proofs of the witneſſe concerning the earles death; firſt, how he came by the dag; ſecondlie, how long he had kept the ſame, and in what ſecret maner; thirdlie, the earles bolting of his chamber doore in the inſide; fourthlie, the blow of the dag; fiftlie, the breaking vp of the earles chamber doore by the lieutenant of the Tower; and laſtlie, the finding of the earle dead as aforeſaid: what is he ſo ſimple that will thinke or imagine, or ſo impudent and malicious that will auouch and report, that the earle of Northumberland ſhould haue béene murthered of purpoſe, by practiſe or deuiſe of anie perſon, affecting his deſtruction in that manner? If men conſider the inconuenience happened thereby, as well in matter of ſtate, as commoditie to the quéenes maieſtie, loſt by the preuention of his triall, who can in reaſon coniecture the earle to haue béene murthered of policie or ſet purpoſe, as the euill affected ſéeme to conceiue?

The principall cauſe that made the earle laie hands vpon himſelfe.

If the earle had liued to haue receiued the cenſure of the law for his offenſes, all lewd and friuolous obiections had then béene anſwered, and all his goods, cattels and lands by his atteindor had come vnto hir maieſtie, and the honour and ſtate of his houſe and poſteritie vtterlie ouerthrowne: the conſideration and feare whereof appeareth without all doubt to haue béene the principall and onelie cauſe that made him laie violent hands vpon himſelfe. If obiections be made, that to murther him in that ſort might be a ſatiſfaction to his enimies, who could be pacified by no meanes but with his bloud: that ſéemeth to be as improbable, for that it is commonlie diſcerned in the corrupt nature of man, that when we are poſſeſſed with ſo profound a hatred, as to ſéeke the death of our enimie, we imagine and wiſh his deſtruction to be had with the greateſt ſhame and infamie that can be deuiſed: thinke you not then, that if the earle of Northumberland had anie ſuch enimie that knew the danger wherein he ſtood, and that his triall and conuiction by law would draw vpon him the loſſe of his life, lands and goods, fame, honor, and the vtter ſubuerſion of his houſe, would be ſo kindharted vnto him, as to helpe to take awaie his life onelie, & ſaue him all the reſt? I ſuppoſe there is no man of iudgement will beléeue it.

The lord of Hunſdon declareth how the dag was more than ordinarilie charged: and how the earle diſpatched himſelfe.

But to returne to the maner of the earles death. It was declared by the lord Hunſdon, and the lord chiefe baron, that the dag wherewith the earle murthered himſelfe, was charged with thrée bullets, and ſo of neceſſitie with more than an ordinarie charge of powder, to force that weight of bullets to worke their effect. The earle lieng vpon his backe on the left ſide of his bed, tooke the dag charged in his left hand (by all likelihood) laid the mouth of the dag vpon his left pap (hauing firſt put aſide his waſtecote) and his ſhirt being onelie betwéene the dag and his bodie (which was burnt awaie the breadth of a large hand) diſcharged the ſame, wherewith was made a large wound in his ſaid pap, his heart pearſed and torne in diuerſe lobes or péeces, thrée of his ribs broken, the chinebone of his backe cut almoſt in ſunder, and vnder the point of the ſhoulder blade on the right ſide within the ſkin, the thrée bullets were found by the lord Hunſdon, which he cauſed the ſurgion in his preſence to cut out, lieng all thrée cloſe togither within the breadth and compaſſe of an inch or thereabout: the bullets were ſhewed by his lordſhip at the time of the publication made in the court at the Starchamber.

Thrée bullets found vnder the point of the earls ſhoulder blade.

A ſlanderous report of the quéenes enimies and the earles fauourers anſwered.

And whereas it hath béene ſlanderouſlie giuen out to the aduantage of the earle, as the reporters ſuppoſe, that he was impriſoned & kept in ſo ſtreict, narrow and cloſe roome, with ſuch penurie of aire and breath, that thereby he grew ſickelie and wearie of his life, and that to haue béene the cauſe chieflie why he murthered himſelfe; if it were ſo that he died by the violence of his owne hand which they hardlie beléeue. To anſwer that péeuiſh and ſenſeleſſe ſlander, there was much ſpoken by the lord chiefe baron, who had viewed and cauſed verie exactlie to be meaſured the chambers and roomes within the priſon where the earle laie, being part of hir maieſties owne lodging in the Tower. The particular length and breadth of the ſaid chambers & roms, and the qualitie of the lights and windows, expreſſed by the ſaid lord chiefe baron, I can not repeat: but well I doo remember it was declared, that all the daie time, the earle had the libertie of fiue large chambers, and two long entries within the vtter doore of his priſon: thrée of which chambers, and one of the entries laie vpon two faire gardens within the Tower wall, and vpon the Tower wharfe, with a pleaſant proſpect to the Thames, and to the countrie, more than fiue miles beyond. The windowes were of a verie large proportion, yéelding ſo much aire and light, as more cannot be deſired in anie houſe. Note therefore how maliciouſlie thoſe that fauour traitors and treaſons, can deliuer out theſe and the like ſlanderous ſpéeches, to the diſhonor of hir maieſtie, noting hir councellors and miniſters with inhumanitie and vncharitable ſeueritie, contrarie to all truth and honeſtie.

The earle wanted no proſpects for pleaſure nor walks of conuenient libertie.

When the lord chiefe baron had finiſhed this diſcourſe of the manner of the earles death, with the circumſtances, and had ſatiſfied the court and auditorie concerning the qualitie of the priſon where the earle had remained, ſir Chriſtopher Hatton knight hir maieſties vicechamberlaine, who (as it ſéemed) had béene ſpeciallie imploied by hir maieſtie among others of hir priuie councell in the looking into and examining of the treaſons aforeſaid, aſwell in the perſon of the earle as of others, and at the time of the earles commitment from his houſe in S. Martins to the Tower of London, ſent vnto him from hir maieſtie to put the earle in mind of hir maieſties manifold graces and fauors in former times conferred vpon him, procéeding from the ſpring of hir maieſties princelie and bountifull nature, and not of his deſeruings, and to aduiſe him to deliuer the truth of the matters ſo cléerelie appearing againſt him, either by his letters priuatlie to hir maieſtie, or by ſpéech to maiſter vicechamberlaine, who ſignified alſo vnto him, that if he would determine to take that courſe, he ſhould not onlie not be committed to the Tower, but ſhould find grace & fauor at hir maieſties hands, in the mitigation of ſuch puniſhment as the law might laie vpon him.

Sir Chriſtopher Hatton reuealeth to the court and auditorie the gratious dealing of hir maieſtie with the ſaid earle, no ſuch fauour deſeruing.

And here M. vicechamberlaine repeated at length the effect of hir maieſties meſſage at that time ſent to the earle, begining firſt with the remembrance of his practiſe vndertaken for the conueieng awaie of the Scotiſh quéene about the time of the laſt rebellion (as hath béene declared in the beginning of this tract) and that he confeſſing the offenſe being capitall, hir maieſtie neuertheleſſe was pleaſed to alter the courſe of his triall by the iuſtice of hir lawes, and ſuffered the ſame to receiue a ſlight and eaſie puniſhment by waie of mulct or fine of fiue thouſand marks, whereof before this his impriſonment (as it is credibl ie reported) there was not one penie paid, or his land touched with anie extent for the paiment thereof, which offenſe was by hir maieſtie not onelie moſt gratiouſlie forgiuen, but alſo moſt chriſtianlie forgotten, receiuing him not long after to the place of honor that his anceſtours had inioied for manie yeares before him, and gaue him ſuch entrance into hir princelie fauour and good opinion, that no man of his qualitie receiued greater countenance and comfort at hir maieſties hands than he; inſomuch that in all exerciſes of recreation, vſed by hir maieſtie, the earle was alwaies called to be one: and whenſoeuer hir maieſtie ſhewed hir ſelfe abroad in publike, ſhe gaue to him the honor of the beſt and higheſt ſeruices about hir perſon, more often than to all the noble men of the court.

The quéenes maieſtie mitigateth the puniſhmẽt which the law would haue awarded againſt the earle.

The quéenes maieſties nature is to loue hir enimies, O that they could change their nature, and loue hir highneſſe againe!

But the remembrance of theſe moſt gratious and more than extraordinarie fauours and benefits receiued, nor the hope giuen vnto him by maiſter vicechamberlaine of hir maieſties diſpoſition of mercie towards him, nor the conſideration of the depth and weight of his treaſons againſt hir maieſtie, hir eſtate, hir crowne and dignitie, with the danger thereby like to fall vpon him by the courſe of hir highnes lawes, to the vtter ruine and ſubuerſion of him and his houſe (ſtanding now at hir maieſties mercie) could once moue his heart to that naturall and dutifull care of hir maieſties ſafetie that he ought to haue borne towards hir, and ſhe moſt worthilie had merited at his hands, or anie remorſe or compaſſion of himſelfe and his poſteritie: but reſting vpon termes of his innocencie, hauing (as you maie perceiue) conueied awaie all thoſe that he thought could or would anie waie accuſe him, he made choiſe rather to go to the Tower, abide the hazard of hir maieſties high indignation, and the extremitie of the law for his offenſes.

The earle ſtandeth vpon termes of his innocencie, all the world ſeeing cauſe to the contrarie.

All which was a notable augur of his fall, and that God by his iuſt iudgement had for his ſinnes and ingratitude taken from him his ſpirit of grace, and deliuered him ouer to the enimie of his ſoule, who brought him to that moſt dreadfull & horrible end, whereunto he is come: *from the which, God of his mercie defend all chriſtian people, and preſerue the quéenes maieſtie from the treaſons of hir ſubiects, that ſhe maie liue in all happineſſe, to ſée the ruine of hir enimies abroad and at home, and that ſhe, and we hir true and louing ſubiects, maie be alwaies thankfull to God for all his bleſſings beſtowed vpon vs by hir, the onlie mainteiner of his holie goſpell among vs.

*To this petition let all true harted Engliſhmen ſaie, Amen.

The arriuall and interteinment of the deputies for the eſtates of the low countries.

On the ſix & twentith of Iune arriued at London deputies for the eſtates of the netherlands, or low countries, who were lodged about the Tower ſtréet, & had their diet for the time of their abode here, verie worſhipfullie appointed (all at the charges of hir maieſtie) in the Clothworkers hall in Minchenlane, [illegible] to the ſaid Tower ſtréet. Theſe on the nine & [illegible] of Iune, being the feaſt of the apoſtles Pe[illegible] Paule repaired to the court, then at Gréene[illegible] where by vertue of their commiſſions from the vnited countries, they preſented to hir maieſtie the ſouereingtie of thoſe countries, to wit of Brabant (but the commiſſion for the ſiege of Antuerpe not full authoriſed) of Guelder, of Flanders, of Holland, of Zeland, of Vtrecht, and of Friſeland. For Brabant, Iaques de Griſe great bailie of Bruges councellour of the Franks. For Guelder, Rutger of Barſold, gentleman. For Flanders, Noell de Carſie lord of Schonewalle. For Holland, Iohn Vanderdoeſt, lord of Nortwicke, Ioſſe de Menin penſionarie of Dordreght, Iohn of old Barneuelt penſionarie of Rotradame, and D. Francis Maolſo. For Zeland, Iacob Dales councellor and penſionarie of Tergoeſt. For Vtrecht, Paulus Buis doctor of the lawes. For Friſeland, I. Fritzma, gentleman: H. Anſona preſident of Friſeland: and Lads Iangema, gentleman. All theſe falling on their knées tofore hir maieſtie, and ſo remaining for a long ſpace, one of them, to wit, Ioſſe de Menin councellor and penſionarie of Dordreght, one of the commiſſioners for Holland, made to hir maieſtie this oration in French as followeth.

[illegible] names of the ſaid deputies [illegible]

The ſaid deputies oration in French to hir maieſtie at Greenwich.

MAdame, les eſtats des prouinces vnies des pais bas, remercient treſhumblement voſtre maieſté de la bonné affection & faueur, qu'il à pleu de monſtrer audits pais en leur neceſſites, & confirmer par tant de teſmoignaiges euidens; & encores dernierement, quand apres l'execrable aſſaſinat commis en la perſonne de feu monſir le prince d'Orenges. il a pleu a voſtre maieſté faire entendre audits eſtats par ſon ambaſſadeur le ſire Dauiſon, le ſoing qu'icelle auoit a noſtre defenſe & cõſeruation, & auſſy par le ſieur de Griſe, le grand deſplaiſir que voſtre maieſté auoit conceu, de voir leſdits eſtats fruſtres de l'eſperance quelle auoient fondeé ſur le traicte de France. Mais, que le ſoin que voſtre maieſté a touſiours eu de noſtre bien & conſeruation n'eſtoit pour cela en rien diminué, ains qu'il ſ'augmentoit, pluſtoſt a meſure que la neceſſité de nos affaires le requiert, dont leſdits pais en general, & chacun d'eulx eu particulier demeureront perpetuellement treſobliges a voſtre maieſté, pour le recognoiſtre auec tout fidelité & obeiſance.

Et comme ledits eſtats conſiderent Madame, que depuis le deces dudit ſire prince d'Orenges, ils ont faict perté de pluſieurs de leurs places & bonnes villes; & que pour la conſeruation deſdits pais il leur eſt beſoing d'vng prince & ſeig. ſouuerain, qui les puiſſe garentir & defendre contre la tyrannie & inique opreſſion des Eſpaignols & leurs adherés, qui ſ'efforcent de plus en plus par leurs ſiniſtres armes & tous aultres moyens, de deſtruire & ruiner leſdits pais de fonds en comble, & reduire ce pouure peuple en vne ſeruitude perpetuellé, pire que des Indiẽs ſoubs l'inſúpportable ioug de la deteſtable inquiſition d'Eſpaigne. Conſiderans auſſy que les corps des villes & communaultes deſdits pais ont vne fermé cõfience, que voſtre maieſté ne les vouldra veoir perir au gre de leurs ennemys, qui leur font ceſte lõgue & cruelle guerre a toute oultrance, laquelle les eſtats deſdits pais bas (enſuiuant leur deuoir & obligation qu'ils ont a leurs bourgois & concitoyens) ont eſtes contrainćts de ſouſtenir, repoulſer, & deſtourner, pour la tyrãnie & ſeruitude manifeſte qu'on taſchat d'introduire & impoſer au pouure peuple, & pour conſeruer leur liberté, droits, priuileges, & franchiſes, auec l'exerciſe de la vraye religion chreſtienné, dont voſtre maieſté porte a bon droit le tiltre de protectrice & defendereſſe, contre laquelle leſdits ennemys & leurs aſſocies, ont & faict tant de ligues, dreſſe tant de cauteleuzes embuſhes, & trahiſons, & ne ceſſent encore tout les iours de praticquer & machiner contre la perſonne de voſtre maieſté, & au preiudice du repos & tranquillité de ſes royaulmes & eſtats, laquelle le bon Dieu a preſerue eiuſques a preſẽt, pour le bien de la chreſtienté, & ſuſtentation de ſes egliſes.

Sy eſt ce Madame, que pour ces cauſes, & raiſons, & aultres bonnes conſiderations, leſdits eſtats ont prins par enſemble vne bonné & fermé reſolution, de prendre leurs recours a voſtre maieſté, veu que ceſt vne choſe ordinaire a tous peuples & nations oppreſſées, de recourir en leurs calamites & oppreſſions, pour ſupport & faueur contre leurs ennemys, aulx roys & princes voiſins, & ſingulierement a ceulx qui ſont douez a magnanimité, pieté, iuſtice, & aultres vertus royalles, & a ceſt effect nous ont leſdits eſtats depute vers voſtre maieſté, pour preſenter a icelle la principaulté ſouueraine, & iuſte dominatiõ deſdits prouinces, ſoubs certaines bonnes & equitables condicions, concernantes principallement la conſeruation de l'exerciſe de la religion reformée, & de leurs anciens priuileges, libertes, franchiſes & vſances, & l'adminiſtration du faict de la guerre, police, & iuſtice eſdits pais.

Et combien que leſdits pais ayent beaucoup ſouffert par ces longues & continuelles guerres, & que l'ennemy ſe ſoit empare de pluſieurs villes & places fortes eſdits pais, toutes fois, oultre ce qu'es pais de Brabant, Gueldre, Flandre, Malins, & Oueriſſel, ſe mainteinent encores maintes bonnes villes & places contre l'effort de l'ennemy, ſy eſt ce que les pais d'Holland, Zeeland, Vtrecht, & Friſe ſont encores, graces a Dieu, en leur entier, ou il y a beaucoup de grandes & fortes villes, & places belles, riuieres, profondes, ports & haures de mer, deſquelles voſtre maieſté & ſes ſucceſſeurs pourront tirer pluſieurs bons ſeruices, fruicts, & commodites dont il n'eſt de faire yci plus long recit. Seulement que ceſte cy entre aultres merite bien vne conſideration ſpeciale que la coniunction deſdits pais d'Holland, Zeeland, Friſe, & des villes de l'Eſcluze, & Oſteynd en Flãdres auec les royaulmes de voſtre maieſté, emporte quant & ſoy l'empire abſolut de la grand mer occeane, & par conſequence vne aſſeurance & felicité perpetuelle pour les ſubiects de voſtre ſereniſſime maieſté. La quelle nous ſupplions treſhũblemẽt que ſon bon plaiſir ſoit de nous accorder leſdits points ou conditions, & ce en ſuiuant, vouloir accepter pour ſoy & ſes ſucceſſeurs legittimes en la couronne d'Angleterre protecteurs de la religion reformée, la iuſtice principaute & ſeigneurie ſouueraine deſdits pais & conſequemment du recepuoir les peuples deſdits pais, comme vous treſhumbles & treſobeiſſants ſubiects ſoubs la protection & ſauuegarde perpetuelle de voſtre maieſté, peuples certeinement autant fidelles, aymant leurs princes & ſeigneurs (a parler & ſans iactance) que nul aultre de la chreſtienté.

Ce faiſant Madame, vous conſerueres tant de belles egliſes, qu'il a pleu a Dieu en ce dernier temps aſſembler eſdits pais a preſent en beaucoup de lieux fort affliges, & eſbranles & deliureres leſdits pais & peuples (nagueres auant l'inique maiſon des Eſpaignols) tant riches & floriſſans, pour la grande commodité de la mer, ports, haures, riuieres, traffiqs, & manifactures dont ils ſont doues de nature. Vous les deliureres (dis ie Madame) de ruine & perpetuelle ſeruitude de corps & ame, qui ſera vng œuure vrayement roial & treſexcellent, agreable a Dieu, profitable a toute chreſtienté, digne de louange immortelle, coreſpondant a la magnanimité & vertus heroicques de voſtre maieſté, & conioinct auec l'aſſeurance & proſperites des royalmes & ſubiects d'icelle. Et ſurce preſentons a voſtre maieſté leſdits articles ou conditions, en reuerence, prians le grand Roy des roys de preſeruer voſtre maieſté de ſes ennemys, l'accroiſtre en gloire & felicité, & l'auoir en ſa ſeinte garde à perpetuité.

Faict par Ioſſe de Menin, concelier & penſionaire de Dordreght. An. 1585. 29 de Iune, A Greenwich.

The foreſaid oration in Engliſh.

Madam, the ſtates of the vnited prouinces of the low countries moſt humblie thanke your maieſtie for the good affection & fauor, which it pleaſed you to ſhew to the ſaid countries in their neceſſitie, & to confirme the ſame with ſo manie euident teſtimonies; & that laſtlie, after the execrable aſſault committed vpon the perſon of the late prince of Orange, at what time it pleaſed your maieſtie to let the ſaid ſtates vnderſtand by your ambaſſador maiſter Dauiſon, what care you had of our defenſe and preſeruation, and alſo by ſegneur de Criſt, the great diſpleaſure which your maieſtie conceiued, to ſee the ſtates fruſtrated of the hope which they had founded vpon the treatie of France. But ſince the care which your maieſtie hath alwaies had ouer our good and conſeruation is not thereby anie whit diminiſhed, but hath more plentifullie increaſed, according as the neceſſitie of our affaires required; for which the ſaid countrie in generall, and euerie of vs in particular remaine perpetuallie bound to your maieſtie, and acknowledge the ſame with all fidelitie and obeiſance.

The queenes maieſties moſt gratious fauor acknowledged.

And as the ſaid ſtates (Madam) doo conſider that ſince the deceaſe of the prince of Orange they haue ſuſteined the loſſe of diuerſe of their holds and good townes; and that for the preſeruation of the ſaid countrie it is needfull for them to haue a prince and ſoueraigne ruler, which may warrant and defend them againſt the tyrannie and vniuſt oppreſſion of the Spaniards and their adherents, which dailie more and more inforce themſelues by their ſiniſter power and all other meanes to deſtroie and ouerthrow the ſaid countries, and reduce this poore people in perpetuall ſeruitude, worſe than that of the Indians vnder the importable yoke of the deteſtable inquiſition of Spaine. Conſidering alſo that the bodie of the townes and communalties of the aforeſaid countries haue a firme hope, that your maieſtie will not ſee them periſh according to the deſire of their enimies, which make this long and cruell warre, all which outrages the ſtates of the ſaid low countries (following the diligence and band which they owe to their burgeſſes and citizens) are to ſuſteine, repell, and to turne from them, by reaſon of the manifeſt tyrannie & ſeruitude which the Spaniards attempt to bring in & to laie vpon the poore people) thereby to preſerue their liberties, rights, priuileges, and franchiſes, with the exerciſe of the true chriſtian religion, whereof your maieſtie by good right carrieth the title of protectrice and defendreſſe, againſt which the ſaid enimies and their aſſociats alreadie haue and ſtill doo make manie leagues, deuiſe manie ſubtilties, treaſons, and ambuſhes, not ceaſing dailie to practiſe and imagine them againſt the perſon of your maieſtie, and to the preiudice of the reſt of your realme and ſtates, whome the good God hath preſerued vntill this preſent, for the wealth of the chriſtians, and ſuſtentation of their churches

The diſtreſſed ſtate of the low countries after the death of the prince of Orange.

The hope that the low countrie people had in hir highnes helpe.

Spaniſh ſeruitude importable.

Wherefore (Madam) it is ſo, that for theſe ca[illegible] reaſons, & other conſiderations, the ſaid ſtate[illegible] aſſembled and concluded vpon a good and fir[illegible]lution to haue recourſe vnto your maieſtie, [illegible] is an ordinarie matter amongſt all people [illegible] preſſed nations, in their calamities and oppreſſions to craue ſupport and fauour againſt their enimies, of kings and princes neere vnto them, but eſpeciallie of thoſe who be indued with magnanimitie, pietie, iuſtice, and other princelie vertues, to which effect the ſtates haue appointed vs to come vnto your maieſtie to preſent vnto the ſame the principalitie, ſoueraigntie, and iuſt gouernment of the ſaid prouinces vnder certeine good and equall conditions, chieflie concerning the preſeruation of the exerciſe of the reformed religion, and of the ancient priuileges, liberties, franchiſes, and cuſtoms, and next of the adminiſtration of the affaires, policie, and iuſtice of the warres in the ſaid countrie.

[illegible] cauſe the be[illegible] [illegible]es for the [illegible]es ſame [illegible] England, and their ſuite vnto hir highneſſe [illegible].

The gouernment & principalitie of the low countries preſented to the queenes maieſtie.

And although that theſe countries haue ſuſteined much hurt by theſe long and continuall warres, and that the enimie hath taken diuers ſtrong places and forts in the ſame countries: yet there is beſides the ſame in the countries of Brabant, Gelderland, Flanders, Malmes, & Ouerſet, manie good townes and places, which defend themſelues againſt the force of the enimie, and the countries of Holland, Zeland, Utricht, and Friſe be yet (thanks be to God) entire and whole: in which there be manie great and ſtrong townes and places, faire riuers, and deepe ports and hauens of the ſea, out of which your maieſtie and your ſucceſſors may receiue diuerſe good ſeruices, fruits, and commodities, whereof it is needleſſe here to make anie long recitall. Onelie

Manie good townes and places yet remaining in the low countries defenſible againſt the enimie.

The vniting of the low countries to the realmes of England, &c: how beneficiall.

this amongſt other matters deſerueth good and eſpeciall conſideration, that the vniting of thoſe countries of Holland, Zeland, Friſe, and the townes of Sluze and Oſtend in Flanders, vnto the realmes of your maieſtie importeth ſo much as the abſolute gouernement of the great ocean ſea, and by conſequence, an aſſurance and perpetuall felicitie for the ſubiects of your worthie maieſtie. Which we moſt humblie beſéech, that it will pleaſe the ſame to condeſcend vnto vs in the ſaid points and conditions, and in that which followeth, which is, that you will for you and your lawfull ſucceſſors in the crowne of England be protectors of the reformed religion, as the principall iuſticer and ſouereigne gouernor of the ſaid countries: and conſequentlie to receiue the people of the ſame, as your moſt humble and moſt obedient ſubiects vnder the protection and continuall ſafegard of your maieſtie; they being a people aſſuredlie ſo faithfull and louing to their princes and lords (be it ſpoken without vaunting) as anie other nation is throughout chriſtendome.

Protection of the reformed religion a part of their ſute.

The loialtie and faithfulneſſe of the low countrie people commended.

In dooing whereof (Madam) you ſhall preſerue manie goodlie churches, which it hath pleaſed God to aſſemble in theſe latter times in the ſame countries, at this preſent in manie places gréeuouſlie afflicted, and you ſhall deliuer the ſame countrie and people (of late before the vniuſt déeds of the houſe of Spaine) verie rich and floriſhing, through the great commoditie of the ſea, ports, hauens, riuers, traffike, and merchandize, whereof they be naturallie indued. You ſhall I ſaie (Madam) deliuer them from ruine and perpetuall bondage of bodie and ſoule, being a worke right roiall and moſt magnificent, acceptable to God, profitable to all chriſtianitie, worthie immortall commendation, anſwerable to the magnanimitie, and heroicall vertues of your maieſtie, and ioined with the aſſurance and proſperitie of your dominions and ſubiects. Wherevpon we preſent vnto your maieſtie the ſaid articles and conditions, reuerentlie praieng the King of kings preſerue your maieſtie from your enimies, to increaſe your glorie and felicitie, and for euer to kéepe you in his holie protection.

Benefits like to inſue vpon the ſaid protection vndertaken of hir highneſſe.

The ſaid deputies do preſent certeine articles and conditions to the queene concerning their ſute.

¶ This oration ended and the ſumme thereof conſidered, it pleaſed the quéenes maieſtie, by direction of hir wiſe and politike councell, to incline hir hart (alwaies pitifull and repleniſhed with commiſeration) to the eaſe and reléefe of the ſaid oppreſſed people. And bicauſe hir owne ſubiects ſhould not be vtterlie vnacquainted with hir highneſſe doings in that caſe, there was publiſhed by authoritie a booke thereof as in due place hereafter followeth.

On ſundaie the fourth of Iulie, Charles lord Howard, late lord chamberleine was made lord admerall, and Henrie lord Hunſdon was made lord chamberleine of houſhold. On the fift daie of Iulie Thomas Alwfeld a ſeminarie prieſt, and Thomas Weblie diar, were arreigned at the ſeſſions hall in the Old bailie, found guiltie, condemned, and had iudgement as fellons to be hanged: for publiſhing of bookes conteining falſe, ſeditious, and ſlanderous matter, to the defamation of our ſouereigne ladie the quéene, and to the excitation of inſurrection and rebellion, as more at large appeareth in their indictments. Theſe were on the next morrow, to wit, the ſixt of Iulie, executed at Tiborne accordinglie. On thurſdaie the ſixtéenth of Iulie, by the ſudden fall of a bricke wall in Thames ſtréet of London, néere vnto Downegate, fiue perſons were ouerwhelmed and ſlaine, to wit, a man & his wife (the wife being great with child) and two children, the one their own, the other a nurſe child, and a poore man that liued by charitie, hauing no knowne dwelling place. On the ſame ſixtéenth of Iulie was ſir Francis Ruſſell knight, lord Ruſſell, third ſonne to Francis Ruſſell earle of Bedford, ſlaine with a dag in the borders of Scotland beſide Berwike, by a Scot borne in thoſe parts, as they met vpon a true daie, as more at large appeareth in the hiſtorie of Scotland. On the next morrow, to wit, the ſeuentéenth of Iulie, Francis Ruſſell earle of Bedford, knight of the garter, and one of hir maieſties priuie councell, father to the late named ſir Francis, lord Ruſſell ſlaine on the borders of Scotland, deceaſſed, and was honorablie buried at Cheinies in Bedfordſhire on the eight of September next following.

Alfeld and Weblie hanged for publiſhing of ſeditious bookes.

Fiue or rather ſix people ſlain by the fall of a wall in London néere vnto Downegate.

Earle of Bedford and the lord Ruſſell his ſonne deceaſed.

On the thrée and twentith of Iulie certeine ſouldiers were preſſed in the ſeuerall wards of the citie of London, which ſouldiers being furniſhed for the warres, and clothed in red cotes, all at the charges of the companies and citizens, ſet forth toward the ſeas on the thirtéenth of Auguſt, and were tranſported ouer into Holland, Zeland, &c: as other the like ſouldiers out of other parts of the realme before had béene, to ſerue for the defenſe of the low countries vnder generall Norris, and other approoued capteins. On the fourth daie of Auguſt, betwixt the houres of foure and fiue of the clocke in the morning, at the end of the towne called Motingham in Kent, eight miles from London, in a lane not farre from the houſes, the ground began to ſinke, thrée great elmes being ſwallowed vp, the tops falling downward into a hole with the rootes vpward, turning round in the falling, and driuen into the earth paſt mans ſight, to the woonderfull amazement of manie honeſt men of the ſame towne, being beholders of this ſtrange ſight: and before ten of the clocke that preſent day, the ground & trees were ſoonke ſo low, that neither the one or other might be diſcerned, the hole or vaut being ſometimes filled with water, and otherwhiles neither bottome, trées, or water maie be perceiued: the compaſſe of this hole is about fourescore yards, and being ſounded with a lead and line of fiftie fadams, cannot therewith find or féele anie bottome. Ten yards diſtant from this place, there is another péece of ground ſoonke in like maner, which parcell of ground falleth ſtill into the high waie to the great feare of that whole towne, but eſpeciallie to the inhabitants of a houſe not far diſtant from the aforeſaid places.

Souldiers ſent to aid the low countries of Holland, Zeland, &c.

Ground and trées ſoonke and ſwallowed vp in Kent eight miles from London.

On the fiftéenth daie of September, to the number of two & thirtie ſeminaries, maſſing prieſts and others, late priſoners in the tower of London, Marſhalſée, Kings bench, and other places, were imbarked in the Marie Martine of Colcheſter, on the ſouthſide of the Thames right ouer againſt S. Katharines, to be tranſported ouer into the coaſts of Normandie, to be baniſhed this realme for euer, by vertue of a commiſſion from hir maieſtie, before ſpecified in pag. 1379.

Seminaries and maſſing prieſts baniſhed.

A copie of the certificat written and directed into England by the ſaid baniſhed men.

WHereas vpon your honors commiſſion directed vnto Anthonie Hall, and Thomas Stockar, for the tranſporting of vs whoſe names are vnder written, into the coaſts of Normandie, who accordinglie tooke vs into a barke called the Marie Martine of Colcheſter, on the ſouth ſide of the Thames, right ouer that part of ſaint Katharines next to London bridge, the fiftéenth day of September 1585, according to the computation of England: our will is to teſtifie vnto your good honors, that they the ſaid Anthonie Hall & Thomas Stockar haue generallie ſo well vſed vs in all reſpects, reſpects, that we can not but acknowledge our ſelues much beholding (as much as in them laie) to ſo courteous & louing officers. Neuertheleſſe comming along the ſea, and meeting with hir maieſties admerall in the downes, who promiſing that we ſhould not be diſturbed in our courſe into the prouince of Normandie, according to your honors ſaid commiſſion, we had not from him departed two leagues, when as a Fluſhinger with his people ſuddenlie entred vpon vs, being peaceablie ſtowed vnder the hatches, and in our quiet reſt, with their ſwords drawne, their calleiuers and their matches fired in their hands, to our great terror & diſcomfort, the moſt of vs being verie ſore ſea ſicke, expecting at that inſtant nothing but either the rigorous dint of ſword, or bullet of calleiuer. Howbeit parlee being had by our ſaid commiſſioners with them, they departed, after which time we conſidering the generall danger on the ſeas, beſought with one conſent your honors commiſſioners to ſet vs on land at Calice: but they in no wiſe yeelding therevnto, at laſt by reaſon of our importunitie in ſuch danger & weakeneſſe, yeelded to ſet vs on ſhore at Bullogne, partlie by reaſon of the feare we were then put in, & partlie for that we feared afterward more vnreaſonable meaſure; but ſpeciallie the greateſt number of vs ſo ſore ſicke, that verie tedious vnto vs it ſeemed to beare ſo long and dangerous a paſſage. In witnes whereof to this our certificat we haue all ſubſcribed our names the nineteenth of September 1585. W. Gimlets, R. Fen: Io. Nele: Chriſtopher Small, &c.

Note in this certificat an acknowledgment of verie great Engliſh courteſie to the ſeminaries in their tranſportation.

The ſeminaries ſuddenlie aſſaulted and in danger of death by a Fluſhinger as they were paſſing ouer ſea.

The ſeminaries are ſet on ſhore at Bullogne through their owne importunitie.

¶ We haue heard before that certeine ſouldiers out of diuers parts of this realme were tranſported ouer the ſeas into Holland and Zeland, &c: with ſuch conuenient and ſeruiceable furniture, as might be preſuppoſed neceſſarie for defenſe: whom we will leaue vpon their gard, and more cleerelie to ſet forth the reaſons of their tranſportation, we doo meane heere, as we promiſed before page 1413, when we came to due place, to deliuer a booke publiſhed by authoritie concerning that argument, the title and ſubſtance whereof in all points agreeable with the printed copie firſt extant, doth orderlie follow.

A declaration of the cauſes moouing the queene of England to giue aid to the defenſe of the people afflicted and oppreſſed in the low countries.

Kings and princes ſouereignes, are to yeeld account of their actions onelie to almightie God, the king of kings.

Although kings and princes ſoueregnes, owing their homage and ſeruice onelie vnto the almightie God the King of all kings, are in that reſpect not bound to yeeld account or render the reaſons of their actions to anie others but to God their onelie ſouereigne Lord: yet (though amongſt the moſt ancient and chriſtian monarchs the ſame Lord God hauing committed to vs the ſouereigntie of this realme of England and other our dominions, which we hold immediatlie of the ſame almightie Lord, and ſo thereby accountable onelie to his diuine Maieſtie) we are notwithſtanding this our prerogatiue at this time ſpeciallie mooued, for diuerſe reaſons hereafter brieflie remembred, to publiſh not onelie vnto our owne naturall louing ſubiects, but alſo to all others our neighbors, ſpeciallie to ſuch princes & ſtates as are our confederats, or haue for their ſubiects cauſe of commerce with our countries and people, what our intention is at this time, and vpon what iuſt and reaſonable grounds we are mooued to giue aid vnto our next neighbours the naturall people of the low countries, being by long warres and perſecutions of ſtrange nations there, lamentablie afflicted, and in preſent danger to be brought into a perpetuall ſeruitude.

Naturall cauſes of the ancient continuall traffike betwixt the people of England & them of the low countries.

Firſt, it is to be vnderſtood (which percaſe is not perfectlie knowne to a great number of perſons) that there hath beene, time out of mind, euen by the naturall ſituation of thoſe low countries and our realme of England, one directlie oppoſit to the other, and by reaſon of the readie croſſing of the ſeas, and multitude of large and commodious hauens reſpectiuelie on both ſides, a continuall traffike and commerce betwixt the people of England, and the naturall people of thoſe low countries, and ſo continued in all ancient times, when the ſeuerall prouinces thereof, as Flanders, Holland, and Zeland, and other countries to them adioining, were ruled and poſſeſſed by ſeuerall lords, and not vnited togither, as of late yeares they haue beene by intermarriages, and at length by concurrences of manie and ſundrie titles haue alſo beene reduced to be vnder the gouernement of their lords that ſucceeded to the dukedome of Burgundie: whereby there hath beene in former ages manie ſpeciall aliances and confederations, not onelie betwixt the kings of England our progenitors and the lords of the ſaid countries of Flanders, Holland, Zeland, and their adherents: but alſo betwixt the verie naturall ſubiects of both countries, as the prelats, noblemen, citizens, burgeſſes, and other communalties of the great cities and port townes of either countrie reciprocallie, by ſpeciall obligations and ſtipulations vnder their ſeales interchangeablie, for maintenance both of commerce and intercourſe of merchants, & alſo of ſpeciall mutuall amitie to be obſerued betwixt the people and inhabitants of both parties as well eccleſiaſticall as ſecular: and verie expreſſe prouiſion in ſuch treaties conteined for mutuall fauours, affections, and all other friendlie offices to be vſed and proſecuted by the people of the one nation towards the other. By which mutuall bonds, there hath continued perpetuall vnions of the peoples hearts togither, and ſo by waie of continuall intercourſes, from age to age the ſame mutuall loue hath beene inuiolablie kept and exerciſed, as it had beene by a worke of nature, and neuer vtterlie diſſolued, though yet for anie long time diſcontinued, howſoeuer the kings, and the lords of the countries ſometimes (though verie rarelie) haue beene at difference by ſiniſter meanes of ſome other princes their neighbours, enuieng the felicitie of theſe two countries.

Confederations both betwixt the kings of England and lords of the low countries, and alſo the ſubiects of both countries.

The people of both the countries bound by ſpeciall obligations interchangeablie, for mutuall fauours and friendlie offices.

And for maintenance and teſtimonie of theſe naturall vnions of the peoples of theſe kingdoms and countries in perpetuall amitie, there are extant ſundrie authentike treaties and tranſactions for mutuall commerce, intercourſe and ſtreict amitie of ancient times: as for example, ſome verie ſolemnelie accorded in the times of king Henrie the ſixt our progenitor, and Philip the ſecond duke of Burgundie, and inheritour to the countie of Flanders by the ladie Margaret his grandmother, which was aboue one hundred & fortie yeares paſt, & the ſame alſo renewed by the noble duke Charles his ſon, father to the king of Spaines grandmother, and huſband to the ladie Margaret ſiſter to our great grandfather king Edward the fourth: and after that, of new ofttimes renewed by our moſt noble & ſage grandfather king Henrie the ſeuenth, and the archduke Philip grandfather to the king of Spaine now being: and in latter times, often renewed betwixt our father of noble memorie king Henrie the eight, and Charles the fift emperor of Almaine, father alſo to the preſent king of Spaine.

Treaties extant of ancient time, betwixt the kings of England and the dukes of Burgundie, for the commerce betwixt their countries.

In all which treaties, tranſactions, and confederations of amitie and mutuall commerce, it was alſo at all times ſpeciallie and principallie conteined

Conuentions for the ſubiects of either ſide, to ſhew mutuall fauors one to the other.

in interpreſſe words, by conuentions, concords, and concluſions, that the naturall people, and ſubiects of either ſide, ſhould ſhew mutuall fauours and duties one to the other, and ſhould ſafelie, fréelie and ſecurelie commerce togither in euerie their countries; and ſo hath the ſame mutuall and naturall concourſe and commerce béene without interruption continued in manie ages, farre aboue the like example of anie other countries in chriſtendome, to the honour and ſtrength of the princes, and to the ſingular great benefit and inriching of their people: vntill of late yeares that the king of Spaine departing out of his low countries into Spaine, hath béene (as it is to be thought) counſelled by his councellors of Spaine, to appoint Spaniards, forrenners and ſtrangers of ſtrange bloud, men more exerciſed in warres than in peaceable gouernement, and ſome of them notablie delighted in bloud, as hath appeared by their actions, to be the chiefeſt gouernours of all his ſaid low countries, contrarie to the ancient lawes and cuſtomes thereof, hauing great plentie of noble, valiant and faithfull perſons naturallie borne, and ſuch as the emperour Charles, and the king himſelfe had to their great honours vſed in their ſeruice, able to haue béene imploied in the rule of thoſe countries.

Spaniards and ſtrangers latelie appointed gouernors in the low countries, to the violation of the liberties of the countrie.

But theſe Spaniards, being méere ſtrangers, hauing no naturall regard in their gouernement to the maintenance of thoſe countries and people in their ancient and naturall maner of peaceable liuing, as the moſt noble and wiſe emperor Charles; yea and as his ſonne king Philip himſelfe had, whileſt he remained in thoſe countries, and vſed the counſels of the ſtates and naturall of the countries, not violating the ancient liberties of the countries: but contrariwiſe, theſe Spaniards being exalted to abſolute gouernement, by ambition, and for priuat lucre haue violentlie broken the ancient lawes and liberties of all the countries, and in a tyrannous ſort haue baniſhed, killed and deſtroied without order of law, within the ſpace of few moneths, manie of the moſt ancient and principall perſons of the naturall nobilitie that were moſt worthie of gouernement. And howſoeuer in the beginning of theſe cruell perſecutions, the pretenſe therof was for maintenance of the Romiſh religion: yet they ſpared not to depriue verie manie catholikes and eccleſiaſticall perſons of their franchiſes and priuileges: and of the chiefeſt that were executed of the nobilitie, none was in the whole countrie more affected to that religion than was the noble and valiant countie of Egmond, the verie glorie of that countrie, who neither for his ſingular victories in the ſeruice of the king of Spaine can be forgotten in the true hiſtories, nor yet for the crueltie vſed for his deſtruction, to be but for euer lamented in the harts of the naturall people of that countrie.

The deſtruction of the nobilitie, and the people of the countries by the Spaniſh gouernment.

The lamentable [illegible] death of the countie of Egmond, the glorie of thoſe countries.

And furthermore, to bring theſe whole countries in ſeruitude to Spaine, theſe forren gouernours haue by long inteſtine warre, with multitude of Spaniards, and with ſome few Italians and Almains, made the greater part of the ſaid countries (which with their riches by common eſtimation anſwered the emperour Charles equallie to his Indies) in a maner deſolat, and haue alſo lamentablie deſtroied by ſword, famine, and other cruell maners of death, a great part of the naturall people, & now the rich townes and ſtrong places being deſolate of their naturall inhabitants, are held and kept chieflie with force by the Spaniards. All which pitifull miſeries and horrible calamities of theſe moſt rich countries and people, are of all their neighbours at this daie, euen of ſuch as in ancient time haue béene at frequent diſcord with them through naturall compaſſion verie greatlie pitied, which appeared ſpeciallie this preſent yeare, when the French king pretended to haue receiued them to his protection, had not (as the ſtates of the countrie & their deputies were anſwered) that certeine vntimelie and vnlooked for complots of the houſe of Guiſe, ſtirred and mainteined by monie out of Spaine, diſturbed the good and generall peace of France, and thereby vrged the king to forbeare from the reſolution he had made, not onlie to aid the oppreſſed people of the low countries againſt the Spaniards, but alſo to haue accepted them as his owne ſubiects. But in verie truth, howſoeuer they were pitied, and in a ſort for a time comforted & kept in hope in France by the French king, who alſo hath oftentimes earneſtlie ſolicited vs as quéene of England, both by meſſage and writing to be carefull of their defenſe: yet in reſpect that they were otherwiſe more ſtreictlie knit in ancient friendſhip to this realme than to anie other countrie, we are ſure that they could be pitied of none for this long time with more cauſe and griefe generallie, than of our ſubiects of this our realme of England, being their moſt ancient alies and familiar neighbours: and that in ſuch manner, as this our realme of England and thoſe countries haue béene by common language of long time reſembled and termed as man and wife.

The rich townes and ſtrengths with the wealth thereof poſſeſſed by the Spaniards.

The French kings offers to haue aided and receiued to his ſubiection the oppreſſed people of the low countries.

And for theſe vrgent cauſes and manie others, we haue by manie fréendlie meſſages and ambaſſadors, by manie letters and writings to the ſaid king of Spaine our brother and alie, declared our compaſſion of this ſo euill and cruell vſage of his naturall and loiall people by ſundrie his martiall gouernors and other his men of warre, all ſtrangers to theſe his countries. And furthermore, as a good louing ſiſter to him, and a naturall good neighbour to his lowe countries and people, we haue often, and often againe moſt friendlie warned him, that if he did not otherwiſe by his wiſedome and princelie clemencie reſtreine the tyrannie of his gouernours and crueltie of his men of warre, we feared that the people of his countries ſhould be forced for ſafetie of their liues, and for continuance of their natiue countrie in the former ſtate of their liberties, to ſéeke the protection of ſome other forreine lord, or rather to yéeld themſelues wholie to the ſoueraigntie of ſome mightie prince, as by the ancient lawes of their countries, and by ſpeciall priuileges granted by ſome of the lords and dukes of the countries to the people, they doo pretend and affirme, that in ſuch caſes of generall iniuſtice, and vpon ſuch violent breaking of their priuileges they are frée from their former homages, and at libertie to make choiſe of anie other prince to be their prince and head.

The quéene of Englands continuall fréendlie aduiſes to the king of Spaine for reſtreining of the tyrannie of his gouernors.

The proofe whereof by examples paſt is to be ſéene & read in the ancient hiſtories of diuerſe alterations, of the lords and ladies of the countries of Brabant, Flanders, Holland, and Zeland, and other countries to them vnited by the ſtates and people of the countries; and that by ſome ſuch alterations, as the ſtories doo teſtifie, Philip the duke of Burgundie came to his title, from which the king of Spaines intereſt is deriued: but the further diſcuſſion hereof, we leaue to the view of the monuments and records of the countries. And now, for the purpoſes to ſtaie them from yéelding themſelues in anie like ſort to the ſoueraigntie of anie other ſtrange prince, certeine yéeres paſt, vpon the earneſt requeſt of ſundrie of the greateſt perſons of degrée in thoſe countries, and moſt obedient ſubiects to the king, ſuch as were the duke of Aſcot, and the marqueſſe of Hauerie yet liuing, and of ſuch others as had principall offices in thoſe countries in the time of the emperour Charles, we yéelded at their importunat requeſts, to grant them them preſts of monie, onelie to continue them as his ſubiects, and to mainteine themſelues in their iuſt defenſe againſt the violence and cruelties of the Spaniards their oppreſſours, thereby ſtaieng them from yéelding their ſubiection to anie other prince from the ſaid king of Spaine: and during the time of that our aid giuen to them, and their ſtaie in their obedience to the king of Spaine, we did fréelie acquaint the ſame king with our actions, and did ſtill continue our fréendlie aduiſes to him, to mooue him to command his gouernours and men of warre, not to vſe ſuch inſolent cruelties againſt his people, as might make them to deſpaire of his fauours, and ſéeke ſome other lord.

The quéene of Englands means vſed to ſtaie the ſtates of the lowe countries frō yéelding their ſubiection to anie other forreine prince.

And in theſe kind of perſuaſions and actions we continued manie yéeres, not onelie for compaſſion of the miſerable ſtate of the countries, but of a naturall diſpoſition to haue the ancient conditions of ſtreict amitie and commerce for our kingdoms and people to continue with the ſtates and the people of the ſaid dukedome of Burgundie and the appendents, and namelie with our next neighbours the countries of Flanders, Holland and Zeland. For we did manifeſtlie ſée, if the nation of Spaine ſhould make a conqueſt of thoſe countries, as was and yet is apparantlie intended, and plant themſelues there as they haue doone in Naples and other countries, adding thereto the late examples of the violent hoſtile enterpriſe of a power of Spaniards, being ſent within theſe few yeares by the king of Spaine and the pope into our realme of Ireland, with an intent manifeſtlie confeſſed by the capteins, that thoſe numbers were ſent aforehand to ſeize vpon ſome ſtrength there, to the intent with other great forces to purſue a conqueſt thereof: we did (we ſaie againe) manifeſtlie ſée in what danger our ſelfe, our countries and people might ſhortlie be, if in conuenient time we did not ſpéedilie otherwiſe regard to preuent or ſtaie the ſame. And yet notwithſtanding our ſaid often requeſts and aduiſes giuen to the king of Spaine, manifeſtlie for his owne weale and honor, we found him by his councell of Spaine ſo vnwilling in anie ſort to incline to our fréendlie counſell, that his gouernours and chéefeteins in his low countries increaſed their cruelties towards his owne afflicted people, and his officers in Spaine offered dailie greater iniuries to ours, reſorting thither for traffike: yea, they of his councell in Spaine would not permit our expreſſe meſſenger with our letters to come to the king their maſters preſence: a matter verie ſtrange, and againſt the law of nations.

The enterpriſe of the Spaniards in Ireland ſent by the king of Spaine and the pope.

The refuſall of the quéenes meſſenger, and hir letters to the king of Spaine.

The iuſt cauſes of diſmiſſing of Barnardin Mendoza out of England.

And the cauſe of this our writing and ſending to the king, procéeded of matter that was worthie to be knowne to the king, and not vnméet now alſo to be declared to the world, to ſhew both our good diſpoſition towards the king in imparting to him our gréefes, and to let it appeare how euill we haue béene vſed by his miniſters, as in ſome part may appeare by this that followeth. Although we could not haue theſe manie yeares paſt anie of our ſeruants, whom we ſent at ſundrie times as our ambaſſadours to the king our good brother (as was méet) ſuffered to continue there without manie iniuries and indignities offered to their families, and diuerſe times to their owne perſons by the greateſt of his councellours, ſo as they were conſtreined to leaue their places, and ſome expelled and in a ſort baniſhed the countrie, without cauſe giuen by them, or notified to vs: yet we, minding to continue verie good fréendſhip with the king, as his good ſiſter, did of long time and manie yeares giue fauourable allowance to all that came as his ambaſſadours to vs, ſauing onelie vpon manifeſt dangerous practiſes attempted by two of them to trouble our eſtate, whereof the one was Girald Deſpes, a verie turbulent ſpirited perſon, and altogither vnſkilfull and vnapt to deale in princes affaires being in amitie, as at his returne into Spaine he was ſo there alſo reputed: the other and laſt was Barnardin de Mendoza, one whome we did accept and vſe with great fauour a long time, as was manifeſtlie ſéene in our court, and we thinke cannot be denied by himſelfe: but yet of late yeares (we know not by what direction) we found him to be a ſecret great fauourer to ſundrie our euill diſpoſed and ſeditious ſubiects, not onelie to ſuch as lurked in our realme, but alſo to ſuch as fled the ſame, being notoriouſlie condemned as open rebels & traitours, with whome by his letters, meſſages, and ſecret counſels he did in the end deuiſe how with a power of men, partlie to come out of Spaine, partlie out of the low countries, whereof he gaue them great comfort in the kings name, an inuaſion might be made into our realme, ſetting downe in writing the manner how the ſame ſhould be doone, with what numbers of men and ſhips, and vpon what coaſts, ports, and places of our realme by ſpeciall name, and who the perſons ſhould be in our realme of no ſmall account, that ſhould fauour this inuaſion, and take part with the inuadours, with manie other circumſtances declaring his full ſet purpoſe and labours taken, to trouble vs and our realme verie dangerouſlie, as hath béene moſt cléerelie prooued and confeſſed by ſuch as were in that confederacie with him, whereof ſome are fled and now doo frequent his companie in France, and ſome were taken, who confeſſed at great length by writing the whole courſe herein held by the ſaid ambaſſadour, as was manifeſtlie of late time publiſhed to the world vpon Francis Throgmortons a principall traitours examination.

Two turbulent ſpirited perſons (Spaniards) dooing what they could to ſet all Engliſh in a tumult.

Sée the voluntarie confeſſion of F. Throgmorton in pages 1370, 1373.

And when we found manifeſtlie this ambaſſadour ſo dangerous an inſtrument, or rather a head to a rebellion and inuaſion; and that for a yeare or more togither he neuer brought to vs anie letter from the king his maſter, notwithſtanding our often requeſt made to him that he would by ſome letter from the king to vs, let it appeare that it was [illegible]e kings will that he ſhould deale with vs in his maſters name in ſundrie things that he propounded to vs as his ambaſſadour, which we did iudge to be contrarie to the king his maſters will: we did finallie cauſe him to be charged with theſe dangerous practiſes, and made it patent to him how, and by whome, with manie other circumſtances we knew it, and therefore cauſed him in verie gentle ſort to be content within ſome reaſonable time to depart out of our realme, the rather for his owne ſafetie, as one in verie déed mortallie hated of our people: for the which we granted him fauourable conduct, both to the ſea and ouer the ſea: and therevpon we did ſpéedilie ſend a ſeruant of ours into Spaine with our letters to the king, onelie to certifie him of this accident, and to make the whole matter apparant vnto him: and this was the meſſenger afore mentioned, that might not be ſuffered to deliuer our meſſage or our letters to the king.

The courteous dealing of hir maieſtie with Mendoza (a man mortallie hated) departing out of England.

And beſide theſe indignities, it is moſt manifeſt how his miniſters alſo haue both heretofore manie times, and now latelie practiſed here in England by meanes of certeine rebels, to haue procured ſundrie inuaſions of our realme, by their forces out of Spaine and the low countries: verie hard recompenſes (we may ſaie) for ſo manie our good offices. Wherevpon we hope no reaſonable perſon can blame vs, if we haue diſpoſed our ſelues to change this our former courſe, and more carefullie to looke to the ſaftie of our ſelfe and our people: and finding our owne dangers in déed verie great and imminent, we haue béene the more vrgentlie prouoked to attempt and accelerat ſome good remedie, for that beſides manie other aduiſes giuen vs both at home & from abrode, in due time to withſtand theſe dangers, we haue found the generall diſpoſition of all our owne faithfull people verie readie in this caſe, and earneſt in offering to vs both in parlements and otherwiſe, their ſeruices with their bodies and bloud, and their aids with their lands and goods, to withſtand and preuent this preſent common danger to our realme and themſelues, euidentlie ſéene and feared by the ſubuerting and rooting vp of the ancient nation of theſe low countries, and by planting the Spaniſh nation and men of war, enimies to our countries, there ſo néere vnto vs.

The quéene of Englãds prouiding for the libertie of Scotland from the ſeruitude wherein the houſe of Guiſe meant to haue broght it.

And beſides theſe occaſions and conſiderations, we did alſo call to our remembrance our former fortunat procéeding by Gods ſpeciall fauor, in the beginning of our reigne, in remedieng of a like miſchéefe that was intended againſt vs in Scotland by certeine Frenchmen, who then were directed onelie by the houſe of Guiſe, by colour of the marriage of their néece the quéene of Scots with the Dolphin of France, in like maner as the ofſprings of the ſaid houſe haue euen now latelie ſought to atteine to the like inordinate power in France: a matter of ſome conſequence for our ſelues to conſider; although we hope the king our good brother profeſſing ſincere friendſhip towards vs, as we profeſſe the like to him, will moderate this aſpiring greatneſſe of that houſe, that neither himſelfe, nor the princes of his bloud be ouerruled, nor we (minding to continue perfect friendſhip with the king & his bloud) be by the ſaid houſe of Guiſe & their faction diſquieted or diſturbed in our countries. But now to returne to this like example of Scotland aforeſaid. When the French had in like maner (as the Spaniards haue now of long time attempted in the low countries) ſought by force to haue ſubdued the people there, and brought them into a ſeruitude to the crowne of France, and alſo by the ambitious deſires of the ſaid houſe of Guiſe, to haue procéeded to a warre by waie of Scotland, for the conqueſt of our crowne for their néece the quéene of Scots (a matter moſt manifeſt to the common knowledge of the world) it pleaſed almightie God, as it remaineth in good memorie to our honor and comfort, to further our tention and honorable and iuſt actions at that time in ſuch ſort, as by our aiding then of the nation of Scotland being ſore oppreſſed with the French, and vniuerſallie requiring our aid, we procured to that realme (though to our great coſt) a full deliuerance of the force of ſtrangers and danger of ſeruitude, and reſtored peace to the whole countrie, which hath continued there euer ſince manie yeres, ſauing that at ſome time of parcialities of certeine of the noble men, as hath béene vſuall in that countrie, in the minoritie of the yoong king, there haue riſen ſome inward troubles, which for the moſt part we haue in fauor of the king and his gouernors vſed meanes to pacifie: ſo as at this daie ſuch is the quietneſſe in Scotland, as the king our deare brother & couſine, by namē Iames the ſixt, a prince of great hope for manie good princelie reſpects, reigneth there in honor and loue of his people, and in verie good and perfect amitie with vs and our countrie. And ſo our actions at that time came to ſo good ſucceſſe by the goodneſſe of God, as both our owne realme, and that of Scotland, hath euer ſince remained in better amitie and peace than can be remembred theſe manie hundred yeares before; and yet nothing hereby doone by vs, nor anie cauſe iuſtlie giuen: but that alſo the French kings that haue ſince ſuccéeded, which haue béene thrée in number, and all brethren, haue made and concluded diuerſe treaties for good peace with vs, which preſentlie continue in force on both parties, notwithſtanding our foreſaid actions attempted, for remoouing out of Scotland of the ſaid French forces, ſo tranſported by the onelie direction of the houſe of Guiſe.

The realme of Scotland reſtored to the ancient fréedome, and ſo pacified by the preſent king by the meanes onelie of the quéene of England.

And therefore, to conclude for the declaration of our preſent intention at this time, we hope it ſhall of all perſons abroad be well interpreted, as we know it will be of ſuch as are not led by parcialitie, that vpon the often and continuall lamentable requeſts made to vs by the vniuerſall ſtates of the countries of Holland, Zeland, Guelders, and other prouinces with them vnited (being deſperat of the king of Spaines fauours) for our ſuccours to be yéelded to them, onelie for their defenſe againſt the Spaniards and other ſtrangers, and therewith finding manifeſtlie by our often and importunat requeſts and aduiſes giuen to the king of Spaine, no hope of reliefe of theſe their miſeries, but rather an increaſe thereof by dailie conqueſts of their townes and ſlaughter of their people (though in verie truth we cannot impute the increaſe of anie late cruelties to the perſon of him that now hath the title of generall gouernor, ſhewing his naturall diſpoſition more inclinable to mercie and clemencie, than it ſéemeth he can direct the hearts of the Spaniards vnder him, that haue béene ſo long trained in ſhedding of bloud vnder the former Spaniſh gouernors) and ioining thereunto our owne danger at hand, by the ouerthrow and deſtruction of our neighbours, and acceſſe and planting of the great forces of the Spaniards ſo néere to our countries, with precedent arguments of manie troubleſome attempts againſt our realme: we did therefore by good aduiſe and after long deliberation determine, to ſend certeine companies of ſouldiors to aid the naturall people of thoſe countries, onelie to defend them and their townes from ſacking and deſolation, & thereby to procure them ſafetie, to the honor of God, whome they deſire to ſerue ſincerelie as chriſtian people according to his holie word, and to inioie their ancient liberties for them and their poſteritie, and ſo conſequentlie to preſerue and continue the lawfull and ancient commerce betwixt our people and thoſe countries and ours.

The concluſion of the cauſes of ſending of certeine cõpanies of Engliſh ſouldiors to the defenſe of the oppreſſed people of the low countries, and to withſtand the attempts againſt this realme.

And ſo we hope our intention herein, and our ſubſequent actions will be by Gods fauour both honorablie interpreted of all perſons (ſauing of the oppreſſors themſelues, and their partizans) in that we meane not hereby, either for ambition or malice (the two roots of all iniuſtice) to make anie particular profit hereof to our ſelfe or to our people; onelie deſiring at this time to obteine by Gods fauour for the countries, a deliuerance of them from warre by the Spaniards and forraines: a reſtitution of their ancient liberties and gouernement by ſome chriſtian peace, and thereby a ſuertie for our ſelues and our realme to be frée from inuading neighbors: and our people to inioie in thoſe countries their lawfull commerce and intercourſe of friendſhip & merchandize, according to the ancient vſage and treaties of intercourſe, made betwixt our progenitors and the lords and earles of thoſe countries, and betwixt our people and the people of thoſe countries.

Thrée ſpeciall things reaſonablie deſired by the quéene of England.
1. The end of warres with reſtitution of the low countries to their ancient liberties.
2. Suertie frõ inuaſion of hir owne realme.
3. And renewing of the mutuall traffike betwéene the countries.

And though our further intention alſo is, or maie be, to take into our gard ſome few townes vpon the ſea ſide next oppoſite to our realme, which otherwiſe might be in danger to be taken by the ſtrangers, enimies of the countrie: yet therein conſidering we haue no meaning at this time to take and reteine the ſame to our owne proper vſe: we hope that all perſons will thinke it agréeable with good reaſon and princelie policie, that we ſhould haue the gard and vſe of ſome ſuch places for ſure acceſſe and receſſe of our people and ſouldiors in ſafetie, and for furniture of them with vittels and other things requiſit and neceſſarie, whileſt it ſhall be néedfull for them to continue in thoſe countries for the aiding thereof in theſe their great calamities, miſeries, and imminent danger, and vntill the countries may be deliuered of ſuch ſtrange forces as doo now oppreſſe them, and recouer their ancient lawfull liberties and maner of gouernement, to liue in peace as they haue heretofore doone, and doo now moſt earneſtlie in lamentable manner deſire to doo. Which are the verie onelie true ends of all our actions now intended: howſoeuer malicious toongs maie vtter their cankred conceits to the contrarie, as at this daie the world aboundeth with ſuch blaſphemous reports in writings and infamous libels, as in no age the diuell hath more abounded with notable ſpirits repleniſhed with all wickedneſſe to vtter his rage againſt profeſſors of chriſtian religion. But thereof we leaue the reuenge to God the ſearcher of hearts, hoping that he beholding the ſinceritie of our heart, will grant good ſucceſſe to our intentions, whereby a chriſtian peace may inſue to his diuine honor, and comfort to all them that loue peace trulie, and will ſéeke it ſincerelie.

The cauſes of taking ſome townes into hir maieſties cuſtodie.

An addition to the declaration, touching the ſlanders publiſhed of hir maieſtie.

AFter we had finiſhed our declaration, there came to our hands a pamphlet written in Italian, printed at Milan, intituled Nuouo aduiſo, directed to the archbiſhop of Milan, conteining a report of the expugnation of Antwerp by the prince of Parma: by the which we found our ſelfe moſt maliciouſlie charged with two notable crimes, no leſſe hatefull to the world, than moſt repugnant and contrarie to our owne naturall inclination. The one with ingratitude towards the king of Spaine, who (as the author ſaith) ſaued our life being iuſtlie by ſentence adiudged to death in our ſiſters time: the other, that there were ſome perſons procured to be corrupted with great promiſes, and that with our intelligence, as the reporter addeth in a parentheſis in theſe words (as it was ſaid) that the life of the prince of Parma ſhould be taken awaie. And for the better prouing and countenancing of this horrible lie, it is further added in the ſaid pamphlet, that it pleaſed the Lord God to diſcouer this, and bring two of the wicked perſons to iuſtice. Now, knowing how men are maliciouſlie bent in this declining age of the world, both to iudge, ſpeake, and write maliciouſlie, falſlie, and vnreuerentlie of princes: and holding nothing ſo déere vnto vs, as the conſeruation of our reputation and honor to be blameleſſe: we found it verie expedient, not to ſuffer two ſuch horrible imputations to paſſe vnder ſilence; leſt for lacke of anſwer, it might argue a kind of guiltineſſe, and did therefore thinke, that what might be alledged by vs for our iuſtification in that behalfe, might moſt aptlie be ioined vnto this former declaration now to be publiſhed, to laie open before the world, the maner and ground of our procéeding in the cauſes of the low countries.

The ſumme of a ſlanderous pamphlet publiſhed in the Italian toong againſt the quéenes maieſtie.

The quéenes maieſtie is gelous ouer the conſeruation of hir reputation.

And for anſwer of the firſt point wherewith we are charged, touching our ingratitude towards the king of Spaine; as we doo moſt willinglie acknowledge that we were beholding vnto him in the time of our late ſiſter, which we then did acknowledge verie thankefullie, and haue ſought manie waies ſince in like ſort to requite, as in our former declaration by our actions maie appeare: ſo doo we vtterlie denie as a moſt manifeſt vntruth, that euer he was the cauſe of the ſauing of our life as a perſon by courſe of iuſtice ſentenced vnto death, who euer carried our ſelfe towards our ſaid ſiſter in dutifull ſort, as our loialtie was neuer called in queſtion, much leſſe anie ſentence of death pronounced againſt vs: a matter ſuch, as in reſpect of the ordinarie courſe of procéeding, as by proceſſe in law, by place of triall, by the iudge that ſhould pronounce ſuch ſentence, and other neceſſarie circumſtances in like caſes vſuall, eſpeciallie againſt one of our qualitie, as it could not but haue béene publikelie knowne, if anie ſuch thing had beene put in execution. This then being true, we leaue to the world to iudge how maliciouſlie and iniuriouſlie the author of the ſaid pamphlet dealeth with vs, in charging vs by ſo notable an vntruth, with a vice that of all other we doo moſt hate and abhorre. And therefore by the manifeſt vntruth of this imputation, men not tranſported with paſſion maie eaſilie diſcerne what vntruth is conteined in the ſecond, by the which we are charged to haue béene acquainted with an intended attempt againſt the life of the ſaid prince: a matter, if anie ſuch thing ſhould haue béene by vs intended, muſt haue procéeded either of a miſliking we had of his perſon, or that the proſecution of the warres in the low countries was ſo committed vnto him, as no other might proſecute the ſame but he.

An anſwer to ẏ firſt point of the ſaid pamphlet, clearing hir highnes of ingratitude.

The ſecond point of the pamphlet anſwered to the full ſatiſfaction of anie that is reaſonable.

And firſt for his perſon, we could neuer learne that he hath at anie time, by act or ſpeach, doone anie thing that might iuſtlie bréed a miſlike in vs towards him, much leſſe a hatred againſt his perſon in ſo high a degrée, as to be either priuie or aſſenting to the taking awaie of his life. Beſides, he is one of whom we haue euer had an honorable conceit, in reſpect of thoſe ſingular rare parts we alwaies haue noted in him, which hath woone vnto him as great reputation, as anie man this daie liuing carrieth of his degrée and qualitie: and ſo haue we alwaies deliuered out by ſpeach vnto the world, when anie occaſion hath béene offered to make mention of him. Now touching the proſecution committed vnto him of the warres in the low countries, as all men of iudgement know, that the taking awaie of his life carrieth no likelihood that the ſame ſhall worke anie end of the ſaid proſecution: ſo is it manifeſtlie knowne, that no man hath dealt more honorablie than the ſaid prince, either in dulie obſeruing of his promiſe, or extending grace and mercie, where merit and deſert hath craued the ſame: and therefore no greater impietie by anie could be wrought, nor nothing more preiudiciall to our ſelfe (ſo long as the king ſhall continue the proſecution of the cauſe in that forcible ſort he now dooth) than to be an inſtrument to take him awaie from thenſe by ſuch violent meanes, that hath dealt in a more honorable and gratious ſort in the charge committed vnto him, than anie other that hath euer gone before him, or is likelie to ſucceed after him.

The proſecution of the warres in the low countries is not like to ceaſe, though the prince of Parma were dead.

Now therefore how vnlikelie it is, that we hauing neither cauſe to miſlike of his perſon, nor that the proſecution of the warres ſhould ceaſe by loſſe of him, ſhould be either author, or anie waie aſſenting to ſo horrible a fact, we referre to the iudgement of ſuch as looke into cauſes, not with the eies of their affection; but doo meaſure and weigh things according to honor and reaſon. Beſides, it is likelie if it had béene true that we had bin anie waie chargeable (as the author reporteth) the confeſſions of the parties executed (importing ſuch matter as by him is alledged) would haue béene both produced and publiſhed: for malice leaueth nothing vnſearched, that

This being dulie pondered, all the world maie ſée how vniuſtlie hir highneſſe is ſlandered.

The nature malice comp in a ſentence of few words.

maie nouriſh the venem of that humor.

The beſt courſe therefore that both we and all other princes can hold in this vnfortunat age that ouerfloweth with numbers of malignant ſpirits, is through the grace and goodneſſe of almightie God, to direct our courſe in ſuch ſort, as they maie rather ſhew their wils through malice, than with iuſt cauſe by deſert, to ſaie ill, or deface princes either by ſpeach or writing: aſſuring our ſelues, that beſides the puniſhment that ſuch wicked and infamous libellors ſhall receiue at the hands of the almightie for deprauing of princes and lawfull magiſtrats, who are God miniſters; they both are and alwaies ſhall be thought by all good men, vnwoorthie to liue vpon the face of the earth.

The reward that wicked and infamous libellors ſhall reape at the hands of God and men.

Giuen at Richmount the firſt of October, 1585 and the 27 yeare of the reigne of our ſouereigne ladie the queene, to be publiſhed.

The earle of Leiceſters paſſing ouer into the low countries.

In the moneths of Nouember and December, manie horſſes and men were ſhipped at the Tower wharffe to be tranſported ouer into the low countries. And on the firſt of December the right honorable lord Robert Dudleie earle of Leiceſter, lord lieutenant generall (after he had taken his leaue of hir maieſty & the court) with his traine entred the towne of Colcheſter in Eſſex, where the maior & his brethren, all in ſcarlet gownes, with multitudes of people met him, and ſo with great ſolemnitie entred the towne, where he lodged that night, and on the next morrow ſet forward to Harwich, into the which towne he was accordinglie receiued and interteined.

A diſcourſe of the earles of Leiceſter by ſucceſſion.

The collection of the earles of Leiceſter by Fr. Thin 1585.

This going of Robert Sutton of Dudleie the ſonne of Iohn Dudleie duke of Northumberland into the low countries, hath occaſioned my pen to treat ſomewhat of the earles of Leiceſter. Wherefore ſith there hath beene (ſome hundred yeares paſt) ſome noble perſons indued with that honorable title of the erldome of Leiceſter before & ſince the conqueſt; therefore determining to make ſome mention of them, being a thing not common, and ſo much the more woorthie of continuance to poſteritie: I ſaie, that if any ſhall thinke this diſcourſe ouer briefe, and ſlender mention of ſuch honorable perſons, of their woorthie exploits, of their antiquitie, of their deſcents and ſucceſſion; let him for the preſent ſatiſfie himſelfe with this whatſoeuer it now be, vntill it ſhall pleaſe God to giue better abilitie & more time, to deliuer to the world the whole diſcourſe of their liues, which I haue alreadie roughlie hewen out of the rocke in a booke purpoſelie intreating thereof in Engliſh, as I haue doone of the other earles of this realme.

But here before I come to deliuer the names of theſe earles, it ſhall not be amiſſe to note the opinion of the beſt antiquaries of our age, and of ſuch other perſons, as for their rare knowledge and ſingular care in deliuering a truth to the world of matters belonging to antiquitie, deſeruing ſingular commendation and aduancement. Theſe antiquaries (I ſaie) of our time are led by ſome authoritie, (but by more reaſon) to ſuppoſe, that before Edward the Confeſſors time, there were not anie earles in England of ſuch ſtate and maieſtie by creation of a lineall deſcent, as they now and manie yeares ſince be, and haue beene; but that they were onelie lords of thoſe places, whereof they were intituled, as members vnder him that was principall king of that prouince, and onelie called Comites (as in thoſe daies there were Duces and Comites, not of anie title of honor of place, but by vertue of their office) by reaſon that they were Companions appointed to aſſociat the duke, capteine or leader of the men at arms. To which opinion I do moſt willingly for this time conſent, as well for that it ſtandeth with reaſon; as for that in all charters before the conqueſt, ſuch as were witneſſes to anie ſuch deed, did onlie ſubſcribe their name of duke and earle, without anie name of place, or title of honor, by reaſon of that place. As for example appeareth in a charter dated the foureteenth yeare of king Edgar, and in the yeare of our Lord nine hundred three ſcore and nine, in which amongſt other things he gaue Howell to Weſtminſter church: whereunto were witneſſes beſides the clergie, Alfer dux, Marcher dux, Oſlac dux, Birnoth dux, Oſred dux, Fordwine dux, &c. And if it be obiected, that vpon the diuiſion of the land into prouinces or ſhires by Alured, that then there were creations of ſeuerall noblemen of ſuch ſeuerall places; I will not much contend therein: but yet I ſaie that then they were not ſuch as had permanent ſucceſſion of thoſe titles of honour to their heires, but were remooueable at the princes pleaſure, as it is at this daie in the ſhiriffe of euerie ſhire, being the deputie of euerie ſuch earle as his name dooth well prooue, being Vicecomes. Yet ſince the time of Edward the Confeſſor (and as I ſuppoſe) ſomewhat aboue that, in the time of Canutus there were earles and lords of ſpecial places and titles of honour: but I as yet not hauing anie certeintie to ſet downe therein, will onelie deliuer that which I haue ſeene in an ancient pedegree written about the conqueſt time touching the earles of Leiceſter; not deciding what kind of earles they were either inheritable of that honor, or remooueable at the princes pleaſure; but leauing the ſame to others, who either will or can better that which I haue doone: wherefore thus I begin with thoſe earles of Leiceſter.

Leofrike 1. Anonymus. M.S.

Leofricus, the firſt of that name, was honored with the title of the earledome of Leiceſter in the daies of Ethelbald king of Mercia, which Ethelbald was ſlaine about the yeare of our redemption ſeauen hundred fortie and nine.

Algarus 1.

Algarus, the firſt of that name, ſonne of the ſaid Leofrike was earle of Leiceſter, and liued in the time of Offa the great, Kenulphus, Kenelmus, Ceolwlfus, Bernulffus, Ludicanus, and Witlaffus kings of Mercia, which laſt king began his reigne ouer that prouince, in the yeare of Chriſt eight hundred twentie and ſix; during whoſe reigne this Algarus died, and was buried at Crowland.

Algarus 2.

Algarus, the ſecond of that name, by ſome called Alfricus the ſecond, ſonne of Algarus the firſt, liued vnder the gouernement of Burred king of Mercia, which Burred was expelled by the Danes, in the two and twentith yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our Lord eight hundred ſeauentie and two; which Algarus was killed by the Danes, Henguar and Hubba, in the yeare that the ſonne of God was borne of the virgin eight hundred ſeuentie and three, at Strelingham or Skrekingham in Keſtinen, and buried at Crowland.

Leofrike 2.

Leofrike, the ſecond of that name, the ſonne of Algarus the ſecond, liued in the time of Alured or Alfred, and of Edward the elder kings of the Weſtſaxons, which Edward began his reigne about the yeare that the word became fleſh nine hundred.

Leofwine.

Leofwine the ſonne of Leofrike the ſecond, was earle of Leiceſter, and liued vnder the reigne of Athelſtane, Edmund, Eldred, Edwine, and Edgar, kings of England, of which kings the ſaid Edgar began his reigne, in the yere that the ſonne of God tooke on him the forme of man nine hundred fiftie and nine, vnder whoſe reigne this Leofwine departed this life, leauing behind him thrée ſonnes, Leofrike, Edwine, and Norman, whereof Edwine was ſlaine by the Welchmen, and Norman was killed (with Edricus de Streonia) by Canutus the Dane king of England, Scotland, Denmarke, and Norweie.

Leofrike 3.

Leofrike, the third of that name, the ſonne of Leofwine, was the moſt famous man of his time, as well for gouernement, as for building of monaſteries; he was earle of Cheſter, Leiceſter, and Couentrie, or rather (to ſpeake better) earle of Mercia, which conteined thoſe thrée prouinces, and manie more; he liued in the daies of Edward the ſecond, Ethelred, Edmund, Canutus, Harold Harefoot, Hardeknute, and Edward the third, commonlie called Edward the Confeſſor, being all kings before the conqueſt. This man was of great yeares, and died at his manor of Bromleie, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiftie and ſix, being ten yeares before the conqueſt, and was buried in Couentrie, in the alleie which he founded; he maried Godiua, by whome he had Algarus.

Algarus 3.

Algarus the third of that name ſonne of Leofrike, ſuccéeding his fathers inheritance, had by Edward the Confeſſor further added vnto it the earldome of Oxford, for which becomming verie proud, he often aduanced himſelfe againſt the prince, by occaſion whereof he was manie times baniſhed, but reſtored againe to the earledome of Leiceſter by Edward the Confeſſor: he liued in the time of Edward the Confeſſor, and of Harold the ſonne of Goodwine, earle of Kent, and conſtable of Douer caſtle. He is appointed by manie authors to haue manie children, as Edwine earle of Mercia: Morkarus earle of Northumberland: Swardus, or rather Siwardus, earle of Southampton at the time of the conqueſt: Algitha the wife of Harold the ſonne of Goodwine, as ſaith Henrie Knighton, lib. 1. cap. 2. and Lucia firſt maried to Iuon Tailbois, by whom ſhe had no iſſue: after maried to Roger the ſonne of Girald Romare, by whom ſhe had iſſue William Romare heire to his father, and earle of Lincoln. And thirdlie ſhe was married to Ranulph the ſecond of that name earle of Cheſter, by whom ſhe had iſſue Ranulph the third of that name, earle of Cheſter.

Morkar.

Morkar was earle of Leiceſter and Lincolne at the time of the conqueſt, as appeareth by a booke carried about in the hands of all men, compoſed of all the nobilitie ſince the conqueſt: which booke within ſome lines after, dooth alſo name one Simon Silueſter to be earle of Leiceſter at the time of the conqueſt, by which of neceſſitie there muſt be two earles of Leiceſter at the time of the conqueſt, or elſe there appeareth a great contradiction in that booke; ſo that which waie ſo euer it be taken, the booke is imperfect, for it is impoſſible to haue two earles of one ſeigniorie at one time, which was at the time of the conqueſt to be liuing, as that booke maketh them both. To which two if you pleaſe we will with like error, and with as much authoritie adde the third perſon, which is earle Edwine, whome ſome alſo will néeds haue to be earle of Leiceſter, and that with ſome ſhew of reaſon, for that he was earle of Mercia, which conteined Leiceſterſhire, Lincolneſhire, and manie other ſhires of England. But of all theſe thrée to make choiſe of him which was the trueſt, I muſt imbrace Simon Silueſter, who I ſuppoſe came to that title after the death of Algarus, by the gift of Edward the Confeſſor. And that there was one Simon earle of Leiceſter in the Conquerors time, it is ſo manifeſt as it néedeth no proofe. For the charter of Robert Mellent the firſt created earle of Leiceſter, after the time of the conqueror, in the reigne of Henrie the firſt, reciting one Simon to be earle of Leiceſter, and predeceſſour to the ſaid Robert Beaumont or Mellent, dooth ſufficientlie aduouch the ſame: which Simon was earle of Leiceſter all the time of the Conqueror and William Rufus, as the ſaid booke of the nobilitie ſaieth. Now this Simon being before the conqueſt intituled to that honor, the one of the nobilitie amongſt others which called in William Conqueror, and tooke his part againſt Harold (for the duke of Normandie had not béene of power to ſubdue England but that he was moſtlie aided by the nobilitie of this Ile, and partlie by the Flemings and other nations) was after permitted by the Conqueror and by his ſonne William Rufus quietlie to enioy all ſuch lands and honors as he poſſeſſed at anie time before the inuaſion of the Normane baſtard, vntill the death of the ſaid Simon, which happened about one hundred and ten, or néere there vnto. After the death of which Simon the earledome of Leiceſter was beſtowed vpon Robert Mellent, as hereafter followeth.

Robert Beaumont or Mellent.

Robert Beaumont or Mellent, ſo called becauſe he was earle of Mellent in Normandie; in the right of his mother Adelina ſiſter and heire to Hugh earle of Mellent, was ſonne to Roger of Beaumont lord of Ponte Odenar in Normandie, to the which Robert Henrie the firſt gaue the earldome of Leiceſter, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred & thrée, as appeareth by his charter of the foundation of the abbeie of Leiceſter, of whom thus writeth Knighton: Iſte (meaning Robert earle of Mellent) venit in Angliam cum Williamo Conqueſtore, cui datus eſt comitatus Leiceſtriæ. This Robert built the church of ſaint Maries in the caſtle of Leiceſter, which was deſtroied in the time of the former war, wherin he placed ſecular canons, and gaue vnto them lands, rents, and poſſeſſions. In which charter and gift of thoſe lands, he maketh mention of Henrie earle of Warwike his brother, and of Margaret wife of the ſaid Henrie. He died in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred and eightéene, being about the eightéenth of Henrie the firſt; he married Iſabell the daughter of Hugh the great earle of Vermondois, by whom he had iſſue Gualeran earle of Mellent, and Robert le Boſue earle of Leiceſter, which Iſabell the wife of this Robert the firſt earle of Leiceſter, was ſiſter to [illegible] Perona earle of Vermondois, of whom writeth Robertus Montenſis theſe words: Porro Robertus conſul de Mellent ſapientiſſimus in rebus ſecularibus vſque [illegible] degentium, & regis Henrici familiaris conſiliarius luce, mundana caruit: cui ſucceſſerunt filij ſui Gualeranus in Normania factus comes Mellent, & Robertus in Anglia factus comes Leiceſtriæ. Beſide which it appeareth, that Robert earle of Mellent had a daughter married to Hugh Montfort, for thus writeth the ſame Robert Montenſis: Eadum anno (which was the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand one hundred twentie and thrée, and the thrée and twentith of king Henrie the firſt) Hugo de Monteforti perſeuerat quoddam caſtellum validiſſimum in eodem loco, quod cum rex interrogaret, noluit dare monitu vxoris ſuæ ſororis Gualerani comitis Mellis, qui iam diſcordia propalata a rege deceſſit: quod caſtrum rex obſidione cœpit. And in the yeare following, the ſaid Gualerane, Hugh Montfort, and Hugh Fitzgeruaſe were taken by William Tankeruille the kings chamberleine, & the ſeuenth kalends of Aprill, touching which Gualerane earle of Mellent this alſo writeth the ſame Montenſis, in the twelfe yeare of king Henrie the ſecond, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred thrée ſcore and ſix; Gualeranus comes Mellenti factus monachus pratelli obijt, & ſucceſsit ei filius eius Robertus, natus ex ſorore Ebroicenſis, duxit autem idem Robertus filiam Reynaldi comitis Cornubiæ.

Robert de Boſue.

Robert de Boſſue, or rather Boſue, ſo ſurnamed becauſe of his crookebacke, was earle of Leiceſter after the death of his Father, he built the monaſterie of Luffeld in Northamptonſhire, within the forreſt of Wichwood, otherwiſe called Whithelwood, as appeareth by this charter.

The charter of Robert earle of Leiceſter, about the building of the monaſterie of Luffeld.

Robertus comes Legeceſtriæ, Radulpho pincernæ & omnibus baronibus ſuis ſalutem. Sciatis me dediſse ſeruo meo Malgerio monacho in eleemoſynã paruam landam, quæ eſt inter Lunbreodam & Cepeleiam, ad manſiones & oratorium ibidem faciendum, & de alia terra de Cernelia tantum ad ædificandum, quantum ego conuenienter conſiderabo per conſilium amicorum meorum. Et hoc feci pro anima regis Anglorum Willielmi, & Matildæ reginæ, & Rogeri de Bellomonte & Adelinæ vxoris ſuæ; & pro anima patris mei Roberti & fratris mei Gualerani. Teſtibus Willielmo de Diua, Galfrido de Turuill, &c. Et hoc feci per conſilium & laudẽ comitis de Guarenna & Nigelli de Albineto, & Gualerani fratris mei comitis de Mellent.

This monaſterie was of the order of Benedictines vnder the gouernment of a prior, whereof one John was appointed by king Henrie, as maie appeare by this writ. Henricus, &c. Vicecomitibus, &c. Præcipio quod manuteneatis Iohannem priorem meum de Luffeld, quem ibi priorem feci & inſtitui, &c. Teſte Iohanne decano de Sarum apud Vdeſtoc By which appereth, that though the foundation were ſometime of the earles of Leiceſter; that yet the preſentation was at that time in the king: which earle about the ſecond of K. Stephan, hired the erle Theobald to take his part. For thus writeth Robertus Montenſis; Comes Theobaldus nepos Henrici (which was king Henrie the firſt) conductus à Roberto comite Leiceſtriæ obſedit pontem ſancti Petri & cœpit eum ſuper Rogerum Toneio. After which this Robert de Boſſue, by the conſent of Alexander biſhop of Lincolne, did in the yeare of our redemption, one thouſand one hundred fortie and three, being the eight yeare of the reigne of king Stephan, build the monaſterie called ſancta Maria de pratis, in the honor of the aſſumption of the virgine Marie, and of the lands, poſſeſſions, rents and churches of the ſaid ſecular chanons in the caſtle of Leiceſter. With manie other lands of his owne gift, he did richlie endow that church, which he remooued out of the caſtle, & placed in the medowes without the caſtle wals, changing them into regular chanons. In which monaſterie by the conſent of his wife, he tooke on him the habit of religious, and at his firſt entrance into that houſe gaue to the moonks the manor of Stratton, in which religious monaſterie he continued by the ſpace of fifteene yeares, where he ended his life in the yeare of Chriſt (as ſaith Henrie Knighton) one thouſand one hundred three ſcore and ſeuen, being the thirteenth of Henrie the ſecond: but (as others ſaie) in the yeare one thouſand one hundred three ſcore and nine, being the fifteenth of the ſame king, and was buried on the right ſide of the queere of the ſame church. Beſides which this Robert founded the abbeie of Gerondine which he repleniſhed with moonkes: and at the requeſt of his wife, and with hir helpe, he erected the monaſterie of Eaton furniſhed with nuns. He maried Amicia the daughter of Rafe Montfort, by whom he had iſſue Robert de Bianchmaines, beſides which ſonne (as it ſeemeth by Robert Montenſ.) he had a daughter maried to Rafe Toneio. For thus writeth that author in the eight yeare of Henrie the ſecond; Radulphus de Toneo moritur, relicto paruulo filio ex filia Roberti comitis Leiceſtriæ. This Amicia, wife to this earle Robert, did by the conſent of hir huſband become a nun in the foreſaid monaſterie of Eaton. Moreouer this earle was right heire to the honor of Britoll in Normandie, as appeareth by the ſame Montenſis, who in the eighteenth yeare of king Henrie the firſt, as farre as my memorie ſerueth (as I am now driuen to truſt therevnto) writeth in this ſort: Mortuo Willielmo de Paceo abſq; liberis, redditum eſt caſtrũ Pacei Roberto filio Roberti comitis Leiceſtriæ, quia pertinebat ad honorem Britollij, vnde ipſe erat legitimus hæres ex parte matris ſuæ.

Robert Blanchmains.

Robert oue le Blanchmains, or Robert with the white and faire hand, ſucceeding his father, was the third earle of Leiceſter of that line and name after the conqueſt, he founded the hoſpitall of Brackeleie, and indowed the ſame with poſſeſſions, where the hart of the ſaid Robert de Mellent did in the time of Richard the ſecond (in whoſe reigne Henrie Knighton that affirmeth this did liue) remaine ſound and whole, preſerued in a veſſell of lead with ſalt. This man going to Jeruſalem died in his returne homeward at Durace in Greece, where he was buried in the yere of our redemption one thouſand one hundred foure ſcore and ten, being about the ſecond yeare of king Richard the firſt. For the hautineſſe of this Robert kicking againſt king Henrie the ſecond, the walles of the citie of Leiceſter were raſed to the ground: ſith the ſaid Robert leauing the father, and taking part with king Henrie the ſonne, was in armes againſt the king: touching which thus writeth Geruaſius Dorobern. in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred three ſcore and fourteene. Circa feſtũ ſanctæ Lu[illegible] miſſus eſt in Angliam iunior Robertus comes Leiceſtriæ, cum eo nonnulla Flandrenſium milia, & a comite Hugone ſunt recepti. Capto autem de facile caſtello de Haganeth in Leiceſtriam tẽderẽt in territorio ſancti Edmundi menſe Octobri, occurrerunt eis milites regni Reginaldũ Cornubiæ comitẽ, & comitẽ de Arundel ſequentes, à quibus perterritus cum Flãdrenſib. ſuis, comes Rodbertus fugã iniit, ſed captus eſt ipſe & vxor ſua, & Flãdrenſium tria milia vel amplius trucidati perierunt. Thus much this author liuing in that time, wherevnto Robertus Montenſis addeth, that he with his wife was committed to priſon. Moreouer, this Robert earle of Leiceſter animated the moonks of Canturburie to ſtand ſtiflie to the mainteinance of their priuilege againſt Baldwine archbiſhop of Canturburie, and ſaid vnto them (when they came from the preſence of Richard the firſt, greatlie offended with them for their contumacie) By the faith I ow to God I giue you this counſell, laie all your care vpon the Lord, and he will nouriſh you, and all things are to be loſt and ſpent for God and the libertie of the church. This earle married Petronella or Parnel the daughter of Hugh Grantmill; with whom he receiued the honor of Hinkleie, together with the ſtewardſhip of England, by the gift of the ſaid Hugh, which woman did build the bodie of the great church of Leiceſter, & is buried in the queere of the ſaid church before the high altar. This woman wreathed a cord of the haire of hir head, which ſhe tied to an other longer rope, which did draw vp and let downe a lampe tied to the cord made of hir haire, which was extant and kept in the daies of king Richard the ſecond (as ſaith the ſaid author) for a monument and remembrance of hir. He had iſſue Robert Fitzpernell, William the leprous which built the hoſpitall of ſaint Leonards in Leiceſter, Robert biſhop of S. Andrews in Scotland: Amicia married to Simon Montfort, and Margaret married to Saier de Quincio earle of Wincheſter.

Robert Fitzpernell.

Robert Fitzpernell, ſo ſurnamed after his mother, was the fourth & laſt earle of Leiceſter of that line & name. He went into the holie land with king Richard the firſt, where after that he had ouerthrowne, and (as ſaith Henrie of Leiceſter) valiantlie ſlaine the Souldan at the tilt, he returned home into England, where he died iſſuleſſe, in the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand two hundred and foure, and was buried in the abbeie of Leiceſter: after whoſe death the whole inheritance (becauſe his brother William was a leper and his brother Robert a biſhop, and both dieng without iſſue) was diuided betweene his two ſiſters Amicia and Margaret, the eldeſt being married to Simon Montfort, and the ſecond to Saier de Quincie, as is before touched.

Simon Montfort.

Simon de Montfort, who came into England in the twelfe yeare of king Iohn, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred and ten, was in the right of his wife earle of Leiceſter: for hauing the moitie of the countie of Leiceſter, and of the honor of Hinkeleie, he was made earle of Leiceſter, and by right of inheritance to him and to his heires, the high ſteward of England. And Saier de Quincie with the other moitie of the countie of Leiceſter, was created earle of Wincheſter. After which the ſaid Simon for diſobedience towards the king, was diſherited, and baniſhed the realme with his children; and the earldome of Leiceſter, with the honor of Hinkeleie, was giuen to Rafe or Randulph earle of Cheſter. This Simon had iſſue, Almaricus, and Simon. Amicia (by Tilius called Arnee) wife to this baniſhed Simon, was after hir huſbands death (as ſaith the ſame Tilius) maried to the lord of Barres, by whome ſhe had iſſue William de Barres. He died ſuddenlie, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and nineteene.

Randulph Bohune.

Randulph Bohune, aliàs Blondeuille the ſixt earle of Cheſter, after the conqueſt, was earle of Leiceſter, who inioied the ſame by all probabilitie during his life: though ſome ſeeme not to conſent therevnto, for that they find him not ſo called by anie other hiſtoriographer, who onelie terme him earle of Cheſter, Lincolne, and Huntington: he died without iſſue in the yeare of our redemption, one thouſand two hundred thirtie and two, being the ſeuenteenth yeare of king Henrie the third.

Simon de Montfort.

Simon de Montfort ſecond ſonne to the foreſaid Simon baniſhed into France, found meanes to purchaſe all the right that his brother Almaricus being the elder, had to the earldome of Leiceſter: who being in right, and ſo intituled, earle of Leiceſter, but neuer in poſſeſſion thereof, procured the king to grant the ſame to his brother Simon. In witneſſe whereof, the ſaid Almaricus writeth to Henrie the third on this ſort.

The letter of Almaricus to king Henrie the third, requeſting to inueſt Simon his brother in the earldome of Leiceſter.

EXcellentiſsimo domino ſuo Henrico, Dei gratia illuſtri Anglorum regi, Almaricus comes Montisfortis & Leiceſtriæ, ſalutem, &c. Veſtræ regiæ maieſtati multotiens ſupplicaui, &c: vt mihi terram meam & ius meum in Anglia, quod bonæ memoriæ pater meus de veſtro tenuit, & tenebat, dum deceſsit, pacificè ac quietè mihi veſtro militi reddatis. Quod quia dominatio veſtra non placuit huc vſque facere, adhuc veſtræ M. ſupplico humilitate qua poſsum, quatenus hac vice mihi vobis ſeruire parato, reddere dignemini terram. Et ſi hoc vobis non placuerit, ego ad pedes veſtræ dominationis tranſmitto Simonem fratrem meum, qui de domino rege Franciæ nihil tenet, cui ſi eam reddideritis, me pro bene pagato tenerem. Datum Pariſsijs menſe Februario.

Upon which letters, as after ſhall appeare, king Henrie gaue the earldome of Leiceſter to the ſaid Simon, ſecond brother of the ſaid Almaricus, to whome by right of inheritance the ſame did belong by the law of England. But here before I talke anie further of this man, I thinke it not amiſſe, to note what other authors haue ſet downe touching the pedegree of this Simon. Wherein Nicholas Gill the Frenchman, and Tilius, with Polydor the Italian haue erred, as I proue by our hiſtories, and eſpeciallie by Henrie Knighton that liued ſome hundred yeares before anie of them all three, and ſo beſt able to know a truth; both in reſpect that he liued neerer to the age of this Simon, and for that the moonks of his houſe wrote the ſtorie of thoſe perſons which were patrons of that monaſterie, whereof he was a member. For all religious perſons did, with great care, keepe in memorie by record the ſucceſſion of their patrons: for which cauſe I doo moſt willinglie follow Knighton, and leaue all the other; not forbearing yet to ſet downe what the Frenchmen write.

Nicholas Gill nameth this Simon to be the ſon of Almaricus, thus ſpeaking in his annals of France, vnder the title of Lewis the ninth, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred thirtie and eight: fol. 110 En celle annee meſsire Simon de Montfort, qui fitz eſtoit de Amaulry conte de Montfort, qui eſtoit mort a Rome au retourne de oulter mere, per la crainte de la royne de ſaint Louys, qui lauoit prins en hayne ſenfuit en Angliterre deuers le roy Henrye, & le receut honorablement, & luy dona ſa ſoir in mariage. Thus he maketh this Simon the ſon of Almaricus. Then commeth Tilius to amend vp the matter, and he maketh this Simon the ſonne of an other Simon; the ſonne of that Simon that maried Amicia the heire of Robert Fitzpernell, in whoſe right he was earle of Leiceſter, and ſo maketh three Simons in deſcent earles of Leiceſter. Which poſſiblie cannot be in my iudgement. For it is not poſſible betweene the death of that Simon and of this Simon, to haue one other Simon meane betweene them: for there could not be anie time therefore, from the death of that Simon firſt earle of Leiceſter, ſith the firſt Simon came not manie yeares into England before that this laſt Simon was made earle of Leiceſter, about the ſeuenteenth yeare of Henrie the ſeuenth; by mine account. But this matter ſhall be more plentifullie examined by me hereafter, in the liues of the earles of Leiceſter more largelie written, ſith my meaning is onelie now by the waie, to giue a note of the contrarieties of hiſtories of the Engliſh to the French, and of the French among themſelues: and ſo to the matter.

This Simon, after the death of his father, and agreement with his elder brother, came into England (as ſome ſaie) if that booke be trulie copied which is caried about of the nobilitie created ſince the conqueſt, in the thirteenth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, which was the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred twentie & eight: ſhortlie after which, he maried Elenor the ſiſter of Henrie the third, and daughter to king Iohn. Then the booke going further ſaith, that in the fourteenth yeare of Henrie the third, which was the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred twentie and nine, he was made earle of Leiceſter and high ſteward of England. But trulie, ſauing correction, I cannot ſee how that can be ſo. For firſt I cannot agree with Nicholas Gill, who ſaith that he came into England in the yeare one thouſand two hundred thirtie and eight: nor with the ſaid booke of noble men which ſaith, that it was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred twentie and eight, nor that he maried the kings ſiſter in the yeare one thouſand two hundred twentie and nine. For as Nicholas Triuet and moſt authors in written hand conſent, William Marſhall the yoonger (which had before maried the ſaid Elenor; for being his widow, ſhe was maried to Simon Montfort) died in the yeare 1231, ſo that before this time, Simon Montfort could not marie this Elenor, and hir mariage to Marſhall was in the yeare 1234, as ſaith the anonymall author that wrote the hiſtorie of England in Engliſh rime, ſetting downe the ſame mariage in this ſort:

The yoonger William Marſhall
That earle marſhall was,
Wedded this kings ſiſter,
As God gaue the caſe:
As in the yeare of grace twelue hundred
And twentie foure thereto:
Sith ſir Simon de Montfort,
Eſpouſed hir alſo.

Next after this, he could not in the fourteenth yeare of Henrie the third be made earle of Leiceſter: for Randulph de Bohune earle of Cheſter was then liuing. And therefore I gather out of an old written chronicle belonging to the houſe of Eueſham, that this Simon, hauing maried Elenor the kings ſiſter, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred thirtie and eight, as hath Matthew Paris, being the twentith yeare of Henrie the third, after the death of earle Marſhall, was alſo after the death of Randulph Bohune (which died in the ſaid yeare one thouſand two hundred thirtie & two, being the ſeuenteenth yeare of king Henrie the third) and ſomewhat before this mariage created earle of Leiceſter, about the one and twentith yeare of king Henrie the third, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred thirtie and ſeuen: ſo that there is ſeuen yeares full ods betweene this account, and the booke of the nobilitie. But perhaps ſome will ſaie, to be thus curious is but to contend for mooneſhine in the water; for what auaileth ſuch exact calculations of time, ſo that they agree in ſubſtance of matter? Wherefore of this enough at this time, if truth maie not be ſuffered, which for the moſt part purchaſeth hatred: and ſo againe to that which muſt follow of this Simon Montfort. Touching the marieng of this Simon, thus writeth Ioannes Londonienſis, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred thirtie and eight: Eodem anno rex Ailionoram filiam ſuam comitiſſam de Penbroke nuptui dedit Simon de Monteforti, propter quod omnes comites & barones plurimùm indignabantur: vnde totum regnum fuit commotum. Eodem anno Simon de Monteſorti iuit Romam, impetrare vt matrimonium confirmaretur inter ipſum & ſororem regis H. quod ſine læſione conſcienciæ contraxerat, votum cum fecerat ſolenne coram Eadmundo archiepiſcopo Cantuarienſi de continentia ſeruanda. Beſides which aduancement by this mariage of the kings ſiſter, this Simon Montfort was alſo by the ſaid Henrie the third made high Steward of England and earle of Leiceſter, whereby he recouered his mothers inheritance in England, all which the king fullie granted vnto him, except the patronage of the abbeie of Leiceſter and the priorie of Kenelworth. This Simon being called the yoonger, or Simon the ſecond (who ſhould not haue beene ſo named if there had beene three Simons in deſcent earles of Leiceſter) maried (as before is touched) Elenor the ſiſter of Henrie the third, which had vowed chaſtitie, or (as the order then was) had taken vpon hir the mantle and the ring by the hands of Edmund archbiſhop of Canturburie. Afterwards in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fortie and eight, as hath the ſame Iohn of London, he was ſent into Gaſcoine with a great armie againſt Gaſtine the ſonne of the counteſſe of Biard, being then a capitall enimie vnto the king of England. And ſhortlie following in the yeare of Chriſt 1252, being greeuouſlie accuſed for his miſgouernement of that countrie, he was for his tyrannie remooued from the ſame. Whervpon ſome few yeares after, this Simon being ſo (as before is ſaid) by the king thus aduanced, did like an vnthankful Frenchman mooue warre and rebellion againſt the ſame Henrie the third, which was called The barons war, whereof there is liberall diſcourſe in all our chronicles, ſet downe in the reigne of the ſame king. During which warres at the battell of Eueſham, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ſixtie and fiue, being the nine & fortith yeare of the long reigne of this king Henrie the third, this Simon was iuſtlie ſlaine for his wicked inſurrection, in taking vpon him to correct and rule the king and kingdome. He had iſſue Henrie his eldeſt ſonne, ſlaine with his father at the foreſaid battell of Eueſham; Guido Montfort, who forſaking England and going into France, was ſtipendarie to the French king; Simon de Montfort who fled likewiſe into France, and renounced all his title to the earledome of Leiceſter, being content with a yeerelie ſtipend; Henrie Montfort who being treaſuror of Yorke, did after the death of his father (accompanieng his brethren) depart out of England into France, and continued a ſtudent at Paris: which foure brethren had one ſiſter named Elenor (after hir mother) maried to Lewline prince of Wales, in the time of Edward the firſt as our chronicles doo ſpeake. But Tilius the Frenchman, purpoſelie writing the pedegree of the Montforts, ſaith that ſhe was firſt maried to Peter de Courtneie lord of Colwche, and after to Henrie lord of Salie, ſpeaking nothing at all of the prince of Wales. After the death of this Simon de Montfort ſlaine at Eueſham, king Henrie the third gaue the earledome of Leiceſter, with the honour of Hinkeleie, and the ſtewardſhip of England to Edmund his ſonne, falſelie ſurnamed Crookebacke, as moſt authors do agree.

Edmund Plantagenet.

Edmund Plantagenet, ſecond ſon to Henrie the third, was made earle of Leiceſter by the gift of his father, with the caſtell of Kenelworth, in the fiftith yeare of the ſaid Henrie, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred ſixtie and ſix, hauing alſo beſides the ſame earledome of Leiceſter the earledome of Lancaſter: which Edmund, Triuet further calleth the earle of Holderneſſe. He about the three and fiftith yeare of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred ſixtie & nine, on the eight daie of Aprill, married Auelina the daughter of the earle of Albemerle, who was heire to hir fathers & mothers inheritance, in whoſe right the ſaid Edmund ſhould haue had the earledome of Deuonſhire, and the ile of Wight: but ſhe preuenting the death of hir huſband, and dieng in his life time, had neuer poſſeſſion of thoſe places. After the death of which Auelina, this Edmund maried Blanch queene of Nauarra, and widow to Henrie king of that prouince, by whome he had iſſue three ſonnes, Thomas earle of Lancaſter, Henrie lord of Monmouth, and Iohn. This Edmund founded the nunrie of the minories without Aldgate of London, in the one and twentith yeare of king Edward the firſt, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ninetie and three, in which yeare the ſaid Edmund and his wife were baniſhed out of the French kings dominions. He died at Baion in Gaſcoine, & was buried at Weſtminſter, on the north ſide of the high altar (whoſe toome is yet extant) in the fiue & twentith of Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption a thouſand two hundred ninetie ſeauen with this epitaph:

> Icy giſt Emond fitz le roy Henrie le tierce > d' Angleter, a qui aime Deieux fait mercye.

Thomas Plantagenet.

Thomas Plantagenet, earle of Lancaſter, Leiceſter, Derbie, Lincolne and Sarum, the greateſt earle of England, as well for birth as dignitie, rebelling againſt Edward the ſecond, was beheaded in the foureteenth of the ſaid king Edward the ſecond, being about the yere of our Lord one thouſand three hundred twentie and one, at Pomfret, and was there buried by the religious men in his owne church toward the ſouth, neere to the high altar. He maried Alice the daughter and heire of Henrie Lacie earle of Lincolne and Sariſburie, lord of Pomfret and of Halton, but had no iſſue by hir.

Henrie Plantagenet commonlie called Henrie of Monmouth.

Henrie Plantagenet, lord of Monmouth, brother to Thomas laſt before ſlaine, in the foureteenth of Edward the ſecond, was after the death of his brother receiued into title and honour of the earldome of Leiceſter, he maried Mawd the daughter & heire of ſir Patrike Chaworth knight, by whome he had iſſue Henrie, after made duke of Lancaſter, ſurnamed Tortcoll. He died in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred fortie and fiue, and was buried in the monaſterie of the chanons at Leiceſter.

Henrie Plantagenet.

Henrie Plantagenet, ſurnamed Tortcoll or Crookenecke, ſonne to Henrie of Monmouth, ſonne to Edmund commonlie (as before) but falſelie ſurnamed Crookebacke, was earle of Derbie, Leiceſter, and duke of Lancaſter. He died the fiue & thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred ſixtie and one, at London, and was buried at Leiceſter in the collegiat church which he had builded, with a deane, twelue chanons, prebendaries, manie vicars and other miniſters accordinglie anſwerable to the offices of that houſe. This man was glorious in fortune, and in his youth full of honour, in matter of chiualrie a valiant ſouldior and a wiſe councellor, a liberall prince, and a courteous ſupporter of iuſtice. He married Iſabell the daughter of Henrie lord Beaumont, and had iſſue two daughters, Mawd married to William duke of Bauaria, earle of Henalt, Zeland and Holland, who after became mad, and Blanch maried to Iohn of Gaunt.

Iohn of Gaunt.

Iohn of Gaunt, fourth ſonne to Edward the third, was by his wife Blanch, earle of Leiceſter, as heire to hir father, ſo that he was in his owne right, and in the right of his wife, duke of Acquitaine and Lancaſter, earle of Leiceſter, Derbie, Sariſburie, and Lincolne, of whome is more ſpoken in my diſcourſe of the dukes of England pag. 1230, and of the protectors of England ſet downe before in the time of Edward the ſixt pag. 1069.

Henrie Bolingbroke.

Henrie Bolingbroke, ſonne of Iohn of Gaunt, by his firſt wife Blanch, was duke of Lancaſter & Hereford, earle of Derbie, Leiceſter & Lincolne, being after king of England, by the name of king Henrie the fourth. From whoſe atteining to the crowne, vntill this Robert Sutton or Dudleie earle of Leiceſter (by whome I haue beene occaſioned to make this diſcourſe of theſe earles of Leiceſter in this place) I doo not remember of anie that hath beene indued with that title of honor to himſelfe or to his heires.

Robert Sutton alias Dudleie created earle of Leiceſter, &c: ſee pag. 1207.

Robert Sutton alias Dudleie, knight of the moſt honourable order of the garter, baron of Denbigh, was created earle of Leiceſter in the ſixt yeare of queene Eliſabeth, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred ſixtie and foure, whoſe manner of creation I will omit, bicauſe it is alreadie ſet downe in the ſaid yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred ſixtie and foure. And thus much touching the earles of Leiceſters in generall, and touching Robert Sutton in eſpeciall, whoſe honourable interteinment in the lowe countries (whereinto he entered in this yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and fiue) deſeruing not to be forgotten, dooth follow in this ſort.

Iohn Stow. Robert earle of Leiceſter tranſported ouer ſea to Fluſhing.

On the eight daie of December, the ſaid earle accompanied with the earle of Eſſex, the lord North, the lord Awdeleie, ſir William Ruſſell, ſir Thomas Sherleie, ſir Arthur Baſſet, ſir Walter Waller, ſir Garuiſe Clifton, and other knights, capteins and ſouldiours, with his traine, to the number of fiftie ſailes of ſhips & hoies, ſet forward towards Fluſhing, with ſound of trumpets and drums, ſhowts, and praiers of the people, to happie and fortunate ſucceſſe. On the tenth daie he arriued at Fluſhing, where with his whole traine (garded in his owne perſon by fiftie archers with bowes and arrowes, fiftie halberds, and fiftie gunners) he was with the interteinment of ſouldiours, and ſhot of the towne, and his noble companie before him, interteined by ſir Philip Sidneie, gouernour vnder hir maieſtie of the ſame towne, by Graue Morris ſecond ſonne to the deceaſed prince of Orange, by hir maieſties ambaſſador ligier there, and by the ſtates of the towne paſſing honourablie interteined with ringing of bels, and making of bonfiers after their manner, which is to fix great pitcht barrels on the tops of high poles, and then to fire them. He was there feaſted and lodged in the ambaſſadors houſe, where, according to his accuſtomed diſpoſition, he demeaned himſelfe ſo humblie (as he likewiſe did in all places where he came) that he purchaſed to himſelfe no leſſe loue & good liking than among the Engliſh:

The earles arriuall at Fluſhing and his interteinment.

> Quippe loco poſitus ſublimi, pectore miti,
> Manſueto ac humili cunctis ſit amabilis ille.

He ſaileth towards Midleborough.

On the next daie after a ſermon had in the publike church, and dinner ended, he tooke ſhipping and ſailed toward Midleborough. Halfe waie betwixt Midleborough & Fluſhing ſtandeth the ſtrong ſconce of Ramekens, garniſhed with Engliſhmen, at the which he with ſome of his eſpeciall traine landed and viewed the ſame, who returning againe to their ſhips, were preſented on the top of the wals, in the front of the ſea with fiftie pikemen verie brauelie furniſhed, hauing their Engliſh ancient diſplaied with triumph of ſhot, ſound of trumpets & drums, neere two houres togither. In the which honorable triumphs, the whole fleet hauing good wind and faire wether, ſailed along to Midleborough, where on the ſhore ſide at the landing place were, vnder nine ancients diſplaied with great ſtore of ſhot, the beſt ſtates of the countrie attending my lords landing.

The ſkons at Ramekens garniſhed with Engliſh.

His interteinment at Midleborough.

Ouer the gates by the port was painted the red croſſe of England, hir maieſties armes, and the ſtates, through which gates the earle and his traine entering, he was thus from his landing to his lodging garded through a lane of muſket ſhot with the ancients borne before him, with trumpets & drums verie roiallie, almoſt a quarter of a mile. In the middle of the market place was the Engliſh ancient aduanced, and deliuered vnto him, with the which and the reſt borne before him he came to his lodging, where at the intreatie of the ſtates, he ſtaid more than two houres at the gate, to ſee the ſoldiors marching and their ſtrengths; after which, bicauſe it was neere vnto night, he entered, and made his dinner and ſupper all one. Three of thoſe nine ancients were new. In the firſt were hir maieſties and the emperors armes quartered. In the ſecond the Three ancients excellentlie emblazoned.

earle of Leiceſters and the Prince of Oranges arms togither. In the third were the ſeuen prouinces yeelded vnto hir maieſtie, all verie excellentlie emblaſoned.

The armes of the queenes maieſtie, the lord lieutenats and the ſtates.

In a large table hanged ouer the gate of the Engliſh houſe in Midleborough, were emblaſoned the armes of hir maieſtie alone aboue the reſt, next vnder that the lord lieutenant his armes on the one ſide at large; hard by the which was ſet out the armes of the ſtates and their houſes: all which artificiallie by a chaine were linked togither, & faſtened to the Engliſh armes, vnder which was written at the feet of this frame, Quos Deus coniunxit, homo non ſeparet. Thus with great ioie and continuall triumph was he interteined on their Chriſtmas eeues eue, after the Romiſh computation, which they in Zeland and Holland obſerue in that order.

The lord lieutenant verie honourablie feaſted in Chriſtmaſſe time, with the maner of the feaſt.

On Chriſtmas eeue, the ſtates of the towne in the ſtates houſe, which ſtandeth in the middeſt of the towne or market place, feaſted him ſumptuouſlie. In the firſt courſe of which feaſt thorough out the table was nothing but boiled meats, moſt excellent and deintie. In the ſecond courſe was all roaſt meats that could be thought, pigs ſerued in on their feet, and wild fowle part in the fethers. In the third courſe was all kind of baked meats, as fowles in pies with their heads and tailes vnpluckt, all beſet with pendants of hir maieſties, the lord lieutenants, the countries, and diuerſe Engliſh mens armes on the ſame. The fourth and laſt courſe was a rare banket of incredible workmanſhip, as a caſtell of chriſtall, founded vpon a rocke of pearle, about the which flowed ſiluer ſtreames, in which laie fowles, fiſhes, and beaſts of all kinds, ſome hurt, ſome ſlaine, and ſome gaſping for breath; on the top of the which was a faire virgin ladie leaning, and giuing hir hands ouer the caſtell to ſuccour them, verie woonderfullie wrought. There was wine in abundance, muſike of all ſorts, varietie of all things, and woonderfull welcomes. This feaſt began at eleuen of the clocke before noone, and continued till fiue in the afternoone.

A proper and delightſome deuiſe at a banket.

The lord lieutenant inuiteth all the ſtates, and feaſteth them after the Engliſh maner.

The next daie being their Chriſtmas daie, the earle to requite the ſtates coſt, inuited them all, whome he feaſted verie roiallie after the Engliſh faſhion. On ſaint Stephans daie he feaſted the widow princeſſe of Orange, with hir ſecond ſonne countie Morris, and their traines, ſo ſumptuouſlie as beſeemed his and their honors. Here diſpatching his weightie affaires he continued ſeauen daies, after which he determined to ſaile towards Dort, which by iudgement of the countrie is not paſt ten houres ſailing at the moſt. On the ſeuenteenth of December (after the account of England) with faire wind and weather, the whole fleet of Dutch hoies hoiſed vp ſaile toward Dort; but on the ſudden, being onward on their iournie, the aire was ſo ouercaſt with miſts, that they knew not how to ſaile for ſuccour, neither backewards nor forwards. The reaſon was this. The riuer they had to ſaile thorough, was none other but an ouerflowne countrie, full of old foundations of houſes, churches, and caſtels, ſo that the cleereſt aire did no more than ſafegard the hoies from danger.

The lord lieutenant landeth at Williamſtat, and there dineth.

He entreth into Dort, how magnificallie he was receiued, and what time he abode there.

On the twentith daie my lord with ſome other landed at Williamſtat, or Ragonhill, where he dined, and after dinner went abrode againe. On the one and twentith of December, diuerſe ſhips of men of warre, and others, with the ſtates of Dort in them met our fleet on the water, where betwixt their ſhips & ours was at the meeting of the earle great triumphs with ſhot, in which came manie ſmall ſcouts of ſuccour, to haſten the traines to ſhore, where in good time they entered Dort, verie roiallie and triumphantlie. On the port, to gard his perſon was ſet his owne gard of archers, ſhot, and halberds: and ouer the gate of enterance was hir maieſties, the earles, and the ſtates armes emblaſoned. When he was landed, and conducted by the ſtates, he paſſed from the port thorough a lane of muſket ſhot, all Dutch, braue and well appointed, with eight ancients diſplaied before him; in the middeſt whereof was the Engliſh ancient aduanced, whenſe with eight hundred ſhot he was brought to his lodging. After whoſe enterance they and the great ſhot continued triumphing an houre and more. Here he continued a daie and two nights, with ſingular interteinement, and reioiſing of the people. Ouer the court gate were on the wall at the entering written certeine Latine verſes, ſignifieng the ſtate of the low countries, to this effect in Engliſh:

Verſes written ouer the court gate.

The widow countrie wailing in hir loſſe,
Subiect to ſoldiors, and a ſtrangers croſſe,
By weeping hir miſſortune, ſits here alone,
To thinke of hir pleaſures paſt and gone,
But after France and Spaine haue doone their woorſt,
Hir helpleſſe yoong ones, are by England nurſt:
Bleſt be that virgine queene, that ſent this good,
And bleſt be he that comes to ſaue our blood,
Whome to our ſoules a buckler we maie call,
And to our countrie, we crie welcome all.

On the three and twentith of December, the earle tooke ſcouts to paſſe to Rotherodame, by a pleaſant riuer of freſh water, verie narow, where the botes or ſcouts are ſome by men, ſome by horſſes dragged along the riuer, verie pleaſant, ſpeedie, and eaſie. But yet in this paſſage the night being cleere, ſuddenlie there aroſe ſo great a tempeſt, that it put the ſmall veſſels in verie great danger; but after one houre the weather wared calme, and the night cleere, onelie a Dutch capteine and three or foure of his men were drowned. Toward night he drew neere to the towne of Rotherodame, where on the water he was met with three barges of pleaſure, in euerie of which was twelue ſailers, the firſt all in blew ierkens and venecians with red caps, and whole cypres white Satyre like. In the ſecond, twelue all in buffe. In the third twelue all in ſhag thrummed ſilke verie braue, with their oares red and white: in theſe boats were great ſtore of fire works, & rockets, to caſt into the citie: and at the ſterne of euerie one were creſſets which towards night were lighted, and on the water made an excellent ſhew.

A Dutch capteine with three or foure of his men drowned in a freſh riuer.

The lord lieutenant commeth to Rotherodame by water, and the maner of his triumphant enterance therinto.

Thus with trumpets ſounding all the waie, was he brought to Rotherodame by water to his lodging in the midle of the towne. On the other ſide of them, on the banks ſtood ranks of ſoldiors, all with muſket ſhot, betwixt euerie foure of them was placed a torch, or creſſets burning: and thus triumphantlie he entered his lodging, where the ſtates accompanied him to ſupper that night. Here the inhabitants were ioifull of the Engliſhmens comming, praiſing God therefore, and making much of the traine, inſomuch that euerie man dined in his hoſtes houſe of free coſt. The townesmen had made verie memorablie in the middle of the market place the whole proportion of Eraſmus in a pulpit, as though he were preaching, holding a booke of the paraphraſis on the goſpels in his hand, vnder whome was written Eraſmus Rotherodame.

Diet of free coſt.

A counterfeit of Eraſmus.

The maner of the lord lieutenants entring into Delph.

On the three and twentith of December, the earle made haſt towards Delph, being from thenſe accompanied with the ſtates, his barges of pleaſure, and whatſoeuer was thought honorable. They came late to Delph, ſomewhat darke, but lighted by creſſets along the narrow riuer, on the which manie rockets and fire works were vſed. On the landing port ſtood great ſtore of muſket ſhot (with manie new ancients) like a lane, for him to paſſe thorough rough as is commonlie vſed in the countrie, all which brought him to his lodging, which was the houſe where the prince of Orange was ſlaine. Ouer the gate of which houſe were certeine Latine verſes written, conteining a gratulation & welcomming of the earle thither, teſtified with a conſent of all degrees and profeſſions: the ſame verſes being thus:

He lodgeth in the houſe where the prince of Orange was ſlaine.

Salue perpetuùm comes illuſtriſsime ſalue,
O bene quàm diuûm nomine gratus ades!
Te nihil eſt gratum magis, optatúmque tuendæ
Auſpicium fidei, quàm patriæque venis!
Hinc tibi gratantur læti (ſacer ordo) ſenatus,
Et memor officij cætera turba ſui,
Spe meliore animi recreantur, gaudia toto
Pectore concipiunt preſſa dolore diu,
Irrita quæ ſuperi nolunt fore caſsáque facta,
At magis inque dies accumulata volunt,
Reginam incolumem téque illuſtriſsime ſeruent,
Soſpite qua tecum patria ſoſpes erit.
Dedecus infandum, probra turpia multa ſequuntur,
Eſt mala cui nequam mens animúſque malus.

The lord lieutenant feaſteth and is feaſted.

On the fiue and twentith daie the earle was feaſted of the ſtates verie roiallie, and on the next morrow the earle feaſted them, amongſt whome was (beſides the ſtates and countie Morris) the princeſſe of Des, with a companie of honorable ladies and gentlewomen: at the table was Dutch muſike of all kinds, orations in Dutch and Latine, with infinite welcoms. And it is to be noted, that the further the earle went vp into Holland, the brauer the countrie was, and the better his lordſhip was beloued, as appeared by his more excellent interteinment. Heere he ſtaied the fiue and twentith and ſix and twentith daies, and then on the ſeuen and twentith he remooued to Donhage, where he determined to keepe his ſtanding court. In the euening the earle by creſſetlight, torches, & deuiſes of fire worke verie ſtrange, entred into the towne of Donhage with a verie princelie traine of our Engliſhmen, with an hundred and fiftie of his gard, beſides all or moſt of the ſtates of Rotherodam & Delph, with thoſe of Donhage that met him on the water with muſket ſhot verie manie, and great triumphing. At the entrance of my lord by water on the riuer met him certeine fiſhermen, which repreſented Peter, James, and John at their herbour: by them Chriſt walking on the water, who commanded them to caſt out their nets the ſecond time (according to that of ſaint Matthew) they drew in abundance, wherewith they made ſhew of preſentment to the erle, for the which with thanks he paſſed by. Further on the riuer ſat the repreſentation of Mars and Bellona, who vttered ſpeeches vnto him as he paſſed, at that preſent.

The countrie of Holland commended.

The lord lieutenant remooueth to Donhage, and his entrance therinto.

The firſt ſhew at Donhage of fiſhermen.

The ſecond ſhew of poeticall gods.

The third ſhew of horſſes antikelie trapt and furniſhed.

The fourth ſhew of virgins in white araie.

At his landing met him a troope of horſſemen, furniſhed and trapped antikelie in colours, before whome hauing fetcht manie courſes, becauſe the ſtreet waxed narrow, they rode awaie. At the entrance of the faireſt ſtreet, being alſo ſomewhat narrow, there was on ech ſide of the ſame gallorie, raiſed a mans height, ech againſt other, all hoong with blacke baies, on both which gallories on ech ſide ſtood fifteene virgins all clad in white, with branches of palme or box wreathed about wax candles light in their hands, euerie of which did reuerence vnto the earle; theſe ſtood a ſpeares length diſtant ech from other. Betwixt euerie one hoong a looking glaſſe, and betwixt euerie glaſſe vpon a pretie antike pearch ſtood a wax candle burning, and at ech end of the gallorie ſtood a champion and a blacke Moore, the one ſupporting the armes of England, and the other the armes of Holland. This ſhew was verie proper, but theſe had no ſpeeches. All the waie as the earle paſſed through, were artificiallie made gates raiſed of ragged ſtaues, and vpon euerie ſnag ſtood a ſmall wax candle burning, by which hoong the armes of diuerſe craftſmen of the towne. The ſtreet all the waie was hoong with broad clothes, vpon the which were placed ſtore of red roſes on ſheetes of paper painted. At the next turning he was interteined with this ſhew. Ouer a gate vpon a verie high ſcaffold was a conceiued battell fought betweene the Engliſh ſoldiors and the Spaniards, the Engliſh men ſtill preuailing, vnder the which was written thus much in effect: furthermore, theſe lines in the Latine toong, alluding to England, ancientlie called Britaine, were written in open ſight as followeth:

The fift ſhew of ragged ſtaues with other deuiſes.

The ſixt ſhew of conceiued battel betweene the Engliſh and the Spaniſh.

Such be our fortune, as this dooth foreſhoo,
To vs freedome, to England fame alſo.

BRITANIA.

Maris terrarúmque ſidus,
Aequa Romanorum olim imperio,
Luxit ſalus, affulſit Conſtantinus,
Qui adſertor libertatis, inſtaurator
Chriſtianæ pietatis:
Da & nobis fidam vicinámque dextram.
Faxit Deus optimus maximus,
Vt reginæ auſpicijs, Dudlæi ductibus,
Militis tui viribus,
Iugo ſeruitutis excuſſo, belli nimbis diſcuſsis,
Ex infæliciſsimis fæliciſsimi Belgæ ſimus,
Sacro tecum arctóque vinclo iuncti!

The ſeuenth ſhew of ſeuen virgins repreſenting the ſeuen prouinces.

Paſſing ſtill forward, was a loftie ſcaffold verie faire builded, with hir maieſties armes at large placed, on the top ſtood ſeauen virgins, repreſenting the ſeuen prouinces, euerie virgin holding a ſpeare, and the armes at large emblaſoned, which prouince ſhe did ſignifie; in the middeſt of whom ſtood Minerua armed, incompaſſed about the bodie with the armes of England, vpon whome all the reſt ſeemed to relie, as moſt euidentlie appeared by their verſe:

Adſis ô noſtrúmque leues regina laborem.

The eight ſhew of ſeauen perſonages, repreſenting the ſeuen liberall ſciences.

All which were repreſented vnto hir maieſtie by Neceſſitie an old champion. The next was on the like ſcaffold, ſeuen perſons preſented the ſeauen liberall ſciences in their kinds, yeelded to the earle by deſert: out of euerie window hoong lanthorns and candles, and euerie ſtreet was furniſhed with creſſets, torches, and links light: one deuiſe that hoong in the middeſt of the ſtreet conteined eight and thirtie lanthorns, and ſeuerall lights comelie burning: a verie pretie ſight. Beſides this, againſt my lords gate, a barbar had on a wall placed three ſcore or more baſons of bright copper, & in the middeſt of euerie one a wax candle burning was placed, in the middeſt of all was painted a roſe and crowne: this made a faire ſhew, and was a pretie deuiſe. Vnder the red roſe was written theſe verſes following:

Floreat hæc ſemper roſa, cuius odore reuixit
Belgia langueſcens, regina dite potita.

The ninth ſhew of Arthur of Britaine, with ſweet muſike therewithall.

Ouer the entrance of the court gate, was placed aloft vpon a ſcaffold, as if it had beene in a cloud or ſkie, Arthur of Britaine, whome they compared to the earle; within were hoboies, cornets, and diuers kinds of muſike. And thus they brought him to his lodging triumphantlie, and after he was entred in a great hall of that houſe, they diſcharged ſuch volees of ſhot as was woonderfull to heare. In the night they vſed fireworks of rockets, ſquibs, wheeles, and balles of fire, with a dragon that continued caſting out of fire an houre, woonderfull artificiallie made.

The laſt ſhew of running at tilt in botes vpon the water.

The next daie, on the riuer adioining to my lords lodging, they deuiſed a running as it were at the tilt in botes, which was thus. From ech end of the riuer came a bote running with ſix ores, in the ſterne of which on the top ſtood a man armed in a red waſtcote, with a ſtaffe in his reſt, hauing a bet

but end of corke; now ech meeting other with their ſtaues, both fell into the water, where ſpare botes were readie to ſuccour them, for awaie went their horſſes. This ſport with freſh men they continued till the earle was wearie of it, in pitieng the poore caſe of the men.

On the third daie of Ianuarie the earle with three hundred horſſes in their furniture, verie brauely with his retinue entred Leidon, where by the waie he was met by the beſt of the towne, firſt by twelue burgomaiſters, clad in long blacke gownes, and on their ſhoulders was the townes name, written in verie large letters of ſiluer: next them followed other twelue of the cheefeſt burgeſſes, and then manie on horſſe backe, all in blacke veluet. At his entrance into the towne, all ouer his head, and downe to the ground on ech ſide, was hanged with ſaie of diuerſe colours to his lodging, which was a great waie; himſelfe with a canopie carried ouer his head was brought to his ſeat, againſt the which was a ſtage, on the which ſtood two men like poets, who preſented theſe ſeuerall ſhews that follow. It is to be noted, that eight yeares before this, they were beſeeged, and therefore now preſented their extremities, which at that time they were driuen into. They brought therefore a faire woman on the ſtage verie braulie apparelled, & ſhe repreſented the towne, hir they aſſalted by Spaniards, with falſe fiers of great & ſmall ſhot a long time in order of battell, and then retiring continued their ſiege; heere they laie ſo long that vittels waxed ſcarſe, and then they preſented after the poets of what this ſhew had paſſed. Famine attired accordinglie then breathed into the woman; after which they preſented men rending dogges and cats aliue in ſunder, and fed on them, and ſouldiors robbing women of their children.

The lord lieutenant entreth Leidon, and of his interteinment there.

The firſt ſhew of a woman repreſenting Leidon.

The ſecond ſhew of famine.

Sickneſſe now poſſeſſeth hir and peſtilence, and this they preſented in abrupt burials of townesmen on heapes; and laſtlie with a braue buriall of a capteine, who was borne ouer the ſtage with dead matches, howling trumpets, wrapt vp ancients, trailed pikes, drawne peeces; and after he was put into the ground, and bid farewell with a volee of great and ſmall ſhot. The Spaniards pitieng hir, writ and ſent letters by diuerſe meſſengers, all which ſhe read and refuſed, without returne of anſwer: now hope poſſeſſeth hir, and therefore they tooke another waie. Now ſhe commanded a light to be ſet on the higheſt ſteeple in the towne, to ſignifie vnto the prince of Orange that laie in Delph, how they hoped for ſuccor; who againe, by deuiſe of a doue ſent them promiſe of aid, by which doue they pauſed to attend the good houre, and ſo the ſhew ended.

The third ſhew of ſickneſſe.

The fourth ſhew of Spaniſh ſeruitude.

The fift ſhew of hope to be ſuccored.

Now came Gods prouidence, vpon whome the towne relied, and ſhe leaned: Gods prouidence in the dead of the night ouerthrew a peece of the wall and vawmure of ſix and twentie poles. Which the enimie hearing; and fearing the prince and his power to be entred for their aid, they fled, whome when the towne had in purſute, they put all they ouertooke to the ſword, the reſt eſcaped by flight, and ſo with the woman, as it were now at libertie that preſented the towne, they marched awaie merilie with great triumph. At the laſt they brought in a woman verie braue, armed as the other was, hir they beſieged with a Spaniard, intiſed with a Frenchman, and flattered with an Italian twiſe, the Spaniard put by, ſhe fled the ſtage, and leaping off haſtilie hid hir ſelfe vnder the earls cloke, whom he ſhadowed, and the Spaniard threatning marched awaie. The earle led hir to his lodging, whereinto he entred with ſhot. On the ſcaffold were written theſe verſes, in effect as followeth in Engliſh:

The ſixt ſhew of aid promiſed.

The laſt ſhew of libertie, victorie, and triumph.

We Flemings being baniſhed, now wailing here,
We are as they in Babilon, by the water clere
Bicauſe we wold not worſhip idols, but Gods word,
And might not ſing our praiſe vnto the Lord,
Are we driuen out as now dooth appeare,
But our deliuerance is now verie neare,
For God hath looked vpon our miſerableneſſe,
And ſent vs a prince whom he will bleſſe,
Which praiſed be God as it dooth beſeeme,
Who hath deliuered vs from dangerous caſe,
And humbled the hart of ſuch a noble queene,
As hath ſent vs a gouernor now in this ſpace,
Laieng his hand to the warres through his grace
And his arme mightilie, the which vs defend,
Thus praiſed may he be world without end,
Which ſendeth ſuch a prince aboue all that liueth,
And one that gouerns to gods honor he now giueth.

These verſes ſeeme to be made by no metrician: perhaps they were deuiſed by ſome of Leidon.

So paſſing on to my lords lodging, on the doore of the entring were written theſe verſes following:

Pro auſpicijs illuſtriſſimi & generoſiſſimi comitis Roberti Dudlæi, regiæ maieſtati apud Anglos à conſilijs, & gubernatoris Belgiæ, &c: ad Holandos conſolatio.

Inter Iberiadum furias & tigridis iras,
Oppreſſi fletum comprimitote viri,
Nos licèt innumeris hoſtilia bella periclis
Aſſiduè infeſtent, mille necéſque trahant,
Noſtra tamen Domini rebus fiducia ſi ſit
In Domino, miſeris expediet facilè.
Nicanor Leſtrij generis viribus malè noſtras
Ceruices pulſat, barbara verba vomens:
Viribus at Leiceſtranis iugulabitur ille,
En Machabæus adeſt, qui Nicanora premat,
Auſpicio Chriſti, qui in vitam funera vertit,
Qui fidei vindex, qui mala noſtra leuat.
En generoſe comes, Dauidis pia facta ſequutus,
Iuſticiæ exerce iura ſeuera tuæ:
Et tibi ſit præſens magnum qui temperat orbem,
Vt pede victrici colla teras Goliæ.

Verſes written vpon the doore of the lord lieutenants lodging

On the daie after his comming to the towne, he was banketted, at which banket were orations and deuiſes manie. On the fift of Ianuarie hee came backe from Leidon vnto Donhage. The tenth he muſtred part of his horſſemen, to the number of fiue hundred or more, and then pointed them into ſeuerall gariſons, and to ſeuerall gouernors, the earle of Eſſex was that daie made generall of the horſſes. The eleuenth daie hee came from Donhage to Leidon. The twelfe daie a generall faſt was proclamed through Holland, Gelderland, and Friſeland, which was kept with great zeale. The lord lieutenant ſpent that daie till night with preaching, reading, and ſinging of pſalmes; neither he or anie of his eating anie thing. The nineteenth of Ianuarie he came from Leidon to Donhage, where in his time of abode, he rode to a little fiſher towne two miles from the Hage, named Skeueling, which towne dooth bound on the maine ſeas. In this towne he was preſented with theſe verſes:

The lord lieutenant returneth backe from Leidon to Donhage.

A generall faſt proclamed and deuoutlie obſerued.

Like as the ſea goddeſſe Thetis had ingendred,
The valiant Achilles to the Greeks defence,
So hath now this Engliſh Thetis, who all praiſe de-Sent vs this Achilles to our Aſſiſtence, (ſerued
Wherefore we yeeld him all due reuerence.

The lord lieutenant rideth to Skeueling, and is preſented with a few Engliſh verſes.

Theſe words were witten in the great hall at Donhage, conteining terms of honor & welwiſhing:

Beatus qui facit opus Domini fideliter. ¶ Inclyto principi Roberto Dudlæo comiti Leiceſtriæ, inter magnates maximè pio, prudenti, forti, Dei permiſſu a regina miſſo, præfecto ac gubernatori Belgarum, proſperum hunc optatúmque aduentum toto lætitiæ ſinu gratulamur, eccleſiæ & reipublicæ ſalutem optamus, fœderati ordinis Belgij, addicti celſitudini eius. ¶ Deus cæpit, Deus dirigat.

Titles of honor aſcribed to the lord lieutenant, with a reioiſing at his comming.

The foure and twentith of Ianuarie, the prince of Portugall came to Donhage. The fiue and twentith

The eſtates ſworne to the queene of England. The earle of Leiceſter inſtalled at Donhage, with the maner and order thereof.

tith my lord was inſtalled and ſworne, and likewiſe all the ſtates ſworne to the queene. The maner of the inſtalling was thus. At Donhage is a maruellous faire hall, at the vpper end whereof are fiue or ſix large ſteppes aſcending, which do reach to a faire chamber, at the vpper end whereof on high was placed a cloth of eſtate, in the midſt of which were the armes of England, and againſt them my lord was ſeated, on ech ſide of him two ſteps deſcending ſat twelue of the principall ſtates, and below them ſat the reſidue, to the number of twentie right before my lord, but foure or fiue ſteps deſcending. On the right hand of my lord did ſtand the prince of Portugall, next him the lord Morleie, next maſter Noris gouernor of Munſter, next ſir William Ruſſell, & ſir Robert Germin, with diuers men of great account. On the left hand of my lord did ſtand the Graue Morris, next the earle of Eſſex, ſir William Stanleie, ſir Robert Stapleton, and ſir Thomas Parrat, with diuers other of great account. Thus being placed, a Dutch man made a large oration in Dutch, declaring the cauſes of the matter in hand, with thanks to the queenes maieſtie and the lord lieutenant.

Perſons of honor and worſhip.

The couenants betweene the queenes maieſtie and the eſtates, read in Latine and deliuered to and fro.

Then was read in Latine the couenants betweene the ſtates, the queene and my lord: this doone the couenants were deliuered to my lord, which he deliuered to the ſtates, and the ſtates deliuered an other to him: then was my lord demanded to vow the ſame by oth, who holding his hand to heauen did ſwear to the couenants. The like did the ſtates, holding vp their hands, vow to performe. Then againe were the ſtates ſworne to the queene and my lord hir lieutenant in thoſe affaires. This doone my lord gaue to them ſeuerall thanks, and they ſeuerallie did giue to him the like, which being doone, my lord paſſed through to his chamber, the trumpets all ſounding before him. This daie my lord feaſted all the ſtates moſt ſumptuouſlie, ſo that they had their fill both in their bellies and heads. This daie after dinner the ſouldiers of the towne, which were three ancients, came into the court furniſhed, and did there ſhew themſelues with drum and fiffe, at night were aboue an hundred fiers burnt about my lords houſe.

The ſouldiers of the towne ſhew themſelues in martiall maner.

Capteines with their companies that muſtered.

On the foure and twentith of Ianuarie, the countie Moris came to my lord lieutenant, and was receiued in good ſort. The ſame eight and twentith and laſt of Ianuarie companies muſtered by Thomas Digs, muſter-maſter generall in Guelder, Friſeland and Holland, were as followeth. Maſter Noris coronell gentleman, two hundred thirtie and ſix: coronell Morgan, two hundred foure ſcore and ten: capteine Wotton, one hundred thirtie and ſix: capteine Powle, one hundred and ſeuenteene: capteine Baſkerfield, foure ſcore: capteine Yorke, foure ſcore and ſix: capteine Hunings, one hundred and eleuen: capteine Vdall, three ſcore and ſeuenteene: capteine Powell, foure ſcore and fourteene: capteine Hart, three ſcore and eight: capteine Price, one hundred twentie and three: capteine Wilſon, one hundred fourtie and fiue: capteine Blunt, one hundred twentie and ſeuen: capteine Burros, one hundred and ten: capteine Harſton, one hundred twentie and foure: captaine Shaw, foure ſcore and foure: capteine Enge, three ſcore and nine: capteine ſir Walter Waller, one hundred thirtie and ſeuen. The ſecond of Februarie capteine Willoughbie died at Hage, and was there honorablie buried. On the third of Februarie all the yeomen of the gard tooke their oth, whom remitting to the conſcience of their charge, we purpoſe now to touch the peremptorie authoritie committed to the ſaid lord lieutenant, by common conſent of the ſtates; and ſo by degrees to deſcend to other occurrents concerning theſe netherlands.

The death of capteine Willoughbie.

A placard conteining the authoritie giuen by the ſtates of the low countries, vnto the mightie prince, Robert earle of Leiceſter, baron of Denbigh, &c: for the gouernment of the ſaid low countries: tranſlated out of Dutch into Engliſh, as followeth.

THe generall ſtates of the vnited prouinces of the low countries, to all thoſe which ſhall ſee or heare theſe preſent writings, health and dilection. Euen as it hath pleaſed hir maieſtie of England mercifullie to ſend ouer into theſe countries the high and mightie prince and lord, lord Robert earle of Leiceſter, baron of Denbigh, and one of the priuie councell, knight of the noble order of the garter, and not onlie to admit and inſtitute his excellencie as cheefe head aboue all militarie ſouldiers on horſe or foote, which hir maieſtie hath ſent or ſhall ſend ouer hereafter into theſe countries; & to the end to aſſiſt vs with counſell, aid & aduiſe, according to his great experience, policie and wiſedome in the direction of publike affaires of the land, as well touching the feates of warre, as other waies, in conſeruation of all that which moſt tendeth to the profit of the foreſaid land, to bring backe and reduce the ſame into ſuch good order and rule as it hath bene in times paſt, to the end that ſo much the better and orderlie he maie reſiſt the force and tyrannie of our enimies, and to fruſtrate all his practiſes: but alſo beſides this to honor and inrich his foreſaid excellencie with greater authoritie, might and commandement, aboue all hir maieſties admerals and viceadmerals, and ſhips of war, to command them all, & to emploie them to the ſeruice of theſe countries, and in ſuch order as his excellencie ſhall find needfull for the ſame countrie; and that his excellencie following hir maieſties commandement, deſirous to ſhew the effect of the good will and affection which he beareth to theſe affairs, and to the preſeruation of the ſame alſo of the true chriſtian religion, and hath imploied himſelfe ſo willinglie in the foreſaid matters, that his excellencie for that onlie cauſe hath left and abandoned his natiue countrie and goods, and tranſported himſelfe hitherward amongſt vs: ſo that hir maieſtie and his excellencie could neuer haue doone or ſhewed vnto vs a greater benefit than this.

Note what a title and ſtile of excellencie the ſtates giue to the earle their gouernor, and the honorable ſeruice to him appointed.

The good will and affection of the lord lieutenant to performe the premiſſes ſignified and by good proofe teſtified.

Therefore are we reſolued, with good and ripe deliberation, to certifie all men by theſe preſent that we haue deſired, accepted, and authoriſed the ſaid mightie & honorable prince, lord Robert earle of Leiceſter, &c: to be our gouernor and generall capteine ouer all the vnited prouinces, and aſſociat cities and members of the ſame. And we giue vnto his excellencie, beſides the authoritie of hir maieſtie giuen vnto him, the higheſt and ſupreame commandement, and abſolute authoritie aboue, and in all matters of warfare by ſea and by land, to execute and adminiſtrat the ſame to the reſiſtance of the enimie, euen as his excellencie ſhall thinke moſt commodious to the preſeruation of thoſe countries: and ſo further, to doo all ſuch things as apperteine to the office of a generall capteine. And furthermore, we commit the adminiſtration and vſe of policie & iuſtice ouer the foreſaid vnited prouinces, and aſſociat cities and members of the ſame into his hands, to execute and adminiſtrat the ſame with ſuch power and authoritie, as haue had in times paſt all the other gouernors of theſe low countries before him; and eſpeciallie, as haue beene exerciſed, and lawfullie adminiſtred in the time of Charles the fift; re-

The ſtates agniſe the peremptorie authoritie put into the lord lieutenants hands in reſpect of his gouernment.

Like authoritie giuen to the lord lieutenant, as other gouernors his predeceſſors haue had in the low countries.

ſerued onelie the lawes and priuileges of the foreſaid countries: alſo with eſpeciall power to collect profits, and receiue, and adminiſtrat all the contributions which are agreed and condeſcended, or ſhall hereafter be conſented or agreed, to the maintenance of the warres: and alſo, that which is or ſhall be deliuered hereafter into his excellencies hands: and this all according to the vertue of other letters and miſſiues written more at large touching the ſame agreement. All which former charge and commiſſion, his excellencie through our earneſt deſire hath accepted, and hath deliuered ſolemne oth and aſſurance into our hands, firſt of all, for the preſeruation of the true chriſtian religion, and maintenance of the priuileges and rights of theſe lands and prouinces, members, and cities of the ſame.

An acknowledgement and performance of dutie and allegiance inward to all perſons of the low countries (vnder paine of puniſhment) to the lord lieutenant.

We therefore ordeine and command all gouernors of prouinces and cities, all admerals and viceadmerals, all officers, coroners, capteins, their officers and ſouldiors by ſea and land, and furthermore all other councellors, officers, treaſurors, receiuers, bailiffs, burgomaiſters, marſhals, magiſtrats, gentlemen, burgers, & other inhabitants and ſubiects of theſe lands, of what qualitie or condition ſoeuer; that they & euerie of them doo acknowledge his foreſaid excellencie in the qualitie of gouernement, and capteine generall ouer the forſaid vnited prouinces, to honor, reſpect, & obeie him, as they ought to doo, without making anie difficultie in dooing the ſame, vpon paine of falling in the diſpleaſure & anger of his excellencie, & to be puniſhed according to the heinnes of the fault, and as reaſon ſhall require. And to the end that no bodie ſhould pretend ignorance, we command expreſſelie to make knowne theſe ordinances, to proclaime and publiſh them, where as men are accuſtomed to proclame all publications, proceeding, and commanding to proceed with rigor againſt all diſdainors & neglectors of the ſame, according to the order of puniſhment before mentioned, without anie fauour or diſſimulation to the contrarie, becauſe we haue thought the ſame to be expedient for the preſeruation of the countrie.

All pretenſe of ignorance cut off, leaſt the courſe of obedience might be hindered.

Giuen in our congregation and aſſemblie in the Hage, the ſixt daie of Februarie, 1586, by ordinance of the foreſaid generall ſtates.

Councellors for matters of ſtate elected by the lord lieutenant.

This placard thus paſſed, the lord lieutenant bending his mind to his charge vndertaken, did ordeine certeine ſpeciall men, natiues borne of the councell, to the intent that ſuch affaires as chanced to occur, might by them be conuenientlie managed: the names of the ſaid councellors, with the places they were to ſuperintend, orderlie following. For Guelderland Heldebertus Leoninus, for Flanders Doelſloud Tomedicurke, for Holland lord Valrauen Brederough, Sebaſtian Loron, William Birdeſe; for Zeland James Walke, Geoiſe Toiling; for Vtricke Paulus Bace, for Friſeland Aſmaugh preſident of Friſeland, Charles Rodee. ¶ Hauing thus far diſcourſed of the lord lieutenants paſſing from place to place, with the manner of his interteinement agreeable to his perſon, as alſo the ſeuerall ſhews full & ſignificant, togither with the conditions interchangeable betweene him and the ſtates, and laſtlie hauing touched the names of ſuch as by his election were dignified with the ordering of the countrie affaires, depending vpon their graue and experimented counſell: the obſeruation of time dooth vrge vs yer we proceed anie further, to deliuer a peece of ſeruice doone by coronell Skinke, and then to proceed in the continued commemoration of the lord lieutenants interteinement in other places where he came.

Coronell Skinke taketh the towne of Warle and caſtell thereto belonging.

Note therefore, that on the one and twentith daie of Februarie, Skinke not lieng ſtill from indamaging the enimie, did take the towne of Warle and the caſtell thereto belonging: the maner whereof was this. Himſelfe lieng in Vendelo, a towne in part beſieged, left his men with the Graue Moris, charging them not to depart, till ſuch time as they heard from him, which they fulfilled. The twentith daie of Februarie he came with two or three men from Vendelo to his men, no man knowing his enterpriſe, cauſed them in the morning to be readie, and ſo paſſed on till middaie, at which time they were not far from Warle. Skinke eſpieng a thirtie wagons going with vittels to the towne, he tooke the wagons, clad certeine of his men in the bours apparell, ſent them into the towne to ſell the vittels, which they followed, and one of them broke his wagon in the gate; ſo that the gate could not be cloſed. One of them ſhooting off a dag gaue Skinke warning, and he ſuddenlie entered the towne without reſiſtance, and tooke both it and the caſtell. This towne is thought not ſo ſtrong as profitable, yet verie ſtrong. In it are diuerſe ſaltpits which doo make great ſtore of ſalt, which ſalt dooth ſerue a great part of the countrie to Cullen, and further altogither ſerued the enimie of ſalt, which now he wanteth. About the firſt of March he left the towne, burning it and ſpoiling the countrie; the cauſe was this. There was an armie comming to ſtaie his paſſage, which he hauing three hundred horſſes did aſſaie, ſlue a thouſand ſouldiors, tooke fiue enſignes and ſent to the lord lieutenant. This did valiant Skinke, whom wiſhing no leſſe fortunat in his attemps hereafter, then proſperous hitherto, we will leaue, and looke backe to matters of delight another while, as the date of time dooth offer.

The cauſe why Skinke burnt the ſaid towne.

The lord lieutenant commeth from the Hage to Harlem, & how he was receiued.

When the ſtate of the countrie was prouided for in ſuch ſort as before ye haue heard, the lord lieutenant proceeded to other actions, inſomuch that on the firſt of March he came from Hage to Leidon, and the third of March from Leidon to Harlem, whoſe interteinement there was in this maner. A little from the gate of the towne, he was met with the burgers, or principals of the towne. One of the which being an old man with a long white beard, made a long oration in Latine to him: after the which he paſſed to the entrie gate of the towne, on the which was placed a maiden apparelled all in white, holding a ſcutchion in hir hand, wherein were painted the armes of England, and all about were painted red roſes, vnder the which were theſe verſes:

These verſes are ſuppoſed to be ſpoken by the towne of Harlem.

Euge Calidonias princeps celebrate per vrbes,
Ingredere Harlemi mœnia fidæ tui,
Me licèt Hiſpanus pluſquam ciuilibus armis,
Preſſet, ac horrifico Mulciber igne deus:
Hand tamen extremo mihi eris decorandus honore,
Nam tua corde pio ſceptra fidéque colam,
Ipſe roſæ afflictos clypeo ſi texeris omnes,
Donabis Batauos pace Roberte lares.

Diuerſe ſhews, and firſt, the counterfet of a woman repreſented.

Paſſing further into the towne, was a ſcaffold, where on was placed diuerſe perſonages, amongſt the which was a woman hauing a ſcutchion, conteining the armes of England in the one hand, and a ſword in the other hand, and diuerſe perſons lieng dead before hir, with theſe Latine verſes written vnderneath, and a poſie to the ſame alſo annexed:

Vana fugat verum veluti mendacia purum,
Sic viciorum abigat tua dux præſentia Lernam.
Veritas, verbum Dei.

A repreſentation of the queene of England.

Paſſing yet further, there was an high ſcaffold, wheron was a repreſentation of the queene of England with hir ſword in hir hand, vnder whome laie enuie, tyrannie, and diuerſe other the like, all whom ſhe had brought vnder, and vnder this was written theſe verſes in legible Latine letters or characters:

Iuſticia infeſtos frænat pietate tyrannos,
Sic tuus aduentus cuncta Roberte mala.

A crowne, the foote whereof was adorned with roſes.

Paſſing further into a faire market place, there was a piller of great height, on the top whereof was a crowne, and about the foote of the crowne roſes ſet, and theſe eight verſes were written about the piller:

Eliſabeth regina atauis quæ regibus orta eſt,
Hunc dedit atroci qui nos tueatur ab hoſte,
Ergo ducem iuuenis meritò venerare ſenéxque,
Munere quando Dei Geticum nympha iſta fugabit.
Pyramidum Pharia ſileant miracula gentes,
Quámq; vetus molem duxit ad aſtra Rhodos,
Iam tibi dux vilem pro tempore ponimus, at hâc
Aurea ſi poſſem concelibrandus eris.

The beare & ragged ſtaffe, with certeine verſes concerning peace.

Ouer the entrance of the palace or lodging for the earle, there was ſet a beare with a ragged ſtaffe, and theſe verſes written vnder concerning the peace:

Veniſti ô auibus tandem fœlicibus heros,
Regia quem nobis munere nympha dedit:
Virgo Calidonias ad ſidera nota per oras,
Vltima ſpes feſſis præſidiúmque viris:
Reddere te ſine quis patriæ Saturnia regna
Poſſet, & armiſoni pellere tela deiſt
Vera etenim de te ſi dux oracula fantur,
Hæc Dudlæe teget nos ſine Marte roſa:
Pacificè rege, regnis lætantibus, heros,
Pacifico quis non principe lætus erit?

A ſhew made by the ſouldiours according to militarie ſkill.

In all the ſtreetes of this towne, where through the earle paſſed, were planted ſouldiours in moſt braue furniture, and he being placed in a window right againſt the market place, the ſame ſouldiours there ranged themſelues firſt in a ring, then marching into a ſquare; and after paſſing in verie good forme, the night for the moſt part being ſpent with fire workes and ſhewes moſt braue. In one of the ſhewes a picture of a woman ſignifieng enuie, was burnt. On the fourth of March, the L. lieutenant ſaw the earle of Eſſex coronell, and ſir William Ruſſell coronell, muſter and traine by Harlem to the number of two hundred horſſe. And on the ſecond daie after, he was feaſted and banketed. The tenth of March he came from Harlem to Amſterdam, and by the waie was met with diuerſe men of warre well ſhipped, which brought him by a long riuer that went into the towne, ouer the which riuer were thrée ſtrong bridges placed full of armed ſoldiours, & on the firſt bridge was planted ten or twelue péeces of ordinance, which all after his honor was paſſed ſhot off, the ſouldiors on euerie bridge diſcharging by volées in moſt braue maner.

The L. lieutenants going to Amſterdam, with the maner of his receiuing.

Being paſt the bridge, he was met with two great pageants or ſhewes, in this manner. Two boats were made in monſtrous greatneſſe; on the one the ſhape or likeneſſe of a horſſe ſwimming, on the other the likeneſſe of a fiſh, on each of them a man riding, ſignifieng the god Neptune: both theſe, one on the one ſide, and the other on the other ſide, did accompanie him to his landing, which was at the market place, where were planted gret numbers of armed men with ſhot. Right before him where he landed was a faire ſcaffold, whereon were placed armed men fighting, the one companie ouercomming and the other flieng. Ouer them, on the ſame ſcaffold knéeled an old man, holding vp his hands towards heauen, and on each ſide of him, one other ſupporting or ſtaieng vp his hands. Which ſignified that Ioſua and the Iſraelits preuailed, and ouerthrew the Philiſtines, ſo long as Moſes did praie for them with his hands erected towards heauen; but when his hands were downe, the children of Iſraell had the worſt: and ſo now through the praier of good men, God had at length ſent them ſuccour and reléefe.

Two pageants & what they repreſented.

The ſtate of the people repreſented in a ſhew of compariſon.

Vnder this were written theſe coupled verſes:

Ad Dominum qui confugiunt cum fœdere panſis
Innocuis palmis, manet hos victoria læta.

Spaniſh tyrannie repreſented, with poſies ſignificant.

Paſſing further, there was an other ſcaffold, whereon was placed one ſéeming to be in great diſtreſſe, a tyrant being readie to kill him; but by the aid of Eliſabeth quéene of England, he was ſhéelded, defended and deliuered, and the enimie repelled & driuen awaie; aboue the which were theſe verſes:

Eia age magne, veni ô Anglorum ductor, & altos
Ingredere & celebres cape quos ſpõdemus honores.

On the one ſide was written this that followeth:

Iuſticia & æquitas maximè
Reddunt diuturnum imperium.

On the other ſide was written this that followeth:

Fides ſacra beatiſſimum humani generis bonum eſt.

Ouer all was written this that followeth:

Maximè vbi ancipiti filo pia cauſa tremiſcit,
Ex inſperato ſæpè redemptor adeſt.

The quéenes aid to the lo countries repreſented.

Paſſing further, on an other ſcaffold was placed the likeneſſe of a quéene moſt ſumptuouſlie apparelled, and on both ſides of hir was hanged all ſorts of armour and munition for the wars, and ouer hir head theſe verſes concerning aid & ſuccour were written:

Vt ſacra Ioſiæ dextra olim reſtituiſti,
Sic ope reginæ Belgas Deus optime ſerua.

1585

Amſterdam a towne of gre concourſe an commerce.

In the afternoone of that daie, all the ſouldiours of the towne with fiue ancients muſtered before his lodging moſt brauelie, and all the night following was paſſed in fire works, & bonfiers, with other triumphes. The thirtéenth of March he was ſumptuouſlie banketed by the burgeſſes of the towne. This towne of Amſterdam is a towne greatlie frequented with merchants of all ſorts and countries, which cauſeth the ſame to haue ſuch ſtore of ſhipping as is woonderfull: for they lie as groues before the towne. In this towne haue béene manie Anabaptiſts, which within this twentie yeares did great miſchéefe, not onelie with their lewd ſects, but alſo by their wicked acts: as firſt by burning their houſes, then running naked about the towne, after by riſing in armes againſt the other inhabitants: but they were ouercome, taken, condemned & hanged. This towne is of a woonderfull ſtrength, the wall whereof is ſo paſſing faire, that it is great pleaſure to behold it, and to walke on it. Without the wall is a ditch of great breadth. This laſt yeare, to wit, one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and fiue, the burgeſſes augmented the towne, in making a mud wall ten or twelue ſcore yards round about the citie, with ſuch a ditch, bulworke, &c: as is not to be wiſhed to haue a towne better fortified, lacking nothing that may ſet it out for ſtrength: the countrie round about this towne being of ſuch kind of moiſture, that it is paſt reaſon to haue a place to batter it, or to plant anie ordinance againſt it. There is a great arme of the ſea two miles ouer, on the one ſide of the towne the wals be ſtrong, the ditches great, the vittels innumerable, plentie of people, ordinance ſufficient, water good ſtore, and all other things that might make the towne ſtrong. ¶ Héere leauing the lord lieutenant for a while, we will giue a little leape to actions of manhood againſt the enimie, and then returne to the matter whenſe we haue made digreſſion. Wherfore touching the valor of captein Skinke, a man of ſingular ſeruice, this report doth flie of him, agréeing with a note ſent to the lord lieutenant, then reſiding at Amſterdam.

Anabaptiſts ſect hereticall and hurtfull note.

Amſterdam a towne inexpugnable.

A note from coronell Skin at Arndelo.

The ſaid coronell went of late with his horſſemen to Nuce, and thenſe tooke both footmen and horſſemen to the enterpriſe by him intended againſt the towne of Warle, which they tooke by ſallie, in the morning earlie, meaning to haue taken the caſtle, but failed. The duke of Bauiers men with thoſe of the countrie, gathred togither to the number of thrée thouſand, but coronell Skinke ſalied foorth & charging them, ouerthrew their force, ſlaieng about one thouſand. Within thrée daies after they aſſembled againe to the number of ſix thouſand bours well armed with enſignes diſplaied, and with them eight hundred of the ſaid dukes ſoldiers, and two hundred horſſes of the knights and gentlemen of that countrie, with intent to reſcue the caſtell. Skinke ſalied againe foorth of the towne with two hundred and fiftie horſſe, leauing the reſt therein, bicauſe of the citizens and thoſe in the caſtell, and if he had not made this ſalie he had béene in danger to haue béene taken or ſlaine, but he iſſued and ouerthrew the ſaid forces, and ſlue about thrée thouſand, amongſt the which were thirtie of the chiefeſt gentlemen of the countrie, and he with his men went backe to the towne, himſelfe was ſhot in this conflict, and loſt diuerſe of his beſt men. The caſtell and countrie was in maner nére ouercome, had not the Spaniſh forces haſtned that waies, vpon the comming of which, Skinke was forced to giue place being void of hope to be reſcued, and in his retract ſpoiled and burnt the countrie.

A note concerning the magnanimitie and valor of capteine (otherwiſe called coronell) Skinke.

The Spaniards made to him in thrée parts, the one paſſing ouer by the Keiſers weart with eight companies of horſſe, and fortie enſignes of footmen, towards Ketwich, Dortmont and Onnar. The ſecond led countie Charles of Manſfeld, conſiſting of ſix companies of horſſemen, & fiftéene companies of footmen, which came from Graue toward the Rhene at the becke to paſſe ouer, and ſo to hinder our comming forth of the towne. The third was led by Verding out of Friſeland with ſix companies of horſſemen, and peſſants of that countrie about Recklinghonſon, and to the third of thoſe were againe gathered the third time the gentlemen and peſſants of that countrie: & ioined to the duke of Bauiers men by Arnberch. If the ſaid aids had not come, the cantred had béene ſubdued, ſo by Gods prouidence, he and his people are returned, not without ſome ſmall loſſe, to Vendelo againe. The firſt part being the Spaniards lie yet in the land of Marke and Weſtualia, Verding lieth ſtill in the ſtitch of Mounſter about the towne of Haltern on the riuer Lipo. Countie Charles Manſfield abideth in the land of Cleue about Santenburch & Seuſberke. The ſpéech was they meant to beſiege Nuce, but Skinke feareth more Bericke, he hath procured thoſe within Nuce one moneths paie in monie and cloth, and they were well prouided of powder and munition, ſo as there is leaſt feare of that place, in it are one thouſand good footmen and two hundred horſſe.

The Spaniards make againſt coronell Skinke in thrée parts.

In what places the Spaniards lie diuided.

Thus much touching coronell Skinke, and his enimies, whom I will leaue to their ſucceſſes allotted by the Lord of hoſts, and come backe againe to the lord lieutenant, who on the one and twentith of March came from Amſterdam to a caſtle called Mullen, foure miles from Norden, and there did dine, and from thenſe he came to Norden to ſupper and to bed. On the two and twentith of March he came from Norden to Vtricht, where as his receiuing was nothing inferior to moſt of the reſt before written. Thrée or foure thouſand ſouldiors on foot, marching a mile out of the towne met him, and then marched before him to the towne; at the entrance whereof, the burgeſſes of the towne met him, one of them making vnto him a long oration in their language. Comming into the towne, the ordinance was diſcharged, and at the entrance of the market place, there was a woman placed on a high ſcaffold, which held in hir hand a gold ring, offering it vnto him, with certeine poſies therein written. Paſſing further, there was placed on a ſcaffold ſeuen yoong men, holding in their hands ſeuen cotes or armes of the ſeuen vnited prouinces, and vnder them were written verſes of conuenient deuiſes. Paſſing further, there was placed on a ſcaffold, ſitting in a chaire, a woman repreſenting the quéenes maieſtie of England, before was the picture or likeneſſe of a yellow lion, hauing a ſore foot, who looking on hir ſéemed to complaine, & ſhe cauſed hir handmaiden to dreſſe the lions foot, and vnder hir were written verſes agréeable to the ſpectacle. From thenſe he paſſed to his lodging, and all the night following (as alſo manie other nights) was ſpent in fier works, bonfiers and ſhewes of maruellous ioie.

The lord lieutenants comming to Vtricht and his receiuing there.

A gold ring preſented to the lord lieutenant.

Diuers ſhews and repreſentations to the purpoſe.

Out of Vtricht and other places thereabout, there met the earle foure miles from Vtricht on a plaine, or heath, twelue hundred horſe, moſt part of which were Engliſhmen, ſo well mounted as might be, at which time they trained themſelues in good order before him in maner of ſkirmiſh, and ſo brought him to Vtricht. On the ſix and twentith of March the earle of Eſſex went to Leger with his horſemen, where he began a new worke. The eight and twentith of March the earle was feaſted by Graue Moris, on the which daie in the morning there was charge giuen to all the Engliſh ſouldiors in the towne, that they ſhould march from thenſe to Liege, which for that they wanted their paie they refuſed and raiſed a mutinie, for the which one of capteine Polles men was taken and put in ward; wherevpon the reſt of his followers ſéeing this, came to the gaole, burſt the locks of the doores, and tooke out the priſoner, for the which there were fiue apprehended, and thrée of them were hanged on the nine and twentith of March, the more to terrifie the reſt. On the eight & twentith of March was alſo hanged the ſecretarie to the countie Hollocke, which ſecretarie was a counſellor principall to the betraieng of the towne of Graue. The thirtith of March the earle feaſted the nobilitie and burgeſſes of Vtricht, where there wanted nothing that might fill their bellies or heads.

Twelue hundred horſe met the lord lieutenant vpon a heath.

The earle of Eſſex goeth to Leger.

A mutinie among the ſouldiors with other outragious diſorder procuring execution by death.

Countie Hollocks ſecretarie hanged.

The people of this towne haue ſhewed themſelues greatlie to fauor our Engliſhmen, for there came to the towne from the Leger 300 or 400 ſouldiors ſo ſicke and poore, that it was woonder to ſée their miſerie, and the towneſmen not onelie receiued them, but alſo relieued them with meat, drinke, and cloths, giuing them for the moſt part new ſhirts and other neceſſarie apparell, looking ſo vnto them for their health, that whereas for the moſt part they were in great danger of death, few or none of them at that time periſhed. In this towne was builded by the duke of Alua one caſtle inuincible, which by the Spaniards was long kept, till at length, either werie of their abode, or deſiring ſoueraigntie, they ſet their forces againſt the towne, and the towne alſo bent againſt them; ſo that after much hurt was doone to the towne by beating downe of their houſes & churches, and killing the towneſmen, the caſtle vpon compoſition was yéelded to the towne, the Spaniards iſſuing out of it: which being doone the towneſmen did beat downe the caſtle to the ground, reſeruing the wall of the towne on which part the caſtle had béene planted: in which place where this caſtle ſtood is now a horſe faier or market kept, and execution is there doone.

Vtricht people commended for their great kindnes ſhewed to the Engliſhmen.

A caſtle of defenſe builded by the duke of Alua ruinated and beaten downe.

On the firſt or ſecond of Aprill, generall Norris tooke the ſconſe called Lite. On the fourth of Aprill was a ſore conflict betwéene the malecontents and the Engliſh, the enimies being foure thouſand, were vanquiſhed by generall Norris with one thouſand men, whereof he loſt a great number, and ſlue twelue hundred Spaniards. This gentleman no leſſe fortu-nat than victorious, deſerueth a far better remembrance, than my barren wit can frame: and requiſit it were that he ſhould be mentioned in ſtorie, conſidering that he hath obiected himſelfe againſt manie deadlie dangers, which it hath pleaſed God, by directing his policie, to driue to proſperous euents: as appeareth by a letter ſent to the lord lieutenant, the tenor whereof inſueth.

The ſconſe of Lite taken by generall Norris.

A copie of a letter ſent by generall Norris from his road by Rawſton, neere Graue, on the ſixt of Aprill.

Exploits of coronell Norris reported out of a letter directed to the L. lieutenant.

MAie it pleſe your excellencie to be aduertiſed, that finding the wind to be contrarie, we being to intrench our ſelues this laſt night within one houres march to Graue, the which the enimie finding, came with a reſolute mind before we had ended our worke, and put vs from the place, where we had not aboue thrée hundred Engliſhmen, and hauing ſent for the reſt being eight hundred or thereabout, to come with all ſpéed to vs: but in the meane time the enimie did ſo ouercharge vs, and with freſh men hauing then in place aboue thrée thouſand that were faſtened on vs, after that we had bidden and driuen a braue charge, to leaue the place, and méeting with the reſt of our Engliſhmen, in one halfe mile retract we turned and forced them to quite the place, and had the killing of them aboue one Engliſh mile; and then by meanes of a ſudden raine that fell, and the wearineſſe of our ſouldiors, we made a retract, in the which I dare aſſure your excellencie we loſt not aboue ten men: but the ſouldiors vpon the retract threw awaie much of their armor. In this companie, there is my ſelfe hurt, capteine Burrowes, and capteine Price, and diuerſe other gentlemen that did ſerue moſt trulie. I dare aſſure your lordſhip that there was not ſéene a better daies ſeruice in this countrie than this, and your honor ſhall doo well to ſignify by your honors letters partlie to all the townes of Holland, that the enimie hath loſt a great companie of braue men, and moſt of their leaders, that which your excellencie ſhall find moſt true. I find, that your excellencie is not to make account of anie other nation than your owne: for after the firſt retract, there would verie few Dutchmen turne backe with vs: but your excellencie ſhould doo well to take no knowledge of it. And if the raw ſouldiors would haue béene commanded, we might haue kept the place that we came to intrench our ſelues in, but for want thereof, we did retract to Marbnanble. Aſſure your honor that I will to the vttermoſt of my power doo your honor what I maie, to the hazzarding of my life to doo your excellencie honor and ſeruice, as knoweth the almightie, to whoſe tuition I commit your excellencie. From the rode in my bed, before Rawſton, the ſixt of Aprill.

This ſéemed to be a poſtſcript.

¶ I muſt ſignifie to your honor that countie Hollocke, countie Philip, my brother Henrie, & diuers other gentlemen did ſerue this daie moſt brauelie. Hauing taken counſell, we fullie mind to retire to Maſeumble, where if it pleaſe your excellencie to ſend vs thrée hundred horſes, and putting the reſt of the horſes in gariſons in the townes thereabout, and ſend vs the reſt of the footmen, we ſhall haue a daie with them againe, within theſe ten daies, doubt not.

Your excellencies moſt humble to command, Generall Norris.

Thus you ſée a great diſcomfiture giuen to the enimie, and the ſame with little loſſe on the Engliſh partie: wherby we are to gather, conſidering the inequalitie of the number, as appeareth by the clauſe of the ſaid letter, that the ouerthrow giuen to the enimie did ſpeciallie procéed from God, who as he is called the Lord of hoſts, ſo is it his good pleaſure to proſper the attempts of thoſe that fight in his feare, and put not their truſt in an arme of fleſh, neither in bands of footmen, nor troops of horſemen. And now ſéeing we haue made ſo good an entrance into the name of Norris, enobled by famous feats of armes, we count it an eclipſing of his renowme, to neglect the declaration of other enterpriſes and atchiuements, no leſſe tending to the inlargement of his honor, than to the reproofe of the reporter if they ſhould be concealed.

The winning of the ſconſe called Bolt.

Touching the maner therefore of the winning of the ſconſe called Bolt by generall Norris the ſecond of Aprill, thus it was. Marching thither, he ſummoned it with a trumpet, but they within with moſt reuiling words denied to yéeld, which the generall perceiuing, ſent fiftie or thréeſcore ſouldiors in little ſkips with muſkits to view the ſconſe, for that it ſtood ſo as none could come to it but by water. Theſe men did ſo plie the loope holes with ſhot, that they made the enimie kéepe in his head: which theſe men perceiuing, did go néere, ſtill ſhooting ſo till they came to the fort, which with ſpéed they ſcaled, and put ſtraw in the loope holes, ſetting fire on it, which they within perceiuing, did not reſiſt, and ſo this ſtrong fort was ſuppreſſed without anie ſhot of cannon, or ſlaieng anie one man, and hurting but foure. And ſo they marched toward Graue, leauing ſufficient to kéepe it. Now concerning the maner of the conflict doone by generall Norris againſt the Spaniards néere Graue, thus it was.

A conflict betwéene generall Norris and the Spaniards.

The whole companie of Engliſh and Dutch, marching within ſix miles of Graue, ſtaied, ſauing thrée hundred Engliſh, which marched within one Engliſh mile of Graue, or thereabout, there meaning to inſconſe themſelues, which they put in practiſe. But the enimie well knowing their ſtrength and intent, ſet out thrée companies: the firſt being a thouſand Spaniards naturall, all for the moſt part old ſouldiors, & a great ſort leaders. Theſe thouſand thinking to haue cut the Engliſh in péeces, ſet foorth firſt, which the Engliſhmen perceiuing, ſent for the other forces which marched apaſe; but the enimie purſuing his enterpriſe charged our men, & at length draue them from the trench alreadie in part made, and cauſed a retire on our ſide halfe an Engliſh mile, where they met the reſt of our forces, which turned them backe. So they marched togither and incountered with a great ſort of freſh Spaniards, which were come to the ſkirmiſh, and by the great power of God by force of armes they draue the enimie from them, and purſued them to their owne ſconſe, and by the waie they atteined a péece of ordinance of the enimie, prepared for to deſtroie our men, but yet they could doo nothing, they were ſo ioined togither in fight. So the Engliſh had the killing of them the halfe mile that they retired, and an Engliſh mile more, where a freſh ſupplie of the enimie was made; ſo our men were forced to retire againe in ſome diſorder, with ſmall loſſe of anie men. But the enimie was ſo wearie, & ſo danted with theſe conflicts that they followed but a little way, and left their purſuing, ſo that the ſpoile, honor, and gaine on our ſide obteined, there were of the enimies (as was thought) thrée thouſand braue ſouldiors, of our ſide onelie eight hundred Engliſh, and thrée hundred Dutch, countie Hollocke & countie Philip in perſon ſerued moſt valiantlie, but their men did ſmall good. Generall Norris was hurt in the face with a pike, as thruſt through the chéeke, and further into the ſide, there was hurt capteine Burrows and capteine Price, who with the generall fought moſt brauelie, this was doone the ſixt of Aprill. This

The enimie purſued to their owne ſconſe.

The huge number of the aduerſe part, and the ſmall of our ſide.

ſlict being doone, our men cut the great riuer of Maſe in diuers places, and in deſpite of the enimies ſhot, ſent ſix and thirtie ſhips or ſmall veſſels into Graue, although they paſſed one of their ſconſes, and a little from Graue by a dort or village that ſhot moſt vehementlie to them, yet they paſſed through to the towne, and returned without anie great loſſe. Underſtand that theſe ſhips did not go by the riuer but by the land, for the water ouerfloweth the land in ſome places twelue foot at leaſt.

Since about the ſixteenth of this moneth there paſſed to the towne two & twentie more of thoſe ſhips, and in their paſſage had but foure or fiue men ſlaine, and twentie hurt, although the enimie ſhot moſt vehementlie vpon them, and ſent out to take them three ſhips well appointed, which in fight our men ſoonke one of them, and tooke the other two, bringing them to our companie. There was ſlaine of the enimies, and drowned of naturall Spaniards fortie or fiftie. Now doo our men meane to purſue them no more neither by land which they determined, hauing made a ſconſe within two arrowes ſhot of their great ſconſe, and determined to go neere and aſſaile their ſconſe: yet now they purpoſe to ſtaie a good wind, that their ſhips of war maie come downe to the riuer, and beat at their ſconſe: at which time I iudge our men at land will not be idle, for the piles that the enimie made ouer the riuer, are by violence of water driuen awaie, and the water greatlie ſoonke on the land, ſo that the little veſſels can not well flote as they did on the land.

The enimies bite their fingers for anger, note why.

It is reported, that when they in the ſconſe ſaw they could not command our ſhips, they bit their fingers, with ſigne of woonderfull anger. Now Graue is ſufficientlie victualled for ten moneths at leaſt, that the ſtrength of the towne, the courage of the ſouldiors, and the ſtore of victuals doo make them of the towne to aſſure the erle in ſpite of the enimies violence, though they be let alone without helpe this yeare, they will almoſt warrant the towne, vpon the battell by Rawſton againſt the Spaniards. They that laie before Graue, I meane our enimies, ſent a letter to the prince of Parma, that of our ſide were ſlaine ſix or ſeuen hundred of braue gentlemen that came now with the earle out of England: but ſaie they, we haue loſt a great manie braue men, and ſent to the prince the number. The prince writ againe, that he could not but be ſorie for the death of ſo manie braue men, but he was glad our men had taſted of the ſame cup; & this letter was alſo taken of our men preſentlie. The prince let it be knowne that our men for the moſt part were ſlaine, wherevpon in all places there were bonfires made for ioie.

Furthermore, one thing woorthie the noting dooth yet remaine, that is, that ſoone after the fight doone againſt the Spaniards by Rawſton, our men went to Battenburrow a moſt braue houſe for beautie, quantitie, and ſtrength, for the Faſe runneth by it & a great riuer on the other ſide it; but our men laieng the cannon to the gates of it, made a breach, which being perceiued of the enimie they yeelded. There were thirtie or more Italians, the reſt boures and peſſants of the countrie; the Italians went awaie, their liues and ranſoms ſpared, but the boures are kept to be ranſomed: in it were thirtie women which alſo were kept. Thus woonderfullie hath God bleſſed vs, that without ſlaughter on our part to be accounted, theſe victories are atteined with ſo ſmall a companie as was looked for of vs, but God hath preſerued vs. Thus now will we conclude and ſhut vp theſe exploits with the names of the great men of account that were ſlaine at the battell by Rawſton, as was noted in a letter ſent to the prince of Parma, by Franciſco de Cereſota alxer the eight of Aprill, the letter being intercepted, don Iohn de Pauilla coronell generall, don Iohn de Caſtilo, don Pedro Ramares de Albano, capteine Flolis, capteine Cedran, don Iohn Calagiron, Nignell de Cardona. There were ſlaine in all by that note ſix hundred. Slaine, hurt, and (in the retire) diſarmed, of our companie as followeth, 161 ſlaine or taken, thirtie three hurt, fiue hundred foureſcore & nineteene diſarmed.

Perſons of name on the enimies part ſlaine, with other ſouldiors, ſome taken, hurt, and diſarmed.

The eighteenth of Aprill th earle went from Utricht to Ammerfoord, where through his ſudden comming the towne was not ſo fullie prouided for his interteinment as other places had beene: but there wanted no good will in the townſmen as appeared, for he and all his traine did find the people to their power readie to fauor them, and to doo them all the good and pleaſure they could. This towne is double walled, firſt with ſtone, and then with mud, and alſo double ditched. The nineteenth of Aprill the earle went to Newchirch foure Engliſh miles from Ammerfoord to ſee the Leger of our horſe and foot there. The twentith of Aprill he came from Ammerfoord to Utricht againe.

S. Georges feaſt ſolemnlie obſerued at Utricht.

The three and twentith of Aprill, the earle of Leiceſter being lieutenant, and gouernour generall of hir maieſties forces in the low countries of the vnited prouinces (as is aforeſaid) and making his reſidence at that time in Utricht (a great and goodlie towne vpon the frontiers of Holland) kept moſt honourablie the feaſt of S. George therein, the proceedings whereof being ſo princelie performed to the honor of our nation, in the view of ſo manie thouſand ſtrangers, I could not chooſe (hauing gotten the true and faithfull deſcription, by one William Seager aliàs Portcullis an officer of armes in that ſeruice) to make ſome breefe remembrance of the maner thereof in this booke, to wit. The ſtreets of Utricht being large and faire, were rankt and ſet with eight enſignes of burgers richlie appointed, wearing ſcarffes knit like roſes white and red vpon their armes, betweene whome from the court of my lord vnto the cathedrall church called the Dome, the proceeding was on horſſebacke. Firſt rid the trumpetors apparelled in ſcarlet, laid with ſiluer lace, ſounding their trumpets moſt roiallie, their bannerols being diſplaied and richlie limmed with my lords armes. Then followed the gentlemen, capteins, colonels, and hir maieſties ſworne men, to the number of a fortie horſſe, richlie adorned in cloth of gold, ſiluer, and ſilkes, of all colours. After came ſix knights, foure barons, with the councell of eſtates, the right honourable earle of Eſſex accompanied the biſhop of Cullen prince elector; and the prince of Portingall rid by himſelfe: next proceeded the capteine of the gard, the treſuror and controllor of the houſhold, bearing their white ſtaues. After whom followed two gentlemen vſhers, and Portcullis herald in a rich cote of armes of England.

L. lieutenant inueſted in the robes of order.

Then came my lord moſt princelike, inueſted in his robes of the order, garded by the principall burgers of the towne, which offered themſelues to that ſeruice, beſides his owne gard, which were a fiftie halberds in ſcarlet clokes, garded with purple and white veluet. He being thus honourablie brought vnto the church, after due reuerence doone vnto the queenes maieſties ſtate, which was there erected on the right hand, he tooke his owne ſtall on the left, by certeine degrees lower. Then began praiers, and a ſermon made by maſter Knewſtubs my lords chapleine, after which my lord proceeded to the offering; firſt for hir maieſtie, & then for himſelfe, the which he performed with ſuch decorum & princelie behauiour, that all generallie ſpake moſt honourablie of him.

Theſe ſolemnities being doone, his lordſhip returned as he came, leauing behind him the earle of Eſſex and certeine gentlemen to accompanie the princes and the ladies of the court. His court was a faire and large houſe, belonging in times paſt to the knights of the Rhodes, in which was a verie great hall richlie hoong with tapiſtrie: at the vpper end whereof was a moſt ſumptuous cloth and chaire of eſtate for the queenes maieſtie, with hir armes and ſtile thereon, and before it a table couered with all things ſo requiſit as if in perſon ſhe had beene there; on the left hand almoſt at the tables end was my lords trencher and ſtoole, for he would haue no chaire.

Martin Skinke knighted, who promiſed Portcullis to ſhew him ſeauentie enſignes that he had now in the field.

The tables being couered, and all degrees aſſembled, my lord before the ſtate of hir maieſtie knighted a Dutch gentleman, called ſir Martin Skinke, for his manifold ſeruices doone to his countrie, the which doone, the vſhers marſhalled the feaſt. At the table on the right ſide of the hall ſat the yoong prince of Portingall, the prince Elector and his wife, the princeſſe Simeie, the earle of Eſſex, the Graue Morris and his ladie, & betweene euerie ladie was an Engliſh lord or knight placed. On the left ſide ſat the ſtates and cheefe burgers of the towne, and the grand prior of Amerford (who came to ſee the feaſt) was by my lords appointment placed vppermoſt at that table. Then began the trumpets to ſound in the ſeruice which was moſt princelike & abundant, ſerued on the knee, carued and taſted to hir maieſties trencher.

A ſumptuous feaſt and full of deuiſes.

The ſide tables being furniſhed all in ſiluer plate, & attended on by gentlemen, ſundrie ſorts of muſikes continued the interim of the firſt courſe, which doone and auoided, the trumpets ſounded in for the ſecond, which was all baked meats of beaſts, and foules; the beaſts as lions, dragons, leopards, and ſuchlike, bearing veins of arms, & the foules, as pecocks, ſwans, pheſants, turkie cocks and others in their naturall fethers, ſpred as in their greateſt pride, which ſight was both rare and magnificent. This ſeruice being placed on hir maieſties boord, the beaſts on one ſide, and foules on the other, the lion lieng couchant at hir highneſſe trencher; the vſhers cried, A hall, which being made with much a doo (by reaſon of the multitude) they brought vp betweene them, with three reuerences to the ſtate, Portcullis herald, inueſted with the armes of England, who in Latine, French and Engliſh pronounced the queenes maieſties vſuall ſtile of England, France & Ireland, defendreſſe of the faith, &c: crieng three times, Largeſſe.

The earle of Eſſex commended for chiualrie.

Then began the trumpets to ſound, and the Dutchmen to carouſe, to the health of hir maieſtie, the welfare of my lord, and to the proſperities of the vnited prouinces, and nothing wanted wherein either ſtate, magnificence, or ioy might be expreſſed. To be breefe, the feaſt ended, and tables voided, there was danſing, vawting, and tumbling, with the forces of Hercules, which gaue great delight to the ſtrangers, for they had not ſeene it before, and thus they paſſed the time till euenſong, and then departed. At ſupper being all aſſembled againe, great was the feaſt, and plentifull the cheere; and after ſupper began the bariers betweene chalengers and defendants men of armes, wherein the earle of Eſſex behaued himſelfe ſo towardlie, that he gaue all men great hope of his noble forwardneſſe in armes. The bariers doone, and either part retired with equall praiſe (though not with equall blowes) there was a moſt ſumptuous banket prepared of ſugar meats for the men of armes, and the ladies: which being finiſhed, my lord wiſhing them all good reſt tooke his leaue, and ſo this honourable feaſt broke vp about twelue of the clocke at midnight.

Seruice againſt the enimie by Skinks.

About this time our men woone Knolles ſconſe, a ſtrong thing, and preſentlie after they woone Ample ſconſe: and Skinks purſuing a companie of Spaniards, ſlue a thirtie, and tooke a fourſcore and ten. The fourth of Maie all the horſſemen at Newarke were viewed, and the gard perteining to the L. lieutenant were ſent to keepe the towne from ſpoile, where they tooke priſoners to the number of threeſcore and ten boures, which had ſlaine diuerſe of our gentlemen. The ſame fourth of Maie countie Hollocke put (in deſpite of the enimie) three hundred men into Pame, and about that time capteine Skinke builded a ſconſe in Cleeueland and manned it. About this time they of Graue ſhot fire bals out of the towne, which lighted in the great ſconſe of the enimie, and ſet all the powder on fire, where through not onelie the ſaid ſconſe was laid flat, but alſo all the men therein were blowne vp: alſo the enimie about the ſame time, making a breach in the baſe towne of Graue, entered the ſame, but was repelled, and three hundred of his men ſlaine.

Diuerſe exploits doone to and fro.

The tenth of Maie, our Engliſh capteins and ſoldiors tooke eleuen barkes and hoies, and drowned ſeauen that iſſued out to ſkirmiſh with them. The twelfe of Maie Skinks tooke in an Iland of inuincible ſtrength in the Roine, and there hath made a mightie ſconſe. The foureteenth of Maie, our men lieng at Nemingam ſconſe, there reuolted to vs out of the towne two hoies. The fifteenth the enimie iſſued out of the ſconſe, but was retired, and loſt their Lope ſconſe. The ſixteenth, the lord lieutenant paſſed from Armew to the campe at Nemingam, this daie the caſtell of Lenon was yeelded to vs, he being there in perſon; this daie came fiue hoies more to our men from Nemingam. The eighteenth of Maie came news to our campe, that the enimie entering Graue, loſt fiue hundred men. The ſame day at night the enimie iſſued foorth of the ſconſe to keepe our men a worke, but our men retired them ſtreight, and there came a bote from the towne to the ſconſe, in deſpite of our men, in repelling of which, the canon from the towne ſhot at our men, and ſlue two lieutenants, and fiue or ſix ſouldiors, the capteine of the ſconſe was ſore hurt, ſo was the lieutenant with an arrow, and two or three other ſouldiors.

The twentith of Maie earlie in the morning was the ſconſe yeelded to our men, the ſouldiors paſſ[illegible] awaie as ſouldiors. There was in the ſame ſconſe ſeauen ſcore and ſeauenteene braue men, eſpeciallie well furniſhed; there was in the ſame found a moſt braue peece of ordinance and two leſſer peeces, there was two canons comming to the ſconſe, [illegible]ich were turned to Barriks hooſe. ¶ Thus far hauing noted out of a booke penned by Henrie Archer, one of the gard to the right honourable the earle of Leiceſter, lieutenant generall in thoſe parts, I leaue with heartie praier his honors happie and proſperous ſucceſſe, and returne to other accidents ſuch as in the meane time happened.

Seminarie prieſts executed at Tiburne.

A wench burnt in Smithfield.

Archbiſhop of Canturburie, lord Cobham, & lord Buckhurſt of the priuie councell

On the one and twentith daie of Ianuarie, two Seminarie preeſts (before arreigned and condemned) were drawne to Tiburne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered. Alſo on the ſame daie, a wench was burnt in Smithfield, for poiſoning of hir aunt and miſtreſſe, and alſo attempting to haue doon the like to hir vncle. On the ſecond daie of Februarie, or feaſt of the purification of our bleſſed ladie, doctor Iohn Whitegift archbiſhop of Canturburie, William lord Cobham lord warden of the fiue ports and Thomas lord Buckhurſt, were choſen & taken to be of hir maieſties priuie councell: the two firſt to wit, the archbiſhop & the lord Cobham, were ſworne the ſame daie, and the third on the next morrow; who being perſons worthie that place, both in reſpect of their deſerts for their former good cariage in the commonwealth, & for the gifts of nature & learning wherewith they are richlie adorned, haue occaſioned Francis Thin to make the like diſcourſe of the archbiſhops of Canturburie and the lord Cobhams, with the lord wardens of the fiue ports, as he hath before doone in this chronicle of moſt of the other principall officers of the realme.

The liues of the archbiſhops of Canturburie, written by Francis Thin, in the yere of our redemption 1586.

Poſthumus Labienus (good reader) when he wrot the Roman hiſtories in Greeke, craued pardon of the reader. Wherevpon Cato the elder did ſcoffinglie ſaie; Trulie he had beene to be pardoned, if he had written in Greeke as one compelled thereunto by the decree of the Amphictiones; the which like matter alſo found in Aulus Gellius lib. 9. cap. 8. and ſpoken of Aulus Labienus, is the ſame hiſtorie vnder other names. For Gellius reciteth that Albinus, who was conſull with Lucius Lucullus did write the deeds of the Romans in the Greeke toong; in the beginning of whoſe hiſtorie he hath ſet downe, that none ought to be angrie with him, although that he hath not written eloquentlie in thoſe books. For being a Roman borne in Latium a part of Italie, the Greeke toong was but a ſtranger vnto him. Which worke when Marcus Cato had read, and happened on this excuſe of Aulus Labienus, he reprehendinglie ſaid; Art not thou Aulus a great trifler, which haddeſt rather craue pardon for a fault committed, than to be without the committing of a fault, ſith we are accuſtomed onelie to craue pardon when we erre vnwittinglie, or offend by compulſion of others? Wherevnto Cato further added: Te quis perpulit vt id committeres, quod priuſquam faceres, peteres vt ignoſceretur? Thus much out of Gellius. Whereby it appeareth, that in Plutarch reciting this ſaieng of Cato, the name of Poſthumus Albinus is there to be placed; for theſe two Aulus Poſthumus Albinus, and L. Lucinius Lucullus were conſuls at the time when Cato perſuaded that warre ſhould be denounced vnto the rebelling Carthaginians: ſo that the ſame ſtorie recited vnder the name of Poſthumus, Aulus, and Albinus is all but one thing, doone to and by one man, hauing diuerſe names. Which hiſtorie I haue not vouched, to the end that I would craue fauor for writing the doings of other perſons in a toong wherein I am ſkilleſſe; becauſe it deſerueth not anie pardon, that one ſhould heedleſſe and headlong both wittinglie and wilfullie run into that for which he muſt after craue pardon. But I haue ſet downe the ſame, to the intent that the wiſe ſentence of Cato may not be forgotten, ſaieng that where we offend by ignorance or by compulſion, that there we may lawfullie craue pardon therefore. Which words of ſo graue, ſo wiſe, and ſo reuerend a perſon incorageth me to craue pardon, if I haue offended in the diſcourſe of theſe liues of the biſhops of Canturburie (conſecrated to thy fauourable acceptance) becauſe I haue beene mooued and induced to the writing of them in a ſhort ſpace, by the intreatie of ſuch of my friends, which vpon the inſerting of this now archbiſhop of Canturburie, with the lords Cobham and Buckhurſt (worthilie ſworne of hir maieſties priuie councell) in the new augmented chronicle of Holinſhed, haue with manie good ſpeeches animated me vnder the bands and duties of amitie (than which a greater law or burthen can not be laid vpon anie man) to enter into this diſcourſe of the archbiſhops, being a thing neuer written before in our vulgar toong. Wherevnto although I am moſt vnapt amongeſt great numbers in this land, as well for the matter and ſtile, as for the ſhortneſſe of time which I had therefore (all which might feare a better man than my ſelfe, to withdraw his pen from laieng abroad his imperfections) yet I hope that courteſie accompanied with a mild diſpoſition of nature will fauorablie imbrace my good meaning, and beare with all other imperfections in the penning thereof, both becauſe nothing is ſo exactlie handled, but that ſome Zoilus will ſome waie or other repine at it, and alſo becauſe the reaſon which I haue before alleaged, and Cato hath warranted, is a ſufficient defenſe for me, without offenſe, to craue pardon for the vnaduiſed entring into anie ſuch vndertaken action, & a iuſt cauſe to mooue thee not to miſlike of this or anie thing which we doo at the entreatie of our neere and deere friends, vnworthie of anie deniall. In diſcourſing of which archbiſhops, I determine not to diſpute of the antiquitie of the chriſtianitie of this realme, neither of the ſtate of chriſtianitie infected with the Pelagian hereſie (being ſtreictened within the borders of Wales) nor yet of the hatefull paganiſme, with which all the reſt of the parts of this Ile now called England was ouerſpred; which Auguſtine the moonke of Rome (not the doctor of the church and biſhop of Hippo in Affrica) found here when he came firſt into this Iland, but onelie nakedlie to ſhew the time, the order, the ſucceſſion, the deeds and names, with the honor and offices of the archbiſhops and metropolitans of the ſame ſee of Canturburie. Wherefore, for this time I doo in this homelie ſort enter into the matter, taken (in ſome part) out of Matthew Parker, who learnedlie in Latine wrote the liues of ſeuentie biſhops of that place, as here dooth preſentlie follow.

Auguſtine.

Auguſtine the moonke, in the foureteenth yeare of Maurice the emperor, being the yeare of our redemption fiue hundred ninetie and ſix, as hath William Thorne moonke of Canturburie (though ſome attribute his comming to the yeare fiue hundred ninetie and nine, but not ſo rightlie as I ſuppoſe) being about one hundred and fiftie yeares after the landing of the Saxons in this Iland, was ſent by Gregorie the firſt of that name biſhop of Rome into England, which Auguſtine firſt arriued in Kent at a place called Keteſburgh, and after chriſtened Ethelbert king of Kent, who gaue to him a houſe at Stablegate, as hath Thomas Spot, deliuering that matter in theſe words: Et conceſsit (which was Ethelbert king of Kent) eis locum habitationis in ciuitate Dorobernię ſituatum, videlicet in parochia ſancti Alphegi ex oppoſito regię ſtratę verſus aquilonem, per quam murus palatij archiepiſcopalis in longitudine ſe extendit. In quo loco ſanctus Auguſt. cum ſuis domeſticis vſque ad conuerſionem regum hoſpitatus eſt. Illa tamen quę per viam extiterant ſarcinis onuſta loco prędicto longo poſt tempore ſtabulata ſunt, ob quam cauſam vſque hodiernum diem ſitus ille Stablegate vocatus eſt. Fuerat enim tunc quaſi oratorium pro familia regis vt ibi adorarent, & dijs ſuis libamina immolarent, &c. And a little after that alſo he thus ſaith; Anno Domini 597 Auguſtinus cum ſuis ſocijs illo in loco conuerſans vitam cœpit imitari apoſtolicam, and that king Ethelbert with his people was chriſtened on Whitſundaie.

Thomas Spot.

This doone, Auguſtine was the ſixteenth kalends of December made archbiſhop of the Engliſhmen by Etherius biſhop of Arras in France, to whome Gregorie the firſt of that name biſhop of Rome did ſend the archbiſhops pall. Wherevpon Auguſtine placed his archbiſhops ſee at Canturburie, and was the firſt archbiſhop that ſat there: for in the yeere of Chriſt fiue hundred ninetie and eight, king Ethelbert remoouing his palace from Canturburie vnto Reculuer, gaue his palace which he had in Canturburie to the ſaid Auguſtine and his ſucceſſors, that the metropolitan ſee might remaine there, which palace he turned into the palace in which the ſaid Auguſtine dwelt, being the palace which after remained to his ſucceſſors archbiſhops of Canturburie; beſides which this Auguſtine ordeined for the metropolitan chaire, a certeine old church built by the Romans conſecrated to our Sauior; which church is at this daie called Chriſts church in Canturburie, for difference of the other Chriſts church beſide Aldgate in London. Moreouer, this Auguſtine, as ſaith William Thorne, did dedicat a church in Canturburie called ſaint Pancrace. Touching which, becauſe that Matthew Parker hath not fullie made mention therof by the name of ſaint Pancrace, although he ſpeake therof as of the abbeie of ſaint Auguſtines and monaſterie dedicated to Peter & Paule; I ſhall not ſpare to ſet downe the words of the ſaid William Spot, which were written after this manner: Erat autem non longè ab ipſa ciuitate ad orientem quaſi medio itinere inter eccleſiam ſancti Martini & muros ciuitatis phanum ſiue idolum ſitum, vbi rex Ethelbertus ſecundùm ritum ſuæ gentis ſolebat orare, & cum nobilibus ſuis dæmonijs & non Deo ſacrificare. Quod phanũ ab inquinamentis & ſordibus gentilium purgauit (which was Auguſtine) & ſimulachro quod in eo erat confracto, ſynogogam mutauit in eccleſiam, & eam in nomine ſancti Pancracij martyris dedicauit, & hæc eſt prima eccleſia ab Auguſtino dedicata.

Thomas Spot.

A little after the which he furthermore ſaith thus: Hijs nàmque geſtis, Auguſtinus prædicti ſancti Pancracij eccleſiam à rege obtinuit vnà cum terra adiacente: in cuius fundo prædictus rex ſuggeſtione ſancti patris Auguſtini eccleſiam in honore apoſtolorum Petri & Pauli à fundamentis conſtruxit: & in eadem eccleſia rex ſibi & ſucceſſoribus ſuis Cantuariæ regibus ſepulturam elegit. In hac & eccleſia Auguſtinus ſe & ſucceſſores ſuos Cantuariæ archiepiſ. ſtatuit ſepeliri: hæc igitur eccleſia vſque ad hodiernũ diẽ monaſteriũ Petri & Pauli, ſanctiq; Auguſtini ab omnibus terræ incolis appellatur. Thus much that old booke written, as ſome haue noted (for the title therof) by William Thorne, or William de Spina: although for mine owne part (grounding my ſelfe vpon Matthew Parker, who verbatim hath inſerted much of this matter into his booke) I ſuppoſe that it was rather written by Thomas Spot or Sprot, than by William Thorne, being both of them moonks of Canturburie; and therefore ſith the one continued the hiſtorie of the other, I haue vouched it ſometime by the one name, and ſometime by the other.

This Auguſtine (as ſaith that booke) died the ſeuenth kalends of Iune, in the yéere of our redempon ſix hundred and fiue, being about two moneths, two wéekes, and two daies after the death of pope Gregorie, after that he had béene biſhop eight yéers, ſix wéekes, and thrée daies, as ſaith an ancient and goodlie booke of ſaint Auguſtines: but as ſaith Matthew Parker, he died in the yeare of our Lord God, ſix hundred and eleuen, after that he had remained ſixtéene yeares in that ſée; or but ten yeares, as the ſaid Thorne will haue it, whoſe bodie was buried and laid without the doores in the porch of the ſaid monaſterie of ſaint Peter and ſaint Paule, the ſame church being not yet perfect nor dedicated. But as ſoone as the ſame church had receiued his dedication, his bodie was tranſlated into the north porch thereof, and there was honorablie buried; which porch (ſaith the ſaid booke of Thorne) was in that part of the old church, where in his time did ſtand the chapell of the virgine Marie; and in the ſame alſo were all the other ſuccéeding biſhops of Canturburie accuſtomed to be buried, vntill the time of Theodorus the archbiſhop, who with the other biſhops were inforced to be buried in the church, becauſe the ſaid porch could not hold anie more dead bodies. Vpon the toome of which Auguſtine was this epitaph ingrauen. ¶ Hic requieſcit diuus Auguſtinus Dorobernenſis archiepiſcopus, qui olim huc à beato Gregorio Romanæ vrbis pontifice directus, & à Deo operatione miraculorum ſuffultus, & Ethelbertum regem, & gentem illius ab idolorum cultu ad fidem Chriſti perduxit.

Laurence.

Laurence borne at Rome, and of great learning, was choſen ſucceſſor to Auguſtine by the ſaid Auguſtine whileſt he yet liued. He laboured by his letters to reduce the Britons, Scots and Iriſh to true chriſtianitie and obſeruation of Eaſter. He (as ſaith Matthew Parker) built a church to the virgine Marie (whereof more ſhall follow) in the monaſterie of ſaint Peter and Paule, which yet he did not conſecrate, but left the ſame to be performed by his ſucceſſor Melitus. There hath béene an opinion amongſt the moonks, that all the archbiſhops of Canturburie, from the time of Auguſtine the firſt biſhop vntill Stigand, or rather Thomas Becket, were moonkes: but that is refelled, in reſpect that this Laurence was a prieſt, as Matthew Parker auoucheth out of Bede lib. 1. cap. 27. Touching which biſhops to be moonkes thus ſpeaketh a booke of the monaſterie of S. Auguſtines: Hoc diſcernens (Ethelbert king of Kent, who ſent Melitus biſhop of London and after biſhop of Canturburie to Rome to haue licence to place moonkes in that monaſterie) permiſit vt ipſi prædicatores noſtri monachi monachorum ſibi aſſociarent gregem, & eorum vitam ſanctis moribus exornarent, vnde diuino nutu tam conſono regis voto & ordinum monachorum accidit in poſterum, vt in archiepiſcoporum Cantuarienſis eccleſiæ ſucceſſione, omnes fermè ab aduentu Auguſtini vſque ad Thomam martyrem, qui in numero 39 fuerunt, per 568 annos intermedios, monachi fuerunt This Laurence died that yeare in which Eadbald king of Kent imbraced the faith of Chriſt, which he had till that time deteſted, after the death of his father Ethelbert, or rather the next yeare (as ſome haue) but others plainlie affirme that he died in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred and ninetéene, the fourth nones of Februarie, being the ſecond yeare of Rufinian abbat of ſaint Auguſtines, and the third yere of Eadbald king of Kent. But againe to the church of the virgine Marie within the monaſterie before ſaid, as the ſaid Thorne writeth with theſe words: In iſto monaſterio eccleſiam in honorẽ ſanctæ Dei genetricis ob facinorum ſuorum expiationem fundauit (king Ethelbald after his chriſtening) & ipſam eccleſiam manerio de Northborne regaliter dotauit. Quod manerium eſt 30 aratrorum vt in codicillo eius apparet, quod monaſteriũ huic monaſterio ita liberè contulit ſicut pater ſuus aut ipſe vnquam liberiùs tenuerunt. Iſta autem eccleſia beatæ virginis à principio fuit poſita ad orientem monaſterij, & erat cœmiterium fratrum inter ipſam eccleſiam & monaſterium. Sed poſt dilatato monaſterio fuit iſta eccleſia penitùs proſtrata, & ibi ſuperædificata crypta ſicut nunc apparet. Now although it maie ſéeme to come out of order to ſpeake anie more of this Laurence archbiſhop of Canturburie, ſith I haue alreadie made mention of the daie and yere of his death, yet I thinke it not amiſſe, rather here than not at all, to ſet downe the words of a famous booke (which Matthew biſhop of Canturburie neuer ſaw) of Auguſtines, the goodlieſt monument that I haue beheld belonging to anie houſe of religion, touching the ſame Laurence: which words I am the willinger to write, although they be ſomewhat long, becauſe I will not defraud the author of the true telling of his owne tale, nor poſteritie of the ſpreading by print the part of that booke, which otherwiſe perhaps might neuer more come to light: thus therefore Dedicatio eccleſiæ ſancti Auguſtini Cantuarienſis.

Porticus ſancti Martini in eccleſia ſancti Auguſtini Cantuarienſis.

ſpeaketh that booke. An. Dom. 613. Laurentius archiepiſcopus, qui non ſolùm de Anglis noua quæ tunc erat eccleſiæ curam gerebat, ſed & veterum Britaniæ incolarum necnon & Scotorum, qui Hiberniam inſulam Britaniæ proximam incolunt, populis paſtoralem curam impendere intendebat, à ſua prædicationis ſolicitudine ad ſuam ſedem Dorobernenſis eccleſiæ regreſſus, præſentis monaſterij eccleſiam conſecrauit, & præſente rege cum confluis turbis corpus Auguſtini tranſtulit in eandem eccleſiam conſecratam, corpus verò ſancti Letardi epiſcopi Syluanectẽſis in Gallijs, cuius metropolis eſt Remẽſis, necnon & corpus Bertæ vxoris Ethelberti in porticu ſancti Martini ſepeliuit, horum enim corpora extra eccleſiam prius fuerunt ſepulta, eo quòd tempore obitus eorum eccleſia nondum fuerat conſecrata. Et nota quòd iſta porticus quæ vocatur ſancti Martini, fuit ex parte auſtrali eccleſiæ tunc conſecratæ. Quod tamen in eodem loco vbi nunc eſt altare ſancti Iohannis non fuerat idem ſancti Martini porticus, patet per Bedam li. 2. cap. 4 vbi eandem eccleſiam inter alia deſcribit in hunc modum. Habet (inquit) hæc eccleſia viz. apoſtolorum Petri & Pauli in medio pene ſui altare, in honorẽ Gregorij papæ dedicatum. Dato igitur quòd altare Gregorij quod nunc eſt, fuit in medio pene eiuſdem eccleſiæ primitùs ab eodem Laurentio dedicata (quæ multo fuerat arctior quàm eſt eccleſia noſtra moderna, ſicut in locis ſequentibus ſibi aptis temporibus Wulfrici, Scotlandi, & Widonis abbatũ qui eccleſiam dilatauerunt erit manifeſtiùs explanatum) ſequitur idem Martini altare ſiue porticum, quamuis in eadem parte eccleſiæ fuerat, non tamen in eodem loco quo nunc eſt altare ſancti Iohannis vbi Berta fuerat regina ſepulta veriſimiliter extitiſſe. But now leauing this matter of that author, and returning to the death of Laurence, we ſaie that there was this epitaph fixed vpon his graueſtone, placed next vnto the bodie of ſaint Auguſtine as here followeth:

Hic ſacra Laurenti ſunt ſigna tui monumenti,
Tu quoque iucundus pater antiſtéſque ſecundus,
Pro populo Chriſti ſcapulas dorſúmque dediſti,
Artubus hinc laceris multa vibice mederis.

Melitus.

Melitus borne of a noble familie, and an abbat of Rome, being ſent by Gregorie into England to aid Auguſtine in the harueſt of the Saxons conuerſion, in the yeare of our redemption ſix hundred and one, was in the yeare ſix hundred and foure by Auguſtine made biſhop of London; he went to Rome in the fourth yeare of his biſhoprike, being about the yeare of our Lord ſix hundred and eight; he was expelled his biſhoprike by the ſonnes of Sigebert or Sebba, in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred and eighteene, and fled into France; but he was called out of baniſhment by Laurentius biſhop of Canturburie in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred and nineteene, in which the ſaid Laurence died, after whoſe death, this Melitus was made archbiſhop of Canturburie; he died the eight kalends of Maie about the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred twentie and foure, in the eight yeare of king Eadbald, and was buried in the porch of the monaſterie of Peter and Paule, after that he had gouerned the ſee of Canturburie fiue yeares, as hath William Thorne: though Polydor Virgil will afford him but foure yeares: vpon the graue ſtone of which Melitus was this epitaph ſet:

Polyd. lib. 4. Angl. hiſtor.

Summus pontificum flos tertius & mel apricum,
Hic titulis clara redditis mellitè ſub ara:
Laudibus æternis te prædicat vrbs Dorobernis,
Cui ſemel ardenti reſtas virtute potenti.

In which epitaph this biſhop is called Mel, alluding to the vertue of his name, which was Melitus, in Engliſh ſignifieng honnied, or made of honnie.

Iuſtus.

Iuſtus was firſt created biſhop of Rocheſter in the life of Auguſtine the firſt archbiſhop of Canturburie; who not long inioieng the ſee of Rocheſter, was with Melitus in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred and eighteene, flieng the perſecution of the chriſtians in Kent, when he paſſed ouer into France, but after returning home in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred and nineteene, this Iuſtus was againe reſtored to his ſee of Rocheſter, where he remained ſo long as Melitus liued: after whoſe death, he was about the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred twentie and foure remoued to the arch chaire of Canturburie; where he ordeined Paulinus to be archbiſhop of Yorke, in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred twentie and fiue; though ſome haue ſix hundred fourescore and ſeuen: This biſhop Iuſtus departed this world the fourth ides of Nouember, in the yeare that the world became fleſh, ſix hundred threeſcore and foure, and about the nineteenth yeare of king Eadbald, and was buried in the church of the apoſtles Peter and Paule with his predeceſſors. On the graueſtone of which Iuſtus was this epitaph ſet:

Iſtud habet buſtum, meritis & nomine Iuſtum,
Quarto iure datus cum ceſſit pontificatus:
Pro meritis Iuſti, ſancta grauitate venuſti,
Gratia diuinam diuina dat hic medicinam.

Honorius archbiſhop of Canturburie.

Honorius by birth a Romane, was choſen archbiſhop of Canturburie at Rome, and was conſecrated at Lincolne by Palinus archbiſhop of Yorke, in the church which the ſame Paulinus there built, and receiued his pall from Honorius the firſt of that name biſhop of Rome: he diuided his prouince into pariſhes, appointing inferior miniſters vnto them: he made Paulinus flieng out of the kingdome of the Northumbers biſhop of Rocheſter, he died in the twelfe yeare of Ercombertus king of Kent, in the yeare that God became man ſix hundred fiftie and foure, or rather ſix hundred fiftie and three, the laſt daie of Februarie, as hath Matthew Parker, but of September as others haue, & was buried with his predeceſſors in the north part of the monaſterie of ſaint Peter and Paule, after whoſe death the biſhoprike was void by the ſpace of one yeare & ſix moneths, whoſe epitaph was on this ſort:

Quintus honor memori, verſu memoraris honori,
Digne ſepultura, quem non teret vlla litura:
Ardet in obſcuro tua lux vitramine puro
Sic ſcelus omne premit, fugit vmbras, nebula (demit.

Deuſdedit.

Deuſdedit, or Adeodatus, deſcended of the Weſtſaxons, who in his mother toong was called Frithona, was conſecrated archbiſhop of Canturburie by Ithamar biſhop of Rocheſter. This Deuſdedit, died in the yeare of our redemption ſix hundred threeſcore and foure, or rather ſix hundred threeſcore and three, the daie before the ides of Iulie, after that he had beene biſhop nine yeares, foure moneths and twelue daies, being buried with his predeceſſors in the porch of the monaſterie of ſaint Peter and Paule in Canturburie, being the laſt archbiſhop that was buried in that place: this man dooth Polydor call Theodatus, which is all one in ſignification with the other Deuſdedit, or Adeodatus: but that the one is compounded of the Latine, and the other of the Greeke, both ſignifieng in Engliſh, a perſon giuen by God: the epitaph of which Adeodatus was after this maner, according to antike inuention greatlie then vſed, & alluding to his name of Deuſdedit in the ſecond & third word of the 1. verſe:

Alme Deuſdedit, cui ſexta vocatio cedit,
Signas hunc lapidem, lapidi ſignatus eidem:
Prodit ab hac vrna virtute ſalus diuturna,
Qua melioratur, quicúnque dolore grauatur.

After whoſe death the biſhoprike was void fiue yeares eight moneths & fifteene daies, during which time none adminiſtred the ſame biſhoprike, though Matthew Parker will haue the vacancie of the biſhoprike to continue a longer time, about the date of ten yeares or more.

Theodorus.

Theodorus archbiſhop of Canturburie was choſen ſen in this ſort. The ſee of Canturburie being long time void of a paſtor, Wigard the prieſt a learned Engliſhman was ſent to Rome by Egbert king of Kent, and Oſwie king of Northumberland, to be ordeined archbiſhop of that ſee. After his comming to Rome, this Wigard and moſt of his companie died of a greeuous plague there, before he was created biſhop: wherevpon, about the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred threeſcore and eight, as hath Matthew Parker, but ſix hundred three ſcore & nine, as others haue, Vitilianus the pope made Theodorus, a Grecian borne archbiſhop of Canturburie, and ſent him into England: who arriued here (as hath William Thorne) in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred threeſcore and ten, the ſixt kalends of Iune, being threeſcore & three yeares of age, hauing legantine power ouer England, Scotland, and Ireland. This man brought with him into England a large librarie of Greeke and Latine bookes: who about the yeare ſix hundred three ſcore and eighteene, depoſed Wilfrid archbiſhop of Yorke, a man notablie learned in poetrie, arithmetike, aſtronomie, muſike, and in the Greeke and Latine toongs, as hath William Malmesburie.

An. Do. 668. Matth. Parker, In vita Theo. & venit Cantuar. anno 2. poſtquam conſecratus eſt 6. kalend. Ianuarij.

This Theodor in the yeare that the world became fleſh ſix hundred & foureſcore, diuided the prouince of Canturburie into fiue dioceſſes, & appointed gouernors thereof: he held two ſynods, the one at Hereford, and the other at Cliffe at Ho beſides Rocheſter, as hath Matthew Parker. Beſides which, as it appeareth by William Thorne and Beda (or elſe the hiſtorie of Rocheſter hath miſtaken Cliffe for Hedtfield, or Hethfield, if theſe two ſynods were all one) by Florilegus, and the Saxon chronicles of Merton, and of Peterborow (as that worthie antiquarie M. William Lambert hath well noted) that Honorius held a ſynod at Hedtfield in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred and foureſcore, to keepe backe the hereſie of Eutiches begun in Conſtantinople, & firſt ordeined the vſe of ſinging throughout England, which before was vſed onlie in Kent. He wrote manie bookes, namelie, Summam pœnitentialem, Patrum canones, Ordinationes cleri, De fide contra Eutichem, and manie others: he conſecrated Erkenwald biſhop of London, and Eadhed, Boſa, and Eata biſhops of Yorke. He died the nineteenth daie of September in the third yeare of the vacancie of the kingdome of Kent, after the death of king Edricus, falling in the yeare that the ſecond perſon of the trinitie tooke on him the forme of a ſeruant, ſix hundred foureſcore and ten, being foureſcore and eight yeares of age, after that he had gouerned that ſee one & twentie yeares, three moneths, and foure and twentie daies, being buried in the church of Peter & Paule at Canturburie, but not in the porch thereof, as his other predeceſſors were: for Deuſdedit was the laſt of thoſe which were buried in that place, whoſe writing on his graue I find to haue beene verie much: but becauſe that worthie booke & monument of ſaint Auguſtine hath not fullie ſet it downe, as it hath doone ſome other epitaphs, I will onelie deliuer ſo much of that epitaph as is come to my knowledge, concerning the ſaid archbiſhop in this ſort:

Chro. Wincelcombe.

Beda lib. 4. cap. 17.

Matth. Parker in vita Theodori.

Hîc ſacer in tumba pauſat cum corpore præſul,
Quem nunc Theodorum lingua Pelaſga vocat:
Princeps pontificum, fœlix ſummúſque ſacerdos,
Limpida diſcipulis dogmata diſſeruit.

After which there lacked a great number of verſes, which ſhould haue hanged herevpon, but they not appearing, the latter part and concluſion of his epitaph was there deliuered in this maner:

Námq; diem nonam decimam September habebat
Cùm carnis clauſtrum ſpiritus effugeret:
Alma nouæ ſcandens fœlix conſortia vitæ,
Ciuibus angelicis iunctus in arce poli.

Touching which archbiſhop, I thinke it not amiſſe to deliuer to the world, what an ancient anonymall chronicler hath written concerning his erection of ſchooles of learning at Creekelade, which is ſuppoſed to be the mother of the vniuerſitie of Oxford, the words of which author are theſe.

Theodorus archiepiſcopus Cantuarienſis per omnes chronicas commendatur Luciferos radios rationis vna cum Adriano abbate orbi Britannico infulſiſſe, & inſulam quondam nutriculam tyrannorum in familiare philoſophiæ domicilium contuliſſe. Horum vtique rationis euidentia memoria reducitur modernorum per illam villulam quæ lacus Græcorum, Anglicè Grekeſlade à Theodori diſciplina vbi ſcholas primitùs tenuit nūcupatur. In illa enim lacu refulſit quaſi ſol Theodorus à ſole iuſticiæ illuſtratus. Thus much that author, which I ſuppoſe that the archbiſhop of Canturburie Parker had not ſeene, when he maketh Theodorus (vnleſſe my memorie faile) to be author of the vnniuerſitie of Cambridge.

Brightwaldus an Engliſhman borne. This man hath Polydor falſlie ſhewed to be the firſt archbiſhop of Canturburie that was an Engliſhman, making the reſt to be Italians and Romans, wherein he hath doublie erred (as ſaith Matthew Parker) for Deuſdedit the ſecond biſhop before this man was of the Weſtſaxons, and Theodore next before this man was borne in Tharſis of Cilicia, in which error of Polydor, William Thorne was drowned long before him. This man was ſometime abbat of Raculfe now called Reculuer, beſides the north mouth of the riuer Gentade neere the Ile of Tenet, he was choſen archbiſhop in the ſecond yeare of Withred king of Kent, in the yeare of our redemption ſix hundred ninetie and two, and ordeined biſhop in the yeare ſix hundred ninetie & three, in the third kalends of Iulie, being conſecrated by Goodwine metropolitane of France, as hath William Thorne and Beda. Sergius the firſt of that name, biſhop of Rome granted vnto him by his bull the full primaſie ouer all the Engliſh churches. When this biſhop entered the ſee of Canturburie, there reigned in Kent two brothers, Wilred or rather Withred, and Swinfard, which Withred built the church of ſaint Martins in Douer where they became moonks, and indowed it with great poſſeſſions.

Brightwaldus.

Polydor. l. 46.

Genlade.

691. Willam Thorne.

Withredus & Swihardus.

Touching which thus writeth the ſame booke of S. Auguſtine: Withredus monaſterium ſancti Martini apud Doueriā fundauit, vt teſtatur Gulibelmus Malſmeburie, & ſecundum aliquos in eodem loco 22 canonicos inſtituit ſeculares, ſed propter illorum execrabilem vitam, rex Anglorum Henricus 2, concilio Theobaldi archiepiſcopi Cantuarienſis in monachorum ordinem idem monaſteriū tranſtulit, & ibidem nouam eccleſiam conſtruens 13, monachos de eccleſia Chriſti Cantuarienſis introduxit. Brightwaldus died in the fift ides of Ianuarie, in the ſixt yeare of Edbert king of Kent, in the yeare of Chriſt ſeauen hundred thirtie and one, and was buried in the church of Canturburie, after that he had gouerned the ſame chaire eight and thirtie yeares, three moneths, and fourteene daies, whoſe epitaph was written as hereafter followeth:

Matth. Park. Beda li. 5. ca 24. 37. ann. 6. menſ. 14 dies.

Stat ſua laus feretro Brithwaldus, ſtat ſua metro,
Sed minor eſt metri laus omnis laude feretri,
Laude frequentandus pater hic & glorificandus,
Si prece flectatur dat ei qui danda precatur.

Catwinus or Tadwinus in Saxon Tatpine, whome ſome call Cadwine or Scadwine by the corruption and ignorance of writers, was borne in Mercia, a moonke of the order of S. Benet in the abbeie of Bpecdune, Briudune, or Brenton, although ſome others ſaie that he was not of the profeſſion of a moonke.

Catwinus.

Beda l.5 ca.24.

Bede doth conſtantlie affirme that he was conſecrate (in the firſt yeare of Gregorie the third biſhop of Rome) in Canturburie by Daniell biſhop of Wincheſter, Ingwald biſhop of London, Aldwine biſhop of Lichfield, and Adulfe biſhop of Rocheſter. Controuerſie falling betwéene him and the biſhop of Yorke, concerning the honours of their biſhopriks, this Tadwine went to Rome about the yeare of Chriſt 733, where he receiued the pall of pope Gregorie: to this archbiſhops time dooth Bede continue his hiſtorie. Tatwine died after that he had béene archbiſhop of Canturburie thrée yeares, in the yeare of our redemption 734, or (as hath William Thorne) the laſt daie of Iulie, ſeauen hundred thirtie and fiue, being the tenth of Edbert king of Kent, and was buried in the church of Canturburie, with this ſuperſcription written vpon his graue ſtone:

Pontificis glebe, Tacwini Cantia præbe,
Thura, deus, laudes, e cuius dogmate gaudes:
Huius doctrina caruiſti mente ferina,
Et per eum Chriſti portare iugum didiciſti.

Nothelmus.

Thom. Spot.

Wil. Malmſ. ſaith fiue yeares Caon. Couen. ſaith ſix yeares.

Nothelmus borne at London, archpréeſt of the church of London, and biſhop of the ſame, was aduanced to the metropolitane ſée of Canturburie, in the yeare of Chriſt 736, in the fift yeare (as hath Matthew Parker) of pope Gregorie the third, & was conſecrated at Rome, where he receiued his pall. He was a great helpe whiles he was préeſt of London to Bede for the increaſe of the hiſtorie of Bede, written of the church of England: he was (as ſaith Gulihelmus Spina) thrée yeares and more in the biſhoprike of Canturburie, and died in the fiftéenth yeare of Edbert king of Kent, in the yeare of Chriſt ſeuen hundred and fortie, the ſixtéenth kalends of Nouember, and was buried with his predeceſſors, hauing this remembrance ingrauen vpon his ſepulture:

Hic ſcrobe Nothelmus iacet archiepiſcopus almus
Cuius vita bono non eſt indigna patrono:
Cua[illegible] iſte bonis par in bonitate patronis,
Protegit hic iuſtos vigili munimine cuſtos.

Cutbert.

Wil. Spin.

Clouſhoe. Thom. Spot. An. Dom. 747. menſe Septem.

Cutbert, borne of a famous familie of the Engliſh nation, was firſt biſhop of Hereford in Mercia, and then in the yeare of our redemption 740, being the ninth yeare of Pope Gregorie the third, made biſhop of Canturburie, who in the time of Ethelbald king of Mercia, called a ſynod at Cliffe beſides Rocheſter. In this ſynod was preſent king Ethelbald of Mercia, Cutbert archbiſhop of Cantur. Totta, Hunita, & Padda biſhops of Mercia, Aldwinus biſhop of Lindſeie, Sigga biſhop of the ſouth Saxons. This archbiſhop procured Edbert king of Kent by publike edict, to change the place of buriall of the archbiſhops, which were before accuſtomed to be buried in the monaſterie of ſaint Auguſtines of that citie, to the metropolitane church of Canturburie, in which church he was buried by ſubtiltie before the moonks knew of his death; who thinking to haue his bodie to their church, and finding him buried before they came, did afterwards aſſemble with armes (as ſaith Spot) to fet awaie this bodie of his ſucceſſor Bregwine, to burie it in their monaſterie: but when they ſaw it was alreadie buried, they departed in anger deceiued of their hope. Capgraue ſaith that he was buried in the church (néere vnto the great church) which was built in the honor of ſaint Iohn, which he therefore built to be a place for chriſtenings, to examine cauſes of iudgement, to correct euils, and to burie the archbiſhops: which church of ſaint Iohn manie ages after did Lanfranke repaire. Which tranſlating of the buriall of the archbiſhops to Canturburie, happening in the time of Aldhumus the tenth abbat of that houſe, which died in the yeare of Chriſt ſeauen hundred and ſixtie, and the fiue & thirtith of Edbert king of Kent, occaſioned the moonks finding fault with his default in that action, to ſet theſe verſes (for the memoriall) vpon a ſtone of his buriall, made in the monaſterie of ſaint Auguſtines:

Fert memor abbatis Aldhumi nil probitatis,
Pontificum pauſam caſſat tutans malè cauſam:
Priſca premens iura dū Cutbertus tumulatur,
Fulta ſepultura ſanctis per eum reprobatur.

Before the death of which abbat, that is in the yeare of Chriſt ſeauen hundred fortie and eight, being the thrée and twentith of the reigne of the ſame Edbert king of Kent, this archbiſhop Cutbert, after that he had ſat ſeauentéene yeares, departed the world, and was buried (as is before ſaid) out of the monaſterie of S. Auguſtines from his predeceſſors.

Begwinus.

Begwinus borne of worſhipfull parents of the Saxons bloud, in the countrie of old Saxonie in Germanie, came into England; & was here made a denizen: who being vnwillinglie made archbiſhop of Canturburie about the yeare of Chriſt ſeuen hundred fiftie and eight, or ſeauen hundred fiftie and nine as ſome haue, confirmed the burieng of the archbiſhops in the place which Cutbert had before appointed. He ſat in that chaire thrée yeares, and then ſurrendered his ſoule vnto God, whoſe death was not knowne, till that he had béene buried thrée daies before in the church of S. Iohn beſides his predeceſſor Cutbert, about whoſe time was Stretburg, Wincheſter, London, Yorke, and Doncaſter, with manie other places much conſumed by lightening.

Lambertus.

Marianus Scotus ſaith that he was ordeined biſhop on Candlemaſſe daie, but an old author ſaith he is not therein to be credited.

Lambertus or Iambertus, or rather Ieanbenche, and Zeanbopche, being abbat of S. Auguſtines, was made archbiſhop of Canturburie, the ſeauenth ides of Ianuarie, in the yeare of Chriſt ſeauen hundred ſixtie and two, who hauing the pall giuen him, was made archbiſhop of Canturburie by pope Paulinus or Paule, the firſt of that name, in the yeare of Chriſt ſeauen hundred ſixtie and foure. In this mans time Offa king of Mercia found means to tranſlate the archbiſhops ſée from Canturburie to Lichfield, (when Eadulphus the biſhop thereof had a pall giuen him by pope Adrian) for the gréeuous diſpleaſures which Offa conceiued againſt the Kentiſh, but eſpeciallie for that this biſhop would haue aided (as ſaith Matthew Paris in his chronicle of ſaint Albons) Charles the great determining to inuade England, touching which matter thus writeth Matthew Parker, ſhewing what biſhops were ſubiect to the metropolike ſée of Mercia, and what biſhopriks were vnder the metropolitane ſée of Canturburie: his words be theſe.

Ex archiuis.

W. Malmſ. lib. 1. De reg. geſtis. Roff. hiſtor. Henricus Venantudunenſis. Edmerus.

Eadulfo igitur Lichfeldenſi epiſcopo archiepiſcopalem celſitudinem adminiſtranti ſubijciebantur hij Merciorum epiſcopi, Denebertus Wigornienſis, Werebertus Legeceſtrenſis, Eadulfus Sunaceſtrenſis, Wulmardus Herefordenſis, necnon & orientalium Anglorum epiſcopi viz. Harardus Helmanienſis, & Tidſerth Domucenſis. Sedi verò Cantuarienſi, Londonenſis, Wintonienſis, Roffenſis, Sireburnenſis, antiſtites, dum Lambertus ſedit, tantùm ſuperfuerunt, etſi neque ſumptui neque labori pepercit, vt ſedem ſuam priſtinæ dignitati reſtitueret. Quidam verò referunt cùm legati ab Adriano papa in Angliam miſſi concilium apud Calcuch (or rather Calchith) in prouincia Northumbrorum tenuiſſent anno 787, ibi Lambertum archiepiſcopatus præfatam partem epiſcopo Lichfeldenſi remiſiſſe. This man after that he had gouerned his lamed archbiſhoprike about ſeuentéene yeares, or rather two and twentie yeares, perceiuing his end to draw néere, and deſirous to vndoo all ſuch decrées as his predeceſſors had made touching ing the place of the buriall of the archbiſhops, and to bring that to his ancient place, commanded that his bodie (when he was dead) ſhould be carried vnto the monaſterie of ſaint Auguſtines, and there to be buried with his former predeceſſors, which was eaſilie performed; and therefore was honorablie buried in the chapter houſe of ſaint Auguſtines, with this epitaph héere vnder written in forme following:

Gemma ſacerdotum decus à tellure remotum,
Clauditur hac foſſa, Iambertus puluis & oſſa,
Sub hac mole cinis ſed laus tua neſcia finis,
Incola nunc cœli, populo ſuccurre fideli.

Athelardus.

Athelardus was firſt abbat of Maldune, then biſhop of Wincheſter, in the yeare of our redemption ſeuen hundred ninetie and thrée, in the yeare of the reigne of Offa ſurnamed the great king of Mercia thirtie and fiue, and in the one and twentith yeare of the gouernement of pope Adrian. This biſhop of Canturburie going to Rome, obteined of pope Leo the fourth of that name, to haue the whole metropolitan iuriſdiction reduced vnto the church of Canturburie from Lichfield, in behalfe whereof Kenulfe king of Mercia wrote vnto the pope, wherevnto the pope anſwered. The tenor of both which letters Matthew Parker hath ſet downe in his booke of the liues of the biſhops of the ſée of Canturburie. In this mans time, as hath Matthew Parker noted, Pagani (which were the Danes and Norwegians) portu Egfredi regis vaſtato, monaſterium Doni amnis prædarunt. During the regiment of this biſhop, in the yéere of Chriſt ſeuen hundred ninetie and eight, manie houſes and multitudes of men were conſumed in London, by a ſudden chance of fire. After which he died in the yeare of Chriſt eight hundred and ſix, and was buried in Chriſts church in Canturburie, and not in the monaſterie of S. Auguſtines; from which time there was neuer anie controuerſie nor quarell mooued by the moonks of S. Auguſtines for the not burieng of the archbiſhops in their abbeie, as there had manie times béene before.

Simon Dunel.

Wulfredus.

Wulfredus being firſt a moonke of Canturburie, was elected and aduanced to the dignitie of the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie at Rome, by pope Leo, the fourth of that name, who alſo conſecrated and indued him with the pall, in the third yeare of Kenulfus king of Mercia, being the yeare of the incarnation of Chriſt eight hundred and ſix. This man in the ninth yeare of his biſhoprike went vnto Rome, and was accompanied with Wibert biſhop of Shirburne. Whileſt this man was archbiſhop, a great plague was in the church of Canturburie, which conſumed & killed all the moonks except fiue. Beſides which, at the requeſt of this biſhop, Kenulfe king of Mercia, at the dedication of the abbeie of Winchcombe, which he had built from the ground, ſet the king of Kent at libertie, being his priſoner; who after departing this world was buried in Chriſts church at Canturburie.

W. Malmſ.
Io. Capgra.
Tho. Spotus.

Ex archiuis.
Roff. hiſt.

Theologildus.

Theologildus, or Flegildus, or Feogildus, or Fleologildus, as moſt bookes haue, being firſt abbat of Canturburie, was after aduanced to the archiepiſcopall dignitie of the metropolitan ſée of all England, who becauſe he died ſuddenlie, is not placed in the catalog of the archbiſhops, being buried in Chriſts church of Canturburie, as ſaith Geruaſius, before the altar of ſaint Michaell towards the ſouth.

Ex archiuis.
Geruaſ.
Dorobor.

Celnothus.
Aſſer. Mene.
Roff. hiſtor.

Celnothus, or Ceolnothus, otherwiſe called Ciathredus, or Swithredus, deane of the church of Canturburie, was aduanced to that biſhoprike by pope Gregorie, of whome he receiued the pall. He was buried in the church of Canturburie, dedicated to our ſauior Ieſus Chriſt, after that he had ruled that chaire eight and thirtie, or as others haue, fortie yeres. In the foure and twentith yeare of this biſhop, and the yeare of Chriſt eight hundred fiftie and fiue, a great armie of the Danes did winter in Shepeie. In the nine and twentith yere of his gouernement, being about the yéere of ſaluation eight hundred and thrée ſcore, the greater part of the Danes by deceit went to Wincheſter, tooke it, & leuelled it with the ground. Shortlie after which, Swithine the biſhop thereof being an old man departed this life. The Yeare that this Celnothus died, the biſhops ſée of the eaſt Angles, which was at Domne or Dunwich, was tranſlated to Eltham; the cauſe whereof is ſet downe by William of Malmſburie in this manner: Tempore (ſaith he) Bedicani regis Merciorum, & Egricti regis Weſtſaxonum, Humbrictus & Wilredus fuerunt epiſcopi orientalium Anglorum. Sed eodem Ludecano & anteceſſore eius Burredo inuadentibus prouinciam, etiam epiſcopis neceſſariorum copia ſublata fuit. Et quidem, vtrique reges intra regionem prouincialium incurſu extincti ſunt. Ceſſarunt autem epiſcopatus, & ex duobus vnus factus, ſedem apud Elteham villam non adeo magnam accepit. Thus much he, and thus much I touching the time of Ceolnothus the archbiſhop of Canturburie, which giueth ſome cauſe of woonder to me, that nothing is found written (for anie thing I can learne) of him gouerning that ſée ſo long as he did.

Athelredus.

Athelredus firſt being a moonke of Canturburie, was after biſhop of Wincheſter, and from thenſe by the liberalitie of king Ethelred, aduanced to the metropolitane miter of all England. Of whoſe dooing (ſaith Matthew Parker) this onelie is found written, that in the yeare that the word deſcended from the boſome of the Father into the wombe of the mother, eight hundred ſeuentie and two, the ſeuenth ides of Iune, being Whitſundaie, he conſecrated Werfred biſhop of the Wicces, after the death of Alcwine. This Athelred after that he had poſſeſſed the honor of archbiſhop of Canturburie eightéene yeares, died an old man, ouerworne with ſickneſſe, being buried in Chriſts church of Canturburie with his predeceſſors.

Plegmundus.
Chron. eccleſ.
Cantuar.
Aſſer. Mene.
Geru. Dorobern.
W. Malmſ.

Plegmundus by kindred a Mercian, being choſen archbiſhop of Canturburie, was ſacred at Rome by pope Formoſus, of whom he receiued the pall with full power of a metropolitan. This man did firſt in the ile Ceſtria (which of the inhabitants is called Plegmúndeſham) liue an heremits life manie yeres, after which he was ſchoolemaſter to king Alfred or Alured, of whoſe dooing thus writeth Matthew Parker. An. Dom. 905. Plegmundus Cant. archiepiſcopus, vnà cum rege magnificè cognomento Eduardo ſeniore, concilium magnum epiſcoporum, abbatum, fidelium, procerum & populorum in prouincia Gewiſarum (id eſt in illa parte Angliæ quæ in plaga auſtrali ſita eſt fluminis Thameſis) cõuocauit. Fuerat enim illa regio iam 7 annos præ hoſtium vi & impetu furioſo epiſcoporum ſollicitudine & cura paſtorali deſtituta: vnde ſalubriter conſtitutum fuit in hac ſynodo, vt pro duobus epiſcopis, quorum vnus Wintoniæ, alter Sireburniæ ſedẽ habuit, quúmq; crearentur antiſtites ne grex domini paſtorum cura orbatus luporum lanienæ & voracitati ſubijceretur. Quorum antiſtitum ſedes hoc nomine appellantur, Wintonia, Sireburnia, Wellia, Cridium, & Petrocium, quod eſt iuxta Wellenſes aquilonares, ad flumen Heremoth (or rather Heſlmuth) poſita villula. Celebrato itáque concilio, & canonica electione facta, conſtituit Plegmundus archiepiſcopus in ſede Wintonienſi Britheſtanum: in Wellenſi Athelmum (qui poſt Plegmundum factus eſt archiepiſcopus Dorobernenſis)

Gewiſſi ex
Saxon. occidentalib. populis.

Ex archiuis W. Malmſ. De modo erigendi epiſcopatum Wellen. vidi tractatum amplum de epiſcopis Wellen. & Bathon.

bernenſis) in Cridienſi Radulphum: in Sireburnenſi Wolſtanum: & in Petrocienſi Athelſtanum. Sed & in alijs prouincijs ordinauit duos epiſcopos, auſtralibus Saxonibus (quorum antiſtites ſedem habuerunt Ciceſtriæ) virum idoneum Burnegum præfecit, Mercijs verò Kenulphum ad ciuitatem Dorceſtriæ: hij omnes vno die Doroberniæ ab archiepiſcopo Plegmundo conſecrati ſunt. Non multò poſt, facta parochiarum diſtributione, ſuperfuerunt epiſcopo Wintonienſi prouinciæ Hamptonienſis, Sutherenſis, & Wilcenſis cum inſula Vecta. Prætereà Eduardo rege adhuc viuente Wilcenſis pagus ſuum habuit epiſcopum, cuius ſedes Rameſberiæ fuit, Sireburnenſis verò epiſcopus habebat Summerſetam, Wellenſis Dorceſtriam & Barkeriam, Cridienſis prouinciam Deuonienſem, Petrocienſis Cornubienſem patriam. Thus much Matthew Parker, which I haue thought good here to inſert, that thereby the ſtate of the clergie, the number of biſhops with their dioceſſes might appeare in the life of this Plegmund, who ordeined them out (as you ſee) of the dioceſſes of other biſhoprikes. This being thus ordered, this Plegmund did by the kings appointment go with others to Rome, to pacifie the popes diſpleaſure. Now after the death of this archbiſhop, his bodie was buried in Chriſts church of Canturburie.

Roſſ. hiſt.

Athelmus.

Athelmus being firſt abbat of Glaſtenburie, then biſhop of Wels, and laſtlie archbiſhop of Canturburie, of whom we can ſaie but little, onelie this we ſet downe out of Matthew Parker, that he laid the firſt foundation of the abbie of Malmſburie. But for that it is ſomewhat diſſonant from that which I haue read in other authors touching the ſame, who make Adhelme the inlarger of Malmſburie to be biſhop of Shirburne, I will ſet downe what others haue written thereof. Malmſburie, ſaie they, was founded by one Medulph a Scot, of whom it was firſt called Medulphesburie, but of ſo ſmall reuenues (though Leſleus biſhop of Roſſe lib. 4. pa. 167. ſaie that Medulphus cœnobium magnificum extruxit in ciuitate Malmſburienſi, &c) that the moonks were not able to liue thereof, whereof Adhelme being abbat, it was in his time greatlie aduanced. He was a learned man & firſt made abbat of Malmſburie, in the yere of Chriſt ſix hundred threeſcore & fifteene by Eleutherius then biſhop of the weſt Saxons. This Adhelme the twentith of Inas king of the weſt Saxons, was made biſhop of Shirburne, whereby it appeareth that Adhelme who firſt inlarged or laid the firſt foundation of the abbie of Malmſburie was ſome hundred and almoſt thirtie yeres before this Athelme the firſt biſhop that euer was of Wels, and after the biſhop of Canturburie: for this biſhop of Wels liued in the yeare nine hundred and ſix, and the other in the yeare ſix hundred threeſcore and fifteene, the one in the daies of Inas king of weſt Saxons, which began his reigne in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred foure ſcore and ſeuen, and the other in the reigne of Edward the elder, which began his kingdome in the yere of our ſaluation nine hundred. But it maie be that the firſt Adhelme biſhop of Shireburne inlarged that houſe, and that the ſame being manie yeres after deſtroied by the Danes, had a new foundation thereof laid by this Athelmus archbiſhop of Canturburie: thus this touching that & ſo againe to Athelmus. This archbiſhop of Canturburie did crowne king Athelſtane, who began his reigne in the yeare of Chriſt nine hundred twentie and foure, which king did build three coining houſes at Canturburie, whereof one was for himſelfe, the other for the archbiſhop, and the third for the abbat of S. Auguſtines. Beſides which alſo he built three like houſes at Rocheſter, two for himſelfe, and one for the biſhop. Of ſuch like houſes likewiſe he built eight at London, ſix at Wincheſter, two at Lewes, two at Haſtings, one at Chicheſter, two at Hampton, two at Warham, two at Exceſter, two at Shaftſburie, and one in euerie other towne.

Tho. Spot.

Simon Dunel.

Ex archiuis.

Wolfelmus. Chro. Well. & Bath. W. Malmſ.

Wolfelmus the fourth biſhop of Wels was aduanced vnto the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, of whom as yet I cannot find anie thing, neither when he was made or by whom, how long he ſate, when he died, or where buried, but onelie that William of Malmſburie giueth him thirteene, and the hiſtorie of Couentrie fourteene yeres of gouernment. But I find ſuch diuerſitie of the yeare amongſt authors, in their accounts of the yeares of their firſt comming to the ſee, and continuing therein, that I thinke it impoſſible to reckon them.

Odo Seuerus.

Ex archiuis.

Odo, ſurnamed Seuerus, or the ſeuere perſon, otherwiſe called Odoſogodus, which being Latine Saxon, ſignifieth in Engliſh, Odoſogood, was borne in the prouince of the eaſt Angles, of an honorable ſtocke of Danes, which were pagans, who did vnworthilie diſherit him, becauſe in his youth he became a chriſtian. This man forſaking his countrie fled to the ſeruice of Ethelmus a duke vnder Edward the elder, by whom he was committed to tutors to learne the Greeke and Latine ſpeeches; wherevpon he became ſingular in verſe and proſe. Shortlie after his baptiſme he was made ſubdeacon, and then within few yeres following became a prieſt. Before his prieſthood he was a ſouldior, in which he continued likewiſe after that he was biſhop, thriſe ſeruing the king in his wars: for being aduanced to the biſhoprike of Shireburne or Sariſburie, by the gift of king Athelſtane, he was in the wars with him againſt Aulafe the Dane. After the death of Athelſtane he was made biſhop of Canturburie by King Edmund, brother and ſucceſſor to Athelſtane, and receiued his pall from Agapetus the ſecond, then pope of Rome. He crowned Eadred or Eldred king of England in the yeare of Chriſt one hundred fortie and ſix: which biſhop in the yeare of Chriſt nine hundred and fortie made ſuch peace betweene Aulafe the Norwegian, hauing ſpoiled England and gotten Yorke, Vt Aulaſus totâ Angliæ inſulam ad borealem plagam via regia (quæ Watlingſtreet dicitur) ſuæ ditioni ſubiectam teneret: Eadmundus verò auſtralis eiuſdem callis parte contentus pacificè frueretur, quique ſuperuiueret regni totius regimen obtineret. This biſhop inforced Edwin to forſake his concubines, baniſhing them all from the church, and one of them from the kingdome into Ireland. He made his nephue Oſwald biſhop of Worceſter, and after tranſlated him to Yorke. He gouerned the ſee of Canturburie manie yeares, and died in the reigne of Edwin king of England, being buried in that Chriſts church which belonged to his owne ſee, the forme of whoſe toome ſtanding on the ſouth ſide of the altar of that church, was made in maner of a pyramide. After his death, Elſinus biſhop of Wincheſter by monie obteined of king Edgar the biſhoprike of Canturburie; but this Elſine going to Rome to be conſecrated, miſerablie died in the waie with extreame cold on his feet, which could neuer receiue anie heat although they bowelled their horſes and put his feet in their warme bellies: which ſome ſaie happened to him by the iuſt iudgement of God, becauſe he had before obteined this biſhoprike by ſimonie, & reprochfullie ſpurned the toome of this Odo Seuerus and greeuouſlie railed vpon him. After the death of this Elſinus, Brithelmus a moonke of Glaſtenburie, as I haue read in the hiſtorie of Wels, and the ſeuenth biſhop of that ſee of Wels, was choſen to the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie. But (as ſaith Roff. hiſt. Io. Capgra. W. Malmſ. Edmerus. Fabianus.

Mat. Parc. in vita Dunſtan.

Lond. liber. W. Malmſ.

Roff. hiſt.

Chron. Well. & Bath.

ſaith Matthew Parker, Quia rebelles correctionis verbere omnino non cohiberet. He was by king Edgar commanded to returne to his forſaken biſhoprike of Wels, in whoſe place of Canturburie (by the iudgement of all men) ſaint Dunſtan was thought méet to ſuccéed.

Dunſtan.
Oſbernus. W. Malmſ.
Io. Capgra.
Oſbernus.
Simon Dunel.
Mat. Parker. in vita Dunſtan ex vetuſtiſſima Dunſtani legenda.
Simon Dunel. Roger Houed.
Simon Dunel.

Dunſtan the thrée and twentith archbiſhop of Canturburie, after the account of Matthew Parker, this man was borne (in the yeare of our redemption nine hundred twentie and foure, being the firſt yere of king Athelſtane, in the countrie of the weſt Saxons) of noble parents on both ſides, whoſe father was called Herſton, and his mother Kinedcida; he was inſtructed in his youth in the liberall ſciences in Glaſcon or Glaſtenburie. For as ſaith Matthew Parker, Nondum cœtus monaſticus illã eccleſiam occupauit, abbatiſque nomen penitus erat incognitum, ſed artium profeſſores regij alebantur ſtipendijs. Si quis autem ab hominum conſuetudine ad ſolitariã vitam ſe vellet abducere, modo ſolus, modo paucioribus conſociatus, patria relicta, capta in aliena regione oportunitate viuendi, vixit peregrinus. Qua occaſione Hibernenſes quidam nobiles habitandi locum a ciuili turba multitudinéque ſeiunctum Glaſconiæ delegerunt. Ibi adoleſcentes nobiles ingenuis artibus mercede inſtruxerunt, inter quos Dunſtanus in illa iuuenili inſtitutione cæteris inſtructior ad eas artes, muſicam & pingendi atque ſculpendi ſcientiam adiecit. After which he ſerued his vncle Adelme, or Athelme archbiſhop of Canturburie, from whom he came to the ſeruice of king Athelſtane his néere kinſman, whom the king the more fauored becauſe he could plaie and ſing well of and to the harpe. After this (for that as ſéemeth his harpe could plaie alone) he was baniſhed the court, who departing from thenſe was laid in wait for, bound and caſt into a durtie puddle: but in the end comming to Elphegus his vncle alſo being then biſhop of Wincheſter, by whoſe counſell he was made a moonke, he was executor to Algiua a woman borne of kinglie bloud, who by this Dunſtans perſuaſion made hir will in this ſort: Ieſum Chriſtum rerum mearum hæredem facio, te (meaning Dunſtan) eiuſdem hæreditatis tutorẽ conſtituo, vt quicquid ipſum cognoueris velle, tui arbitrij ſit effectu mancipare. After whoſe death Dunſtan diſtributed hir moueables amongſt the poore, and appointed hir liuings and lands to houſes of religion, for of that inheritance he builded fiue monaſteries. Then when king Athelſtane was dead, he came to the court and grew in fauour with king Edmund: but after falling in his diſgrace he was baniſhed from him, wherewith not wholie ouerthrowne, he reobteined the kings fauour, Deinde loca in quibus Dunſtanus natus, genitus, enutritus, educatus, aut verſatus ſit, king Edmund, Dunſtano ad cœnobia extruenda dedit, whereupon (as ſaith Matthew Parker) Dũſtanus ſui ordinis monachorum copioſa collecta multitudine, cœnobiũ quod tunc ſolùm in Anglia fuit, repleuit, ipſe eorum dux ac magiſter abbatis nomine primus in Anglia appellatus eſt. But here I muſt with reuerence ſaie thus much, that if Matthew Parkers writing, that this Dunſtan was the firſt that was named an abbat in England, be not to be taken and ment that he was the firſt that was named abbat of the houſe of Glaſtenburie, or that was named abbat after the deſtruction of monaſteries and religion by the Danes, it can not be true. For beſides manie abbats of diuers religious houſes named by Bede, manie hundred yeares before this Dunſtan, the ſame Matthew Parker himſelfe dooth name diuers archbiſhops of Canturburie before this Dunſtan to haue béene abbats of ſundrie places, as Lambert abbat of ſaint Auguſtines in Canturburie, Theologild or Fleogild abbat of Canturburie, & Athelmus abbat of Glaſtenburie, &c. This Dunſtan ruled all things vnder king Eadred or Eldred, which began his reigne in the yere of Chriſt nine hundred fortie and ſix. After the death of which king, Dunſtan was by his ſucceſſor king Edwin the third time baniſhed the court: whereupon he went vnto his monaſterie of Glaſtenburie, but not ſetling himſelfe there, was baniſhed the realme by the king, whoſe anger ſtill increaſed againſt him in the end, by meanes whereof he went into France. After the death of Edwin, Edgar his brother, made king in the yeare of Chriſt nine hundred fiftie and nine, did call a councell at Branford, vndid the acts of Edwin, called home Dunſtan, and whether he would or no made him firſt biſhop of Worceſter, then biſhop of London, both which he held at one time, and within two yeares after, archbiſhop of Canturburie. To this Dunſtan were almoſt all the biſhops of England of kin, or alied in bloud by one means or other. For as ſaith Matthew Parker, Erant tunc temporis plures & digniores epiſcopi conſanguinitate tũ copulati. Odo enim Cantuarienſis & Osketellus Eboracenſis archiepiſcopi propinqui fuerunt, his duobus Oſwaldus conſanguineus. Dunſtani ex altera parte cognatio fuit cum Adelmo Cantuar. archiepiſcopo, Elphego caluo Wintonienſi, & Elphego iuniore abbate, qui poſtea etiam Wintonienſis epiſcopus fuit: tum Wulſino Sirebornienſi epiſcopo, qui priùs abbas Weſtmonaſterienſis fuerat. His cognationibus iuncti ſe inuicẽ potiundis epiſcopatibus tanquam proprijs hæreditatibus iuuerunt. Itaque regem acriter hortatur Dunſtanus, vt Oſwaldus prædeceſſoris ſui Odonis fratruelis, & Ethelwaldus Abindoniæ abbas, epiſcopi crearentur. Oſwaldum ilico conſecrauit Dunſtanus Wigornienſem epiſcopum, an. Dom. 960, annóque ſequenti mortuo Brithelmo Ethelwaldum Wint. epiſcopum Which Dunſtan biſhop of Canturburie annointed Edward king of England after the death of Edgar, in the yeare of Chriſt nine hundred thrée ſcore and fiftéen. He aſſembled a councell at Kirkling in the prouince of the eaſt Angles, in the yeare of ſaluation nine hundred thrée ſcore and ſeuentéene, and after this called an other at Calne in Wiltſhire, in which was concluded a full baniſhment of ſecular and maried prieſts, and introducing of moonkes into their places, which order hath euer ſince continued for the ſpace of ſix hundred thirtie and foure yeres in England, vntill about the ſix and twentith yeare of king Henrie the eight, in the yere of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and foure, much about which all religious houſes were diſſolued and their order of life reiected. After this, Dunſtan crowned Egelred king of England in the yeare of our Lord nine hundred thrée ſcore and eightéene, or rather nine hundred thrée ſcore and ſeuentéene, he ſate at Canturburie ſeuen and twentie yeares, died the fouretéenth kalends of Iulie, and was buried at Canturburie, as writeth Geruaſius Dorobernenſis in theſe words out of Edmerus: Sanè via vna, quam curuatura cryptæ ipſius ad occidentem vergentem concipiebat, vſque ad locum quietis beati Dunſtani tendebatur. Ipſe námque ſanctiſſimus pater ante ipſos gradus in magna profunditate terræ iacebat humatus, tumba ſuper eum in modum pyramidis grandi ſublimique ſtructura, habente ad caput ſancti altare matutinale, &c.

Ethelgarus.

Ethelgarus ſuccéeded Dunſtan in the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, he was firſt made abbat of the new monaſterie of Wincheſter, by Ethelwald biſhop of Wincheſter, after which he was made biſhop of Seolſeie in Suſſex. But after that the Iland was ſpoiled by the Danes, he was aduanced to the metropolitike ſée of Canturburie, of whoſe doings by reaſon of the iniurie of the time, for now the Danes troubled all the realme, nothing is found, but that he died and was buried in Chriſts church in Canturburie, after that he had béene archbiſhop one yeare and thrée moneths.

Siricius.

Siricius, being firſt a moonke of Glaſtenburie, was in ſucceſſion of time by ſaint Dunſtan made abbat of ſaint Auguſtines in Canturburie; after which, he was vnder the ſame Dunſtan, indued with the biſhoprike of Wincheſter, and at length in the yeare of our redemption eight hundred foureſcore and nine, or as ſoms haue, nine hundred foureſcore and eleuen, in the time of king Ethelred, or Egelred; he was aduanced to the archbiſhops ſée of Canturburie, where (as ſaith William Malmesburie, and the hiſtorie of Couentrie) he continued fiue yeares: he was buried (after his death) in Chriſts church of Canturburie, to which place he gaue his bookes, being as Matthew Parker ſaith, verie good.

W. Thorne.

Stephan Brichinton.

Aluricius. Hiſto. Petriburgenſis.

Aluricius or Alfricus, who procéeded likewiſe out of the monaſterie of Glaſtenburie, was firſt abbat of Abindon, after biſhop of Wilton, and at length created archbiſhop of Canturburie, and receiued the pall of pope John, about the yeare of Chriſt nine hundred foureſcore & ſixtéene: who after that he had ten years as ſome ſaie, & but ſix yeares as Malmesburie & Couentrie writeth, godlie and valiantlie defended the church of Canturburie from the inuaſion and ſpoile of the Danes, departed this life, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand and ſix, in the reigne of king Ethelred, and was firſt buried at Abindon, and then remoued to his owne church of Canturburie.

Chro. Steph. Brichinton.

Elphegus.

Elphegus or Alpheg, iſſuing foorth of the monaſterie of Glaſtenburie, was firſt made abbat of Bath, who being borne of honorable parents, paſſed his youth in the monaſterie of Hirſt, whereof he was made a religious perſon: then he went to Bath, and there built him a cabin, in which he liued to himſelfe; after which, he was by Dunſtan conſecrated biſhop of Wincheſter, and then archbiſhop of Canturburie, receiuing his pall at Rome. In the end, this Elphegus being ſeuen moneths impriſoned, was by the Danes led to Gréenewich, and there beheaded, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand and twelue: during the time that Swaine had the gouernment of England. He was buried in Paules church at London: but after, by the commandement of Canutus the Dane king of England, he was remoued to Canturburie, and there his bodie lieth honorablie interred, after that he had gouerned ſix yeares, as hath W. Malmesburie.

Liuingus.

Liuingus, ſirnamed Elſtanus, being the tenth biſhop of Wels, was elected to the ſee of Canturburie, & inſtalled therein, who after ſeuen moneths impriſonment by the Danes as was Elphegus, being deliuered, did (beholding the miſerie of his people) flie into baniſhment: but Swanus being dead, & Ethelred reigning, he returned home, & after the death of Ethelred, crowned king Edmund Ironſide at London, who being ſlaine by treaſon of Edrike (as moſt write) this Liuingus did at London crowne Canutus, & ſo in the end of his life obteined ſome quiet. This biſhop after that he had béene archbiſhop of Canturburie ſeuen yeares, and had beautified that church with manie gifts, departed the world, in the yeare that the world became fleſh one thouſand and twentie, being the ſecond yeare of Canutus the Dane, and was buried in Chriſts church at Canturburie.

Wil. Malſm. de pont.

Geruaſius de geſtis regum.

Ste. Brichinton.

Agelnothus. Steph. Brichinton. de Cantu. epiſc.

Agelnothus, Egelnotus, Athelnothus or Aethelnothus, diuerſlie called of diuerſe writers, was ſurnamed the Good, being the ſonne of the noble earle Agelmare. This man (after that the chanons of Canturburie in the perſecution of the Danes, being of greater number than the monks, had after the manner of other churches made their chiefe to be called a deane) was firſt made deane of Canturburie: after being choſen to that biſhoprike he went to Rome, in the yeare that the word deſcended from the boſome of the father one thouſand & twentie (being the ſecond yeare of the abſolute reigne of Canutus) and receiued the pall of pope Benedict.

Matth. Weſt.

In this mans time, the ſame Canutus went to Rome about Eaſter, where he obteined of the pope, That the Engliſh ſchoole of Rome ſhould be frée from all tax; That all his ſubiects Engliſh and Danes in their pilgrimage or other trauell, ſhould be frée from toll of paſſage from place to place: and laſtlie, That the archbiſhops of England ſhould haue their pall fréelie without anie monie: wherof the ſaid Canutus writeth to this Agelnothus and others thus.

The letter of Canutus to his biſhops of England touching thoſe things.

Canutus rex totius Angliæ, & Denemarchiæ, Noruegiæ, & partis Swanorum, Agelnotho metropolitano, & Alfrico Eboracenſi archiepiſcopo, omnibúſque epiſcopis & primatibus, & toti genti Anglorum, tam nobilibus quàm plebeis ſalutem, &c. Then a little after followeth: Conqueſtus ſum iterum coram domino papa, & mihi valde diſplicere dixi, quòd mei archiepiſcopi interim angariebantur immenſitate pecuniarum quæ ab eis expetebantur, dum pro pallio accipiendo ſecundum morem apoſtolicam ſedem expeterent: decretúmque eſt ne id deinceps fiat. Cuncta enim, quæ a domino papa, & imperatore, & à rege Rodulpho, cæteriſque principibus, per quorum terras nobis tranſitus eſt ad Romam, pro meæ gentis vtilitate poſtulabam, libenter annuerunt, & conceſſa etiam ſacramento confirmarunt, ſub teſtimonio quatuor archiepiſcoporum, & 20 epiſcoporum, & innumeræ multitudinis ducum & nobilium quæ aderat, &c.

After the returne of Agelnothus from Rome, he ſtored the church, which before that time laid waſt ſince the perſecution of the Danes was doone. This biſhop inſtructed Canutus in good learnings, and crowned two of his ſonnes, Harold, and Hardeknute; and then after that he had béene biſhop eightéene yeares, died in the fourth kalends of Nouember, being buried in Chriſts church in Canturburie.

Edſinus. Ste. Brichinton.

Edſinus, Elſinus, or Eadſinus, a ſecular prieſt, was firſt chaplen to king Harold, by whome he was promoted to the biſhoprike of Wincheſter: then after the Death of Harold the King, and of Agelnoth the biſhop of Canturburie, he was elected archbiſhop of Canturburie, and receiued his pall of pope Alexander (as ſome haue, or rather of Benedictus, as others will) in the time of Hardeknute, or rather of Harold, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thirtie and eight. This man by reaſon of ſickeneſſe not able to diſcharge the burden of his biſhoprike, committed the ſame to one Siward abbat of Abindon, and after biſhop of Rocheſter: which Edſinus the biſhop, did with his councell helpe Edward the confeſſor, baniſhed into Normandie, to the kingdome of England, with whome he was verie familiar; becauſe he crowned that king at Wincheſter. After which, when with great ſickeneſſe he had eleuen yeares ruled the ſee by his vnkind and vnthankfull deputie Siward (whome he labored to make his ſucceſſor, notwithſtanding that Siward would ſcarſelie vouchſafe to find him things neceſſarie) he died the fift kalends of Nouember, rather famiſhed by the ſaid Siward, than of other death, and was buried in Chriſts church in Canturburie: which Edſinus was accuſtomed in his writings thus to ſubſcribe his name: Ego Eadſinus archiepiſcopus eccleſiæ Chriſti ſubſcripſi.

Wil. Malſm. de pont.

W. Malſm. Robert a Norman.

Robert, by nation a Norman of the monaſterie of Gematicens came into England by the calling of king Edward the Confeſſor, who déerelie loued him for the friendſhip which he ſhewed to the ſame

Edward whileſt he was brought vp in Normandie, and for the fauor that William duke of Normandie did beare to this Robert. For which cauſe, king Edward the firſt made him biſhop of London, & then biſhop of Canturburie, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fortie and nine. He accuſed (to the king) Emma the kings mother of adulterie, and cauſed Goodwine earle of Kent to be baniſhed; but after that ſhe was purged by the Ordall (a manner of triall in thoſe daies by conſecrated fier, in going bare foote ouer nine hot burning ſhares) and earle Goodwine was reſtored by the labor of the nobilitie; this Robert was baniſhed, as after ſhall appeare. For the king aſking pardon, that he had ſo raſhlie accuſed his mother of adulterie with Aldwine biſhop of Wincheſter, was for his penance beaten with rods by the biſhop, and receiued three blowes of his mother: in remembrance of which purgation, the queene and the biſhop gaue nine mannors to the monaſterie of ſaint Swithins in Wincheſter, which the king confirmed, with an inlargement of a further gift of other two mannors, called Meones, and Portland to the ſaid monaſterie. Wherevpon the archbiſhop finding himſelfe ſo diſgraced and growne into the hatred of the people, did voluntarilie baniſh himſelfe out of the kingdome of England, and at length dieng in Normandie, was buried in the monaſterie of Gemeticum, from whenſe he came.

Stigandus.
Walt. Couen.
Matth. Paris.
Ioronal. hiſt.
Wil. Malmſ.
Wil. Malmſ.
Thom. Spot.

Stigandus chapleine to Edward the Confeſſor, who was aduanced to manie honors, but whether for his vertue or by his ſubtiltie, in abuſing the gentle diſpoſition of Edward the Confeſſor, I know not, but certeine it is, that he did not obteine them by reſon of his learning, for he was altogither vnlearned or vnlettered. Notwithſtanding which, it was no impediment vnto him to aſcend the top of the archiepiſcopall dignitie of Canturburie by theſe degrees. Firſt he was biſhop of Helmam amongſt the eaſt Angles, then biſhop of Wincheſter and Chicheſter, & then laſtlie, in the tenth yeare of the ſaid K. Edward, being the third yeare of pope Leo the third, and the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand fiftie and three, aduanced to the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, during the life of the laſt before exiled biſhop Robert, liuing then in Normandie. Who hauing thus atteined the higheſt ſpirituall honor, did not yet leaue the biſhoprike of Wincheſter, for which cauſe he was termed a ſimoniake, couetous, a theefe, an inuador of other mens poſſeſſions, and for that cauſe could neuer obteine the pall of the true pope of Rome. Wherefore in the end he got one of the ſchiſmaticall biſhops of that ſee called Benedict, to inueſt him with the pall. Which Stigandus remaining archbiſhop of Canturburie at the conqueſt, ſo wrought, partlie by policie, and partlie by force, as may be ſeene in manie chronicles, that he and Egelſinus the abbat of ſaint Auguſtines in Canturburie, the two chiefeſt lords in Kent, obteined of William Conqueror at Swaineſcombe in Kent, that the ſame prouince ſhould for euer keepe their accuſtomed lawes and liberties; which granted, they deliuered the whole ſhire & caſtle of Douer to William Conqueror: notwithſtanding all which, and that William Conqueror did outwardlie ſeeme to honor him, yet he would not be crowned of this Stigandus.

1067, or 1608, as ſome haue.

After which, William Conqueror, about the ſecond yeare of his reigne, going into Normandie, caried this Stigand with him, and would not ſuffer him to depart his ſight, rather for feare of his ſubtiltie, than for anie credit he gaue to his fidelitie: whom though he neuer truſted nor loued, yet the king would alwaies call him by the name of father, and riſe to meete him in all aſſemblies. In the end, the king diſſembling the matter no longer, but laieng all the fault vpon pope Alexander, did in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand threeſcore and nine, falling in part of the fourth yeare of William Conqueror, find meanes to haue him depoſed. For the ſaid Alexander, ſending Hermanfredus biſhop of Redimence, with Iohn and Peter prieſts cardinals into England, in the octaues of Eaſter, they ſo handled Stigand, that inforcing him to flie hither and thither, ſometime into Scotland with Alexander biſhop of Lincolne, and ſometime into Elie to hide himſelfe; they at length in a councell holden at Wincheſter depoſed him, and his brother Agelmar biſhop of the eaſt Angls, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand threeſcore and ten, being part of the fourth yeare of the ſaid William Conqueror. Wherevpon, Stigandus being ſpoiled of all his goods, was committed to perpetuall priſon, where he was hardlie kept from anie food and other things, till he would confeſſe where his treaſure was: but he rather chooſing to be famiſhed than to ſhew it, hauing before with an oth denied it, did in the end moſt miſerablie depart the world, after that he had beene archbiſhop ſeuenteene yeares. But when he was dead, there was a keie found about his necke, which after led the king to innumerable treaſure, hidden by him in diuerſe places.

Roger. Ceſt.
Ioronal. hiſt.
Walt. Couent.
Wil. Malmſ.
Radulph. de Diceto.
Rog. De Ceſt.
Roff. hiſt.
Wil. Thorne.
Florilegus.
Hiſt. Elienſ.

Lanfranke.
Ioronal. hiſt.
Chron Saxo. Cant.
Sigebert Gemblacenſ.
Wil. Gemite.
Roff. hiſt.
Wil. Malmſ.
Ioronal. hiſt.
Walt. Couent.
Rog de Ceſt.
Roff. hiſt.
Chro. Saxon. Cant.

Lanfranke an Italian Lombard, being from his youth brought vp in learning, came into Normandie, allured thither by the fame of Herlwine abbat of Bec: who going towards that place, was in a wood robbed and faſt bound, but after being let looſe he came to Bec, where he profeſſed and taught logike to releeue his pouertie, being firſt made a moonke, and after prior of the ſame abbeie; whom, when William the baſtard duke of Normandie did affect, he was made abbat of Cane, being further in following time alſo by the ſaid William (when he was king of England) made archbiſhop of Canturburie, and conſecrated at Canturburie the fourth kalends of September (in the fourth yeare of the ſaid William Conqueror, being in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand threeſcore and ten) of theſe biſhops, William of London, Siward of Rocheſter, Walkeline of Wincheſter, Remigius of Dorceſter, Herfaſtus of Helmham or Thetford, Stigerard of Seolſeie, Hermon of Shireburne, and Giſo of Wels. This Lanfranke thus inſtalled, Thomas archbiſhop of Yorke came to Canturburie vnto him to be conſecrated: but vpon ſome termes of contention vſed betweene them, Thomas departed vnſacred, whereof he complained to William Conqueror. But after, Lanfranke ſo cunninglie handled the matter, that Thomas by the kings eſpeciall edict ſware obedience vnto him. Shortlie after this, Lanfranke of Canturburie, & Thomas of Yorke, with Remigius of Lincolne biſhops, went to Rome, to receiue their pals of pope Alexander the third: where Lanfranke obteined two pals, one of loue, and another of office and honor. During whoſe abode at Rome, Thomas the archbiſhop of Yorke began afreſh to complaine of his ſubiection to Canturburie: but the pope referred the deciding of that matter to the king & the nobilitie of the realme; which in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand threeſcore and twelue, being the ſixt yeare of William Conqueror, defined the ſame at Windſore, the tenor of the ſame ſentence being ſet downe in the life of this Lanfranke by Matth. Parker, at what time alſo (ſaith Geruaſius) the pope granted him Totius Angliæ, Walliæ, & Britaninæ (ſecundum morum antiquorum) primatum.

This Lanfranke in a Councell at Wincheſter ordeined that no canon ſhould haue anie wife: as by Liber Wigor. Ranulphus. W. Malmsb.

Sigeb. Gembl.

Ex fragmento hiſtoriæ quod in archiu. Roff. prælat.

1065 or rather 1075

The firſt archdeacon of Canturburie.

Sigeb. Gemblacenſ. 1074

Math. Paris. Annales hiſt. Cant. Hic placitum quod Pinenden inter Lanfrancum & Odonem ex textu Roff. per Ernulphum epiſcopum.

Chron. Saxon. Cantuar.

by theſe words appeareth ſet downe by Matthew Parker, Statuit inter alia, vt nullus canonicus vxorem haberet, extra vrbem in vicis & caſtellis ſacerdotes non compellendos vxores dimittere, prohibendos autem ne matrimonium protraherent qui iam ſunt cœlibes. Tum epiſcopis iniunctum eſt, ne quos auſint presbyteros vel diaconos ordinare niſi cœlibatum profeſſos. He kept an other ſynod at London for remoouing of biſhops ſees to greater cities. In this mans time there was without the citie of Canturburie in the eaſt part a church of S. Martins, where was a biſhops ſee, whereof the biſhop alwaies remained at or within the ſhire, and was in all things deputie to the archbiſhop, who did continuallie frequent the court. This vnderbiſhop being alwaies a moonke, had the charge of the moonks of Canturburie, and did come to celebrate the ſolemnities in the metropolitane church, which doone he returned home, who with the prior of Chriſts church (whom they called deane) did with like attire and habit obteine place in all ſynods. Which order of deputie biſhop continued vntill the time of the Normans gouernment, at what time the laſt biſhop of that place was called Goodwin, who being dead, Lanfranke denied to make anie other biſhop of the church of S. Martins, becauſe two biſhops ought not to be in one citie, when in truth he was not a biſhop in the citie but out of the citie in the countrie. Wherfore Lanfranke appointed in his place a clearke of his, and created him to the title of an archdeacon, whereof the archbiſhop repented him before he died. This archbiſhop was at the councell of Rone in Normandie appointed by William conqueror, in the eighth yeare of his reigne, wherein manie things were decreed touching the ſtate of England, and Lanfranke at that time recouered manie things againſt Odo biſhop of Baieux and erle of Kent, which he vniuſtlie withheld from the biſhoprike of Canturburie. Beſide which he recouered alſo to his ſee fiue and twentie manors. To this man did Scotlandus (as hath Geruaſ. Dorobernenſis & Guido abbats of S. Auguſtine) ſweare obedience. For which great contention was betweene the moonks of that houſe and the biſhop of Canturburie, who repared the church of Canturburie being partlie verie ruinous, and partlie burnt. Moreouer, he built two hoſpitals, the one at Harbaldowne and the other at ſaint Iohns, whereof the one was for lepers, and the other for ſicke & weake perſons, to which he gaue of the treaſure of the archbiſhoprike yearelie one hundred & fortie pounds. Beſides which he built the church of S. Gregories, wherein he placed canons to ſerue ſuch as were ſicke and weake, building an other church neere to the lepers, where they might ſerue God and be buried. Wherevnto maie be added (as ſaith Geruaſius) that he built the biſhops palace at Canturburie. He gaue yearelie fiue hundred pounds in almes to the poore, and in a famine ſent to London and fed one thouſand people. The old church of Rocheſter being downe, he built the ſame anew, giuing great gifts vnto it, he gaue one thouſand marks to the white moonks, & purchaſed the manor of Redburne. And though he had the dailie gouernement of the common wealth, yet he gaue himſelfe moſtlie to diuinitie, wherein he was procured by his father Herebald, and his mother Roſa to be inſtructed. He corrected the old and new teſtaments corrupted by the tranſcribers, he wrot bitterlie againſt Berengarius touching the ſacrament, he made commentaries vpon Paules epiſtles, and the pſalter, and euerie yeare wrot manie other works. In the third yeare of his biſhoprike he conſecrated Peter biſhop of Lichfeeld or Cheſter at Colcheſter, and in the yeare following made Patrike biſhop of Dublin (in Ireland) at London. In which yeare alſo he conſecrated Herneſtus moonke of Canturburie biſhop of Rocheſter, & further, made Gundulph moonke of Canturburie biſhop of Rocheſter after the death of Herneſtus. In the eigth yeare of his biſhoprike, in a councell held at London he depoſed Ailnod abbat of Glaſtenburie. In the eighteenth yeare of his gouernment he crowned William Rufus, conſecrated Godfreie biſhop of Chicheſter, Iohn biſhop of Welles, and Guido abbat of ſaint Auguſtines. Sometime after which he was by William Rufus baniſhed, who as he was going to Rome, hearing of the death of the ſame Rufus, returned to his biſhoprike, where when he had ſitten nineteene, or (as ſaith Geruaſius) twentie yeares, he died (as he had long deſired) of a feuer, the fourth kalends of Iune, in the yere of Chriſt 1088, after which the ſee was void foure yeares (as hath M. Parker) but Per quinquennium as writeth Geruaſius. Of which Lanfranke Sigebertus Gemblacenſis ſetteth downe theſe verſes, compoſed by Anſelme his ſucceſſor:

Archiepiſcopi nec diuitias nec honores,
Sole ſub vndecima geminos ſubeunte dieta,
Lanfrancus ſubijt ſed curis atque labore,
Fœlicis vitæ ſibi ponitur vltima meta,
Natus in Italia Papienſi de regione,
Ciuibus egregijs & honeſta conditione,
Monachus atq; prior Becci fuit hinc Cadomenſis
Abbas, poſt præſul primatus Cantuarienſis.
Totius Anglorum fuit eccleſiæ reparator,
Et Normanorum nihilominus auxiliator,
Cuius doctrinam pars maxima ſenſerat orbis,
Et commune fuit viduis ſolamen & orbis,
Claudis, contractis, leproſis, dæmonioſis,
Surdis & cæcis nec non etiam vitioſis,
Poſt exhortamen non ſpreuit ferre leuamen,
Hic dum vixit erat ſpes omnibus atq; leuamen.
Regum rex æterne Deus rerúmq; creator,
Sis ſibi perpetuus defenſor & auxiliator,
Virgo redemptoris mundi ſanctiſsima mater
Illum conſerua ne ſpiritus arcteriatur,
Omnes electi precibus meritiſq; iuuate,
Lanfrancum veſtris & vobis conſociate,
Vos quoq; qui vitam gratanter adhuc retinetis,
Et ſpem venturæ donec ſupereſtis habetis,
Hortor & admoneo, quòd eidem ſubueniatis,
Et quod feceritis poſt mortem percipiatis,
Nam qui propter eum ſupplex & ſedulus orat,
Pro ſemet ſupplex & ſedulus ipſe laborat.

In reading theſe verſes the ſuperſtition of the time is to be remembred.

Anſelmus.

Roger de Ceſtria.

Matth. Paris. Roff. hiſtor. Iornal. hiſtor.

Eadmerus.

Anſelmus borne in Auguſta a citie of Burgundie, ſituat at the foot of the Alps, was deſcended of worthie parents, his father being called Gundulphus, and his mother Heneberga. This man mooued with the fame of Lanfranke, came to the abbeie of Bec in Normandie, where he was made a moonke, in the twentie and ſeuenth yeare of his age, ſucceeding Lanfranke in the place of the prior of Bec, who ſhortlie after the deceaſe of Helwine the abbat of Bec, was alſo ſubſtitute in his place, continuing abbat fifteene yeares. After being called into England by Hugh erle of Cheſter (extreamlie ſicke) he was in the end made archbiſhop of Canturburie by William Rufus, though afterwards he would haue vndone his gift to Anſelme loth to loſe ſo great reuenues as he receiued by the vacancie of the ſee. This Anſelme thus departing with the abbeie of Bec, was conſecrated archbiſhop by Walkeline biſhop of Wincheſter. After which, ſharplie admoniſhing the king for ſpoiling of churches, he grew in the kings diſpleaſure, and could not obteine licence to go to Rome for his pall, ſith (as he ſaid) there ought none of his ſubiects to be in ſubiection to pope Vrbanus. For which cauſe a councell being called at Rokingham by the king, the nobles, and the clergie, Anſelme ſtood in defenſe of the pope, and the others reſiſted againſt his authoritie. Wherupon in the end all the biſhops, except the biſhop of Rocheſter, forſooke their obedience to Anſelme, ſome of them onelie affirming that they denied obedience vnto him in things which he commanded on the behalfe of pope Vrban, and not otherwiſe. Which Anſelme vnderſtanding, craued leaue to depart to Rome, but could not obteine it: but notwithſtanding all which, a peace was after made betweene the king and him, vntill Whitſuntide. But the biſhop not finding this protection ſufficient, he was ſpoiled of his goods and lands, and greeuouſlie moleſted by the kings officers, wherwith not mooued, he did yet receiue Vrban for pope, which king Rufus and the cleargie of England in that ſchiſme of the popedome would neuer doo, for which cauſe he obteined the pall of the ſaid Vrban, by the means of Walter biſhop of Alba, who brought that pall from Rome to Canturburie. The dooing whereof cauſed William Rufus ſecretlie to labor with the pope, to haue Anſelme by ſome means or other to be altogither withdrawne from England, in which he preuailed not. Wherupon William Rufus returning from the wars, fell at diſſention with Anſelme, who now had libertie either to tarrie in England, and not to appeale from the king to the pope, or elſe to depart the realme, and to giue anſwere thereof within eleuen daies, wherof the archbiſhop receiued the laſt, and ſaid that he would depart England. Then the archbiſhop departing from the king (who yet ſaid he would not refuſe his bleſſing) went to Canturburie, where he tarried foureteene daies: after which, as he was taking ſhip at Douer, he was by one William the kings clerke, & the people there, ſpoiled of all he had, & ſo ſent naked ouer the ſeas into France. The archbiſhop thus departed, the king ſeized all he had, and vndid all his decrees. In the end, Anſelme paſſing to the pope, was well interteined by him at Rome, whither came the ſame William that ſpoiled him, as the kings ambaſſador, and obteined a reſpect of hearing Anſelme cauſe, vntill the feaſt of Michaelmas following; during which time both the pope and the king died.

Annal eccleſiæ Auguſtinæ.

Eadmerus.

This Rufus feeling the ſweet that came vnto him by ſpirituall liuings, whereof he reteined manie in his hands, would ieſt with theſe words, that Panis Chriſti panis pinguis eſt, The bread of Chriſt is ſweet and fat bread. After the death of Rufus, Anſelme was called home by king Henrie the firſt, and reſtored to his biſhoprike, with all other things to him belonging; for the king did greatlie fauor him, as may appeare by this deed, which is in Saxon, the tenor whereof we haue here ſet downe in Saxon, and the Latin out of Matthew Parker, being both ſet downe in the ſame booke of the biſhops of his ſee. Wherin is two things to be noted, firſt the ſimplicitie and good meaning of that age, that in ſo few words did conueie ſo great matters, not leauing contention for lawyers to wrangle vpon, contrarie to the cuſtome of our age, who make their charters exceſſiue long, & yet not ſo ſtrong as they were in times paſt. The other is the maner of ſealing vſed by the kings in thoſe daies: for the kings ſeale which is now hanged at the end of all patents, in this ancient grant is faſtened to a little part of parchment drawen out & cut from the left ſide of this charter. For in times paſt the kings did not vſe to ſet to their ſeales to anie grant, till Edward the Confeſſors time, which firſt brought that order into England (if my memorie faile not, & therefore I haue not miſtaken the words of Ingulfus for this Edward his charter) for the more witneſſe of the truth, to be ſealed with wax, which yet it ſeemed the following princes did vſe but at pleaſure, for I haue ſeene an ancient deed of William Conqueror part in Saxon, and part in Latine, without date, in which the king gaue to Guiſo biſhop of Wels the manor of Banewell in Summerſetſhire, which Harold had taken from them, wherevnto was neuer any ſeale but the ſubſcription of the king and the nobilitie, written in Saxon characters, the nams whereof I thinke good (though it concerne not the biſhops of Canturburie, for antiquities ſake, and becauſe that ſome of theſe names haue yet a being) to ſet downe in this ſort: Ego Gulielmus dux, Waltheof dux, Robertus frater regis, Rotgerus princeps, Gualterus Gaſehtard, Serlo de Burci, Rotgerus Derundell, Richardus filius regis, Gualterus Flæmine, Wurſtan, Baldwinus de Waranbeiege, Otheltard Aelſgardethorne, William de Waluile, Bundi Stallere, Robert Stallere, Robert de Yle, Rotgerus pincerna, Hardineg Wulfutard, Brightine, &c. And ſo to the charter of Henrie the firſt made to Anſelme.

Ioronal. hiſtor.

Geruaſ. in vita Eduardi Con.

The Saxon charter of king Henrie the firſt, for the reſtoring of Anſelme his priuileges.

H. Anᵹle-lanꝺeꞅ kẏnninᵹ. ᵹꞃeꞇ. Huᵹe ꝺe Boclanꝺe ⁊ ƿ. Baẏnaꞃꝺe. ⁊ ealle mẏne ƿicnæꞃeꞅ en lunꝺune. Ic ƿille ⁊ be beoꝺe ꝥ ealle Anꞅelmeꞅ mænn þe he heꝼð on lunꝺune anꝺ ealle hiꞅ oðꞃe mænn, þe cumeð and aꞃeꞇhꝼ inꞇo þæꞃe buꞃh. ꝥ hi beon ꞅƿa ꞅacleaꞅe oꝼ eallen ᵹeƿunen ꞅƿa Lanꝺꝼꞃanc Aꞃcebiꞅcop hiꞅ mænn beꞇꞅꞇ hæꝼꝺe on mẏn æꞅ ꝼaꝺeꞅ ꞇẏme. ⁊ haƿiᵹeð ꝥ ᵹe heom nahꞇ ne mẏꞅ heoꝺen. ꞇ. Huᵹ. Comiꞇe ꝺe Ceꞅꞇꞃia: ap. ƿeꞅꞇmonꞅꞇ.

The ſame charter in Latine.

H. rex Anglorum Hugoni de Bocland & Willihelmo Baignard, & omnibus miniſtris meis Londoniæ ſalutem. Præcipio & volo vt omnes homines Anſelmi Cantuarienſis archiepiſcopi, quos in Londonia habet, & omnes ſui in ea villa euntes & redeuntes, ita quietè de omnibus conſuetudinibus ſint, ſicut vnquam Lanfrancus archiepiſcopus ſuos in ea meliùs & quietiùs habuit tempore patris mei, & videte ne eis vllam iniuriam faciatis. Teſte Hugone comite de Ceſtria apud Weſtmonſter.

After this, Anſelme called a ſynod at London, in which he depoſed for ſimonie and other euils, Guido abbat of Wimondham, and Edwine abbat of Ramſeie ſimoniaks; and theſe other abbats, Gefferie of Peterborow, Heimo of * Ceruelle, Egelrike of Midleton, bicauſe they were not ordeined in the cleargie, with Richard of Elie, and Robert of S. Edmunds, for other defaults & exceſſe. In which councell alſo amongſt manie other lawes conteining ſix and twentie chapters, for the cleargie were theſe: That clearks ſhould weare garments of one colour, and ſuch ſhooes as were appointed cap. 10. That abbats ſhould not make anie knights that might eat or drinke in that houſe with the moonks cap. 17. That the bodies of the dead ſhould not be buried out of their paroch church cap. 24. And that none with raſh noueltie ſhould attribute to dead bodies, to wels, or other places (which we haue knowne to haue often happened) anie reuerence of holines without the biſhops authoritie ca. 25. And that none ſhould exerciſe that moſt lothſome buſines, in which hitherto men were woont to be ſold like brute beaſts, cap. 26. The which conſtitutions of this ſynod of London Giraldus biſhop of Yorke could not make his people to obeie, neither yet would manie other parts of the realme obeie the ſame, eſpeciallie ſuch as following the kings order had diſpoſed of their eccleſiaſticall liuing, as the king had doone for the inueſting of biſhops. Againſt which Anſelme did greatlie ſtand, and would not conſecrate ſuch biſhops, the which Girald archbiſhop of Yorke alwaies did, at the Aureæ hiſtor. pars. 2. W. Malſm.

1103

* Hertſeie as ſome ſuppoſe.

Abbats did make knights

Buriall in paroch churches.

Giſburenſis. Rog. de Ceſtri. Roff. hiſtor.

requeſt and pleaſure of the king, who appointing a place and day for them to be conſecrated by him, thither came William biſhop of Wincheſter to receiue his benediction, but he in the end not meaning to take the ſame conſecration at Giralds hands, deliuered his ſtaffe and ring againe to the king, of whome he had receiued it: wherevpon the king baniſhed him, and ſent William Warlwaſt ambaſſador to the pope about that matter, whereof is more ſpoken by Holinſhed in the reigne of king Henrie the firſt.

This Anſelme comming from Rome, together with William Warlwaſt, was forbidden by the ſaid Warlwaſt (from the king) to enter England, vnleſſe he would without anie ſubiection to the pope obſerue all the cuſtomes of England brought in by William Conqueror and William Rufus his predeceſſors: wherevnto Anſelme diſagréeing, remained thrée years at Lions with the archbiſhop Hugh. But after that he was reconciled to the king by means of the counteſſe of Adela his ſiſter, whome Anſelme came to viſit in hir ſickneſſe, who going into Normandie to the king (then in ſubduing the ſame) did ſo effectuallie worke with him, that Anſelme was reſtored, and this peace made betwéene them; that all ſuch biſhops as were before inueſted by the king, and excommunicated by pope Paſchall ſhould be abſolued and kéepe their biſhopriks, and that neither the king nor anie other laie man hereafter ſhould doo the like againe. Wherevpon Anſelme returned into England, and was reſtored to his biſhoprike, and to all the commodities receiued by the king in the time of his baniſhment. After the kings returne to England, there was by the king a councell kept at London, in which the inueſtiture of biſhops was wholie giuen to the king. This Anſelme beſtowed much on the decking and reparing of the church of Canturburie, and inſtituting the monaſterie of the moonks of Cheſter firſt built by Hugh earle of that prouince, ouer which monaſterie he made Richard his chapleine abbat. This archbiſhop was verie diligent in writing, of whoſe dooing there are extant thrée hundred ſixtie and ſeauen epiſtles, he compiled diuerſe treatiſes, firſt: De veritate. 2 De libertate arbitrij. 3 De caſu diaboli. 4 De grammatico & diſcipulo. 5 Monologion. He wrote alſo a booke called Sententiarum prologion, a booke De incarnatione verbi, and manie other bookes, as one intituled Cur Deus homo, an other De conceptu virginali, and alſo De orationibus contemplatiuis, and laſtlie De proceſſione ſpiritus ſancti. Who thus ſpending his time to helpe other, did, two years after his laſt comming into England, fall ſicke of an ague at ſaint Edmundſburie, and haſtened to come to Canturburie, where kéeping his bed a long time he at length departed this life the eleuenth kalends of Maie, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred and nine, the ſeauentie and ſix of his age, and the ſixtéenth of his biſhoprike, being buried at the head of Lanfranke his predeceſſor.

Walt. Couent. Sim. Dunel. Math. Paris.

Will. Malſm. Roff. hiſtor.

Auez hiſtor. 2. pars.

Chron. Rober.

Edmerus.

Rodulphus.

Matth. Paris. Ioronal. hiſtor. Amez hiſtor. 2. pars. W. Malmſ. Chro. Cœnob. Martini. Roger de Ceſtria. Roff. hiſtor. Ex archiuis.

Rodulphus borne in Normandie a Benedictine moonke, was ſometime the ſcholer of Lanfranke in the abbeie of Cane. This man being firſt made abbat of Sagos, was from thenſe by Anſelme lead into England, and made biſhop of Rocheſter, whoſe aduancement to the ſée of Canturburie was after this manner. Henrie the firſt holding manie ſpirituall liuings in his hand, and the nobilitie complaining thereof, he was in the end ouercome by their petition, to ſubiect them vnto paſtors and gouernours, for which cauſe he appointed Faricius abbat of Abindon to the ſée of Canturburie, a man doubtleſſe of great wiſdome and grauitie. But manie of the nobilitie being againſt it, they would haue had the king to promote one of his ſecular clearks and chapleins to that dignitie. Againſt whom it was obiected that none had poſſeſſed that ſée, but ſuch as were moonks, except Stigandus, whoſe vnhappie end did ſhew the puniſhment of the breach of that moonkiſh ſucceſſion, wherefore by all mens voices, & the kings changing of his mind touching Faricius, this Rodulphus was made archbiſhop of Canturburie, and conſecrated by William biſhop of Wincheſter, the fiftéenth yeare of pope Paſchalis, and the fourtéenth of king Henrie the firſt, being about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred and fourtéene, and the fift kalends of Iulie next following receiued the pall at Canturburie ſent from pope Paſchall by one Anſelme abbat of S. Sabina, nephue of the other Anſelme archbiſhop of Canturburie. In which daie of receiuing the pall, he conſecrated Theolfus biſhop of Worceſter. In this biſhops time the moſt biſhops of England were Normans. Now Rodulphus being old, ſicklie, full of the palſeie and of the gowt, was hard to be pleaſed, and ſomewhat became vnthankefull to the king which had preferred him. For whereas the biſhop of Saliſburie was readie apparelled and prepared to haue executed the ſolemnities of the marriage (which belonged to the biſhop of Canturburie) betwéene Adelicia and king Henrie the firſt at Windſore, this Radulph commanded him to leaue off the ſame, and committed the dooing thereof to the biſhop of Wincheſter. Beſides which, when the king was at Berkeleie in the Eaſter, and came to London at Whitſuntide, and ſat crowned in his throne, that daie the quéene was to be crowned, this Ranulph ſaieng the diuine ſeruice that daie (leauing his maſſe in the middle) did come vnto the king, whome Thomas archbiſhop of Yorke had crowned when he came to the kingdome, bicauſe Anſelme was baniſhed and out of the realme. Againſt which archbiſhop of Canturburie the king roſe vp to receiue him with curteſie: but the biſhop notwithſtanding boldlie aſked the king who crowned him, wherevnto the king anſwered, that he cared not, and therefore did not remember it. Whereto Radulphus replied, Whoſoeuer did the ſame did not rightlie doo it, wherfore either leaue you off your crowne, or I will leaue off my maſſe. But the king nothing troubled therwith, did anſwer him; If as thou ſaieſt this crowne be not well put vpon my head, doo thou that which thou thinkeſt is rightlie doon. With which words the biſhop came néerer, and lifting vp his hand to take the crowne from the kings head. The nobilitie (as the king was about to loaſe the lace which tied the crowne faſt vnder his chin) with one voice cried out againſt the biſhop, and greatlie laboured him not to take off the kings crowne in this ſolemne coronation of the quéene. With whoſe acclamations Radulphus being quieted he went forward with his maſſe, beginning at this verſe Gloria in excelſis Deo. Which fact of Radulphus doone at this vnſeaſonable time, the cleargie and nobilitie did ſo hate, that they agréed (as hath Matthew Parker) neuer to haue anie moonks to be biſhops of Canturburie, wherevnto the king aſſented, and by law eſtabliſhed it. But this decrée did not long hold, for the two following biſhops were moonks, and the third being Becket, was the firſt canon after Stigand that was conſecrated biſhop of Canturburie.

But this was not ſo as may before appeare.

Matth. Paris. Radulph de Diceto.

Roger being ſomtime chanceler of England.

Ioronall hiſt.

In the time of this Rodulphus was the queſtion of obedience mooued betwéene him & the archbiſhop of Yorke. For Thurſtan biſhop of Yorke at the firſt would not ſweare obedience to this Radulphus, for which cauſe Radulphus in his old age went vnto Rome; but the pope giuing a doubtfull ſentence, the archbiſhop of Canturburie ſhewed the ſame vnto king Henrie the firſt at his returne into England.

Matth. Paris.
Simon Dunel.
Ioranal. hiſt.
Radulph. de Diceto.
Giſburnenſis.
Roger de Cheſtria.
Roff. hiſt.
Ex archiuis.
Edmerus.
Ex archiuis.
Giſburn.
Matth. Paris.

Whereupon Thurſtan was forbidden to enter into England; but the pope excommunicating both the king and Rodulphus, compelled them to receiue Thurſtan into Yorkſhire with this condition, that he ſhould not medle out of his dioceſſe of Yorke, and profeſſe his due obedience to the ſee of Canturburie. At length Rodulphus hauing the palſeie three yeares departed the world (after that he had beene biſhop of Canturburie eight yeares, or as others ſaie nine yeares) the thirteenth kalends of Nouember, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred twentie and two, being about the two and twentith yeare of the reigne of that learned king Henrie the firſt (which for the ſame was ſurnamed Beauclerke, or faire, or ſkillfull clerke) and was buried at Canturburie. This biſhop was of ſpeech courteous, noted of no notable crime, but ouer much giuen to mirth and ieſting, for which he was ſurnamed the ieſter or trifler.

William Corbell.

1121

Chro. Sigisb. Gemblacenſ.

1126

Ex archiuis.

William Corbell or Corbois, whome Matthew Parker maketh the ſix and thirtith biſhop in ſucceſſion, and ſome call Gulielmum de Turbine, was firſt a ſecular clerke, then a moonke of the order of ſaint Benet, and after that, prior of ſaint Oſith of Chich, who in the two and twentith yeare of the reigne of Henrie Beauclerke, and the third of pope Calixtus, was by Henrie the firſt made biſhop of Canturburie on Candlemas daie, and conſecrated of William biſhop of Wincheſter, the biſhoprike of London being then vacant. This doone, this William goeth to Rome for his pall, at what time Thurſtan thinking it now time to mooue Calixtus about the ſubiection of the ſee of Yorke to Canturburie, did yet find no grace at Rome therefore, becauſe the pope vtterlie remooued from himſelfe the deciding thereof; albeit the Saxon chronicle of Peterborow dooth ſaie that gold and ſiluer did end this quarell. Wherefore William of Canturburie and Thurſtan of Yorke comming home togither, ſaluted the king then in Normandie, and ſo entred England. After this he conſecrated Iohn his archdeacon of Canturburie into the biſhoprike of Rocheſter, in the three and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred twentie and three, as hath Rob. Montenſis, at what time alſo he bleſſed Godfreie the kings chancellor to be biſhop of Bath at London. In the fourth yeare of his conſecration he did hold a ſynod in the monaſterie of ſaint Peters at London; which ſynod was called Synodus Willielmi, or Williams ſynod. In this biſhops time Paules church and a great part of London was burnt; for the citie was conſumed by fire from ſaint Clement of the Danes without Temple barre to London bridge, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred and thirtie, being the thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the firſt, and the eight yeare of the conſecration of this biſhop. At what time alſo the church of Canturburie was conſumed with the like flame and fell downe, which this William, being legat of the apoſtolike ſee, did againe build vp, and dedicated it in the ſame yeere of our Lord one thouſand one hundred and thirtie, being the thirtith yeare of Henry the firſt, the fourth nones of Maie, as hath Geruaſius Dorobornenſis, with great & honorable preparation in the preſence of the king and queene of England, and of Dauid king of Scots, with the nobilitie and prelats of both realmes, as hath Geruaſius. Unto which church then conſecrated king Henrie the firſt gaue the church of ſaint Martins of Douer and the archbiſhop yearelie gaue ten pounds. This biſhop William was ſo faint-harted, that he almoſt died becauſe he was ouercome by Henrie de Bleſſes (biſhop of Wincheſter and brother to king Stephan (which built the hoſpitall of the holie croſſe neere Wincheſter) in the legantine power which the ſaid William ſecretlie labored to obteine. For firſt Henrie going to Rome, this William followed to reſiſt him; but Henrie ſo preuailed, that being made a cardinall, he ſucceeded William being dead in the office of Legat. This William declared his inconſtancie in crowning king Stephan, contrarie to his oth made to Maud the empreſſe, who being feared by the terror of his conſcience, let fall the hoſt when he celebrated the maſſe at the coronation of the ſame Stephan. After which, this biſhop for ſorrow falling ſicke, died the eleuenth kalends of December, about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred thirtie and ſeauen, hauing gouerned that ſee fifteene yeares and nine moneths, being buried in the church of Canturburie; after whoſe departure the ſee was void one yeare, two moneths, and fourteene daies.

Gulielmus archiepiſcopus (as hath Geruaſius) fundauit eccleſiam ſancti Martini monachorum de Doura.

1136

Matthew Parker ex Polycrat. Roger de Cheſtria.
Ioranal. hiſtor.

Theobald.

Roff. hiſtor.
Ex archiuis.
Gualt. Couent.
Matt. Paris.
Gembl.

Theobald, whoſe originall is not knowen, was of a Benedictine moonke made abbat of Bec, after which in the ſecond yeare of king Stephan, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred thirtie and eight, in a councell at London (aſſembled by Albert biſhop of Hoſtia the popes legat in England) he was choſen archbiſhop of Canturburie by the ſuffragans of that ſee, and conſecrated by the ſaid Albert; after which he ſent twelue moonks to the new church of Douer, & offred them Aſceline ſacriſt of the church of Canturburie. In which moneth being Ianuarie this Theobald with great pompe went to Rome, and receiued the pall of pope Innocent the ſecond of that name, of whome he alſo obteined this title to be called Legatus natus, which was euer after attributed to his ſucceſſors, whereby they were from that time forward termed Legati nati, which title they haue kept vntill our time, ſo long as the pope had anie authoritie in England. This Theobald was but meanlie learned, but well qualited, and of mild conditions, whereby he was both acceptable to the king and to the nobilitie, of whom thus writeth Geruaſius: Hic Theobaldus 37 ab Auguſtino Cantuarienſem eccleſiam adeptus, cùm eſſet natura ſimplex & aliquantulum literatus, aſciuit clericos ſcholares quorum conſilio ſuo impetu quolibet ducebatur. Poſt annos verò quinque minùs quàm deceret conſiderata ratione Ieremiã priorem, qui eum elegerat, depoſuit, etiam poſt appellationem, aliúmque ſubſtituit. Ieremias autem tàm de ſua iuſtitia cauſæ quàm de Romani pontificis æquitate confidens ad ſedem apoſtolicam acceſſit, & de ſua reſtitutione literas obtinuit. Reſtitutus itaque in prioratum, apoſtolica authoritate poſt modicũ ceſſit, ne archiepiſcopus cauſa ſua aliqua cæteris inferret grauamina. Huiuſmodi depoſitio prioris anteà penes nos facta non eſt, &c. Succeſſore autem ſuo Waltero ad epiſcopatum Ciceſtrenſis eccleſiæ vocato, ſubſtitutus [illegible] in prioratum Cantuar. eccleſiæ Walterus Paruus archiepiſcopi capellanus. The like matter of the depoſition of Walter Paruus Geruaſius purſueth in the hiſtorie, with the originall how the archbiſhops of Canturburie got the prerogatiue to make and depoſe the prior of Canturburie, being a thing which came by meere vſurpation in this ſort. In the wars in the time of king Stephan, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred & fiftie, Geruaſius reciteth, that Walter the prior of Canturburie, ſeeking helpe of this biſhop Theobald to ſuccor his houſe in diſtreſſe, ſubmitted all the things & gouernment of the ſame to the archbiſhop, at the firſt refuſing it; but in the end, accepting therof, with much importunitie he placed a moonke called Dericus to haue the ouerſight of all the things within doores and without, who ſhould therefore yeeld account to the biſhop, at what time firſt began the euill and trouble. For that which was then attempted for neceſſities cauſe for their benefit, fit, turned after to their hinderance, becauſe the biſhop vſing all things with extremitie; the prior appealed him to Rome, which Theobald deſpiſed, impriſoned the moonks (whereby they could not follow the appeale) and tooke from them all their writings and priuileges. But in the end the matter was compounded with quiet in ſome part betweene the biſhop and the prior, who at length by the flattering words of the archbiſhop, which the prior beleeued, did in the end ſurrender his priorie to the archbiſhop. And when the prior amongſt other words of his reſignation ſaid to the biſhop; I reſigne my priorie, (at what time manie ſuppoſed, that the archbiſhop would haue replied; And I reſtore thee to the ſame) this biſhop contrarie thereunto ſaid; And I depoſe thee from the ſame, further commanding the prior, that he ſhould follow him to London, where he ſhould receiue full reſtitution. Whervpon the prior deſpiſing the aduiſe of his brethren, came with ſome of the ancients of his houſe to the biſhop at Lambeth, who being called aſide as though they ſhould talke of the reſtitution of the prior, with the archbiſhop, the biſhops ſeruants tooke this Walter ſo depoſed, and led him to Gloceſter, commanding the abbat of that houſe in the archbiſhops name that he ſhould not ſuffer him to depart thenſe, or to go foorth. Wherevpon the prior remained there in a priſon during the life of this Theobald archbiſhop, who conſecrated Walter archdeacon of Canturburie biſhop of Rocheſter, choſen by the moonks of Canturburie by his appointment, from whenſe euer after the archbiſhops of Canturburie were patrons of the church of Rocheſter, as ſaith Matthew Parker: but Geruaſius prooueth their authoritie in that ſee long before, for thus he writeth. Obijt (which was an. Dom. 1147) Aſcelinus Roffenſis epiſcopus, anno epiſcopatus ſui ſexto, nono kalendis Februarij, cui ſucceſsit Walterus archidiaconus Cantuarienſis, frater Theobaldi Cantuarienſis archiepiſcopi, qui ſecundùm antiquam conſuetudinem, in capitulo Cantuariæ electus eſt à monachis Roffenſibus. Cuius electionis primam habuit vocem Hugo abbas ſancti Auguſtini, eò quòd apud eccleſiam Roffenſem monachicum ſuſceperat habitum; ad præfatam verò abbathiam tranſlatus cum monachis Roueceſtriæ coram Theobaldo Cantuarienſe archiepiſcopo (ad quem ſpectat de iure antiquo epiſcopatus ipſius donatio) in capitulo Cantuar. in præſentia totius conuentus Cantuar. cleri & populi multitudine, vt prædictum eſt, ipſum elegit Walterum. Qui more anteceſſorũ ſuorum iurauit ſuper quatuor euangelia, ſe fideliter obſeruaturum dignitatem Cantuar. eccleſiæ, quam habebat in eccleſia Roffenſi. Eſt autem eccleſiæ Cantuarienſ. conſuetudo ab antiquis temporibus conſtituta, & à pijs patribus obtenta, quòd epiſcopus Roffenſis debeat eligi in capitulo Cantuarienſ. ex dono archiepiſcopi & electione conuentus Roffenſis eccleſiæ. Facta autem electione debet electus iurare ſuper quatuor euangelia fidelitatẽ eccleſiæ Cantuarienſ. & archiepiſcopo. Et quod non debeat Roffenſ. epiſcopus operam dare, vel conſentire vt eccleſia Cantuarienſ. priuetur honore vel dignitate, quã habeat in eccleſia Roffenſ. Et quòd debeat baculus paſtoralis epiſcopi Roffenſis defuncti à monachis Roffenſibus ad altare Chriſti Cantuarienſ. deferri. Et quòd vacante Cantuarien. eccleſiæ ſede vel abſente archiepiſcopo, debeat epiſcopus Roffenſis in Cantuar. eccleſia epiſcopalia miniſtrare, ſicut proprius & priuatus Cantuarienſis eccleſiæ capellanus, ſi tamen a conuentu Cantuarienſis fuerit vocatus. Hac igitur facta fidelitate conſecratus eſt Walterus ab ipſo fratre ſuo Theobaldo archiepiſcopo Cantuarienſi. Quo conſecrato, archiepiſcopus archidiaconatum Cantuar. cuidam Rogerio dedit de ponte epiſcopi, qui & ipſe Cant. eccleſiæ fidelitatem iurauit ſicut archidiaconi facere conſueuerunt. Thus much Geruaſius a moonke of Canturburie in defenſe of the honor and priuileges of the ſee of Canturburie. After which this Theobald receiuing an oth of obedience of the ſaid Roger archdeacon of Canturburie, he bleſſed him into the biſhoprike of Yorke and made Thomas Becket, commonlie called ſaint Thomas of Canturburie, archdeacon of Canturburie in his place, procuring him alſo to be the kings chancellor.

eccleſ. Cantuar.

1147 Beginning the yeare at Chriſtmas.

In the third yeare of the conſecration of this archbiſhop, pope Eugenius held a councell at Rhemes, wherevnto Theobald was called. Wherefore Henrie biſhop of Wincheſter the popes legat (who in authoritie of ſuperioritie of that office did often contend with the ſaid Theobald for the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, was Legatus natus, and the other as I maie terme him, but Legatus datus, the firſt for euer, the ſecond but for a time) did ſubtillie vſe the matter both with the king and the pope, that the one ſhould call him to the councell, and that the other ſhould forbid him to depart out of his realme; to the end that if he obeied his ſpirituall paſtor, he might fall into the cenſures of the church; & if he obeied not his temporall lord, that he might fall into the ciuill puniſhment and be baniſhed the realme, wherevpon he was commanded to ſtaie in England, and all the ports ſtopt that he might not paſſe foorth. But he rather fearing the diſpleſure of the pope than the king, ſcaped the hands of ſuch wardens, paſſed the ſea and went to the councell. Which councell being ended, as hath Geruaſius, the biſhop returning home, was honourablie receiued by the couent of Canturburie; whereof when the king had intelligence, being then at London, he grew ſo angrie, that he came with all ſpeed to Canturburie, where manie words of heat paſſing betweene them, more than were conuenient or tending to peace, at length the biſhop was by the king commanded to depart the realme: who after a few daies reſpite, paſſed the ſeas at Douer, and went into France, where he remained a certein time, and was called backe to ſaint Omers by the queene, and William de Ypre, that the kings meſſengers might more eaſily come vnto him, at what place he conſecrated Gilbert elect biſhop of Hereford the nones of September, by the helpe and aſſiſtance of the outlandiſh biſhops, which were Thidrike biſhop of Amiens, and Nicholas biſhop of Cambraie. Now the biſhop thus baniſhed, for requitall thereof, interdicted the king: but after leauing ſaint Omers he came to Graueling, entred the ſea, returned into England, came into Northfolke, and landed at Goſſord in the lands of Hugh Bigod, whom the ſaid earle meeting receiued with great honour: in which countrie he interdicted the land, and would not be remooued from that ſentence, vntill the biſhops Robert of London, Hilarie of Chicheſter, and William of Norwich, with diuers other noble men came vnto him to Framelingham caſtle in Northfolke, belonging to the earle Bigod, where at length a peace was concluded betweene the king and him, the interdict was releaſed, and the biſhop with great honor & ioie came to Canturburie. Where hearing how the moonks of S. Auguſtines had contemned his interdict, and thereof complained to the pope, he truſting to a ſure ſtaffe of the popes fauor, did aggrauate the ſentence againſt thoſe moonks, whom he excommunicated with Silueſter their prior, & William ſurnamed the Deuill, kinſman to abbat Hugh of that houſe, after depoſing the ſame Silueſter in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred fortie and eight.

Geruaſ. Tho. Spot.

Robertus abbas S. Michaelis.

At length, ſuch was the fauour of this Theobald in England, as he at Wallingford or rather at Wincheſter, as hath Geruaſius, reconciled king Stephan & Henrie Fitzempreſſe, contending for the crowne of England in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred fiftie and three. After comming home, he required a little ſumme of monie of fiftie ſhillings and ſeuen pence of the moonks of ſaint Auguſtines

Pro dotatione

Geruaſ.

Chronic. Robert.

Walt. Couent. Chro. Petrob.

This Thomas is ſuppoſed to be Thomas Becket.

Annal. eccle. Auguſt. Cant.

Wil. Nubrigen.

dotatione chriſmatis, which the moonks denied. Whereupon Theobald laid the cenſures of the church on them, whereby the matter was by appellation deferred to the pope, who wrot to Henrie biſhop of Wincheſter and Robert biſhop of Hereford, to define the cauſe; which they did, in giuing ſentence againſt the moonks. Things thus quieted in England, there was a councell held at Rome, whither went theſe biſhops, Theobald of Canturburie, Walter of Rocheſter, Simon of Worceſter, Roger of Couentrie, and Robert of Exceſter, with ſo manie abbats called thither. After this, Theobald called a ſynod at London, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred fiftie & two, being the ſeuenteenth of king Stephan, and the foureteenth of his conſecration, in which councell was preſent king Stephan and his ſonne Euſtace, whom he required to be made king, to which (being by the pope forbidden) they would not by anie meanes aſſent. Which was ſo brought to paſſe by the means, as ſaith Geruaſius, of one Thomas a clearke borne at London, whoſe father was Gilbert, and his mother Mawd. Wherefore the king and his ſonne ſhutting them vp cloſe, with threats and feare obteined that which they could not doo with fauour and authoritie, for manie of them were therby brought to yeeld to the kings mind. But Theobald priuilie ſtealing from the place, got a boate wherein he was carried to the Thames mouth into the ſea, where he entered a ſhip at Douer, and paſſed ouer the ſeas, wherevpon the king did baniſh him and ſeized on all his ſubſtance. In this councell were manie kinds of friuolous appeales to Rome forbidden, which Henrie biſhop of Wincheſter had procured; to which Henrie, Lucius the pope, as maſter Lambard hath noted out of the chronicle of Rocheſter, did ſend a pall, determining to haue made him a new archbiſhop, aſſigning ſeuen biſhops to be vnder his ſubiection: but as it ſeemeth, the ſame tooke no great effect. For which dooing of Henrie, there was great contention betweene Theobald and him, for Canturburie would vſe his ordinarie authoritie ouer his ſuffragan Wincheſter, and he would extend his legantine power ouer his metropolitan Canturburie, by which meanes were manie appeales made to Rome. After the death of king Stephan, Theobald was called out of exile, and was in greater fauour with Henrie the ſecond, than euer he was with Stephan; and yet Thurſtan, or rather his ſucceſſor William archbiſhop of Yorke, did priuilie attempt to crowne king Henrie, which he would not ſuffer, admitting none therevnto but Theobald, as appeareth by theſe letters.

Henricus rex Angliæ & dux Normaniæ & Aquitaniæ, & comes Anb. Theobaldo Cant. archiepiſcopo ſalutem. Super hoc quod mihi mandaſtis, quòd audieritis me coronandum ad natale ab archiepiſcopo Eborac. apud Lincoln. in prouincia veſtra, ſciatis quòd nullo modo me ibi coronabit, nec alibi contra dignitatē veſtram. Ibi enim me coronabit, ſicut mandaſtis, Lincoln. epiſcopus, ſi præſentiam veſtram habere non potero, quam multùm deſiderarem. Sed hac vice parco labori veſtro, & cùm dominus Lincoln. epiſcopus poſſit modo ſupplere vices veſtras, nolo quòd ad me veniendo tanto labore vexemini. Et hoc pro certo ſciatis, quòd nec in his nec in alijs quàm diu coronam portabo, veſtram offendam gratiam nec diuinam dignitatem. Teſte T. cancellario noſtro, apud Notingham.

Sigiſb. Gembl.

Which William attempting the matter at Rome was, after that the king had repelled him, poiſoned vpon his returne into England, the king being after crowned in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred fiftie & fiue, by Theobald, in the ſeuenteenth yeare of the gouernment of his archbiſhoprike. About this time was Canturburie and Rocheſter almoſt all burnt with the church of Yorke. Theobald being now verie old died in the yere of our redemption one thouſand one hundred three ſcore and one, the foureteenth kalends of Maie, as ſaith Geruaſius, after that he had beene biſhop two and twentie yeares, and was buried in Chriſts church in Canturburie, after whoſe death the church was void one yeare one moneth and foureteene daies.

Thomas Becket. Ex archiuis. Roff. hiſt.

Houeden. Wal Couen. Roff. hiſto. Ioronal. hiſtor. Rog. de Ceſtr.

Matt. Paris. Florileg. Herebertus. Ioronal. hiſt.

Thomas Becket borne in London, the ſonne of Gilbert Becket, was taught and brought vp at Merton colledge, from which he went to Paris, was after a iuſtice of England, then in ſeruice with Theobald archbiſhop of Canturburie, after which he went into Italie to learn the ciuill law, who returning home, was made archdeacon of Canturburie by Theobald, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred fiftie and foure, maſter and ruler of Beuerleie, and parſon of Bromfield, of whom Mathew Parker thus writeth: Deuotus ſemper fuit diuo Albano à quo cepit primos redditus ſcilicet eccleſiā de Brampfeld. From whenſe he was aduanced to the chancellorſhip of England, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred fiftie and foure, who going to the court being a deacon, left off his clerklie apparell and attired himſelfe after the faſhion of ſuch as ſerued the prince. He was a good ſouldior both for the church and the kingdome, for the miter and for the crowne: he being the firſt Engliſhman after the conqueſt, which poſſeſſed that ſee, was made archbiſhop of Canturburie at Weſtminſter by the kings edict, and conſent of all the clergie, except as ſome ſaie, Thomas biſhop of London: but Geruaſ. ſaith, Mentiuntur planè qui dicunt Londonienſem electioni Thomæ archiepiſcopo reſtitiſſe, quia ſedes illa Londonij illis diebus vacauit & poſtea vſque ad natiuitatē Domini; in the yere of our redemption one thouſand one hundred three ſcore and two, in the ſeuenth yeare of Henrie the ſecond, and the ſecond of pope Alexander the third, about the fortith of his age as hath Geruaſius, and was made prieſt, (for he was before but a deacon) by Walter biſhop of Rocheſter on Whitſun eeue, and the next daie conſecrated biſhop of Canturburie by Henrie biſhop of Wincheſter, of whom in this treatiſe I will ſet downe the words of Geruaſius Dorobern: touching his death, leauing the reſt of his life for other place. Anno gratiæ 1170 Thomas in fine quidem anni martyrio coronatus eſt, dies enim natalis Domini erat in ſexta feria, ſancti Stephani in ſabato, ſancti Iohannis in die dominica, ſanctorum innocentium feria ſecunda; feria verò tertia ſanctus Thomas paſſus eſt dum monachi veſperas cantarent in choro, quod in anno ſequenti videlicet 1171, eſſe non potuit, &c. Qui aſſerit ſanctum Thomam martyrizatum anno 1170, annum incipit & terminat in Annuntiatione, qui autem dicit eum paſſum eſſe anno gratiæ 1171, annum præcedit alterius & anticipat trium menſium ſpatio. Of which Thomas Becket, and of all other the archbiſhops of Canturburie, which were chancellors of England, I will here in this booke ſpeake but little, referring the diſcourſe of all the reſt of their dooings to my large booke of the liues of the chancellors, where the liues of theſe archbiſhops ſhall be liberallie penned, and for this man at this time refer thee to the collections of the chancellors ſet downe in Holinſhed, pag. 1274.

Richard archbiſhop of Canturburie was choſen to that ſee in this order. One Robert abbat of Bec, elected archbiſhop, being deſirous to liue quietlie, and fearing troubles to follow, did willinglie refuſe that place. After which the king labored Odo the prior and the moonks of Canturburie, to chooſe a quiet man, and not ſuch a troubleſome perſon as Thomas Becket was counted to be. For which cauſe he named to them the biſhop of Baion, as hath Geruaſius. Whereunto the prior anſwered the king, that they would doo according to his requeſt, and therefore did chooſe this Richard a Benedictine moonke prior of the monaſterie of S. Martins of Douer, who by Henrie the ſecond was admitted to the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, whoſe conſecration when all things were prepared therefore, was withſtood by the yoong king Henrie, writing his letters to this effect to Odo prior of Canturburie.

The letters of yoong king Henrie to the prior of Canturburie.

HEnricus Dei gratia rex Angliæ, & dux Normanniæ, & comes Andegauiæ, regis Hērici filius, charo & fideli ſuo O. priori Cantuar. eccleſiæ, & vniuerſo conuentui ſalutem & dilectionem. Ex certa quorundam relatione reperimus, quòd in eccleſia veſtra, & etiam in prouincialibus eccleſijs, perſonas quaſdam minùs congruas pater meus inſtituere attemptet. Et quoniam abſque aſſenſu noſtro id nequaquam fieri debet, qui ratione regiæ vnctionis regnum & totius regni curam ſuſcepimus, ſuper hoc Romanam ſedem in multorum præſentiam appellauimus, & appellationem factam venerabilibus patribus noſtris, & amicis Albert. & Theod. cardinalibus apoſtolicæ ſedis legatis ſcripto & nuntio noſtro denuntiauimus, qui ſicut viri prudentes appellationi detulerunt. Hanc etiam ipſam appellationem fidelibus noſtris London. Exonienſ. & Wigorn. epiſcopis ſcripto noſtro denuntiauimus, & quemadmodum appellauimus iteratò ſub teſtimonio veſtro appellamus, &c.

Whereupon the biſhops being in ſome doubt what to doo, ſith moſt fauored the election of this Richard, and ſome fauored the appeale: yet at length he was at Auinion conſecrated by pope Alexander the third with theſe words; Tibi Richarde tuiſque ſucceſſoribus Cantuarienſis eccleſiæ, primatum ita plenè concedimus, ſicut à Lanfranco & Anſelmo, alijſque ipſorum prædeceſſoribus quondam Cant. epiſcop. fuiſſe poſſeſſum conſtat. A little after which, this archbiſhop returned into England with his pall and legantine power of the pope of Rome, ſwearing fealtie to the king, Saluo ordine ſuo This man would confirme the election of the biſhop at the will of the prior, without lawful inquiſition in the kings chamber. When he came to Gloceſter, in ſaint Oſwalds church (which was ſubiect to the biſhop of Yorke) the clerks of Roger then biſhop of Yorke would not be ſubiect vnto him: whereby diſſention aroſe betweene them. He kept a councell at Weſtminſter, in which, the ſame Roger biſhop of Yorke would not be preſent; but complained and renewed the quarell of bearing vp his croſſe in the prouince of Canturburie: further affirming, that the biſhops of Lincolne, Exceſter, Worceſter, and Hereford, ought to be at his obedience; as manie other archbiſhops before that time had made chalenge.

Gburnenſ. Radulphus de Diceto,

Mathew Paris in hiſt. minor.

Houeden.

In the fift yeare of his conſecration, he ordeined three archdeaconries in his dioceſſe of Canturburie, where before there was but one. Hugonius a legat comming into England called a councell at Weſtminſter, in which, about contention betweene the biſhop of Yorke and this Richard, for ſitting on the right ſide of the legat; the archbiſhop of Yorke was well beaten, his rochet torne, and he feigne to complaine to the king. Which being for that time turned to a ieſt, yet in the end, the matter was after compoſed and appeaſed betweene the two biſhops for fiue yeares. Whereupon, by oth they bound themſelues to ſtand to the arbitrement of the biſhops of France and of Rone. This man, after the death of king Henrie the ſonne (as ſaith Matthew Parker, though Geruaſius maketh king Henrie liuing much after, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred threeſcore and ſeuenteene, leauing the gouernement of his biſhoprike to Gilbert biſhop of London, did go ambaſſador for the king of England into Sicilie, with the kings daughter Ione, to be maried to William king of that Ile: who in returning, did in the ſame yeare depoſe William Watermill abbat of Peterborow, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred ſeauentie and ſix. After, in the yeare one thouſand one hundred ſeuentie and ſeuen, this Richard refuſing to conſecrate Roger before elected abbat of S. Auguſtines in Canturburie, bicauſe that Roger would not ſweare ſuch abſolute profeſſion of obedience to the archbiſhop, as the archbiſhop would haue inforced him vnto; this Roger went to Rome, made his church tributarie & feodarie to the pope, with whome he wrought all he could to bring the biſhop of Canturburie in his diſgrace. Which in the end he did ſo effectually, that the pope (to vſe Geruaſius Dorobernenſis words) did in Contumeliam archiepiſcopi, grant to the ſaid Roger epiſcopall iuriſdiction, with the miter, ſtaffe, and ring, enſignes belonging to a biſhoprike.

Florileg. Ex archiuis.

Geruaſius. Iorolanenſ.

Much about fiue yeares after, that is in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred eightie and two, as hath Geruaſius, Walter biſhop of Rocheſter died in the moneth of Iulie, in the fiue and thirtith yeare of his biſhoprike: who being buried, this archbiſhop did ſeize vpon his townes and poſſeſſions, with the church of Rocheſter, as of right he might doo during the vacancie of the ſee, and further accurſed all ſuch as did breake the ancient prerogatiue of the church of Canturburie, or diminiſh their dignitie. Notwithſtanding which Randolph Præfectus Angliæ, cheefe gouernour of England (being that man as I ſuppoſe which was called Ranulph Glanuile cheefe iuſtice of England, and liuing at this time) did reſiſt without the kings conſent. Wherfore the archbiſhop ſent letters to the king, being in the affaires beyond the ſeas, concerning the ſame, and receiued this anſwer, that he ſhould doo all things as he had beene accuſtomed, and at his pleaſure place a biſhop in the vacant ſee; wherevpon this archbiſhop appointed his clearke Walerane, archdeacon of Baion to the biſhoprike of Rocheſter. This biſhop after that he had gouerned ten yeares and eight moneths, riding from Wrotham, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred ſeauentie and foure, as hath Geruaſius Dorobernenſis (but he faileth in his account by the tranſcribers fault, for I thinke it ſhould be one thouſand one hundred eightie and foure) beſides Rocheſter, was in the waie ſtriken with ſuch an extreame cold and ſickneſſe of mind, that he could ſcarſe come to Hawling, where lieng downe vpon his bed vehementlie troubled with the collicke, he died in the night of the next daie, being the fourteenth kalends of March, whoſe bodie was caried to Canturburie, and honourablie buried in the chapell or oratorie of S. Marie. In the time of this archbiſhop, in the yeare one thouſand one hundred ſeuentie and ſeauen, was the church of Canturburie burnt;

Ex archiuis. Geruaſ. Doro.

and in the yeare one thouſand one hundred ſeuentie eight, was the church of Rocheſter with the whole citie conſumed with fire: beſides which, in the ſaid yeare 1177, were moonks brought into Waltham abbeie built by king Herald, and the ſecular preeſts expelled by king Henrie the ſecond.

Baldwine. Ex archiuis.

Baldwine, borne at Exceſter in Deuonſhire of an vnknowne father, being brought vp at learning, did keepe a ſchoole himſelfe. After which he was made an archleuit or archdeacon, being termed the light of the people, which office he voluntarilie forſaking, became a Charterhouſe moonke, from whenſe he became abbat of Ford in Deuonſhire, then biſhop of Worceſter, and laſtlie choſen archbiſhop of Canturburie. About whoſe election was no ſmall ſtirre, as well amongſt the laitie and cleargie of England, as amongſt the cleargie of Rome, the pope hauing before made void the election of the abbat of Bath, ſometime prior of Canturburie to that archbiſhoprike, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred eightie and foure, which contention of election continued about nine moneths. After which, the matter was declared vnto the pope, who ſent him the pall, and he was aduanced to the ſee of Canturburie, the foureteenth kalends of Iune, in the yeare of Chriſt ohe thouſand one hundred eightie and fiue, the one and thirtith of Henrie the ſecond. Betweene which archbiſhop and the moonks of Canturburie was much contention for the building of ſaint Stephans church in Hakington beſide Canturburie, wherof is large diſcourſe in the life of the ſaid Baldwine, written by Geruaſius Dorobernenſis, Matthew Parker, and by William Lambert eſquier (a rare antiquarie) in his perambulation of Kent.

Radulſ. Niger. Geruaſius.

After the death of Honorius prior of Canturburie (which made all the ſaid ſtirre, in withſtanding Baldwine for the church of S. Stephans, and appeling the biſhop at Gillingham to the popes audience in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred eightie and ſix, at what time the biſhop was taking his iourneie from Gillingham to Canturburie) Roger ſucceeded this Honorius in the ſame priorie, by the authoritie and fauor of the king, and of this archbiſhop, in the fourth yeare of his conſecration, who ſo hated the moonks of Canturburie, that in following time he draue them out of the monaſterie of the Trinitie, and by the kings authoritie placed ſecular clearkes therein. Of which matter Geruaſius maketh ſo long and large a diſcourſe, as almoſt halfe the firſt part of his hiſtorie is nothing but of the ſame biſhop (vſing his legantine & metropolitane power ouer all the parts of Wales, which neuer anie of his predeceſſors did before, as appeareth by Matthew Parker.) He did in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred eightie & eight, being about the foure and thirtith of king Henrie the ſecond, take his iorneie into thoſe parts, on whome attended Giraldus Cambrenſis that writ the hiſtorie of that voiage of Baldwine, and dedicated it to Stephan archbiſhop of Canturburie, beginning his booke with this note thereof. Anno ab incarnatione Domini 1188 apoſtolatus apicem regente Vrbano 3. imperante Romæ Alemmanorum rege Friderico, Conſtantinopolitano Iſiaco, regnante in Francia Philippo Lodouici filio, in Anglia Henrico 2. in Sicilia verò Willi. in Hungaria Bela, in Paleſtina Guidone, anno vz. quo Saladinus tam Aegyptiorum quàm Damaſcenorum princeps occulto Dei iudicio, ſed nunquam iniuſto, publico bello certamine potitus, Hieruſalorum regnum obtinuit, vir venerabilis, & tam literatura quàm religione Cantuariorum archipræſul Baldwinus in ſalutiferæ crucis obſequium ab Anglia in Walliam tendens, apud Herefordiæ fines Cambriam intrauit. In reciting of all which kings of Europe, and others, Giraldus hath forgotten the kings of Scots and Denmarke.

Ex annal. Gilb. Matth. Paris.

This Baldwine interdicted the prouinces of Iohn earle of Dorſet and Summerſet, ſonne to Henrie the ſecond, for the mariage of Iſabell the daughter of the earle of Gloceſter his kinſwoman in the third degree. Wherof earle Iohn complaining to Iohn the cardinall, latelie as legat arriued in England, appealed him to the pope, the cardinall confirming the ſame appeale, and vndooing the interdict. This archbiſhop went with king Richard the firſt Anno Dom. one thouſand one hundred ninetie and one to the warres of Hieruſalem, where he died at Acon, after that he had beene biſhop of Canturburie ſix yeares eleuen moneths and fiue daies. There he made his will, and gaue all he had to the ſoldiors, committing the ſame to be diſpoſed by Hubert biſhop of Saliſburie, which went thither with him alſo at the ſame time. After his death and honourable burieng, and in the kings abſence, the moonks of Canturburie in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred nintie and two, expelled Oſbert of Briſtow (whome king Richard by the counſell and helpe of Baldwine had made prior of the monaſterie of the trinitie of Canturburie a little before, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred ninetie and one) and railed againſt the ſaid archbiſhop Baldwine, calling him (bicauſe he was mild of nature) ſlouthfull and lukewarme, the ſame biſhop being alſo by pope Vrban reprehended by theſe words: Vrb. pp. ſeruus ſeruorum Dei, monacho feruentiſſimo, abbati callido, epiſcopo tepido, archiepiſcopo remiſſo, ex quo monachi affirmant quòd melior monachus ſimplex quàm abbas, melior abbas quàm epiſcopus, melior epiſcopus quàm archiepiſcopus fuerit. Touching whome in like ſort thus writeth Geruaſius Dorobernenſis, that his words ſemper erant quaſi ſimplicia, & ipſa pauca & ambigua

Reginald.

Reginald archbiſhop of Canturburie being therunto onelie choſen, was neuer inſtalled, nor receiued anie conſecration therefore, bicauſe he died ſhortlie after his election to that place, who yet deſerueth to be remembred, & that the rather bicauſe the moonks did chooſe him againſt the kings mind. In dooing whereof before his full election, there aroſe great and long ſtormes and troubles about the ſame. For the king, the cleargie, and the other nobilitie, were deſirous to haue one William de Monte regali to be choſen & aduanced to that place. But the moonks reiecting their petition, and following their owne mind, did elect this Reginald, who was the fourth biſhop of Bath & Wels, after the vniting of thoſe places into one biſhoprike. This Reginald borne in Lombardie, being about the foure & twentith yeare of his age, was by king Henrie the ſonne of Henrie the ſecond made biſhop of Bath (in the yeare of our redemption 1173, falling the nineteenth yeere of the ſame Henrie the ſecond) by the name of Reinalt fitz Ioſeline: he died fifteene daies after his election to the ſee of Canturburie (going from thenſe to Bath) at Dogmersfield in Hampſhire, whoſe bodie was on Chriſtmas daie caried to Bath, & there buried in the third yeare of Richard the firſt, being about the yeare of Chriſt 1191. At this time Hugh biſhop of Cheſter and Couentrie, put out the moonks of Couentrie, & brought in ſecular clearks: but after his death the moonks were reſtored to their old home.

Anony. M. S. Matth. Parker. Roff. hiſtor.

Hubert Walter.

Hubert Walter, or Walter Hubert, being borne in Weſterham in Northfolke, was brought vp vnder Reginald or Randulph Glandfield procurator or cheefe iuſtice of all England. This man hauing obteined the deanrie of Yorke, then the biſhoprike of Saliſburie, did after that go to Ieruſalem with Richard the ſecond, and was made archbiſhop of Canturburie about the yeare of Chriſt 1193, receiuing the pall from pope Celeſtine, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred ninetie & foure, being the fift yeare of the ranſomed king Richard the firſt, beſide which he was chancellor and cheefe iuſtice of England, and at London did conſecrate Herebert archdeacon of Canturburie biſhop of Saliſburie. This Hubert had charge, or was maiſter ouer the kings wards, by the kings eſpeciall grant. Who in the end, after that he had ſat ſeauenteene yeares, as hath the hiſtorie of Couentrie, comming to his mannor of Tenham, did there fall ſicke, and ſhortlie died within foure daies, being buried at Canturburie in the ſouth wall of the quier, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred and three, the ides of Iulie being the ſame yeare, falling in the ſeuenth yeare of king Iohn, after whoſe death it ſeemeth that ſee was void about two yeares.

Geruaſius. Houeden. Tho. Spor. Wil. Nouibur.

ng made biſhop an. 1193 and dieng an. 1203, he could then gouerne but ten years.

Stephan Langton. Math. Paris. Florilegus. Ge. Brichint. Ex archiuis.

Stephan Langton archbiſhop of Canturburie was choſen after this maner. The moonks of Canturburie did in the night chooſe one Reginald their ſubprior, and vnknowen to the king did inthronize the elect in all ſpeed, ſending him with their letters to the pope, taking an oth of him before his departure, that he ſhould not diſcouer his election to anie, or beare himſelfe as elected, without the licence of the moonks. But he as ſoone as he came into Flanders, forgetting himſelfe, opened the matter. Wherevpon the moonks came to the king, craued pardon, and aſked leaue to chooſe an other; whereto the king conſenting, did with manie faire ſpeeches mooue them to chooſe Iohn Greie biſhop of Norwich. Wherevnto when they had agreed, the king ſent for Greie then ſouereigne at Yorke about the kings affairs, & led him honorablie to Canturburie, where in the preſence of the king & the people he was pronounced in the metropolitane church to be rightlie and lawfullie choſen archbiſhop of Canturburie, and the moonks foorthwith did place him in the archbiſhops ſee. The knowledge of which inconſtancie of the moonks comming to pope Innocent, he commanded the moonks vnder the power of binding and looſing to chooſe a third perſon, which was called Stephan Langton borne in England, but bred vp in forren countries, & to make void both the former elections, which the moonks did accordinglie. Wherevpon the ſuffragans of the prouince of Canturburie, chalenging the election of their metropolitan, or at the leaſt to ioine with the moonks in chooſing of the archbiſhop, oppoſed themſelues againſt the moonks, which comming before the pope, he preſentlie gaue ſentence in behalfe of the moonks. With which ſecretlie againſt their willes the moonks at Rome (which were there to defend their cauſe againſt their biſhops) choſe Stephan Langton with ſecret murmuring, although onelie Elias de Branfield the moonke that then defended the cauſe of Iohn Greie would not by anie meanes aſſent therevnto, ſecretlie departing into England. By force of which election, Stephan Langton the fifteenth kalends of Iulie receued his conſecration of the pope at Viterbie; with whome the pope ſending the moonks backe againe into England wrote flattering letters vnto king Iohn, to appeaſe him for the reprobation of Iohn Greie and the election of Stephan Langton, whom the pope required the king to receiue with all courteſie. But the king ſtomaching the maner thereof, with the matter, and the man, baniſhed all the moonks which had beene at Rome, & expelled all the other moonks which remained at Canturburie out of their celles, whereof inſued great trouble to king Iohn and the kingdome, as in the Engliſh hiſtorie may more at large appeare. For the king reiecting this Langton brought vp in Paris, and chancellor of that vniuerſitie familiar with the French king & cardinall of Chryſogon, wrote vnto the pope about the ſaid Langton. Wherevpon Ioannes Florentinus legat of the pope came into England, onelie attended vpon with three horſſes, whereof the one was lame and led by hand; which legat afterwards keeping a councell at Reding, but dooing no good in the cauſe, did in haſt depart England, when he had filled his purſe with monie. Much about which time the friers minors came firſt into England, going barefoot, whoſe apparell was griſell garments girded with cords full of knots. After this, the pope ſeeing all things to go contrarie to that he had iudged, wrot againe to king Iohn to receiue Langton, further directing his bulles to William biſhop of London, Euſtace biſhop of Elie, and to Maugerius biſhop of Worceſter, that if they could not perſuade the king therevnto, that then they ſhould interdict the land: which they after did when the king would not agree therevnto. Which doone, they with Ioſeline biſhop of Bath, and Giles biſhop of Hereford fled the realme for their labor. Therewith the king more greeuouſlie mooued, ſeized all their lands and goods, and cauſed the moonks to flie out of the relme; by which act the people rebell, the nobles forſake the king, and the kingdome is wholie in an vprore. At length the pope himſelfe hearing thereof, did thunder an interdict againſt the king by name, and the biſhops of England, committing the diuulging thereof to the ſaid biſhops of London, Elie, and Worceſter, liuing then beyond the ſeas, who not willing to plaie that part, poſted the ſame ouer to certeine biſhops in England, which fearing the king, durſt not obeie the pope. Yet the land and king being interdicted, king Iohn ſubdued Wales, conquered Ireland, reduced the Scots to quiet, forbad anie cauſes to be caried to Rome, ſubdued his rebelles, lent the emperor a great ſumme of monie, & feared not Stephan Langton or the pope. Wherevpon Philip the French king was perſuaded to warre vpon king Iohn, which he denied, till he ſhould ſee no amendment in the king of England. At length Stephan Langton (finding ſuccor and helpe) came into England with his complices, and ſhewed that the king was remooued from his kingdome. For the auoiding wherof the king was by Pandulph the legat brought to vnequall conditions, and ſubmitted his kingdome to the pope for a thouſand marks (whereof the wiſer ſort haue made ſome queſtion) and receiued the crowne againe of Pandulph, wherby the realme was quieted, the pope ſatiſfied, the king freed, Langton reſtored, and the interdict releaſed. But after when Langton ſaw how theſe things were carried, he did greatlie lament and with deepe ſorrow greeue thereat, when he beheld king Iohn to giue vp his crowne and ſcepter to Pandulph. For comming to the altar, he could not withhold himſelfe, but openlie ſhewed how greatlie he was offended therewith; and therefore euer after became a louing father to his countrie, in ſuch ſort, that the firſt ſeuen yeares was a tragedie of the kingdome, and this time which followeth will be but a comedie of his gouernement in the ſee of Canturburie. For now contention falling betweene the king and his barons, the pope tooke the kings part, and Stephan Langton ioined with the barons. Wherevpon the pope (when he could not at the requeſt of the king bridle the barons) did excommunicat them as traitors to the king, which ſentence he committed to be publiſhed by Stephan Langton. But he going to the generall councell anſwered the biſhop of Wincheſter and Pandulph (the popes legat) that brought that excommunication, that he would firſt in perſon talke with the pope about it: wherupon they ſuſpended Langton from his biſhoprike, & excommunicated the barons from the church. For which cauſe Langton going to Rome, was there by the abbat

An. Dom. 1205 as ſome haue.

Chro. cœnobij Martini.

of Bellew, Thomas of Huntington, and Geffreie of Crawcomb knights, accuſed of that which he had done in England, how he had ſet the barons againſt the king, & would not execute the popes excommunication.

Matt. Paris.

With which Langton being ouercome, without anie excuſe craued to be abſolued from the former ſuſpenſion. Wherevnto the pope would not agree, but doubled the ſame, and ſent vnto the ſuffragans of Canturburie to denounce it ouer all England; yet in the end, by the wiſe carriage of himſelfe he was abſolued with this condition, that he ſhould ſtand to the popes iudgement touching the controuerſies betweene the king and the barons, & that he ſhould not returne into England before the ſame were ended. After this the king would againe haue remooued Langton from his ſee, which he could not doo, no not with the helpe of the pope, becauſe the cardinals did reſiſt it.

1216

During which troubles king Iohn departed this life; and Stephan Langton after his death held a councell at Oſneie, in which one was crucified and hanged that ſaid he was Chriſt, and two women were condemned, the one becauſe ſhe ſaid ſhe was the virgin Marie, and the other Marie Magdalen.

Aurea hiſtor. Matthew Paris.

This archbiſhop tranſlated the bodie of Thomas Becket from a marble toome, to a rich ſhrine decked with gold and ſiluer, whereto was a woonderfull concourſe of people, for all which this Langton found haie and horſemeat during the time of that ſolemnitie. At which time alſo in places of the citie, conduits and pipes of purpoſe made therefore, did abundantlie run with wine. The charge of which tranſlation could not be againe recouered by foure of the biſhops of Canturburie that followed. Before which time this Langton carried ſome of the relikes of this ſaint Thomas to Rome. This archbiſhop procured the cuſtomes of England called Magna charta to be made, to end all controuerſie betweene the king and the barons. When the realme was in quiet, he held a councell at Weſtminſter, in which he made a ſermon vpon this text: In Deo ſperauit cor meum, & refloruit caro mea. When he had ſo begun his ſermon, a certeine countrie man in the companie with a lowd voice ſaid; By Gods death thou lieſt, for neither thy hart truſted in God, neither dooth thy fleſh flouriſh or ſpring againe: which perſon being apprehended by the reſt of the companie, was plucked out of the church, and receiued worthie puniſhment therefore. A little before his death, he made his brother Simon archdeacon of Canturburie, whom the pope reiected, and would not admit to the biſhoprike of Yorke, wherevnto he was choſen. This Langton gouerned the ſee of Canturburie two and twentie yeares, and died at his manor of Slindon in Suſſex the ſeuenth ides of Iulie, being carried to Canturburie the daie before the nones of the ſame, and buried in ſaint Michaels chapell.

Others ſaie 21 yeares, and died as hath Triuet. an. 1228. being 12 Hen. the third.

He did write manie things learnedlie and eloquentlie, he diuided the bible into chapters as the church now vſeth it, he writ the life and hiſtorie of Richard the firſt. In the time of this man the burrow of Southworke with the church of ſaint Maries was burnt, the ſame fire going ouer London bridge as far as the Tower and the Vintree: of whom thus writeth Nicholas Triuet; Hic ſuper totam bibliam fecit poſtillas, & eam per capitula (quibus nunc vtuntur moderni) diſtinxit, qui dum Pariſijs in theologia regeret, factus eſt eccleſiæ Griſogoni presbyter cardinalis, deinde factus archiepiſcopus, inter alia bona quæ fecit, pulchram aulam quæ eſt in palatio Cantuariæ ædificauit.

Richard the great.

Richard ſurnamed the great came to the biſhoprike by this meanes. The moonks hauing leaue of king Henrie the third to chooſe an archbiſhop, did make choiſe of one Walter de Hemeſham or rather Eueſham, the third nones of Auguſt, whom they preſented to the king, which by the aduiſe of the clergie did ouerthrow the ſaid Walter ſo by the moonks elected and erected, becauſe he was defamed for manie things; wherevpon he runneth to Rome: but the kings ambaſſadors & the biſhops meſſengers, comming thither firſt, did preuent him. But before that theſe ambaſſadors, which were the biſhops of Cheſter and Couentrie, finding the pope and the cardinals ſomewhat vntoward towards the king of England, did in the end obteine of the pope (by miniſtring pecuniarie aid vnto him, and promiſing a tenth out of England, Wales, & Ireland, for the maintenance of his warres againſt Frederike the emperor) that he ſentenced the matter againſt the ſaid Walter, auoided his election, and reſerued to himſelfe the prouiſion and diſpoſing of the church of Canturburie. Wherevpon they (fearing that the pope would chooſe one at his owne pleaſure, as Innocent his predeceſſor had doone Stephan Langton) with all ſpeed obteined from king Henrie letters to the pope to confirme their promiſe, and that he ſhould promote Richard chancellor of Lincolne, a man famous for good life and learning, to the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie. Wherevnto the pope agréed, and writ to haue the ſaid Richard placed in the archbiſhops chaire: by reaſon of which precept, this Richard the great was conſecrated (without anie pall) at Canturburie by Henrie biſhop of Rocheſter, in the feaſt of the Trinitie, at what time the king was alſo preſent; and the ſaid Richard did then conſecrate the biſhops of London and Elie.

Ste. Brichin.

1229 as ſome haue.

This doone the pope ſendeth for the performance of the promiſe of the tenth of England, Wales, and Ireland: wherevnto the king (againſt his will, but in reſpect of his promiſe) ſeemed by ſilence to agree; but the barons flatlie denied the ſame, and the biſhops by procraſtination demanded three or foure daies reſpit to giue anſwer therevnto, who in the end for feare of the popes curſe conſented, whereby it was fullie paid by all men; except onlie Ranulph earle of Cheſter, who did reſiſt & would not ſuffer it to be paid in his prouince, whom yet the pope did not excommunicate.

This archbiſhop aſſembled a ſynod at Weſtminſter, where he made good lawes, and as he was by nature gentle, ſo was he ſeuere in defending the liberties of his church. For againſt Hubert of Borow (conſtable of Douer caſtle, cheefe iuſtice of England and earle of Kent, being in great fauour with Henrie the third, who alſo made Richard as ſome name him the ſonne of the ſaid Hubert knight) he thundered out excommunication, becauſe he could not find other remedie at the kings hand for the iniurie which the ſaid Hubert had doone againſt him, in deteining from the ſaid biſhop the caſtle of Tunbridge, the towne therof with the lands therto belonging, and the other poſſeſſions of the earle of Clare; which during the minoritie of the ſaid earle, did of right apperteine to the ſee of Canturburie.

Marth. Paris in hiſt. maiori & minori.

This was the firſt time, as ſome haue, that ſuch reuenge by waie of excommunication was taken vp and laid vpon thoſe which did withhold anie of the poſſeſſions of the clergie.

Thomas Becket did excommunicate before this ſuch as either infringed the churches liberties, or deteined anie of his poſſeſſions.

At length the archbiſhop goeth to Rome, hoping thereby to right his cauſe, againſt whom the king ſendeth Roger de Cantelew with other ambaſſadors to the pope, at what time the archbiſhop not onlie complained of Hubert, but alſo that the king had the ſuffragan of the ſaid archbiſhop to ſit in his excheker, and to heare ciuill and criminall cauſes.

Cantelupe.

Wherevpon the pope mooued with the dignitie of the archbiſhops calling, the reuerence of the mans perſonage, with his eloquence, wiſedome and learning gaue ſentence in behalfe of the ſaid Richard againſt the other, wherevpon they returned home vtterlie confuſed.

1231 as hath Triuet.

After which the biſhop being thrée daies on his iorneie towards England, and now extreme werie and full of paine, did end his daies in the towne of ſaint Gemma, with whom & by whoſe death there alſo died all that which was doone at Rome in the former matter. This archbiſhop did write in his life manie moſt learned bookes, which were De fide & legibus, De ſacramẽtis, De vniuerſo, &c.

Steph. Brichiuton.
S. Edmund.

Saint Edmund (which name I vſe for antiquitie and difference ſake) archbiſhop of Canturburie, commonlie called S. Edmund of Abington, after the place where he was borne, came to that biſhoprike in this order. The moonks had choſen Rafe Neuill biſhop of Chicheſter, being for his fidelitie in great fauour with K. Henrie the third, and his chancellor, whom they preſented vnto the king, well accepting thereof, and without delaie granting vnto him the adminiſtration of the temporalties of the archbiſhoprike. But the pope inquiring of Simon Langton (archdeacon of Canturburie brother vnto the archbiſhop of Canturburie, Stephan Langton) of the ſtate and behauiour of this elect Rafe Neuill: this Simon either an enimie to the king or him, or elſe to both, being led with hope to obteine the archbiſhoprike for himſelfe, did priuilie and ſubtillie perſuade the pope, that he was vnlearned, light of behauiour, vnconſtant, hot in ſpéech, a courtier, following a courtlie kind of life, and further, of ſo ſubtill and craftie wit, and alſo well beloued of the king, that he managed all the affaires of the king and kingdome: for which cauſe, if he were archbiſhop of Canturburie, he would with the conſent of the king and the people, find meanes, that England ſhould ſhake off the yoke of the pope and tribute to Rome, which king Iohn had confirmed to pope Innocent, being a thing which the pope had the more cauſe greatlie to feare; for that before this time, Stephan Langton (archbiſhop of Canturburie) had once appealed from the grant of that tribute, the forme of whoſe appeale he reduced into writing, being at this daie extant to be ſéene of all men.

Matth. Paris
Chron. maiori
& minori.
Florilegus.

Wherevpon the pope, moued by the words of Simon, did without cauſe ſhewed therefore, fruſtrat the election of Rafe Neuill (when the moonks came to Rome to haue the ſame confirmed) and granted power to the moonks to chooſe another; by reaſon whereof they elected Iohn their ſubprior, to whome in the end the king gaue full aſſent. But when the letters of his election were exhibited to the pope, this Iohn was deliuered to the cardinals to be examined of his doctrine, who thrée daies after informed the pope that they found not anie default in him. All which notwithſtanding, he was repelled, and his election voided by reaſon of his age, which was not ſufficient to weld ſo great a charge. Wherefore in reſpect thereof, the pope perſuaded him to remoue his election, which without delaie he did, obeieng the popes will, & with obteined licence departed into England.

Theſe two elections thus fruſtrat, the third time the moonks choſe Iohn Blund then ſtudieng in Oxford, whome the king alſo admitted, who had as good ſucceſſe at the popes hand as the others before had: for the pope did alſo reiect this man, becauſe that being familiar with Peter de Roches biſhop of Wincheſter, he had receiued two thouſand marks of him, which as it was ſuſpected he corrupted the moonks of Canturburie to make that election of him: and moreouer, that he kept two benefices appointed for cure of ſoules, againſt the order of the ancient councels. For which cauſe, the moonks of Canturburie that were preſent at Rome, were required by the pope, that they would by his voice now the fourth time chooſe Edmund, canon & treaſuror of the church of Saliſburie, a godlie and learned man, to be their archbiſhop of Canturburie, which yet they would not doo in haſt, as after ſhall appeare. Which Edmund being borne at Abington in Barkeſhire, had to his father one Edward, and to his mother Mabell, both of them ſurnamed the rich, becauſe they had at Abington ſo greatlie increſed their ſubſtance by merchandize: who procured this their ſonne to be trained in learning at Oxford, diſtant about fiue miles from Abington, where he increaſing in learning, gaue himſelfe to diuinitie, when he came to mans eſtate; and entring into the profeſſion of a clearke or ſpirituall man, he did vſe to preach in the adioining ſhires of Oxford, Gloceſter, and Worceſter. After this, he was made a canon of Saliſburie, about which time his father, with his wiues conſent, became a moonke in Eueſham. But although this Edmund were wiſe, learned, vertuous, & honored; yet would not the moonks at Rome vpon the popes conſent chooſe him, vnleſſe they might alſo haue the kings fauor therein, and the aſſent of the reſt of their moonks at home. Wherefore the pope did ſecretlie ſend the pall to this Edmund, ſith thoſe moonks durſt not openlie gaineſaie the election. But for what cauſe the pope ſo deſired it, we know not by the courſe of the hiſtories: for this Edmund was ſent, vnknowne, and a mére ſtranger vnto the pope. But be it as be maie, it is moſt true, that he receiued his conſecration at Canturburie by Roger, ſurnamed the Blacke biſhop of Lincolne, being in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred thirtie and foure, falling in part of the eightéenth & ninetéenth yeare of king Henrie the third; at what time he put on his pall at the maſſe time, which he did celebrat in the preſence of the king, thirtéene biſhops, and a great number of other people, who being thus inſtalled in the ſée of Canturburie, did firſt ſuccor the common-wealth, troubled with inteſtine & euill councell. For he perſuaded the king to remoue from him Peter biſhop of Wincheſter, and Peter de Riuallis ambitious perſons, and authors of ciuill diſcords; and himſelfe with the biſhops of Cheſter and Rocheſter went into Wales, and made peace betwéene the king of England, Leolin prince of Wales, and Richard earle Marſhall: whereof the two laſt had ioined their powers, and prepared wars againſt the firſt. Beſides which, he reſtored the earls of the kingdome which were fallen from the crowne, to the kings new fauour, and to their old honors: vpon which, the king commanded Peter de Roches to get him home to his biſhoprike of Wincheſter, and caſt Peter de Riuallis out of the court, threatning him, that if he did not take holie orders, that he would plucke foorth his eies with his owne hands: but this peace ſo by the biſhop made was after broken.

Ex archiuis.
Chron. ſancti
Albani.
Abbreuiat.
Rich. Ciceſt.
Polycratic.

Ex archiuis.

Matth. Paris
hiſt. maiori
& minori.

1239 as hath Ioannes Londen, 4. no. of April.

This archbiſhop held a ſynod at London, in the which were made thirtie and ſix prouinciall lawes. After this, there fell diſſention betwéene the king & this archbiſhop, becauſe he withſtood the mariage of Elenor (ſiſter to the king, and widow to William Marſhall earle of Penbroke, hauing as was ſaid, vowed chaſtitie) to Simon Montfort earle of Leiceſter: for which cauſe the king ſent ſecretlie to the pope to haue a legat come into England to bridle this archbiſhop, and ſuch as tooke his part. Wherupon the pope ſent one cardinall Otho hither into England, whome the king met at the ſea ſide, receiued with humilitie, bowing his head to the cardinals knée, and after brought him into the inner parts of the realme: which legat making his gaine here in England, beſtowed all the vacant ſpirituall liuings vpon that flocke which he had brought with him.

Matt. Par. calleth him Willelmum Mariſcallum comitem Gloceſtr. in Hibernia mortuum, which cannot be. For William Marſhall neither died in Ireland, nor was earle of Gloceſter: for it was Rich. Marſhall erle of Penbroke that died in Ireland.

him. Wherewith ſaint Edmund being moued, did reprehend the king, both for the comming of the legat, and the vexing of the realme, which the legat reuenged as a great iniurie doone vnto him. In the meane time, Simon Montford obteined a diſpenſation from the pope for the mariage, with a like diſpenſation for the vow that Elenor had made, and with commandement to Otho that he ſhould pronounce ſentence in behalfe of the mariage; all which he performed, and ſo the mariage was conſummat.

Verb. Matth. Paris in chro. maiori.

This Otho remaining ſtill in England, held a councell at London at the weſt end of Paules church, where the old contention for place of the right ſide of the legat was againe renewed by the biſhops of Canturburie & Yorke, who falling to extreame chiding, the legat to appeaſe the matter, ſhewing forth the popes bull, ſaid: Videtis hic depictum Chriſtum crucifixum, eique à dextris Paulum & à ſiniſtris Petrum aſtare, inter quos nunquam mota eſt de Chriſti dextris aut ſiniſtris occupandis contentio, etſi ambo ſunt in gloria æquali. Veruntamen propter Petri clauigeri dignitatem & apoſtolatus principatum, meritò à dextris crucis eius imago collocanda videtur. With which perſuading example the archbiſhops being pacified, the biſhop of Yorke tooke the left hand. About this time did this Edmund archbiſhop of Canturburie conſecrat Robert Groſted biſhop of Lincolne, of whom an eccleſiaſtike writeth thus: Sub hæc tempora Hugone Wellenſi epiſcopo Lincoln. mortuo, electus eſt à capitulo Robertus cognomento Groſted, id eſt caput craſſum, vir humili quidem ſtirpe ſatus, ſed virtute, prudētia, doctrináque inſigni. But this opinion of that writer, that he was but meanelie borne cannot be ſo, if that pedegrée be true (which for manie reaſons I am not lead to thinke ouer ſound, I ſpeake vnder correction of better antiquaries) which I haue ſéene of the ſaid Groſted, taken out (with the armes as hath béene moſt conſtantlie affirmed vnto me) of the old portaſſe of the ſaid Groſted; who being the yoonger brother of a ſecond houſe, and but meanelie mainteined, might occaſion others to write that he was borne of meane parentage; when in déed it appeareth by that pedegrée remaining within my cuſtodie at the writing of this ſame, that his right name was Robert Copleie, and ſurnamed Groſted of his great head. For this Robert is there made a yoonger ſonne of Rafe Copleie the kings ſeruant, yoonger ſonne of Thomas Copleie, ſonne of Adam Copleie, ſonne of Thomas Copleie, ſonne of Rafe Copleie, ſonne of Hugh Copleie, ſonne of Adam Copleie, which was ſlaine at the beſieging of Yorke, in the time of William the Conqueror. This Edmund the archbiſhop of Canturburie reiected Richard of Wendouer choſen by the voices of the moonks of that houſe to be biſhop of Rocheſter, and would not conſecrat or admit the ſaid Richard. Wherevpon the moonks appealed and went to Rome, whom this archbiſhop followed. At what time Otho the legat (ſuppoſing that he had now opportunitie to reuenge himſelfe of this Edmund, who had ſo much before withſtood him) did forbid the archbiſhop to take ſhipping, or to enter into that iournie: but he would not obeie the legat, becauſe the authoritie of the legat was taken awaie by the popes countermand.

Groſted biſhop of Lincolne of what deſcent he was.

Ioh. Lond. ſaith 1237 Edmundus archiepiſ. Cantuar. pro quibuſdam negotijs eccleſiam ſuam contingentibus Romam adiuit.

The biſhop now at Rome, not onelie complained of the moonks of Rocheſter, but alſo of the legat Otho, and of Henrie the third; but the pope reiecting all his ſpeeches, did iudiciallie confirme the election of Richard of Wendouer to the biſhorike of Rocheſter, which notwithſtanding this archbiſhop Edmund had pronounced to be void: for which ſentence being on their behalfe ſo pronounced on the feaſt of ſaint Cuthbert, that daie was made a double feaſt in the church of Rocheſter. This doone, the pope not yet ſatiſfied, did moreouer reuoke a ſentence giuen by this archbiſhop againſt Hugh earle of Arundell; for recompenſe of both which ſuppoſed wrongs, the one to Wendouer, the other to the earle, Edmund was appointed to paie one thouſand marks vnto either partie, wherevpon being ſo impoueriſhed, he returneth home with gréefe. But a new contention did receiue him at his comming home into England by the legat aforeſaid, which added further trouble vnto him. For whereas the moonks of Canturburie had choſen them a prior without his knowledge, this Edmund did excommunicat them; which the legat did releaſe, and confirmed the other election, which the ſaid Edmund did againe vndoo, puniſhed the ſtubburne moonks, and interdicted their church: for which cauſe ſith the archbiſhop ſhould ſéeme to haue the vpper hand, Otho the legat commeth to Canturburie, thinking to haue diſgraced the biſhop: but hearing the cauſe againe, he remooued the prior, chaſtened the moonks, bound ſome of them to perpetuall penance, and made ſome others of them to be tied to a ſtreicter kind of life.

Chron. Roff.

Hugh de Albinee.

After this, the archbiſhop granted eight hundred marks at the councell holden at Reading by legat Otho, to helpe the popes wars againſt the emperor, although he had manie times in manie councels ſtiflie gaineſaid the ſame. In the time alſo of whoſe gouernement, the church of Paules in London was dedicat vnder the name of the cathedrall church of ſaint Paule by Roger biſhop of London, in the preſence of the king, the noble men, and the biſhops: at the dooing whereof, the biſhop of London with the deane and chapter of that church, did make a ſolemne and ſumptuous feaſt. This thus ſpoken, it reſteth now to draw to ſome end of the dooings of this archbiſhop, whoſe actions be ſtretched longer than at the firſt I meant, & than this ſhort diſcourſe of the archbiſhops dooth require: but ſith I cannot leaue him ſo, I muſt now go forward otherwiſe than I would. You heard before that he complained to the pope againſt the king for manie euill things doone by him, whereof the chéefeſt was, that he ouerlong kept in his hands the void metropolitan, cathedrall, and conuentuall churches. For the reformation whereof, he obteined of the pope, that if the king did not in ſix wéeks prouide therefore, that the archbiſhop ſhould haue the preſentation: which decrée of the pope obteined by Edmund through great ſummes of monie, the king procured of the pope to be reuoked. In which matter Polydor in the ſixtéenth booke of his Engliſh hiſtorie hath falſlie deceiued manie, whileſt he ſaith, that ſaint Edmund obteined this grant (for preſentations to void ſpirituall liuings) of king Henrie himſelfe, and that the ſame was ſome while kept, vntill that the king finding the want of the gaine which grew thereby, did reuoke that which he had before granted. And to the intent it maie be ſéene that this is not falſlie fathered vpon Polydor, I will ſet downe his owne words. Huic malo (meaning the preſentations by the king to vacant ſpirituall liuings) Edmundus occurrendum iudicans; à rege impetrauit, vt huiuſce rei curandæ munus ſolus Cantuarienſis archiepiſcopus obiret, quo per hunc modum epiſcopatus atque cœnobia rectoribus orbata & melius gubernarentur, & citius dignis decernerentur præpoſitis. Verùm cùm aliquandiu ita ſeruatum eſſet, & Henricus animaduerteret non eſſe in rem ſuam quod paulo ante conceſſit, illud ſtatim reuocauit, & ſacerdotiorum vacantiū vectigalia quout antea fecerat capere rurſum cœpit.

It maie be that here grew the firſt ground that if patrons did not preſent to ſpirituall liuings within ſix wéeks, that the biſhops might preſent by lapſe.

In the end this Edmund thus croſſed with ſo manie miſhaps, and lamenting his countrie and church vexed with ſo manie euils, himſelfe to be ſo much ouerreached by the deceipts of others, and his metropolitane power to be reſtreined by the dooings of the couetous legat, he goeth to the king, rebuketh him therefore, in that he would permit theſe things in his owne realme, and with abundance of teares ſaith vnto him, that he ſhould neuer ſée his face. Wherfore being wearie of his life, and not minding to ſée thoſe things whereof he could not abide to heare; he voluntarilie baniſhed himſelfe from the realme & his fréends, who paſſing the ſea, came to Pontineacke in France, where dailie praieng for his countrie of England to be deliuered from ſubiection and thraldome, he there lead a ſorrowfull life for a certeine ſpace. At length, what by ſickeneſſe, and what by abſtinence, he fell into a conſumption, and then into a ſharpe feuer; after which being remooued for recouerie of his helth from Pontineacke to Soiſes, he ſurrendered his life to God the ſixtéenth kalends of December, after that he had gouerned the ſée of Canturburie about the ſpace of eight yéeres, or rather ſeuen yeares (as hath the hiſtorie of Couentrie) whoſe bowels being by the phyſicians taken out of his bodie, were buried at Soiſes, and his bodie at Pontineacke, after that honorable ſort that belongeth to an archbiſhop: after whoſe death the ſée of Canturburie was void thrée yeares and more. About ſix yeares after whoſe death, pope Innocent the third did canonize him a ſaint: and his bodie in the yeare following was tranſlated by Lodouike king of France, being thrée yeares after put into a new ſepulchre garniſhed with gold, ſiluer, and chriſtall. In this biſhops time was the ſiſterhood of ſaint Katharins beſide the Tower of London, builded by Elenor daughter of the earle of Prouance, and wife to king Henrie the third, which houſe is at this daie (Anno Domini 1586) ſtanding, and vnder the gouernment of Rafe Rokeſbie eſquire, maiſter of the requeſts, and maiſter of the ſaid houſe of ſaint Katharins. This archbiſhop Edmund (as hath Geſner out of Leland) had a brother called Robert le Rich, floriſhing in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and fortie, which wrote a booke of the life of this biſhop Edmund, and one other booke called Exegeſin in canonem diui Auguſtini.

Math. Paris. chroni. minor.

1241 As hath Ioh. Lond being as also ſaith the fiue and twentith yeare of Henrie the third.

1240 As the foure and twentith of Henrie the third.

Triuet. Polydor. Math. Paris. Florilegus. Polychro. Ioh. Lond. appointeth his canonization in the yeare 1246 and his tranſlation to the yeare of Chriſt 1248

Boniface the ſix and fortith archbiſhop after Matthew Parker, but the fiue and fortith after Polydor, quéene Elenors vncle, and the ſonne of Peter earle of Sauoie, was choſen by the moonks of Canturburie vnto that ſée, wholie againſt their minds, for they had rather haue reiected than receiued a ſtranger by birth, vnknowen for conditions, vnacquainted with the ſtate of their church, & ſo néere to the king by mariage. But the king taking the thing to be well and lawfullie doone by the moonks, ſent his election in parchment to the pope, vnder his ſeale, & the ſeales of the biſhops and abbats, as a thing doone by their generall & voluntarie conſent; though manie of them did the ſame for feare of the kings diſpleaſure. By meanes whereof Boniface (being noblie borne, tall of perſon, and indued with a certeine comlineſſe in his countenance, but in other reſpects far vnméet for the place) was conſecrated at Lions, where the pope then was; whereof ſome of the moonks aſhamed that they had choſen ſo vnméet a man, forſooke the church of Canturburie, and bound themſelues to perpetuall penance in the ſtreict order (as hath Matthew Parker) of the charterhouſe moonks. Theſe things thus doone, ſhortlie after Peter erle of Sauoie commeth vnto London, and built the Sauoie without Temple bar, calling it after the name of his honor, which houſe was afterward the dukes of Lancaſter Iohn of Gant, and in the end was by Henrie the ſeuenth moſt ſtatelie built vp, as it now ſtandeth, with places of releife for the poore.

Polyd. Angl. hiſt. lib. 16.

He was conſecrated (as hath Iohn of London in the yeare of Chriſt 1243 his comming into England was at Canturburie on all ſaints daie inſtalled in the preſence of the king, of the quéene, and of manie other of the nobilitie, in the yeare 1248

Theſe things thus doone, Robert Paſſelew (who was wholie emploied in augmenting and kéeping the kings treaſure, and for that cauſe deare vnto the king) was choſen biſhop of Chicheſter by the canons (of that cathedrall church) ſtudieng to pleaſe the king. The which election the archbiſhop Boniface tooke in euill part, who calling togither the biſhops of his prouince, did ſeriouſlie examine this Paſſelew by the biſhop of Lincolne, vpon certeine difficult queſtions proponed vnto him; but he either not well anſwering, or the archbiſhop Boniface not well liking his anſwer, this Robert was repelled, and one Richard Wiz or Witz ſubſtituted in his place without the kings knowledge. In which hurlie burlie Martine the popes procurator expecting the ſame commoditie, did by the power of his buls beſtow the benefit of the vacant liuings, which this Richard had forſaken, being aduanced to Chicheſter. But the king not ſuffering ſo great a reproch to be vſed towards him, did forbid this Richard Witz to enter into his baronie and ſecular poſſeſſions. Shortlie after which, this Boniface archbiſhop of Canturburie with the biſhops of Worceſter and Hereford (which were ſuſpected and hated of the Engliſh, in that they attributed ſo much to the pope) did go to Rome without the kings priuitie. The cauſe of whoſe going Boniface alledged to be the debt of fiftéene thouſand marks, wherewith his biſhoprike was charged, the greatneſſe of which debt could not be paid but by the popes helpe: but at his departure he made a great maſſe of monie of the Kentiſhmen, and eſpeciallie of woods which he ſold, with which he ſailed into France, and to the people called Allobrogi, to ſubdue a certeine knight which had ſtolne awaie the daughter and heire of Reimond earle of Prouance, to the intent for to haue maried hir. For whoſe ouerthrow a great ſumme of monie was heaped togither in England by this archbiſhop, although he ſéemed to haue obteined the ſame vnder the pretenſe to frée his church of Canturburie from the exceſſiue debts wherin it was left by his predeceſſors. At length this Boniface comming to the pope, required of him that he might reteine with the biſhoprike of Canturburie the biſhoprike of Valentia in Prouance, with manie other ſuch commodious and rich churches which he had gotten in that iorneie.

This man was vtterlie condemned of all the cleargie for vnſatiable extortions.

1245

About this time was a generall councell holden at Lions, wherevnto the king and the prelats of England were cited, in the ninth of March, with day giuen vnto them vntill the eight kalends of Iune. In which meane time, the king ſent to the pope one Laurence of S. Martins the kings chapleine, for the abſence of certeine prelats from that councell, and to complaine to the pope of the iniuries which the archbiſhop had doone vnto him. The firſt the pope granted, but in the ſecond he ſtood againſt the king with the archbiſhop. After this approcheth the daie of the councell at Lions, whither came the pope and the clergie; at whoſe firſt comming the popes conclaue or parlor (as ſome haue) or rather his whole houſe as others haue, was burnt: in the ſame, & as manie affirmed, was with fire conſumed that charter in which king Iohn did by force of the legat Pandulph ſubiect and make tributarie the kingdome of England to pope Innocent. This councell of Lions now ended, Bonifacius obteined the popes buls to all the clergie of his prouince to this effect: Vt ex illius prouinciæ beneficiorum vacantium vectigalibus ſeptennio proximo ad illud æs alienum diſſoluendum, quod in tranſlatione Thomæ quam Stephanus fecerat, Cantuarienſis eccleſia contraxerat, 10000 marcarum colligere poſſet, præter duo milia marcarum annuatim ei ab eccleſia Cantuarienſi ſoluendarum. Which when the king knew, he ſaid: What maruell is it if Boniface biſhop of Canturburie, whome I haue aduanced to ſo great dignitie, doo now procure from the court of Rome ſuch diſcommodities to my kingdome? But although the king did at the firſt a little reſiſt the grant, yet in the end he would neither trouble the pope nor the archbiſhop, but being ouercome with intreatie, yéelded vnto the ſame.

1246

1252 Boniface being now returned out of Prouance, viſited his dioceſſes and ſuffragans, in which there were great troubles betwéene him & Fulco biſhop of London, and betwéene him and the prior of great ſaint Bartholomews, manie blowes paſſing from one to another. Wherby the prior was ſore hurt, reſiſting the viſitation of the archbiſhop. Which dooings of thoſe his ſuffragans, occaſioned him to excommunicat all thoſe whomſoeuer, or by what name ſoeuer they were called, that attempted to hinder his enterpriſe; from which onelie the king, the quéene, erle Richard, the counteſſe and their children were exempted. But Ethelmer the elect of Wincheſter, the kings brother by the mothers ſide, did appeale from that ſentence, and in his dioceſſe declared the ſame to be void. With which Boniface being nothing diſmaied, did againe pronounce the ſame excommunication at Oxford, and began afreſh another viſitation, 1253 which was called the tumultuous viſitation; for comming to Lincolne, he would after the death of the biſhop, of his owne authoritie beſtow the vacant prebends & churches, and excommunicat all ſuch as withſtood him. Annal. eccleſ Auguſt. Cant. 1255 Againſt which Lupus archdeacon of Lincolne repined, and reſiſted him with an appellation vnto the pope, at what time this Boniface did not onelie excommunicat him, but did alſo purſue and afflict him in all that he might. Wherevpon this William not knowing in what place to hide himſelfe, went to Rome to the pope, who abſolued and defended him from Boniface, with hope of reſtitution of the right of his church. But he being ouerworne with thrée yéeres trauell in the ſame, in the end died in his iornie returning into England. The monks of Canturburie ſéeing the warlike & prieſtlie demeanor of this Boniface in his viſitation, obteined a bull from the pope, that he ſhould not viſit, ſuſpend, nor trouble their church. Which letters being brought to Boniface then being in the monaſterie of ſaint Albans, he hurled the ſame into the fire, burned them, and excommunicated the bringers thereof; who néeded not (as it ſéemeth) to feare anie thing whatſoeuer he did. For when complaints were made againſt him to the king and the pope, the firſt would doo nothing, becauſe he was his wiues vncle; and the other did beare with him, for the nobilitie of his birth, being in a countrie néere adioining vnto him.

After this, being againe troubled in England by his viſitations and other meanes, he goeth into Prouance, by wars and force to deliuer his brother Thomas ſometime earle of Sauoie, impriſoned by the citizens of Terwine: where neither profiting by his owne or the popes excommunication, he returned home fowlie diſgraced, after the prodigall expenſe of all his riches in that iornie. Much about this time king Henrie borrowed monie of the pope, & laid his kingdome to pledge: which raſh déed withdrew the harts of the people from the king, becauſe that the ſame bond was with trouble and charge after redéemed out of the popes hand. During theſe things, Boniface did dedicat the cathedrall church of 1256 Saliſburie on the feaſt of ſaint Michaell, and Hugh Balſham ſometime prior of Elie, and founder of ſaint Peters college in Cambridge, was conſecrated biſhop of Elie; and Magna Charta was eſtabliſhed for the liberties of England, the breach whereof cauſed the barons to rebell. Wherevpon Boniface departed the realme to his countrie of Sauoie, leauing Hugh Mortimer in his place, a man ſkilfull to gather monie. At this time pope Vrban did void the two elections of the couent of Wincheſter, and did at Rome conſecrat Iohn of Oxford chancellor of Yorke to the biſhoprike of that ſée, who had before paid 6000 marks to the pope, & as much to Iordan the popes chancellor before he was ſacred; all which notwithſtanding he by oth promiſed his ſubiection to Boniface biſhop of Canturburie. Boniface, after he had béene foure yéers beyond the ſea, returned to Canturburie; but before his comming thither obteined licence with condition of the barons, that he ſhould not raiſe any new turmoiles, or procure anie troubles in England. Who in his abſence out of the realme, commanded Walter Gifford choſen biſhop of Bath to be conſecrated by the biſhop of Paris, and Walter de Lauilla choſen biſhop of Saliſburie to be conſecrated by the biſhop next to that place being the biſhop of Wincheſter.

Annal. eccleſ. Cantuar. Ste. Brichint. de archiepiſc. Cantuar.

Now when the troubleſome eſtate of the common-wealth was paſſed, the king gaue his mind to compound the controuerſies which Bonifacius had ſowed in the church: wherefore thoſe bralles which he had with the biſhop of Rocheſter, with the biſhop and church of London, with the prior of great ſaint Bartholomews in London, with the churches of Lincolne, Saliſburie, and Canturburie, were extinguiſhed by the kings meanes. For by law the biſhop recouered the fées and ſeruices of the church of Rocheſter, in place of which ſeruices the ſaid church ſhould yearelie paie twelue marks; and moreouer, obteined all the right in the church of Lincolne during the vacancie of the ſée, except in eight churches in the citie of Lincolne, which were exempted and reſerued to the diſpoſition of the chapter. Which being doone, the archbiſhop agréed with Richard earle of Gloceſter for his knights ſeruices belonging to the church of Canturburie for the manors of Tunbridge, Braſted, Werlſtone, Horſmond, and Meleſton; and alſo for the earles order, place, and ſtipend at the inthronization of the archbiſhop. Beſides all which, being great matters to compaſſe, this Boniface deliuered his church from the full debt of 22000 marks laid vpon the ſame, by the immoderat expenſes of his predeceſſors, Stephan, Richard the great, and Edmund; and at length finiſhed the noble hall of the archbiſhops palace of Canturburie, begun by his predeceſſor Hubert, or (as Nicholas Triuet hath noted) by Stephan Langton.

Geruaſ. Dorob. in mappa mundi. Ste. Brichint.

After the diſpatch of theſe things, he celebrated a prouinciall ſynod at London by the commandement of pope Vrban; and becomming more holie towards his end, he went with the other biſhops to the king, requeſting him that being mindfull of the decaie of his kingdome, by eccleſiaſticall liuings beſtowed vpon ſtrangers, he would hereafter prefer learned and godlie men of his owne nation: to whom the king anſwered that he would willinglie doo it. Wherefore I thinke it méet that you which are a ſtranger and vnlearned, and alſo my brother Ethelmer biſhop of Wincheſter, whom I haue preferred to ſuch dignities onlie for kindreds ſake, ſhould firſt giue example to others, and forſake your churches, and I will prouide other learned men to ſerue in them. Which anſwer of the king ſo perſed this Boniface, that he alwaies after liued a weariſome life in England. Wherfore perceiuing himſelfe to be miſliked of the king and the people, he deſired to returne into his countrie. And therevpon firſt felling and ſelling the woods, letting out the archbiſhoprike, taking great fines of his tenants, and making a great maſſe of monie of the clergie of his prouince, he went with the curſe of all men vnto Sauoie, where, in the caſtle of S. Helens, after that he had gouerned the ſée ſix and twentie yeares, ſix moneths and ſixtéene daies from his conſecration, being 29 yeares from his firſt election, he died,

the 1270 The 54 yeare of Henrie the 3 which Iohn London referreth to the yere of Chriſt 1267.

the fifteenth kalends of Auguſt. Before which he founded & indued with lands an hoſpitall at Maidſtone in the honor of ſaint Peter and Paule, being commonlie called the hoſpitall of the new worke, which William Courtneie archbiſhop of Canturburie did after change into a college of ſecular prieſts. In the time of this biſhop, the palace of Weſtminſter was almoſt conſumed with fire. The citizens of Norwich in hatred of the moonks burnt their cathedrall church with the palace. There was ſo great dearth of vittels, that the parents in manie places were compelled to eat their children, and a buſhell of wheat was ſold for twelue and ſometime for ſixteene ſhillings. The prouiſion for the vniuerſitie of Oxford was about this time confirmed, of whom further in theſe words writeth Mat. Parker.

*Hic Bonifacius vt moribus geſtiſque peregrinus, ſic nomine ipſo & appellatione reliquis omnibus tam prioribus quàm eum ſequentibus archiepiſcopis diſsimilis fuit. Id quod Radulphus de Diceto eccleſiæ quondam Paulinæ London. decanus, vir in Anglicana hiſtoria peritiſsimus, qui ad Hubertum archiepiſcopum ſcribens, ex illa tam longa archiepiſcoporum Cantuarienſ. tot annis ducta ſerie, mirari ſe ait, ne duos vnquam vno eodémque nomine appellari. Quod quidem vſque ad Huberti tempora, vt ipſe annotauit verum fuit. Nos verò qui 70 archiepiſcoporum vitas in hoc opere deſcripſimus, multo magis mirari debemus, & animaduertendum eſſe duximus, præterquam quòd & hic Bonifacius, & quatuor poſt eum archiepiſcopi nominibus à cæteris diſtincti & diſcriminati furunt, ex illo toto 70 numero, ne mediam partem coniunctam archiepiſcopalem ſedē tot annis occupaſſe, quot hic noſter * ſeptuageſimus ſolus ad hunc annum 1572 tenuit.*

Math. Parker.

Robert de Kilwarbie.

1272 And the 56 of Henrie the third.

Robert de Kilwarbie was made archbiſhop of Canturburie: for a little before the death of king Henrie the third, the king licenced the moonks of Canturburie to chooſe William de Chillenden their ſubprior to be their archbiſhop. Who went to Rome to be ſacred by pope Gregorie the tenth: but at his cōming thither the pope compelled him to renounce his election, wherevpon the pope of his owne authoritie, without conſent of the moonks, pronounced Robert Kilwarbie to be biſhop of Canturburie through the fulneſſe of his authoritie. Which Robert being borne in England was brought vp at Paris, where receiuing the degrees belonging to the ſciences, came into England and was made a frior Minor, whereof in the end he became the prouinciall head, which office (as the popes collector) he poſſeſſed eleuen yeares. After the pope had thus made Kilwarbie archbiſhop, the moonks of Canturburie (leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to looſe their right in election becauſe the pope had appointed one againſt their wils) did alſo chooſe the ſaid Robert Kilwarbie, and ſent the ſaid William their ſubprior (renouncing his election) with the prior of Douer and the officiall of Canturburie, in the name of the whole couent of Canturburie, to ſalute the new elected biſhop. This Kilwarbie was conſecrated at Canturburie on a ſundaie in Lent, being the fourth kalends of March by William or rather Walter Gifford biſhop of Bath, becauſe the biſhop of London was ſicke. In the daie of whoſe conſecration the prior of Canturburie required of this Robert three thouſand marks; which the couent had ſpent in the election of William de Chillenden, ſith the pope promiſed to the ſaid William, that the next archbiſhop ſhould paie the ſame vnto the couent. The archbiſhop Robert mooued herewith, began to enquire of the conditions of the man, to the end to haue cauſe to remooue him: which the prior vnderſtanding, found meanes that the couent remitted thirteene hundred marks of the ſaid ſumme: which mooued the archbiſhop to ceaſe anie further to trouble him. His conſecration being ended he came to London, and with the nobilitie (at the new Temple) made Edward the firſt (then in Syria) king of England, appointing treaſurors and officers of the excheker to keepe the reuenues of the realme to the kings vſe. In the time of this Kilwarbie there was on ſaint Nicholas eeue an earthquake, thunder, lightning, a fierie dragon, a comet, and an extreame tempeſt, which feared all the Engliſh people. In which tempeſt the kings iuſtices, whileſt they went to their tribunall ſeats, at Weſtminſter were ſo feared, that they were inforced to ſtaie and ſit at the new croſſe, now called Charing croſſe; or rather in that place where now ſtandeth that ancient croſſe which was made manie yeares after this third yeare of king Edward the firſt. For the croſſe now ſtanding was made by the ſame Edward, as a remembrance of the death of his wife queene Elenor the daughter of Alphonſe king of Spaine (as were alſo the croſſes of Cheape, Waltham, Dunſtable, Stamford and Grantham) vnleſſe that there ſtood a ſtone croſſe, the which was after plucked downe by Edward the firſt, in whoſe place anew he built the now ſtanding croſſe. This archbiſhop did renew & ſhortlie conclude in fiue articles, all the old ſtatutes made by his predeceſſors, and now almoſt out of vſe, concerning the court of Canturburie kept in the Bow church of London. He compounded the contention betweene the moonks and citizens of Canturburie, he viſited all his prouince, in which viſitation by his metropolitan authoritie he viſited both the vniuerſities, and did ſubtilie at Oxford diſpute of diuinitie, philoſophie and logike: in which arts he did reprehend and refell manie opinions and ſentences of the Oxford men as not probable. Whoſe opinions John Peckham that followed him in the biſhoprike, did (in a ſynod of the clergie) condemne as vaine and fooliſh dotings of ſophiſters, being hereticall and varieng from the chriſtian faith. In this yeare by gathering a great ſum of the prouincials of the frier Minors, he built the faire monaſterie of the frier Minors, of an old tower of London ſet in the weſt part of the citie, the relikes of which weſt tower were before this granted by William the Norman to the biſhop of London, to build the chancell (of Paules church) deſtroied by fire. After which he was called to Rome by pope Nicholas the third, made cardinall of Hoſtia, & biſhop Portua, and procured by the pope to grant that another frier Minor of his order might ſucceed him at Canturburie. But ſhortlie after that he was come to Rome, and had receiued theſe dignities, he tooke a greeuous diſeaſe, whereof he died at Viterbo, where he was honorablie buried.

Ex archiuis.

Pet. de Ickham.
Walt. Giſborn.
Steph. Brichin.
Ex archiuis.

1275 In the third yeare of Edward the firſt.

1278 In the urt yeare of Edward the firſt.

John Peckham.

1279 In the ſeuenth yeare of Edward the firſt.

John Peckham in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred three ſcore and eighteene (when Kilwarbie left Canturburie, was conſecrated by the pope in the court of Rome, againſt the will of the moonks and conſent of the ſuffragans of the prouince of Canturburie) whereof neither were called to that conſecration: for the moonks had choſen Robert Burnell biſhop of Bath and the kings chancellor, whome the pope reiected. This Peckham being thus made archbiſhop, would be called by none other name than frier John, who was borne in Suſſex of obſcure parents, being of a child brought vp in the monaſterie of Lewes; after which, he ſtudied at Oxford, where he was made a frier Minor, atteining at length to be made prouinciall of the ſame order. Then he went to Paris to ſtudie diuinitie, from whenſe he went to Lions, where he was made a chanon: which place and dignitie, as a thing of right belonging to the church of Canturburie, the archbiſhop of that ſee did long inioie, and keepe in their hands, till the time of Henrie the fift. When this Peckham was at Lions, he ſtudied the ciuill

Vide in ſuo regiſtr. fol. 217.

1280 In the ninth yeare of Edward the firſt. Florilegus.

law, and greatlie increaſing therein, went to the vniuerſities of Italie, where he remained ſometime. At length he went to the court of Rome, in which he handled and pleaded the cauſes with ſuch ſkill, that he by the pope was preferred to be the hearer & iudge of the cauſes of the popes palace. This Peckham writing to the biſhop of Lincolne, dooth in his letters ſaie, that he publikelie read in Paris, in England, and in the court of Rome. He held a councell at Lambeth, during which councell, the archbiſhop of Yorke as he went to the king, would haue caried vp his croſſe in the prouince of Canturburie; but by the policie of Peckham, who had in all his prouince vnder paine of excommunication, commanded that none ſhould miniſter food to the archbiſhop of Yorke and his people, the croſſe was laid downe, or elſe they muſt haue ſtarued.

Florilegus.

1281 In the tenth yeare of Edward the firſt. Florilegus.

1282 In the eleuenth yeare of Edward the firſt.

Ex archiuis. Hiſt. Camb. Or the welſh hiſtorie. fo. 338. 339, and ſo to fol. 371.

Tho. Walſing.

Walt. Gesb. Petr. de Ickh.

In this councell, he did excommunicat all ſuch as would be exempted from his viſitation, amongſt whom (as ringleaders) were the abbats of Weſtminſter, ſaint Albons, ſaint Edmunds, and Waltham appealing long to the pope, with whom the reſt ioined; but not able to abide the archbiſhops authoritie and power, they left their appeale and ſubmitted themſelues vnto him: which councell being ended, he viſited all his prouince. He went into Wales, and at Snowden ſought to appeaſe the warres betweene Edward the firſt, and Leoline the prince of Wales: but when he could doo no good therein (ſith they were determined to die, rather than to be ſo hardlie dealt withall by the kings iuſtices and bailiffes, as they complained that they were) he returned into England, and did excommunicat them, as breakers of the kings peace. But before he went into Wales, fearing that he ſhould be there ſtaied by force, and not returne when he would, he appointed Robert Burnell biſhop of Bath, before repelled from the ſee of Canturburie, to be his vicar generall and diſpoſer of his prouince in his abſence: but in the end, the king ſubdued the Welſh, and the barons of that countrie came to his parlement at Northampton, where they ſware homage vnto him.

1283

Ex archiuis. fo. 242.

This parlement being doone, the archbiſhop did againe more diligentlie than before viſit his prouince; in which viſitation, determining for euer to baniſh all Iews: he wrot to the biſhop of Lincolne that he ſhould ouerthrow all their ſynagogs, which decree by the kings meanes was ſomewhat mitigated, & the Iewes were permitted to haue one temple in the publike place of the citie, in which they might celebrat their ceremonies: whereof a great number were taken from them. At this time, the archbiſhop reiected and would not confirme Richard Moore profeſſor of diuinitie, and choſen biſhoop of Wincheſter, and Iohn Kirkbie the kings chapleine, choſen to be biſhop of Lichfield, becauſe they had manie benefices. Wherupon they appealing to the pope, after the vaine ſpenſe of much monie, and long time thereabouts, were faine to leaue the matter, and againſt their wils to ſtand to the ſentence pronounced againſt them, in the behalfe of the archbiſhop Peckham. So that they being reiected from theſe biſhoprikes, one Iohn Pontiſar was in place of the one by the pope made biſhop of Wincheſter, which greuouſlie infeſted the moonks of that citie, and increaſed the liuings and rites of that biſhoprike with the ſpoiles of the ſame, as appeareth by the monuments of that church.

1284 In the twelfe yeare of Edward the firſt.

Ex archiuis.

In regiſt. fo. 45. fol. 114.

This Peckham was (as is prooued by this which followeth) a ſeuere puniſher of euils; for being no leſſe bitter to thoſe which were not reſident on their cures, than to ſuch as had manie cures; he by publike edict admoniſhed and compelled the biſhop of Lichfield (a ſtranger, and ignorant in the Engliſh toong, and therefore remaining out of his dioceſſe) that he ſhould (vnder paine of being diſplaced) returne to his biſhoprike there to be reſident: who comming to the archbiſhop to excuſe himſelfe, was ſharpelie rebuked, becauſe he might through his reſidence vpon his biſhoprike, feed the bodies of the poore with almes and liberalitie, although he could not feed the ſoules of his ſheepe with preaching and literature. When this Peckham came to the college of Woluerhampton in the dioceſſe of Lichfield, (whoſe patronage belonged to the church of Canturburie) to viſit the ſame, he was excluded and forbidden it by the chanons vpon their priuilege of exemption: but the archbiſhop depriued Iohn Theodoſius de Camilla (who proſecuted this cauſe at Rome) of two parſonages or rectories (which he had in England) for non reſidence: during the time that the ſaid Iohn was in theſe affaires at Rome. At this time, this archbiſhop did confeſſe in his letters written to the queene, that he had ſpent more than two thouſand marks on the reparing of the buildings in his manors, ſaieng beſides, expreſlie in the regiſter, that in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred foureſcore and foure, he did expend about three thouſand marks in neceſſarie buildings: who as he ſharpelie puniſhed the non reſidents, ſo he did with no leſſe ſeueritie puniſh adulterie.

1285 In the thirteenth yeare of Edward the firſt.

Ex archiuis.

1286 In the fourteenth yeare of Edward the firſt.

Ex archiuis fo. 142.

For whileſt he viſited the dioceſſe of Chicheſter, he there puniſhed Roger Ham a prieſt by one years penance to be performed vpon his oth, who ſpent that time in pilgrimages to Rome, to Cullen, & to Compoſtella, being depriued of all his ſpirituall reuenues, which the biſhop cauſed to be giuen to the vſe of the poore. In his viſitation alſo of his dioceſſe of Saliſburie it was found, that Oſborne Gifford knight had taken two nuns out of the monaſterie of Wilton, whome the archbiſhop did firſt excommunicat, and then releaſed vnder hard conditions. Firſt that he ſhould not all his life after enter into anie monaſterie of nuns, or vſe the companie of anie nun: then, that he being naked, ſhould be beaten with rods in the pariſh church of Wilton, & receiue the like publike puniſhment, both in the market, and the pariſh church of Shaftſburie, whereunto were added the faſt of manie moneths: beſides this, that he ſhould be diſgraded from the order of knighthood, and neuer after weare gilt ſpurs, ſword, armour, ſaddle, or gilt trapings: & moreouer, that he ſhould not weare anie coloured garments but onelie of ruſſet, furred with lambe or ſheepe ſkins, that he ſhould not weare anie ſhirt three yeers after his puniſhment, that he ſhould not returne to the order before he had paſſed three yeares in the Holieland; and eſpeciallie, that he ſhould procure the nuns to be ſent to the monaſterie to receiue the like puniſhment: all which, this Oſborne Gifford bound himſelfe by oth to performe, the biſhop of Saliſburie appointing him a forme of faſt therefore.

About this time there was a certeine contention betweene the biſhop of Lincolne and the vniuerſitie of Oxenford, touching the iuriſdiction of the biſhop ouer the ſcholers of the ſame vniuerſitie. Concerning which, thus writeth Matthew Parker: De qua (meaning that controuerſie) Iohannes Cantuar. cùm ſcholariū tum cauſam vacillare, nec iure ſtare poſſe intellexerat, ſcholaribus reſcripſit: Si in iure contenderent, vinci eos ac ſuperari neceſſe eſt, præſertim cum his quibus niterentur priuilegijs, à iuriſdictione epiſcopali iure communi ſtabilita eximi nequaquam potuiſſent. Wherupon in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred foureſcore and eight, the ſaid Iohn Peckham hauing ouerſeene Oxfordſhire, did in that viſitation alſo come vnto

Oxenford, and viſited the ſame by his metropolitane power: In qua viſitatione quaſdam philoſophicas opiniones, quas errores & à Roberto Kilwarby (his predeceſſor in the biſhoprike of Canturb.) antea reprehenſos docuit, & tanquam hæreſes & a fide chriſtiana abhorrentes e ſuggeſtu Latine refellit. Inter has vna erat, in homine eſſe tantummodo formam vnam, &c. Of which matter Matthew Parker maketh a great diſcourſe, declaring a contention betweene one Richard Knapwell doctor and frier preacher, one Hugh de Mancheſter prouinciall of that order, and this John Peckham archbiſhop, about thoſe queſtions, which being but frierlie wranglings, I let paſſe as needles to ſpend time, labor, and paper thereupon. This archbiſhop Peckham kept a councell of the biſhops, in which he made fiue ſeuerall lawes. In whoſe gouernement of the ſee of Canturburie hapned ſuch a cheape of corne, that wheat was ſold for three pence the buſhell: but ſhortlie after, by the ſpace of fortie yeares following, there was contrarilie ſuch a dearth, as a buſhell of wheat was ſold for two ſhillings. Now after that this man had beene archbiſhop thirteene yeares, perceiuing his end to draw neere, he made his will, and appointed Nicholas of Knouile or Knowle, perſon of Maidſtone, and Simon de Greile, to be his executors. These men after the death of Walter Reinolds, in the vacancie of the archbiſhoprike, being called to account for the goods of the teſtator, by the prior of Canturburie, the ſame was at that time Ex inuentario præter legata in ſpecie relicta, to haue exceeded fiue thouſand three hundred and fiue pounds, ſeuenteene ſhillings, and two pence, quad: of Engliſh monie, notwithſtanding his great gifts vnto the cardinals, and ſeuen hundred threeſcore and ten marks to be diſtributed to the poore inhabiting in his manors, and the liberall aduancement of manie of his kinred, ſome being knights, and ſome being gentlemen, wherof their poſterities at this daie remaine in my ſweet countrie of Kent, and in other ſhires of England. This archbiſhop, after that he had poſſeſſed the ſee of Canturburie (as before I ſaid) thirteene yeares, foure and twentie weeks, and two daies, departed this life in Januarie, and was buried in Chriſts church of Canturburie.

1290
In the nineteenth yeare of Edward the firſt.

Sapientia eius ante obitum ſuum fuit totaliter deuorata & ſine planctu monachorum moritur.
Verba Chro. Roff.

Robert Winchelſeie, when he was yet a child, was brought vp at Canturburie in the rudiments of grammar, being of ſo faire complexion, of ſo good wit, and of ſo mild diſpoſition, that in his childhood it was a common propheſie, to ſaie that he ſhould be biſhop of Canturburie. After his childiſh yeares thus ſpent at ſchoole, he went to Paris, where he was made maiſter of arts, and then applied himſelfe to diuinitie eight yeares, after which, by vniuerſall conſent he was made ruler of the vniuerſitie of Paris. Then comming into England, vpon proofe of his learning at Oxford, he receiued the degree of a doctor, and at length by generall voice was aduanced to be chancellor of that vniuerſitie; to which offices in following time, was alſo added the archdeaconrie of Eſſex, and a prebendariſhip in Paules church of London. This Winchelſie not yet ſatiſfied, he was in the end by the aſſent of all men, made archbiſhop of Canturburie (as ſome haue) in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fourеſcore and twelue, who going to Rome to be conſecrated, was there had in ſuch great admiration for his learning and vertuous conditions, as the pope would then haue made him a cardinall, and ſtill reteined him vnder his protection. But he alleging neceſſarie cauſes to remaine in England, had leaue to depart after his conſecration. In the meane time, king Edward the firſt demanded of the cleargie of Weſtminſter a great maſſe of monie towards the charges of the war: the biſhops demand a daie for anſwere, which was giuen vnto them, being but a verie ſhort time. During which time William Montfort, deane of Paules, being in perfect health, and comming to the king to intreat for mitigation of ſo great a ſumme as he demanded of the clergie; and beginning his tale before the king, did there ſuddenlie fall downe dead. But the king nothing troubled therwith, at the daie appointed, ſent John de Hauering knight to the prelats aſſembled at Weſtminſter, who with a lowd voice ſaid; If any man will gainſaie the kings demand, let him come forth, that being knowne he maie be iudged guiltie, as a diſturber of the kings peace. Wherewith the prelats being aſtonied, did in the end condeſcend to the kings requeſt, the ſame grant being after great cauſe of diſſention betweene the king and the clergie. About which time Winchelſie returning from Rome into England, went to the king into Wales, then occupied in the wars of thoſe countries; where, after his fealtie made to the king for his temporalties, he did excommunicat Madocke Leoline that raiſed this war againſt the king: which ſentence he commanded to be declared throughout all the parts of Wales. At length the ſame tumult being pacified, the archbiſhop returned home, and held a ſynod at London. The ſynod ended (in the fift of Nouember, in the preſence of this archbiſhop, ſitting in Bow church) he cauſing the lawes to be read openlie, which he had made for the iudges and officers of the court of the arches: which doone, he came to Canturburie, and there was inthronized, conſecrating on the ſame daie John of Monmouth profeſſor of diuinitie biſhop of Landaffe in Wales. Theſe things thus paſſing, Edward the firſt being in the wars of the low countrie, did (when Roger biſhop of Couentrie and Lichfield was dead) procure one Walter of Langton to be choſen biſhop, who was conſecrated at the kings requeſt beyond the ſeas, by the cardinall of Alba, ſauing all rights belonging to the biſhoprike of Canturburie. The king after the ſubduing of his enimies, demanded reliefe of the clergie, but they denied it, for that they could not grant anie thing to the king without the popes conſent. For which this biſhop with the reſt, ſtanding in contention with the king, he put him and them wholie out of his protection: wherevpon the clergie well conſidering of the ſame, ſubmitted themſelues, and choſe the archbiſhop of Yorke, the biſhops of Durham, Elie, and Sariſburie, with others, to deale in thoſe affaires, to whome they committed power to ſeeke remedie, both to ſatiſfie the pope, and the king: who therevpon conſulting togither, agreed to laie downe in the church the fift part of the eccleſiaſticall goods, for the vrgent & neceſſarie defenſe of the church of England. But this archbiſhop vtterlie miſliking the ſame, would not anie waie change his mind; for which cauſe being turned out of his houſe, no man would ſcarſe giue him lodging: but he not eſteeming thereof, vſed this proteſtation, that he would doo nothing the more for that; further affirming that all they were excommunicat which gaue anie thing againſt the popes will and authoritie. For which cauſe the biſhops vncerteine what to doo in this extremitie, for doubt of both ſwords, brake off their councell, and that the rather, becauſe that this archbiſhop Robert departing from the ſame councell, admoniſhed euerie man to looke to his owne ſoule.

Robert Winchelſeie.
Steph. Brichinton.

Walſingh.

Floril.
Walſingh.
1294
In the two & twentith yeare of Edward the firſt.

Steph. Brich.

Florileg.

1295
In the three and twentith yeare of Edward the firſt.
Walſingh.
Florileg.

Ex archiuis.

Florileg.

Chron. ſancti Albani.
W. Thorne.

At length yet in the end, the clergie going to the king, offered him ſometime the fourth part, and ſometime the fift part of their goods, thereby hoping to receiue their temporalties, and to be againe vnder his protection. At what time the king (for that preſent, by reaſon of haſt of warres in France, thinking it good to diſſemble the dealing of the archbiſhop

Walter Giſb.
1296
In the foure and twentith yeare of Edward the firſt.

biſhop) did in a parlement at Weſtminſter receiue the archbiſhop into fauor, and reſtored to him all that he had taken from him. Wherupon the king taking with him this Robert Winchelſeie, his ſonne prince Edward, & the erle of Warwike, came into Weſtminſter hall, where he commanded the people to aſſemble, to the end to make a full pacification with them before his departure into France.

Walſing. Florilegus.

Before whome the king made a lamentable ſpeech, and excuſed himſelfe of the taxes laid on his people, as a thing whereunto he was inforced by the neceſſitie of the warres; promiſing to repaie all ſuch ſummes, if he returned in ſafetie from the preſent warres: and if he did not ſee England againe, he erneſtlie deſired them, that they would then crowne his ſonne Edward in his fathers ſeat. With which words the archbiſhop pitifullie weeping did ſo pacifie the minds of the people, that they with one voice both held vp their hands, and promiſed their faith vnto the king to performe all his demands. But the earles and barons which were to go with him into Flanders, refuſed the ſame, vnleſſe the king would confirme Magna Charta, & Charta de forreſta, both which the king vnwillinglie granted to performe.

1305
1306
In the one & twentith and foure & twentith yeare of Edward the firſt.

Shortlie after this archbiſhop was accuſed by the king of treaſon, in aiding & counſelling ſuch as rebelled againſt him, whileſt he was in the warres of Scotland, amongſt whome was the earle Marſhall, who for ſatiſfaction thereof made the king his heire. This treaſon did the biſhop confeſſe, and on his knees craued pardon therfore; but the king remitting the matter to the pope, the archbiſhop was by the pope ſuſpended from his office, and then baniſhed England: but after by Edward the ſecond, comming to his crowne, reſtored, in the firſt yeare of his reigne, with all the commodities which were withheld from him during the time of his baniſhment, being ſo great a ſumme to him, that his calamitie was by that meanes vnto him great commoditie.

1307
1308

For thereby he became the richeſt archbiſhop of all his predeceſſors, for which cauſe he would with this ſaieng comfort himſelfe in his baniſhment, accompanied with other greefes:

Nihil nocebit aduerſitas vbi nulla iniquitas dominatur.

1309
Adam. Merim.
Walſing.

But as he at this time ſeemeth to be in all proſperitie by reaſon of this exceeding wealth: ſo yet now and not before came the cauſe of this archbiſhops greefe and moorning, in that king Edward the ſecond, againſt the minds of all men, did recall into England Piers de Gaueſtone the Gaſcoine, which hated all the cleargie and nobilitie, and was baniſhed into Ireland by king Edward the firſt. For this Piers at his comming to the king, impriſoned Walter the biſhop of Couentrie by the kings commandement. Wherevpon the archbiſhop would not in the parlement ſuffer anie thing to be doone by the cleargie of his prouince, vntill the biſhop of Couentrie were deliuered out of priſon. After this (the king being offended with the archbiſhop) he kept a prouinciall councell in London, in which the order of the knights of the Temple were deſtroied.

1310
The fourth of Edward the ſecond.

In which yeare alſo Henrie king of Almaine being created emperor, receiued three crownes in this order: one of ſiluer at Aquiſgrane, an other of iron at Millane, and the third of gold at Rome.

Memoriale hiſtoriarum.

Adam. Meri.

Beſides which in the ſame yeare this archbiſhop required of the king to haue ſir John Heron knight (priſoner in the Tower of London, for the murther of Robert Grace) to be iudged in the ſpirituall court as a clearke, whereunto the king did giue conſent. After which the ſaid knight being receiued by the deputie of the biſhop of London, to purge the ſuſpicion of the ſaid murther, was quitted thereof by the ſentence of that biſhop: but vpon further examination, that act was reuoked by this archbiſhop, the ſentence made void, he found guiltie of the murther, and inioined to doo penance therefore.

1311
The ſixt of Edward the ſecond.

About the yeare following, there was contention betweene the couent and prior of Lewes, and the biſhop of Norwich in the kings court (concerning the right of a patronage) by the ſpace of ſeuen years, which at length obteined this end. The prior and the couent did preſent one Reginald Bedaling to the pariſh church of Feurell, whome the biſhop did pronounce to be vnmeet therefore, and would not admit him. Wherevpon grew a ſute at the common law, and the biſhop pleaded that he could not admit a man vnmeet for that place: which anſwer cauſed the kings iudges to write vnto this archbiſhop, to certifie them of the validitie or vnworthineſſe of the clearke. Wherevpon the archbiſhop approoued the biſhop of Norwichs fact, in writing thus to the iudges: Inuenimus quòd R. B. in breui mentionatus, eſt inhabilis ad omne beneficium eccleſiaſticum. Which returne cauſed the iudges to giue ſentence againſt the prior. This archbiſhop was ſo ſeuere in executing his archiepiſcopall iuriſdiction, that he would not ſpare anie of the nobilitie, for he baniſhed John earle Warren (vpon his oth) from the companie and preſence of an harlot (which he kept openlie in his houſe) after that he had raſhlie turned awaie his wife: and when he perceiued that the ſame would not helpe, he by publike edict cited the earle and the children gotten in that adulterie to a ſynod, where the earle was againe interdicted, as well for periurie and for adulterie, as for ouermuch vnlawfull familiaritie with that ſtrumpet.

Walſingham.
Merimouth.

And as he was to ſome ſeuere in reſpect of vice, ſo to his prince he bare as faithfull dutie: for he deerelie in the beginning loued Edward the ſecond, from whome by parlement he remooued the Spenſers, and ſuch other euill flatterers as were about him, procuring them to be baniſhed; being moreouer a rare man, & of great almes. Wherfore I will ſet downe the words of that reuerend father and worthie antiquarie Matthew Parker touching him, for the example of the cleargie proportionablie as their liuings now will beare, to be ſo great almeſmen as he was. Thus therefore archbiſhop Parker writeth of this Robert Winchelſeie.

Memorial. hiſt.
Step. Brichin.

Vitia, quæ in hoc archiepiſcopo deprehenſa ſunt, non tam hominis quàm temporis propria fuerunt. Nam pro eccleſiæ libertatibus cum papa, & pro regni iuribus cum baronibus aduerſus regē fuit, in quarū vtraque cauſa Salamonis dictum verum expertus eſt; Indignationem principis morti comparandam eſſe. Beneficia eccleſiaſtica nunquam niſi doctis contulit, precibus atque gratia nobilium fretos & ambientes ſemper repulit, iuuenibus literarum ſtudioſis ad academias miſſis annua alimēta decreuit, in eleemoſynis & largitione quotidiana omnes ante ſe & ſequentes archiepiſcopos anteire dicendus eſt, pauperibus oſtiatim mendicantibus præter quotidianas ex fragmentis largitiones, quolibet die dominico & feria quinta pro eleemoſyna habēda ad loca vbi degebat venientibus panes frumentarios quadrante valentes dari præcepit. Horum panum numerus tempore caritatis annonæ quatuor, tempore copiæ trium millium fuit, his in illis feſtis ſolennioribus 150 denarios, totidem pauperibus in pecunijs numerandos addidit. Infirmis præterea ſenióue confectis, puerperis, & eiuſmodi egenis prodire ad eleemoſynas petendas non valentibus, mitti ſingulos panes cum modica carnium aut piſcium iuxta diei varietatem quantitate iuſſit. Subleuabat inſuper eos qui à ſecunda fortuna caſu ad inopiam detruſi, quoſque pudor a mēdicitate prohibebat, quibus & veſtes & pecunias miſit.

miſit. In menſa fuit inter cōuiuas, lætus, affabilis, iucundus. Detrectatores, adulatores, & ſcurras à ſua hilaritate & epulis ſeiunxit; à quibus & à cōſortio cū in ſecretiora & interiora loca ſe abduxiſſet, precibus primùm deinde ſtudijs incubuit.

1313 In the firſt yeare of Edward the ſecond. Steph. Brichin.

Archiui.

After that this biſhop was (as is before ſaid) returned out of exile, he liued by the ſpace of ſix yeares in great fauor with king Edward the ſecond, who (when he perceiued that the king had againe admitted the Spenſers hated of all men, and that he reiected the companie of good men) fell into a great ſickneſſe, and ended his daies at Otford (after that he had béene biſhop much about ninetéene yeares) the fift ides of Maie, from whenſe he was conueied to Canturburie, and buried néere vnto the altar of S. Gregorie at the ſouth wall, whoſe toome was caſt downe becauſe the people did frequent thereunto, and worſhip him as a ſaint: who at his death gaue the librarie with the veſtments and other few goods of his (which were left) to the church of Canturburie.

Walter Reinolds.

1313 In the firſt yeare of Edward the ſecond. Ex archiuis. Walſingham. Adam Merim.

Walter Reinolds, chapleine to Edward the firſt, parſon of Wimberton, treaſuror and chancellor of England, was made archbiſhop of Canturburie by the popes appointment, and that worthie perſon Thomas Cobham prebendarie of Yorke, and deane of Saliſburie, elected by the moonks of Canturburie was reiected; of the time of whoſe death finding no mention in Matthew Parker, I will ſet downe what is to be ſéene in his epitaph, written in the wall of the north ſide of the quier of the church of Canturburie, where he is buried, being couered with the image of a biſhop carued out of marble ſtone, which writing is this: Hic iacet Walterus Reinold prius epiſcopus Wigornienſis & Angliæ cancellarius, tandem archiepiſcopus iſtius eccleſiæ, qui obijt 16 die menſis Nouembris, anno Gratiæ 1317, cuius animæ propitietur Deus.

Simon Mepham.

Archiui ex proceſſu elect. Sim. Mepham.

Simon Mepham, archbiſhop of Canturburie, touching whoſe election we muſt ſaie thus much. After the death of Walter Reinold, the archiepiſcopall authoritie and chéefe gouernment of eccleſiaſticall things remained with the prior and couent of Canturburie, who committed all the iuriſdiction ouer the prouince of Canturburie, to their fellow-moonke Gefferie de Eton. About the dooing whereof there was much contention betwéene them and the biſhop of London; but in the end, as I gather by the proceſſe thereof, the moonks obteined the better hand or at the leaſt loſt nothing in the cauſe. At which time one Henrie, prior of Canturburie, Vir (as ſaith Matthew Parker) vt exiſtimari conuenit, minùs rerū vſu quàm ſuo iure prudens, did in the vacancie of the biſhoprike adminiſter all the iuriſdiction whatſoeuer belonging to the ſaid church, except the conſecration of biſhops. Which when he could not doo with his authoritie, he ſent to the biſhop of London, and inioined him, that he with the ſuffragans aſſembled at a certeine daie at Canturburie, ſhould conſecrate the elect biſhops of Meneuia and Bangor, whome he had confirmed by his authoritie, and to whom he had giuen his letter ſealep with the couent ſeale, in witneſſe and truth of that their conſecration.

1320 In the 14 of Edward the ſecond.

The authoritie of the couent thus acknowledged in the vacancie of the church of Canturburie, they writ letters to the king to demand licence to chooſe a new biſhop; which obteined, they elected to their father, and to the honor of a patriarch, Simon Mepham borne in Kent, profeſſor of diuinitie, chanon of Chicheſter, prebendarie of the church of Landaffe, and parſon of Tunſtall, a man in that age knowen to be ſingularlie learned, according to the doctrine then profeſſed: whoſe election being by the king approoued, Henrie the prior of Canturburie ſent meſſengers vnto Auinion, where the pope remained, to haue the ſame confirmed, at what time the pope conſecrated the ſaid Simon at Auinion; which being obteined, he preſentlie returned home: and firſt of all by his charter (which I haue ſéene, and Matthew Parker hath ſet downe) appointed Richard de Solburie his procurator to receiue the commodities of his prebend in the church of Lions, and to beſtow all néedfull charges vpon his manor of Quincracke in the dioces of Lions in France. After this he crowned Philip wife to Edward the third, then he kept a councell at London: In quo iura quædam vt à ſeruilibus operibus in diebus paraſceues animarum, & conceptionis ceſſaretur, & de iuriſdictione & bannorum matrimonialium editione condidit. Inter quæ Oxonienſe illud de appellationibus à definitiuis tantùm ſententijs interponendis decretum tanquam iniquum ſuſtulit. Beſides which, in this councell, by the conſent of the clergie, all they were excommunicated which killed Walter Stapleton biſhop of Exceſter and treſuror of England, or but once conſented to his Death. Which Polydor dooth moſt vnſkilfullie attribute to Iohn Stratford the next archbiſhop, whileſt alſo forgetting himſelfe, he maketh this Simon Mepham to be a perſon ouer merie and pleſant, as hath Matthew Parker. Theſe things thus doone, Roger biſhop of Saliſburie, and Iohn biſhop of Bath died. Whereupon the pope created Iohn de Wimble, a man both vnlearned and vncomlie, biſhop of Sarum, by pretext of his power of prouiſion for biſhopriks. But Simon the archbiſhop had confirmed & conſecrated Rafe de Scrobſburie or Shrewſburie choſen biſhop of Bath, before the pope had intelligence of the vacancie of that church, which Rafe being cited to Rome, and vexed with long delaies, at length returned home with full confirmation from the holie father. At length contention falling betwéene this archbiſhop and the moonks of Canturburie about a viſitation, the moonks appealed to the pope, who ſending Letherius de Concreto by the name of a nuncio or meſſenger (for before all legats were vtterlie forbidden to come into England) to determine this cauſe, he gaue ſentence againſt the biſhop, & condemned him in ſeauen hundred pounds. Whereupon the archbiſhop being conuicted, did more fooliſhlie attempt greater things, & being foiled by the weaker, would néeds contend with the ſtronger. For determining to viſit the prouince of Canturburie after the manner of his predeceſſors, there was a parlement called by the king; in the beginning of which, his viſitation being begun, there was a councell of the clergie celebrated at London vnder the archbiſhop, from which councell they departed, deſpiſing the archbiſhop, and yéelding to nothing the king required. The councell ended, the biſhop did afreſh begin his metropolitan viſitation, from which Iohn Grandiſon, then biſhop of Exceſter did appeale to the pope at the leaſt, by that meanes to delaie the viſitation, which Grandiſon was borne in Kent and familiar with this archbiſhop Simon Mepham, whoſe iuriſdiction he either feared or deſpiſed, and therefore reſiſted him, although not by right, yet by ſuch power as he could, in appealing him to the pope. Wherefore, when Simon Mepham in that viſitation had quietlie paſſed ouer the dioceſſe of Rocheſter, Chicheſter, Saliſburie, Bath and Wels, he would alſo haue entred into the dioceſſe of Exceſter: but Iohn the biſhop of that citie did with ſtrong heart reſiſt him; & when the archbiſhop determined to cope with him alſo by ſtrength, the matter was brought vnto the king; the biſhop was called backe by the kings letters, & ſhamefullie departed out of that countrie, without ſetting end to his viſitation. By which and other repulſes, as he returned home he fell into a deadlie ague at Magfield, and yéelded his life the twelfe of October, after that he had ſitten fiue yéers, Murimuth. Walſing.

Polydor erreth.

Murimuth. Walſing.

1324 In the third yeare of Edward the third. Murimuth.

1331 In the fift of Edward the third.

1332 In the ſixt of Edward the third. Contention betwéene the biſhop of Canturburie and Exceſter, that the firſt would viſit the dioceſſe of the ſecond.

Ste. Brichint.

1333 In the 7 of Edward the third.

ſix moneths, and twelue daies in the chaire of the ſée of Canturburie. In ſetting end to which archbiſhop I muſt not forget (for the honor of my ſwéet countrie of Kent) a thing ſo rare, and perhaps neuer like to be ſéene againe; that this archbiſhop being himſelfe a Kentiſhman, had at one time vnder him ſix of his ſuffragans to be of the ſame ſhire: ſo that Kent did at one time bring foorth ſeauen biſhops, whereof the one was this archbiſhop Simon, the other ſix were the foreſaid Iohn Grandiſon biſhop of Exceſter, Stephan Grauesend biſhop of London, Henrie Borwaſh or de Burgeſſe biſhop of Lincolne, chancellor and treſuror of England, Thomas Cobham biſhop of Worceſter, Richard Swinefield biſhop of Hereford, & Haimon biſhop of Rocheſter. The bodie of this Simon Peckham was on the 7 kalends of Nouember caried to Canturburie, & buried in a marble toome, on the north part of the chapell of S. Anſelme ſomtime biſhop of Canturburie.

Matth Parker.

Iohn Stratford.

Ex epiſtola Rich. Dunel.

Iohn Stratford, when he was yet but yoong, gaue himſelfe to the canon and ciuill law, after which he was made archdeacon of Lincolne, then deane of the arches, by Walter Reinolds archbiſhop of Canturburie, next of the priuie councell, and ſecretarie to Edward the ſecond, and in following time made biſhop of Wincheſter. He was chancellor to Edward the third, and then made biſhop of the arch ſée of Canturburie, and protector of the realme in the abſence of Edward the third. This Iohn after that he had bin biſhop 15 yeares, fell into a deadlie diſeaſe at Magfield and there died, being buried at Canturburie at the high altar in the ſouth part, with an honorable toome of alabaſter at the ſteps of the altar of ſaint Dunſtan.

1348 In the 22 of Edward the third.

Iohn Vfford.

1350 as ſome haue, but rather 1349 being the 23 of Edward the firſt, as others haue.

Iohn Vfford ſonne of the earle of Suffolke, did ſtudie the ciuill and canon law at Cambridge, who being after made deane of Lincolne was admitted to the kings councell, and inueſted with the honor of chancellor of England, from whenſe in following time he was aduanced to the ſée of Canturburie, who waiting for the pall ſix moneths & ſix daies, died in the great peſtilence in the moneth of Maie, or (as hath Matthew Parker) the ſeuenth of Iune one thouſand thrée hundred and fiftie, being the foure and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third. The bodie of which archbiſhop was the next morning ſecretlie brought to Canturburie, and buried without anie archiepiſcopall maieſtie in the north wall of the wall of Thomas Becket.

Thomas Bradwardine.

Thomas Bradwardine (choſen by the moonks of Canturburie to ſuccéed Iohn Stratford, and being repelled to bring in the foreſaid Iohn Offord or Vfford) was borne at Hatfield in Suſſex, who ſtudieng diuinitie, was by Iohn Stratford biſhop of Canturburie brought to be the kings confeſſor, in which office without anie reward or honor he remained with the king in all his warres. Which Bradwardine being of a zelous mind, would not feare to rebuke the king if he at anie time ſaw him depart from equitie: which the king did not take in euill part, but alwaies loued the man, who although he might obteine anie thing of the king, yet would hardlie be brought to this euill, that he would at one time kéepe both his canonrie in Lincolne, and his chancellorſhip of London. Wherby it appeareth, that he was not onelie vertuouſlie giuen from couetouſneſſe, but alſo ſo mild conditioned, that he was neuer offended becauſe he was reiected at his firſt election from the ſée of Canturburie, & Offord placed in the ſame: for which cauſe after the death of Offord, the moonks did rechooſe him to be their archbiſhop of Canturburie; whereunto the king did with much intreatie agrée, being loth to looſe the companie of ſo good a man. After which, this Bradwardine cōming to Auinion to be conſecrated, the ſame was celebrated by Bertrand the cardinall, in the companie of all the other cardinals. At the time of which feaſt of conſecration, Hugo the cardinall of Tull: the popes kinſman, a perſon puffed vp with vaine pride, beholding the ſimple and mild countenance of this new archbiſhop, did in mockerie of him bring into the place an abiect & baſe wretch ſitting on an aſſe, requiring to be made an archbiſhop. For which his fooliſh act being bitterlie rebuked & tawnted, he did with ſhame depart as a perſon noted of extreme follie. The ſolemnities of this conſecration ended, & the pope & cardinals ſaluted, this Bradwardine returneth into England, firſt receiuing his temporaltie of the king: which being had, he goeth forthwith to Lambeth to reſt himſelfe after his long iornie, where remaining in the biſhop of Rocheſters houſe called the place, ſome certeine wéeks, he fell into an ague, whereof he ſhortlie after died, fiue wéeks and foure daies after his conſecration, being before that he was inthronized at Canturburie. After which he was buried at Canturburie in the chapell of Anſelme, by whoſe death the church of Canturburie was thriſe vacant in one yéere. This man, amongſt manie other works which he wrot, made one great and learned booke intituled, De cauſa Dei contra Pelagium, which booke is at this daie extant, and (as maiſter Lambert noteth in his perambulation of Kent) among the names of the archbiſhops of Canturburie; he built the Blacke friers in London.

Simon Iſlep.

Simon Iſlep was firſt made a canon of Paules, iudge of the arches vnder Iohn Stratford archbiſhop of Canturburie, then chancellor, ſecretarie and kéeper of the priuie ſeale to king Edward the third, and laſtlie by the moonks of Canturburie choſen to the archbiſhoprike of that citie. But the pope admitted him as a perſon rather placed in that ſée by his owne collation, than by the moonks election: whereof the buls were publiſhed in Bow church of London the fourth daie of October. After which, in December next, he was conſecrated in Paules church by Raſe Stratford biſhop of London, in the preſence of William Edinton biſhop of Wincheſter treaſuror, and Iohn Thorſbie biſhop of ſaint Dauies chancellor of England. This doone, he ſent Michaell Northburge a doctor of the law to Rome to bring his pall, and appointed Roger Dorking to be his procurator to receiue the commodities of his canonrie at Lions, which the archbiſhops of Canturburie held. The pall being brought into England, he receiued the ſame from the hands of the biſhop of Wincheſter in the manor houſe of Eſher, being (for auoiding of further charge) inthronized at Canturburie with a ſmall feaſt. But as he was a verie ſparing man in all things, ſo therewithall he was ouer ſeuere in moſt things; for he viſited his dioceſſe of Canturburie with great animaduerſion. Contrarie whereunto he ſlenderlie paſſed ouer the dioceſſe of Rocheſter and Chiceſter, which was aſcribed to his moderation and lenitie. But after comming home to his ſeat, calling the offendors before him, they found no lenitie but all ſeueritie in him: which cauſed Iohn Buckingham biſhop of Lincolne to defend his dioceſſe from the viſitation of this archbiſhop, by the bulles of pope Clement obteined at Auinion; but the ſame priuilege was after reuoked at Rome, by the inſtigation of this archbiſhop. For the ſcholers of the vniuerſitie of Oxford chooſing one William de Palmorine to be their chancellor, ſent him to the biſhop of Lincolne (in whoſe dioceſſe Oxford then was) to be confirmed. But he by manie delaies was by the biſhop turned ouer to an other time: for which, this William complained to the archbiſhop, which appointed a daie to the 1349 In the three and twentith yeare of Edward the third

Eſher.

1350 In the 24 yeare of Edward the third

Palmorine.

Steph. Birch.

Adam Murimuth.

1351 In the fiue & twentith yeare of Edward the third.

the biſhop of Lincolne to confirme the chancellor or to appeare before him. During which time the archbiſhop committed the hearing of the cauſe to his chancellor John Caulton and to the deane of Wels, at which daie the elect chancellor of Oxford with the ſcholers appearing, and the biſhop of Lincolne making default, the chancellor of Canturburie lawfullie proceeding in that matter, pronounced him to be lawfullie elected; vpon which ſentence the archbiſhop confirmed him and ſent him to Oxford, writing to the vniuerſitie to obeie him. Which greeuing the biſhop of Lincolne, he foorthwith appealed to the pope, but the archbiſhop reiecting his appeale, called him to his owne iudgement ſeat, as a contemner of the archiepiſcopall authoritie: but the biſhop of Lincolne not appearing, the archbiſhop interdicted all his churches and lands. In the end, manie things being in this controuerſie alleaged before the pope, the priuilege of the biſhop of Lincolne was reuoked, and he inforced to giue place to the archbiſhop. After which, this Simon called Andrew Vfford archdeacon of Middelſex, adminiſtrator of the goods of John Vfford the archbiſhop of Canturburie, into law for the buildings which the ſaid John Vfford had left ruinous in the biſhoprike of Canturburie, and recouered of him eleuen hundred pounds fiue & thirtie ſhillings two pence halfepenie farthing, which he beſtowed in reparing of the palace of Canturburie: Idémque (as ſaith that worthie antiquarie Matthew Parker) totum manerium de Wrotham demolitus, ædificia (quæ Iohannes Vfford Maidenſtoniæ inchoauit) ex demolitis tignis, lapidibus, & cæmento traductis abſoluit.

Diſſention betweene the ſcholers and towneſmen of Oxford.

1354 In the eight and twentith of Edward the third.

Robert Aueſb. Walſingh.

In this fiue and twentith yeare of Edward the third, there was a new contention betweene the two archbiſhops of Yorke and of Canturburie, for the bearing of their croſſes, whereof we will ſpeake more in another worke of the biſhops of Yorke. Theſe things thus paſſed, a heauie diſcord fell betweene the ſcholers and towneſmen of the vniuerſitie of Oxford, which of them ſhould beare the cheefeſt rule in the towne, in which after that it was come to weapons and diuers ſlaine on both parts, the ſcholers were driuen to forſake the towne. The biſhop of Lincolne, vnder whoſe iuriſdiction Oxford was, determining to puniſh the towneſmen, did both interdict them and the towne: but after ſomewhat abating the ſame, he onlie gaue commandement to all the prieſts of the pariſhes, that if anie of the towneſmen did come in whileſt they were at diuine ſeruice, or were preſent at the diuine ſeruice, they ſhould ceaſe from the ſame, ſo long as anie of the towneſmen were in the church. Where vnto this archbiſhop added a further paine of excommunication. But the ſcholers being diſperſed hither and thither, and the king ſorrowing to heare of the death that happened therby, called the controuerſie into his owne hands. Which being heard, and the towneſmen puniſhed, he releaſed the offenſe to the ſcholers, with this condition, that they ſhould returne to the vniuerſitie, and there fall againe to their ſtudie: the whole ſubſtance whereof, the king would haue this archbiſhop to declare vnto them. And to the end that the ſcholers might hereafter be free from all violence to be offered vnto them by the towneſmen, he condemned them to paie two hundred & fiftie pounds for damages vnto the ſcholers: and further bound them vnder a great paine, neuer after to hurt anie of the ſame ſcholers. Wherevpon the whole gouernment of the towne was committed by the king to the chancellor of the vniuerſitie (vtterlie excluding anie of the towneſmen therein) to whoſe determination the iudgement and knowledge of the aſſiſe and meaſure of bread, wine, drinke, & of all other meaſures & weights were granted. Beſides which generall amends, euerie particular ſcholer was left to his priuate reuenge by action, for anie iniurie doone vnto him by anie of the towneſmen.

1362 In the ſix and thirtith yere of Edward the third.

Archiui.

John ſonne of Edmund of Woodſtoke erle of Kent, who after the ſaid Edmund was earle of Kent, and died without iſſue, and the earledome came to Jan: his ſiſter.

About this time, Edward prince of Wales, after the death of the biſhop of ſaint Aſaph, did chalenge to himſelfe the liuings of the biſhoprike during the vacancie of the ſaid ſee: but this archbiſhop contending with the prince, & prouing by ancient cuſtome and by the witneſſe of the clergie, that the ſame of right belonged to Canturburie, in the end obteined the ſame. Much about which time Eliſabeth a noble woman, after the death of John earle of Kent hir huſband, became a nun, in which profeſſion when ſhe had remained certeine yeares ſhe fell in loue with one Euſtace Abricourts, a Henower, which earneſt affection of hirs inforced hir to depart out of the monaſterie, and to be married vnto him againſt hir vow, in the morning before daie light without anie banes aſking. Whereof when this archbiſhop had knowledge, he puniſhed and bound them yearelie to aſſigne a liuing vnto two chaplains: and beſides, that they ſhould a long time be inioined the penance of faſting & praier without diſſoluing the bands of matrimonie. This archbiſhop did build a famous college in Oxford called Canturburie college, to which he appropriated the rectories of Magfeld and Pagham; further granting the churches of Monktowne and Eſtreie to the moonks of Canturburie, and for two hundred and fortie markes did releaſe to the earle of Arundell ſix and twentie bucks and does, which the ſame earle of Arundell ſhould yerelie paie to the church of Canturburie, for which act he was euillie thought of by diuers of the couent. In his iorneie as he went to Magfeld, he fell with his horſe into a poole, in which whilſt his horſe and he did ſtrugle togither to get foorth, and that the archbiſhop would haue recouered himſelfe, he was all to tumbled and wet in the mire, and ſo came throughlie wet to Magfeld, where he fell into a heauie ſleepe before that he had put off his apparell, whereby falling into a palſie, he died there at Magfeld, in the ſeuenteenth yeare of his biſhoprike, after that he had ſitten at Canturburie ſixteene yeares, foure moneths, and twelue daies, and was buried at Canturburie in the middle of the bodie of the church, with a toome wheron is a faire marble ſtone yet ſtanding, hauing this epitaph in braſſe ingrauen about a mitred biſhop of plate, placed in the ſame hard marble ſtone:

Hoſpes ſanctorum, decus & pie Chriſte tuorum,
Cœtibus ipſorũ prece iungas hunc precor horum,
Simon Iſleppe oriens, vir bina lege probatus,
Vt naſcens moriens, ſic nunc iacet ante locatus,
Arcem qui tenuit, hîc quondam pontificatus,
Clero quique fuit, regno toti quoque gratus,
Mil. tricenteno ſexageno quoque ſeno,
Eius ſepteno paſtoratus quoque deno,
Hic kal. Maÿ ſeno rupto carnis nece fræno,
Flos cadit e ſeno, cœlo peto qui ſit ameno,
Princeps paſtorum fac Simon apoſtolorum,
Simon vt iſte chorum per eos vt attingat eorum.

1366 In the fortith yeare of Edward the third

At his death he bequeathed one thouſand ſheepe to the monaſterie of Canturburie, his golden garment with a rich cope and ſiluer veſſell, which was ſix dozzen of ſiluer diſhes, ſo manie ſalts, twelue ſiluer baſons with his armes: commanding further that he ſhould be buried without anie aſſemblie of the people, auoiding in all things much magnificence or great coſt. Of whom there be onlie extant two prouinciall conſtitutions to be holden in his time.

Simon Langham.

Simon Langham was archbiſhop of Canturburie, and choſen after this maner. When Simon Iſlep was dead, the moonks of Canturburie required to haue William Edinton biſhop of Wincheſter chancellor and treaſuror of England to be their archbiſhop; but he denied their election. Wherevpon at the kings requeſt, pope Vrban the fift did tranſlate Simon Langham ſometime abbat of Weſtminſter, chancellor and treaſuror of England, to the ſée of Canturburie by the waie and title of prouiſion. After which, he was made a cardinall alſo, who as he ſat at his collation at after dinner, was ſuddenlie ſtricken with a palſeie and loſt his ſpeach: and liuing foure or fiue daies after, died on the daie of Marie Magdalen: whoſe bodie was buried at Donezere néere Auinion amongſt the Carthuſians in a new church, which he builded from the foundation. After which, in proceſſe of time as he had before ordeined, his bones were brought into England to Weſtminſter, where is a ſtatelie toome made ouer him; he ſat archbiſhop two yeares and ſomewhat more.

Steph. Brichinton. Caralo. epiſco. Elienſ.

Io. Maluerne. Monach. Wigorn. in continu. Randulph. 1376, or rather 1368.

Steph. Brich. Ex archiuis.

William Witleſeie, the kinſman of Simon Iſlep archbiſhop of Canturburie, by whome he was not onelie liberallie brought vp in learning, but alſo promoted to diuerſe honors; who in his yoong yeares followed the ſtudie of the lawes by the perſuaſion of his vncle therein; procéeding doctor of both lawes, and being procurator for all his vncles affaires at Rome. After which, he was aduanced to be vicar generall, and officiall to the ſaid Simon Iſlep, then likewiſe was he made deane of the arches, hauing therevnto alſo adioined the archdeaconrie of Huntington, & the rectories of Croidon & Cliffe. From theſe degrées he was raiſed to the biſhoprike of Rocheſter, then to Worceſter, next to London, and laſtlie was tranſlated by Vrban the fift to the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, the fift ides of October (when Simon Langham was made cardinall and went to the popes court) hauing in the Hilarie terme next following his temporalties reſtored to him at Weſtminſter. At this time there were certeine Engliſhmen in Rome well ſéene in the ciuill and canon lawes, amongſt which there were foure eſpeciallie noted therefore, which were Thomas Paxton, Robert Stratton, Iohn Shepdam, and Simon Sudburie, being afterward biſhop of Canturburie: to theſe men which were of great authoritie in the church of Rome, did this archbiſhop giue authoritie procuratiue, to require of the pope and to ſend vnto him the pall, which was giuen him at Lambeth in the kalends of Aprill by William Wickham biſhop of Wincheſter.

1368 In the two & fortith yeare of Edward the third.

The ſixtéenth daie of Iune following, he was inthroniſed at Canturburie without anie ſhew or pompe, therein following the example of his predeceſſor Simon Iſlep. The next yeare he held a ſynod in Paules church of London the one and twentith of Ianuarie, in which he made an eloquent, learned, and Latine ſermon. In which this ſynod, Robert Thorpe, Iohn Kneuet, & Thomas Ludlo the kings iuſtices, did in the kings name demand a tenth for thrée yeares of the cleargie, towards his charges in warres. But after much talke thereabouts, they hardlie granted the tenth for two yeares. After which, the king not contented therewith, Iohn of Gaunt duke of Lancaſter the kings ſon, the earle of Arundell, the erle of Warwike, and the lord Guy Brian entring into the ſynod, required inſtantlie that thrée yeares tenth might be granted, to anſwer the charge whereat the king had béene in his continuall warres for the glorie of his countrie. Which tenth the cleargie might well paie, and ought not to denie, becauſe they were frée and not troubled with anie perſonall labor of thoſe warres: vpon the which (without contradiction of anie) the whole tenth was granted. In which yeare alſo, pope Vrban the fift did ſharplie command this William the archbiſhop, that he ſhould diſſolue all vnions of eccleſiaſticall benefices, with their impropriations made to monaſteries, and not permit anie to be made hereafter. But this precept was ſoone forgotten by the popes death, and neuer after renewed.

1369 In the thrée and fortith yeare of Edward the third. Steph Brich.

1370 In the foure and fortith yeare of Edward the third.

In the time of this archbiſhop, the monaſterie of the Carthuſians began in London, at the charges of Michaell Northburge biſhop of that citie, and Walter Mannie or Mennie knight, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and fiftie, being the foure and twentith yeare of Edward the third; and was in the yeare one thouſand thrée hundred thréeſcore and ten, being the foure and fortith yeare of the ſaid Edward the third, finiſhed by the ſaid Walter Mennie. This doone, the king remoueth all ſpirituall officers, placing temporall men in their roomes: but their gouernment being found far woorſe than that of the ſpiritualtie (as was by ſome, fauoring and following the cleargie, put into the kings mind) they were reſtored to their former offices. The king held a parlement, during which there was a ſynod of the cleargie kept at London in Pauls church the foure and twentith daie of Aprill, to which were ſent by the king, Robert Thorp chancellor (perhaps the ſame Robert Thorp, which before is called the kings iuſtice) and ſir Richard Scroope treaſuror (whome a learned man ſomewhat miſcalling, dooth name Thomas Scroope) both ſuccéeding after the cleargie was remoued. Theſe men required a ſubſidie of fiftie thouſand pounds, to be granted by the cleargie, to ſuch the kings exceſſiue charges of the warres. But the cleargie ſhewed that the church was drawne drie by the infinit charge of thoſe warres, and that therefore they were not able to giue anie more, for which cauſe the kings meſſenger went awaie that daie, who a few daies following, returned with a more prepared tale, but profited not anie whit the better thereby.

Charterhouſe built in London.

1371 In the fiue & fortith yeare of Edward the third.

Polychro. continuat. Ex archiuis.

Wherevpon this archbiſhop William, following the minds of the king and the nobilitie, did proroge the ſynod from Paules church to the chapell of the Sauoie the duke of Lancaſters houſe, commanding euerie one to be there preſent. And although manie were abſent at the time appointed, yet by the laboring of the duke of Lancaſter and of the nobilitie, but eſpeciallie by the ſpéeches of Edward the kings ſonne called the Blacke prince (who promiſed to procure of his father manie liberties to the cleargie) they which were preſent condeſcended to the paiment of fiftie thouſand pounds. This doone, the archbiſhop William increaſing in yeares, was ſo weake and ſickelie of bodie, that he did nothing for the ſpace of two yeares, but reſted ſicke at home. But in the ſixt yeare of his tranſlation by the kings procurement, he called a ſynod in the church of Pauls in London, where going vp into the pulpit he made a Latine ſermon vpon this theame: Veritas liberauit nos. Which when he had ended, he was through infirmitie inforced to depart the ſynod, and in his place to ſubſtitute the biſhop of London. In which ſynod there was a ſubſidie required of the cleargie for the king: but they complained that they were ſo impoueriſhed and weakened but few yeares paſt, by their charges to the king, and that the more alſo, becauſe they were no leſſe euerie yeare called vpon by the king than by the pope, that they were not able to ſuccor them, vnleſſe his intollerable yoke might be taken from their necks; and that they might with more eaſe relieue the kings neceſſitie: with which condition, a yearelie tenth was granted to the king. But William Courtneie then biſhop of Hereford, being afterward archbiſhop of Canturburie, vſing the nobilitie of his kinred, for he was 1374 In the eight and fortith yeare of Edward the third.

ſonne to the earle of Deuonſhire, did ſtoutlie offer himſelfe in the middeſt of the ſenat, and ſaid with a lowd voice, that neither he nor the cleargie of his dioceſſe would giue anie thing, before the king had remedied thoſe calamities, which the cleargie had ſo long ſuffered. The ſynod thus paſſed ouer, there were ambaſſadors ſent from the king to the pope, to deale with him, that he ſhould not hereafter make anie prouiſion or reſeruation of the void benefices, that ſuch as were biſhops, ſhould fullie inioie the cathedrall and conuentuall churches after the old maner and cuſtome, be confirmed of their metropolitan: and beſides, that they ſhould further open to the pope the greefes wherewith the church of England was ouercharged. To whome the pope gaue anſwer incloſed in writing; whereunto the king would haue written againe by the opinion of the cleargie and of the nobilitie, intreating the pope that he would determine of his requeſts, but they did not. Wherevpon this anſwer receiued from the pope, it was decreed in parlement, that the cathedrall churches ſhould freelie enioie their elections, and that the king ſhould not by anie meanes hinder the ſame with his power or praier vnto the pope: but that he ſhould to the vttermoſt further them with his helpe and authoritie. Which neceſſarie ſtatute did after but little profit, nor was long kept, although at the firſt beginning it was receiued in the example of Thomas Arundell choſen biſhop of Elie: whoſe election this William the archbiſhop did confirme the ſixt kalends of Aprill in his chapell at Otford, conſecrating him on the ſame daie. In which yeare, the fift ides of October, the archbiſhop being of great yeares and fallen into great ſicknes died at Lambeth, when he had gouerned ſix yeares, eight moneths, and fourteene daies, and was buried in the bodie of the church of Canturburie betweene two pillers, againſt the toome of Simon Iſlep, whereof at this daie I cannot perceiue anie monument of him. In whoſe life, and at whoſe requeſt, the vniuerſitie of Oxford was by pope Vrban the fourth exempted from the iuriſdiction of the biſhop of Lincolne, and ſuch free power giuen to the ſcholers to chooſe their chancellor, that the chancellor forthwith vpon his election, might & did execute his office, without the further admiſſion or confirmation of anie other.

1375
Math. Parker.

1374
Hiſt. Elien. epiſco.

Oxford exempted from power of the biſhop of Lincolne.

Simon Sudburie.

Steph. Brichin. Archiui.

Simon Sudburie was made archbiſhop in this ſort. After the death of William Witleſeie the archbiſhop, the moonks choſe a certeine Engliſh cardinall at Rome, that had forſaken his countrie; which the king receiued with ſuch diſpleaſure, that he tooke aduiſe for the baniſhment of them, aſwell out of the kingdome, as out of the monaſterie. But pope Gregorie the 11, to reconcile the king and the moonks, reiected that election; and by the kings conſent gaue the archbiſhoprike to Simon Sudburie then biſhop of London, who by proper name was called Tibold, receiuing that ſurname of his parents, and the other name of Sudburie from the place of his birth; his fathers name being Nigellus Tibold, of Sudburie in Suffolke, borne of gentlemanlie familie in the pariſh of ſaint George. This Simon Sudburie from his youth was brought vp in learning, by means whereof he receiued the degree to be doctor of the lawes, which he ſtudied in France and Italie, being ſometime domeſticall chapleine to pope Innocent the ſixt, and (as ſaith Matthew Parker) Cauſarum in Romana rota auditor. By which Innocent he was made chancellor of Saliſburie by waie of prouiſion, but after the death of Michaell Norburgh, by like prouiſion of the pope, made biſhop of London, and in the end atteined to be biſhop of Canturburie, receiuing (for that laſt tranſlation to Canturburie) his buls at London the ſixt of Iune. This archbiſhop a worthie and liberall perſon, and a man of great fame, was moſt wickedlie vpon Tower hill, with manie other great eſtates, beheaded by thoſe execrable Kentiſh rebels, Wat Tiler, and his wicked followers. This biſhop doing manie good deeds, repared the wals (fallen downe for age) about Canturburie, and firſt built the weſt gate thereof, with a college of ſecular clearks at Sudburie, inriching the ſame with inheritances when he was biſhop of London, and before that he was aduanced to the archbiſhops ſee of Canturburie.

1375
In the nine and fortith yeare of Edward the third

1381
In the fourth yeare of Richard the ſecond.

Archiui. Ste. Brichinton.

William Courtneie.

William Courtneie, borne of a noble houſe of the Courtneies, being the ſonne of Hugh Courtneie earle of Deuonſhire, did in his youth applie the ciuill & canon law, and ſo became a clerke, obteining three prebends in the three churches, of Bath, Exceſter, and Yorke. After this, in the reigne of Edward the third, and the rule of Simon Iſlep biſhop of Canturburie, he was made biſhop of Hereford, from whenſe he was tranſlated to London, after that Simon Sudburie was remooued from that ſee to Canturburie, and from London, following the ſaid Simon, he was after the death of that Simon Sudburie aduanced to the ſee of Canturburie, being tranſlated thither by Vrban the ſixt, through the authoritie of his prouiſion, not knowing that the moonks of Canturburie had choſen him therevnto: who being thus tranſlated, the pope by like prouiſion gaue the biſhoprike of London vnto Robert Braibrooke, the bull of tranſlation of which Courtneie to Canturburie, being publikelie read the ninth of Ianuarie in Chriſts church of Canturburie. After which, receiuing his temporalties of the king, and dooing his homage therefore, he went to Lambeth, whither came a moonke vnto him, ſent from the prior and couent of Canturburie, with the archbiſhops croſſe, who the twelft of Ianuarie deliuered it vnto the archbiſhop, ſitting in his chapell, with theſe words: Pater reuerende, nuntius ſum ſummi regis, qui te rogat, mandat, & præcipit, vt eccleſiam ſuam regendam ſuſcipias, eámque diligas & protegas. In cuius ſignum nuntij, ſummi regis vexillum tibi trado ferendum. Which when the archbiſhop had receiued of the prior, he caſt this doubt, whether it were lawfull for him to beare his croſſe, before that he had receiued the pall from the pope or no: and vpon that queſtion aroſe another doubt, which was about the coronation of the queene, belonging to the archbiſhop, whether he might alſo doo it before he had the pall: of which woonderfull doubt he deſired not to be reſolued of the lawyers, but of the moonks of Canturburie, who eaſilie diſſolued the ſame, alleging cuſtome therefore, and bringing foorth example of others which had vſed the ſame. And although the archbiſhop thus perſuaded, went with his croſſe borne before him; yet he did it not but ſubtilie, with this caution, that the ſame was not borne in contempt of the church of Rome: and ſo on twelft daie after, he crowned the queene at Weſtminſter. The next ſpring following, he diſpatched Thomas Cheineie a woorthie knight vnto the pope, to whom and to Iohn Treſnault an Engliſhman, and maiſter of the popes palace, he gaue power as his procurators to demand the pall of pope Vrban: which obteined, Thomas Cheineie returned, brought the pall, and firſt gaue it to the biſhop of London; who the ſixt of Maie in a great aſſemblie of people, did with accuſtomed pompe and ſolemnitie deliuer the ſame to the archbiſhop, ſitting in the chapell of his manor of Croidon. Theſe things thus ſolemnelie doone, he firſt in the adminiſtration of his biſhoprike did by eccleſiaſticall cenſure appeaſe the bailiffes of Canturburie by laie power, chalenging the puniſhment of adulterie, and ſuchlike crimes belonging to the clergie;

Steph. Brich. Walſingh. Ex archiuis.

1381
In the fourth yeare of Richard the ſecond.

Verba archiui.

1382
In the fift yeare of Richard the ſecond.

Matt. Parker.

Of theſe articles and for all the proces, ſee Regiſtr. Courtneie. fol. 25. Tho. Walſing. Henrie Knighton canon of Leiceſter.

1383 In the firſt yeare of Richard the ſecond.

Ex archiuis.

Richard Fitzallen earle of Arundell.

he held a ſynod in the Frier preachers of London, in which he damned manie of the aſſertions of Iohn Wickliffe as hereticall and full of errors; whoſe opinions had not onelie entered into the learneder ſort, but alſo into manie of the common people, and compelled Robert Rig chancellor of Oxford, and Thomas Brigwell profeſſor of diuinitie, being ſuſpected of Wickliffes doctrine, to recant and abiure the ſame. At what time alſo by publike ſentence, he condemned of hereſie, Nicholas Hereford, Philip Repinton, profeſſors of diuinitie, and Iohn Aſhton maiſter of arts, becauſe they would not be remooued from Wickliffes opinions: but they appealed to the pope from that ſentence, all which notwithſtanding, the archbiſhop (reiecting their appeale) did then excommunicat them. At what time the doctrine of Wickliffe began here to be commanded to be denounced hereticall, and the followers thereof to be called heretikes, by the appointment of this biſhop at Oxford and at London: for the king ioining himſelfe to this ſpirituall ſeueritie, gaue authoritie by his letters written to the archbiſhop, to his ſuffragans, and to the chancellor of Oxford, to apprehend and impriſon all ſuch as were ſuſpected for thoſe opinions: by which means there was great crueltie ſhewed to ſuch as profeſſed the euangelicall doctrine, and were followers of Wickliffe. Beſides which there was alſo another ſynod of the cleargie held at Oxford, in which a ſubſidie was granted to the king by the demand of the lord Hugh Segraue the kings treaſuror: at what time the ſaid Nicholas Hereford, Philip Repinton, and Iohn Aſhton by oth renounced the opinions of Wickliffe, and were abſolued from the excommunication. But Iohn Wickliffe (as hath Matthew Parker, deſeruing well for his great ſkill and trauell in furthering the renewing of antiquities for the benefit of his countrie) hiding himſelfe here and there, and auoiding the perſecutions, was at length on ſaint Thomas daie taken with the palſeie; who continuing ſome long time in ſickneſſe, vntill the feaſt of ſaint Silueſter, conſtantlie died in thoſe opinions, which he had diſperſed abroad. This archbiſhop did excommunicat one Richard Iſmonger of Aileſford in Kent, becauſe he brake the liberties of the church (as they were then termed) in that he puniſhed ſuch offenſes, as were of right to be corrected by the prelats. But he humblie requiring to be abſolued, by oth promiſed neuer to breake the iuriſdiction of the church, and to receiue what puniſhment ſo euer the archbiſhop would laie vpon him for his raſhneſſe. Wherevpon he had penance inioined, firſt that he ſhould at Weſtmalling on thrée market daies be beaten with cudgels in the aſſemblie of the people, & that doone, receiue the like puniſhment at Maidſtone, and at Canturburie, in which laſt puniſhment he ſhould go barefoot into the church, and offer a taper of wax of fiue pounds weight to the toome of S. Thomas, all which if he did not performe, that then he ſhould run into the danger of his former excommunication. The archbiſhop which before had moleſted the Wickliffeans fell now at variance with the erle of Arundell, whoſe ſeruants had emptied a poole of the archbiſhops in his manor of Southmalling, in the dioceſſe of Chicheſter, taking awaie the fiſh thereof. With which the archbiſhop greatlie mooued, commanded the biſhop of Chicheſter to excommunicat the théeues, whom he termed ſacrilegers and ſpoilers of the church of Canturburie, wherevpon the earle went to the king, & required that he would take the matter into his hands, whereby he might auoid the execution of that excommunication. For which cauſe the archbiſhop wrote to the biſhop of Chicheſter to reuoke the ſame ſentence, when he vnderſtood that the king had taken the matter to himſelfe. Not long after there was a parlement held at Cambridge in the Carmelit friers, at what time alſo in the church of ſaint Maries, there was a ſynod celebrat by the procurement of the king, who had a tenth granted vnto him on this condition, that himſelfe before the kalends of October next ſhould paſſe with an armie into France. In this yeare ſir Iohn Triuet the kings chiefe iuſtice fell from his horſe, and brake his intrals. After this the archbiſhop determined to make a metropolitane viſitation in his prouince: wherefore without contradiction he viſited the dioceſſe of Rocheſter, Chicheſter, Bath and Wels. But when he came to Exceſter, and had begun his viſitation, he proroged the ſame from daie to daie, from place to place, ſuſpending and hindering the iuriſdiction aſwell of the biſhops as of all other prelats of the dioceſſe, by his metropolitane iuriſdiction, as Simon Mepham his predeceſſor would haue doone before. The biſhop of Exceſter offended therewith, gaue commandement through all his dioceſſe, that they ſhould not obeie the archbiſhop in his viſitation, and that they ſhould not demand anie ordinarie law or right in anie cauſe belonging to the clergie, to be miniſtred vnto them of him or his inferior prelats; further excommunicating all others that did the contrarie: which prohibition and excommunication the archbiſhop did vndoo by contrarie edict. Wherevpon the biſhop of Exceſter did foure times appeale vnto Rome, and fixed his appellations in writing vpon the church doores of Exceſter. But the archbiſhop after one ſort reiecting them all, went forth in his viſitation, citing the biſhop by certeine edicts to anſwer to certeine articles laid againſt him. Wherevpon one of the biſhop of Exceſter his ſeruants did in the towne of Topſham, or Torſham, take Peter Hill the archbiſhops meſſenger, made him eat and ſwallow downe the parchment and ſealed wax, wherein was comprehended the archbiſhops mandat to cite the biſhop of Exceſter. For the apprehenſion of whom and puniſhment whereof (as though they had béene rebels) the king wrote to Edward Courtneie earle of Deuonſhire, and others, that they ſhould ſerch them out, and forthwith lead them to the archbiſhop. Which being ſo doone, they were in this ſort puniſhed by the archbiſhops appointment; firſt, that they ſhould in the churches of Canturburie, S. Paules of London, and of Exceſter (on certeine appointed feſtiuall daies therefore) go in their ſhirts before the croſſe, in the time of proceſſion, with burning tapers in their hands; then that they ſhould ſuſteine and nouriſh a préeſt dailie to ſaie maſſe at the toome of the earle of Deuonſhire; and laſtlie, that euerie one of them ſhould paie twentie ſhillings to repare the wals of Exceſter; of the execution whereof the deans of Canturburie London, and Exceſter, ſhould certifie the archbiſhop vnder their ſeales.

This doone, the archbiſhop procéeded in the affairs of his biſhoprike, and remooued both from his place and order William Bid doctor of law, aduocat of the arches: bicauſe he had counſelled the biſhop of Exceſter againſt the dignitie of the church of Canturburie. During which, the biſhop of Exceſter did ſtill purſue his appeale to the pope againſt the archbiſhop; but when he ſaw his cauſe both inferior and weaker, and that the king fauoured the archbiſhop, he left his appeale and ſubmitted himſelfe to his metropolitane; and acknowledging his raſhnes againſt the archbiſhops, craued pardon and obteined it. At which time alſo the biſhop of Saliſburie did take the like courage vpon him, when he was to be viſited, determining to reſiſt the archbiſhop: but he as a man more temperat, thought to procéed more warilie

1388 In the twelft yeare of Richard the ſecond.

Regiſtr. Courtneie. fol 16.

The biſhop of Exceſter diſobeied the archbiſhops viſitation.

Archbiſhop of Canturburie viſiteth the dioceſſe of Saliſburie.

Contention betweene the archbiſhop of Canturburie and the biſhop of Saliſburie, about the viſitation of the archbiſhop.

Regeſt. Court. fol. 146.

A college of preſts founded in Maidſtone. warelie therein according to law, than the biſhop of Exceſter did. For when he ſuppoſed that the archbiſhop was onelie ſupported (for his ſtrength of viſitation) by the power of pope Urban: this biſhop of Saliſburie after the death of Urban, procured from his ſucceſſor pope Boniface a priuilege for himſelfe and his dioceſſes, that they ſhould not be viſited by the authoritie of Urban, ſuppoſing that the archiepiſcopall and metropolitane dignitie had not béene of value, vnleſſe it had béene vnderpropped by the buls of pope Urban. But the archbiſhop being more ſkilfull in the law, more grounded by vſe and experience and more fauoured both in the Engliſh and Romane court, did (when the biſhop of Saliſburie came to him vnto Croidon, thinking to be exempted by the popes priuilege from viſitation, by ſhewing pope Boniface his buls) by a decrée gaue foorth that he would viſit the biſhop of Saliſburie by his metropolitane authoritie: further by edict commanding the biſhop of Saliſburie to obeie his viſitation, and at a certeine daie to appeare in the church of his biſhoprike of Saliſburie. At which daie the biſhop of Saliſburie ſo truſting to the hornes of his weake bull, was abſent, often appealing from the archbiſhop, and complaining of the iniurie that he did vnto him, and to his dioceſians. But the archbiſhop neither fearing nor forbearing the contumacie of this man (with ſuch like moderation as he did the reſiſtance of the biſhop of Exceſter) foorthwith excommunicated the biſhop of Saliſburie, and further accuſed him of periurie and contempt, bicauſe that he had departed by appellation and buls of priuileges, from that ſubiection which he ſware to the ſée of Canturburie at the time of his conſecration. Wherupon the biſhop of Saliſburie (feared with this continuall ſeueritie, and the example of his brother in function the biſhop of Exceſter) was receiued againe into fauour, as appeareth by theſe words of Matthew Parker: Cùm iure ſuccumbendum ſibi fuit (which was the biſhop of Saliſburie) appellationibus renunciauit, & clarißimo viro comite Sarisburienſi alijſque nonnullis exhortãtibus cùm ſe ſubieciſſet, archiepiſcopi in gratiam receptus eſt. Which doone, the archbiſhop did quietlie performe the 1395 remnant of his viſitation. This yeare after that the archbiſhop had kept the place fiftéene yeares eleuen moneths & two daies, he died at Maidſtone the daie before the kalends of Auguſt. In which towne (plucking downe the old worke) he founded and built a college of ſecular préeſts: beſides which he renewed the church of Mexham (fallen downe) to the vſe of the ſicke brethren, next vnto which he built foure new houſes, bequeathing to the reparations of the church of Canturburie, with the cloiſter and wals thereof one thouſand marks, and further gaue to that church an image of the Trinitie of ſiluer and guilt, and ſix apoſtles ſtanding about it of the weight of an hundred and ſixtie pounds, beſide manie books which he left to the ſame houſe: he was buried in the church of Canturburie next to the ſhrine of Thomas Becket on the ſouth ſide,

Thomas Arundell.

Thom. Gaſcoi. in dictionario theologico.

Bels conſecrated.

Thomas Arundell (the ſonne of the earle of Arundell) when he was a yoong man applied himſelfe to diuinitie, became a ſpirituall man, and was made archdeacon of Tanton. Who being then but a ſubdeacon, was made biſhop of Elie, from thenſe remooued to Yorke, and at length by the popes prouiſion 1396 aduanced to Canturburie, hauing béene alſo chancellor of England, of whom it is written that he died for hunger: for being ſtriken with death, he laie long and could neither ſpeake nor ſwallow, whereby in the end he periſhed with famine. This man being biſhop ſeauentéene yeares and one moneth, was buried in the north part of the church of Canturburie, who at his entring into the biſhoprike, did build the ſtéeple of Canturburie, and placed in the ſame fiue bels, conſecrated More pontificio, with theſe names; the firſt was called the holie and vndiuided Trinitie; the ſecond, the virgine Marie, the third the angell Gabriell, the fourth S. Blaſe, and the fift ſaint John the euangeliſt.

Henrie Chichelie.

S. John of Beuerleie his daie appointed holie daie.

Henrie Chicheleie biſhop of ſaint Dauids, being choſen of the moonks of Canturburie (by the kings licence) to the ſée of Canturburie, would not yet accept the ſame, nor yet diſagrée thereunto; but referred the whole matter to the popes determination. Whereupon pope John the thrée and twentith, by waie of prouiſion made the ſaid Chicheleie archbiſhop of Canturburie, vnder which title he entered into the biſhoprike. This man was borne in Higham Feris in Northamptonſhire, and was inſtructed in the ciuill and canon law in the new college of Oxenford built by William Wickham biſhop of Wincheſter: after which being made doctor of both lawes, he was accepted into the archdeaconrie of Saliſburie by the biſhop of that ſée. Which Henrie in proceſſe of time wiſelie diſpatching manie affairs for the king, and performing manie ambaſſages, was by the kings precept aduanced to the biſhoprikes firſt of ſaint Dauids, and then of Canturburie, receiuing the pall the nine and twentith of Julie 1415 by the hands of Henrie Beaufort biſhop of Wincheſter, which doone, he redéemed the halfe yeares reuenues of the ſée of Canturburie due to the king during the vacancie of the biſhoprike, for the ſumme
1416 of ſix hundred markes, and held a ſynod, in which the daie dedicated to S. John of Beuerleie was inſtituted to be holie or feſtiuall. After the ſynod he conſecrated biſhops, John Wakering to Norwich, Edmund Lacie to Hereford, and John Chandler to Saliſburie.

Prouiſion for the ſcholers of Oxford and Cambridge.

1417 This biſhop ſhortlie following called another ſynod at London, in which there was order taken for the prouiſion and neceſſarie ſuſtentation of ſcholers, as writeth the graue man Matthew Parker in theſe words: In hac ſynodo Robertus Gilbert ſacræ theologiæ profeſſor Mertonenſis collegij Oxonienſ. præſes, longa & diſerta oratione egit, vt ſcholaribus, quorum in literarum ſtudijs induſtria viguit, attribuantur, & ad victum interim neceſſaria & proponantur maturis præmia: hunc ſequutus Thomas Kingſton legum doctor, & aduocatus curiæ de arcubus pari facundia pro Cantabrigienſibus interceßit. Quibus ſuadentibus decretum eſt, vt eccleſiaſticorum beneficiorum patroni, ea vacantia, his qui graduum dignitatibus ab academicis donata ſunt, deinceps conferant, gradus & poſſeßionis ratione iuxta beneficiorum cenſus & valores habita. Hoc ſaluberrimum decretum ab artium magiſtris atque profeßoribus, qui ſua multitudine reliquos in vniuerſitatibus regentes ſuperabant, cùm in ſcholarium congregatione de eo approbando ageretur, temerè tanquam iuuenili multitudine reiectum & repudiatum eſt, non alia ſanè ratione quàm quòd doctoribus, aliiſque, quibus ordine & loco eſſent inferiores, in adipiſcendis beneficijs pares eſſe non poterant. Thus much Matthew Parker, after which in the ſixt yéere of his conſecration, this Chicheleie did hold an other ſynod at London,
1419 wherein amongſt other things Richard Walker a prieſt of Worceſter being giltie of witchcraft, did publikelie at Paules croſſe in London doo penance therefore, and abiure the ſame, openlie burning his books and inſtruments of ſuch arts. Then in 1421 the eight yeare of his conſecration he aſſembled another ſynod at Paules in London; in which the clergie granted to the king a tenth, in conſideration whereof the king beſtowed on them this priuilege, that no purueior of his houſe ſhould touch the goods, or enter the poſſeſſions of the clergie, with manie other things ſet downe by Matthew Parker, which were: Vt clerici in foro regio capitalium criminum poſtulati datis fideiuſſoribus iudicio ſiſti carceribus liberentur: tertiò ut presbyteri caſtrati felonum id eſt homicidarum pœna afficerentur. Tum in eadem ſynodo Gulielmus Tailor liberalium artium profeſſor, qui in Wigornienſi diocœſi neque ſanctos neque Chriſtum Ieſum ratione humanitatis eſſe pro ſalute chriſtiana inuocandos docuit, quoniam eadem & ſimilia dogmata ante coram Thoma Arundel Cantuarienſ. archiepiſc. confeſſus & deteſtatus eſt, tanquam in hæreſim relapſus, clericali ordine atque gradu priuatus, & laicali poteſtati traditus eſt. Ad hanc autem ſynodum Iohannes Rikinghal Cantabrigienſis vniuerſitatis cancellarius quoniam abſuit, ab archiepiſcopo citatus venit, qui ſe cum Iohanne Caſtel Oxonienſi cancellario coniunxit, illúdque de conferendis beneficijs Cantabrigiæ vel Oxonij ſtudentibus decretum, quod ab artium (vt diximus) profeſſoribus ante receptum & admiſſum non fuit, renouari impetrauerunt. Hinc autem doctis viris conceſſo à ſynodo præmio, impuri indoctique fratres diu reſtiterunt. Sed Henricus quintus rex literarum ſtudio ductus, contra petulantem fratrum inſtantiam, ad ſynodum de eo interponendo decreto ſcripſit, idque in parlamento poſtea confirmauit. So farre Matthew Parker in the life of this Henrie 1430 Chicheleie archbiſhop of Canturburie. Another ſynod was holden by this archbiſhop, wherein it was decreed, that none ſhould exerciſe eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction, vnleſſe he had taken ſome degree of the ciuill or canon law in the vniuerſities of Oxford or 1434 Cambridge. Beſide which, in a ſynod after holden, it was enacted, that the feaſt of S. Frideſwid ſhould 1438 be kept holie daie. Whereunto we will adde an other like ſynod held at London by this archbiſhop, being the laſt except one which he kept. In this ſynod was queſtion touching bearing of the charge of the biſhops going to the councell of Baſill by all the clergie; but the inferior prelats would not impart anie thing thereunto, for it was no charge to be laid vpon them, becauſe that biſhops and abbats had onelie places in generall councels; therefore there was foure pence of the pound onelie leuied of all biſhops and abbats to defraie the expenſe of ſuch as went vnto that generall councell. To which ſynod thus held at London did Eugenius the pope direct his letters, wherein he declared, that he had giuen the biſhoprike of Elie by waie of prouiſion to Lodouike archbiſhop of Rone. For (as ſaith a writer) Fuit tum Philippus Morgan ſenex egregiè cordatus Elienſis ordine 23, qui vitam in ſenectute tam diuturnam produxit, vt papæ commendationem, quam tota tunc ſynodus execrata eſt, morte Lodouici qui ante eum obijt irritam fruſtraret. But trulie ſauing correction (which I ſpeake in reuerence to that learned booke) I ſuppoſe it was not ſo: for in the catalog of the biſhops of Elie, Lodouike Liſburne archbiſhop of Rone ſucceeded Philip Morgan in the ſaid biſhoprike, and held the ſame after the death of Morgan ſix yeares, and ſo manie moneths, if the records be true which I haue ſeene of that ſee. To this archbiſhop did William Lindwood dedicat the archiepiſcopall conſtitutions which he did gather togither, digeſt in good order, and expound with learned comments; this William Lindwood being firſt officiall of the court of the arches, after lord keeper of the priuie ſeale, and at length aduanced to the biſhoprike of ſaint Dauids.

William Lindwood made the archiepiſcopall conſtitutions.

Chicheleie built a college and hoſpitall where he was borne.

This archbiſhop Chicheleie, deſirous to leaue ſome memories of charitable works, did in Higham ferries, where (as is beforeſaid) he was borne, build a ſtatelie college, in which he placed ſecular clerks and prebends, indued with benefices and eccleſiaſticall dignities. Beſide which alſo in the ſame towne, he erected an hoſpitall for poore men, and procured much land and releefe to be giuen thereunto, which after was augmented by his brethren Robert and William Chicheleie citizens of London. With the finiſhing of which building, the biſhop did not yet reſt as one ſatiſfied therewith, for he did alſo in Oxford erect a famous college for learning called All ſoules college, and an other college there alſo called ſaint Barnard, which was afterward increaſed and augmented with liuings and lands by ſir Thomas White knight citizen and maior of London, and S. Iohns college. Moreouer, he repared the librarie at Canturburie, and furniſhed the ſame with books of all ſorts, who during his life builded his owne toome wherein he would be buried in the church of Canturburie by the conſent of the moonks; and firſt commanded the procurators of the court of the arches to be apparelled (whileſt the iudge did ſit) in that attire which the bachellors of art doo vſe in the vniuerſitie. This worthie archbiſhop died the twelfe daie of Aprill, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred fortie and three, being the one and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt, after that he gouerned the ſame ſee nine and twentie yeares and one moneth, being buried in the north part of the preſbyterie or chaire of Canturburie in that toome which he had made in his life time, with this epitaph, which is there yet to be ſeene:

Chicheleie builded All ſoules college and ſaint Barnard college, now ſaint Iohns college in Oxford.

Chicheleie repared the librarie of Canturburie, and builded his toome.

Hic iacet Henricus Chichelee legum doctor, quondam cancellarius Sarum, qui anno octauo Henrici quarti regis Anglorum ambaſſiator tranſmiſſus, in ciuitate Senenſe per manus eiuſdem papæ in Meneuenſem epiſcopum conſecratus eſt: hic etiam Henricus anno ſecundo Henrici quinti in hac ſancta eccleſia in archiepiſcopum paſtoraliter à Iohanne papa 23 ad eandem tranſlatus eſt, qui obijt An. Dom. milleſimo quadringenteſimo quadrageſimo tertio, menſis Aprilis die 12.

Cœtus ſanctorum concorditer iſte precetur,
Vt Deus ipſorum meritis ſibi propitietur.

Iohn Stafford.

Iohn Stafford, ſonne of the earle Stafford, was borne at Abbatſburie in Dorſetſhire, did follow the ſtudie of the lawes, who being in the end made doctor thereof, did vſe the office of an aduocat in the court of the arches, whom Henrie Chicheleie archbiſhop of Canturburie did ſubſtitute to be his vicar generall in ſpirituall cauſes, and hearer of matters perteining to the eccleſiaſticall court: adding further to theſe publike functions, the deanrie of ſaint Martins in London, and the prebend of Merton belonging to the church of Lincolne. Whereupon this Stafford being knowne vnto king Henrie the fift, was called to the priuie councell, and had the keeping of the priuie ſeale. Then was he made treſuror of England, deane of Wels, and canon of the church of Saliſburie, being after the death of king Henrie the fift aduanced to the biſhoprike of Bath (by waie of prouiſion) by Martine the pope. Which doone, he was chancellor of England, and by Eugenius the 1443 pope tranſlated from Bath to the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie. Who receiuing the buls of his tranſlation in the biſhops houſe of Bath, went the next daie to the king at Eltham, where he did his homage for his temporalties, and receiued the pall the three and twentith of Auguſt ſent from the ſaid Eugenius [illegible] deliuered vnto him by the biſhop of Roche[illegible]. But becauſe I will ſpeake more of this man in another large booke of the liues of the chancellors of England, as I will alſo all other archbiſhops of Canturburie, which haue poſſeſſed that place, I will ſaie no more of him in this diſcourſe; but that being taken with an ague in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred fiftie and two, at Lambeth, he went to Maidſtone, where (after that he had beene biſhop eight yeares, ten moneths, and fifteene daies) he departed the world. Two daies after whoſe death his bodie was caried to Canturburie by the moonks clothed in white, being after laid in the ground, neere to the place on which happened the martyrdome of Thomas Becket before the new chapell of the virgine Marie, about whoſe image and vnder whoſe feete are written theſe verſes in manie places defaced, the braſſe being ſtollen awaie, as is yet to be ſéene in the church of Canturburie: which epitaph although it be vnperfect, yet I will not refuſe to ſet it downe to perpetuate the ſame, leaſt in following time it might be all ſpoiled, as ſome part thereof alredie is. About the toome are theſe verſes:

Aurea lux modico præſul iam conditur iſto,
Eccleſiæ ſplendor, gloria, lumen, apex,
Stafford vt ſidus Anglos ſua lumina ſparſit,
Regni dum celſis fungitur officijs,
Nam cancellarius fuit ac theſaurarius æquus,
Heu nequeo——————————
——————————————————
——————————————dolet,
M. quingenteno quater hunc dempto duodeno,
Hic anno Domini morte ruit celeri,
Vrbani feſto, ſibi Chriſte quies precor eſto,
Defunctus mundo viuit & ille polo.
Noſce te ipſum.

Lineæ ductæ indicant nonnulla deſiderari.

Vnder whoſe féet alſo are theſe following verſes placed, being a dialog betwéene the graueſtone and the paſſenger, expreſſing his perſon and honor:

Cuias fuit nunties, quem celas ſaxea moles?
Stafford antiſtes fuerat dictúſque Iohannes,
Qua ſedit ſede marmor quæſo ſimul ede,
Pridem Bathoniæ regni totius, & inde
Primas egregius, pro præſule funde precatus,
Aureolam gratus hunc det de virgine natus.

Iohn Kempe.

Iohn Kempe borne at Wie in Kent, being doctor of the law, was made archdeacon of Durham, after which, in the ſecond yeare of Henrie Chichleie archbiſhop of Canturburie, he was made deane of the arches: then, as ſaith Matthew Parker in the life of this Kempe, Normaniæ ducatus præfectus prætorio fuit. From thenſe he was choſen biſhop of Rocheſter, who ſitting there thrée yeares, was tranſlated to Chicheſter; which he caſting behind alſo, was in the yeare following remooued to London, where when he had remained foure yeares, he was made archbiſhop of Yorke; and laſtlie by the popes prouiſion and the moonks election aduanced to the ſée of Canturburie; being alſo made cardinall firſt of the title of ſaint Balbine, and then of the title of ſaint Rufine, by which he had as manie eccleſiaſticall honors and promotions as might be, vnleſſe that he had béene pope. He died at Lambeth, after that he had béene biſhop of Canturburie one yeare and fiue and twentie wéeks, the eleuenth kalends of Aprill. After which in the kalends of Aprill his bodie was caried to Canturburie, where his funerals were performed by the biſhops of London and Rocheſter and the moonks of Canturburie, and was buried betwéene the archbiſhops ſeat and the toome of Iohn Stratford, at the ſouth doore of the chaire. In whoſe funerall almes, euerie one of the church of Canturburie that was in holie orders, had thirtéene ſhillings & foure pence giuen vnto him, and the others but ſix ſhillings and eight pence. Which his benignitie and liberalitie is recorded to none other end, but to ſhew that he did in theſe manie yeres and manie remooues to ſo manie honors, gather great riches, wherewith he aduanced his kinred, preferring ſome in Kent to the order of knighthood, and others to other dignities. Of this man ſhall be more ſpoken in my large booke of the chancellors of England, at this time concluding this diſcourſe of him with this epitaph, being yet extant on his toome in Canturburie: Hic iacet reuerendiſſimus in Chriſto pater & dominus Iohannes Kemp, tituli ſancti Rufini ſacroſanctæ Romanæ eccleſiæ presbyter cardinalis, qui obijt 20 die menſis Martij anno Domini 1453, cuius animæ, &c.

1452

1453
1454 as ſaith Onuphrius. See the cardinals, pag. 1167.

Thomas Bourchier.

1454

Thomas Bourchier biſhop of Elie, vpon licence for that cauſe obteined of the king, was choſen archbiſhop of Canturburie by the moonks the ninth kalends of Maie in the feaſt of ſaint George; the ſame being knowne to the pope in the kalends of Iune, who forthwith by his buls confirmed him in the ſame: of whom I haue ſpoken in my treatiſe of the cardinals, pag. 1167, who died in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and ſix, after that he had béene biſhop of Canturburie two and thirtie yeres, and was buried in a ſumptuous toome of marble and alabaſter, ſituat on the north ſide of the high altar of the church of Canturburie, with this epitaph: Hic iacet reuerendus in Chriſto pater Thomas Bourchier ſacroſanctæ Romanæ eccleſiæ, tituli ſancti Ciriaci in Thermis, presbyter cardinalis, archiepiſcopus huius eccleſiæ, qui obijt 30 die menſis Martij, anno Dom. 1486, cuius animæ, &c. He gaue to the vniuerſitie of Cambridge one hundred and twentie pounds.

Iohn Morton.

Iohn Morton borne at Béere in Dorſetſhire, did applie his ſtudie at Oxford, who increaſing in the ciuill and canon law, was after an aduocat in the arches: then he was by Thomas Bourchier archbiſhop of Canturburie endowed with manie ſpirituall liuings, and commended to king Henrie the ſixt, who made him of his councell. After the death of which king, he was alſo in like ſort preferred to the councell of Edward the fourth, who made him biſhop of Elie, and one of his executors. But after, being committed to the tower by Richard the third, and then deliuered to the cuſtodie of the duke of Buckingham, from whom he fled beyond the ſea, he returned to England in the firſt yeare of the reigne of Henrie the ſeuenth, and was made chancellor of England, & then archbiſhop of Canturburie, being tranſlated thither from Elie by pope Innocent, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore & ſix. In whoſe firſt yeare of the archbiſhoprike he held a ſynod at London. Then (after that he had ruled the ſame archſée of Canturburie thirtéene years) he died, and was buried in the place which he had builded therefore in his life time. After the death of this Morton the moonks of Canturburie (by licence therefore obteined of the king) required Thomas Langton biſhop of Wincheſter, to be their archbiſhop of Canturburie: but he was conſumed with the peſtilence (which in one yere deuoured thirtie thouſand in England, amongſt which was Thomas Rotheram archbiſhop of Yorke) before he had receiued his confirmation from the pope. After whoſe death, Richard Fox was aduanced to Wincheſter, Thomas Sauage biſhop of London was tranſlated to Yorke, and William Warham obteined the ſée of London.

1486

1499

1500

Henrie Deane

Henrie Deane, being a moonke and ruler of the monaſterie of Langton, was (when Perkin Warbecke the counterfet king & rebell, ſupported by the Iriſhmen, did ſéeke to inuade England, & to diſplace Henrie the ſeuenth) by eſpecial choiſe therefore ſent into Ireland by the ſaid Henrie the ſeuenth, and made chancellor of that Iland. Who going thither with ſir Edward Poinings then lord duputie, did driue Perkin Warbecke into the boggie & inacceſſible parts of Ireland amongſt the wild Iriſh, and ſpéedilie brought the other part of the Iland to obedience. During the time of which his office in that realme, he was in his abſence created biſhop of Bangor for the néereneſſe of that place vnto Ireland: which biſhoprike he did almoſt reſtore to his full perfection, and to all ſuch lands as manie by force and other waies had taken from it, which ſée being by ſuch means but poore & maimed of hir liuings, cauſed the kings of England alwaies to endow the biſhops thereof with ſome wealthie abbeie for the better maintenance of his eſtate. Whereupon when the biſhops of that ſee for more profit were abſent from the biſhoprike, and remained alwaies at ſuch abbeie, neglecting the biſhoprike, the gentlemen neere vnto it did by little and little chalenge & hold part of thoſe lands to themſelues, whereby in time this biſhoprike became verie ſmall, and ſo continued when this Henrie Deane came vnto it. But this biſhop being verie wiſe and carefull, and one that looked further into matters than his negligent predeceſſors were accuſtomed, did find out what lands were ſo deteined, who held them, by what right, and how long they had ſo doone. Whereupon in concluſion he got almoſt all the ſame lands to the ſee againe, by the helpe of the common people which ſupported him therein, for the declaration whereof I thinke it not vnfit to ſet downe the maner thereof, ſomewhat after this ſort.

The decaie of the biſhoprike of Bangor.

He reſtoreth the biſhoprike of Bangor to the lands loſt.

There is on the north part of the Ile of Mona or Mon (now called Angleſeie, but falſlie in Polydor made to be the Ile of Man) an Iland placed betweene the promontories of Corneti, and that head which is called Caput ſanctum, or Holie head: this Iland is in the old Brittiſh toong termed ẏnıſ i. Moylr Honnicit, that is, The Iland of porpaſſes or other beaſts and ſea foules, and obteining that name becauſe of the great plentie of ſea beaſts and birds that were taken there. Now this Iland being ſometime, and that ancientlie belonging to the biſhoprike of Bangor, this Henrie Deane found poſſeſſed with vnrightfull owners. Whereupon, when the inhabitants would not reſtore the ſame, but did with force reſiſt him: he ſetting vpon them by ſea and land, did with ſtrength recouer the ſame, and redeliuer it to the biſhoprike of Bangor. Beſides which, he beſtowed great charge in that place, in reparing the church and biſhops palace there: both which long before in the time of Henrie the fourth were deſtroied with fire by the rebell Owen Glendor. After which, this Henrie Deane was remoued from Bangor to Saliſburie, who departing from that biſhoprike of Bangor, did yet leaue there the miter, and the paſtorall croſier to his ſucceſſor Peneus, with this condition, that he ſhould proceed in the reparing and reſtitution of the church of Bangor as he had alreadie begun, which was accordinglie performed by the ſucceſſor.

Matt. Parker in vita Henrici Denei. pag. 346.

After that this Henrie was tranſlated to Saliſburie, he remained not long there, but was after the death of Morton aduanced to the ſee of Canturburie, 1500 in which yeare, pope Alexander did at Rome 1501 celebrat the yeare of iubile; which iubile and the yeare ended, the ſame pope ſent the pall to the archbiſhop of Canturburie by Adrian of Caſtilia his ſecretarie, which the biſhop of Lichfield and Couentrie (hauing power therefore from the pope) did deliuer vnto the biſhop at Lambeth. Beſides theſe things, there happened nothing worthie the remembrance in the time of this archbiſhop: who after that he had gouerned the ſee of Canturburie two yeares, 1502 died at Lambeth the fifteenth daie of Februarie, from whenſe his bodie was brought along by the riuer of Thames (with three and thirtie mariners all clothed in blacke) vnto Feuerſham in a barge, adorned after the moorning faſhion, with burning torches and wax lights: which bodie was from Feuerſham alſo by the ſame men with like funerall manner caried in a coffin to Canturburie, where he was buried by the ſame place on which Thomas Becket was killed, as the ſaid Henrie had before appointed by his teſtament; in which he bequeathed a ſiluer image of ſaint Iohn the euangeliſt, of one hundred fiftie and one ounces, which at this daie after fiue ſhillings the ounce amounteth to the ſumme of two and thirtie pounds fifteene ſhillings: further bequeathing fiue hundred pounds towards the charges of his funerall. In the performance whereof, Thomas Wolſeie (who was then his chaplen) with Richard Gardiner (another of his chaplens) both were by his executors appointed ouerſeers for his ſaid buriall, which they executed verie ſumptuouſlie, ſetting this epitaph vpon him.

Sub hoc marmore iacet corpus reuerendiſsimi in Chriſto patris & domini, domini Henrici Deane, quondam prior prioratus de Langhtona, deinde Bauchorenſis, ac ſucceſsiuè Sarum epiſcopi, poſtremò verò huius almæ eccleſiæ metropolitanus archiepiſcopalis, qui diem ſuum clauſit extremum apud Lambith, 15 die menſis Februarij, anno 1502, & ſuæ tranſlationis ad hanc ſedem anno ſecundo, cuius animæ propitietur Deus.

William Warham.

William Warham borne of a gentlemanlie familie in Hampſhire, was brought vp in Wincheſter ſchoole, who being after ſent to Oxford to a college of Wickhams foundation, did there in his adoleſcencie applie the ciuill law, and atteining to the degree of doctor therein, was after maiſter of the rolles, chancellor to Henrie the ſeauenth, and ambaſſador into Burgundie to Margaret ducheſſe of that countrie, about the remouing of hir from the defenſe of Parkine Warbecke. Next he was made biſhop of London, choſen to that place (as ſaith a record of that ſee) in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and three, and after remoued to Canturburie in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and fiue, as a booke belonging to that biſhoprike of London dooth affirme. But Matthew Parker ſaith, 1503 that after the death of Deane he was remoued to Canturburie in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and three, who receiuing his pall of the pope, was the ninth of March, which fell in Lent, inthroniſed in Canturburie, 1504 after the moſt ſtatelie and pompious maner that might be, the whole order whereof was in a roll ſet out and printed by 1532 Matthew Parker biſhop of Canturburie.

This biſhop going to Canturburie, tooke vp his lodging in the perſonage houſe of S. Stephans, belonging to Warham archdeacon of Canturburie, and brother to this archbiſhop: vpon which the archdeacon Warham had before beſtowed great coſt, which houſe comming afterward to ſir Chriſtopher Hales knight, who added ſomewhat thervnto, is now in the yere one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore & ſix, in the poſſeſſion of ſir Roger Manhood knight, chiefe baron of the excheker, who hath not onelie there built certeine almeſhouſes, but alſo greatlie augmented the ſaid houſe with ſtatelie buildings, aſwell of places of neceſſarie offices, as alſo of ſtate and interteinement of ſtrangers. At this houſe (I ſaie) did this archbiſhop reſt himſelfe, where he was taken with a deadlie diſeaſe, and being now verie old, did there (after he had gouerned the church of Canturburie eight and twentie years) depart this life, leauing his bodie to be caried to Canturburie, and there to be buried in a ſmall chapell which he had built in his life time, beſides that place where Thomas Becket was ſlaine in the church of Canturburie.

Thomas Cranmer.

Thomas Cranmer borne in Notinghamſhire, of an ancient & worſhipfull familie of the Cranmers, was by licence obteined from king Henrie the eight (whoſe chaplen he was) choſen archbiſhop of Canturburie. But Clement the ſeuenth then pope of Rome (who much doubted the kings mind and fauor towards that ſee) was vncerteine what to doo, either to receiue or reiect Cranmer for archbiſhop of Canturburie. At length, writing more mildlie to the king than he was accuſtomed, he beſought him to defend Cranmer choſen to the ſee of Canturburie: but this labor ſucceeded with no good effect. For the king minding to aboliſh the authoritie of the pope, did determine to nobilitat the church of Canturburie, and to reſtore the rights of the Engliſh prouinces without anie ſubiection to Rome. But yet the pope carefull of Cranmers obedience, and of the kings fidelitie to that ſee, eaſilie granted vnto Cranmer, that he ſhould be conſecrated of what three biſhops he would; in which grant he inſerted the old oth that the biſhops made to the pope: which if he did not performe, he both excommunicated Cranmer then to be conſecrated, and the biſhop which ſhould conſecrat him. But he in his conſecration before faithfull witneſſes (as ſaith Matthew Parker) and publike notaries, did proteſt that the ſame oth onelie grew by a cuſtome of Rome, and not of chriſtian neceſſitie, and that he would not fall from the faith of a ſubiect due to his king by force of that oth; for which cauſe the oth being ſlightlie read ouer, he receiued his pall and conſecration of the biſhops of Lincolne, Exceſter, & Aſſaph; which doone, taking an oth of due obedience to the king, he receiued his temporalities, paieng nine hundred duckets for his buls.

Regiſtr. Cranm. fol. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

1533

This Cranmer thus made archbiſhop, did (beyond the opinion of manie) men by his authoritie enter the ſynod begun in the time of his predeceſſor Warham, and continued after his death by the moonks of Canturburie, which had appointed Stokeſlie biſhop of London to be preſident thereof, during the vacancie of the biſhoprike of Canturburie. At whoſe comming thither, the kings mariage with the ladie Katharine was againe called in queſtion, which was, whether it be a prohibition of the diuine law vndiſpenſable by the pope, that the brother ſhall not marie the wife of his brother carnallie knowne, he dieng without iſſue. Which matter was caried to the lower aſſemblie of the ſynod to debat: in the which, fourteene did affirme, and ſeuen did denie the ſame concluſion. One doubted of it, and another ſaid it was not a thing ordeined by the diuine law, yet diſpenſable by the pope. Amongſt the ſuperior part of the ſynod (in which the iudgements of the vniuerſities of Bononia, Pauia, and Paris, touching that matter were recited) that controuerſie moued (betweene the biſhops Stokeſlie of London and Fiſher of Rocheſter) touching the ſame, did win all the fathers (which were two hundred and ſixteene, either perſonallie, or elſe by their procurator) nineteene onelie excepted, to agree to the iudgement of the vniuerſities, as hath Matthew Parker.

But to the end this matter might be void of all controuerſie, aſwell of right as of fact: an other queſtion did ariſe, whether the carnall copulation betweene prince Arthur and queene Katharine were ſufficientlie proued: but that was referred to ſuch as were ſkilfull in the lawes and the canons: who all (except fiue or ſix) did allow the copulation, being after embraced by all the ſynod, except by the biſhop of Bath and Wels: which doone, both the parlement and the ſynod were for a time proroged. After which, the king ſent meſſengers to the ladie Katharine, to perſuade hir willinglie to depart from the king, conſidering the determination of the vniuerſities, and the opinions of the diuines and lawiers of England, and to be contented with the dower of prince Arthur. But ſhe continuing ſtedfaſt in hir determination, anſwered that ſhe would not be diſſolued from that band, which was knit by the pope through the procurement of hir father Ferdinand. Which meſſage inforced the king, conſidering the league betweene the pope & the emperor, more ſpeedilie and vehementlie to abrogat the popes authoritie out of England; leaſt they two ioining againſt him, the one in taking the part of his aunt, and the other in defending the diſpenſation granted from the ſee of Rome, might take occaſion to moleſt the king of England therefore. Whervpon king Henrie the eight, to ioine in ſtrength with ſome one great eſtat, that they two might equall the pope and the emperor, made a new league with the French king; and that the rather, becauſe he heard that the pope and the king would meete the next ſummer at Marſelles.

For which cauſe more fullie to vnderſtand the mind of the French king, it was concluded betweene the legats of both Nations, that the kings ſhuld talke togither on the borders of both their realms, betweene Calis & Bullongne, for ſo a ſtronger amitie might be ioined betweene them. Which doone accordinglie, K. Henrie after that he had declared ſome detracting doings, & the popes delaies, would haue perſuaded the French king to haue aboliſhed the popes authoritie out of the dominions of France; and that if he could not ſafelie doo it (being hindred by the iniurie of the time) that then he would faithfullie obſerue this begun and continued league betweene them, and not ioine with the pope and emperor againſt him. Whervnto the French agreed, in reſpect of the obſeruation of the league, ſhewing alſo a deſire in himſelfe to baniſh the popes authoritie, which he would performe as ſoone as he might, conſidering that the power of the confederat pope and emperor was not to be feared, ſo long as they two continued in this amitie. For if the pope (ſaid he) be baniſhed England, France, and Germanie, we ſhall driue him to that ſtreict, that he muſt of neceſſitie ſerue as the chapleine of the emperor; which ſpeech ended, they went to Bullongne, where they were banketted; from whenſe the French king brought the king of England to Calis, where the next daie the league was againe confirmed, and the French returned to Paris, and the Engliſh to London. At whoſe returne the parlement and ſynod did againe begin, in which queene Katharine was by the law of the land ſeparated from the king, and after by the biſhops of Canturburie, London, Wincheſter, and Lincolne diuorſed from him at Dunſtable. Whervpon the king maried the ladie Anne Bullen, mother to the moſt worthie queene Eliſabeth. In which yeare alſo, both by decree of parlement & ſynod, the popes authoritie was wholie baniſhed out of England, and a queſtion mooued in the ſame ſynod, whether the biſhop of Rome hath greater iuriſdiction ouer England giuen to him in the ſcripture than anie other ſtrange biſhop hath. At what time it was agreed vpon by all the fathers in the higher ſynod, that the pope had not by the word of God anie authoritie in England: wherevnto all the inferior ſynod conſented in like maner, except one which doubted thereof, and foure which did attribute to the pope vniuerſall power in the eccleſiaſticall adminiſtration. After which, it was by the ſame ſynod decreed, that the archbiſhop of Canturburie ſhould not be called the legat of the apoſtolike ſee, but in place therof ſhould be named the primat and metropolitan of all England: of all which doings the archbiſhop did certifie the king by publike inſtrument, written by a notarie. Whervpon it was decreed in the parlement, that no appellations ſhould be from thenſefoorth made to Rome: after which, the parlement and ſynod were proroged vntill the next yeare.

Whether the biſhop of Rome hath greater iuriſdiction ouer England than any other ſtrange biſhop.

1535

And becauſe manie bookes were by the pontificall authoritie (being baniſhed) printed and diſperſed abroad, the ſynod firſt cenſured them, and determined to requeſt the king that the bible might be turned into Engliſh, whereby it might eaſilie be diſcerned what was conſonant to the word of God. Againſt gainſt which Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, being of the kings priuie councell, did ſecretlie labor as much as in him did lie. But by the fauor and intreatie of queene Anne, it was obteined that the Engliſh bible ſhould be printed, and placed in euerie church in ſome conuenient roome, whither the people might come to read it at their pleaſure: which bible was the firſt time printed in Paris, at what time Edmund Boner biſhop of London was then in France for the king: to which Boner the charge and ouerſight thereof was committed. But theſe proceedings of the king tooke not ſuch effect then, as they did in the following time of king Edward, becauſe that the ladie Anne Bullen, who mightilie fauored theſe cauſes, was ſhortlie after beheaded. Upon which putting the bible in Engliſh, the higher ſynod of England decreed (to the end that all ſtrife and contention might be auoided which ſhould riſe in diſputation vpon diuine matters) that none of the vnlearned multitude ſhould diſpute of the catholike faith, the like whereof was by parlement eſtabliſhed with theſe lawes, that the king ought to be ſupreame head of the church of England, that the clergie of England ſhould be ſubiect to the king, that nothing hereafter vnder anie pretenſe ſhould be paied out of England to the pope or to the court of Rome, that biſhops ſhould be conſecrated within the realme, that all other things ſhould be doone here which were vſed to be doone at Rome, and that the firſt fruits and tenths of eccleſiaſticall benefices ſhould for euer after be paied to the prince. At which time the popes authoritie, which had before continued in England nine hundred yeares and more, being thought inuincible, was eaſilie reiected and ouerthrowne. But yet all the relikes of the Romane lawes were not fullie taken awaie, vntill the time of king Edward the ſixt, who being borne about this time, had to his godfathers, and godmother, this Cranmer archbiſhop of Canturburie, the duke of Northfolke, and the princeſſe Marie his ſiſter the kings daughter. Now vpon theſe things thus by parlement eſtabliſhed, there aroſe a great iar amongſt the members of the Romane church, and the profeſſors of the kings ſupremaſie touching the ſame. Wherfore was aſſigned Thomas Cromwell, a man of great wit through much experience, to be his vicar generall, who with Thomas Cranmer, gouerned the church of England, then toſſed with ſo doubtfull doctrine, that the Romane power could not in his time take hold thereof. At what time Cromwell was placed by the king, to ſit in the conuocation houſe, becauſe he ſuſpected the fidelitie of the biſhops, leaſt they would call backe their minds, concerning the ſupremaſie, whereto they were ſo hardlie drawen to conſent. But afterwards, ſome willing to cleare themſelues of that ſlackneſſe in admitting the kings ſupreame power, there ſtepped foorth Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, which ſet foorth a booke of true obedience, wherein he was moſt far from the pope; and attributed the chiefeſt power to the prince, to gouerne the church of England next vnder God. Alſo Tunſtall, Stokeſleie, and Longland, biſhops of Durham, London, and Lincolne did ſtronglie defend the ſame in their publike ſermons before the king. And Edmund Boner after biſhop of London, but then archdeacon of Leiceſter, that made the preface to that booke of Gardiner, was ſent to Rome as the kings ambaſſador, to renounce the popes authoritie, for which cauſe he was deare vnto the lord Cromwell, vntill that he was after made biſhop of London.

The bible turned into Engliſh.

That none of the vnlearned multitude ſhould diſpute of the catholike faith.

1536

Thomas Cromwell vicar generall of the king.

Boner ſent to Rome to renounce the popes authoritie.

The chiefe diſpoſing of all eccleſiaſticall cauſes thus committed to theſe two, the archbiſhop Cranmer, and the lord Cromwell, there was one other ſynod called in the nones of Iune, in which the lord Cromwell as the kings vicar generall required to haue a place aſſigned vnto him, to whome the archbiſhop gaue the roome next vnto himſelfe. In which ſynod alſo there was a booke compoſed by the cleargie, aſſigning manie cauſes wherefore the king ſhould not be preſent in generall councels of the cleargie, which booke ſubſcribed by all them, the lord Cromwell did approoue by the ſentence of the king. And becauſe the aboliſhing of the popes authoritie grew in the time of this archbiſhop, it ſhall not be vnfit in this place to ſhew where this Cranmer (before he entered into the gouernement of the church, and of the common wealth) was borne, and how he was bred vp. This Thomas Cranmer therefore was borne at Arſlecton, a towne in Notinghamſhire in the prouince of Yorke, of a gentlemanlie familie, for there is yet in Lincolneſhire a place called at this daie of his name, Cranmer hall, which belonged to his anceſtors, the enſigne and armes of which familie doo ſhew (as ſaith Matthew Parker) that he came out of Normandie with the conqueror, which was prooued in the reigne of king Henrie the eight by a certeine noble man of France, called alſo Cranmer, being with others ſent ambaſſador hither into England, bearing the ſame armes, whom Thomas Cranmer the archbiſhop of Canturburie did inuite to a ſtatelie banket, to the end that he might of him inquire out the originall of his gentilitie and armes: and vpon inquiſition made by the heralds, it was found that they both had one root and originall of gentilitie, and that their armes were not different in anie point.

The king not to be preſent in the generall councels of the cleargie.

The birth of Cranmer.

The armes, antiquitie, and pedegree of Cranmer.

This Thomas Cranmer the archbiſhop, being the ſonne of Thomas Cranmer of Arſlecton, and of Agnes his wife, daughter to Laurence Hatfield of Willoughbie eſquier (this ſecond Thomas being ſon of Iohn Cranmer of Arſlecton, and of Iane his wife, the daughter of Iohn Marſhall of Puſleham eſquier; that Iohn being the ſonne of one other Iohn Cranmer, which maried Iſabell the daughter and heire of William Aſlenton or Aſlecton, the ſonne of Simon the ſonne of Reginold Aſlenton knight) was by the eſpeciall care of his father diligentlie brought vp in his yoong yeares in learning. Whoſe ſchoole maiſter (by his ouer much ſeueritie) did in his childiſh age ſo feare and daunt his flexible and gentle mind, that all his life after he felt his memorie and readineſſe of wit to be much weakened. But his father, to the end that he ſhould not vtterlie caſt awaie ſtudie (as one that lothed not learning) did permit him to mingle hunting, hawking, ſhooting, riding, and other exerciſes of paſtimes with his learning. With which when he being archbiſhop would recreat his mind from grauer matters, he ſo vſed the ſame, that none of his familie could manage his horſſe, or hunt or hawke more cunninglie, who (although he were weake eied) would yet in bending his bow artificiallie ſtrike a wild beaſt. From this his information in his yoong yeares, he came to Cambridge to Ieſus college, where he was made maſter of arts. Now bicauſe he had maried a wife, he was inforced to leaue the college, in reſpect that the ſtatutes of the houſe did alow none to be maried. But he not yet forſaking his ſtudie, did frequent the publick ſchooles, diſputations and lectures in an other houſe of Cambridge called Buckingham college, and for that cauſe conſidering his learning and life, he had the ſalarie of a reader appointed him, whereby he taught for publike reward, and releeued his wiues neceſſitie. All which notwithſtanding, bicauſe wealth did not ſufficientlie abound, he was conſtreined to prouide food and lodging for his wife in an inne there in Cambridge called the Dolphine, Cranmer maried his firſt wife.

Cranmer hath the ſalarie of a reader in the vniuerſitie of Cambridge.

for the miſtreſſe of that houſe was of kindred vnto him, to which place he did often reſort for his wiues ſake, which was the cauſe whie his enimies reported that he was vnlearned, and brought vp in an inne and not in the ſchooles. But the next yeare after the mariage, his wife died in childbed, after whoſe death he was reſtored to his old place in Ieſus college, being then accounted ſo learned, as writeth Matthew Parker, that when cardinall Woolſeie began to build that goodlie college at Oxford called Chriſtes church, and determined to furniſh the ſame with lerned men gathered out of all the realme, he required Cranmer to make one of the ſocietie of his college. But Cranmer when he was now vpon his iorneie towards Oxford, was admoniſhed by ſome of his freends that met him, that ſith he had giuen ouer all other ſciences, and onelie bent himſelfe to diuinitie, that he ought in the ſame rather to follow humilitie than magnificence, and for that cauſe ſhould not depart from Ieſus college, as a more commodious place for his purpoſe. Wherefore turning backe, he was ſhortlie after made diuinitie lecturer, then doctor of diuinitie, and appointed one of the three, which had the examination of all ſuch as were to take degree in the ſtudie of diuinitie.

Cranmer made diuinitie lecturer in Cambridge.

Theſe things thus paſſing forward, he was brought to king Henrie the eight, about the matter of the kings marriage (before ſpoken of) with queene Katharine. And being the kings ambaſſador to pope Clement the ſeauenth, and to the emperour Charles the fift, he was made by the pope generall penitentiarie of England, & by the king archdeacon of Tanton. But when (as we ſaid before) the affaires about the validitie of the ſaid marriage of the king was laid vpon him, he taried at Norimberg (where he fell in companie with Oſiander, and where he maried his ſecond wife) ſo long as the emperour was in the warres againſt the Turke beſieging Vienna. After which, when the emperour had put the Turke to flight, and that Cranmer was to follow Ceſar into Spaine, he left his wife with hir kindred in Germanie, vntill he returned into England. When he was come into England, he was vpon the death of Warham (as is before ſaid) made archbiſhop of Canturburie. Then Cromwell, who was the kings vicegerent, wrote to Cranmer to call a ſynod, into which when Cromwell had entred, he declared that it was the kings pleaſure, that all matters ſhould be reduced to the rule of the ſcripture, and that all things ſhould be taken out of the church, which were not ſupported by the authoritie of the word of God. Wherevpon they began with the ſacraments, touchching which Cromwell demanded of Alexander Aleſius a Scot, whome he had brought into the councell to ſpeake his mind, what his opinion was: who concluded, that by the appointment of God there were but two ſacraments, baptiſme and the ſupper, againſt whome Stokeſleie biſhop of London did earneſtlie contend, approuing ſeauen ſacraments. Wherupon the archbiſhop of Yorke, the biſhops of Lincolne, Bath, Cheſter, and Norwich did follow the opinion of Stokeſleie. To anſwer whom Cranmer had a ſpeech of the ſacraments of humane traditions, of ſole life, and other things, affirming that nothing ought to be determined in ſynods, but things prooued by ſcriptures, and that ſuch hunting after words and mens opinions, was to be left to ſophiſters in the ſchooles. To whome Fox biſhop of Hereford, who was late come out of Germanie (being ſent thither ambaſſador by the king) did ioine himſelfe with the biſhops of Saliſburie, Elie, and Worceſter. By which diſcourſe of this ſynod, Cranmer and Cromwell found out who were bent to the Roman religion, & who would imbrace the contrarie.

Cranmer ſent ambaſſador to the pope and to the emperour.

Cranmer maried his ſecond wife at Norimberg.

1537

Controuerſie in the ſynod about the ſacraments.

Wherevpon the king by the councell of this prelat Cranmer, tooke awaie all pilgrimages, and ouerthrew their chapels. And bicauſe authoritie was giuen to him both by ſynod of the cleargie, and parlement of the temporaltie for viſitation and correction of the church of England, he appointed viſitors through the realme, which ſhould ſearch out the ſtate, condition, and maner of the moonks and monaſteries, who in the next yeare certified the effect of their inquiſition. In the meane time the pope appointed a generall councell at Mantua, which occaſioned the king to ſet foorth a booke, that not the pope but the emperor and kings had authoritie to ſummon generall councels, and that the place was not conuenient for ſuch as would obiect anie thing to the pope, and laſtlie that it was verie dangerous for the king of England to come thither, eſpeciallie ſith the emperor and the French king were in wars, into one of whoſe hands he muſt needs fall by the popes deceits, who being caſt out of England had excommunicated the king, and for reuenge had ſtirred vp other kings againſt him.

Viſitors appointed through England.

The king ſetteth out a booke, that not the pope but princes ought to ſummon councells.

1538

The next yeare Reginald Poole, a little before by pope Paulus the third made cardinall, was (bicauſe that he being ambaſſadour to the emperour, the French king, and other princes had perſuaded them againſt king Henrie the eight) condemned of treaſon, and for euer baniſhed England. After which, in the yeare following, the whole companie of profeſſed votaries, moonks, nuns, and friers, were vtterlie ouerthrowne; which ſo long as it indured, the pope did not deſpaire of recouering himſelfe in England, and yet was not wholie hopeleſſe thereof, bicauſe that he perceiued certeine of his ceremonies to be yet obſerued. For although in the next parlement Cromwell was created earle of Eſſex for ouerthrowing the pope and the moonks; yet was the maſſe and ceremonies thereof, with ſole life, confeſſion, and ſuch things made treaſon and baniſhment, the ſame law being called the ſix Articles. Againſt which though Cranmer and Cromwell did reſiſt all they could, whileſt the matter was handled in the parlement, yet Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter (of late returned from the diſpatch of two weightie ambaſſages, the one to the emperor, the other to the French king) by fauour, policie, and power, obteined of the king to grant vnto it, againſt the kings mind, as ſaith Matthew Parker. Which might appeare by this, that when the law was made touching preeſts mariages, he called Cranmer vnto him, then ſorrowful for himſelfe, his wife, and his children; who praiſing his doctrine and grauitie, and declaring the cauſes of his conſent to that law, he willed him to go home and liberallie to receiue ſuch geſſe as he would ſend vnto him. Wherevpon the archbiſhop of Canturburie departing, the king called vnto him the dukes of Norffolke and Suffolke, the earle of Eſſex and other councellors, and ſpake to them verie honourablie of Cranmer. Who though he yeelded to that law, yet he ſeemed in learning and in the thing it ſelfe to go beyond them all. Wherefore the king would that they ſhould go to that reuerend father and his metropolitan, to comfort him, and bid him be of good cheere. But in the meane time Cranmer fearing this law, had ſent his wife into Germanie.

1539

Monaſteries diſſolued.

The law of the ſix articles eſtabliſhed.

Cranmer ſendeth his wife into Germanie.

Theſe noble men comming accordinglie to the biſhop, and being by him interteined with great bankets, did according to the kings mind (to the end that they might deliuer him from all feare and care) laie before him the fauor which the king bare vnto him, the eloquence, grauitie, and learning that were in him: all which they commended, with all ſuch words and deeds as he vſed in the parlement, ſhewing vnto him, that there was no cauſe whie he ſhould feare thoſe that were againſt his opinion, ſo godlie, learnedlie, and eloquentlie vttered, though it did not preuaile, ſith by that diſſention and contrarietie in opinion he had woone them to him. For although cardinall Woolſeie by his obſtinat mind did withdraw the minds of his freends; yet he in diuine matters did with his pietie, clemencie, and gentleneſſe ioine his verie aduerſaries vnto him. And further, that he ſhould not miſlike the king, the nobilitie, or anie other of that law, or for his owne opinion, although it were contrarie. This meſſage being thus appointed for the comfort of Cranmer, was in the end turned to the reproch of Cromwell. For when Cromwell had ſaid, that Cranmer was a happie man in this, that the king would neuer admit anie complaint againſt Cranmer were it iuſt or vniuſt; but if anie matter were againſt himſelfe, or anie other councellor, the king would then diligentlie inquire out the matter: one of the two dukes ſaid; No man knew better what difference was betweene Woolſeie & Cranmer than Cromwell did, ſith he knew them both, & was the ſeruant of Woolſeie. With which Cromwell being touched as if it had beene ſome diſgrace to him, anſwered, he neuer alowed or fauored Woolſeies conditions, although he ſometime were one of his familie. For when Woolſeie ſought the popedome, and had determined to make Cromwell his admerall, if he were choſen, he did refuſe the ſame, and would not forſake his countrie. Which anſwer of Cromwell the duke affirmed by oth to be falſe, obiecting other reprooſes againſt Cromwell. So that this ſpeech, which at the firſt began for comforts cauſe, did at length end in bralles and deadlie enmities. But this iarring being for the preſent wiſelie pacified by Cranmer, they aroſe from the table with outward faire words, but with inward fierie and greeued harts. Vpon which beginnings of theſe ſmall euils greater did after follow; ſith thoſe things fell out (to the deſtruction of Cromwell) which he onelie did by ſound aduiſe, which was, that he procured Bonner, whome he falſlie beleeued to haue abhorred the Romane ceremonies, to be promoted to the ſee of London. Wherfore, when by that law of the ſix articles manie that went vnder ſuerties were committed to priſon and burned; the kings councell was diuided into factions, not vnknowne to the king. The chiefe of the goſpellers were Cranmer archbiſhop of Canturburie, Charles Brandon duke of Suffolke, and Thomas Cromwell earle of Eſſex, which did as much as in them laie to mitigat the ſeueritie of that law. On the other ſide, the duke of Norffolke and Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter did vehementlie incenſe the king againſt all the goſpellers. Wherevpon Bonner (when he ſaw the cauſe of the euangelicals begin to ſtagger) both by the ſaid law, the kings fauor, Gardiners freendſhip, and the dukes power, he (thinking to take the ſurer ſide) fell from Cranmer and Cromwell, and ioined himſelfe with the other part euen vntill his laſt gaſpe. Now by force of this law of the ſix articles, manie were touched in the dioceſſes of the biſhops, yea in the kings court, where the nobilitie was not ſpared; all which the pontificals or catholikes (as they termed themſelues) turned againſt Cranmer and Cromwell, by whoſe death the moonks which were noriſhed with penſions allowed to them, did hope to returne to their cloiſters. Wherevpon Cromwel was ſhortlie accuſed of treſon by the other ſide, and was the firſt (ſith there was no other preſident thereof) that was condemned without anie anſwer, and that iuſtlie, according to the ſaieng of Dauid, ſpeaking, that he falleth into the pit which he made. For this Cromwell had before procured a law, that a noble man, vpon the euidence of the kings learned councell and ſome others, might be condemned without comming to his anſwer.

Woolſeie ſeeketh the popedome.

1540

The councell diuided into factions for religion.

For the death of which Cromwell, Cranmer being in great griefe, did not thinke himſelfe anie time free from his aduerſaries; notwithſtanding which he neuer changed countenance, or was the more abaſhed, becauſe with his conſtancie and grauitie he alwaies conteined the king (almoſt caried awaie by the Romaniſts) in the defenſe of the goſpell; in ſuch ſort, that the king would not conſent to anie euill againſt him, but would preſerue him ſafe when his life ſeemed in moſt danger. For when as Gardiner vrged Cranmer to diſputation in diuinitie, in which he affirmed by certeine paralogiſms, that the conſtitutions of the apoſtles were of equall authoritie with the ſcripture, Cranmer diſprooued the ſame before the king (as hath Matthew Parker) that the king ſaid in the preſence of manie, that Cranmer being a beaten ſoldior therein was not to be wearied by nouices. Yet Gardiner the biſhop of Wincheſter not ſo leauing, ſtirred euerie one that he could againſt Cranmer; becauſe the Romane religion might be reſtored, if he were taken awaie. Wherfore at Canturburie in Kent manie were appointed by Gardiners procurement which ſhould accuſe Cranmer of other quarels than of hereſie. At what time alſo in the parlement ſir Iohn Goſtwike a knight of Bedfordſhire affirmed, that all the ſeed of hereticall ſedition came from Cranmer.

The conſtancie of Cranmer.

Gardiner prouoketh Cranmer to diſputation in diuinitie.

Cranmer accuſed of other things than of hereſie.

Wherevpon ſome of the nobilitie and councell dealt with the king, that Cranmer might be excluded from the councell, and committed vnto the Tower, vntill further inquiſition of the truth might be made of ſuch things as were obiected againſt him. For ſo long as he ſat preſent in the councell, euerie one there would be afraid to ſpeake what they knew againſt him. Wherevpon rumors were ſpread, that Cranmer by the ſecret iudgement of the king ſhould be condemned, & looſe his hed, as Cromwell had doone: which was ſo thought by all men as well freends as enimies, wherfore Cranmer ſecretlie with tears bewailed the times, though outwardlie he ſhewed a merie countenance. The king perceiuing wherevnto tended this drift of the pontificals, (which fauored the Roman religion) after ſupper, for recreations cauſe tooke barge to row vp and downe the Thames, and ſo commanded the ſtierſman to bend his courſe to Lambeth. Which being perceiued by ſome of the archbiſhops men which ſtood on the bridge, they haſtened and told the archbiſhop thereof; who ſpeedilie came to the bridge to ſalute the king either paſſing by, or elſe to receiue him on ſhore, and to lead him to his houſe. But the king commanded him to come into his bote and to ſit downe by him, with whome he had long and ſecret talke, the watermen ſtill houering with the bote on the riuer; amongeſt which talke the king complained that England was greatlie troubled with hereticall factions and diuiſions ſince the death of Cromwell: and that it was greatlie to be feared, that if theſe contentions were long foſtered vnder the pretenſe of religion, there would more inward euils grow, and ciuill warres ariſe. Wherfore the diſſentions in religion were ſpeedilie to be appeſed. For performance wherof the nobilitie and the councell had aduiſed to ſearch him out, who was the cheefe heretike and author of all theſe euils, who being found, ſhould be puniſhed and burned for the example of the reſidue of the multitude. At the length the king aſked of Cranmer what he thought of this aduiſe, and of the principall heretike. Whereunto Cranmer (although he was in great feare) anſwered with a good countenance

The king ſecretlie talketh with Cranmer in his barge.

nance, that the ſame councell pleaſed him well, being verie glad to heare thereof, becauſe by the puniſhment of that archheretike the reſt of the flocke of heretikes would be bridled. But with this ſpeech he did yet with a certein fatherlie reuerence toward the king modeſtlie admoniſh the king, that he ſhuld not iudge them to be heretikes, who with the word of God ſtriued againſt mens traditions. Wherevnto the king ſaid; It is rightlie ſpoken by you, for you are declared to vs by manie to be that archheretike of all our kingdome, who in Kent and in all your prouince doo ſo withſtand vs, that the beleefe of the ſix articles eſtabliſhed in parlement be not receiued of the common people; wherefore openlie declare vnto vs what you thinke, and what you haue doone of and in the ſame. Cranmer replied, that he was ſtill of the ſame mind which he openlie profeſſed himſelfe to be at the making of that law, and that yet he had not offended anie thing ſince the ſame was made. Then the king ſomewhat leauing this graue talke, merilie aſked of him, whether his inner and priuie bed were free from thoſe articles. To which Cranmer (although he knew it dangerous by that law for prieſts to haue wiues, and that he certeinlie vnderſtood that the king knew that he was maried) anſwered, that he contracted that marriage before he was archbiſhop, when he was ambaſſador to the emperor & the pope in Germanie: but now becauſe he would not offend ſo rigorous a law, he had not touched his wife ſince the making thereof, becauſe he had preſentlie ſent hir vnto hir freends in Germanie. By which plaine anſwer he wan ſuch fauor with the king, that the king incoraged him to be of good comfort, & that the ſame articles were made for his cauſe, & ſo declared to him who were his cheefe accuſors. Which when Cranmer knew to be falſe, & deuiſed by the * pontificals enuie, he required that there might be inquiſitors & iudges for the matter, ſith he feared not the danger of the law. Wherevpon the king appointed himſelfe to be inquiſitor for the ſearching out of his owne cauſe. But Cranmer ſaid the ſame would ſeeme verie vniuſt vnto his aduerſaries, that he ſhould be appointed the cenſuror and examiner of his owne actions, & ſo required an other iudge. All which not withſtanding, the king carieng that mind of Cranmer, that he would ſpeake the truth, were it good or euill, he would appoint no other to haue the examination and determination thereof but himſelfe, and ſo ſuffered him to depart home.

Te king o- neth vnto Cranmer who re his ac- ſors.

* Papiſts.

Cranmer ap- pointed by the king to be in- quiſitor in his owne cauſe.

Wherevpon Cranmer ſent doctor Cooke* his vicar generall in ſpirituall matters, and Anthonie Huſſeie notarie his publike ſcribe and meſſenger, to inquire out theſe things at Canturburie; who detracting time in the ſame (about ſome two moneths, after that they had begun) were ſuſpected to fauor the * pontificalles. In the meane time the enimies of Cranmer requeſted that he might be committed to the Tower, to anſwer thoſe matters of hereſie laid againſt him. To which importunitie the king in the end granted, if it ſhould plainlie appeare that he had offended the church or the common wealth; for now the duke of Norffolke (Cromwell being dead) and all the others being the followers of Gardener, did ſeeke to haue him committed to the Tower. Wherevpon they determined to ſend him to priſon the next daie. All which the king ſuffered, meaning yet in the end to protect him: for much about midnight the king ſent from the court ſir Anthonie Denie (one of the priuie chamber, an enimie to the * pontificals, & a freend to Cranmer) to Lambeth, to will Cranmer to come to the king; at what time Cranmer came accordinglie, to whome the king declared his mind in theſe words; All the councell are earneſt with me, that ſith the prouince of Canturburie and almoſt all England is defiled with hereticall ſects, the originall whereof was come from him, and certeine learned ſtrangers which he reteined amongſt his familie, that he might be committed to publike priſon during the time of the inquiſition therof; which if it be not doone, they cannot enter into the ground thereof with ſufficient witneſſes and proofes; which their deſire we haue granted, but whether well or no doo you iudge, and to morrow is the daie appointed therefore. Wherevpon Cranmer firſt gaue the king thanks, becauſe he would giue him warning of that ſeuere decree; affirming further, that he did not refuſe the priſon, or flee the iudgment; for hauing a cleere conſcience he had rather to trie the effect of iudgement than the euent of vniuſt ſuſpicions: onlie he required this, that ſith his doctrine and faith in matters were brought in queſtion, that he might haue vpright & learned iudges in diuinitie appointed vnto him. Which ſaid, the king called him foole, that he would ſo eaſilie enter priſon, and giue himſelfe to the iniurie of his enimies. For (ſaid the K.) if you ſhall not onelie be taken from your dignitie, but alſo from the ſight of men, and clapt in priſon, manie falſe and periured perſons may be brought foorth, which will not ſhew themſelues in your preſence, or dare to ſpeake one euill word againſt you. Wherefore, ſith you neither prouide for your ſafetie or dignitie, I will prouide you ſhall not be ouercome by your enimies. To morrow they will call you before them, and obiect certeine hereſies vnto you, and meane to ſend you to priſon; but then you ſhall require, that ſith you be one of the councell, that they deale with you in that ſort as they themſelues would be dealt withall if they were in the like danger; that is, that they would bring foorth your accuſors; and if you can not diſprooue them, that you will willinglie ſuffer impriſonment. And if they will not grant you this, but proceed to the execution of their determination, you ſhall appeale to me to haue the hearing of the matter; and then deliuer to them this token, to ſurceaſe to deale anie further with you. Wherwithall the king tooke a well knowen ring from his finger, gaue it to Cranmer, and ſent him awaie.

* Papiſts.

The king pro- hibiteth Cran- mer from go- ing vnto the Tower.

* Papiſts.

The kings ſpeeches to Cranmer.

The next daie in the morning meſſengers were ſent from the councell to bring the archbiſhop, who brought him, but could not be admitted as then to come into the councell chamber, but ſtaied without doores amongſt the pages and others. Which being declared to doctor Buts the kings phyſician, he mooued therewith, came to the archbiſhop to keepe him companie, whereby his diſgrace might ſeeme the leſſe. After which, Buts being called vnto the king, he left the biſhop, and told all the order thereof to the king. What (quoth the king) is it ſo? Doo they ſo contemptuouſlie handle the cheefe perſon of the councell? Wherewithall the king being mooued, ſent a meſſenger, to will them to let Cranmer into the councell chamber. Which being doone, the councell declared vnto him, that the king and councell vnderſtood by fame, that all England was infected with hereſie, and drawne from the catholike faith, which euill came from him and his familie; wherefore they would commit him to the Tower, & without delaie make inquiſition of the report and truth thereof. Wherevnto the archbiſhop anſwering, he required the witneſſes and accuſors to be produced openlie, to defend himſelfe: becauſe it was ſounding to iniuſtice, that the primat of England, and one of the councell, whoſe credit was neuer doubted or called in queſtion, ſhould be ſlandered by reprochfull reports, and committed to priſon, to the preiudice of his cauſe; adding further manie reſons where-wherefore they ſhould deale more fauorablie with him. But when they could neither be woone by intreatie, nor perſuaded by reaſon, Cranmer ſaid that he greatlie ſorrowed, becauſe he was inforced to appeale to the king from them, with whome he had ſo long liued in fellowſhip and ſocietie of the councell, and whoſe equitie he alwaies hoped to find in anie danger. Wherevpon deliuering to them the kings ring, he brought the matter to be determined before the king. Which doone, the lord Ruſſel, which was after created earle of Bedford, ſaid: Did I not tell you before, that the king would neuer ſuffer Cranmer to be committed to priſon, vnleſſe that he were greeuouſlie accuſed of treaſon againſt his maieſtie? In the end, they with Cranmer do come before the king, at what time the king did ſharplie rebuke the councell, deſiring greater wiſedome and grauitie amongſt them, in that they would permit Cranmer to be excluded from his place of the councell, and that he ſtood at the doore amongſt a companie of ſeruingmen; aſking moreouer, if anie of them would haue permitted ſuch an iniurie: and therevpon ſtriking his hand vpon his breaſt, he affirmed with an oth, that he was ſo much bound to Cranmer as he was not to anie other; & had made ſuch triall of his truth and integritie, as more could not be in anie prelat towards his king; adding further, that whoſoeuer loued him, ſhould eſteeme & loue Cranmer. Which being ſaid, all his aduerſaries were for feare ſilent, except the duke of Northfolke, which anſwered; It was not our purpoſe anie waie to hurt the archbiſhop, but that hanging the ſame inquiſition, he ſhould be kept in publike priſon, to the end that his innocencie and the falſeneſſe of his accuſations being knowne, he might come foorth with greater credit. To which the king ſaid; I will not haue Cranmer or anie ſuch as be deare vnto me, to be handled with this danger, or with ſuch kind of credit: but I perceiue there is certeine priuie and old hatred amongſt you, ſtirring theſe tragedies, which vnleſſe they be well ſuppreſſed, I will be an vmpier betweene you, and appeaſe the ſame my ſelfe: and with thoſe ſpeeches the king departed angerlie. Wherevpon the councell ſought fauour at Cranmers hands, and ſo to returne vnto his friendſhip, whereof he was neuer ſqueimiſh, but remitted all diſpleaſures.

Cranmer waiteth at the doore of the councell chamber.

The words of the councell to Cranmer

Cranmers anſwer to the councell.

Cranmer appealeth to the king.

Cranmer commeth for the triall of his cauſe before the king.

The councell ſeeke the fauor of Cranmer.

Now, as is before touched, when doctor Cox the vicar generall in ſpirituall cauſes for Cranmer, with Anthonie Huſſie his regiſter, remained long at Canturburie about the inquirie of the archbiſhops behauiour; the king did priuilie ſend a doctor of the law, to know what they had found either for or againſt Cranmer. Which doctor ſpeedilie comming to Canturburie, inquired of certeine reformed men (which Cox and Huſſeie did not call before them) from what fountaine all this infamie grew to Cranmer. At what time they laid all the matter vpon the prieſts, whoſe houſes he cauſed to be ſearched at midnight, where were found certeine letters written by one Gardiner, as hath Matthew Parker, ſecretarie to Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, which ſecretarie was after hanged for treaſon: in which letters was conteined all the conſpiracie againſt Cranmer. Which when the king ſaw, he began more and more to leaue the companie of the * pontificals, warning Cranmer of their intent, and commanded thoſe letters of Gardiners to be read in the parlement houſe, but Cranmer perſuaded the king to the contrarie. Theſe things doone, the * euangelicals (for ſo I terme them after Matthew Parker, which profeſſed the reformed religion) began now more and more liberallie to ſhew themſelues, being before oppreſſed by the Romaniſts or pontificals, for ſo in like ſort after the ſame author I name them that defended the Roman religion and the popes doctrine. For in the parlement latlie called, Cranmer did perſuade, that the law of the ſix articles ſhould either be vtterlie taken awaie or mitigated. In which matter although he was promiſed to haue bin ſupported by the biſhops of Worceſter, Chicheſter, and Rocheſter; yet by the importunat labor of Stephan Gardiner, he was forſaken & left alone, whereby his intent did not ſort to his deſired effect, to haue it wholie taken awaie. But yet he alone ſtanding in the matter, was for his faſtneſſe therin both commended and furthered by the king and the nobilitie, whereby he obteined ſome moderation thereof, and therewith notwithſtanding anie thing the pontificals could do, the archbiſhop grew daily more & more into the kings fauour. Whereby Cranmer gathering ſtomach, did (as he had often before) perſuade that the bible might be turned into Engliſh, and diſtributed vnto euerie church, which Gardiner and the other catholike biſhops did withſtand a long time. But when the king had granted to Cranmer all moderation and determination of eccleſiaſticall matters in that ſynod, which (as before ſaid) began with the parlement, Cranmer afreſh did vſe perſuaſions for tranſlating of the bible, the Lords praier, the apoſtles creed, and the ten commandements, into the vulgar toong or Engliſh: and further, to haue portaſſes of the Romane vſe to be aboliſhed, that mariage ſhould be permitted to the vicars generall of biſhops, that lawes ſhould be made for the ſtate of the church of England, and for the granting of a ſubſidie to the king: wherevnto the pontificals knowing the kings mind, durſt not openlie reſiſt, but ſecretlie laboured what they could againſt it: in ſuch ſort that it was a long time doubted who ſhould haue the tranſlating of the bible. For ſome would haue it committed to the vniuerſities of Oxford and Cambridge, and others would haue certeine lerned men choſen out of the ſynod to take the ſame vpon them. Then it was diſputed about the maner of tranſlating and ſignification of certeine words: as Dominus, whether it ſhould be Engliſhed the Lord or our Lord: Eccleſia, whether church or congregation: and Charitas, whether it were to be called charitie or loue. And at the end of the ſecond commandement (Thou ſhalt not make anie grauen image) Gardiner and the pontificals would haue added vnto it this ſentence, To the intent to worſhip it. All which notwithſtanding, the intent of Cranmer was brought to effect; for the Engliſh bible was placed in euerie church, the people had licence to read it, and power was giuen to two and thirtie of the parlement houſe to be named by the king, to make eccleſiaſticall lawes for the church of England: where it was alſo decreed, that eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction might be exerciſed by ſuch married perſons as had knowledge in the ciuill law, and had receiued the degree of doctor in anie of the vniuerſities. And the better to ſtrengthen the euangelicals, as hath Matthew Parker, a mariage was contracted betweene king Henrie the eight, and the ladie Katharine Par (a woman much fauoring the goſpell) the ſiſter of William Par marqueſſe of Northampton and the widow of the lord Latimer.

Letters in which is conteined a conſpiracie againſt Cranmer.

* Papiſts.

* Proteſtants or goſpellers.

Cranmer increaſeth in the kings fauour.

The bible tranſlated into Engliſh.

How certeine words of the bible ſhould be Engliſhed.

1542 High commiſſioners appointed for eccleſiaſticall cauſes.

King Henrie the eight marieth the ladie Katharine Par.

After this, warres being had againſt the king of England both by the French & Scots, the king labored the emperor, that ioining their power, they might ſet vpon the French. The iſſue of which warres (although they were both beneficiall and honorable to the king & kingdome, becauſe Bullogne was then ouerthrowne and taken) yet by the emperors authoritie, Gardiner and the other pontificals did afreſh creepe againe into the kings fauour, who 1543 preuailing, there was perſecution vſed againſt the 1544 euangelicals. In which perhaps (as ſaith Matthew 1545 Parker) if they had kept a meane, they might haue made their cauſe to haue ſeemed better with the king; but they went ſo farre, that they ſpared not the kings bed, neither could the kings mariage be clere from danger of the ſix Articles. For Gardiner did not onlie accuſe thoſe of the kings chamber, but alſo the kings wife of hereſie: which deed ſo offended the king, that he could neuer after well awaie with Gardiner, and did commit the duke of Northfolke, with his ſonne the earle of Surrie priſoners to the Tower for ſuſpicion of treaſon, whereof the one which was the ſonne was after beheaded, and the other remained in priſon for ſeuen yeares, vntill the reigne of queene Marie, who deliuered him. King Henrie the eight hauing now baniſht the popes authoritie, and diſſolued the religious houſes, died the third 1546 kalends of Februarie, and was buried at Windſor: at what time appointing ſixteene perſons, to whom he committed the yoong king Edward, onelie two biſhops, this Cranmer and Cutbert Tunſtall were of that number, Gardiner at that time being out of fauour, & therefore excluded from the priuitie of the kings will. After this, on the fourth kalends of March, was king Edward the ſixt crowned by this archbiſhop, at what time doctor Cox before named, and ſir Iohn Cheeke, were appointed his ſchoolemaiſters, to inſtruct him in the euangelicall doctrine. But in the end, to auoid further inconuenience, which might grow by reaſon of the multitude of gouernors appointed by king Henrie the eight to gouerne the yoong king, one man by the aduiſe of the lord Paget was choſen in place of the reſt, to take the office of protectorſhip vpon him, which was Edward Seimor erle of Hertford, after duke of Summerſet. Who altering the forme of religion, as it was left in the time of king Henrie the eight, did take from it ſuch ceremonies of the Romane church as king Henrie had yet left within England.

Queene Katharine Par accuſed of hereſie.

Cranmer and Tunſtall appointed by king Henrie the eight to gouerne king Edward the ſixt.

The duke of Summerſet altereth religion.

At what time a parlement being called, and a 1547 ſynod alſo, Cranmer in that ſynod made an oration to aboliſh ſuch rites as king Henrie the eight had left; and therewith found meanes in the parlement to aboliſh the law of the ſix articles. Beſides which, in that parlement, the cleargie exhibited an other petition: for they conſidered that all the force and authoritie of the ſynod was not onelie diminiſhed, but wholie broken and ouerthrowne, after that the cleargie in the word of prieſthood, had promiſed to king Henrie the eight, that they would not decree anie thing in their ſynod without the kings authoritie: which power of eccleſiaſticall lawes being baniſhed, the burgeſſes in the parlement began to eſtabliſh lawes for diuine matters, without conſent or knowledge of the cleargie, and by little and little, to take awaie the immunities of the abſent cleargie, and to make harder lawes wherewith to tie the ſpiritualtie, the which to ſuffer, ſeemed hard vnto the cleargie, ſith the parlement was accuſtomed onelie to treat of matters touching the common-wealth, and not of the church.

Matt. Parker. pag. 398.

Wherefore they required, that as the prelats in the higher houſe of parlement were ioined with the nobilitie; ſo in the lower houſe, that the prelats and procurators of the cleargie might be ioined with the burgeſſes togither, with them to conſult of the ſtate of the church. But the determination of that requeſt was turned ouer vntill an other time, A little after which, all the ceremonies of the Romane church, maſſe, dirge, inuocation of ſaints and other things, with the ſeruice in an vnknowne toong, and the multitude of worſhipped ſaints were taken awaie and aboliſhed. In place whereof, the ſeruice in the Engliſh toong, and the moſt holie ſacraments by Chriſt onelie inſtituted, were then ſet vp through England. And for the better eſtabliſhing thereof 1548 viſitors were ſent through the realme, which ſo ſet forth the matter, that they left no relikes or ſuſpicion of the contrarie religion: againſt which, yet manie of the pontificals did reſiſt with ſuch feruencie as they could. For Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, Boner biſhop of London, Tunſtall biſhop of Durham, and Heath biſhop of Rocheſter tooke it greeuouſlie, that all relikes of Rome in generall ſhould be ſo 1549 aboliſhed, pretending that no alteration in religion ought to haue beene had during the kings minoritie. Wherevnto they did ſtand the faſter, becauſe the ladie Marie king Edwards ſiſter had maſſe, with the appurtinances in hir houſe: whoſe example (becauſe ſhe was after the death of king Edward next heire to the crowne by hir fathers teſtament) did conteine and hold manie in the ſame religion.

The inferior cleargie deſire to be admitted as part of the lower houſe of the parlement.

Viſitors ſent through the realme.

Biſhops defending the Romane religion.

But Gardiner, Boner, Tunſtall, and Heath, perſiſting in their opinions, they were remoued from their biſhoprikes & committed to the Tower, at what time the emperors ambaſſador intreated for the ladie Marie (the emperors neere kinſwoman) that ſhe might ſtill vſe the Romane ſeruice in hir houſe; which king Edward would not allow: but but burſt out in teares (when Cranmer archbiſhop of Canturburie, and Ridleie now biſhop of London in the place of Boner did require the [illegible]me) and ſaid that ſhe ſhould be by law reſtreined thereof, whereat the biſhops were greatly aſhamed of their requeſt. This doone, Cranmer called out of forren nations certeine diuines to read in the vniuerſities of England, and to inlarge the euangelicall doctrine, which perſons were Peter Martyr, and Martin Bucer: whereof the firſt was placed at Oxford, and the other at Cambridge, with whome in that vniuerſitie Paulus Fagius another ſtranger did at Cambridge vſe and teach the Hebrue toong. Moreouer, this archbiſhop did nouriſh beyond the ſeas, Tremelius, Ochinus, Alexander, and Walerand, with their wiues and children, and ſent for Melancthon, and Muſculus: who not permitted by their countrie to come into England, excuſed themſelues by letters.

Cranmer called diuerſe out of forren nations.

Cranmer thus ſuccoring learned men, wrote a booke for the ſupper of the Lord. Againſt which, Stephan Gardiner being in the Tower, wrote another booke intituled Marcus Conſtantius, refuted by Peter 1551 Martyr, as hath Matthew Parker Few yeares after, died king Edward of the ptiſicke (as ſaith the 1553 ſame Matthew Parker) though Oſorius (by what reaſon or authoritie I know not) obiecteth to doctor Haddon that he was poiſoned: againſt which (if my memorie faile not) maiſter Fox hath written in anſwering to Oſorius after the death of the ſame Haddon. King Edward the ſixt being thus dead, his ſiſter Marie obteined the crowne, made alteration of religion, ſet the before impriſoned biſhops at libertie, reſtored them vnto their ſee, & diſplaced others appointed therevnto in hir brothers time. Which biſhops hauing now the ſword in their hand, and full authoritie, ſtretched the ſame to the execution of their lawes, burning ſome, baniſhing others, and impriſoning the third ſort: whereof, ſome were in life reſerued vntill the gouernement of queene Eliſabeth, & after aduanced to places of great honor. Amongſt which that were ſo purſued by the pontificals Cranmer was one, who being perſuaded to flie the realme, would not: affirming that if he were guiltie of treaſon or murther, he would imbrace and follow their counſell; but being otherwiſe, he would not: who being verie ſtout in matters of religion, did challenge a noble man to fight with him in king

Cranmer writeth againſt Stephan Gardiner.

Cranmer would not flie the realme.

Cranmer offereth the combat to a nobleman.

Edwards daies, becauſe he did oppugne the eccleſiaſticall ceremonies reformed by Cranmer his counſell, who had aboliſhed the Romane ſacraments.

The armes of Cranmer altered.

Now when Cranmer was thus perſuaded by others to flie, a certeine kind of propheſie (as it may be termed) came to his mind, in which king Henrie the eight did foreſhew his death. For when Cranmer did beare the enſignes and armes of his anceſtors, quartered with three cranes, the king taking awaie the cranes, placed in lieu thereof three pellicans to be borne in his armes, as a ſigne that he ſhould after ſhed his bloud for his children: but to leaue that, let vs go forwards with the hiſtorie.

The metropolitane onelie to crowne the prince.

Queene Marie was the daie before the kalends of October crowned at Weſtminſter by Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, againſt all law and example (as ſome haue) becauſe the ſame dooth onelie belong vnto the metropolitane, as moſt ancient hiſtories affirme: but we find manie examples to the contrarie, both in ancient & moderne times: whereof theſe few come to my mind. That Alredus biſhop of Yorke crowned William Conqueror, Maurice biſhop of London crowned Henrie the firſt, Peter biſhop of Wincheſter and Joſeline biſhop of Bath crowned Henrie the third, and Oglethorpe biſhop of Carlill crowned queene Eliſabeth. Which I ſpeake not to impech the priuilege and honor of that ſee: for it is moſt reaſon that the beſt ſhould be ſerued with the beſt; and that the beſt ſubiect ſhould doo the beſt honor to the beſt and cheefe gouernor: but I haue onelie brought in this, becauſe that ſome ſaie, that Wincheſter (not hauing example therefore) did crowne queene Marie. And yet notwithſtanding (to ſaie the truth) theſe biſhops did alwaies crowne the princes vpon ſome reaſonable cauſe; as when the metrpolittan was vnlawfullie gotten into that ſee, as Stigandus, who intruded himſelfe thereunto; or was beyond the ſeas, as was Anſelmus, when Mauricius biſhop of London crowned Henrie the firſt; or as Stephan Langton was, when Peter biſhop of Wincheſter, and the biſhop of Bath crowned Henrie the third; or elſe in the vacancie of the archbiſhoprike, as when Oglethorpe crowned the worthie queene Eliſabeth.

Cranmer condemned of treaſon.

But to leaue this, let vs returne to Cranmer, who was after accuſed, and by the iudges condemned of treaſon: which Cranmer tooke to be an vnkind recompenſe for all the kindneſſe which he had beſtowed vpon queene Marie. For when hir father would haue committed hir to priſon for ſtanding in hir religion, this Cranmer pacified the king; and when ſhe ſhould haue beene diſherited by the teſtament of king Edward, he did with a long oration perſuade the contrarie, although it tooke not effect. But the remembrance of hir mothers diuorce, Cranmers religion, and the ſubſcribing of his name to the proclaming of queene Jane, put thoſe things out of mind. Whervpon being condemned, he with Nicholas Ridleie, and Hugh Latimer, biſhops of London and Worceſter, were ſent to Oxford to priſon. After this, queene Marie maried king Philip at Wincheſter the ſeuenth kalends of Auguſt, and cardinall Poole (of whom we will ſpeake more hereafter) being called hither by queene Marie, came into England with power legantine from pope Julie the third, and in parlement releaſed the interdict and excommunication of the land, which had continued almoſt twentie yeares.

A diſputation about religion in the time of queene Marie.

In the meane time, Weſton the prolocutor with manie other profeſſors of diuinitie, came from the ſynod to Oxford, publikelie to diſpute with Cranmer, Ridleie, and Latimer, about the carnall preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament. But in the end the matter was ſo handled, that Cranmer and the others were condemned for heretikes; firſt by the vniuerſitie, and by the ſynod of London: the long declaration whereof we leaue to others, who haue of purpoſe treated thereof, amongſt whome is John Fox in his booke of the Acts and monuments of the church: for it is beſide my purpoſe, to treat of the ſubſtance of religion, ſith I am onelie politicall, and not eccleſiaſticall; a naked writer of hiſtories, and not a learned diuine to treat of myſteries of religion. Wherefore leauing that, let vs haſten to the haſtened death of Cranmer. Cardinall Poole being the popes legat, was in honor and fauor preferred before all men, who although he ſought the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, and did by his legantine power take the fruits thereof from Cranmer, conuerted them to his vſe by colour of ſequeſtration, and dwelled at Lambeth: yet he would not beare himſelfe as archbiſhop ſo long as Cranmer liued.

John Fox.

But Stephan Gardiner (after the faſhion of court prelats) deſirous to be equall in honor with cardinall Woolſeie (whom he ſometimes ſerued) priuilie labored with the pope to be cardinalated, and to haue power legantine beſtowed vpon him; for the obteining whereof he conceiued a certeine hope, becauſe pope Julie the third being dead, John Peter Caraſa, which was called the cardinall Theatin, was aduanced to the popedome: betweene whome (being now called Paule the fourth) and cardinall Poole, there was old & capitall enimitie which could not be pacified by anie meanes. Wherefore Gardiners requeſt to be cardinall, to take awaie Pooles authoritie, and to call him to Rome, was acceptable to the pope. For which cauſe it was ſuppoſed, that Gardiner prolonged the life of Cranmer, to the end that Poole might not haue the biſhoprike of Canturburie. In the meane time, Gardiner falling ſicke of the gout, or paines of his ioints; the ſame grew ſo much, that his phyſicians affirmed that he could not liue. At length lieng in his bed, his bodie yeelded ſuch a lothſome ſauor (as ſaith Matthew Parker, and John Fox) that none could ſcarſe abide it; who dieng in that ſort, did in the verie inſtance of death ſaie: I haue erred with Peter, but not wept with Peter.

Matt. Parker.

The pope and cardinall Poole enimies.

1555

When he was dead, the legat Poole appointed Brookes biſhop of Briſtow to be the popes delegat to giue ſentence vpon Cranmer, who comming to Oxford (togither with John Storie, after executed at Tiburne, and with Thomas Martin doctor of the law now liuing, aſſociats to the ſaid biſhop by the queenes authoritie) called foorth Cranmer, at that time with a long oration Brookes labored to bring home Cranmer to the Romane religion. But he not remooued from his maner of chriſtian profeſſion, & perſiſting in his former doctrine, was ſummoned to be at Rome within fourescore daies to anſwere before the pope; which Cranmer promiſed to doo if he might haue licence therefore of the queene. But the pope, before the twentith daie was paſt, ſent letters to king Philip and queene Marie, to condemne Cranmer, and to commit him to the ſecular power. Wher vpon, a little after, new authoritie was by the pope granted to Thomas Thurlebie biſhop of Elie, and to Edmund Boner biſhop of London, to depriue Cranmer from all preeſtlie and archiepiſcopall dignitie, and to commit him to the ſecular power to be burned, which was doone the fourteenth daie of Februarie. But Cranmer yeelding to the frailtie of the fleſh, lacking the comfortable letters which one was woont to write to another at the going to their death, there entered him by the perſuaſion of one frier John, and of the pontificals, a certeine temptation, in that they laied before him hope of life, thereby Brookes biſhop of Briſtow appointed to giue ſentence vpon Cranmer.

The pope giueth authoritie to the biſhops of London and Elie to depoſe Cranmer.

Cranmer ſubſcribed to the Romane religion.

God cannot be pacified but with the death of Cranmer.

Cranmer burned at Oxford.

to auoid the terror of death, if he would by writing recant what he had before ſaid and written touching religion. Wher vnto Cranmer yeelding, and they obteining the ſame, yet they were not contented: for when Cranmer hoped moſt for life, then by the decree of cardinall Poole was his death haſtened. For doctor Cole came to Oxford, and preaching in S. Maries church, he there affirmed that God could not be pacified (being offended with the death of ſir Thomas Moore ſometime chancellor of England, and of Iohn Fiſher biſhop of Rocheſter, who were beheaded in the time of king Henrie the eight, for mainteining the popes ſupremaſie) but with the death and ſacrifice of this Cranmer: who being brought foorth of priſon betweene two friers in an old gowne, was exhorted by Cole in his ſermon that he ſhould with liuelie voice confirme that recantation which he had made by writing. But he denieng that, terming the pope antichriſt, and hating the biſhops, was after burned in that towne; firſt burning his hand which made the recantation, and then ſtanding vpright in the flame, and crauing mercie of God, to whome he committed his ſoule, he was conſumed to aſhes: a death not read before to haue happened to anie archbiſhop, who as he was the firſt that publikelie impugned by eſtabliſhed lawes the popes authoritie in England, ſo was he the firſt metropolitane that was burned for the ſame.

Ex archiuis. The daie of the reconciliation of England to the pope kept holidaie.

Queene Marie willing to ſet vp the houſes of religion.

Noble men loth to depart with religious lands.

After his death the ſee of Canturburie being now void, there was a ſynod called by the commandement of the king and queene; in which it was decreed that the daie wherein England was by cardinall Poole reconciled to the church of Rome, ſhould euerie yeare be kept holie daie, and called the daie of the reconciliation of the church of Rome. But that laſted not long, ſith the death and end of queene Marie ſet end vnto the ſame: beſides which, becauſe queene Marie had remitted vnto the clergie the firſt fruits and tenths before granted to king Henrie the eight, they granted hir a large ſubſidie. In which ſynod alſo manie other things were required, but not obteined. Beſides which, queene Marie was of that mind (as not being ſatiſfied in giuing thoſe tenths to the clergie) that ſhe alſo thought vpon the reſtitution of the houſes of religion, and to bring to them the lands taken awaie in the time of king Henrie the eight: for manie ſuppoſed that they could not keepe the ſame with a ſafe conſcience. Wherefore calling togither the marqueſſe of Wincheſter treaſuror of England, and others of the councell, ſhe declared vnto them how that ſhe was daie and night troubled with the lands of thoſe monaſteries; whoſe reſtitution although it be hurtfull to the crowne, as weakening the reuenues thereof, yet ſhe would not keepe anie other bodies goods, no not the kingdome it ſelfe with a troubled conſcience. Wherfore ſhe willed that cardinall Poole the popes legat, to whome this matter was by the pope committed, ſhould be conſulted therevpon, to the end that hir vexed conſcience might ſafelie be deliuered from all care thereof. But king Henrie the eight, when he did diſſolue the monaſteries, by the exchange of thoſe lands, and by other grants thereof, did ſo diuide the ſame into ſeuerall mens hands (a deuiſe proceeding from Cromwell earle of Eſſex, who firſt alſo ſought the diſſolution of thoſe monaſteries) that he had nothing ſo much left in his poſſeſſion, as he had diſtributed to the noble men and others, who feeling the ſweet that came thereby, would not ſo eaſilie depart with the ſame againe; inſomuch that when the pope (as hath Matthew Parker) by the queene and cardinals procurement had thundered ſentence of excommunication againſt all thoſe which poſſeſſed lands belonging to monaſteries, and that the ſame bull (as it was ſaid) ſhould haue beene declared in England; there was ſuch ſudden hurliburlie raiſed here amongſt vs of all ſorts, aſwell noble men, gentlemen, and others, yea of ſuch as moſt fauored the pope, as vnleſſe that bull had beene ſent backe to Rome, and the ſentence reuoked, it was thought the popes authoritie would haue beene againe baniſhed England; for they plainelie ſaid, that they would not obeie him if he touched their freeholds. By reaſon whereof the clergie vtterlie deſpaired of generall reſtitution of the religious houſes, although in ſome few places, monaſteries and ſuch other houſes began againe to be builded, and religious perſons to be brought into them; as at Weſtminſter, great S. Bartholomewes beſides Smithfeeld in London, Greenewich, and Dartfoord in Kent, and others more.

Reginald Poole cardinall archbiſhop of Canturburie.

Reginald Pooles life being with ſuch high praiſe written by manie learned and eloquent Italians, and manie declamers of the vniuerſitie of Venice, is ſet foorth with ſuch beautie, and eloquence of ſtile, as nothing can be more deſired therein. But therwithall (as ſaith Matthew Parker) they fauoring him ouer much, did in their praiſes of him not ſpare the diſpraiſe of king Henrie the eight: ſo that they rather ſeemed flattering and rhethoricall ſchoole declamations than true commendations, worthilie deſerued for vertue and vpright actions. The which is not therefore ſpoken by vs, becauſe we doo enuie his commendation. For what can be more glorious vnto our kingdome, than that the Italians, who after a certeine ſort glorie of the inheritance of learning and eloquence, ſhould ſo highlie commend a man of our nation? But becauſe we are chieflie to ſet downe ſuch things as he did being archbiſhop of Canturburie, we will omit whatſoeuer might elſe be ſaid of him, and brieflie paſſe ouer his life, crauing pardon although we omit or ſomewhat diſſent from that immoderat commendation, which other haue throwne vpon him; for mine intent is onelie plainelie to ſet downe things as they were doone, without aggrauating, diminiſhing, praiſing, miſliking, or anie waie elſe inferring vpon the outward action.

Poole brought vp in Oxford.

Poole trauelleth the parts beyond the ſeas.

This man (as ſaith Matthew Parker) Patre quidem Richardo equeſtris ordinis viro, Henrici ſeptimi regis fratre conſobrino, matre verò Margareta Eduardi quarti Anglorum quondam regis nepte, Georgij Clarentij ducis filia atque comitiſſa Sarisburiæ natus eſt. Of which his deſcent I haue alreadie ſpoken in my former diſcourſe of the cardinals, pag. 1168. who by the care of his parents, perceiuing him of a deintie wit, and of a gentle behauior, was brought vp in learning in Magdalen college in Oxford, whome king Henrie the eight in his youthfull yeares did greatlie fauor, not onelie becauſe he was kin vnto him by the father and mothers ſide, but alſo becauſe that he hoped that his learning ſhould beautifie the kinglie race, and might be a great helpe vnto him in the gouernement of the kingdome. Wherefore he augmented the ſtipends of this Poole with the deanerie of Exceſter, and with other large allowances, to the end that following the ſtudies of good letters beyond the ſeas, he might there learne both the depth of the ſciences, and the maners and languages of thoſe outward nations. Wherevpon he goeth to Pauie a citie belonging to the dominion of Venice, where he found learned men in all ſciences. In which place Poole gaue his mind to the ſtudie of eloquence and philoſophie, where he profited ſo much, that he was no more knowen to thoſe ſtrangers for the nobilitie of his birth than he was for the fame and report of his learning. Wherefore, when he was thus had in admiration in Italie, aſwell for his parentage as his excellencie of learning, he ioined himſelfe with the magnificos and noble men of Venice, wherby vnthankefullie he departed from the loue of his countrie, and the dutie of ſo liberall a prince as king Henrie the eight was to him. For (as we ſaid) when the ſame king determined to aboliſh the popes authoritie in England, he louinglie ſought to call this Poole home into his countrie. But he refuſing to returne, making manie delaies and excuſes, the king cauſed Stokes biſhop of London, and Tunſtall biſhop of Durham to write vnto him againſt the popes authoritie, whoſe works are yet extant. But Poole not mooued thereby, ioined with the Italians, famous as well for their birth as for their learning and eloquence, amongſt which were Aloiſius Priolus, Gaſpar Contarenus, Peter Bembus, and Peter Caraſa, archbiſhop Theatin, borne at Naples; but then for feare of the emperor fled vnto Venice, where he remained in a monaſterie. To theſe were alſo ioined in one knot of amitie for likeneſſe of ſtudies and maners, Iames Sadolet biſhop of Carpentoract in France, & Coſmus Gherius biſhop of Fanens; and of the commoner ſort in the vniuerſities of Pauie & Bononia, M. Antonius Paſſerus, ſurnamed Genua, Lampridius Cremonenſis, Lazarus Bonamicus, Baſſianus, & manie of that ſort which ſéemed to excell in philoſophie, Gréeke, and all kind of learning: and therefore not onelie famous in Italie but through out all the other parts of Europe. All which for eloquence and flowing in the Latine toong gaue place to this Poole, as by the letters often times ſent betwéene them, and of late by the witneſſe of the moſt eloquent Paulus Manutius is well prooued. But if thoſe their praiſes had neuer béene giuen of him, yet Poole himſelfe may be a moſt plentifull witneſſe in that matter, being importunatlie laboured by Sadolet (who had then written a learned and eloquent booke of philoſophie) to deliuer his iudgement thereof. Whereunto Poole with long letters did anſwer, that he greatlie allowed all that he had written in philoſophie: but on the other ſide, he did as much maruell, that a cardinall of the church of Rome would place the end and chéefe of all his ſtudies in philoſophie, which although it ſometime held the price aboue all other ſtudies and arts, yet now (as he writeth) that is caſt downe by the comming of the word of God, for the which cauſe he compared it with theſe verſes of Virgil:

Poole refuſeth to returne into England.

Inſula diues opum Priami dum regna manebant,
Eſt in conſpectu Tenedos notiſſima fama,
Nunc tantùm ſinus ſtatio & malefida carinis.

Wherefore ſith the ethnike ſuperſtition is now ouerthrowne, diuinitie and not philoſophie ought to be ſet before a chriſtian man, as the chéefeſt hauen whervnto he ſhould with all his ſailes haſten to direct his courſe & reſt. Which epiſtle of Poole if it be diligentlie compared with the anſwer of Sadolet, he ſhall find Poole (as ſaith Matthew Parker) to go beyond Sadolet both in argument and ſwéetneſſe of ſtile. In which place the ſaid Matthew in his booke of the liues of the biſhops of Canturburie, hath alſo ſet downe theſe words of this Poole: Sed iuuenis ingenij fœcunditate cum rerũ verborúmque frequens copia ei ſiue dicenti ſibi ſcribenti ſuccederet, Aſiaticam redundantiam ſequi viſus eſt. Quam vt ex libris eius iam cernimus ſiue ſtudio ſiue flacceſſente oratione ſic tandem decoxit, vt ſenex in dicendo ſcribendóque redundantiam omnẽ & affluentiam a ſtilo reſecuit, ſape etiam ſine vbertate, peneque ſucco ieiunus exiſtimetur. But leauing the commendation of his learning and eloquence, let vs returne to thoſe things which this Poole did.

The liuings which Poole had in England taken from him.

1536

Poole protected by the pope.

Poole perſuadeth princes to warre vpon the king of England.

When Henrie the eight had expelled the pope, and would not ſuffer Poole to returne into England, firſt this Poole was bereaued of his deanrie of Exceſter, and of all other ſtipends which he had by the king. But he greatlie eſtéemed not thereof, bicauſe he was honorablie and plentifullie interteined by the cleargie of Italie, with whome he liued ſo much the more honourablie, and with greater fréendſhip, bicauſe he was baniſhed England. For pope Paule the third being dead, Clement the ſeauenth ſucceeding, and Peter Bembus, a moſt familiar fréend to Poole, being ſecretarie vnto Clement, brought Poole in continuall and great fauour of the pope, who after made him cardinall; at that time alſo aduancing to the purple hat Bembus, Contarenus, Sadolet, and Peter Caraſa, archbiſhop Theatin, of which number Theatin tooke part with the French, and Poole fauoured the emperour and his imperials; a thing (as after ſhall appere) that brought foorth vnquenchable enimitie betwéene Poole and Caraſa. Which choiſe of theſe cardinals was made the eleauenth kalends of Ianuarie, at what time Poole was intituled cardinall of S. Maries in Coſmeden. Now, when it was ſecretlie conſulted at Rome to ſupport the falling authoritie of the pope, to reſtreine the Lutherans in Germanie, and to baniſh the goſpell out of England; theſe delegates were appointed therefore: Theatinus, this Poole, Corteſius, abbat of S. George, & Mattheus Gibertus biſhop of Verona, who taking aduiſe among themſelues, committed thoſe things to writing which might be profitable to the common cauſe of the pontificals, whoſe ſaid aduiſe and counſell touching the ſame, is yet extant and publiſhed in Italie. But vpon the ſetting foorth thereof, onelie Poole was admitted into the popes palace and familiaritie, bicauſe he ſtood in doubt of himſelfe, and ſuſpected ſome laieng of wait for him by the Engliſh. Poole being thus in the popes fauour, and framing himſelfe to all the popes determinations, was after ſent to the king of France, and to the low countries of Germanie, in two dangerous ambaſſages. In which though other cauſes were outwardlie pretended, yet (as hath Matthew Parker) he had giuen him in charge by the pope, that he ſhould in the name of the church of Rome ſolicit the emperor & the French king to warre vpon the king of England. But king Henrie the eight wiſelie auoided the ſame, for neither the emperor nor the French king (then in ſharpe wars for the limits of their dominions) durſt ſtir the king of England, leaſt that he inclining to anie one part, might ouerthrow the other. At which time Poole did write to his fréends and kindred in England, that they ſhould ſtand faſt in the Romane faith, and expect the end of his ambaſſage.

Poole haſteneth out of France to the emperor.

*Leodium.

The king of England hauing knowledge of all this deuiſe, did (when he vnderſtood of Poole his comming into France) deale with the French king by his legats, that he ſhould ſend Poole into England to receiue puniſhment, as guiltie of treaſon to the king of England. But the French king denieng it, and affirming the ſame to be againſt the law of armes, to yéeld the ambaſſador of anie man (eſpeciallie of the pope) to receiue puniſhment, would not doo it. And yet, bicauſe he would not offend the king, he did not admit the ambaſſage of Poole; but ſpéedilie commanded him to depart out of his kindome. Wherewith Poole being ſore perplexed, ſpéedilie ſpead himſelfe into the low countries to the emperour, where he was alſo by the emperor repelled; bicauſe the king of England had a little before ſentenſed Poole, his mother the counteſſe of Saliſburie, his other confederats and fréends to perpetuall baniſhment. Wherefore this cardinall Poole haſteth to *Leige, being inuited thither by Erardus à Marchia, cardinall and biſhop of that citie, where he for a time remained, but not long, for the king of England vnderſtanding by his eſpies of his abode there, ſent his ambaſſadors, and required of the Belgians in reſpect of the ancient leagues betwéene him and the duke of Burgundie, that they would deliuer to his ambaſſadors his enimie, and one condemned of treaſon, and not ſuffer him to wander vp and downe amongſt them. Which being opened in a publike councell, holden in the low countries, where the ſaid Erard was preſent, it was declared to Poole that he ſhould preſentlie haſten himſelfe to Rome through Germanie, whereby Poole departed without bringing anie of his ambaſſages to effect. Yet notwithſtanding, after this they obtrude vnto him an other moſt dangerous ambaſſage: for when the emperour had ordered all his affaires in the low countries and in Germanie, he went into Spaine, whither by the popes commandement Poole was ſent vnto them, and from thenſe to the French king to deale with them, to breake the league with the king of England, that they ſhuld both ſet vpon him, and that Poole ſhould remaine in the low countries or on the borders of France, to expect the end thereof, in the meane time aſſertening the pope of all things which happened.

Poole inforced to depart the low countries.

Poole ſent by the pope into Spaine.

With this commandement cardinall Poole changing his habit, did with a few perſons haſten his iorneie, and with a ſpéedie and readie courſe came to the emperor then remaining at Toleto in Spaine. But the emperor which meant to kéepe the king of England in league with him, gaue ſuch audience to this cardinall Poole, that he anſwered, there was no time now to execute his requeſt. And to rid him of that matter, he willed Poole to go into France, to conſult thereabouts with the French king. With which anſwer Poole perceiuing how the emperor had ſhifted him awaie, obteining leaue, departed from Spaine, and came to Auinion; from whenſe he went to his familiar Iames Sadolet archbiſhop of Carpentoract and cardinall, where for a while he reſted himſelfe in great ſaftie, vntill he might vnderſtand the popes pleaſure. But in the end, being called home by the pope, although his ambaſſage had not the deſired effect: yet for that he had much trauelled in the ſame, the pope made him legat of Viterbo, as a reward for his paines. Wherevpon finding no better ſucceſſe in ſuch things as he attempted, he gaue them ouer, and wholie applied himſelfe vnto diuinitie; wherein it ſéemeth he had no ſetled iudgement (as ſaith Matthew Parker) but ſometime fauored the * pontificals, and ſometime the * euangelicals, as may be gathered by their often comming vnto him, but eſpeciallie by the continuall companie of Antonius Flaminius (the moſt excellent orator and poet that tranſlated the pſalmes of Dauid into Illyricall verſes) and of Tremelius, a moſt learned perſon which turned the bible into Latine, and was conuerted from the Iewes doctrine to chriſtianitie when he was in the houſe with Poole, and baptiſed by the ſaid Poole and Flaminius within the walles of the houſe of this cardinall Poole. Beſides which, his houſe was a receptacle of friers and moonks falling from the pope and fleing out of Italie into Germanie. Againe, when manie were accuſed vnto him in Viterbo, that they were Lutherans, he neuer puniſhed them either by the inquiſition or other ſeuere paine, but remained there certeine yeares, as a man wholie buried in ſtudie, and one vtterlie ſeparated from worldlie matters, of whome the ſame Parker writeth thus: Verum neſcio quomodo Poli caſtitas, in qua una virtute omnes Romæ cardinales facilè ſuperabat, dum Viterbij contemplaretur diffamata eſt. Nam papæ caſtello vbi Polus habitabat adiunctum eſt monialium cœnobium ſanctæ Claræ dicatum. His monialibus ſuis vicinis vt in caſtitate retinerentur, ſedulò dicitur proſpexiſſe Polus, earúmque abbatiſſam quæ nobilis Peruſina fuit ad ſe vocaſſe ſæpius. Ex quorum frequenti congreſſu Paſquillius Romanus qui nullius famæ aut dignitati parcit, ſæpiúſque vera quàm falſa narrat, Latinis Italicíſque carminibus Romæ diuulgauit eam è Polo peperiſſe bis, primò maſculinam deinde fœmininam prolem. But touching that matter, this Poole heard more thereof when he was in election to be pope, as after ſhall appéere, when he cléered himſelfe. In the meane time, whileſt the warres were hot betwéene Ceſar and the French, Paule the third ſummoned a generall councell at Trent, to which he ſent the cardinals Poole, Moronus, and a third to be his legats there. But the ſame counſell did ſhortlie after ceaſe, being interrupted by the heat of the warres (betwéene the emperor and the French) in Heluetia, Germanie, France, and Spaine. At length thoſe warres being intermitted for a time, the councell at Trent was againe renewed, and this Poole with the cardinals de monte and of the holie croſſe were appointed the popes legats, at what time Poole did write and publiſh a booke of the ſame councell. In the end the councell being turned ouer to Bononia, the emperor found himſelfe gréeued therewith, & complaining thereof by Hurtaldus his orator in a little booke publiſhed to all men, he further deſcribed a forme of religion in that booke which he called the Interim: both which Poole being placed in the popes preſence did with publike anſwer rebuke.

Poole made legat of Viterbo.

*Papiſts.
*Proteſtants.

Poole fauoreth the goſpellers.

Poole appointed one of the popes legats in the councell of Trent.

Now when pope Paule the third was dead, the cardinals (after the maner) came into the conclaue to chooſe a new pope. In which there was great contention amongeſt them being diuided into two parts, the one taking the part of Ceſar and the other of the French king. Poole himſelfe being imperiall drew vnto him all ſuch as were on that ſide, & thoſe alſo that were neuters, amongſt whom was Alexander Farneſius, nephue of the deceaſed pope, whoſe authoritie aboue the reſt was verie great, and led the chéefeſt part of the other cardinals to chooſe Poole to the popedome. But they which followed the French cauſes obiected that they ſhould beware, leſt Poole hauing atteined the triple crowne, would ouermuch fauour the emperor: wherefore there was conſideration to be had of the voices of the other French cardinals, which were not then come. But notwithſtanding all that the French could doo, the next daie when the voices were taken out of the ſcrutinie, ſuch and ſo great number of them was found to incline to Poole, that the French could not reſiſt it. But Poole without cauſe found an other delaie, whie he would not then take it vpon him; which being perceiued by the cardinall Theatin, hoping to obteine the papaſie if Poole were reiected, obiected againſt Poole the note of ambition, hereſie, and incontinencie: of ambition, in that he ouer haſtilie ſought the papaſie; of hereſie, becauſe that in Germanie, and in the councell of Trent, he did ouer familiarlie vſe the companie of the Lutherans, that he kept Flaminius in his houſe, and inriched him with manie prebends and eccleſiaſticall dignities, and thirdlie, that being legat at Viterbo, he ſpared many guiltie of hereſie, & puniſhed a few with ſmall paine, but none with death; of incontinencie, in that he had placed his daughter to be brought vp with the nuns of Rome. All which defamations, this cardinall Theatin did ſpred amongſt the people, to the end that Poole being defamed, might not receiue the popedome. Wherevnto Poole did anſwer grauelie and aptlie, as he could well doo, for he alwaies caried ſuch grauitie in his countenance, that he neuer changed the ſame for anie iniurie or reproch, or for anie aduerſe or proſperous ſucceſſe. In which his anſwer he declared, firſt that he did eſtéeme the charge of the popedome to be ſo great, that it rather mooued a feare than a deſire to poſſeſſe it; ſecondlie, that he

Poole choſen to be pope.

Poole refuſeth the popedome.

Poole accuſed of hereſie, ambition, and incontinencie.

Poole cléereth himſelfe of all things obiected againſt him.

1553

was to be iudged free from all note or ſuſpicion of hereſie, which for the Romane religions cauſe had run into the hatred and offenſe of his king and countrie. And laſtlie touching the little one which he noriſhed in Rome, he prooued hir to be daughter of an Engliſh woman which died in Rome, whom he had preſented to the nuns to nouriſh and inſtruct vertuouſlie, to the end that ſhe might not applie hir ſelfe to euill trades; hauing further prouided for hir a dowrie of one hundred crownes, in the publike banke of Rome, which they call Fidei montem, leſt in hir age ſhe might for neede be conſtreined to be caſt out to vncerteine miſhaps. Which kind of liberalitie being knowne to be vſed by Poole to manie others, ought (as ſaith Matthew Parker) to be of all good men eſteemed rather offices of charitie and pietie, than tokens of incontinencie. Which ſlanders when Poole had thus waſhed awaie, he was the next night choſen pope. Wherefore cardinall Farneſius, and the reſt which were of that mind, ſpeedilie run to Poole, intreating him that he will take it vpon him, and permit himſelfe to he honored as the maner is, with the ſame honor that is due to the pope, and to be ſaluted by the name of the moſt holie father. But he excuſed the matter in that it was doone in the night; for ſaith he, God dooth hate darkeneſſe, and things well doone ought to be performed in the daie: wherefore he would deferre the matter till the morrow. Which words greeuing thoſe cardinals, they did call it moſt fooliſh delaie.

Poole the ſecond time choſen pope.

Poole the ſecond time refuſeth the popedome.

Wherefore the next daie all things being changed, and the minds of the cardinals turned from Poole, they inclined an other waie. For when Poole was gone out of the conclaue (or place where the pope is elected) becauſe he felt himſelfe ſicke, it was contumeliouſlie anſwered by cardinall Theatin, called Caraſa, to ſuch as demanded Poole to be pope, and complained of his ſlackneſſe, that nothing could happen more vnprofitable to that ſee, than to declare him pope; becauſe that he had now ſhewed himſelfe a blocke to all men, in that he would not accept the papaſie offered, nor yet could aptlie refuſe it, but ſuffer it ſo to hang in ſuſpenſe. During which delaies, came the cardinall of Guiſe out of France, whoſe authoritie was greateſt amongſt the French cardinals. With whom Farneſius forſaking cardinall Poole did ioine himſelfe, to the end to win fauour of the French. Wherevpō when theſe two vſed the helps and voices of the other cardinals at their pleaſure, the cardinall de Monte, the aſſociate of cardinall Poole in the councell of Trent, was declared pope, and called Iulius the third. After which, Poole (although of ſome he was accuſed of daſtardlineſſe, and faint hart) did not yet laie aſide the tranquillitie of his mind, or the conſtancie of his toong; but ſet foorth a booke of that delaie of chooſing the pope in the conclaue, and in a moſt eloquent epiſtle did write to one Paccus a Spaniard and biſhop, touching his refuſall of the papaſie. This new pope Iulius did the more courteouſlie intreat Poole, becauſe by his delaie he obteined the popedome. Wherefore he inforced cardinall Theatin (who, as is before touched, had ſlandered Poole) before the open aſſemblie in the conclaue, to call backe that which he had ſaid, and to aſke Poole forgiueneſſe. The hatred whereof conceiued by Theatin, was manifeſtlie ſhewed againſt Poole, when the ſame cardinall Theatin came to be inthroniſed pope. This doone, Poole (growing in ſome miſlike with the Italians, becauſe that he would not be pope) obteining leaue of the ſee of Rome to depart, went to Verona to a houſe of Benedictine moonks, of which order he was patrone at Rome, in which he determined to haue paſſed ouer his whole life in ſilence, But all Italie ringing of the death of Edward the ſixt king of England, and of the ſucceſſion of queene Marie, the ſame did greatlie comfort the mind of Poole before abaſed, and called him againe to ſhew himſelfe in the world. For he now hoped to haue an honorable returne into his countrie, for that he certeinlie knew that the queene would baniſh the religion of hir brother, and induce the Romane ceremonies; for which cauſe he was fed with double hope when he was returned into England, either to obteine a moſt rich and honorable eccleſiaſticall liuing, which in truth he did; or elſe to haue married the queene, which he neuer did. To which ſecond hope he was erected, becauſe that queene Marie (when he was a child vnder his mother Margaret counteſſe of Saliſburie, ſometimes daughter of George duke of Clarence) was committed to his mother (by queene Katharine, mother to queene Marie) to be brought vp & inſtructed. At what time it was ſuppoſed, as ſaith Matthew Parker, that queene Katharine had in hir mind a determination to marrie them two together, to the end that the right of the kingdome might be more ſtronglier knit in one line of hir children, if king Henrie the eight had died without heire male. For this ladie Margaret was then the onlie liuing heire which might pretend anie title to the crowne, by reaſon of the houſe of Yorke. Wherefore being now onlie a deacon (from whenſe by the popes licence he might eaſilie be diſgraded) he conceiued a hope in his mind to marrie the queene, and obteine the kingdome. But ſauing correction of that author, which I ſpeake with all reuerence, vnto ſo learned an antiquarie and graue perſon, I ſuppoſe that cardinall Poole did, or at leaſt might thinke himſelfe hopeles to marrie the one, or to be lord of the other. For although the pope might diſgrade him, and that there might be ſome ſuch meaning in queene Katharine and the counteſſe of Saliſburie, when queene Marie and cardinall Poole were verie yoong, and that for the reaſon before rehearſed; yet me thinketh it ſomewhat ſtrange that a man ſo ſpent in yeares, being continent all his life, giuen to contemplation, a ſpare and leane bodie withered to nothing, more like a ghoſt than a man, ſhould in his old age, heat failing, nature decaieng, his lims weake, & his mind ſtudious, ſhould plaie the wanton, or follow the delights of loue and mariage. Beſides which, vnderſtanding that king Philip ſhould marrie queene Marie, and that the onelie drift of the emperor, as after ſhall appeare, was to ſtaie the cardinals comming into England, vntill the mariage was doone, he would not haue ſtaid his iorneie to hurt himſelfe, but would haue found meanes to haue ſtopped the emperors deuiſe & authoritie by the popes excommunication, and ſo to haue proceeded on his iorneie into England, if he had meant to marrie queene Marie. And is it likelie that he was ſo ambitious of honor, in atteining of a kingdome, for which a man would violate all lawes, as that he would for obteining thereof marrie queene Marie, when he had refuſed a greater honor in earth, as the world ſtood at that time, than the wearing of a kings crowne, that is the wearing of a triple diademe, and obteining of the popes authoritie, by which he might haue kept his ſpirituall function, & haue ruled the queene of England, and all the other princes of Europe? Or would he for honors ſake go againſt his profeſſion, enter into mariage, returne to the world as a laie man, and ſubmit himſelfe to the cares of a kingdome, which might haue had the greateſt honor on earth without dooing anie of theſe things? Or can not princes or great perſons be brought vp together, but that their childiſh loue muſt end in doting mariage? But admit that this hot humor ſhould ſo contrarie to my reaſon

Poole by publike booke defendeth his refuſall of the popedome.

The ſlanderers of Poole aſke him forgiueneſſe.

Poole hoped to marrie queene Marie.

reaſon haue taken place in him, how might he hope that queene Marie, a woman of great zeale in hir kind (and deſiring mariage for hope of iſſue) would ſeeke to marrie with ſo weake an old man, and a man of the church: whereof I doo not remember that I haue read anie example.

But leauing my yoong iudgement and leſſe experience in the affaires and policies of obteining and keeping of kingdoms; let vs allow that determination and hope to be in cardinall Poole, and follow on the hiſtorie as it is in ſome part ſet downe by others. Cardinall Poole harboring this double hope, either of the kingdome, or of ſome great eccleſiaſticall liuing; and being called home by queene Maries letters, and receiuing legantine power from the pope, ſet forth to come into England. But the emperor did greatlie withſtand thoſe conceipts of Poole, whileſt he both vnderſtood his deuiſe, and further determined to marie his ſonne and heire Philip to queene Marie, thereby to make his part ſtronger againſt the Frenchmen. Whervpon the emperor conſulted with cardinall Dandine the popes ambaſſador, ſent to compound a peace betweene the emperor Charles the fift, and Francis the firſt the French king. At what time the emperor earneſtlie deſired the cardinall to ſtaie Poole from comming out of Italie: with which perſuaſion, Dandine ſpeedilie ſent one Francis Commendune with letters vnto Poole, in which he perſuaded him not yet to take his iourneie into England: becauſe that legacie was taken in hand without the emperors knowledge: and the Engliſhmen, eſpeciallie the Londoners, did as yet in ſome part hate the name of the pope and his legats; adding further, that they were not yet to haue anie legantine power amongſt them, vntill by perſuaſions they were made apt therefore.

The emperor withſtandeth cardinall Poole.

When cardinall Poole had receiued theſe letters in the monaſterie before ſaid, he determined not to go anie further before he knew the popes pleaſure. But the biſhop of Rome, becauſe he would not haue the emperors part againſt the French increaſed by that mariage, called home Dandine (in that reſpect that he was by his letters the ſtaie of Poole) to the end that Poole might be legat into England, to the emperor and to the French king, for to eſtabliſh the peace betweene them. Wherefore Poole armed with double legantine power, taketh his iourneie; and when he came to Trent, ſent his meſſengers to the emperor, and to the French king, to let them vnderſtand of this legation of his departure out of Italie, and of his comming vnto them. The which meſſage was ſo vnfortunat to Ceſars attempts, that he ſent the lord Iohn Mendoza (being a little entered into another iourneie) with all ſpeed to meet cardinall Poole with letters. In which the emperor declared that it would be verie acceptable vnto him, if he did ſtaie there, and come no further, vntill the emperor had diſpatched ſome weightie affaires, which might be hindered by that legation; and then (if need were) the emperor would accept of him: but if he would needs come forward, the emperor was willing that he ſhould go to Liege; but there (of neceſſitie) he muſt remaine, vntill he were ſent for by the emperor.

Cardinall Poole ſtaied in the low countries.

Poole hauing receiued theſe letters, returned to Dilinga a towne not far from Trent, where he aduertiſeth the pope of all that was doone, and ſendeth expoſtulating letters to the emperor, ſhewing what a heinous thing it was to haue the popes ambaſſador (comming for peace and religions cauſe) to be ſtaied in the middeſt of Germanie (with great ſhame and contempt of the pope) in the eies of all heretikes, and that eſpeciallie by the emperors commandement. Notwithſtanding which letter, Poole could not obteine anie leaue to paſſe further into the low countries, before the mariage was ended, and by parlement ratified betweene king Philip & queene Marie. For the emperor knew how much the queene had made of cardinall Poole from his youth, and for which cauſe he thought that he would be a hinderance to that mariage, and therefore muſt ſeeke to haue that impediment auoided.

But becauſe king Philip (whoſe comming was earneſtlie looked for in England) was not yet alanded in that nation out of Spaine, and ſo that mariage not conſummated: cardinall Poole did verie hardlie obteine licence to come to the emperor to Bruxels: where yet there was a condition of abode limited him, vntill king Philip was arriued and maried in England. During which time, he dealt (but all in vaine) for eſtabliſhing of a peace betweene the emperor and the French king, for the long and inueterat hatred betweene them could not be ſo ſuddenlie appeaſed. This doone, Matthew Parker goeth forward with the hiſtorie thus, writing: Itaque Philippi & Mariæ congreſſu, omnibus ceremonijs peractis, & abſolutis nuptijs, cùm Polus iam nihil impedire ſuam in Angliam profectionem amplius poſſe exiſtimaret, cùmque ſpe regni fruſtratus, tamen in ſacerdotalis culminis poſſeſſione ſibi eſſe videretur, occultis invidijs apud reginam & Philippum, necnon Cæſarem atque papam, pene ſubplantatus, & à legatione reuocatus eſt.

Whervpon Poole being thus maimed of authoritie, had no cauſe now to come into England, but onelie to ſee the queene, who was offended that Poole was ſo long kept backe. Wherefore when ſhe vnderſtood the cauſe of his ſtaie, ſhe ſent ambaſſadors to the emperor, to giue him leaue to come into England, and wrote alſo to Poole to haſten him hither; which he did by the emperors licence, but he was firſt admoniſhed by ſuch as fauored the goſpell, to haue care of the church of England. Well, at length he commeth into this realme, more accompanied and attended on by Italians than Engliſh, where he admitted few into his ſocietie, but ſuch as did earneſtlie defend the church of Rome. Now this cardinall hauing legantine power, and ſo admitted by the king and queene, the croſſe and other enſignes of the popes authoritie were borne before him: at what time there was a parlement held at Weſtminſter, whither Poole being moſt honorablie brought, Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter and chancellor of England made an oration to the people of his acceptable comming.

Cardinall Poole commeth into England.

This doone, cardinall Poole made a long oration in his mother toong; wherein theſe things were conteined, being the ſubſtance and order thereof: which is, That he gaue great thanks to the noble men & the people, becauſe by their great benefit (after the abrogation of all the lawes which tended to his baniſhment) he was reſtored home vnto his countrie. Wherfore he thought it his part, both in reſpect of his dutie and thankfulnes, ſo to recompenſe this deſert; that where of late they had by ſchiſme fallen from the apoſtolicall ſee, and by that means from the vnitie of the church, and ſo baniſhed themſelues from the kingdome of God; that he through the authoritie giuen to him by the pope the vicar of Chriſt, had reduced them to the ſee of Rome as to their celeſtiall inheritance. That the chiefeſt cauſe why he was made legat, was to reſtore the nobilitie and glorie of this Iſle, whereof (before all other prouinces) the church of Rome had principall care and conſideration; becauſe that this was the peculiar and proper praiſe thereof, that it firſt of all other nations did wholie embrace the faith of Chriſt. That the Britains although they were ſubiect to ſtrangers and to the Romane emperors, yet when they had receiued the chriſtian faith, they did ſpread it ouer all the Iland, not as other nations did, by little and little, but almoſt at one and the ſelfe ſame moment. That although the Saxons had baniſhed the faith of Chriſt, with the inhabitants of thoſe parts of the Iland which profeſſed it: yet God ſo loued this place and the Ile, that the light of the goſpell did alſo at length lighten their minds blinded with ſuperſtition. That the glorie and nobilitie of this Iland ought to be imputed to the glorie, prouidence, and benefit of and from God: but yet the meane and waie whereby this nobilitie and glorie was gotten, was firſt and alwaies ſhewed & opened vnto vs from the church of Rome. That we haue alwaies ſince that time remained in the vnitie of the Romane faith, that our ſubiection to the church of Rome hath béene moſt ancient, and that the ſame hath with great reuerence and dutie béene obſerued by the kings of this realme, as appeareth by the examples of king Offa and Adulphus, who with great charges thought Rome (although by long iourneies) to be viſited, becauſe they had firſt receiued the ſéeds of truth from them. That Charles the great, when he ordeined the vniuerſitie of Paris, called out of England Alcuine the great and eloquent diuine to laie the foundation of all learning at Paris. That pope Adrian the fourth was an Engliſhman, who firſt conuerted Norwaie to the chriſtian faith; and that he, led with the loue of his countrie, gaue the gouernement of Ireland which belonged to the pope, to Henrie the ſecond, king of England. That he would ouerpaſſe not onelie the infinit multitude of benefits, which the Engliſh had receiued before other nations from the church of Rome, but alſo the calamities and reproches which it hath receiued from the time wherein it fell from that ſée. And therefore that he would onelie laie before their eies Aſia, Gréece, and Germanie, latelie diſperſed into ſo manie factions, and diuers religions, with the ruins and afflictions which had happened vnto them ſince they fell from the Romane faith. That the cauſe of falling from that ſée in them, was auarice the root of all euill; but in England onelie the cauſe was the luſt and riot of one man, who although he obteined great riches by that change, yet he not onelie conſumed them to nothing, but was alſo brought far in debt. That the church of Rome might with extreame force and the helpe of other nations haue ſubdued England; but ſhe had rather wait the daie and time from God, which ſuddenlie happened, and was at hand, after that churches were ſpoiled, altars ouerthrowne, all holie things prophaned, and vtter deſpaire of recouerie thereof. For religion, which laie buried in the quéenes breſt, as it were fire quenched, or a ſparke raked vp in the aſhes, did now become a great flame, and lighten all England. That ſhe being diſherited, reiected, weake, and beſet with moſt ſtrong enimies for the right of the crowne, yet being a virgin, did from heauen obteine victorie beyond mans expectation, and got power to gouerne, thereby to vnite England to the Romane vnitie. That ſtrength did grow for the confirmation of that matter, by the mariage with the catholike prince the emperors ſonne with the quéene of England; which emperor of all the princes chriſtian, had beſtowed moſt trauell in ioining togither the diſperſed church; in which though it had not his happie and wiſhed ſucceſſe, by meanes of the turmoiles of the wars: yet that remained to be performed by his peacefull ſonne king Philip, which his father had begun for the vnitie of that church, in building the houſe of God, after the example of Dauid and Salomon. To the ioining and eſtabliſhing of which vnitie, there was two powers giuen by God, which were like vnto two ſwords, that is the ciuill or temporall, and the eccleſiaſticall, whereof the one belongeth to kings to vſe againſt rebels and ſtubburne perſons, in puniſhing them by death, baniſhment, and other temporall paines; the other ſword is the celeſtiall keies, which conteineth the binding or abſoluing to and from eternall paines, which onelie belongeth to the pope and court of Rome, the vicar of Chriſt in earth. In the end he concluded with the authoritie granted vnto him by the pope, to reconcile England to the Romane faith: and therefore it was his dutie to impart it vnto ſuch as might receiue it. But they were ſuch as were not capable thereof, by reaſon of the eſtabliſhed lawes made in their ſchiſme from the court of Rome, which were impediments therevnto; wherefore the ſame were firſt to be abrogated, and that doone, the bleſſing of the church of Rome (which neuer ſhutteth hir lap againſt ſuch as returne vnto hir) was there at hand as it were of a déere mother to be beſtowed vpon hir children.

Cardinall Poole maketh an oration in the parlement houſe.

Pope Adrian an Engliſhman.

Two ſwords, ciuill & eccleſiaſticall.

This oration did Poole vtter with ſuch eloquence and art, that it wrapt all ſuch as were dedicate to the Romane ceremonies into ſuch an admiration of him, as that they openlie ſaid they were new borne that daie, although there were ſome in the ſame parlement (as ſaith Matthew Parker) which ſpake againſt the receiuing of the popes authoritie. But by the kings and quéenes furtherance and power ioined with the multitude of voices, the authoritie of the pope was by ſpeciall law eſtabliſhed: a thing neuer doone before in England. Which doone, the cardinall abſolued the quéene and realme, and vnited them to the church of Rome: which abſolution Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter and chancellor of England, did declare at Paules croſſe the next ſundaie in a ſermon there made. Of which returne of England to the church of Rome there was great reioiſing in the citie of Rome; and (as hath Matthew Parker) Ampliſsimus annus Iubileus à Iulio tertio papa promulgatus.

Whervpon the king and quéene of England ſent Thomas Thurlbie biſhop of Elie, Anthonie Browne knight, Vicount Montague, and Edward Kernen or Kerne knight, ambaſſadors to Rome, to declare the ſame ſubiection of the church of England. But when theſe ambaſſadors were on their waie, they receiued intelligence of the death of pope Iulie, to whom Marcellus did ſuccéed, who died the twentith daie after that he had receiued the popedome. Wherfore theſe ambaſſadors did make ſome delaie in their iournie, vntill their ambaſſage were renewed in the name of the new pope, which was Peter the cardinall Theatin (of whom we ſpake before) called Paule the fourth, being a great enimie both to the emperor & Poole, and ſo ſtudious of the French cauſes, that when fiue yeres truce was taken betwéene the emperor and the French king, he procured (by the helpe of the cardinall of Loraine) that the ſame ſhould be vndoone.

To this pope therefore did the legats of England offer obedience in the name of the kingdome. But Poole which vnderſtood the old diſpleaſure, which this pope did beare vnto him, and doubting ſome danger that might thereby happen vnto him, did diligentlie labor with the king and quéene, when the ambaſſadors were returned home, that he might obteine the biſhoprike of Canturburie, after that Cranmer were executed for hereſie, leaſt that his legantine power being taken from him, he ſhould be called backe to Rome, and be euillie intreated of the pope, who had fined and impriſoned manie of the cardinals which were imperialiſts. Now we ſaid before, that Stephan Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, knowing the diſlike that was betwéene this pope and cardinall Poole, did ſeeke to obteine the honour of a cardinall, and the legantine power by ſecret drifts, & therfore laboured that Poole ſhould not burne Cranmer, ſo long as Gardiner liued. But in this ſeeking for theſe honours, Gardiner died, and Cranmer was burnt. After which the king & queene did earneſtlie deſire of the pope, that Poole might be inueſted with the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, for the common conſideration of the cauſe of England, (latelie by the comming of Poole conuerted to the Romane faith) did ſomwhat mitigate the diſpleaſure which the pope conceiued againſt this cardinall Poole. Wherfore the pope in the aſſemblie of the cardinals did (by cardinall Moronus, who was then called the protector of England in the Romane court) not onelie nominat Poole to be archbiſhop of Canturburie, but did highlie praiſe the man. And 1555 bicauſe Poole had not as yet receiued the order of prieſthood, but was onelie a deacon, he receiued of pope Paule vnder the pretext of prouiſion, this generall title of the generall adminiſtrator of the biſhoprike and prouince of Canturburie, vntill that he were made preeſt; which being had, the pope determined that the ſame title ſhould ceaſe and paſſe into the name of archbiſhop; and in the meane time gaue in the ſame bull of prouiſion, full authoritie, that Poole ſhould lawfullie reteine with the archbiſhoprike, all benefices, dignities, and all penſions whatſoeuer, iſſuing out of eccleſiaſticall liuings, for the maintenance of his honour of archbiſhop, cardinall, and legat.

Poole laboureth to be archbiſhop of Canturburie.

After this, he being made preeſt in the conuent church of the Franciſcane friers of Greenewich the two and twentith daie of March, he was by the popes authoritie conſecrated archbiſhop of Canturburie by Nicholas Heath archbiſhop of Yorke, in the preſence of the biſhops of London, Elie, Worceſter, Lincolne, Rocheſter, and ſaint Aſaph; Poole ſwearing obedience to the pope, as other his predeceſſors had doone: which oth he tooke during the time of the maſſe, in the ſight of the king, the queene, and manie other councellors. Three daies after, which was the daie of the annuntiation of the virgin Marie, being accompanied with Edmund Boner biſhop of London, the earle of Penbrooke, and ſir Edward Haſtings knight of the garter, he went moſt honourablie vnto the pariſh church of the arches or Bow in London (Vbi primo as ſaith Matthew Parker pontificia ſacra fecit) with the enſignes of his cardinalſhip and legantine power, manie generall aduocats and procurators going before him. After whoſe comming into the ſaid church, he placed himſelfe attired in his cardinals weed, in a gilden ſeat, ſet about with golden carpets and cuſhins, at what time maſſe was celebrated by the biſhop of Worceſter, with vnaccuſtomed pompe. During which, Thurlebie biſhop of Elie was preſent, to whom a certeine papall writing with the pall was giuen by Dauid Powell archdeacon of Derbie, which being receiued the biſhops all mitred and clad in their pontificalibus, did put the pall vpon the ſhoulders of Poole with the accuſtomed ſpeech and ceremonies: which doone, the cardinall goeth into the pulpit, where he diſcourſed of the ſignification, vſe, originall, and matter of the ſame pall, but verie ſlenderlie, as was by manie ſuppoſed. Theſe things thus doone, the archbiſhop tooke poſſeſſion of his ſee, and was inſtalled (without the accuſtomed ſhew and magnificence) by his procurator Robert Collins his commiſſarie of Canturburie, the fift kalends of Aprill. After this to 1556 put in vre the authoritie giuen him by the pope for the maintenance of his eſtate, he taketh the profits of the biſhoprike of Wincheſter, during the vacancie of that ſee; which when White biſhop of Lincolne did deſire, bicauſe that he was borne in that dioceſſe and was ſometime maiſter of Wickham college in Wincheſter, he promiſed to giue to the cardinall a thouſand pounds Engliſh during his life, & one yere after, and ſo obteined the biſhoprike of Wincheſter as hath Matthew Paris, for which couenants bicauſe they ſauoured of ſimonie, both they were to be abſolued by the pope. Now when queene Marie (as we ſaid before in Cranmer) had remitted vnto the cleargie the firſt fruits and tenths, which were before granted to king Henrie the eight, his heires and ſucceſſors of the kingdome, ſhe committed all that matter to Poole: to whome the cleargie (thinking themſelues diſcharged of the burthen of theſe firſt fruits and tenths) did notwithſtanding the queenes grant, wholie paie the ſame. The cauſe whereof was pretended to be this. King Henrie the eight vpon the diſſolution of the religious houſes, did grant yeerelie ſtipends to manie of the moonks and other perſons, all which Poole would haue to be paid out of the firſt fruits and tenths, leaſt the queene might feele the hurt of this liberall grant, when hir treaſure being greatlie weakened therewith, ſhould not ſuffice to beare the charges of thoſe grants of king Henrie the eight. Whereby it followed, that this grant of the queene did more hinder than profit the cleargie: for manie with the hope of this releaſe of their firſt fruits, did put in no ſuerties to paie the ſame, which they ought to haue doone vnder a great paine ſet downe by that law, which gaue them to king Henrie the eight; for want of which ſuerties they were after called into the law, as writeth Matthew Parker in theſe words: Qui in ius de ſtipulatione at fidei iuſſione de primitijs danda vocati, dum in iure contenderent, fiſci procuratoribus ac miniſtris, cum conſuetæ ſportulæ eſſent pendendæ, miſerè plectebantur, ſoluendáque tum dilationibus factis earum reſidua, quæ arreragia dicuntur, mortuis paulo poſt tam regina Maria quàm Polo cardinale, maximo miniſterij detrimento regina Eliſabetha regnante iterum repetita ſunt, poſtquam pontificius clerus amotus & abdicatus fuiſſet.

Ex archiuis.

That ſame yeare Poole deſeruing well of the ſee of Canturburie, obteined of the queene that the patronage of nineteene eccleſiaſticall benefices placed in Kent within his dioceſſe were giuen vnto that ſee. Beſides which he procured not anie great profit vnto that chaire, but onelie in building the long gallerie of Lambeth on the eaſt ſide, with the inferior buildings and parlor ioined to the ſame: for the charge which he ment to haue beſtowed vpon the palace of Canturburie was neuer doone, by reaſon that he was preuented by death. This archbiſhop held a ſynod at London in S. Paules church, wherein he eſtabliſhed all things which might ſtrengthen the ſubiection of England to the church of Rome: all which he publiſht in a booke intituled; The reformation of the church of England, conteining twelue chapters, amongſt which this was one, for frugalitie and moderat diet in England, as worthie remembrance, & to be followed by our now clergie, his words be theſe: Quia exemplum vitæ magnam authoritatem verbo adfert, éſtque velut quoddam prædicandi genus, ob id curandum eſt ijs, qui alijs præſunt, vt cæteris cùm morum probitate, vitæque ſanctitate tum ea propriam domum rectè gubernandi laude, quàm in epiſcopis apoſtolus requirit, antecellant. Nullo igitur prælati faſtu, nulla pompa vtantur, non veſtibus ſericis, non pretioſa ſuppelectile, ſed eorum menſa frugalis & parca, non plus quàm tria, aut ad ſummum quatuor (quod etiam magis pro huius temporis ratione, indulgendo quàm probando concedimus) ciborum genera præter fructus & bellaria, qualeſcunque hoſpites aut conuiuas habeant apponantur. Reliqua menſæ cōdimenta ſint charitas;

A law made for frugalitie and moderat diet, to be kept of the cleargie.

tas, ſanctorum librorũ lectio, & ſermones pij. Domeſticorum & equorum numeroſa & ſuperflua multitudine abſtineant, ac tot miniſtris contenti ſint, quot ad curæ ſibi commiſſæ adminiſtrationem, ac domus regimen, & quotidianos vitæ vſus erunt neceſſarij. Thus much Poole.

The pope incenſed againſt England.

* Pag. 1168.

Poole a ſuſpected heretike.

Touching which ſparing and frugalitie of diet, Cranmer before him, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and one, did make ſomewhat a more large decrée. For he appointed ſix diſhes of fiſh and fleſh to an archbiſhop, fiue to a biſhop, to deanes and archdeanes foure, & to inferior perſons thrée; with foure diſhes of fruit, or ſuchlike, for an archbiſhop, thrée for a biſhop, & two for the reſt. But neither Cranmer nor Poole with all their laws (the greater is the pitie) could reſtreine the inordinat and néedles ſuperfluitie of fare in England. For though theſe orders were for ſome ſmall time obſerued; yet within one month after they returned to their accuſtomed diet and banketing. But to returne to the courſe of the hiſtorie for this archbiſhop, we ſaie, that quéene Marie to ſuccor hir huſband now entred into the warres of France, ſent defiance vnto the French king, which did ſo much incenſe pope Paule the fourth, who fauored the Frenchmen, that his dailie miſlike of cardinall Poole grew more great againſt him, and that the rather, becauſe Poole had directed letters vnto the pope, and ſent meſſengers, by whome he did with great reuerence and vehemence deale with the pope, that the ſame warres might be appeaſed, through the mediation of his holineſſe, which Poole did know to haue furthered the ſame. Wherefore the pope taking awaie his legantine power from this cardinall Poole, did call him backe to Rome, and in that office did place William Peter (as hath Matthew Parker) one of the order of the Franciſcans to be both cardinall and legat, if this name of William Peter in the printed booke be not miſtaken for Peter Peto the frier Minor, being made legat & cardinall at this inſtant 1557. as appereth in my diſcourſe* of cardinals. When the pope had called Poole to Rome, he was not ſatiſfied therwith, but committed to priſon cardinall Morenus the familiar fréend of cardinall Poole. All which being knowen to quéene Marie before they came vnto the eares of Poole, ſhe (vnknowledging to this archbiſhop) commanded, that they which ſhould come into England from the pope, ſhould not land at any hauen by the helpe of the Engliſh: adding moreouer, that if anie letters were brought, that they ſhould be intercepted and deliuered to the quéene, & not to Poole. For which cauſe ſhe further ſent vnto hir ambaſſador at Rome, to declare vnto the pope, that if this legantine power were taken from Poole and giuen vnto Peter, that the Romane religion new ſet vp in England would be in greter danger. Wherefore the pope with great héed ought to beware, that if he went forth in this determination, that it would bréed ſuch turmoile in England, as would not eaſilie be againe appeaſed. Whereunto the pope anſwered, that Poole by probable reaſons of the court of Rome, was fallen into the ſuſpicion of hereſie, and for that cauſe was commanded to come to Rome: Vt (ſaith Matthew Parker) ſuum cum Moroni cardinalis ac familaris ſui confeßione iuncta habeatur de præſenti inquiſitio, ne cui tanti momenti negotio abſenti præiudicaretur. Which thing, although quéene Marie meant to haue had kept from Poole, yet he vnderſtood the ſame by other meſſengers, and therefore omitted to beare the ſiluer croſſe, leſt the adminiſtration of the legantine power, and by poſt horſſes ſent to Rome to the pope one Nicholas Ormanet (called the popes datarie, whoſe diligence in that legantine power cardinall Poole did chéefelie vſe) to defend Poole in all things, to render account of his orderlie vſing of the legantine power, & to open the ſtate of religion in England. The pope gladlie receiued Ormanet, & gaue him hearing in the behalfe of Poole, but ſaid, he greatlie maruelled by whoſe perſuaſion the quéene of England made wars with the French, wherby a great ſlaughter & captiuitie of the Frenchmen was had at ſaint Quintins, from which warre he ſaid that his legat Poole ought and might haue diſſuaded the quéene, wherefore he déemed his negligence or permiſſion therein, and thereof vnworthie of legantine power. For as touching the other ſuſpicions of hereſie laid againſt him, ſaid they, were wholie vniuſt and malicious, from which the holieſt man that euer was, no not Chriſt himſelfe could be frée. Which ſaid, the pope permitted Poole to kéepe his legantine authoritie, vntill he ſhould ſend cardinall Carafa his brothers ſon to ſet a peace betwéen king Philip and the French, and ſo gaue leaue vnto Ormanet to returne into England vnto cardinall Poole, who was ſomewhat reuiued by the comming of Ormanet. But becauſe he vnderſtood through the talke betwéene the pope & him that Carafa the new cardinall, Qui (as ſaith Parker) ex gregaria Galli militia ad id muneris nuper ab auunculo ſuo papa aſſumptus eſt, ſhould come vnto the emperor, he expected that Carafa would be a ſharpe cenſuror of all his déeds, in the adminiſtration of his legantine power. Wherfore this cardinall Poole procéeded verie ſtreictlie againſt the euangelicals, and not onelie purſued the liuing, but alſo ſtretched his power vpon the bones of the dead. For firſt, viſiting his dioceſſe of Canturburie, he after ſent John Chriſtoferſon biſhop of Chicheſter, and Cutbert Scot biſhop of Cheſter, with doctor Cole and Ormanet (whome he preferred in all things) to be his delegat iudges to viſit the vniuerſities of Oxford and Cambridge, and to reduce them vnto the rule of the Romane religion. Which commiſſioners amongſt other things did at Oxford burne the buried bones of the wife of Peter Martyr, and at Cambridge the bones of Martine Bucer and Paulus Phagius, after that they were ſolemnlie condemned of hereſie; at which time they ſcarſe refreined their hands from the dead carcaſes of the kings, Henrie the eight & Edward the ſixt.

The loſſe of Calis the death of queen Marie.

All things thus doone, and (as it ſéemed) in quiet, Calis was loſt to the French, which thing greatlie gréeued the people, and the quéene ſo vehementlie, that ſhe tooke it at the hart, and neuer after recouered it; being in ſuch agonie, as that ſhe neither could nor would be comforted by anie, ſith king Philip hir huſband was then alſo abſent, whereby in the end ſhe died. But before the quéens death there was a parlement & a ſynod holden, in which ſynod Poole declared vnto the clergie how heauilie the quéene did take the loſſe of Calis; wherfore, to comfort hir, he perſuaded the clergie, that they ſhould willinglie promiſe to giue liberallie of their owne ſubſtance towards the maintenance of continuall warres againſt the French. Whereunto the clergie was led vpon condition, that they might be frée from all other manner of charges of armor, horſſe, and men, and other warlike expenſes, the which was after obteined by the interceſſion of Poole; and yet the prelats entred into a priuat conference amongſt themſelues, to prouide all armor neceſſarie for their own defenſe (as they ſaid in that ſynod) againſt the force of the enimies. This doone, the quéene did ſhortlie after depart this life (during this parlement and ſynod) vpon thurſdaie, which that yeare was the ſeuentéenth daie of Nouember, in hir manor of ſaint James betwéene the houres of fiue and ſix of the clocke in morning. Vpon whoſe death on that daie

this

A fatall daie to three princes.

this is not to be ouerpaſſed in ſilence, that thurſdaie was a fatall and funerall daie to three princes ſucceeding one after an other, being of one bloud and line, which were Henrie the eight the father, king Edward the ſixt the ſonne, and this queene Marie daughter to the firſt, and ſiſter to the laſt, but not by one woman.

In which yere a feuer quartane deuoured manie perſons, and namelie of the clergie; which feuer at this time, and on the daie of the death of queene Marie, did twiſe giue two fits to cardinall Poole, which troubled him ſo greatlie, that he ſhortlie died on the ſame daie, or (as others haue) the next morning, when he heard of the death of queene Marie. Wherein ſeemeth to be no leſſe ſympathie and conſent of minds, and influences of the heauens in them at that time of their death; than there was by birth, nighneſſe of blood and conſanguinitie, and by education and ſocietie in their yoong yeares a conſent in maners and religion in the time of their liues. The death of which cardinall occaſioned manie then to ſaie, that he poiſoned himſelfe, as one that hated to liue to ſee the change of religion, and doubting the mercie of the noble ſucceeding queene, whom he had ſecretlie offended. Which procuring of his owne death I cannot be led to beleeue for manie reaſons, but ſpeciallie for that Matthew Parker ſpeaketh not thereof, who of purpoſe hath largelie ſet downe his life, and to the vttermoſt recited whatſoeuer touched him, either for diſpraiſe, or opening of his euill actions. Which I leaue to the iudgement of others, not hauing at this preſent ſufficient time to ſet downe euerie thing, which the ſame reuerend father and worthie author hath ſpoken or aggrauated with or againſt him. He died (as I ſaie) the ſame daie wherin the queene died, the third houre of the night, after that he had liued ſeuen and fiftie yeares and ſix moneths, had ruled in the archbiſhops chaire two yeares ſeuen moneths three weekes and fiue daies, and had exerciſed his legantine power foure yeares and ſix daies; whoſe bodie was firſt conueied from Lambeth to Rocheſter, where it reſted one night, being brought into the church of Rocheſter at the weſt doore, not opened manie yeres before. At what time my ſelfe then a yoong ſcholer beheld the funerall pompe thereof, which trulie was great and anſwerable both to his birth and calling, with ſtore of burning torches and mourning weedes. At what time his coffin being brought into the church was couered with a cloth of blacke veluet, with a great croſſe of white ſatten ouer all the length and bredth of the ſame, in the middeſt of which croſſe his cardinals hat was placed. From Rocheſter he was conueied to Canturburie, where the ſame bodie (being firſt before it came to Rocheſter incloſed in lead) was after three daies ſpent in his commendations, ſet foorth in Latine and Engliſh) committed to the earth in the chapell of Thomas Becket. The toome of which Poole is yet to be ſeene ſo plaine and baſe as maie be, the ſame being onelie a heape of bricke mortiſed together, with the top like to the ridge or couer of a houſe onelie plaſtered ouer with lime, beſides which is ſet his armes and this deuiſe of his: A globe, round about which a ſnake did ſpirallie wind hir ſelfe, vpon whoſe head did ſtand a white doue, and beſides the ſame this poſie written, Prudens ſimplicitas: which bearing manie, and thoſe both wiſe and learned expoſitions, I leaue to euerie man to iudge as his humor pleaſeth, eſpeciallie ſith he maie ſee the ſame deuiſe at this daie ouer the entrance into the defaced church of the knights of S. Iohns of Ieruſalem neere Smithfield beſides London. Which deuiſe ſtanding there, prooueth that this cardinall had begun to repare that church, and thought fullie to haue brought thither the knights of Malta, ſometime knowne by the name of the knights of the Rhodes, and knights of S. Iohns of Ieruſalem, in as ample number as that order poſſeſſed that houſe before the ſame was diſſolued in the time of king Henrie the eight, which was not doone ſo fullie as he ment; for but ſome few were gathered thither vnder their lord and prior ſir Thomas Treſham knight. At the time of the death of this cardinall he greatlie fauoured and truſted ſtrangers, to whom he principallie gaue all that he had, making Aloiſius Priolus a ſenator of Venice, the heire of all his ſubſtance, to whoſe truſt he committed the diſpoſition of his will, and the performance of his legacies, who did it accordinglie, giuing liberallie to all men, but ſpeciallie to ſuch as came out Italie, or from other far countries with him into England. Which gratitude the Italians affirme that Poole vſed to them becauſe he found honorable ſupport amongſt them when he remained there, and was baniſhed his countrie. At what time of * diſpoſing of his goods, Priolus himſelfe ſeemed ſo modeſt and temperate in taking or withholding anie of the riches of the cardinall, that he gaue to euerie man his due, and further reteined nothing thereof to his owne vſe but two praier bookes, which were a breuiarie and a diurnall.

Poole ſuppoſed to haue poiſoned himſelfe.

The pompe at Pooles funerall.

Reſtitution of the knights of the Rhodes.

* See pa. 1165.

Matthew Parker.

Matthew Parker was made archbiſhop of Canturburie in this ſort. After the death of queene Marie, and that the noble princeſſe Eliſabeth obteined the crowne, who aboliſhed all Romane ceremonies and altered the ſtate of religion; ſhee had care firſt to place a moſt graue and wiſe perſon in the principall ſee of hir kingdome, to the end that he ſitting at the ſterne of the ſhip of eccleſiaſticall gouernment, might direct the ſame according as the goſpell required: wherefore ſhe nominated to that place doctor Nicholas Wotton, a man of no leſſe wiſedome and experience than he was of great ſeruice imploied for the benefit of his countrie. But he refuſing the ſame, as one who in his old yeares would not accept ſo heuie a charge, Matthew Parker was moſt worthilie aduanced to that place, of whoſe birth, education, deſert and learning, which brought him to that ſee, we will intreat as followeth, in ſome part taken out of a booke written of his life.

This Matthew was borne at Norwich on the ſixt of Auguſt, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred and foure, being about the twentith yeare of Henrie the ſeuenth, of honeſt parents being citizens of Norwich, wherof his fathers name was William Parker, and his mother called Alois or Alice; of which two, the firſt died the tenth of Ianuarie one thouſand fiue hundred and ſixteene, being about the eight yere of king Henrie the eight; and the ſecond departed the world the twentith of September, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and three, falling in the firſt yeare of the reigne of queene Marie. Theſe parents of this Matthew procured him to be brought vp in grammar & ſuch lerning at home with them, vntill he came to ſeuenteene or eighteene yeares of age; but when his father was dead, and he left in the cuſtodie of his mother, he was ſent to Cambridge, where he was mainteined by hir charge, and nouriſhed in Corpus Chriſti college. But ſhortlie after his comming thither, when his good increaſe of learning was perceiued, he had (as one hath written of him) appointed to him Stipendium è collegij vectigalibus, vt ſacrã bibliam ſocijs legeret, cuius generis ſcholares bibliotiſtæ dicuntur. Wherevpon he thus made one of that number, and abating his mothers charge, did in ſaint Marie hall (belonging to Corpus Chriſti college) diligentlie applie his time in the ſtudie of logike and philoſophie, by meanes of which ſtudies (after ter that he had conſumed thrée yeares and ſomewhat more in the ſame) he was made bachellor of arts in the fourth yeare after his comming to Cambridge, and within thrée yeares following, a profeſſor or maſter of art, and fellow of the foreſaid college. After which his firſt training vp in theſe humane arts, he did (as he grew in yeares and riper iudgment) aplie himſelfe to higher ſtudies, giuing himſelfe to diuinitie, the onlie knowledge wherein the moſt excellent part of man receiueth chéefeſt comfort in this life. In which kind of ſtudie he beſtowed ſuch diligent and painfull trauell, that he red ouer the doctors & councels in the ſpace of fiue yeares; which being ſo ſpent, he then began to come foorth into the world to ſhew what he was, and to labour in the vineyard of Chriſt his church.

Matthew Parker a Bibleclarke.

The firſt ſerſermon: that Matthew Parker made.

Wherefore hauing obteined the kings grant, and the licence of Thomas Cranmer archbiſhop of Canturburie to preach, he made his firſt ſermon in the vniuerſitie of Cambridge, preaching afterward in manie other famous places of England, to his ſingular commendation; and at length by degrées, was admitted in the Lent time amongſt other learned perſons, to preach before king Henrie the eight, king Edward the ſixt, and quéene Eliſabeth. Whoſe fame thereby growing great, and king Henrie the eight liking of him, this Matthew was called into the court; and by the king made the chapline of quéene Anne, mother to the now liuing renowmed princeſſe Eliſabeth, to whome God grant a long, happie, and peacefull life and gouernement, making hir enimies hir footſtoole. When he was thus the quéenes chapline, the king and ſhe beſtowed manie great gifts vpon him. For firſt he was made deane of Stoke, which is not far from Clare in Suffolke. Then after (being made bachellor of diuinitie) he obteined of king Henrie the eight to haue a prebend in the church of Elie, and by the interceſſion of the ſame king (for his learning ſake) he ſhortlie after obteined to haue the degrée of doctor of diuinitie, and to be choſen (by the fellows of that houſe) to be maiſter or ruler of Corpus Chriſti college, in which he had béene firſt brought vp, and which he did after increaſe with large gifts: beſides the furniſhing of the librarie there with manie rare and notable monuments and ancient hiſtories of this realme.

Sée before pag. 1261.

After the death of king Henrie the eight, he was aduanced to be chapline to king Edward the ſixt, by whoſe benefit he was made deane of Lincolne, and obteined the prebendarie of Coldingham in the ſame church, with the rectorie of Landbéech in the dioceſſe of Elie, foure miles from Cambridge, which was beſtowed vpon him by the gift and patronage of the fellowes of his college. With which reuenues & dignities this biſhop being thus indowed, he did not miſerablie ſpend the ſame; but imploied it for the benefit of the common-welth, and kept the college of Stoke (deſired & obteined of the king by the laitie) vntill in the firſt yeare of king Edward the ſixt it was prouided by parlement, that the ſame college ſhould come to the kings hand, by reaſon whereof he was inforced to depart therewith, hauing yearelie fortie pounds allowed him out of the excheker for the ſame. The loſſe of which college he tooke the more gréeuouſlie, becauſe he had there built a ſchoole, and appointed a yearelie ſtipend for the maintenance of a ſchoole maiſter there; which ſchoole he yet left, notwithſtanding the taking awaie of the college, in ſuch a ſtate as he could by all means procure to haue it remaine.

1553

After this, when king Edward was dead, and his ſiſter quéene Marie ſucceeded, and that in the ſecond yeare of hir reigne all the maried cleargie were remooued from their eccleſiaſticall liuings: this Matthew was alſo depriued of all his promotions, and ſo liued contented without them, during all the time of quéene Marie. After the death of the ſame quéene, when the noble and heroicall woman the quéene Eliſabeth obteined the crowne (remouing all ſuch Romane ceremonies as were renewed by hir ſiſter Marie) manie ſuch perſons as were exiled in thoſe ſeuere times of quéene Maries reigne returned into England; and ſuch as then had ſecretlie hidden themſelues within the realme for their religions cauſe, began now to ſtep foorth into the light, and openlie ſhew themſelues in the world. Amongſt which latter ſort was this Matthew Parker, knowne to the quéene and hir councell from the time of his youth, being by the iudgement of all men thought méet, both for his learning, grauitie and iudgement, to be aduanced to ſome ſpirituall promotion. Wherefore he was named to the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, which offered dignitie the more he refuſed to accept, was the more vehementlie vrged vpon him; whereof there be manie witneſſes liuing, and of them in the higheſt degrée of credit with the quéene, and of honor in the common-wealth. But at length, what by the commandement of hir maieſtie, and the perſuaſion of his friends, he receiued the title and poſſeſſion of the biſhop and biſhoprike of Canturburie: in which, how he behaued himſelfe, we ſhall more liberallie hereafter diſcourſe.

1558

1559

Wherefore in the ſecond yeare of quéene Eliſabeth, he was on the ſeuentéenth daie of December choſen to that place by the deane and chapter of that metropolitane ſée of Canturburie, and was conſecrated in the preſence of foure biſhops: which were William biſhop of Chicheſter, Iohn biſhop of Hereford, Miles ſometime biſhop of Exceſter, and Richard biſhop of Bedford. In whoſe conſecration, this memorable thing happened vnto him; that being the ſeuentith biſhop after Auguſtine, he was the firſt and the onelie man that obteined the ſame without the popes confirming buls, & without anie Aronicall ornaments of gloues, rings, ſandals, ſlippers, miter, pall, or ſuch like: Multóque rectius (as ſaith my author) & ſimplicius & puritati euangelicæ congruẽtius, auſpicatus eſt à precibus, & ſpiritus ſancti inuocatione, manuum impoſitione; pijs ab eo interpoſitis ſtipulationibus, indumentis verò archiepiſcopali authoritati grauitatique conſentaneis, habitóque per doctum & pium theologum pro concione de paſtoris in gregem officio, cura & fide, gregiſque viciſsim in paſtorem amore, obſequio, atque reuerentia diſerta admonitione, eáque finita euchariſtiæ à frequenti grauiſsimorum hominum cœtu perceptione, & ad extremum omnium communi & ardenti oratione, vt munus iam illi impoſitum maximè cedat ad Dei gloriam, gregis ſalutem, ſuæque conſcientiæ lætum teſtimonium, cùm coram Domino geſti muneris rationẽ ſit redditurus.

The maner of conſecrating Matthew Parker archbiſhop of Canturburie.

1558

Now to go forward with him, being in this ſort conſecrated archbiſhop, there was a law made in the firſt yeare of our quéene Eliſabeth, wherein it was appointed, that commiſſioners named by the prince, ſhould haue authoritie to deale in ciuill and eccleſiaſticall cauſes; leaſt in ſuch varietie and diſſention of religion, the church of England might ſuffer ſome inconuenience and hurt. In which commiſſion, this Matthew as he was firſt placed for his office and dignitie, ſo was he moſt carefull in trauelling therin, and executing thereof: who in dooing the ſame, behaued himſelfe with ſuch modeſtie and vprightneſſe, that he diſpleaſed none in correction of things not rightlie doone but certeine new fanſied fellows, who puffed vp with vaine glorie, did firſt conceiue, ſet forth, and defend (rather with raſhneſſe and will, than with iudgement and learning) certeine new opinions to trouble the ordered ſtate of the commonwealth: whoſe vniuſt complaints and contumelies he tooke ſo moderatlie, that he neither left the mildneſſe of his owne nature, nor went beyond the dignitie of his archiepiſcopall calling, nor did maliciouſlie puniſh their lightneſſe and raſh vnaduiſedneſſe. For what his ſufferance was, to regaine theſe degenerat perſons to the publike religion; what his pietie was, in ſeeking to reconcile ſuch of the nobilitie, as law controuerſies had ſundered in amitie; and what his patience was, in ſuffering all kinds of iniuries, whereby he brake and auoided the malice and boldneſſe of manie, and bound vnto him the wiſe and better ſort; all they knew which were dailie conuerſant with him: which if by proofe they did not, yet the ſame might be more coniectured by others, vpon his mild and well ordered actions, than we can here preſentlie write. Now beſide manie other things which he ſhewed for proofe of his patience and gentle nature, there were other good parts in him: for although he was manie times troubled with ſickeneſſe, yet would he often aſcend the pulpit and preach, both in his metropolitane church, and in other pariſhes. But leauing theſe and manie commendable vertues, wherewith he was indued, let vs come to thoſe things which happened in the time of his archbiſhoprike.

Regiſtr. Math. Parker.

In the firſt yeare of his conſecration, he did at Lambeth conſecrat eleuen, and confirme two biſhops in his prouince; & within the next two yeares did with the conſecration of new biſhops fill vp all the number of the biſhoprikes of his owne prouince, except onelie the ſee of Landaffe, which ſtill kept Anthonie the biſhop, who poſſeſſed the ſame in the time of queene Marie. Theſe biſhops, which were by him ſo conſecrated in that firſt yeare, were Edmund Grindall biſhop of London, Richard Cox biſhop of Elie, Edwine Sands biſhop of Worceſter, Iohn Iewell biſhop of Saliſburie, Gilbert Berkeleie biſhop of Bath and Wels, Iohn Beaton biſhop of Lichfield & Couentrie, Rowland Mericke biſhop of Bangor, Thomas Yoong biſhop of ſaint Dauids, & Richard Dauid biſhop of ſaint Aſaph, all diuines; and ſuch as being fled out of England in the time of queene Marie, were returned in the beginning of the reigne of queene Eliſabeth. Beſides which, he conſecrated two other biſhops, which ſecretlie remained in England in the daies of the ſame queene Marie: whereof the one was Nicholas Bullingham, brought vp in the ciuill and canon lawes, who (being in the time of Edward the ſixt vicar generall of the biſhop of Lincolne, was remoued from thenſe in queene Maries reigne, and after in the beginning of this queenes time, appointed by the ſaid Matthew Parker to be iudge of his courts) was now by him conſecrated biſhop of Lincolne. The other biſhop was Edmund Gheſt a learned diuine, & one of the familie or houſhold of the archbiſhoprike & archdeacon of Canturburie, whome this Matthew aduanced to the biſhoprike of Rocheſter. In which yeare alſo, this archbiſhop confirmed in their biſhoprikes William Barlow biſhop of Bath & Wels in the time of king Edward the ſixt, now made biſhop of Chicheſter, and Iohn Scorie biſhop of Chicheſter in the reigne of Edward the ſixt, now aduanced to the biſhoprike of Hereford.

The next yeare he conſecrated at Lambeth Robert Horne (ſometime deane of Durham before his baniſhment in queene Maries time) biſhop of Wincheſter, Iohn Parkhurſt biſhop of Norwich, Richard Cheneie biſhop of Gloceſter, Thomas Dauid biſhop of ſaint Aſaph, and Edmund Schambler biſhop of Peterborrough, being his houſhold chapleine. Beſides theſe, he confirmed alſo in the ſame yeare Thomas Yoong, remooued from ſaint Dauids to the archbiſhoprike of Yorke, and Thomas Dauid biſhop of ſaint Dauids being remooued from the ſee of Aſaph to ſaint Dauids. When all the biſhopriks of his prouince were thus repleniſhed, Anthonie biſhop of Lauens or Landaffe departed the world, in whoſe place Hugh Dauid doctor of law did ſucceed, and was alſo conſecrated at Lambeth. So that by this time all the number of biſhops in his prouince receiued conſecration at the hands of this Matthew. A thing woorthie the noting, becauſe all hiſtories haue ſet it downe for a ſpeciall thing, if anie archbiſhop had in his time conſecrated three or foure other biſhops, as Anſelme is ſaid to haue in one daie conſecrated fiue biſhops, & Plegmund his predeceſſor ſeuen biſhops, a thing whereat antiquitie did maruell: but this Matthew, in the firſt yeare of his conſecration, did conſecrat eleuen, and confirme two. And in the three firſt years of his archiepiſcopall dignitie he did fill vp all the biſhopriks of his prouince; a thing which neuer happened to anie archbiſhop of Canturburie before the daies of this man. This doone, he appointed viſitations, in which himſelfe did viſit his owne dioceſſe of Canturburie. At what time, to auoid all note and ſuſpicion of gaine, he did not onelie willinglie remit to euerie pariſh their accuſtomed charges to be paid for thoſe cauſes, but did further in all his iourneie defraie the expenſes thereof vpon his owne coſt. In the reſt of his dioceſſes, either he did not viſit, leaſt he ſhould greeue the people with the charge thereof; or elſe appointed that viſitation to ſome other moderat perſon to be his procurator therein, which neuer demanded allowance therefore; or if he had anie allowance, the ſame was beſtowed in his name vpon ſome biſhop whoſe profits were but ſmall; as on the biſhop of Exceſter: or elſe it was diſtributed to the poore, as happened in the viſitation of Norwich.

In hiſtor. Ebor. epiſco. cap. 51.

The mariage and iſſue of Matthew Parker.

Thus hauing ſpoken ſomewhat of his publike doings, let vs now alſo ſaie ſomewhat of his priuat actions. This man liuing priuatlie at Cambridge maried his wife Margaret, whom he loued ſeuen yeares before the mariage contracted or celebrated, which time they had to procure mutuall conſent betweene them: becauſe king Henrie the eight had eſtabliſhed a law, wherein it was treaſon for anie prieſt to marie. Whervpon they were after maried in king Edwards time, in which band they continued two and twentie yeares. During which he had by his wife foure children, whereof two died yoong, and the other two were called Iohn and Matthew, whom he diligentlie brought vp in the vniuerſitie of Cambridge; both which comming to mans eſtate, were after maried in the epiſcopall tribe. For the eldeſt Iohn did marie Ione the daughter of Richard Cox biſhop of Elie, the other tooke to wife Francis the daughter of William Barlow biſhop of Chicheſter. The domeſticall traine of this biſhop was honorable after his eſtate, to euerie one of whom this law was ſet, to be at the ſeruice in the time appointed, or elſe to be fined with the loſſe of his dinner. His hall was in orderlie ſort kept, as it had beene in the daies of his predeceſſors. For on the right ſide thereof, his ſteward kept the table for the archbiſhops gentlemen, and ſuch other ſtrangers: and on the other ſide did ſit the almoner with his clearks, and the reſt of his houſhold: whoſe tables were ſo well furniſhed, as theſe officers were appointed to interteine (with their diet) all commers (who might thinke themſelues ſatiſfied) which were vnder the calling of a knight. And thus this much ſhortlie touching that matter.

The order of his houſe.

Now, after that he had beene foure yeares archbiſhop, paied his firſt fruits, and furniſhed his houſe according to his degree, and eſtabliſhed matters for religion; he determined to renew and build the ancient palace of Canturburie belonging to the biſhop, being all ruinous, and a great part conſumed with fire; which was a hard thing, & of great charge, conſidering the dearth of all things in theſe our daies, neceſſarie therevnto. Which in the end he brought to perfection, to the charge of one thouſand foure hundred pounds and more. The charge whereof he was the willinger to ſuſteine, becauſe he vnderſtood, that in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and ninteene: Charles the fift the emperor, when he came into England to king Henrie the eight, to viſit his aunt queene Katharine, was feſted in the ſame hall. In which feaſt, Charles and his people had the vpper end of the hall, and king Henrie the eight & queene Katharine kept the lower end thereof. But the chiefeſt cauſe, which mooued this biſhop to vphold the buildings of his predeceſſors, was; for that manie kings and queenes had beene crowned, and manie archbiſhops at their inthronization had kept great feaſts in the ſame hall: and that beſides, in the ſame hall, manie dukes, earles, and noble men, hauing a yearelie penſion, therefore, did execute the offices of ſteward and butler at the inſtallation of the archbiſhops. As of late, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and foure; when William Warham archbiſhop of Canturburie did enter the poſſeſſion of the biſhoprike, and kept a ſumptuous feaſt therefore in the ſame hall, Edward duke of Buckingham did there ſerue as ſteward and ruler of all the houſhold.

This hall thus repared, he alſo beſtowed ſome coſts vpon all thoſe pariſh churches (which were in decaie) whereof exchange was made by king Henrie the eight with Thomas Cranmer, and whereof the queene Eliſabeth had receiued the tenths (during the vacancie of the biſhoprike) by a law eſtabliſhed in the firſt yeare of hir reigne. Which biſhop (albeit he beſtowed no great charge vpon his inſtalment, as manie of his predeceſſors had doone before, and laſtlie cardinall Poole, whome this Matthew ſucceeded) further conſidering that the cauſe of building this great hall, was for the maintenance of hoſpitalitie, and deſirous after the example of the old liberalitie of his predeceſſors, to make an archiepiſcopall feaſt (worthie ſuch a hall) to the multitude of his pariſhioners of Kent, (did in the yeare after the reparing of the ſame hall) take occaſion that the ſame might be repleniſhed with the people of Kent, when all the ſhire (aſwell gentlemen and others were aſſembled at Canturburie, to wait vpon the iuſtices of aſſiſe) determined there to hold the oier, terminer, and gaole deliuerie. At what time, Iohn Southcot iuſtice of the kings bench, and Gilbert Gerard then generall attourneie, and now maiſter of the rolles, were iuſtices of aſſiſe; and ſir Thomas Kemp knight was ſhiriffe for and of that countrie, whome with the gentlemen of the ſhire this archbiſhop did inuite to a ſumptuous feaſt.

He feſted the iuſtices of aſſiſe, and the whole aſſemblie of the aſſiſes.

Wherevpon they granting to come therevnto, the biſhop ſummoned the reſt of the people by an officer and other meſſengers. On the daie of the appointed feaſt, the hall was decked with rich clothes, and furniſhed with much and rich plate and ſiluer veſſell. At what time the iudges, the ſhiriffes, the knights, gentlemen, and all the whole companie of the bench, with lawyers and other officers attending on the court, togither with the whole multitude of the people, entered the hall, and were placed according to their degrees; no man ſeruing that daie, but ſuch as were of the archbiſhops familie. But becauſe the multitude was verie great, theſe gheſts were faine to be ſet at ſeuerall times one after another; although in this publike time, when theſe iudges and other gentlemen were there, no woman was ſeene amongſt them. For they being conueied into the innermoſt part of his palace, were committed to his wife, and this feaſt onelie conſiſted of the men: from whome the biſhop receiued great thanks and commendations.

Which generall interteinement he vſed at other times, both there, & in manie other places: but becauſe that this was openlie doone in the ſhew of the whole ſhire; it ſeemed, and was reported, to be greater than anie other. For in the Whitſundaie before, when the archbiſhop had made a ſermon to the cleargie and people of Canturburie, in the metropolitane church; and the ſacrament was then diſtributed to the people: he was attended on to his houſe by the deane and cleargie, by the maior and citizens, and by diuerſe gentlemen of Kent; whome he had that daie inuited to dinner. In which feaſt, (which continued three daies) the archbiſhop ſat in his hall at the vpper end thereof. On whoſe right ſide ſat the maior and the citizens; and on the other ſide ouer againſt them were placed the women. Which order was at the reſt of the tables ſet along the hall, where the men were placed on the right ſide, and the women kept the other part. Which feaſt ſo ordered, was celebrated in honor of the queene, which had aduanced him to that ſee.

Other feaſts made by the archbiſhop to the whole multitude.

This doone, he preached againe on Trinitie ſundaie to the people, and adminiſtring the ſacrament, he beſtowed the like feaſt on the people of Canturburie, in the honor of king Henrie the eight, the laſt reſtorer of the church of Canturburie. But this ouerpaſſed, let vs returne vnto ſome other thing, leaſt in the midſt of all theſe bankets, I make but a hungrie deſcription of ſuch worthie praiſe and liberalitie, vſed by ſo honorable and graue a perſonage.
In the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred threeſcore and ſix, he conſecrated Nicholas Robinſon 1566 profeſſor of diuinitie, to the biſhoprike of ſaint Dauids, an eloquent man in his mother toong:
who comming from Cambridge, where he ſuffered ſome troubles in queene Maries time, was then this archbiſhops chapleine. In the yeare following, he 1567 confirmed Henrie Curwine doctor of law, biſhop of Oxford: who hauing beene archbiſhop of Dubline, and chancellor of Ireland, was verie ſkilfull in the ciuill law: which offices when he had worthilie manie yeares diſcharged, and did now grow in yeares; returned into his countrie, and was tranſlated to the biſhoprike of Oxford. After which, this archbiſhop conſecrated Richard Rogers bacheler of diuinitie 1569 to be his ſuffragane, biſhop of Douer.

Nicholas Robinſon made biſhop of ſaint Dauids.

Henrie Curwine archbiſhop of Dubline, made biſhop of Oxford.

The next yeare following, he returned vnto 1570 Canturburie, where on Aſcenſion daie, in the metropolitane church, he fed the people with ſpirituall food; and the Whitſuntide after, for three daies togither, did abundantlie feed both men and women with materiall bread in the palace of Canturburie, after the ſame order whereof we ſpake before. In which yeare likewiſe he remoued the old example of his predeceſſors a long time pretermitted. For where of old time the biſhops were woont to ſet their conſecration at Canturburie; that order was now almoſt loſt, to the preiudice of the right and priuilege of the church of Canturburie, which this archbiſhop did now reſtore. Wherefore, when Edmund Grindall biſhop of London was to be remoued to the archbiſhops ſee of Yorke, and that Richard Curteis biſhop of Chicheſter was choſen: he would haue the conſecration of the one, and the confirmation of the other, to be doone at Canturburie in the metropolitane citie. For which cauſe, in the feaſt of Trinitie, in which Richard Curteis (which was his chapleine)

Another feaſt at the conſecration of Curteis biſhop of Chicheſter.

chapleine) was fréelie conſecrated without anie reward. This archbiſhop, after a ſermon ended, did make an honorable feaſt in the memorie of king Henrie the eight, which excluded the moonks from that church: which feaſt might woorthilie be called an archbiſhops feaſt, becauſe the archbiſhop of Yorke was alſo inuited thither. At which time, beſides the biſhop of Yorke, there was Robert Horne biſhop of Wincheſter, Edmund Gheſt biſhop of Rocheſter, and this Curteis alſo now conſecrated biſhop of Chicheſter, with all the cleargie of that citie, and other miniſters of the church, both men and children. Beſides all which, the outward tables of the hall were furniſhed through with poore people of both kinds, belonging to the hoſpitall of ſaint Iohn and Harbaldowne. The next daie following, being mondaie, this Matthew confirmed Edmund Grindall archbiſhop of Yorke, with the aſſiſtance of the biſhops of Wincheſter, Rocheſter, and Chicheſter. The ſame yeare on the third daie of Iulie he began his ordinarie viſitation, which with manie intermingled continuations he after deferred vntill the two and twentith of the ſame moneth. On which daie he publiſhed iniunctions for the people & cleargie of his dioceſſe to obſerue: the ſame being the laſt ſeſſion of his viſitation, although that he had proroged the ſame to the feaſt of the purification of the virgine Marie.

On the eleuenth daie of which moneth, when the iudges were againe (with the whole traine of the ſhire) aſſembled at Canturburie to hold the aſſiſes, he did once more, as he before had doone, inuite the whole companie to another feaſt, appointed in all things as the other was. The thurſdaie following, Edwin Sands biſhop of Worceſter, being to be tranſlated to London, came to Canturburie to viſit the archbiſhop: where after he had remained two daies, he had on the ſaturdaie, when he departed in the morning, his election confirmed at London by the procurators, which were there for him. After which, the archbiſhop commeth to Lambeth, at what time his wife died, whoſe bodie was buried in the wals of the porch church of Lambeth, in a chapell, whoſe right belongeth to thoſe houſes of the buildings of Norffolke, whereof by hir huſbands ſufferance ſhe obteined the inheritance, whileſt ſhe liued. On whoſe toome this ſentence grauen in golden letters (promiſing reſurrection to him and to hir) is ſet downe by hir huſband as followeth:

Qui credit in me non moritur in æternum.

The ſame yeare the ſix and twentith of Ianuarie, he confirmed the election of Nicholas Bullingham biſhop of Lincolne to the biſhoprike of Worceſter, in whoſe ſée at Lincolne was Thomas Cooper placed, and conſecrated at Lambeth the foure and twentith of Februarie. And in the ſame yeare, the eightéenth daie of March, he conſecrated William Bradbridge, profeſſor of diuinitie, and deane of Saliſburie, to the biſhoprike of Exceſter. Then he new ſhingled his houſe at Lambeth, making there a new bridge into the Thames, and reparing the notable ſolarie or ſellar in the garden built at the charge of Cranmer, and almoſt now deſtroied. Beſides which, he further repared two water courſes, one comming into the garden, and the other into the inner cloiſter, to ſerue the common vſe of the houſhold. Moreouer in the ſame yeare he procured the new ſtréet in Cambridge, directlie leading from the weſt part of ſaint Maries church, to the gates of the publike ſchooles, to be new painted, and to be walled on both ſides with bricke. Next in the ſame yeare, in the month of March, he conſecrated at Lambeth, Edmund Gheſt (biſhop of Rocheſter) to the biſhoprike of Saliſburie: but becauſe the archdeacon of Canturburie, whoſe office is to put the conſecrated biſhops into the poſſeſſion of their ſées deceaſſed at this time, this Gheſt was inducted of the archbiſhop, by the procurator. After which, in the ſame place, Iohn Freake profeſſor of diuinitie and deane of Saliſburie was made biſhop of Rocheſter, and inducted thereunto by a procurator: at whoſe conſecration were preſent the biſhops Robert and Edmund, the firſt of Wincheſter, the ſecond of Saliſburie. But leauing this, let vs ſaie ſomewhat of his humanitie and courteſie vſed towards ſuch as were committed to reſtreint vnder his cuſtodie for matters of religion, who were Cutbert Tunſtall biſhop of Durham, Thomas Thurlebie biſhop of Elie, Iohn Borall ſecretarie to quéene Marie, Richard Smith profeſſor of diuinitie, doctor Treſham chancellor of Oxford, Edward Rice eſquier, and Henrie Howard brother to Thomas duke of Norffolke; all which he vſed with great lenitie and honor, beſtowing the charge of the honorable buriall of Cutbert Tunſtall, and cauſing maiſter Rice, and Henrie Howard vtterlie to renounce the Romane religion, as ſaith the author of the life of this Matthew.

Solarium.

1573

After this, on the twelfe daie of Aprill, was the yoong baron the lord Sturton committed alſo to this archbiſhop; who becauſe the quéene came that ſummer into Kent, went alſo thither with this archbiſhop. Of which the quéenes progreſſe into that countrie (wherein my ſelfe was borne and bred, & wherein I haue both manie friends and kinred (whome this progreſſe toucheth) I muſt aſwell (for the loue which I naturallie beare vnto it, as for the courteſie I dailie receiue in it) leaue ſome memorie to poſteritie. Thus therefore I enter into hir maieſties progreſſe into that countrie. The fourtéenth daie of Iulie being wedneſdaie, the worthie quéene Eliſabeth departed from Gréenwich, and went to Croidon, where with hir traine ſhe remained in the archbiſhops houſe; from thenſe ſhe paſſed to Orpington, to the houſe of ſir Perſiuall Hart, an old knight & ancient courtier, where ſhe ſtaied thrée daies, from thenſe remoouing to hir owne houſe at Knouls. After whoſe abode there by the ſpace of fiue daies, ſhe paſſed forth to Burling, to the houſe of Henrie Neuill lord of Aburgauennie, which ſhe vſed for thrée daies. And departing from thenſe on the kalends of Auguſt, ſhe went to another houſe of the ſaid lords, called Eridge; & hauing ſtaied there ſix daies, hir maieſtie taketh hir iourneie to Bedgburie, belonging to Alexander Culpeper, and the next daie came to Hampſted, where Thomas Gilford (after made knight) receiued hir into his houſe. In which, when ſhe had remained thrée daies, ſhe paſſed on to Rie, a towne of the ſea coſtes of Suſſex, belonging to the ports; whither the people affirmed that neuer king nor quéene euer came before hir maieſtie; the truth whereof I will not at this time either approoue or reproue.

In this place ſhe reſted thrée daies, and then ſpent other thrée at Siſingherſt, the houſe of Richard Baker, whome ſhe made knight at hir departure. Next on the ſeuentéenth daie of Auguſt, which was mondaie, ſhe came to Bocton Maleherbe, to the houſe of that worthie gentleman Thomas Wootton, where ſhe was two daies largelie interteined. For which, when hir maieſtie would haue honored him with the ſtate of knighthood, as manie of his anceſtors had béene before, he modeſtlie refuſed the ſame, rather ſéeking honor by vertue of life, and benefit to his countrie, than by the fauor and perſuaſion of others. From this mans houſe hir maieſtie kept on hir progreſſe to Hetfield, to the houſe of maiſter Tufton; in which alſo ſtaieng two daies, ſhe paſſed from thenſe to hir own houſe of Weſtinhanger, then in the cuſtodie of Thomas Sackeuill knight, baron of Buckehurſt, where ſhe ſpent foure daies.

After this, as ſhe haſtened towards Douer, ſhe dined in the caſtell of Sandwich, and then being aſcended Folkeſtone hill, this Matthew archbiſhop of Canturburie (who at that time remained at Bekeſborne) and the lord Cobham warden of the fiue ports (accompanied with thrée hundred knights and gentlemen of Kent, all well horſſed and attended vpon with a large retinue) did méet the quéene vpon the ſame hill; all which waited vpon hir to Douer. In the furtheſt parts of the liberties of which towne, the maior and the iurats thereof, with thrée hundred armed men receiued the quéene, and in the night conducted hir to Douer, where ſhe was interteined with a noble peale of ordinance diſcharged from the caſtell, and the ſhips riding thereabouts. All which méetings, and hir receiuing into Douer, was doone the fiue and twentith daie of Auguſt. Now hauing reſted hir ſelfe ſix daies at Douer, interteined with delights anſwerable for the time, and for hir preſence, ſhe came to Sandwich, where ſhe remained (being well receiued by the maior and iurats of the ſame towne, during hir abode there) by the ſpace of thrée daies.

The next daie, which was the third of September, ſhe tooke hir iournie towards Canturburie, dined by the waie at Wingham, and then entered the citie ſomewhat after thrée of the clocke in the afternoone. Who preſentlie going to the cathedrall church, & entring the ſame at the weſt gate, a yoong man, then ſcholer of the grammar ſchoole, receiued hir with a Latine oration. Which ended, and ſhe knéeling at a deſke, the archbiſhop, the biſhops of Lincolne, Rocheſter, and of Douer, vſed praiers for hir comming thither. Then the deane with the prebends, canons, miniſters, and the whole quier of the church of Canturburie, and manie other ſingers of hir chapell went before hir (hauing a canopie borne ouer hir head by foure knights) through the quier vntill ſhe came to the place appointed for hir oratorie; from whenſe (after euening praier doone) ſhe came along the ſtréet to hir palace of ancient time called ſaint Auguſtines: and the ſundaie following, ſhe went in hir coch through the ſtréets to the ſame church, and ſo returned home: on which daie the deane preached before hir. The next daie of which hir remaining at Canturburie (being the ſeuenth daie of September, and the daie of hir maieſties birth, making vp the fortith yeare of hir age) ſhe was with all hir traine inuited to dinner by the archbiſhop of that citie. The order of which feaſt being celebrated much about the houre of hir birth, was after this ſort.

The noble men did onelie attend vpon the quéene, who as ſoone as ſhe had waſhed hir hands, came to the table ſet in breadth in the higheſt place of the archbiſhops hall; in the midſt whereof, vnder a canopie or cloth of eſtate, hir maieſtie did ſit in a certeine old marble chaire, alwaies there fixed, and now decked with pretious cloths of gold. Then the erle Ritius the marſhall of France (who a little before, being ſent ambaſſador from the French king, was with a hundred gentlemen come vnto Canturburie) togither with monſieur de Mote the French kings orator, were placed at the end of the quéenes table, vpon the right hand of the quéene, with their faces to hir maieſtie, and their backs towards the hall; to the end that they might more conuenientlie talke with hir. And at the other end of the boord on the left hand were placed foure ladies, which were the marchioneſſe of Northhampton, with the counteſſes of Oxford, Lincolne, and Warwike. At what time the penſioners ſerued the quéene, and hir maieſties other ſeruants attended on the ambaſſador, the orator, and the ladies. The furniture of whoſe table conſiſted of two courſes, of moſt delicat fiſh and fleſh; and one third courſe of fruit & other banketting deuiſes. Hir maieſtie thus placed, the other tables in the hall were alſo furniſhed; whereof, at the firſt (which ſtood at the right hand of the quéene) were ſet the archbiſhop with diuerſe counſellors and other noble men and women, of which the chiefe were ſuch as came out of France. And at the table on the left hand of the quéene were placed manie ladies and worſhipfull women. At the tables ſomewhat further off were ſet the maior, the ancient citizens of Canturburie, and other gentlemen and gentlewomen of Kent, all which were ſerued with the archbiſhops retinue. Thus this ſolemnitie ended (whereof I haue omitted manie things, as well for order of ſeruice, as for muſike and other delights) the quéene went into the biſhops gallerie, hauing long talke with the French ambaſſador, almoſt till night.

When hir maieſtie departed, after that ſhe had imparted manie great thanks vnto the biſhop for this ſumptuous and chargeable feaſt, and for the rich gifts which the archbiſhop did moreouer beſtow vpon hir (as well of horſſes, as other iewels) amongſt which was one ſalt of gold, which hauing two rich achats therein curiouſlie carued, the one with the quéenes image, and the other with ſaint George killing the dragon, and a long diamond in the couer, with French verſes; it was valued at more than two hundred marks, beſides the ſix portigues which were incloſed in the ſame ſalt, when he gaue it to the quéene. Moreouer, the archbiſhop beſtowed manie goodlie gifts vpon others of the councell, and of hir maieſties traine; with fiue hundred pounds, which he gaue amongſt the officers of hir houſe. And yet not contented herewith, he kept open houſe for all commers, during the time that the quéene remained at Canturburie.

The next ſundaie alſo the quéene came to the cathedrall church in hir coch thorough the ſtréet: and ſo returned againe, after morning praier and a ſermon made by the biſhop of Lincolne. Thus the quéene remaining fourtéene daies at Canturburie, ſhe went on wedneſdaie to Feuerſham, where ſhe remained two daies. Then on fridaie ſhe paſſeth to Sittingburne, and laie that night at the houſe of James Cromer eſquier, a good member of his common-wealth. The next daie ſhe came to Rocheſter, and reſted foure daies there in an inne called the crowne, the onelie place to interteine princes comming thither; as in my time I haue ſéene both king Philip and the quéene to haue reſted themſelues there. From thenſe ſhe goeth to Dartford a houſe of hir owne, and ſo after two daies to Gréenwich, where ſhe ended hir progreſſe. In which hir Kentiſh progreſſe (which by the quéene of all other countries is moſt commended, as well for the troops of gentlemen which continuallie attended on hir, as for the varietie of delights which were there ſhewed, the learned inuentions & orations, and the rich ſhewes of the countrie) the ſhiriffe with a goodlie traine of knights and gentlemen did continuallie attend vpon hir maieſtie, from hir firſt entrance into that ſhire, vntill hir returne vnto Gréenewich. This being ſpoken of, let vs returne againe to this archbiſhop. After the quéene was ſetled at Gréenewich, the archbiſhop commeth to Lambeth, where hearing the fame of this interteinement of the quéene, he greatlie reioiſed that he had liued ſo long, that being the ſeuentie archbiſhop of that ſée, he ſhould in the ſeuentie yeare of his age, receiue ſo honorable a prince as his ſoueraigne was, and giue hir a feaſt the daie of hir birth.

After this, he did at Lambeth on the thirteenth daie of December conſecrat William Hughes doctor of diuinitie, choſen by the queene to be biſhop of ſaint Aſaph; of whome he obteined that daie the accuſtomed fee for his conſecration and confirmation; togither with the aduouſon (which belonged to the archbiſhop by right of his prerogatiue) of the pariſh church of Llanduechen, in the dioceſſe of S. Aſaph, then apperteining to the gift of the ſame biſhop: which grant was confirmed by the conſent of the deane and chapter, and ſigned with their common ſeale. The next moneth in Januarie came Peter Dathen, orator from the countie Palatine of Rheine, to the queene of England, to whome (after that the archbiſhop had greatlie feaſted him) the archbiſhop gaue a guilt cup with a couer of three and fortie ounces of ſiluer: in the bottome whereof was the image of a citie grauen, hauing a ſerpent underneath it, lieng in a lake, and ſeeking to deuoure the ſame citie; about which were written theſe two Latine verſes, expreſſing the proper ſenſe and meaning of this hieroglyphicall image or portrature:

Vrbs ego ſancta Dei ſerpentis fraude vetuſti
Quaſsa, Palatini ſtabo potentis ope.

This biſhop, liuing in all worldie delights, did yet keepe ſuch a moderation of gouernment in himſelfe, and in the ordering of all things, that he ſeemed moſt rightlie to be indued with the vertue of temperance: and therefore not eſteeming of the preſent pleaſures of this life, he alwaies uſed this poſie in his windowes and other places: Mundus tranſit & concupiſcentia eius. Which he cauſed alſo to be printed in his archiepiſcopall ſeale, with the figure of the daie of iudgement. And now hauing ſpoken ſomewhat of his poſie, let us not alſo forget to write ſomewhat of his armes. It is ſuppoſed by ſome, that the keis which he bare in theſe enſignes of his, were by long inheritance of ancient familie deſcended unto him: which armes being gules a cheuron ſiluer betweene three keis; at the laſt, the queene commanded that three ſtars ſhould be added thereunto, which the harolds placed in the cheuron, with the colour of gules: of which armes, namelie the three keies, & the three ſtarres, doctor Haddon compoſed theſe verſes:

Sunt antiquorum claues monumenta tuorum,
Venit ab auguſto principe ſtella triplex:
Sic bene conſpirant, virtus, doctrina, poteſtas,
E. placidæ pacis ſemina læta ferunt.
Sed tandem ad finem decurrunt gaudia vitæ,
Ac homo puluis erit, puluis vt antè fuit.

This man wrote in the Engliſh toong a booke of prieſts mariages; he compoſed manie homilies to be read in the church; he procured Matthew Paris and Matthew Weſtminſter to be printed; he ſet forth the foure euangeliſts in the old Saxon, and now Engliſh toong; and wrote a booke in Latine of the liues of the archbiſhops of that ſee (as ſome affirme) which I haue uſed much in this diſcourſe, of the liues of the archbiſhops of Canturburie. He departed this world the ſeuenteenth daie of Maie (about midnight) at Lambeth, where he was honorablie buried: on whoſe toome (being of blacke marble) is ingrauen an epitaph, compoſed by the ſame doctor Haddon, and ſet downe before in this chronicle.

Edmund Grindall.

Edmund Grindall, deſcending of honeſt parentage (ſuch as liued within the limits of good ſubiects, with the trade of certeine kind of merchandize; by which they neuer obteined the greateſt wealth, nor by want felt the griefe of miſerie) was borne in a towne commonlie called ſaint Bees, but rightlie ſaint Beges, ſtanding in the weſt promontorie of Cumberlandſhire. Which towne was ſo named of ſaint Bega, a godlie and religious woman borne in Ireland: who comming thither to liue a ſolitarie life in contemplation, as one eſtranged from the cares and troubles of the world, did there end hir daies, leauing a perpetuall memorie of hir being there; in that the ſame place, after riſing to a proper towne, did ſtill reteine the name of that woman, being called ſaint Beges or ſaint Bees. Whereby his birth place being famous by that woman, renowmed for hir religion and priuat life, is no leſſe famous now, in bringing forth this man, who for his religion ſuffering a kind of perſecution in the time of queene Marie (as after ſhall appeare) was aduanced to the higheſt degree of eccleſiaſticall honor in England. In which, for the fauor he bare unto that place (as all men naturallie doo, by a certeine ſympathie, which our fleſh dooth participat of the aire and ſoile wherewith our life is firſt nouriſhed) he did there cauſe (for a perpetuall monument of his good loue and fauor thereunto) a free grammar ſchoole to be erected (whereof we will ſpeake more hereafter) in the ſame towne & place of his birth. Who being brought into the world much about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred and nineteene (as I gather by certeine circumſtances of his age when he died, which was paſt the great clymactericall yeare, for he was threeſcore and foure yeares of age at ſuch time as he departed the world) was (after that he had ſpent his tender yeares in the firſt rudiments) conueied unto Cambridge, there to be further inſtructed in learning, whereunto by naturall inclination he ſeemed greatlie addicted. In which place he much profited in ſtudie, to the comfort of his friends, and to his owne following aduancement and credit. For he not onelie there receiued degrees of ſchoole, as that he was called to be a maiſter of arts, but alſo was made fellow and maiſter likewiſe of Penbroke hall, where he had beene firſt brought up and inſtructed. Beſides hauing executed the office of proctor in that uniuerſitie, which is not the meaneſt roome there, he afterwards riſing to higher degree of ſcholaſticall promotions, was made bacheler of diuinitie; hauing moſtlie imploied his time, and profited his knowledge by the ſtudie thereof, as appeareth by his diſputations at Cambridge, on the foure and twentith daie of June, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and nine, being in the third yeare of king Edward the ſixt. For in the ſecond of theſe diſputations (appointed by the protector the duke of Summerſet, at what time the viſitors, before whome the ſame diſputations were holden, were Ridleie biſhop of Rocheſter, Thomas biſhop of Elie, John Cheeke the kings ſchoolemaiſter, doctor Maie a ciuilian, and doctor Wendie the kings phyſician) he diſputed againſt doctor Glin; whoſe arguments are liberallie ſet downe by maiſter Fox in his acts and monuments.

Thus, when he had ſpent ſome time in that place, he did forſake the uniuerſitie, and began to make ſhew in the world of thoſe ſkilfull parts wherewith he was indued. Wherefore being furthered by the helps, which his couſine William Grindall (ſchoolemaiſter to hir maieſtie now liuing) could afford him; he was called into the affaires of the world, and made knowne to hir maieſtie, then but ladie Eliſabeth, in the daies of hir brother king Edward the ſixt. To whom by the meanes of his good friends he was preferred in ſeruice, and admitted to be the kings chapleine, after that he had ſpent ſome time in the ſeruice of Nicholas Ridleie biſhop of London, as chapleine unto the ſaid biſhop. Which Ridleie, being by the kings appointment to be remoued from London to Durham (a place of more reuenues, and alſo a countie palatine) this Edmund Grindall ſtood in election to haue béene biſhop of London; but manie things falling betwéene the mouth and the cup, he was diſappointed thereof. For before that he could receiue anie admittance into that ſée, his maiſter king Edward the ſixt departed the world. Whereby he was not onelie diſappointed of that honor, but driuen to that extremitie, that he was inforced amongſt others to flie the realme, and to paſſe into Germanie; where he continued all the time of quéene Marie, as after ſhall appeare. The cauſe of which voluntarie baniſhment of himſelfe out of England was as followeth.

When king Edward was dead, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and thrée; and that his ſiſter quéene Marie, a woman eſtranged from him in the points of religion, had obteined the crowne; ſhe not onelie baniſhed ſuch doctrine, as was by hir brother ſet forth: but alſo brought in the Romane ceremonies, the which manie (profeſſing the other doctrine in hir brothers daies not being able to ſuſteine) did (following the counſell of our ſauiour Chriſt, who willeth vs when we are purſued in one citie, to flie into another) forſake England: for that they might not ſuffer or ſuſteine that innouation of quéene Marie, denieng them the libertie of their conſcience, to ſerue God according to the goſpell. Amongſt which perſons, being manie, this Edmund Grindall (reſerued vnto further honor after this trouble) was one, and not the meaneſt which fled the realme into Germanie; where he remained well interteined amongſt them, vntill the death of quéene Marie; which happened in the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and eight. At what time the crowne was deuolued vnto hir ſiſter, the now reigning quéene Eliſabeth, who (baniſhing to Rome all ſuch ceremonies as hir ſiſter had ſet vp, reſtoring the frée preaching of the euangelicall doctrine, and granting frée paſſage to ſuch as had béene exiled to returne home to their deſired countrie) did gratiouſlie and fauorablie receiue thoſe preachers comming out of Germanie, and held them in greater honor than euer they were before. At what time this Edmund Grindall, hauing now recouered his ſwéet & natiue ſoile of England, was after his comming home aduanced to the chaire of the biſhoprike of London, where he continued in gouernment about eleuen yeares, being a perſon well beloued and honored of the Citizens. During which time he did in Pauls preach a funerall ſermon for the emperor, whoſe obſequies were there celebrated with all honor therevnto apperteining.

After which, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thréeſcore and nine, he was remoued from London to the ſée of Yorke, where he continued by the ſpace of ſix yeares; being from thenſe in Februarie, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thréeſcore and fifteene, aduanced to the higheſt ſpirituall dignitie in England, & made archbiſhop of Canturburie. Where now growing to the highth of his honor, he not long inioied the ſame in full perfection. For as the whéele, when it is at the higheſt, muſt turne; and as the faireſt cedar is moſt ſubiect vnto the power of the winds: ſo this man began ſomewhat to decline, and the beames of his honorable place were ſomewhat eclipſed, by the clouds of hir maieſties diſpleaſure conceiued againſt him. For he was called before authoritie, where ſtanding vpon the defenſe of his cauſe, and growing in miſlike with hir maieſtie therefore; he was committed to reſtreint in his owne houſe. In which eſtate he continued vntill his death, without releaſe thereof. So gréeuous a thing it is to fall into the princes diſgrace: which Salomon ſaith is death, Sed vir ſapiens placabit eam. Before the time of whoſe death (about the ſpace of ſome two yeares) he was depriued of the benefit of his ſight, and ſo continuing vntill his death, he fell into a feuer and lingering ſickenes; wherein (one quarter of a yeare before he ſurrendred his ſoule) he did pininglie conſume his life. At what time (becauſe he would not laie that vpon the conſcience of another, which he might himſelfe performe; and ſo leaue that to be doone by his executors after his death, which he might diſpatch in his life) he like a carefull and wiſe prelat appointed a frée grammar ſchoole, as is touched a little before in the beginning of his life, to be built in the place where he was borne. For dooing whereof (as he did alſo for the reſt of the things which follow) he ſome ten or twelue daies before his death deliuered forth the monie to ſuch as herafter ſhould be his executors; and further for the mainteinance of the ſame ſchoole appointed a yéerelie reuenue of fiue and twentie pounds land to be annexed therevnto. Moreouer he deliuered forth monie ſo much as would purchaſe twentie pounds land by the yeare, which ſhould be aſſured to Quéenes college in Oxford, with as much monie as ſhould buie twentie pound lands by yeare, to be conueied ouer to Penbroke hall in Cambridge, the vniuerſitie wherein he was nouriſhed and tooke degrée in ſchoole. Wherewith not yet ſatiſfied, he did in his life, a little before his death, beſtow fiftie pounds vpon the almſhouſe of Croidon, for the reléefe and mainteinance of ſuch poore and impotent people as were there. Which being doone, he as one that now perceiued the time of his death drawing néere, and that he had diſpatched moſt of thoſe gifts and liberalities which he meant to beſtow, tooke his leaue of the world and departed this life the ſixt of Iulie An. 1583, at Croidon, where he was alſo buried, when he had béene archbiſhop of Canturburie much about the ſpace of ſeuen yeares. After whoſe death the ſée remained not void by the ſpace of thrée moneths, but that hir maieſtie aduanced Iohn Whitegift therevnto, as here at hand more fullie appeareth.

John Whitgift.

Iohn Whitegift now archbiſhop of Canturburie (a man of no leſſe grauitie than learning and honor, as both the worthie bookes which he hath left to poſteritie, and the honorable offices, as well eccleſiaſticall as ciuill, by him borne, doo well witneſſe) being deſcended of honeſt parentage, was borne about the yere of our Lord God one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and thrée, at great Grimſbie in Lincolneſhire, a place no leſſe knowne to antiquitie for things there paſſed in former ages, than now famous by the birth of this man. Which Grimſbie being by ſome in old times called Grimundeſbie, dooth occaſion me to treat ſomewhat thereof in this place, concerning the cauſe whie it was ſo named. Which matter being ſet downe in manie of our chronicles, as in Caxton, Henrie Knighton, Eulogium, Scala chronicôn, Campden, and others, I will deliuer the words of the ſaid Authors, leaſt I might ſéeme (in being ambitious in names) to bring emptie caſks without anie wine. The words of which authors, although they be long & to ſome maie ſéeme néedleſſe to be ſo often remembred, yet I haue not refuſed to giue euerie author leaue to tell his owne tale, for that I would not ſéeme to wrong them in miſreporting thereof; and for that I deſire to make common by manie copies (as occaſion maie ſerue) the writings of former ages remaining in priuat hands. Thus therefore to begin with Henrie Knighton, a canon of Leiceſter, I ſet downe his owne words liberallie deſcribing the hiſtorie of the name of Grimeſbie in this ſort.

Interea videamus quam ob cauſam, & qua ratione, Canutus venit in Angliam, & miſit clameum in regno Angliæ. Fuit quondam in Anglia quidam rex Ethelwoldus nomine, & genuit duos filios & duas filias, & moriebantur, excepta filia minore nomine Goldesborough ætate ſex annorum & dimidium, quando pater eius moriebatur. Iſte Ethelwoldus dū moriretur, cōmendauit tutelam filij ſui cuidam Godricho duci Normaniæ, qui maritauit eam cuidam Hauelocke filio Birkelani regis Daciæ apud Lincoln, qui poſtea regnauit tam in Anglia quam in Dacia ſimiliter: in Dacia iure hæreditario, & in Anglia iure hæreditatis vxoris ſuæ. Per quod Dani ſumpſerunt nimiam audaciam in Anglia, & ſuppeditauerunt Anglos longo tempore, ſicut continetur in hiſtoria de Grimesbi. Quia quidam Grim nomine nutrivit prædictum Hauelocke apud Grimesbi, vſq; ad tempus quo ipſe Hauelock deſponſauit prædictam Goldesborough apud Lincoln. Et quia prædictus Grim quando primum adduxit puerum de Dacia primo applicuit illo loco qui ſortitus eſt nomen à nomine ipſius Grimesbi. Iſte Hauelock regnauit 31 annos, & rexit populū ſuum cū ingēti honore, & genuit quindecim filios & filias, & moriebantur omnes præter quatuor in iuuētute ſua, & ſenior iſtorum quatuor vocabatur Gourmundus, quem propoſuit præfeciſſe hæredem ſuum Angliæ, & ſecundus vocabatur Canutus (de quo loquitur in præſenti) quem fecit regem Daciæ quum eſſet 18 annorum. De regno Angliæ ipſemet contentus, volens reſeruare regnum Angliæ filio ſuo Gourmundo, iſte Gourmundus aſcenſo equo indomito (volens magiſtralia attemptare) fregit collum ſuum. Tertius filius vocatus eſt Godardus, quem feoffauit in ſeneſcaria Daciæ & in mercimoniatu Angliæ, quæ non ſe extendebat ad tantū valorem qui nunc. Quartus vocatus eſt Thoraldus, qui duxit vxorem comitiſſam Hebertow in Norwegia, cuius affinitas in Norwegia perſeuerat vſque ad præſens, & maior amicitia inter regem Norwegiæ & regem Daciæ adhuc confirmatur, & qualibet vice quando Dani intrauerunt poſthac in Anglia pro clameo mittendo in regnum Norigi cū eis affuerunt, ſuum præbendo auxiliū, donec Guido de Warwik finem fecit in hac parte.

Peculiaris hiſtoria de Grimesbi.

Grimesbi vnde deducit nomen.

Thus much Knighton, which is confirmed by Eulogium, written by a moonke of Canturburie, who hath ſet downe the ſame hiſtorie at large, knitting vp the matter with theſe words, lib. 5. a. 44. d. gathered out of diuers places of the ſame. Rex Edelfridus quandam habuit ſororem nomine Orwen, & illam maritauit regi Ethelberto, quod coniugium vinculū amoris inter duos reges cathenabat. Rex autem Ethelbertus terram citra Trentam cum regio diademate occupauit, cum terra de Northfolke & Suffolke adiacentibus. Rex verò Edelfridus comitatum Lincolniæ & Lindeſeiæ cum eis ſpectantibus. Rex verò Athelbert de vxore ſua filiā genuit nomine Argentile, quæ nupta fuit Hauelock, &c.

The author of Scala chronicôn.

Which matter being liberallie alſo recorded by one Graie of Northumberland, as Leland geſſeth (the author of the chronicle intituled Scala chronicorum after the arms of the ſaid Graie, which was a ladder, and after the imagination of a dreame which he ſheweth of a ladder in the prolog; which Graie being an Engliſhman and taken priſoner in the wars neere vnto Edenburgh in Scotland, did turne that chronicle out of French rime into French proſe) I will not refuſe to deliuer, as the ſame was turned into Engliſh by Leland; and that the rather, becauſe the ſame Graie after the reciting of the ſame hiſtorie touching Grimeſbie, in the end ſeemeth to conclude with ſome doubt of the truth of the matter, for that he called it an apocrypha, or thing not vniuerſallie receiued, as appeareth in theſe words. Some ſaie, in Conſtantine king of Britains daies, that Ethelbright and Edelſeie were ſmall kings vnder him, whereof the firſt was king of Northfolke and Suffolke, and the other of Lindſeie. And the two kings increaſed, and Ethelbright tooke to wife Orwene the ſiſter of Edelſeie, of whome he begat a daughter called Argentile in Britiſh, & Goldeſborough in Saxon. And this Goldeſborough was after left with hir vncle Edelſeie, on condition, that he which in feats of arms might be found moſt noble, ſhould haue his daughter; who was after married to one Hauelocke, which was ſonne to the king of Denmarke, but conueied by ſleight into England, and after the truth knowne, was reſtored in Denmarke as the true heire. One Curane ſonne vnto Grime (a poore fiſher, not able to keepe him for pouertie) a ſtrong and a mightie yoong fellow, came to Edelſeie his court into Lindſeie, and there was firſt a turner of broches in the kitchin, and after by valiant deeds grew to great name. Grime had Hauelocke by the commandement of the king of Denmarks ſteward deliuered to him to be drowned: but hauing pittie on him, he conueied him to Lindſeie, to a place ſince called of his name, Grimeſbie: but this hiſtorie of ſome is counted but apocrypha. And ſome ſaie that Sweine of Denmarke, father to king Cnute firſt attempted Lindſeie by the firſt comming thither and mariage of Hauelocke. Thus much Scala chronicôn, which in this ſort cenſuring this hiſtorie, did (as I ſuppoſe) occaſion that learned antiquarie Campden to write of the ſame in this ſort in his Britannia, in the title of Lincolnſhire, pag. 306. Deinde Louth frequentatum emporiolum, cui Lud fluuiolus nomen impertijt, & poſtea Grimesbi, quod Sabini noſtri (qui quod volunt ſomniant) à Grimo mercatore ſic dictum volunt, qui quòd Hauelocum regium Danorum puellulum expoſitum educauerat, fabellis decantatur cum Haueloco illo pupillo, qui in regis coquina primò lixa, & poſtea regis filiæ nuptijs ob heroicam fortitudinem honoratus, neſcio quæ facinora geſſit, illis digniſſima qui anilibus fabulis noctem protrudere ſolent.

Wherefore paſſing ouer thoſe things touching Grimſbie, the etymon whereof I leaue to ſome Apollo to declare, let vs deſcend to ſome ſuch notable thing (whereof no queſtion maie ariſe) as hath beene there doone. Touching which thus writeth Piers Longtoft in his chronicles of England written in French verſe; in which he ſetteth downe, that in the time of Ethelred, the Danes infeſting this land, arriued at Grimeſbie, and ſo ſpoiled the countrie, as appeareth in theſe his French verſes following:

Mes l'an ſuaunt a pres ſunt cyl ariuez,
A mont de Grymesby, a Nicole ſunt alez
Vaſtant & deſtruent, kant ke eit trouez
Le falſe counte Ederick al roy ad taunt perlez, Ke la pees eſt feye & Eylred enginez.

Thus leauing the place of the birth of this archbiſhop, and going forward with our purpoſe, we ſaie that he did participat his race with ancient gentrie, and ſome ſuch perſons as their place and office made honourable. For he was by kindred and bloud alied to the Fulnetbees, and to Goodrich ſometime lord chancellor of England. The familie of the firſt being deſcended from an ancient race, hath yet his being in Lincolneſhire, whereof Fulnetbee at this daie liuing is indued with faire poſſeſſions. And the other (Goodrich) being biſhop of Elie & chancellor of England, a man as learned as honourable) obteined a perpetuall remembrance therof amongſt poſteritie, in that he did not degenerat from the Saxon etymon of his name, which ſignifieth a perſon both good & rich, ſith he was vertuous in life and honorable in his calling. Beſides, this Iohn Whitegift had an vncle called Whitegift, lord abbat of the abbeie of Wellow (as I take it) Iuxta Grimſbie, at the laſt ſuppreſſion of the abbeies.

Now in this man, of whom we purpoſelie ſpeake, there appeared euen in his tender and yoong yeares a great towardneſſe in learning, wherein he highlie profited as after ſhall appeare. For being by God his goodneſſe and beneficiall natures inclination framed therevnto, he did in his firſt and yoongeſt yeares wholie conſecrate himſelfe to the muſes; by meanes of which naturall forwardneſſe in him, he was (for more increaſe thereof) by his freends furtherance firſt trained to ſome prettie ſkill in ſong, and after taught the rudiments of grammar in S. Anthonies ſchoole in London, where he ſome yeares remained, vntill he was found apt to aſcend to higher places of learning, and then was committed to the tuition of maiſter Bradford that famous martyr, then fellow of Penbroke hall in Cambridge, about the third yeare of the reigne of bleſſed king Edward: where continuing his ſtudie with earneſt deſire and great profiting, he was firſt by doctor Ridleie then biſhop of London & maiſter of that college, and maſter Grindall then preſident there and afterwards archbiſhop of Canturburie his means choſen bibleclearke, and after that was inueſted with the degree of bacheler of arts, being not long after from Penbroke hall (with the good liking and conſent of all the fellows) choſen fellow of Peterhouſe in that vniuerſitie, where he proceeded to the degree of maiſter of arts, and bacheler in diuinitie, continuing his ſtudie in that college by the ſpace of twelue or thirteene yeares, and thereby atteining to great ſkill & knowledge in the Greeke and Latine toongs, diuinitie and all other good learnings. Whoſe profitable trauell in the toongs and ſciences did well appeare in his painfull lectures and other exerciſes, as well in the ſaid college, as in other his exerciſes and diſputations abrode: but ſpeciallie at a commenſement, wherin he was father of the act at the bachelers proceedings. Moreouer, his dailie proceeding in the ſtudie and knowledge of diuinitie (wherevnto he wholie applied himſelfe, making the ſame the centre wherin to end the lines of the circumference of all humane learnings) was not onelie made apparant by the learned readings that he made, being reader of the diuinitie lecture called the ladie Margarets in the ſaid vniuerſitie, & after that of the queenes maieſties lecture in diuinitie, by a good number of yeares (in which he expounded ouer the whole epiſtle to the Hebrues, & the reuelation of ſaint Iohn) and likewiſe by the learned bookes which by good occaſion he hath written: but alſo by his continuall, godlie, and deepelie learned ſermons, vttered in the vniuerſitie of Cambridge (both in Latine & Engliſh) in the citie of London, and in the court before hir maieſtie, & elſewhere.

And as almightie God did bleſſe his labours in ſtudie of all kind of godlie ſcience and knowledge, wherevnto were ioined great humilitie, vertue, vprightneſſe of life, and conſtancie, both in matters of religion, and priuat freendſhip: ſo did he ſingularlie bleſſe the fruits of his learning with increaſe of preferments and dignities in the church and the commonwealth. Firſt, during his fellowſhip in Peterhouſe, immediatlie vpon his being miniſter, preacher, and chapleine to doctor Cox, late biſhop of Elie, the ſaid biſhop beſtowed vpon him the parſonage of Teuerſham neere vnto Cambridge, and after that a prebend belonging to the cathedrall church of Elie. Next (for his vertue, learning, and gouernment, whereof he had giuen good experiment) being preſident vnder the maiſter of Peterhouſe, he was in the roome of doctor Hutton deane of Yorke, choſen by the fellows of Penbroke hall to be maiſter there, about Eaſter, in the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand fiue hundred ſixtie and ſeauen, in which yeare he alſo was orderlie called to the degree of doctor in diuinitie. But in the maiſterſhip of Penbroke hall he did not long continue, for ſuch was the wiſe gouernment and cariage of himſelfe (with a carefull and mild ſeueritie for the due obſeruation of the lawes, ſtatutes, and orders of the vniuerſitie of Cambridge, and of the colleges he had gouernement in, not admitting anie innouation in them, or in anie other ſuch good and tolerable orders) that vpon the death of doctor Beaumont he was, in the ſaid yeare of Chriſt 1567, being the tenth yeare of the queenes maieſties happie reigne, by hir highneſſe appointed and made maiſter of Trinitie college in the ſaid vniuerſitie: at what time he was alſo worthilie aduanced to be one of the ſworne chapleins to hir maieſtie. During the time of his carefull and wiſe gouernment of that great college, which was by the ſpace of ten yeares, he was twiſe by the generall good liking of the whole vniuerſitie choſen vicechancellor. In the latter yeare of whoſe magiſtracie, being 1573, hir maieſtie did beſtow vpon him the deanrie of the church of Lincolne, wherevnto was adioined afterwards the prebend of Naſſington in that church. And ſuch was the opinion iuſtlie conceiued of his learning, integritie and gouernment, that beſides the education of the lord Herbert ſonne and heire to the earle of Worceſter, and of maiſter Iohn North ſonne and heire vnto the lord North in Peterhouſe, there was at one time vnder his tuition in Trinitie college, the right honorable George earle of Cumberland, Edward lord Zouch, the lord Dunboine of Ireland, and two of the ſonnes of ſir Nicholas Bacon knight lord keeper of the great ſeale, with diuerſe other yoong gentlemen, ouer whome he had the ouerſight for their education in good learning and vertue. And in the ſynod and clergie (which was held in the yeare of Chriſt 1571 and the 14 yeare of the queenes reigne, vpon a deſerued opinion of his graue modeſtie and mildneſſe of diſpoſition, accompanied with great gifts of learning) he was choſen prolocutor: which function he right well performed both at that ſeſſion and the ſeſſion following, holden in the 18 yeere of hir maieſties reigne for the clergies benefit, and to hir maieſties verie good liking. Shortlie after which time, in the yeare of Grace 1577, and the 19 yeare of the queenes reigne, he was about Eaſter preferred by hir maieſtie to the biſhoprike of Worceſter; and in September after by hir highneſſe made vicepreſident of hir councell in the principalitie and marches of Wales, in the abſence of ſir Henrie Sidneie knight then lord deputie of Ireland. Which office of vicepreſidentſhip though he did beare during all the time of his being biſhop of Worceſter (which was by the ſpace of ſix yeares and more) yet he did perſonallie execute and attend the ſame but onelie two yeares and an halfe, the lord preſident himſelfe being then returned. During which time of attendance he ſo painefullie and ſo carefullie demeaned himſelfe alſo in his other charge and function eccleſiaſticall, that it did well appéere to all thoſe countries adiacent, that his dooing of iuſtice to and vpon others was no hinderance to the teaching of iuſtice and godlineſſe to others, which euen then he continuallie practiſed. Afterwards doctor Grindall archbiſhop of Canturburie dieng in the moneth of Julie 1583, it pleaſed God to put into hir maieſties hart to nominat him in Auguſt after archbiſhop of that ſée, whoſe election thereunto was confirmed at Lambeth on the 23 of September following. And on the ſecond of Februarie 1585, according to the computation of our church of England, being the 28 of hir maieſties reigne, he with other worthie and honorable perſonages was ſworne one of hir highnes priuie councell; which honor vnder hir maieſties moſt gracious gouernement I praie God he may long inioie. Thus hauing ſet end to the diſcourſe of the archbiſhops of Canturburie, with this reuerend prelat John Whitegiſt now liuing, order leadeth vs to a collection of the lord Cobhams, for that the lord Cobham now liuing is the next perſon (after the ſame John Whitegiſt) which is next before mentioned to haue béene ſworne of hir maieſties councell.

A treatiſe of the lord Cobhams, with the lord wardens of the cinque ports : gathered

(as well out of ancient records and monuments, as out of our hiſtories of England) by Francis Boteuile, commonlie ſurnamed Thin, in the yeare of our redemption, 1586.

The diuine philoſopher Plato, diuiding nobilitie into foure degrées, ſaith; that the firſt is of ſuch as be deſcended of famous, good, iuſt, and vertuous anceſtors; the ſecond are they whoſe former grandfathers were princes and mightie perſons; the third ſort be ſuch as be renowmed by worthie fame, in that they haue obteined a crowne and reward for anie valiant exploit, or in anie other excellent action in the feats of warre; the fourth and chéefeſt kind of noble men, are perſons which of themſelues excell in the prerogatiue of the mind, and benefit of vertuous life. For he is moſt rightlie termed noble, whome his owne dowries of the mind, and not an others worthineſſe dooth nobilitate. Wherevpon Socrates being demanded what was true nobilitie, anſwered: Animi corporiſque temperantia. And Caſsiodorus prooueth, that of all others, the nobilitie gotten by our ſelues is the moſt excellent, when he ſaith: Nobilitas à me procedens, eſt mihi cordi, pluſquam quæ ex patrum procedit nobilitate: quia in quo deſinit cuiuſque nobilitas, tunc auorum nobilitate congruè indiget. The reaſon whereof, and the cauſe whie a man is counted moſt noble by his owne actions, the graue and morall Seneca hath appointed to be the nobilitie of his mind, which alwaies ſéeketh to performe worthie and honourable actions, for thus he deliuereth vs his opinion vpon the ſame: Habet hoc optimum generoſus animus, quòd concitatur ad honeſta. Neminem excelſi animi virum humilia delectant & ſordida. Fœlix qui ad meliora imperium animi dedit: ponet ſe extra conditionem fortunæ, proſpera tentabit, aduerſa comminuet, & aliis admiranda deſpiciet. Now if anie one of all theſe things by themſelues in particular falling in ſeuerall perſons maketh euerie ſuch perſon noble, who taſteth but one of theſe foure diſtinctions of nobilitie: how much more is that perſon to be termed noble, and rightlie to be honoured therfore, in whom all theſe foure parts or the moſt of them doo concur; as to be deſcended of good, of mightie, of ancient, and of warlike anceſtors, and himſelfe not to degenerate from them, euen in the chéefeſt point of all others, which is in his owne actions, therein moſt of all to nobilitate himſelfe and his poſteritie? All which as I haue perſuaded my ſelfe are to be found in one, who at this time (as is before ſaid) was amongeſt others for his worthineſſe and merit aduanced to the eſtate of a councellor vnder the rareſt princeſſe and quéene of this our preſent age. Which noble perſon being ſo preferred to that place miniſtreth iuſt cauſe to me to record ſome antiquities touching the lords of Cobham, and the wardens of the cinque ports; and that the rather, for that the lord Cobham now liuing, being the glorie of that ancient and honorable familie, not onelie meriteth well of his countrie, as after ſhall appeare; but is alſo an honorable Mecenas of learning, a louer of learned perſons, and not inferior in knowledge to anie of the borne nobilitie of England.

But leauing him for this inſtant to himſelfe (of whome I cannot ſaie that which I ought, and he deſerueth, and for auoiding the note of flatterie, I maie not ſaie that which I can, and euerie man knoweth) I will orderlie deſcend to my purpoſed catalog of the lords of Cobham, and the wardens of the cinque ports, which I will ſet downe in that ſort, as the pedegrée of that neuer ſufficientlie praiſed lord treaſuror of England, ſir William Cecill knight lord Burleigh, is deliuered to the world in my former diſcourſe of the lord treaſurors of England, pag. 1238. Wherefore thus I begin with the lord Cobhams.

William Quatermer, which ſignifieth as much as William of the foure ſeas, was lord Cobham of Cobham in Kent, and floriſhed in the time of king Henrie the ſecond. This man, being a knight and belonging to king Henrie the ſecond, was called the kings knight; becauſe that the king, after the ſeruice doone by this Quatermer beyond the ſeas, brought him out of Normandie into England; where the king recompenſed him with the gift of certeine land and rent in Kent of the nature of Gauelkind, together with all the land of Hertland in Schorne, and in the marſh of Bolham, and Swainpoole in Schorne, in the ſaid countie of Kent. Whereunto the king further added all the lands and rents in Cobham; which after tooke denomination of this William Quatermer, and was called Quatermers fée. By force of which grant he poſſeſſed this land accordinglie, with all ſuch honor and priuileges as to the ſame belonged. But after by his déed he gaue vnto Henrie of Cobham all his lands and tenements which he had in the towne of Cobham, as by a dateleſſe déed thereof maie more largelie appeare, as followeth.

The charter whereby William Quatermer gaue to Henrie de Cobham his land in Cobham and Schorne in Kent.

Omnibus hominibus tàm præſentibus quàm futuris Wilhelmus de Quatermares ſalutem. Nouerit vniuerſitas veſtra, quòd ego dedi & conceſsi, & hac præſenti charta mea cõfirmaui Henrico de Cobham pro homagio & ſeruicio ſuo, totam terram meam & tenementum quod habui in villa de Cobham, cum toto iure, & homagijs, & eorum ſectis, & ſeruicijs, & redditibus, & releuijs, & in omnibus eſchetis, & totam terram & tenementum meum quod habui in villa de Schornes, videlicet totam terram quæ appellatur Gauelland: cum omnibus pertinentibus ſuis, totum mariſcum meum de Bulham, & totum mariſcum meum de Swanpoole, cum omnibus aiſiamentis quas habeo in prædictis villis in capite de domino rege, per ſeruicium quartæ partis feodi vnius militis. Habendum & tenendum ſibi & hæredibus ſuis de me & heredibus meis omnia omnia prædicta tenementa, cum omnibus pertinentibus ad fœdam firmam, abſque omni diuiſione & diminutione in perpetuum, liberè, & quietè, & integrè. Reddendo inde annuatim mihi & hæredibus meis, ille & hæredes ſui decem libras ſterlingorum apud Cobham, ſcilicet ad feſtum ſancti Michaëlis, vel infra octabis, centum ſolidos; & ad paſcha, vel infra octabis centum ſolidos, pro omnibus terrenis, demandis, & ſectis, & querelis. Et ego prædictus Willielmus, & hæredes mei defendemus & quietabimus omnia præfata tenementa, cum omnibus pertinentijs ſuis, verſum dominum regem, regem, &c: de omnibus ſeruicijs, quæ pertinēt ad quartam partem fœdi vnius militis, de omnibus ſeruicijs quæ poſſunt accedere ſuper præfata tenementa, &c. Teſtes, Richardus Bereſſe, Willielmus Clouile, Robertus de Senitlere, Stephanus de Cochington, Godfridus de la Deane, &c.

Henrie de Cobham.

Henrie de Cobham, who liued in the 10 of king John, in the yeare of Chriſt 1208, hauing obteined the lands in Cobham by the grant aforeſaid from William Quatermer, was lord of Cobham, and ſo accounted; and that the rather, bicauſe that king John, by his charter in the ſame tenth yeere of his reigne, did confirme to the ſaid Henrie de Cobham all the lands which he had in Kent, or elſewhere, vnder the witnes of Peter de Rupibus, or Peter of the rockes biſhop of Wincheſter, Geffreie Fitzpeter erle of Eſſex, and Saiet de Quincie earle of Wincheſter, &c. This Henrie had iſſue three ſons, John de Cobham knight his eldeſt, William de Cobham his ſecond called Cobham of Allington, iuſtice itinerant in the 40 of Henrie the third, and who further continued that office in the 42 of Henrie the third, as is prooued by the records of the excheker in the priuie ſeales of 41 of Henrie the third, where this writ is found: Liberate Willielmo de Cobham 20 marcas de termino paſcha, quas ei conceßimus, percipiendum ad ſcaccarium noſtrum, ad ſuſtentandum ſe in ſeruicio noſtro, quamdiu ſteterit in itinere in officio iuſticiarij noſtri. The third ſon of this Henrie Cobham was Reinold de Cobham, another of the iuſtices itinerants, in the 30 of Henrie the third, being the yeere 1246. I haue read alſo of one Henrie Cobham ſhiriffe of London the 13 & 21 of Henrie the third, whom at this time I will neither receiue or reiect to be this Henrie Cobham, to whome Quatermer gaue his lands.

John de Cobham.

John de Cobham knight, lord of the manors of Cobham and Cowling, eldeſt ſon to the firſt Henrie Cobham, came to the manor of Cowling by purchaſe for foure hundred marks, as appeareth by the effect of a charter, the note whereof came vnto my hands in this ſort: Simon de Pelham dat Iohanni de Cobham maneriū de Cowling, &c: pro 400 marcis præ manibus ſolutis. Hijs teſtibus, Rogero de Northwood, D. Fulcone Paiferer, D. W Sentclere, D. Will. de Valouis, militibus. This John married two wiues, the firſt was the daughter of William Fitzbenet, by whome he had iſſue John de Cobham the yoonger, or the ſecond of that name, and Henrie de Cobham of Rundall or Randall, of whome we will intreat hereafter when we haue finiſhed the lineall deſcents and orderlie ſucceſſions vnto our time of the lord Cobhams of Cobham. After the death of which his firſt wife, this John Cobham knight married his ſecond wife called Jone, the daughter of Hugh Neuill, by whom he had iſſue Reinold de Cobham knight, lord of Allington, an other perſon different from the former Reinold de Cobham lord of Allington, & ſon to Henrie before, James de Cobham, Will. de Cobham, & an other Reinold de Cobham that died without iſſue. Of which Reinold de Cobham lord of Allington, the ſon of this John by his ſecond wife, deſcended the L. Cobhams of Starburow, whoſe deſcent and ſucceſſion we will ſet downe after the diſcourſe of the lord Cobhams of Randall; at this time in this place onelie ſhewing the death of this John the elder lord Cobham, who died not (as ſome haue) in the 35, but rather (as others haue) in the 36 of Henrie the third, being the yeere of Grace 1251, as I gather. After whoſe deth an office was found that he held in Kent, the capitall meſuage of Cobham, and that he had lands to the yearelie value of 117 pounds and 14 ſhillings.

And here, becauſe I haue mentioned Hugh Neuill, whoſe daughter this John maried; I thinke it not vnmeet, although it concerne not the lord Cobhams otherwiſe than as a deed doone by one from whome they are deſcended, to ſet downe what I haue read touching the ſaid Hugh Neuill (being a perſon then of great honor, and one whoſe name hath beene the greateſt in England: as well for manie noble men of that name liuing at one time, as for the valiancie of their mind, and continuance of their deſcent) in performing an act of great courage and force, deſeruing continuall remembrance, the which I haue taken out of Matthew Paris. This Hugh Neuill, being in his youth familiar with king Richard, did (after that he had beene chiefe iuſtice of the foreſts) go into the holie land, to fight againſt the enimies of Chriſt: where he not onelie behaued himſelfe to his ſingular glorie againſt thoſe men of that countrie, but alſo obteined a memoriall of poſteritie for that which he then did againſt the beaſts thereof, when he killed a huge lion in the holie land, which being firſt by him pearſed with an arrow, and after hurt with a ſword, there died. Of the death of which lion was this verſe compiled, as followeth:

Viribus Hugonis vires periere leonis.

Afterwards this Hugh died, in the yeare of our redemption 1222, being about the ſixt yeare of king Henrie the third.

John de Cobham the yoonger.

In the time of Edward the firſt, as appeareth by the records of that court, there was one John de Cobham a baron of the excheker, which office he held in the 34 yeare of that king, and alſo long before.

John de Cobham knight, ſurnamed the yoonger, or the ſecond of that name, the ſonne of the former John by his firſt wife, did (after the death of his father) diuide the lands according vnto the cuſtome of Gauelkind in Kent, betweene him and his brother Henrie Cobham of Randall, as appeareth by a deed dated the 16 of Edward the firſt, about the yeere of Chriſt 1285, at what time the marſh called Shermarſh remained to John, & the lands called Heuer in the pariſh of All ſaints in Ho, in the hundred of Ho in Kent remained with Henrie. About 18 yeeres before which, that is to ſaie, in the 54 yeere of Henrie the third (falling in the 1269 and 1270 yeeres of our Lord after the account of England, beginning the yeare on the 25 of March) this John Cobham, mindfull of the aduancement and maintenance of his yoonger brethren by his father & mother in law, the daughter of Hugh Neuill (as all elder brothers ought to be) did giue to them diuers lands in forme following: which was, he granted to James certeine rent in Burfield and Shelne, and paſtures in Haligweſto; to William he gaue a rent in Aldington, togither with a mill there; & to Reinold he granted his lands in Orkeſden, and in Ginſford: vpon condition, that euerie of thoſe three brethren ſuruiuing ſhould be heire to the other, if they died without iſſue. Which when he had ſo liberallie doone, finding how great an inconuenience it was (for the maintenance of anie name or familie) to haue the lands ſo to be diuided amongeſt manie brethren, as the Gauelkind land in Kent was accuſtomed to be, obteined of Edward the firſt a grant (dated the 4 of his reigne, being about the yere of Chriſt 1276) in which the king granted to him, that all his lands and tenements, which were holden in Gauelkind in Kent, ſhould deſcend to his eldeſt ſonne, or anie other next heire after him, according as other lands held by ſargentee or knights ſeruice, did at the common law without anie partition of Gauelkind, to which deed were witneſſes R. biſhop of Canturburie, W. biſhop of Rocheſter, R. biſhop of Welles and Bath, William de Valence the kings vncle and earle of Penbroke, Roger de Mortimer, Paganus de Cadurcis, Stephan de Pincheſter, and diuerſe others.

According to which deuiſe of this Iohn Cobham, thus to make the Gauelkind land in Kent inheritable after the cuſtome of the common law, diuers perſons as well of nobilitie as gentrie of this ſhire of Kent (amongeſt which was George Brooke knight lord Cobham deſcended of this Iohn Cobham) did by parlement holden in the one and thirtith yere of king Henrie the eight, cauſe the nature of their Gauelkind land to be altered into the cuſtomable deſcents of our common law, for the eldeſt ſonne to inherit. The example whereof others alſo following in the time of Edward the ſixt, did by like authoritie procure ſuch deſcent of their lands in Kent, whereby at this daie moſt of the lands in that countrie haue weiued the nature of Gauelkind, and clothed themſelues with the honor of deſcent in the common law. This Iohn Cobham, who hath induced me to ſaie thus much touching Gauelkind lands in Kent, maried Ione daughter of Robert Septuans knight, by whome he had iſſue Henrie Cobham knight his heire, Iames Cobham a clearke, whom I ſuppoſe, to be he that in the tenth of Edward the third, the yere of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred thirtie and ſix, had lands in Eaſchetes mead lieng in Penſhurſt in Kent, according as I haue ſeene a charter thereof: Roger Cobham of Piperſliue, that died without iſſue. And here becauſe I am fallen into the name of Piperſliue, which is as much to ſaie as the cliue of Pipard, I will ſaie ſomewhat of that name of Pipard; and that the rather; becauſe much about this time (as I haue read) one William Cobham married Ione the daughter of Henrie Pipard of Lachford in Oxfordſhire eſquire, the ſaid Henrie Pipard liuing in the fift & tenth of Edward the ſecond. The name of which Pipards comming into England with William the Conqueror, the firſt of them being called Rafe, was lord of great Haſelie and Lachford in great Haſelie in Oxfordſhire. Shortlie after the time of which Rafe, Roger Pipard of great Haſelie gaue to his ſonne Henrie Pipard certeine lands in Lachford in the tilth called Inland, bordering vpon Ditch furlong, to hold of him by a gilt ſpur; and further gaue to his ſaid ſonne Henrie all his lands in Lachford for his homage and ſeruice. The which line of the Pipards tooke end in Iane Pipard, the daughter and heire of Richard Pipard of Lachford in Oxfordſhire eſquire, who liued in the yeare of Chriſt 1421, being the ninth yeare of Henrie the fift, and in the third of Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of our Lord 1424. For ſhe being maried to Iohn Badbie the ſecond ſonne of Iohn Badbie, he became lord of Lachford, in the ſixt yeare of Edward the fourth, in the yeare 1466, whereby the name of that line of Pipard was vtterlie extinguiſhed. The daughter and heire of which Badbie named Katharine, being maried to William Lenthall of Starkar in Herefordſhire (an ancient gentleman, and one whoſe anceſtors were lords of Hampton court in that ſhire of Hereford) the manor of Lachford came to the Lenthals, and is at this daie in the poſſeſſion of William Lenthall eſquire, deſcended from the ſaid William Lenthall, which maried the heire of Badbie that maried the heire of Pipard, of which name one marieng a Cobham, occaſioned me (as before I ſaid) to digreſſe thus much to treat of the Pipards, and their offſpring. And ſo againe to this Iohn Cobham, who beſides the ſonnes before named, had other ſonnes, as Rafe Cobham, which maried Marie Brewes counteſſe marſhall (the widow of Thomas of Brotherton earle marſhall, ſecond ſonne to King Edward the firſt) which Rafe died in the ninth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the ſecond, being about the yeare of Chriſt 1316. And the ladie Marie his wife departed the world in the ſix and thirtith yeare of Edward the third, about the date of our Lord 1362, being 36 yeares after the death of the ſaid Thomas of Brotherton. Of which counteſſe iſſued Iohn Cobham knight, who liued in the 41 yeare of Edward the third, being the yeare of Chriſt 1367, (as appeereth by the records of the excheker) and Iohn Cobham of Blackborow in Deuonſhire, with Thomas biſhop of Worceſter, beſides two other daughters, whereof we will ſpeake hereafter, when we haue treated a little of this Thomas Cobham the biſhop, referring thee for the more ample diſcourſe therof vnto Thomas Walſingham, and another anonymall chronicler, who liberallie treat of him. The firſt of the which writeth, that after the death of Robert Winchelſeie archbiſhop of Canturburie, Monachi magiſtrum Thomam de Cobham, virum ſupereminentis literaturæ, multiſque virtutibus redimitum, in paſtorem regi præcipuum concorditer eligerunt, &c. Contrarie to which writing of Walſingham (in which is ſaid, that Walter Reinolds was made archbiſhop gratis, & what a worthie perſon he was to gouerne the church and diſpoſe the kingdome, and that Thomas Cobham was reiected from that ſee) the other anonymall author before mentioned, referring all this to the yere of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred and thirteene, dooth moſt bitterlie write, who liuing much about that time, and before Tho. Walſingham, as I coniecture (becauſe he taketh vpon him to know the conditions of the ſaid Thomas Cobham and Walter Reinolds) dooth deliuer theſe words concerning the ſaid Thomas Cobham and Walter Reinolds, that the moonks of Canturburie Magiſtrum Thomam Cobham virum ſanguinis nobilitate clarum, ſacræ theologiæ, iuris canonici & ciuilis, necnon & dialecticæ profeſſorem egregium, eccleſiæque fulcimento columnam immobilem concorditer elegerunt, cuius electioni & morum honeſtatibus humani generis inuidebat inimicus, miſitque in cor Walteri Reginaldi viri ſiquidem & in tantum illiterati vt nomen proprium declinare penitùs ignorabat: qui & ipſe vir Belial lubricus, regens tunc temporis indignè epiſcopatum Oſwaldi & Dunſtani apud Wigorniam, & ad epiſcopatum Cantuarienſem nequitèr aſpirans, euacuauit electionem Thomæ Cobham per ſimoniam. Thus much he. By which we perceiue the diuerſitie of affections in writing of hiſtories. But whether this man, for malice to Walter Reinolds hath written this thing aboue the truth (for me thinketh it ſhould not be, that a man ſo vnlearned, as that he could not decline his name, ſhould atteine to ſuch dignities, as to be biſhop of Worceſter, chancellor and treaſuror of England, and archbiſhop of Canturburie) or that Walſingham (himſelfe a ſpirituall man) ſeeking to aduance more than was due the metropolitane of the relme, hath ſo commended Walter Reinolds, I know not, and therefore leaue it to euerie man to iudge as he liſteth: I will againe come backe to the ſaid Iohn Cobham the ſecond of that name, and returne to make rehearſall in one place of all his children, to the end the ſame may be the better conceiued, ſith I haue before with manie a long parentheſis mingled other matters with them, whereby the reader might be troubled in the right knowledge of thoſe perſons.

The deſcent of Pipard and Lenthall of Lachford in Oxfordſhire.

1312 As hath Walſingham.

This Thomas was alſo prebendarie of Yorke & deane of Saliſburie, as hath Matthew Parker in the liues of the biſhops of Canturburie.

This Iohn the ſecond therefore had iſſue Henrie his heire; who (I ſuppoſe) for this time, is that Henrie mentioned in the rolles of the excheker, in the ninth yeare of Edward the ſecond, to haue the farme of the citie of Rocheſter; Iames a clearke, Roger

This Henrie might well haue Rocheſter in farme, in the life of his father, in the time of Edward the ſecond.

Cobham of Piperdeſliue, Rafe Cobham, Iohn Cobham of Blackeborow, Thomas Cobham the biſhop: Ione maried to Michaell de Columbarijs, and another daughter maried to William de Andwich knight. This Iohn Cobham the ſecond, liuing in the time of Edward the firſt, and dieng in the reigne of the ſame king, maie well be (and ſo is) that perſon which is recorded (if my conceiuing be not deceiued) in the eightéenth yeare of Edward the firſt, falling in the yeare of Chriſt 1290, to be capteine or gardian of Rocheſter, and of the caſtell; and alſo to be in the twentith yeare of the ſame king Edward the firſt, being in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fourescore and twelue, a baron of the excheker. Before which time, Iohn Euersden, a moonke of S. Edmundſburie in Suffolke, writeth that in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred thréeſcore and ninetéene, which was in the ſeuenth yeare of king Edward the firſt, Iohn Cobham and Walter de Helma were ſent downe vnto Burie, otherwiſe called S. Edmundſburie, to ſit vpon certeine goldſmiths that were accuſed for clipping of the coine; where he fined them, and tooke the monie to the kings vſe, contrarie to the liberties of the abbat. This Iohn Cobham the ſecond died the eight and twentith yeare of the reigne of Edward the firſt, being in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand and thrée hundred.

Henrie Cobham, the firſt lord Cobham of that name.

Henrie Cobham the ſonne and heire of Iohn the ſecond, being fortie yeares old at the time of his fathers death, was made knight, and created the firſt baron and lord of Cobham, obteining place in the parlement houſe. To this Henrie did king Edward the firſt, in the two and thirtith yeare of his reigne, being about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred & foure, grant the farme of Rocheſter, with the kéeping of the caſtell, as appeareth by this déed following.

The grant of Edward the firſt, of Rocheſter caſtell to Henrie Cobham.

EDwardus Dei gratia rex Angliæ, & dominus Hiberniæ, & dux Aquitaniæ, omnibus, &c. Nos de fidelitate dilecti & fidelis noſtri Henrici de Cobham plenius conſiderantes, cõmiſſimus ei ciuitatem noſtram Roffenſem; tenendam de nobis, & hæredibus noſtris ad firmam, ad totam vitam ſuam; ac etiam caſtrum eiuſdem ciuitatis, cum pertinentijs, cuſtodiendum ſimiliter ad totam vitam ſuam. Reddendo nobis & hæredibus noſtris per annum, ad ſcaccarium noſtrũ pro ciuitate prædicta duodecim libras, & pro cuſtodio dicti caſtri ac wardis eidem caſtro pertinentibus, triginta ſex libras & quatuor ſolidos, ſicut Ioannes de Cobham pater prædicti Henrici, & bonæ memoriæ Richardus nuper epiſcopus London, dudum firmarius noſter, dictæ ciuitatis & cuſtos caſtri prædicti nobis ad dictum ſcaccarium noſtrum per annum, pro cuſtodia eorundem reddere conſueuerunt, &c. In cuius rei, &c: has litteras noſtras, &c. Teſte meipſo apud Dumfermeline, 14 die Ianuarij, anno regni noſtri triceſimo ſecundo.

This man being thus in great credit with the king, in the life of his father Iohn Cobham, was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the fiue & thirtith and laſt yeare of king Edward the firſt, as appeareth by a note which came to my hands, ſet downe in this ſort: Stephanus de Burgherſh filius & hæres Roberti de Burgherſh, quondam cuſtodis quinque portuum, fatetur ſe recepiſſe de iſto Henrico Cobham, coneſtabulo Douerniæ, & cuſtode quinque portuum, 20 marcas argenti, &c. The déed of which Stephan Burgherſh was dated the twentith of Maie, in the fiue and thirtith yeare of king Edward the firſt, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred and ſeuen; which Henrie Cobham is reported, maiſter Lambard, in his perambulation of Kent, vnder the title of Léeds, to haue raſed the caſtell thereof. But becauſe there maie be ſome queſtion touching the ſame, and for that the ſame Lambard hath not iudiciallie defined the ſame; I will leaue it as I find it in his owne booke, and Verbatim ſet downe his words in this ſort.

He was conſtable of Douer vnder Edward the firſt, in the life of his father king Henrie the third: and after in the laſt yeare of king Edwards gouernment, as appeareth by this déed of Stephan Burgherſh in the twelfe yeare of Edward the third: and ſo vnto his death which was in the 13 yeare of Edward the third: of which ſée more in the wardens of the cinque ports.

I haue read (ſaith he) that * Edward (prince of Wales, and afterward the firſt king of that name) being warden of the cinque ports, and conſtable of Douer caſtell, in the life of Henrie the third his father, cauſed Henrie Cobham (whoſe miniſterie he vſed as ſubſtitute in both thoſe offices, to raſe the caſtell that Robert Creuecœur had erected, becauſe Creuecœur (that was then the owner of it, & heire to Robert) was of the number of the nobles that moued and mainteined warre againſt him; which whether it be true or no, I will not affirme: but yet I thinke it verie likelie, both becauſe Badleſmer (a man of another name) became lord of Léeds ſhortlie after, and alſo for that the preſent worke of Léeds preſenteth not the antiquitie of ſo manie yeares as are paſſed ſince the conqueſt. Thus this much my ſynchronos and the learned antiquarie maiſter Lambard. After which it reſteth to ſet downe the effect of a déed, wherein Richard de Rocheſter gaue the manor of Stone and Stapingdon in the ile of Shepeie to this Henrie Cobham; in the firſt yeare of Edward the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption 1312, 1313; according to a note which I haue ſéene gathered thereof, in theſe words.

* Edward the firſt king of that name ſince the conqueſt.

The caſtell of Léeds builded by Robert Creuecœur.

The barons warre againſt Henrie the third.

Richardus de Rouceceſter dedit domino Henrico de Cobham, & Reginaldo filio eius, pro ducentis libris, manerium de Stone & Stapingdon in Schapeia: habendum et tenendum eiſdem Henrico & Reginaldo, & hæredibus ipſius Reginaldi exeuntibus: & ſi Reginaldus obierit ſine exitu, tunc idem manerium reuertitur rectis hæredibus ipſius Henrici: anno ſexto Edwardi, regis filij Edwardi. Hijs teſtibus, domino Ioanne de Northwood ſeniore, Rogero de Sauage, Roberto de Shireland, Ioanne de Northwood iuniore, Ioanne de Sauage, militibus.

This Henrie, being the firſt baron of Cobham, maried Maud the daughter of one that was called De columbarijs: by whome he had iſſue Iohn de Cobham his ſonne and heire, Thomas de Cobham of Piperdeſliue, and Beluncle knight, Iames Cobham, Reinold Cobham parſon of the church of Wicham, Stephan Cobham biſhop of Lincolne, and one daughter named Margaret, maried to Mathew Fitzherbert. After which, this Henrie lord Cobham ſurrendered his life to God, in the yeare of our redemption 1339, and in the thirtéenth yeare of king Edward the third, about 39 yeares after the death of his father, being ſeuentie nine yeares of age, and was buried at Stoke vnder Hamden in Summerſetſhire.

Iohn lord Cobham.

Iohn de Cobham knight, the third of that name, and ſecond baron of Cobham, was gardian of the citie of Rocheſter, and was (as I gather by a note, that nameth Iohn Cobham, if Iohn be not miſtaken for Henrie, laſt before recited) conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the ſecond yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of Chriſt 1320, which fell in the life of his father Henrie, the firſt baron of Cobham. This Iohn, in the eleuenth yeare of Edward the third, being about the yeare of Chriſt 1336, was (when the king tooke his iourneie into France, by occaſion whereof he was to gather great ſummes of monie of his ſubiects) ioined with Haimo de Heath biſhop of Rocheſter, the prior of that citie, and Thomas de Aldon knight in commiſſion, whereby they were authoriſed to call before them in the church of Rocheſter the mondaie next after the feaſt of the Holie croſſe, the clergie and people of the whole countie of Kent, to demand certeine ſummes of monie to be paid to the king for the ſupport of his iournie toward France. Wherevpon the people comming to that place at the daie appointed, thoſe commiſſioners could not for that inſtant bring their trauell in executing that commiſſion to the expected end. For the commiſſioners demanding what euerie man would giue towards the kings wars in France, the clergie would not giue anie thing, becauſe they were to grant a tenth; and that which the laitie would giue, came to ſo ſmall a ſumme that it was refuſed. Whervpon the king demanded onelie a fifteenth and obteined it.

Regiſt. Roffen.

This John the ſecond baron maried two wiues, the firſt was Jone the daughter of John Beauchampe of Stoke vnder Hampden in Summertun-towne-ſhire, now called Summerſetſhire, knight; by whom he had iſſue, one ſonne and his heire called John Cobham, which Jone was buried in the chancell of the collegiat church of Cobham in Kent, with this French epitaph as is yet there to be ſeene:

Dame Ione de Cobham giſt ycy,
Dieu de ſa ailme ayt mercy,
Qui pur l'ailme priera,
Quarante iours de pardon auera.

The ſecond wife of this John the ſecond baron was Agnes the daughter of Richard Stone of Dertford in the countie of Kent, who dieng without anie iſſue by hir (whereof J can yet learne) in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred fiftie and foure, being the eight and twentith of the reigne of king Edward the third, was alſo buried in the chancell of the collegiat church of Cobham, on whoſe graue ſtone is this epitaph yet to be ſeene:

Vous qui paſſe ycy entour,
Pries pur l'ailme de curteous viandour,
Qui Iean de Cobham auoit a nome,
Dieu luy face veray pardone,
Qui treſpaſſa l'endemayne de S. Mathy,
Le puiſſant otrie a demourer oue luy,
En l'an de grace Mil. CCC. L. quatre,
Ces enimies mortel fiſt abatre.

John Cobham.

John Cobham knight (the ſixt of that line, the fourth of that name, and the third and laſt baron of Cobham, deſcended of the males of that familie) was the ſonne of John the ſecond baron of Cobham. This man as the ſtate of the world, and loue to religion went in thoſe daies, did for the redemption of his ſoule erect a college and chanterie of a certeine number of chapleins, with a maiſter belonging vnto them, to praie for the ſoules of him, his anceſtors, and his ſucceſſors: which college he erected in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred threeſcore and two, being the ſix and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, and after confirmed (in the three and fortith yeare of Edward the third in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred threeſcore and nine) other lands vnto it. Touching which college J find theſe epitaphs belonging to certeine maiſters thereof: amongſt which William Tanner was the firſt maiſter, as appeareth in the ſame collegiat church of Cobham at this daie, yet there to be ſeene. All which epitaphs J thinke not vnmeet here to haue place, ſith they were aduanced to that college by reaſon of the grant of this John Cobham, which made the ſaid William Tanner the firſt maiſter of that place: ✠ Hic iacet Gulielmus Tanner primus magiſter iſtius collegij, qui obijt 22 die menſis Iulij, anno Domini 1418, cuius animæ propitietur Deus.

The other maiſters of that college were ſuch as theſe epitaphs there found doo declare: ✠ Hic iacet dominus Iohannes Sprot, quondam magiſter iſtius collegij, qui obijt 25. die menſis Octobris, an. Domini 1498, cuius animæ propitietur Deus.

The third epitaph is of William Hobſon maiſter of that college, which died in the thirteenth yeare of king Edward the fourth, hauing this written vpon his graueſtone in braſſe: ✠ Hic iacet dominus Gulielmus Hobſon, quondam magiſter iſtius collegij, qui obijt 22. die Auguſti, anno Dom. 1473, cuius animæ propitietur Deus.

A fourth epitaph is of John Gladwin maiſter of that college, wherein is neither ſet downe the time of his death, nor anie certeintie when he liued, being deliuered onelie in this ſort: ✠ Hic iacet magiſter Iohannes Gladwin, quondam magiſter iſtius collegij, cuius animæ propitietur Deus.

Which college being ſo founded by this John lord Cobham, did (after the generall diſſolution of houſes of religion, & other chanteries, in the time of king Henrie the eight and king Edward the ſixt) returne by the kings grant vnto thoſe which were deſcended of this John Cobham. For George Brooke lord Cobham, father to that honorable and woorthie gentleman William Brooke knight, lord Cobham now liuing, obteined the ſame at the kings hands, and dooth at this daie inioie it. About fiue yeares after the building of that college, this ſaid John laſt lord Cobham was (in the one and fortith yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred threeſcore and ſeuen) diſpatched ambaſſador vnto Rome, concerning the mariage of Lionell duke of Clarence with Jolenta or Violenta the daughter of Galeas earle of Millaine; as appeareth by a deed of the ſaid Edward the third, directed to Nicholas of the Heath clearke, dated at Eltham in the ſaid one and fortith yere of the king. Who diſpatching his ambaſſage to the deſired effect, did ſtill increaſe in ſuch fauor with king Edward the third, and with the nobilitie and commons of the realme, that after the death of Edward the third, and in the minoritie of Richard the ſecond, he was by the whole conſent of the nobilitie and voice of the parlement, amongſt other appointed to haue the cuſtodie of king Richard the ſecond. Jn which he behaued himſelfe verie faithfullie, both in defenſe of the king, & alſo of the kingdome, againſt thoſe rebellious inſurrections and coniurations of Wat Tiler and of his complices, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred and foureſcore, and one thouſand three hundred foureſcore and one, being the fourth and fift yeares of the depoſed king Richard the ſecond. At what time for his owne defenſe, and the ſafetie of the countrie of Kent, againſt thoſe rebels, he by the kings licence built that goodlie caſtell of Cowling yet ſtanding, with a writing of braſſe fixed on the gate, to ſhew the cauſe and the perſon for which and by whom it was erected. But ſuch be the inconſtancies of mens haps, & the tickleneſſe of yoong mens fauor, that nothing is happie on euerie ſide, nor ſeruice doone to perſons of light credit can alwaies be remembred, and woorthilie requiter, as this lord Cobham vnhappilie prooued. For after all his good doone for the yoong king and the realme, he was in the end (as ſhall after appeare) baniſhed the land, and left in perpetuall exile during king Richards time. For (after that he with his wife the ladie Margaret had beene the chiefe benefactors in charge of purſe, and trauell of bodie to build that famous ſtone bridge of Rocheſter, a beautifull ornament to that citie, and a neceſſarie benefit to the whole countrie of Kent, and the realme of England) this John ſeeking with others of the nobilitie to remooue ſuch perſons as miſcounſelled the yoong king Richard the ſecond (did with the aſſiſtance of Thomas Woodſtocke duke of Gloceſter the kings vncle, by violence take Treſilian the chiefe iuſtice out of the ſanctuarie of Weſtminſter. For which act afterward in the eleuenth yeare of the ſaid Richard the ſecond, being much about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred fourescore and eight, both the duke and he aſked pardon of the abbat of Weſtminſter for the breach and violating of their priuileges, and the reuerence of the holie place in taking him out of ſanctuarie. Which lord in ſome yeares after, that is, in the two and twentith yeare of Richard the ſecond, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred fourſcore and eighteene, was apprehended & ſent with ſir John Cheineie knight to the Tower: after which, when they had ſometime remained there, they were by the conſent of the nobilitie (ſaith Walſingham) in the parlement holden at Shrewſburie baniſhed into the Ile of Gerneſeie, where they had a ſmall portion allowed them, the ſaid lord John being onelie arreined vpon theſe two articles. Firſt, that he the ſaid lord Cobham was in counſell to make one commiſſion againſt the ſtate of the king, and likewiſe that he vſed the ſame commiſſion in dooing iudgement againſt the kings will and to the preiudice of him. Secondlie, that he did ſit in iudgement to iudge ſir Simon de Burleie, and James Barnes knights of the king, in his abſence and againſt his will. Wherevpon he was condemned to perpetuall priſon and baniſhment into the Ile of Gerneſeie: of which matter thus writeth that worthie poet ſir John Gowre knight liuing at that time, and beholding all theſe dooings of that age: Innocentem dominum Cobham, qui prius ſeculo renuntians, in domo Carthuſienſi tunc moram traxit, etiam in iudicium parlamenti produxit (which was the king) ſed ille minarum terrore aut blandiciarum exhortatione locum tyranno non prebens, in omnibus ſuis reſponſionibus fideliſſimus inueniebatur, vnde rex quaſi confuſus eius conſtantiam deterrens, ipſum præ verecundia abſque mortis ſententia longè ab Anglia deſtinauit. Which matter with a further commendation of this lord Cobham, the ſaid John Gowre ſetteth downe in theſe heroicall verſes following:

Some ſaie they were condemned to loſe their liues, but pardoned thereof at the requeſt of the nobilitie and ſo baniſhed.

Vnus erat dignus patiens, pius, atque benignus,
Prouidus & iuſtus, morum virtute robuſtus,
Non erat obliquus, regni ſed verus amicus,
Hunc rex odiuit in quo bona talia ſciuit,
Vt dicunt mille dominus Cobham fuit ille,
Chronica quos læſit quibus ille fidelis adhæſit,
Chriſto ſed verè voluit quia fine placere,
Tranſtulit ad ſedem, ſe Carthuſienſis in ædem,
Sic cœpit Chriſtus voluit quem tollere fiſcus,
Quem Chriſtus duxit, fiſcus ſine iure reduxit,
Rex ſcelus accuſat, Cobham ſcelus omne recuſat, Iuſtificans factum, ſic res proceſſit in actum, (tur,
Quæ ſapit hæc loquitur, nec in hoc vecors reperi-
Immo quod eſt certum, regi manifeſtat apertum,
Sic quia veridicus tribus eſt conſtanter amicus,
Rex condemnauit Cobham, ſed non maculauit,
Sic non conuictus gladij non ſentijt ictus,
Exilij loca ſubijt tamen exteriora,
Hunc rogo quòd purus redeat cum laude futurus,
Vt ſic fœlici redditu lætentur amici.

But afterward, as ſir John Gowre dooth requeſt of God in the end of theſe Latine verſes, ſo this lord Cobham (being before greatlie in the fauor of Henrie duke of Hereford, after king of England, by the name of Henrie the fourth) was reſtored home to England, when the ſaid Henrie did weare and beare the crowne and ſcepter of this realme, of whoſe calling home out of the Ile of Gernſeie by king Henrie the fourth, the ſaid Gowre writeth thus.

Cobham ſorte pari dux fecit & hunc reuocari,
Exilio demptus iuſtus redit ille redemptus.

Which lord Cobham being now ſetled againe at his owne home, liued an honourable old man manie yeares after, and ſurrendered his life to God the tenth of Januarie, in the ninth yeare of king Henrie the fourth, being the yeare that the word of the Father tooke on it the fleſh of the mother 1407, and was buried within the collegiat church of Cobham, which he built, with this epitaph yet there to be ſeene:

De terre fuit faite & fourmee,
Et en terre a terre ſuis retournee:
Iehan de Cobham foundeur de ceſty place qui fui Mercy de ma ailme eit la ſeint trinitee. (nomee

He married Margaret the daughter of Hugh Courtneie earle of Deuonſhire, who dieng the daie and yeare ſet downe in this following epitaph, was alſo buried beſide hir huſband, hauing this written:
Icy giſt dame Margaret de Cobham, iadis fille a noble ſire counte de Deuonſhire, femme de ſiegneure de Cobham, foundeur de ceſte place, que moruſt le ſecond iour de mois de Aouſte, le anne de grace 1495, l'ailme de que Dieu aiſt mercy, Amen.

This lord Cobham had (by the ladie Margaret Courtneie his wife) his onelie child, daughter and heire Joane married to John de la Poole knight, by whome he had iſſue one daughter named Jone after hir mother, which was heire, ladie, and baroneſſe of Cobham, neece by the daughter and heire of this John Lord Cobham, which Jone de la Poole had fiue Huſbands, whereof we will ſpeake as they ſucceeded in order. Hir firſt huſband was Robert Hemengdale knight, by whome ſhe had two ſonnes, William & John, which both died in their childhood. Hir ſecond huſband was Reginald Braibrooke, knight, by whome ſhe had iſſue Reginald and Robert, which died verie yoong; and Jone maried to Thomas Brooke of Summerſetſhire knight, who was in hir right lord of Cobham, as after ſhall appeare, which Reginald Braibrooke with his two ſonnes before named, were buried in the church of Cobham, as appeareth by this now extant epitaph ouer the place of their burials: ✠ Hic jacet dominus Reginaldus Braibrooke filius Gerardi Braibrooke militis, ac maritus dominæ Iohannæ dominæ de Cobham hæredis domini Iohannis domini de Cobham fundatoris iſtius collegij, qui quidē Reginaldus obijt apud Middelborow in Flandria 20 die menſis Septem an.Dom 1405, cuius animæ propitietur Deus. On which ſtone alſo was grauen on ech ſide of him: Hic iacet Reginaldus filius eorum: & alſo Hic iacet Robertus filius eorum.

Hir third huſband was Nicholas Hawberke knight, by whome ſhe had iſſue one ſonne called John, which Nicholas died at Cowling in the ninth yeare of king Henrie the fourth, and was with his ſonne John, who died yoong, buried at Cobham with this epitaph: ✠ Hic iacet dominus Nicholaus Hawberke miles, quondam maritus dominæ Iohannæ de Cobham hæredis diminæ Iohānæ de Cobham, fundatoris iſtius collegij; qui quidem Nicholaus obijt apud caſtrū de Cowling 20 die Octobris, an. Dom 1407 cuius animæ propitietur Deus Upon which ſtone was alſo grauen the picture of a yoong man, vnder which was written Hic iacet Iohānes filius eorum

All theſe three huſbands this Jone had in the life of hir grandfather the laſt lord John Cobham, wherby none of them was intituled lord of Cobham; but when ſhe married hir fourth huſband, he was called lord Cobham as after ſhall appeare. Hir fourth huſband was ſir John Oldcaſtle knight, by whome ſhe had a daughter that died verie yoong, and of whome we need not to ſaie anie thing, his life & dooings being ſo largelie ſet foorth in all our chronicles, eſpeciallie by maiſter Fox and Walſingham, as that they need not anie diſcourſe of mine. Onelie this I will touch, that he was intituled lord of Cobham ham in the right of his wife, and was burnt and hanged for the doctrine of Wickliffe, and for treaſon (as that age ſuppoſed) to king Henrie the fift, about the ſixt yeare of the reigne of the ſaid king, touching which I will in breefe ſort ſet downe ſo much of his life, written parciallie (as the nature of that age would permit) in verſe, as is to be ſeene in the chronicle intituled Extractũ breue de chronica THOMAE ELMHAM, prioris Lenton, de tempore regis Henrici quinti: the capitall letters of which verſes doo ſhew the yeere of our Lord in this ſort as here followeth:

Sir John Oldcaſtle lord Cobham.

1413 HIC Iohn oLD CaſteL ChrIſtI fVrIt InſIDlator,
Amplectens hæreſes in ſcelus omne ruit:
Fautor perfidiæ pro ſecta Wickliuiana,
Obicibus regis fert mala vota ſacris,
1413 Hic apocalypſis CirCVMCInCtVs patet hoſtIS,
Altera beſtia fit cornua bina ferens,
Nomine ſecenti ſunt ſexaginta ſimul ſex,
Extrahe quod remanet his ſua vita datur.
Hunc rex miticia necnon terroribus artat,
Flecti mente nequit turbidus ille lupus:
Nam corpus Behemoth vt ſcutum fuſile fertur,
Durum dum ſupereſt fictile quando cadit:
Sic patet hæreticus non parens corripienti,
Dum lapſu proprio vergit ad antra Satan.
Cenſuit ancipiti rex hunc mucrone feriri,
Prætulit eccleſiæ iura paranda ſibi:
Hæreticum propria confeſſio reddit eundem,
Qua damnauit eum pontificalis honor.
Regia ſed pietas ſibi differt mortis & ignis
Pœnam, ſub ſpe qua poſſit adeſſe ſalus.
Has capit inducias in turri Londiniarum,
Rumpens vincla fugit dæmonis artis ope.
Hinc antris latitat, clam perquirendo fauorem,
*In lauacri * luce concipiendo dolum,*
Aſſultum regi ſtudet atque ſuis apud Eltham,
Sed Deus indè ſuos eripit abſque malo:
1413 *Inſidiando cohors in * gurgitis arce lauacri,*
*Concutiens * chriſma ſeditioſa ruit.*
Vernans MILICIa fVres CaLCabat agone,
Subuertit caſtrum, ſtat ſacer ordo vigil.
Sed tamen extendit trux vires vlteriores,
Tertia cui feria fixa fit inde ſequens.
Hic bellum regi campeſtre parare ſtudebat,
Campum manè petens regia iura præit.
Vndique conueniunt hac proditione feroces,
Partibus ex multis vota gerenda mala:
Vexillum regis prodit, crux praua campo
*Aſtitit, * Aegidij gens inimica fuit.*
Campis atque vijs equites exire iubentes,
Regi præſentant quos rapuere malos,
Carceribus trudi dominus rex mandat eoſdem,
Ne ſine iuſticia flet violenta manus,
*Námque * vetus caſtrum, cui fit damnoſa vetuſtas,*
Profugus inde fugit cum nouitate fera.
Traditus hic Satanæ latitans luit ille ſatelles,
Fert odium luci qui mala tanta facit:
Hoc ſigno regi campo tunc fulgur amœnum,
1413 Detexit tenebras, hoc operante Deo.
*Caros LVCe CLVIt * IanI Dans robora * Deno*
Vt rus Aegidij regia cura colat:
Hîc ſuſpenduntur tracti priùs, inde cremantur
Hæretici plures, conditione pari,
1413 Capta Cohors CaſtrI VeterIs partIta CreMatVr,
Rex hominem veterem ſic renouare ſtudet:
In tellure ſatum lolium fit in igne crematum,
Quiſque pians gramen ſit benedictus, Amen.

His name being John Oldcaſtle, conteineth by the letters in the firſt verſe the number of 701: out of which take 666, being the name of the man mentioned in the Apocalyps, the number remaining is 35, which was the yeare of his age when he died: ſuch myſticall expoſitions could that age ſucke out to ſerue their purpoſe.

*In feſto Epiphaniæ.

*In feſto Epiphaniæ.

*Eccleſia.

*Oldcaſtle.

S. Giles beſides London.

Sir John Oldcaſtle.

*Ianuarii.

*Decimo die.

Of which John Oldcaſtle I find alſo this note in the records of the excheker, of the ninth yeare of that king in Michaelmas tearme: ✠ Eliſabeth, quæ fuit vxor Edwardi Charelton chiualer & Iohannis Piers, executores teſtamenti prædicti Edwardi, nuper domini de Powis, in denarijs ſibi liberatis per manus Thomæ Bradſhew, in partem ſolutionis 1000 marcarum, quas dominus rex dictis executoribus liberari mandauit pro captione Iohannis Oldcaſtle, chiualer (nuper vocatum dominum de Cobham) iuxta quandum proclamationem dicti domini regis in ſingulis cómitatibus Angliæ factum per priuatum ſigillum DClxvi lib. 13. ſ. 4 d.

Now the fift and laſt huſband of the foreſaid Jone de la Poole, was ſir John Harpenden knight, buried at Weſtminſter, beſides hir firſt Huſband Hemendale. This Jone, which had all theſe Huſbands died in Januarie, in the twelfe yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, and was buried in Cobham church, as is yet to be ſeene, with this epitaph: ✠ Hic iacet Iohanna domina de Cobham, quondam vxor domini Reginaldi de Braybrooke militis, quæ obijt in die ſancti Hilarij epiſcopi, anno Domini 1433. cuius animæ propitietur Deus. Thus much touching Jone the heire and baroneſſe of Cobham, and of hir Huſbands and iſſue: amongſt which, Jone (as is before ſaid) maried to Thomas Brooke, was onelie baroneſſe of Cobham, and he intituled baron of that place in hir right, as after ſhall appeare. But before I enter into the tretie of the Brooks as lords of Cobham, I thinke it not amiſſe, as I haue ſet downe before of the Cobhams, to ſet downe the deſcending line of the Brooks, vnto Thomas Brooke the firſt, intituled lord Cobham, & ſo vnto this William Brooke knight lord Cobham now liuing, bicauſe I would fill vp one orderlie courſe of the names and deſcents of all ſuch families as haue inioied the honourable title of the lords of Cobham.

The line of the Brooks, at this daie lords of Cobham.

I Haue read in the hiſtorie of Cambridge, lib. 1. fol 4. of one Laurence Brooke, who liued in the foure & fortith yeare of king Henrie the third, falling about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and ſixtie, and was delegate of the king to appeaſe certeine diſcords at Cambridge. But whether theſe Brooks, whereof I am now to intreat, be deſcended of him or no, I will not at this time receiue or reiect, but leaue it to the iudgement of others: and therfore hauing nothing to ſaie certeine thereof, I will haſten to that certeintie which ſufficient authoritie dooth warrant, vnder the learned pen of that notable antiquarie, Robert Glouer, named by office Summerſet. Thus therefore I begin with the Brooks.

Laurence Brooke liuing in the foure & fortith of Henrie the third, had receiued twentie pounds by the yeare of the kings grant out of the excheker.

William de la Brooke, lord of the manor of the Brooke beſides Juell Cheſter, now called Icheſter, in Summerſetſhire, had iſſue Henrie de la Brooke.

Henrie de la Brooke the ſonne of William, married Nicholaa, the daughter of Brian Goneuile, by whom he had iſſue Henrie Brooke: of which name Goneuile one Edmund Goneuile a reuerend man, parſon of the church of Terrington in Northfolke, did begin to laie one part of Goneuile college in Cambridge, on thurſdaie in Whitſun weeke, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred fortie and eight, being the two and twentith of Edward the third.

Henrie Brooke, the ſonne of Henrie, and of his wife Nicholaa married Eliſabeth, and died in the eighteenth yere of king Edward the ſecond, leauing iſſue John de la Brooke.

John de la Brooke, the ſonne of Henrie and Eliſabeth, maried Jone the daughter of ſir John Bardſtone knight, by whome he had iſſue ſir Thomas Brooke knight, which John died in the two and twentith yeare of Edward the third, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred fortie and eight.

Thomas Brooke knight, the ſonne of John, maried Conſtance the daughter of one Markenfeld, by whome he had iſſue Thomas Brooke knight, which Thomas the father died in the one and fortith yeare of Edward the third, being the yeare of Lord 1367.

Thomas Brooke knight, the ſonne of the ſaid Thomas Brooke knight, married Jone ſecond daughter, and one of the heires of Simon Hanape of Gloceſterſhire, which Jone was the widow of Robert Chedder of Briſtow. By which wife this Thomas had iſſue Thomas Brooke knight, lord Cobham, and Michaell Brooke his yoonger ſonne, which ſir Thomas Brooke and his wife being buried at Thorncombe, there is this monument extant of the time of both their deaths: ✠ Heere lieth Thomas Brooke knight, which died in the yeare of our Lord 1419, being the fiſt of king Henrie the fiſt. And alſo heere lieth dame Ione Brooke, wife of the ſaid Thomas, the which died the tenth of Aprill 1437, the fifteenth of king Henrie the ſixt, on whoſe ſoules Ieſus haue mercie.

Tho. Brooke knight, the firſt (that was intituled lord Cobham) of that familie.

Thomas Brooke of Summerſetſhire knight, the ſonne of the laſt Thomas Brooke knight, maried (as before is ſaid) Jone the daughter of Reginald Braiebrooke, in whoſe right he was intituled lord Cobham. This man had iſſue by this Jone, Edward Brooke knight, lord Cobham; Thomas Brooke, and John Brooke, Robert Brooke, and Peter Brooke, all which died without iſſue; Reginald Brooke of Apſale; Morgan Brooke, which alſo died iſſueleſſe, and Hugh Brooke; with Eliſabeth married to S. Maur, the ſonne and heire to John of S. Maur knight. Jone married to John Carrant the ſonne and heire of William Carrant eſquier, Margaret Brooke, & Chriſtian which died without iſſue.

Edward Brooke lord Cobham.

Edward Brooke knight, the ſonne of the laſt Thomas Brooke knight, was lord Cobham and aduanced to the baronie thereof about the fiue and twentith of king Henrie the ſixt, about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred fortie and ſix, or a thouſand foure hundred fortie and ſeauen, for that yeare of Henrie the ſixt, fell part in that one and part in that other yeare of our Lord. This lord Cobham faithfullie aſſiſting the faction of Richard duke of Yorke, being now in the kings ſeruice in Ireland, continued his faith vnto him in the abſence of this duke, for which cauſe the duke in the thirtith yere of Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of Chriſt 1452, commeth out of Ireland to conſult with his freends John duke of Northfolke, Richard earle of Saliſburie, and this lord Cobham, who being now in Wales and flieng the comming of the kings armie in thoſe parts, they all went ouer Kingſtone bridge, paſſing into Kent, and there vpon Burntheath neere vnto Dertford pight their field: whereof when the king had intelligence, he came to Blackeheath, and there alſo placed his campe. At length the duke by mediation of freends, and for that the people of Kent and of other places came not vnto him as they had promiſed, brake vp the field, and yeelded himſelfe to the king at Dertford: at what time on the tenth of March the duke made his ſubmiſſion and tooke oth (to be true, and obedient to the king) in S. Paules church of London, in the preſence of manie of the nobilitie, amongſt which were the lord S. Amond, and this Edward Brooke lord Cobham. After this, in the three & thirtith yeare of king Henrie the ſixt 1455 the duke of Yorke being in the marches of Wales and aſſociat with his freends, amongſt which was the lord Cobham, and perceiuing that neither exhortation ſerued nor accuſation preuailed againſt Edmund Beaufort duke of Summerſet cheefe hinderer and enimie of this duke of Yorke: they determined to reuenge the quarell by force, and ſo to obteine their purpoſe by open warre. Wherevpon, with thoſe of his faction then preſent, whereof this lord Cobham was one, the duke commeth toward London, but was at ſaint Albons incountred with the king then preſent, and ſuch as aſſiſted him: where in the battell betwixt them, the victorie fell vnto the duke, and the king was wounded in the necke with an arrow: by meanes whereof things ſeemed to be at ſome quiet. But as the inward heat of coles of hatred are couered with the cold embers of outward diſſimulation: ſo the malice betweene the king & the duke being but for a ſhew ſuppreſſed, and the ſame burſting foorth againe, the duke of Yorke was faine to flie into Ireland. But afterward regathering his power togither, he landed at Sandwich in the eight and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and three ſcore, where met them Thomas Bourcher archbiſhop of Canturburie with his croſſe borne before him: who comming to Canturburie and through Kent, there ioined with them this Edward lord Cobham, John Guilford, William Pechee, Robert Horne, and manie other gentlemen of that ſhire. All which companie comming to London the ſecond of Julie, at a conuocation in Paules, the earle of Warwike recited the cauſe of their comming. Which doone, the duke and the reſt departing from London to go to the king at Northampton, left Richard earle of Saliſburie, the lord Cobham, and ſir John Guilford, to keepe the Londoners in their promiſed obedience; which lords tooke ſuch carefull order for the citie, in diligent keeping the gates and entries thereof, that no ſuccor might come to the lord Scales (lodging in the Tower) who with the lord Hungerford were come to the citie, to take the ſame before the comming of the duke of Yorke, that no aid might come to the lord Scales and thoſe in the Tower, now ſtreictlie beſieged by water and by land. Wherewith the lord Scales tooke ſuch diſpleſure, that he ſhot off the great ordinance againſt them within the citie, and they of the citie did with like requit them within the Tower, to the great damage of both parts. This Edward Brooke lord Cobham married Eliſabeth the daughter of James lord Audleie, by whome he had iſſue John Brooke lord Cobham, & Eliſabeth married to Robert Tanfield eſquier.

John Brooke lord Cobham of Cobham.

John Brooke lord Cobham, the ſon of Edward lord Cobham, in the firſt yeare of the reigne of king Richard the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred eightie and three, attended vpon the ſaid king to his coronation: and in the ninth yeare of king Henrie the ſeuenth, being the yeere of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred ninetie and three, he interteined to be of his councell ſergeant Read, after cheefe iuſtice of the common plees, from whome Thomas Wootton and Thomas Willoughbie in Kent eſquiers, as heires of the ſaid Read, and James Cromer, and Iſaac Rudſton eſquiers alſo in that ſhire are lineallie deſcended; for which cauſe I was the willinger to take this occaſion by this lord Brooke in this ſort, to mention the ſaid ſir Robert Read, and theſe perſons deſcended of him. This John lord Cobham, in the twelfe yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſeuenth, being about the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand foure hundred ninetie and ſeuen, ioined with Greie earle of Kent againſt the Corniſh rebels, who made inſurrection vnder James Touchet lord Audleie & Michaell Joſeph the blacke ſmith, at what time thoſe rebels were ſubdued at Blackeheath. This John lord Cobham had two wiues, the firſt Elenor the daughter of one Anſtie of Suffolke, by whome he had no iſſue; the ſecond wife was Margaret the daughter of Edward Neuill lord of Aburgauennie, by whom he had iſſue Thomas Brooke lord Cobham, George Brooke which married Elenor (ſome ſaie Eliſabeth the daughter of William, and ſiſter and heire to ſir John Pechee knight) and Edward Brooke of Denton; ton, which was knighted in the fourth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, by Howard lord admerall, in the yeare of Grace one thouſand fiue hundred and twelue, and died without iſſue, hauing maried a woman borne in Ireland. The daughters of this John lord Cobham were Marie married vnto Robert Blage a baron of the excheker; Dorothie married to William Iſaac of Kent eſquier, & Faith Brooke. And here hauing before mentioned one George Brooke ſonne to this John lord Cobham, and finding by Leland, that much about this time liued one ſir George Brooke knight, which I can not yet diſcerne to be other but this George Brooke; I will ſet downe the words and matter of Leland, as well for that I deſire to perpetuat all whatſoeuer commeth to my hands of Lelands commentaries, as for that ſo worthie an exploit of a Brooke ſhould not be by me forgotten. Thus therefore writeth Leland. After the battell of Tewkeſburie, fought by king Edward the fourth againſt prince Edward ſonne to Henrie the ſixt, ſir Walter Writle, and ſir Geffreie Gates knights of Richard Neuill earle of Warwike were gouernors of the towne of Calis, who ſent ſir George Brooke knight out of Calis vnto Thomas baſtard Fauconbridge capteine of the earle of Warwikes nauie, to raiſe the countrie of Kent, to go to London, and to take king Henrie out of the Tower, &c. So Fauconbridge came to Canturburie, raiſed all Kent, and came to London the tenth daie of Maie; there the maior and aldermen, and the lord Scales kept them out, wherefore Fauconbridge ſhot his ordinance at the citie, burning much about London bridge, and about Aldgate. Wherevpon the commons of London tooke great diſpleaſure, or elſe they had let in Fauconbridge and the Kentiſhmen, in deſpite of the rulers of the citie. Wherevpon Fauconbridge went from London to Kingſton, &c, Thus much Leland. This John lord Cobham died in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand and fiue hundred, being about the fifteenth yere of the reigne of Henrie the ſeuenth, and his wife Margaret died in September, in the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand fiue hundred and ſix, in the two and twentith yeare of the reigne of the ſaid Henrie the ſeuenth, and were buried in the collegiat church of Cobham, with this epitaph:

1471 In the eleuenth yeare of Edward the fourth.

Hic iacet Iohannes Brooke miles ac baro baroniæ de Cobham, & domina Margareta vxor ſua, quondam filia nobilis viri Edouardi Neuill nuper domini de Burgauenni, qui quidem Iohannes obijt (*) die menſis (*) Anno Domini 1500. Ipſa verò domina Margareta obijt (*) die menſis Septembris 1506, quorum animabus propitietur Deus.

* Stellulæ indicant nonnulla deſiderari.

Thomas Brooke.

Thomas Brooke knight lord Cobham, the ſonne of John lord Cobham, in the yeere that the word became fleſh one thouſand fiue hundred and thirteene, being the fift yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, was with George Talbot earle of Shrewſburie left to tame the Welſhmen, when the king minded to paſſe the ſeas to the warres of Terwine and Turneie: who after alſo in the ſame yeare with the ſame earle of Shrewſburie, was at the warres of the cities of Terwine and Turneie. After which, in the yeare that the word of the father tooke fleſh in the wombe of the mother a thouſand fiue hundred twentie and one, being the thirteenth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, he was one of the peeres for the arreignment and condemnation of Edward Stafford duke of Buckingham. Then in the yeare of our incarnation one thouſand fiue hundred and fiue and twentie, being the ſeuenteenth yeere of the reigne of Henrie the eight, commiſſioners ſat in all ſhires, to leauie the ſixt part of euerie mans goods; but the burden was ſo greeuous that it was denied, & the commons in euerie place were ſo mooued, that it was like to haue growen to a rebellion. For in Kent the lord Cobham then a commiſſioner thought to execute the ſame, but being clubbiſhlie anſwered by one John Scudder, he ſent him to the Tower; for which the people muttered againſt the lord Cobham, and ſaid expreſlie, that they would paie no monie, and in the ſame grudge did euillie intreat ſir Thomas Bullen at Maidſton, which tax the people refuſed to paie, becauſe it was the cardinals extreame doings & not the kings. He maried three wiues whereof the firſt was Dorothie daughter of Henrie Heidon knight, by whome he had iſſue John that died iſſuleſſe; George Brooke after lord Cobham; Thomas and William Brooke, which died without iſſue; Margaret married to ſir John Fog knight; Faith married to William Okenden gentleman of Calis; and Eliſabeth firſt married to ſir Thomas Wiat knight, and after to ſir Edward Warner knight. His ſecond wife was alſo Dorothie the daughter of ſir Philip Calthrope of Norwich knight. His third wife was Eliſabeth the daughter of Thomas Hart, and ſiſter to ſir Perſiuall Hart knight, by both which his laſt wiues this lord Cobham had no iſſue. He died the nineteenth daie of Julie, in the yeare of our Sauior one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and nine, being the one and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, and was honorablie buried with his anceſtors at Cobham, hauing this epitaph grauen vpon him:

Orate pro anima Thomæ Brooke militis domini de Cobham, & conſanguinei & hæredis Richardi Beauchamp militis, qui quidem Thomas cœpit in uxorem Dorotheam filiam Henrici Heidon militis, & habuerunt exitum inter eos ſeptem filios & ſex filias, & prædicta Dorothea obijt: & prædictus Thomas cœpit in vxorem Dorotheam Southwel viduam, quæ obijt ſine exitu, & poſtea cœpit in vxorem Elizabetham Hart, & habuerunt nullum exitum inter eos, qui quidem Thomas obijt 19 die Iulij Anno Domini 1529.

George Brooke.

George Brooke lord Cobham (by birth the ſecond, but at the death of the ſame Thomas the eldeſt ſon of Thomas lord Cobham) being a gentleman of great hope, was for the valor ſhewed by him in his yoongeſt yeares during the life of his father, not onlie well eſteemed amongſt all men, but alſo highlie honored by the king. For this George before his fathers death, ſhewing manifeſt proofe of thoſe good parts wherewith he was liberallie indued by beneficiall nature, and his parents good and carefull education, attended with good credit (in the yeere of our Lord God one thouſand fiue hundred and twentie, being about the twelfe yeare of king Henrie the eight) on Thomas duke of Norffolke then lieutenant of Ireland, where this George Brooke did valiantlie behaue himſelfe in the ſame wars. Wherwith not contented, but being like the ſun, which the higher it goeth, ſo much the more it ſpreadeth and increaſeth his force; this George as he increaſed in yeeres, ſo much the larger he ſpread forth the honorable beames of his valor. For in the yeare of our Lord 1522, falling in the fourteenth yeare of the reigne of the renowmed king Henrie the eight, in the warres which the admerall of England had againſt the French Britons, at what time Morleus was taken from the Britons; the lord admerall in ſome part to recompenſe the worthie deſerts of this George Brooke, then performing a peece of good ſeruice, did amongſt others adorne him with the degree of a knight. Who thus honored, did not yet ceaſe from the performance of the dutie both of a worthie knight, and a valiant gentleman. For ſhortlie after in the ſelfe ſame yeare, the kings armie (vnder the conduct of Thomas Howard earle of Surreie and admerall of England, ioining with the men of the emperor Charles the fift) paſſed towards Ard, from whenſe this ſir George Cobham with two thouſand men, by the precept of the admerall generall of the field, came to the towne of Sellois, ſet fire on the towne, aſſaulted the caſtell, burned, and ſubdued it, with the towns of Brunibridge, Senckerke, Botingham, and Manſtier. Which doone, he returned to the admerall, and obteined due thanks and reward therefore, all theſe things being performed in the life of his father Thomas lord Cobham. After whoſe death, this noble man George Brooke being become lord Cobham, did neither faint in the courſe of his honorable actions, nor anie whit degenerat from the nobilitie of his anceſtors, for he was ſtill had in ſuch eſtimation: that amongſt other of the nobilitie, in the three and twentith yeare of Henrie the eight, being the yere of our Lord and Sauior a thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and one, attending on the king going to meet the French king betweene Calis and Bullongne, this lord Cobham was one, who in honorable ſort behaued himſelfe to his ſingular commendation. Some yeares after this, being in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and foure, and the ſix and thirtith yeere of Henrie the eight, he as marſhall of the armie vnder Edward Seimor earle of Hertford, taking ſhip at Newcaſtell, paſſed into Scotland, and in the ſame countrie performed manie warlike exploits. Wherevpon, in the ſame yeare, as a reward of his worthineſſe, he was made deputie of Calis in the place of the earle of Arundell; at what time this lord was ſworne to that office, in the morning of the ſame daie, being the fourteenth daie of Iune, in the night whereof (after the watch bell ended) the king landed at Calis, to go in perſon to the ſiege of Bullongne. Touching whoſe landing, and the behauior of the lord Cobham; the firſt declaring a moſt noble mind of the prince, in that he would not refuſe to obeie the orders of his townes; & the other ſhewing the wiſedome of the ſame lord Cobham, in that he would not raſhlie doo anie thing, I will not refuſe to ſaie ſomewhat, ſith the ſame deſerueth not to be forgotten, and may be a good example to others. In the morning of the ſame fourteenth day of Iune before the king paſſed from Douer to Calis, was Henrie Fitzallen earle of Arundell deputie of Calis, but he then ſurrendering his office, and the lord Cobham that daie ſworne, the king tooke land at Calis, after that the watch was ſet, & that the watch bell had ceaſed ringing; after the ceaſing whereof, it was not lawfull to open the gates to receiue anie into the towne. The news of the kings landing being knowen, the erle of Arundell and the new deputie come with the porter, hauing the keies to open the gate, and to receiue the king into the towne, at what time the earle of Arundell in haſt commanded the porter to open the gates, the lord Cobham then ſaieng nothing, but the porter refuſed the dooing therof at his word, alledging, that this ſame morning in truth he was their gouernor, & then it was his dutie to obeie him. But now (ſaith he) you are no more in that office, wherfore I will not doo it vntill the lord Cobham our deputie doo appoint vs, at whoſe ſpeech it ſhall be doone, and not before.

Wherevpon the lord Cobham noting the wiſe demeanour of the porter that warrantleſſe would not breake the orders of the towne, for the preſent time ſaid nothing, but ſtill expecting the kings neerer approch to the towne, he at length goeth himſelfe to the gate, when the king knocked, tooke the keie from the porter, did open onelie the little wicket, receiued the king onelie therethrough, with three or foure more into the towne, and excluded all the reſt of the traine, of what eſtate ſoeuer: which the king greatlie commended, hauing before vnderſtood by the ſpeech of the lord Cobham, that they might not without breach of the orders of the towne, admit ſuch companie amongſt them, after the houre appointed; and therefore beſought the king that it would pleaſe him that onelie ſome three or foure, which his maieſtie would appoint, might onelie come within the wals of the towne; wherevnto the king granted, and ſtanding himſelfe at the wicket, would not permit anie to enter, but ſuch as he by ſpeciall name called vnto him; wherevpon three or foure being now come in at the gate, the king did ſhut the wicket with his owne hands. Thus this lord Cobham continuing in the fauour of king Henrie the eight during his life, ſhewed no leſſe merit of good deſert after his death, to his ſonne king Edward the ſixt, than he had doone before. For about the third yeare of his reigne, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and eight, the king adopted this lord Cobham into the honourable felowſhip of the knights of the garter; in which yeare alſo, about the ſecond of Maie, after the ſurrender of Bullongne (the daie whereof following this lord left his deputiſhip of Calis as I haue beene informed) this lord Cobham with ſir William Peter cheefe ſecretarie, went from Calis as ambaſſadors vnto the French king, at what time theſe ambaſſadors were lodged the firſt night at Bullongne, and ſo rode to Amiens, where they met the French king, with whome hauing diſpatched the cauſe of their comming, they after returned into England honourablie rewarded, vpon which returne of the lord Cobham he was ſworne one of the kings priuie councell.

After which to ſhew how redie and able he was to furniſh himſelfe with armor and men for defenſe of his countrie againſt inuaſion, he in the ſixt yeare of the ſame king Edward the ſixt, in the yere of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and two, amongſt other of the nobilitie which muſtered before the king in the parke of Greenewich, ſhewed his traine to the number of fiftie perſons, vnder the enſigne of the Saracens head, which he gaue to his ſeruants for their cogniſance. Then after the death of king Edward the ſixt, in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and three, he ſetteth his hand with other of the nobilitie to a letter, wherin the lords admit queene Iane to the crowne, excluding the ladie Marie daughter to king Henrie the eight. Which deed of his, doone by the perſuaſion of the greateſt part of the greater ſort of councellors, was not ſo hurtfull vnto him as it was to others, after the comming of queene Marie to the crowne, to whom he ſhewed himſelfe no leſſe faithfull ſubiect than before he had beene a ſound councellor to hir brother. For in the firſt yeare of the reigne of the ſame queene, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and foure, he dutifullie reſiſted ſir Thomas Wiat knight, raiſing a rebellion in Kent, and beſieging this lord Cobham then defended within his caſtle of Cowling: where this lord diſcharging ſuch artillerie as he had againſt Wiat, he inforced him to depart from thenſe. But as nothing is ſo well doone or meant, but that the ſame maie be impeched by the malice of the aduerſarie, ſith there is none that reſteth free from enuie: ſo this lord growing in ſome ſuſpicion about Wiats rebelling, by the euill perſuaſions of his enimies, ſith this lord had vſed ſome conference with Wiat; he was in the end apprehended and committed to the Tower with certeine of his ſonnes; who there ſufficientlie prouing his innocencie, was after about the foure and twentith of March, diſcharged of his impriſonment and ſent to his houſe in Kent. From whenſe in the ſecond yere of the ſame queene, with other noble men, he went to meet king Philip, comming into England land to marrie quæne Marie. After which he liued ſome fiue or ſix yeares in honorable peace and quiet, beloued of his countrie, and honored of the nobilitie, and then gaue place to nature.

He married Anne the eldeſt daughter of ſir Edward Braie knight, and one of the heires of John lord Braie, by whom he had iſſue William Brooke lord Cobham, George Brooke his ſecond ſonne which maried Chriſtian the daughter and heire of Richard Duke eſquire, by whom he had iſſue thræ ſonnes; Duke, ſo chriſtened after his grandfather; Charles and Peter, Thomas Brooke his third ſonne which married Katharine the daughter of ſir William Candiſh knight, by whom he had iſſue a daughter married to Arthur Mils eſquire; John Brooke his fourth ſonne now liuing, who married Anne the widow of ſir John Norton, and the daughter and heire of Cob; Henrie the elder his fift ſonne, and Edward Brooke the elder his ſixt ſonne, who both died without iſſue; Henrie Brooke the yoonger his ſeuenth ſonne now liuing a penſioner, a knight, and one that hath bæne ambaſſador legier in France for hir maieſtie, who married Anne the daughter of Henrie Sutton of Arrone, and widow of doctor Walter Haddon maiſter of the requeſts; Thomas Brooke the yoonger his eight, Edmund the ninth, and Edward the yoonger his tenth ſonne, all which thræ died without iſſue. Beſides which ſonnes, this lord George had iſſue foure daughters, Eliſabeth married to William Par marqueſſe of Northhampton, Anne and Marie which died iſſuleſſe, and Katharine now liuing married to John Jerningham eſquire. And here ſith I haue ſomewhat mentioned this Eliſabeth marqueſſe of Northampton, who went into Flanders to recouer helpe of an infirmitie which ſhe had, I muſt ſaie ſomewhat that ſhe after hir returne from thoſe parts vncured departed this life at Whitehall, and was buried in Paules on the north ſide of the quier, not farre from John of Gaunt. Touching whome after hir death doctor Haddon did compoſe theſe few following verſes:

Eliſabetha fuit naturæ iure Cobama,
Coniugis & proprio nomine Parra fuit,
Forma, pudor, pietas, fæcundæ gratia linguæ,
Ingenium, virtus, inuiolata fides,
Cum grauitate lepos, cū ſimplicitate venuſtas,
Larga manus, pectus nobile, firmus amor,
Deniq; quicquid habet natura, quod addere poſſit
Addere quod poſſit gratia quicquid habet,
Omnia viuentem Parram comitata fuerunt,
Omnia mors atrox obruit iſta ſimul,
Obruat iſta licèt triſti mors ſæua ſepulchro,
Attamen illorum fama ſuperſtes erit.

But leauing hir, and returning to hir father, we ſaie, that this lord George departed this life the third kalends of October, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and eight, and the fift and ſixt yeare of the reignes of Philip and Marie. After whoſe death his wife ladie Anne, refuſing anie longer to liue after the deth of hir honorable and louing huſband, did alſo forſake the world, and ended hir daies in Nouember after the death of hir huſband, to both whom buried in Cobham church, their louing ſonne William lord Cobham did conſecrate a rich, ſtatelie, and curious monument of rare workmanſhip in ſtone, to the end that one toome might vnite their bodies after death, whoſe harts were by mutuall loue ioined during their liues. Upon which gorgeous monument are ingrauen theſe following epitaphs, wherof the firſt in proſe concerneth the lord Cobham, and the other in verſe belongeth to his wife in this ſort. ¶ Honoratiſſimus & clariſſimus vir Georgius Brokus fuit dominus Cobhammus ex oppidi Cobhammi poſſeſſione cognominatus, & idē laudatiſſimus aliquot annis Caleti præfectus, in illuſtriſſimum collegium cooptatus equitum diui Georgij, nec ſolùm hunc præſtantiſſimū habuit honorem & familiæ commendationem, ſed etiam natura fuit optima, & animo omni generis laude ornatiſſimo: dux fuit in bello præſtantiſſimus, & ſapientiſſimus in pace cōciliarius, principibus in quorum temporibus vixit egregiè probatus: Cantianis ſuis inter quos habitauit eximiè charus, deniq; toti reipublicæ propter honorum ſplendorem, & virtutum notiſſimus & dilectiſſimus. Et hæc omnia fuerunt in illo illuſtriora, quoniam & profeſſionem euangelij ſuſceperat, & defenſionem, ac eandem ad extremum vſq; ſpiritum conſeruauit. Iſte nobiliſſimus vir, conſtantiſſimus Dei ſeruus, & ornatiſſimum patriæ membrum, cùm ad maturam ſenectutem perueniſſet, annum agens ſexageſimum ſecundum, & febris ardoribus conflagrans, tertio kalendas Octobris eſt mortuus, anno mileſimo quingenteſimo octauo, cuius diſceſſu, liberi quos poſt ſe multos & inprimis laudatos reliquit, & amici & neceſſarij, tota denique reſpublica magnum & iuſtum dolorem acceperunt. Gulielmus autem Brokus eques appellatus, ex antiquæ familiæ cognominatione dominus Cobhammus Georgij patris & hæres beneuolētiſſimus, hoc monumentum memoriæ Georgij patris ſui clariſſimi dedicauit, an. 1561 & Eliſabethæ reginæ tertio.

Beſides which, vpon the other ſide of the ſame toome, beſides the picture of his wife, is this epitaph ſet downe concerning hir, being a gentlewoman of great birth, and likewiſe of honourable behauiour:

Patre fuit domino fœlix, dominóq; marito,
Alter erat Brayus Cobhamus alter erat,
Anna fuit frugi, fuit & proſperima mater,
Pauperibus larga præbuit Anna manu,
Nil erat hac melius, nil fortunatius vna,
Donec erat charo charior illa viro.
Vltimus hunc annus Mariæ cū funere merſit,
Illa pari fato menſe Nouembre ruit,
Sic quos vita duos concordes ſemper habebat,
Extinctos eadē nunc quoq; buſta tenet.

William Brooke.

William Brooke knight, lord Cobham, the ſonne and heire of George Brooke lord Cobham, not degenerating in anie point from the nobilitie of his anceſtors, was (as before his father had bæne) aduanced to the honorable degræ of knighthood in the life of his father, in whoſe time he deſerued no ſmall commendations for his ſeruice in the warres in thoſe his yoonger yeres. But becauſe I maie not ſet downe what euerie particular action and honour of his might iuſtlie deſerue to be ſpoken, becauſe I might to ſome therin ſæme ouer much to flatter him of whom I write whileſt he is yet liuing, I will not either in truth dilate all the circumſtances of the matter, neither in ample ſpæches ſtreine my pen to powre out that which he rightlie deſerueth, and euerie one plainlie knoweth: but onelie ſimplie ſet downe ſuch things, as he hath valiantlie, honorablie, grauelie, and deliberately performed, in the warres, in peace, abroad and at home, to his countries good, the honour of his familie, his owne aduancement, and his princes liking. Wherefore to begin with things doone in his fathers life, and in the budding of thoſe yoong yeares which gaue forth a manifeſt proofe of that fruit which ſo honorable a træ would in following time deliuer with ripe conſideration; we ſaie, that in the third yeare of king Edward the ſixt in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie & nine, after the aſſault of Bullongne-berg in the warres betweene the French and the Engliſh, this lord Cobham (by order and appointment of his father George lord Cobham then deputie of Calis) came from Calis with a hundred ſouldiors, who ioining with another hundred ſouldiors iſſuing out of Guines vnder the leading of capteine Smith, tooke their iorneies as appereth to Bullogneberg. Shortlie after which, by the order of the lord Clinton then gouernor of Bullogne, were ſent forth ſir William Brooke with his hundred from Bullogne berg, and capteine Litton with his hundred from the baſe towne, and another capteine with a third hundred of ſouldiors from another peece of defenſe thereabouts; wherevnto were ioined fiue and twentie horſſemen with certeine cariages to go vnto a wood, two miles diſtance from Bullogneberg, to fetch timber from thenſe for the mounting of the great artillerie and other neceſſarie vſes. Theſe capteines with their bands being almoſt come to the woods ſide, met with certeine of their ſkouts, which were ſent forth in the morning; who told them how they had diſcouered the tract of a great number of horſſemen. Wherevpon the Engliſh retired, and therewith the French horſſemen brake out of the wood beforeſaid, & following the Engliſh, fell in ſkirmiſh with them. But the Engliſhmen caſting themſelues in a ring, kept out the enimie with their pikes, wherewith they had impaled themſelues; who hauing that their ſmall number lined with ſhot, did continuallie gall the Frenchmen as they approched. All which notwithſtanding, thoſe horſſemen gaue three maine onſets vpon the Engliſh, with the number of fiue hundred horſſe; the reſt of their companie remaining ſtill in troope. But ſuch was the valiant proweſſe of the Engliſh (incouraged by the comfortable ſpeeches, and valiant actiuitie of ſir William Brooke, with the diligence of the other capteins, which not onelie conducted and placed them in ſuch order as ſtood moſt for their ſafetie, but alſo vſed ſuch good ſpeeches to them as the neceſſitie of the time required and would permit) that in the end the enimie was manfullie repelled, and diuerſe of them with their horſſes ſlaine; amongſt which was monſieur Cauret: whereby this ſir William Brooke and the Engliſhmen did ſafelie retire and returne home.

This ſir William Brooke being one of the ſquiers of the bodie to king Edward the ſixt, was after the death of king Edward, which fell in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and three, with his father the lord George, by the malicious perſuaſion of their enimies, committed to the Tower vpon ſuſpicion of priuitie of the rebellion of Wiat, although (as you heard before) this lord repelled him from his caſtell of Cowling. But in the end, they ſo well anſwered whatſoeuer might be obiected againſt them, that they were ſhortlie after with great credit deliuered to their libertie. After which, this William Brooke liued in quiet all the time of queene Marie, as far as I can yet learne. In the latter yeare of the reigne of which queene, George lord Cobham died, whereby this ſir William poſſeſſing now the honorable title of his father, was made lord Cobham by deſcent: who with all due circumſtances executing the funerall of his father and mother (who did not long ſuruiue hir huſband the lord George) did after in the church of Cobham erect a ſtatelie monument ouer them of rich ſtone, moſt beautifull now to be ſeene in the ſame church. Not long after which death of his father, this William lord Cobham was after the death of ſir Thomas Cheineie knight, in the firſt yeare of the reigne of our ſouereigne ladie Eliſabeth, made coneſtable of Douer caſtle, warden of the fiue ports, chancellor and admerall of the ſame. Which office he at this daie dooth moſt honorablie inioie, hauing (during the ſame) onelie two lieutenants, the one a worthie gentleman called William Cripſe eſquier, and after his deceaſe, Richard Barre eſquier, a man well deſeruing a place of ſuch charge, truſt, and credit.

In which firſt yeare of hir maieſties reigne, falling in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and nine, this lord did moſt honorablie interteine the queene with hir traine, at his houſe of Cobham hall with ſumptuous fare, and manie delights of rare inuention. Amongſt which, one comming now to mind, which I then being yoong beheld, vrgeth me forward in the ſetting downe thereof; which was: a banketing houſe made for hir maieſtie in Cobham parke, with a goodlie gallerie therevnto, compoſed all of greene, with ſeuerall deuiſes of knotted flowers, ſupported on each ſide with a faire row of hawthorne trees, which nature ſeemed to haue planted there of purpoſe in ſummer time to welcome hir maieſtie, and to honor their lord and maiſter. But becauſe the beautie and maieſtie, with the rare deuiſe thereof cannot be ſo well conceiued by pen, as the ſame was artificiallie made, vnleſſe the reder might at one inſtant behold alſo the artificiall ſituation of the place; I thinke it better to paſſe the reſt in ſilence, than not deliuering it in ſuch grace as it meriteth, to offer diſgrace vnto it, and ſhame to my ſelfe, in that I ſhall faile in due commendation of the deuiſe; and take vpon me to deſcribe that which is beyond my reach. Wherefore leauing the maner thereof, I will ſet downe certeine verſes made by doctor Haddon, and placed in the forefront of the ſame banketting houſe, which doo not onelie ſhew the ioifull welcome of hir maieſtie to this honorable lord; but alſo to the whole countrie of Kent, which verſes were theſe following:

Regia progenies, clari ſtirps inclyta Bruti,
Grata venis populis Eliſabetha tuis:
Quocúnque aſpicias plauſus & gaudia cernis,
Lætatur vultu fœmina virque tuo:
Imberbes pueri, cani, teneræque puellæ,
Omnis ad aſpectum turba profuſa ruunt.
Nos te reginam, tu nos agnoſce clientes,
Sic tibi, ſic nobis, ſic bona cuncta fluent.

Not long after which, this lord Cobham was by hir maieſtie ſent ambaſſador into the low countries to king Philip, where he ſo honorablie and wiſelie diſpatched the ſame, that he was holden in no leſſe reputation, than his birth and merits did well challenge. Which doone, his wife the ladie Dorothie the daughter of George Neuill lord of Aburgauennie parted the world. Wherevpon hauing no iſſue male by hir, and deſirous to perpetuat ſo long and honorable a title of the lords Cobham, which he would not to haue ended in himſelfe; he applied his mind to the ſecond mariage, and finding a gentlewoman in the court of modeſt behauior and knightlie birth, deſeruing well, not onelie for the rare and good cariage of hir ſelfe in that place; but alſo for the dowries of hir mind (for ſhe was both wiſe and learned) and for the beautie of hir perſon wherewith nature had adorned hir, he tooke hir to wife, being by name Francis, the daughter of ſir Iohn Newton, knight; who hauing made him a glad father of much faire iſſue, whereof we will ſpeake hereafter, yet liueth to both their comforts. Touching which name of Newton, ſith I am now occaſioned to ſpeake thereof; I thinke it not amiſſe here to ſet downe what I find noted therevpon; to the end that I might in like ſort ioine them in ſome part of a diſcourſe of their deſcent, whome God hath ioined in one ſocietie of matrimonie. Wherefore I will vtter what I find thereof in the collections of Leland that moſt worthie antiquarie: who making mention of Gourneie, Caradoc, and Newton, as perſons ſo tied togither, partlie by deſcent, and partlie by name, that they cannot be ſeuered; I will Verbatim recite Lelands words, which are theſe, written in the peregrination of England, which he made in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and two.

From Montague to Stoke vnder Hampden about a mile, there I ſaw at Stoke in a bottome hard by the village, verie notable ruins of a great manor place or caſtell. In this manor place remaineth a verie ancient chapell, wherein be diuerſe toomes of noblemen and women. In the ſouthweſt ſide of the chapell be fiue images and toomes one ioined hard to another, thrée of men harneſſed with ſhields, and two of women. There haue béene inſcriptions of each of them; but now ſo ſore defaced that they cannot be read. I ſaw a ſhield or two all varreie of blew and white. There are manie other toomes of noble men in that chapell. Without the quier doore lieth a great faire flat marble ſtone, with an image of braſſe flatlie grauen, and this writing in French about it: Icy giſt le noble & valiant chiualier Mahew de Gourney iadis ſeneſcall de Landes, & capteine de caſtell de Acquies pur noſtre ſeigneiure le roy en la duchie de Guyen. Qui en ſa vie fu a la battaile de Beuamazine, & ala apres a la ſiege de Algazire ſur la Sarazins, & auxi a les battailes de Schluſe, de Creſſie, de Ingeneſſe, de Poiters, de Nazara, &c. Il morut al age de 96 ans, & 26 September, anno Domini 1406, de que ailme Dieu aiſt mercy. I marked in the windowes thrée ſorts of armes, one all varreie blew and white, another with thrée ſtripes gules downe right in a field gold, the third was croſſelets of gold manie intermixt in one, in a field as I remember all gules. The prouoſt of this collegiat chapell hath a large houſe by the village of Stoke, and thereby is a notable quarrie of ſtone at Hampden.

Caradoc or Cradoc, they were called Newtons of the name of their dwelling called Newtowne.

The verie proper name of ſir Iohn Newton is Caradoc. The name of Newton came by this error, becauſe the grandfather of ſir Iohn Newton dwelled, or was borne in Trenewithein in Poisland. Againe, this Gourneie was lord of Stokehampden, and there he lieth buried in a collegiat chapell, by the ruins of his caſtell; he was chiefe founder (as ſome ſaie) of the houſe of Gaunts at Briſtow, he was founder of the priorie of nuns in Summerſetſhire, called Baron Gourneie: and of Richmont caſtell by Mendep, fiue miles from Wels. All the building of this caſtell is cleane downe. It came after to Hampden, and to Caradoc aliàs Newton. The foreſt of Kingſwood commeth iuſt out to Barmecourt maiſter Newtons houſe. There were of ancient time foure counted as chiefe lords of Mendep; firſt the king and his part came to the biſhop of Bath by fée farme; Glaſtenburie had another part; Bonuill lord Bonuill, and now the lord Greie marqueſſe Dorſet was the third owner; the fourth was Gourneie; and now Caradoc aliàs Newton. Gourneie vſed much to lie at Richmont caſtell. Sir Iohn Newton digged vp manie old foundations of this caſtell, towards the building of a new houſe hard thereby, called Eaſtwood. There is a village by Eaſt chapter, called Weſt chapter Gourneie, and there be the varietie of armes that Gourneie gaue in the glaſſe windowes, and his cote armor. At ſuch time as Gourneie liued, the lord Fitzwaren was maiſter of Mendep firſt by inheritance, and it was well furniſhed with deare: but ſhortlie after, for riots and treſpaſſes doone in hunting, it was diſſorreſted, and ſo it remaineth. Gourneis lands came by this means vnto Newton.

Sir Iohn Newtons houſe ſtandeth in the verie place where the grange of Richmond caſtell was.

One Newton a man of lands inhabiting at Wike towards Banwell, had a yoonger brother, which maried one of the daughters and heires of Hampton, and wife iſſuleſſe before to one of the Chocks that died without child by hir, which was the yoongeſt daughter of thrée that Hampton left behind him, and yet ſhe being maried vnto Newton, father to ſir Iohn Newton, fortuned to haue all the thrée parts. The verie lands of Newton of Wike, be deſcended by heires generals to ſir Henrie Capell, ſonne to ſir Giles that dwelled at Wike, and to maiſter Griffith of Northamptonſhire that hath Braibrooke caſtell. So that Newton of Barmecourt hath no part of Newtons lands of Wike. Thus much Leland Whoſe words although they be long, yet I haue béene the willinger to ſet downe, becauſe it concerneth the name of Newton, of whome this honorable ladie Cobham is deſcended; being a perſon in no leſſe credit with hir maieſtie, than hir worthineſſe dooth well merit.

But to leaue hir in court in the good fauor of hir prince, I will returne my pen to the lord Cobham, who for the tender loue that he bare vnto his ſiſter the ladie marchioneſſe of Northampton, went with hir and this ladie Cobham his wife into Flanders, there to ſéeke remedie for an infirmitie wherewith the ſaid marchioneſſe was gréeuouſlie troubled. After whoſe returne into England, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thréeſcore and fiue, being the ſeuenth yeare of quéene Eliſabeth, Chriſtopher prince and Margraue of Baden, with Cecilie his wife ſiſter to the king of Swethen alanded héere in England in the month of September at Douer, whom this lord Cobham there receiued, and from thenſe conueied vnto London, where the prince and his wife lodged at the earle of Bedfords houſe ſtanding on the eaſt ſide, not far from Iuie bridge. But as there are none that liue in this world in ſuch happineſſe, but that they are enuied (becauſe ſuch is the nature of enuie that it alwaies repineth at hir ſuperiors, and at the good of anie other; for as ſaint Auguſtine in a certeine ſermon dooth write; Inuidia eſt odium alienæ fœlicitatis, reſpectu ſuperiorũ, quia eis non æquatur: reſpectu inferiorum, ne ſibi æquentur, reſpectu parium, quia ſibi æquantur; vnde Cain inuidet Abel proſperitati, Rachel Liæ fœcunditati, Saul Dauid fœlicitati: per inuidiam procuratus eſt lapſus mundi & mors Chriſti: the ſharpe and fierie darts whereof, none but onelie the poore and miſerable can eſchue; for the vertuous, the wiſe, the valiant, kings, quéenes, lords, capteines, and all eſtates whatſoeuer are ſubiect thereunto) ſo this noble lord Cobham, féeling the common force thereof, by the complaint of others, was vpon the ſame aſſigned ouer to the charge of the honorable lord treaſuror, vntill further triall were made of his vprightneſſe. But in the end, as gold the more it is purified by the fire the brighter and better it becommeth: ſo the lord Cobham, hauing well cléered himſelfe of whatſoeuer was laied againſt him, did like Ioſeph not onelie receiue an honorable libertie, but did alſo in following time riſe to greater honor than he had before. For his fidelitie to his prince deſeruing it, and hir honorable fauor commanding it, he was after in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thréeſcore and eightéene, being the twentith yeare of hir maieſties reigne, ſent with ſir Francis Walſingham hir principall ſecretarie, ambaſſador into the low countries, to don Iohn of Auſtria, baſtard ſonne of Charles the fift the emperor, and regent of thoſe countries for Philip king of Spaine. In which ambaſſage he behaued himſelfe ſo grauelie, that in few yeares after he was aduanced to greater honors. For he was called both to be one of the moſt honorable fellowſhip of the knights of the garter, and in Hilarie tearme in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and fiue, in the eight and twentith yeare of hir maieſties reigne was admitted into the number of hir priuie councellors, where I will now leaue him, inioieng that place, in which I wiſh him long and happie continuance. Beſides which (ouerpaſſing his goodlie buildings at the Blacke friers in London in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and two, and ſince that, the ſtatelie augmenting of his houſe at Cobham hall, with the rare garden there, in which no varietie of ſtrange flowers and trees doo want, which praiſe or price maie obteine from the furtheſt part of Europe, or from other ſtrange countries, wherby it is not inferior to the garden of Semiramis) I determine to ſpeake ſomewhat of ſuch perſons, as are iſſued from him. Wherefore we firſt ſaie, that this lord maried two wiues, wherof the firſt (as is before ſaid) was the daughter of George Neuill lord of Aburgauennie, by whom he had iſſue one onelie daughter called Francis, yet liuing, being borne on wedneſday the laſt of Julie one thouſand fiue hundred foure ſcore & nine, being firſt maried to Thomas Copinger of Alhallowes in the countie of Kent eſquire, by whom ſhe hath iſſue, two ſonnes now liuing, William & Francis; and after his deceaſſe vnto Edward Becher eſquire now liuing, by whom ſhe hath alſo iſſue, two ſonnes, Caro & Francis. After the death of this ladie Dorothie, the lord Cobham maried Francis the daughter of ſir John Newton, by whom he had iſſue, foure ſonnes, & thrée daughters, which were Maximilian, Henrie, William, George, Eliſabeth, Francis, and Margaret, of whom particularlie we will ſaie ſomewhat, aſwell for their honorable birth, as for that their good education giuen by their parents deſerueth not that they ſhould be forgotten. Maximilian the eldeſt ſonne (borne on wedneſdaie the fourth of December in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and thréeſcore, being the third yeare of the reigne of quéene Eliſabeth) growing after to be a goodlie yoong gentleman, was firſt in his yoongeſt yeares brought vp in his fathers houſe, where he learned the Latine, the French, & other languages; then going to Cambridge, where he beſtowed ſome time in philoſophicall exerciſes, & forſaking that place, did after trauell beyond the ſeas, where moſt vnfortunatlie (about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and thrée) he ended his deſired life, which might greatlie in time haue béene beneficiall to his countrie, whoſe death (being gréeuous to his parents at Cobham performing the funerals of him their ſonne, who ſhould by the courſe of nature haue diſcharged that dutie to them) maie iuſtlie mooue them to write vpon the toome of the ſame Maximilian theſe verſes, ſet vpon a toome in the hoſpitals of the incurable in Naples, which in the like cauſe I haue read to be ſet by the now liuing mother vpon the toome of hir lamented ſonne, departing in hir life time to hir great griefe and heauines:

Quæ mihi debueras ſuprema munera vitæ,
Infœlix ſeruo nunc tibi nate prior:
Fortuna inconſtans, lex & variabilis æui,
Debueras cineri iam ſupereſse meæ.

The which I haue ſéene turned into French in this ſort expreſſing the words & the true meaning therof:

Par ces derneirs honores, que puet lauie attender,
Ie te paye primer ce que tu me deuois,
Sort mutable ô du temps les variable loix,
Tu deuois ah mon filz ah ſuire ma cender.

But to let that paſſe, this yoong gentleman hauing his mind mounted to the hight of good actions, and deſirous to make ſhew that patience reioiſeth in expecting the good ſucces of hard and high things, tooke this poſie to him; Gaudet patientia duris. Of which words and the blacke lion placed in a ſiluer field being his creſt, one Giles Fletcher (now doctor of law in Cambridge in this yeare one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and ſix) and one that greatlie loued this gentleman, did ſome yeares paſt compoſe theſe fellowing perſuaſiue verſes, as followeth:

Ecce niger veſtræ referens inſignia ſtirpis,
Stat leo candenti conſpiciendus agro:
Admonet vt niuei tibi ſint in pectore mores,
Hic color & fortem te iubet eſſe leo.
Quàm bene conueniunt nigro coniunctà leoni?
Quæ tria ſunt titulis addita verba tuis.
Hæc quoq; te fortem, Gaudet patientia duris,
Hæc quoq; te niueis moribus eſſe iubet.
Ergò ſit vt tituli, ſic vitæ regula, verbo
Sed quod ineſt, factis debet ineſſe tuis.
Vt te nobilitas humilem, ſors ampla modeſtum
Reddat, honor mitem, copia magna pium.
Dura quidem res eſt, Gaudet patientia duris,
Conueniens verbo laus erit iſta tuo.
Si malè quid placeat, quod vis non velle, carere,
Quod cupis, a placidis abſtinuiſse malis.
Dura quidem res eſt, Gaudet patientia duris,
Deterior verbo ne videare, caue.
Si quid diſpliceat, motus lenire feroces,
Pectoris ac iræ fræna tenere tuæ:
Dura quidem res eſt, Gaudet patientia duris,
Hic quoq; ſint verbo conſona facta tuo:
Si mala contingant, tranquilla mente dolorem
Ferre, nec aduerſus ſuccubuiſſe malis.
Dura quidem res eſt, Gaudet patientia duris,
Diſsimilis verbo ne videare, caue.
Hæc bene ſi facias, re, ſanguine, nomine magnus,
Et magno maior Maximilianus eris.

Thus ſetting end to Maximilian the eldeſt ſonne of this lord Cobham, let vs deſcend to the reſt of his children.

Henrie Brooke, being the ſecond ſonne by birth, but now the eldeſt by inheritance, is a gentleman, of whome great hope is conceiued, that his following yeares giuing increaſe to his good parts by nature, and to the like gifts of the languages by education, will not onelie make him a beneficiall member to his commonwealth, but alſo a perſon worthie of ſuch a father, which Henrie was borne at Cobham hall, on wedneſdaie the two and twentith of Nouember, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred ſixtie and foure.

William Brooke the third ſonne, a comelie gentleman, and inclined to follow the court (for which he ſéemeth by the gift of nature to be created) is in like ſort beautified with the knowledge of the languages, and therefore likelie in following time to prooue a glorie to his houſe, as well abroad as at home, being brought into this world on tueſdaie the eleuenth of December, one thouſand fiue hundred ſixtie and fiue.

George Brooke the fourth ſonne, hauing by an accidentall chance in his youth ſome imperfection, in one part of his bodie, being borne on ſaturdaie the laſt of Julie, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred ſixtie nine, is ſo well indowed with the gifts of nature, and ſo furthered therein by the helpe of ſtudie, which he imploied in the vniuerſitie of Cambridge, where he receiued the degrée of maſter of art, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and ſix, that he fullie and more recompenſeth that accidentall imperfection, with naturall and procured beautie of the mind, and therefore with Ouid (a man more wittie than welfauored) may iuſtlie ſaie:

Ingenio formæ damna rependo meæ.

Eliſabeth and Francis Brooke two twins were borne on tueſdaie the fift daie of Ianuarie, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred three ſcore and one, whereof the firſt being a modeſt and vertuous gentlewoman dooth worthilie ſerue hir maieſtie as one of hir priuie chamber; the other being a perſon not degenerat from the honor of hir houſe, was in the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand fiue hundred and eightie in Michaelmas terme married to Iohn lord Sturton at the Blacke friers in London; Margaret the third daughter, a goodly gentlewoman & furniſhed with the good gifts of nature, and her parents education, was at Cobham hall in the yeare of Grace one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and foure married vnto ſir Thomas Sands of Throughlie in the countie of Kent knight. With which ladie I doo for this time knit vp the diſcourſe of the lord Cobhams of Cobham, and will deſcend to the other perſons by collaterall lines iſſued from that houſe.

The Cobhams lords of Randall or Rundall in Kent, in the pariſh of Shorne.

HAuing before performed the deſcents & ſucceſſion of all the lords of Cobham, either by the name of Quatermere Cobham, or Brooke; order requireth (ſith there hath béene thrée lords, as I haue béene informed at one time of the Cobhams, which I for this preſent take to be the lord Cobham of Cobham, the lord Cobham of Randall, and the lord Cobham of Sterborow) that we alſo intreat ſomewhat of the Cobhams lords of Randall, to make this worke perfect, touching all the lord Cobhams in England, For which cauſe meaning firſt in orderlie ſort to ſet downe the lords of Randall, a place not farre from Cobham; I muſt begin the ſame a little higher, and make repetition of ſomewhat ſpoken before to bring foorth this line of the houſe of Randall in this ſort.

John Cobham.

Sir Iohn Cobham knight the ſonne of the firſt Henrie Cobham, hauing two wiues, had by his firſt wife the daughter of one William Fitzbennet two ſonnes, whereof the eldeſt was called Iohn, of whom the lords of Cobham did deſcend (as we haue before touched) and the ſecond was named Henrie Cobham lord of Rundall, of whome we are now to intreat.

Henrie Cobham of Randall.

This Henrie Cobham of Randall knight married Ione, one of the daughters and heires of Stephan Pincheſter warden of the cinque ports, and of Margaret his wife the daughter of Iohn de Burgh, which Stephan was the ſonne of Stephan Pincheſter knight, dieng in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and eightéene, about the ſecond yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, and of Roſe his wife. The name of which Pincheſter I haue béene the more willing to ſet downe, becauſe that theſe Cobhams of Randall (in reſpect of this Iohn daughter and heire of Stephan Pincheſter) did leaue the cote of the Cobhams, and bare the armes of Pincheſter, which is gules a plaine croſſe ſiluer, as yet to be ſéene vpon a monument carued out of ſtone in the church of Shorne in Kent, where this Henrie Cobham was buried with his armor, on whoſe ſhield he beareth thoſe armes of Pincheſter. By which Ione the daughter and heire of Stephan Pincheſter this Henrie had iſſue Iohn Cobham, which died without iſſue; Stephan Cobham of Randall knight; Thomas Cobham which had lands in Hollinborne and Chaford; and Stephan Cobham the yonger which had lands in Dunſtall. Which Henrie liued in the ſeuentéenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being about the yeare of our incarnation one thouſand thrée hundred fortie and thrée, and was buried at Shorne (as is before touched) with this epitaph in French as followeth:

Sire Henry le Cobham leiſne ſeignour de Rondall fuſt appelle giſt ycy, Dieu de ſa ailme ayt mercy.

Stephan de Cobham lord of Randall.

Stephan de Cobham lord of Randall the ſonne of Henrie Cobham married Auiſia, by whome he had iſſue Iohn Cobham of Randall knight; which Stephan died in the life of his father, in the ſeuenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being about the yéere one thouſand thrée hundred thirtie & thrée of the birth of our Sauior.

John de Cobham lord of Randall.

Iohn de Cobham lord of Randall knight, had iſſue Thomas de Cobham of Randall knight, his heire, and Iohn de Cobham of Heuer his ſecond ſonne. Which Iohn Cobham the knight departed this world, in the ſix and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and ſecond yeare from the birth of Chriſt.

Thomas de Cobham lord of Randall.

Thomas de Cobham of Randall knight, the ſonne of Iohn Cobham knight before recited, married Mawd the daughter of one Pimpe knight, who perhaps was lord of the manor of Pimps court in Kent. By which Mawd this Thomas had iſſue Reinold Cobham knight, and William Cobham, of which William I haue gathered this note out of an old euidence: William Cobham of Stapleherſt, in the eight yere of king Henrie the ſixt, gaue to Peter Web of Shorne two acres and a halfe in the pariſh of Shorne, in the field called Smithen, and all his lands vnder weſt Hull, which ſhould deſcend vnto him after the death of the lord Thomas de Cobham aliàs Rundella knight, his father. This Thomas Cobham of Randall knight, died in the ſeuentéenth yere of the reigne of king Richard the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred foure ſcore and thirtéene. But his wife Mawd died about thirtéene yeares before hir husband, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and foure ſcore, in the third yeare of the ſaid king Richard the ſecond, and is buried in Cobham church, with this epitaph, which is there yet to be ſéene:

Icy giſt dame Mawd de Cobham, le femme de ſire
Thomas Cobham, que dellya le 9 iour d' Auerill, en le anne de grace 1380.

Reinold de Cobham lord of Randall.

Reinold Cobham of Randall knight, the ſonne of ſir Thomas Cobham of Randall knight, maried Eliſabeth the daughter of ſir Arnold Sauage knight, who was ſhiriffe of Kent in the ninth yeare of the ſaid king Richard the ſecond, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred foure ſcore and fiue, at what time he had a Dedimus poteſtatem directed vnto him to take a fine of ſir Roger Northwood knight lord of Shorne in Kent. By which Eliſabeth this Reinold Cobham had iſſue Iohn de Cobham, which died without iſſue; Thomas Cobham of Randall eſquire, and Henrie Cobham which died without iſſue.

Thomas Cobham lord of Randall.

Thomas Cobham of Randall eſquire was nine yeares old in the ninth yeare of king Henrie the fourth, which fell about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred and ſeuen, or one thouſand foure hundred & eight. For the ſaid yere of the king did fall in both thoſe yeares of our Lord, accounting the yeare of Chriſt to begin on the fiue and twentith daie of March, after the account of England. Of which Thomas ſith I haue nothing to write either of his mariage or death, I will in this ſort knit vp this diſcourſe of the Cobhams lords of Randall, and deſcend to the lord Cobhams of Sterborow.

The

The deſcents and ſucceſſions of the lord Cobhams, lords and barons of Starburow caſtle in Surrie.

TO come to the full diſcourſe of theſe lord Cobhams of Starburow, who were for honor and antiquitie of great eſtimation; we muſt firſt fetch their originall from Iohn Cobham knight, as we haue alreadie doone the lords of Cobham and Randall: and for that muſt the third time repeat ſome diſcourſe and deſcent of the ſaid Iohn Cobham; who being the ſonne of the firſt Henrie Cobham, to whom Quatermere ſold his lands in Cobham, had two wiues as is before touched: by the firſt whereof he had two ſonnes, of whom the lord Cobhams of Cobham and thoſe Cobhams of Randall did deſcend: and by his ſecond wife called Ione, the daughter of Hugh Nevill, he had iſſue Reinold Cobham knight, lord of Aldington, of whom the Cobhams of Starburow did deſcend, as this following diſcourſe dooth manifeſt.

Reinold Cobham knight lord of Aldington, which liued in the ſixtéenth yere of king Edward the firſt, being about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred foure ſcore & eight, married Ione the daughter and heire of William de Heuer, by whom he had iſſue Reinold lord Cobham of Starburow.

Reinold de Cobham lord of Starburow

Reinold lord Cobham of Starburow, the ſecond of that name and that line, being knight of the garter was lord of Starburow caſtle. All which lord Cobhams of Starburow (as differing from the armes of the houſe of Cobham of Cobham, from which they iſſued) did beare gules a cheuoron gold, charged with thrée ſtarres ſable, onelie changing the ſable lions of the cheuoron of the houſe of Cobham of Cobham into ſable ſtarres; but ſtill kéeping all the reſt of the armes both in colour, field, & cheuoron, as they of Cobham did beare them. Of which ſtars in thoſe armes of theſe Cobhams, the place was called Starburow, or the burow of the ſtars, and they furnamed the lords of Starburow. This Reinold lord Cobham, was with the earle of Derbie and others, hauing fiue hundred men ſent in the thirtéenth yere of king Edward the third, being the yere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred thirtie and nine, into Flanders, where they ſubdued the Flemings, whereof the moſt part were deſirous to fall to league with the king of England againſt the mind of their erle, which tooke part with the French king. After which, the king going into Flanders, feining that he would in the fourtéenth yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred and fortie, ride about that countrie for his pleaſure, he ſecretlie came into Zeland, where taking ſhip, and ſailing thrée daies and thrée nights, on S. Andrews daie at night about cocke-crowing, entred the Tower of London by night, being attended on (amongſt other noble men) with this lord Cobham, who (continuing ſtill in his princes fauour, a thing rarelie happening, but that his worthineſſe alwaies merited fauour) was in the ſixtéenth of Edward the third, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred fortie & two, appointed with others, during the wars in Britaine, to be a cōmiſſioner for the king of England, to conclude a peace by mediation of two cardinals, ſetting their ſeales to the ſame agréement, in the preſence of the lord Cobham. About two yeares following, this Reinold was made admerall of the ſea, from the mouth of the Thames toward the weſt parts, ſo long as it pleaſed the king, as appeareth by the patent dated the eight of Maie, in the eightéenth yere of Edward the third, falling in the yeare from the birth of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred fortie and foure. Then in the twentith yeare of the ſaid king, falling in the yere of our Lord one thoſand thrée hundred fortie and ſix, he paſſed with the king into Normandie, continuing with him in all thoſe warres of France, and was by ſpeciall appointment of the king beſtowed in the fore-ward of the armie, in which the prince of Wales was at the battell of Creſſeie, as one of the chéefe perſons for value, to whom Edward the third would commit the life of his ſonne the prince of Wales. The next yere following, being the one and twentith of Edward the third, and of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred fortie and ſeuen, he was amongſt others appointed for the Engliſh part to treat with two cardinals about a peace betwéene France and England, and was in the ſame yere by patent admitted into the honor of a baron, with a further gift of the manor of Weſtcliue to him and to the heires of his bodie begotten. Beſides which, in the ſame yeare, this Reinold, with Thomas lord Berkeleie, and Morice Berkeleie, became manucaptors for Thomas Fitzmoris earle of Deſmond, that he ſhould come into England, and abide ſuch order as the law would award for ſuch miſdemenors as he had vſed againſt the king. Afterward this lord Cobham tooke the towne and caſtle of Sacret or Satart: from whenſe he returned towards Languedocke, and was ſent againe in another voiage againſt the Frenchmen. And in the nine and twentith of Edward the third, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred fiftie and fiue, when the prince of Wales, commonlie ſurnamed the Blacke prince, diuided his armie two miles from the towne of Areull, this Reinold with others were in the vaward, at what time it ſéemeth that he was marſhall of the armie. And in the thirtith yere of Edward the third, in the yere of our ſaluation one thouſand thrée hundred fiftie and ſix, he was valiantlie fighting in that famous battell of Poiters, in which the Blacke prince tooke the French king priſoner. But yet not ceaſing his warlike exploits, he alſo in the thrée and thirtith of the king, being the yere of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and nine, went out of England againe with king Edward the third, and beſieged the citie of Rhemes. Not long after which, in the thirtie and fift yere of this king, falling in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and one, he departed this life, and was buried at Linfield in Surrie: at whoſe féet on his toome lieth emboſſed in ſtone a Saracen in a red robe, ſignifieng that he had obteined victories amongſt and againſt them. He married two wiues, whereof the firſt was Ione the daughter of ſir Morice Berkeleie knight, by whome he had iſſue Reinold Cobham knight, baron of Starburow. His other wife was Eliſabeth the daughter of Hugh erle of Stafford, the widow of Iohn de Ferrers of Chartleie knight, by whom he had no iſſue.

Reinold lord Cobham of Starburow.

Reinold Cobham knight the third of this line and name, and the ſecond baron of Starburow, was in the eight and fortith yere of king Edward the third, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and fouretéene, with Iohn duke of Lancaſter, William earle of Saliſburie, Simon Sudberie and others ſent into Flanders to Bruges to intreat a peace betwéene England and France, which parlée continued almoſt two yeres, and ended without concluſion of peace, but onlie with a truce for a certeine time. After which, in the one and fiftith and laſt yere of the ſame king, being about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and ſixtéene, he was the ſecond time (with the biſhop of Hereford and maior of London) ſent to Bruges, to treat of the like peace with the French, but was ſhortlie after called home by the death of the ſaid Edward the third. When this king was dead, and that his nephue (by his ſonne the Blacke prince) called Richard the ſecond, being within age, came to the crowne; this Reinold Cobham amongſt others was in the eleuenth yeare of the ſame Richard the ſecond, in the yeare that God became man one thouſand thrée hundred foure ſcore and ſeuen, appointed to haue the gouernment of the realme, as maie appeare in my former diſcourſe of the protectors of England, and to be one of the kings gouernors. For which office and for nothing elſe he was after in the parlement holden at Shrewſburie, in the two and twentith yeare of the reigne of this Richard, being in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred foure ſcore and eightéene condemned: who departing the realme therefore, did returne out of Britaine into England with Henrie of Bullingbroke, then duke of Hereford (and after king by the name of Henrie the fourth) in the thrée & twentith and laſt yere of this depoſed king Richard, in the yere of our ſaluation one thouſand thrée hundred foure ſcore & ninetéene. After which he liued about foure yeares, and ended his life in the fourth of the reigne of the ſaid king Henrie the fourth, falling about the yere of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred and thrée, being buried in Linfield church in Surrie with this epitaph, declaring his martiall and ciuill qualities:

De Starborough dominus, de Cobham hic Reginaldus,
Hic iacet, hic validus miles fuit vt leopardus:
Sagax in guerris, ſatis audax omnibus horis,
In cunctis terris famam prælauit honoris.
Dapſilis in menſis, formoſus, morigeroſus,
Largus in expenſis, imperterritus, generoſus:
Et quando placuit Meſchiæ, quòd moriretur,
Ac ſpirans obijt in cœlis glorificetur:
Mille quadringeno, trino, Iulij numeres tres,
Migrauit cœlo, ſit ſibi vera quies.

He maried Elenor the daughter of John lord Matrauers, & the widow of ſir John Arundell knight, by whome he had iſſue, Reinold lord Cobham of Starburow.

nold lord bham of rburow.

Reinold de Cobham knight, the fourth of that name and time, and the third baron of Starburow, had two wiues: the firſt was Elenor the daughter of ſir Thomas Culpepper knight, by whome he had iſſue, Reinold lord Cobham of Starburow, Thomas Cobham knight, Elenor maried to Humfreie duke of Gloceſter, Eliſabeth maried to Richard lord Strange of Knocking, Anne a nun at Barking, and Margaret maried to Reinold Curteous. Which Elenor firſt wife to this Reinold now lord Cobham, died in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and twentie, being the eight yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the fift, and was buried at Linſted with this epitaph here preſentlie following:

¶ Hic iacet domina Eleonora quondam vxor Reginaldi Cobham militis, filia Thomæ Culpeper militis, quæ obijt anno Domini 1420.

The ſecond wife of this Reinold the fourth of that name was Anne, one of the daughters and heires of Thomas lord Bardolph, by whome he had no iſſue. Now héere I thinke it not vnméet in this place, to ſaie ſomewhat of the ſaid Elenor Cobham, the daughter of this Reinold lord Cobham before touched. Which woman being maried to Humfreie duke of Gloceſter, in the fourth yéere of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt, much about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred twentie and ſeuen, did by night on tueſdaie the 19 daie of Julie, in the 19 yeare of the ſaid Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare that the word of the father tooke fleſh in the wombe of the mother, one thouſand foure hundred fortie and one, flie vnto ſanctuarie, vpon the apprehending of Henrie Bullingbroke a prieſt the ſundaie before, for vſing coniuration to conſume the kings perſon. Which flight cauſed hir to be ſuſpected of treaſon, & that the rather, becauſe this Bullingbroke confeſſed he did this, by the procurement of the ſaid Elenor: who was indicted as acceſſarie thereunto. After which, on the twentith daie of October, being in the twentith yeare of that Henrie, falling in the ſaid yeare one thouſand foure hundred fortie and one, from Chriſts birth, ſhe appeared before Robert Gilbert biſhop of London, William Alnewike biſhop of Lincolne, and Thomas Browns biſhop of Norwich. Where Adam Molins clearke of the kings councell read certeine articles obiected againſt hir, of ſorcerie and witchcraft: whereof ſhe confeſſed part, and denied others. But after, on the thrée and twentith of October, ſhe was conuicted of thoſe articles, and receiued penance therefore, which ſhe performed. The maner whereof is ſet downe by Iohn Stow, and ſhall be more liberallie touched by me in my larger diſcourſe of the lord Cobhams, hereafter to be ſet forth. And thus this much of that Reinold the fourth, and his children.

Reinold lord Cobham of Starburow.

Reinold the fift of that name and line, was the fourth & laſt baron of Starburow of that houſe, being called Reinold the yoonger in the life of his father. This Reinold the fift, I take to be that man, whome the duke of Bedford (brother to Humfreie duke of Gloceſter that maried Elenor, ſiſter to this Reinold the fift) did amongſt others make knight in the fourth yeare of Henrie the ſixt, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred twentie and ſix. He maried Thomaſin the daughter of John Cherocke knight, by whome he had iſſue one daughter and heire called Margaret, maried to Rafe Neuill the ſecond of that name earle of Weſtmerland; who hauing by hir one onelie daughter, which died in hir cradle, the lands of the lord Cobham of Starburow, came to ſir Thomas Cobham knight, brother and heire to this Reinold.

Thomas Cobham lord of Starburow.

Thomas de Cobham knight, the ſonne of Reinold the fourth, and heire to his brother Reinold the fift, maried Anne the daughter of Humfreie Stafford duke of Buckingham, by whome he had one onelie daughter and heire called Anne, maried firſt to the lord de Monte Jouis aliàs Monte Jocoſo, in Engliſh Mont Jews or Mont ioies: and after to ſir Edward Burgh of Lincolneſhire knight, baron of Burgh. Who at this daie inioieng that name & baronie of Burgh, dooth kéepe the remembrance of their deſcents from theſe lords Cobhams of Starburow, the caſtle whereof being at this daie in their poſſeſſion. This Thomas Cobham is he, whereof I haue read, that there was one Thomas Cobham knight, whoſe daughter and heire was called Anne, that died in the eleuenth yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred ſeuentie and one. Of which name Cobham I alſo read manie more notes and epitaphs: but by reaſon I can not yet well tell, in which of the collaterall lines of this houſe (whereof there are manie) to beſtow them, I will refer them to my next addition; not doubting but longer time will bréed more certeine knowledge where to place them whereby truth maie be brought to light, ſith Veritas eſt temporis filia.

Thus hauing finiſhed all my corſe diſcourſe of theſe lords Cobhams, it is high time for vs now to deſcend to the lord wardens of the fiue ports: which office the honorable baron ſir William Brooke knight, lord Cobham of Cobham now liuing, dooth to his countries good, and his great honor, worthilie inioy, as ſome of his anceſtors haue doone before.

The catalog of the lord wardens of the cinque ports, and conſtables of Douer caſtle, as well in the time of king Edward, ſurnamed the Con*feſſor, as ſince the reigne of the Conqueror, collected by* Francis Thin, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fourescore and ſix.

IT hath bin ſome queſtion, whether this officer of warden of the ports were in the Romane and Saxons times, which truelie I am reſolued was then vſed; and the officer rightlie to be called Limenarcha, the chiefe (as it were) of the borders of ſeacoaſts, and the gouernor Saxonici litoris; which was of that ſhore which belonged to England in Kent, on which the rouing pirats of the Saxons lieng vpon the ſea were woont to alland, and then to ſpoile the countrie. For the more explanation whereof, I referre thée to that learned worke of maiſter Camden, touching the antiquities of Britaine, and will onlie bend my pen to ſuch principall officers of thoſe places as fall within my knowledge; as followeth.

Earle Goodwine.

Goodwine earle of Kent was coneſtable of Douer caſtell, maiſter of the ports and thoſe parts of the ſea coaſtes, and had the towne of Douer in his kéeping, in the time of king Edward the confeſſor: who in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand and ninetéene, being the third yeare, or as other haue, the ſecond yeare of Canutus king of England, had the gouernment of the Engliſh armie into Denmarke, when Canutus went to ſubdue the Vandals: at what time Canutus by the helpe of Goodwine obteined the victorie. After which, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thirtie and eight, as ſome haue (but in the yeare one thouſand thirtie and ſix, as others haue) in which yeare Canutus died, this Goodwine, in recompenſe of the honor which he receiued by Canutus, labored to aduance Hardiknute the ſonne of the ſame Canutus, to the kingdome of England; but he preuailed not: for Harold Harefoot was then made king.

Goodwine thus ſtill remaining in credit, found meanes to haue Alured the ſonne of Egelred heire to the crowne to be ſlaine, leaſt he ſhould purſue his title to the kingdome. Of which thus ſpeaketh the priuat hiſtorie of Elie in the ſecond booke: Alſredus (Alfred or Alured) miſsioni Goodwini ſtrictiſsimè vinctus, ducitur ad Ely, ſed vt ad terram nauis applicuit, eius oculi ſunt eruti, & ſic ad monaſterium ductus traditur ad cuſtodiendum; vbi breui poſt obijt, & in auſtrali porticu in occidentali parte eccleſiæ ſepultus: nunc autem (which was about the latter end of the time of king Henrie the ſecond) oſſa ipſius iuxta altare ſanctorum Eadmundi regis & martyris, & Thomæ Cantuarienſis epiſcopi tumulata ſunt. Which hiſtorie diſprooueth all ſuch writers as affirme, that this Alfred was ſlaine, and that he was killed by Goodwine about Guildenford, of ſome called Gilford. This doone in the time of king Hardiknute, he with quéene Emma had the gouernment of the realme.

But yet in the time of the ſaid Hardiknute, as ſome chronicles affirme, he was feine to purge himſelfe of the death of Alured: which he did by oth, and by giuing to the king a rich preſent; being a ſhip, conteining therein fourescore ſouldiors, wearing vpon each of their armes two bracelets of gold of ſixtéene ounces weight, a triple habergeon guilt on their bodies, and a ſword with gilt hilts girded to their waſts, a battle ax after the maner of the Danes on their left ſhoulder, a target with boſſe & mailes gilt: and to conclude, they were furniſhed at all parts with armor and weapon accordinglie. But touching the purgation of Goodwine, and the gift of this ſhip, I muſt ſpeake my fanſie; not as though I would be Honorarius arbiter, or a ſeuere controllor of other men: but as one that deſireth that truth maie appeare, which hath béene manie waies obſcured by writers of chronicles. And for that cauſe I ſaie, that this purgation of Goodwine, and this gift, ſhould be referred to the following time of king Edward the confeſſor; as is well prooued by an ancient booke dedicated to quéene Edith, wife of Edward the Confeſſor, and the daughter of this earle Goodwine. Which booke was of purpoſe made, to ſet forth the praiſe, vertues, learnings, and languages of the ſaid Edith (amongſt which languages, ſhe is commended, for that ſhe vnderſtood and ſpake the Iriſh toong) and to further the renowme and glorie of this erle Goodwine, as after by the verſes prouing the ſame, ſhall more plainelie appeare. And yet I know, it is not vnpoſſible but that he might giue two ſhips in both thoſe kings times: which if he had doone, I doubt not but this booke would aſwell haue ſpoken of the one, as of the other; being ſpeciallie written to ſet out his glorie.

This earle Goodwine, hauing with much diligence aduanced Edward the Confeſſor through his power and ſtrength in the realme to the crowne of England, did after purge himſelfe of the death of Alfred brother to this king Edward, and preſented a woorthie gift (vnto the ſaid king Edward, at his entrance into the gouernement) a ſhip of rare deuiſe and riches, as theſe verſes taken out of the before mentioned booke doo well and ſoundlie prooue:

Laudibus exortis hinc gratis concinit orbis,
Et reſonet mecum tua muſica gaudia rerum,
Quæ lux de cœlo rutilans, in rege nouello,
Anglis illuxit, gemebundáq; corda reſoluit,
Has quoq; conuiuias, qua lætitia celebrarunt,
Feſtum proceres, certatim dona ferentes,
Agnouere ſuum regem magnúmq; patronum.
Multa dedere quidem, verùm ſupereminet omnes
Larga ducis probitas Goodwini, munere tali,
Scapha grauis longo laterum compage redacto,
*Verticibus binis, * finibus ſtabat Thamaſinis,*
Sedibus æquato numeroſis ordine lato,
A medio naui deſpecto vertice mali,
Centum bis denis aptata minacibus heris,
Aureus è puppi leo prominet æquora proræ,
Celſè pennato perterret tempore draco,
Aureus & linguis flamma vorat ore triſulcis,
Nobilis appenſum preciatur purpura velum,
Quod patrum ſeries depicta docet varias res,
Belláq; nobilium turbata per æquora regum,
Internè grauidus ſtipes robúrq; volatus,
Suſtinet extenſis auro rutilantibus alis,
 Armigerum volucrem, pedibus, roſtróq; ferentē,*
Et ſimilem viuo, viſu gemmis ſimulato,
Singula bis denis argenti tranſtra talentis,
Bis binis rutili, cumulat dux inclytus auri,
Cuiq; viro galeam loricam pone trilicem,
Lancea cum gladio, nec abeſt his Gallicus vmbo,
Danica cum capitis ſculpti formata ſecuris,
Sæpius ex cocto chalybum fornace metallum,
Pluribus his opibus pollebat regia ſedes,
Argenti montes meri rutilantes & auri,
Gazas inſignes cum pallia plura videres,
Ornatúſq; graues, quo mittit Barbara tellus,
Orbis & extremi varijs textricibus Indi,
Tum decus armorum iungit nunc inferiorum,
Quanquam Vulcani referuntur in arte parari,
Regi Troiano nullo cedentia telo,
Cætera præcipuè ſunt inſtrumenta carinæ,
Quæ ſtupeat pontus nimiùm mirantibus vndis,

* The banks of the riuer of Thames.

* An Eagle.

Reſpiciens ſolem tota de claſſe lucentem,
Hanc in ſede noua ſolij regniq; corona,
Regnante tribuit, recipi & gratam fore poſcit,
Sæpiùs augeri ſpondens hæc velle libenti,
Vnde manus præſtat fidei ſacramenta pararat,
Eduardúmq; ſibi regem dominúmq; fideli,
Seruandum voto conteſtans, & ſamulatu,
Principibus reliquis ſit in exemplum probitatis,
Iſtud idem cunctis imitantibus Anglicus orbis,
Gaudet in Eduardo feſtiuus rege decoro,
Pax antiqua ſuos rediens ſic viſitat Anglos,
Aufugiunt rixæ, diſcedunt bella, furórq;
Omnis frigeſcit, tellus pontúſq; quieſcit,
Ac paſſim lætis celebrantur feſta choreis.

After which this erle Goodwine hauing the towne and caſtle of Douer in his charge, did (vpon the complaint of Euſtace earle of Bullogne, which maried Goda the ſiſter to king Edward, and alanded at Douer, to the intent that he would viſit the king, at which place eighteene of the men of Euſtace were ſlaine for one man of Douer ſlaine by the men of Euſtace, vpon a contention betweene the townesmen and them) take armes againſt the king, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiftie and one. Wherevpon he was baniſhed, but neuer after ceaſſed to moleſt the king, vntill that he was reſtored home vnto his honors and liuings, and had his peace made with the king the ſecond yeare of his baniſhment, being about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiftie and two, and the ninth yeare of king Edward the Confeſſor. Of the maner of the death of which Goodwine there be diuers reports ſet downe, which I meane not here to touch, but onelie to laie before you that he died in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiftie and three, or (as others haue) one thouſand fiftie and foure, and was honorablie buried at Wincheſter. He maried two wiues, the firſt was Thira borne in Flanders, by whom he had one ſonne, Quem equus impotenter agitatus deiecit in Thamiſin. His ſecond wife was Githa the ſiſter of Sweine the king of Denmarke, Quæ fulmine icta interijt, ſæuitiæ pœnas ſoluẽs, quòd dicebatur agmina mancipiorum in Anglia coempta Danemarchiam ſolere mittere. By which woman this Goodwine had iſſue, Harold after king, Sweine, Toſtie, Wolnothus, Gurth, Leofwine, and Edith maried to Edward the Confeſſor.

Harold.

Harold the ſonne of Goodwine being earle of Kent, after the death of his father, was alſo conſtable of Douer caſtle about one yeare in the time of Edward the confeſſor. After which, this Harold put on the crowne of England immediatlie vpon the death of the ſaid king Edward, but was within three quarters of a yeare thereof ſlaine by the Norman baſtard, in the firſt and laſt yeare of the reigne of the ſaid Harold. He maried Agatha, by whom he had a ſonne, by ſome named Vlfus, but by Dudo de ſancto Quintino, which liued aboue fiue hundred yeares paſt, it ſeemeth that he had two ſonnes. For thus writeth the ſaid author: Porrò duo filij Heraldi regis ſe ab eorum contubernio ſubducentes, cum multis vernaculis patris, Hiberniæ regem nomine Dermutum pro obtinendo iuuamine ſunt aggreſſi. De cuius regno ipſo ſuffragante, parua temporis intercapedine non minimam militũ ſibi contrahentes manum cum 66. nauibus (qua in regione maximè oportunum exiſtimauerunt) Anglos otiùs repetierunt, rapinis & incendijs, more ſæuiſſimorum piratarum, exterminantes populum. Quibus Brientius Eudonis ducis Britanniæ minoris filius, cum ſuis obuius, protinus cum eis die vna duobus prælijs manum conſeruit, cæſiſq; mille & 700. bellatoribus cum nonnullis regni proceribus, reliqui è certamine fugientes nauiũ præſidio, necis exitium vtcúnq; euaſerunt, ex carorum amiſſione permaximum Hibernenſibus importantes luctum, qui profectò niſi nox prælium diremiſſet, omnes mortis nouacula abraſi fuiſſent. Thus much Dudo. The which I haue beene the willinger to ſet downe, becauſe that it not onelie prooueth Harold to haue had two ſonnes, but alſo vnfoldeth a doubt which hath beene amongſt our antiquaries, whoſe ſonne that perſon, which is called commonlie amongſt vs Brientius filius comitis ſhould be; for by theſe words of this author, I find him to be the ſonne of Eudo earle of Britaine.

The names of the two ſonnes of Harold, were Godwine and Edmund, as appeareth by one anonymall chronicle in theſe words: Godwinus & Edmundus filij regis Heroldi de Hibernia redeuntes in Sumnerſet applicuerunt, quibus Adnathmis olim regis Heraldi ſtallarius occurrit cũ exercitu, &c.

Bertram Aſburneham.

Bertram Aſburneham a baron of Kent was conſtable of Douer caſtle in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand threeſcore and ſix, being (as is ſaid) the firſt and laſt yeare of king Harold; which Bertram was beheaded by William the Conqueror, after that he had obteined the crowne, becauſe he did ſo valiantlie defend the ſame againſt the duke of Normandie. But of this man I am not yet fullie reſolued whether he were conſtable of Douer caſtle or no; or whether there were anie ſuch man before in that credit, at or before the conqueſt.

Odo.

Odo biſhop of Baieux and earle of Kent, wherevnto he was aduanced by the Conqueror, had alſo the towne and caſtle of Douer in his charge, at what time Hugh Montfort was conſtable thereof, who reſiſted and repelled Euſtace earle of Bullogne beſieging the ſame caſtle. After which, this biſhop falling into the kings diſgrace, the caſtle of Douer was committed to John lord Fines, and he by the Conqueror made the firſt warden of the cinque ports, and conſtable of Douer caſtle.

John Fines.

John Fines lord Fines created warden of the cinque ports, and conſtable of Douer by William Conqueror, with a gift of inheritance to keepe that place to him and to his heires; to whom alſo the Conqueror did giue (to the end that the ſaid Fines ſhould be of ſufficient abilitie to beare the charge thereof) the number of fiftie and ſix knights fees, of lands and poſſeſſions: which being valued at fiue pounds the knights fee, as is by ſtatute limited, amounted to the yearelie value of two hundred and fourescore pounds; the ounce of ſiluer being then at twentie pence, which at this time riſeth to the ſumme of eight hundred and fortie pounds by yeare, after the rate of fiue ſhillings the ounce of ſiluer: which ſix and fiftie knights fees he had vpon condition, that he ſhould diſperſe the ſame to ſuch valiant perſons as worthilie ſerued in ſo noble and pretious a caſtle. Wherevpon he diſtributed the ſame to eight perſons to be his aſſiſtants, and to mainteine one hundred and twelue ſouldiors, the names of which eight with the other matter therevnto belonging, is more liberallie ſet downe by that carefull and learned antiquarie William Lambard eſquire (my Synchronus) in his perambulation of Kent vnder the title of Douer, pag. 124. and 125.

James Fines.

James lord Fines, the ſonne of John before named, was after the death of his father (by force of the inheritance thereof granted to his father) warden of the cinque ports, & conſtable of Douer caſtle, who died (as is by ſome ſuppoſed) at Folkeſtone in Kent.

John Fines.

John lord Fines ſonne of the ſaid James Fines was alſo by inheritance warden of the cinque ports, and conſtable of Douer caſtle.

Walchilinus.

Walchilinus de Mannot, called alſo by Robertus Montenſis Wachelmus de Douer, is in other authors named Walkelme or Walkeline, and was conſtable of Douer caſtell in the third yeere of king Stephan, as witneſſeth the ſaid Robertus Montenſis, who being in the ſaid caſtle (as a freend to Maud the empreſſe as I coniecture) did yet in the ſaid third yeare of king Stephan, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred thirtie & eight, deliuer the caſtell of Douer to the queene the wife of king Stephan, when ſhe beſieged the ſame caſtell. For which cauſe after the death of king Stephan, and the the comming in of Henrie the ſecond, he abandoned his charge, and fled into Normandie. By the comming of which Walkelme to the conſtableſhip of Douer caſtell, there was a diſſeizine of the inheritance thereof belonging to Fines. Now, after the ſurrender of this caſtell by Walkelme, there be ſome antiquaries which affirme that William earle of the Egle, and alſo earle Warren (in the right of his wife) being the baſe ſonne of king Stephan, was in the life of his father conſtable of Douer caſtell, grounding themſelues vpon a compoſition made in the ſeuentéenth yeare of the ſaid Stephan; being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred fiftie and two, betwéene king Stephan and Henrie Fitzempreſſe duke of Normandie, contending with Stephan for the crowne of England. Which opinion they defend with theſe words of the agréement, wherein it was granted to this William (amongſt other things) that he ſhould haue the ſeruices of Faremouth beſides the caſtell and towne of Douer, and whatſoeuer apperteined to the honor of Douer. In which (ſaie they) ſith the honor of Douer is depending vpon the prerogatiue of the caſtell, and that without the caſtell there is no honor, ſith all the tenures, and all the ſeruices which belong to that honour, doo belong to the caſtell, he could not haue the one without the other. For hauing whatſoeuer belonged to the honor which is the caſtell, he could not receiue the benefit of that, without he had the thing alſo which was the cauſe of that tenure, and by force of which he might receiue thoſe appurtenances.

But trulie ſauing correction, it is often ſéene, that ſeruice may be ſeuered from land to which it is due, and one to haue the demeſne and an other the ſeruices of manour. But ſith I am neither good logician nor lawier to diſſolue arguments, or to diſproue tenures, I will at this time leaue it indifferent for euerie one to receiue or reiect him for conſtable of Douer caſtell, vntill I find more ſubſtantiall proofe by charter to prefer him therevnto, than ſuch an argument to infer it therevpon; eſpeciallie ſith I find him not ſo named by anie authoritie that I haue ſéene, whereof manie make mention of his other titles of honor, as that he had the citie of Norwich with the third penie of the earledome of Northfolke, that he was earle Warren, and that he was earle of Bullongne and Morton.

Richard earle of Ewe.

Richard earle of Ewe. I haue read of this man this note, that he was both conſtable of Douer caſtell, warden of the cinque ports, and gouernour of Kent; but how true it is I will not at this time ſet downe, but leaue it to the iudgement of others, who can iudge better of that note deliuered to me in theſe words. Officium conſtabularij iuxta patris ſui donationem perdurauit à Fineo ad Fineum vſque ad tempora regis Stephani; & poſtea Richardus comes de Oye conſtabularius inſtitutus eſt ac cuſtos quinque portuum & præfectus totius Cantiæ, ac fundator collegij de Haſtings in caſtro de Haſtings, &c.

Euſtace.

Euſtace earle of Bullongne, and duke of Normandie, ſonne to king Stephan, is by ſome ſuppoſed to be conſtable of Douer caſtell, and lord warden of the cinque ports. Which perhaps may be true, although that at the ſame time William de Ypre was earle of Kent, whome ſome haue in reſpect thereof made to be conſtable of Douer caſtell: notwithſtanding others ſaie that he was onelie deputie conſtable of Douer caſtell to the ſaid Euſtace, or (as we terme it) his lieutenant.

Allen Fines.

Allen Fines, after the death of king Stephan, was by the benefit of king Henrie the ſecond reſtored vnto the wardenſhip of the ports, and conſtableſhip of the caſtell of Douer. And héere I thinke it good to note that king Henrie (the ſonne of king Henrie the ſecond) being crowned in the life of his father, did in the yeare one thouſand one hundred ſeauentie and foure, being about the ninetéenth or twentith yeare of the reigne of his father, giue vnto Philip earle of Flanders one thouſand pounds of yearelie reuenues, the countie and earledome of Kent, with the caſtels of Douer and Rocheſter: for the which the ſaid Philip ſhould doo homage to the yoong Henrie, and mainteine his quarrell againſt his father. But the erle was neuer in poſſeſſion thereof, neither made anie conſtable of Douer caſtell, or was himſelfe conſtable of that place; which gift of the ſaid yoong king Henrie Geruaſius Dorobernenſis ſetteth downe in this ſort.

Comes Flandriæ Philippus ſuum pro poſſe ſpopondit auxilium iuueni regi (againſt his father king Henrie the ſecond, being then in Normandie) faciens homagium cum iuramento, cui pro ſeruitio ſuo promiſit rex cum tota Cantia 1000 librarum reddituum, caſtellum quoque de Roſſa cum caſtello de Doueria. Matthæus comes Boloniæ frater comitis Flandriæ ſuſcepit in promiſsis pro homagio & ſeruitio ſuo totam ſocam de Kirketonia in Lindeſia, cum comitatu de Moritonia, &c. And héere mentioning Allen Fines, and hauing no cauſe to ſpeake of theſe Fines hereafter, I am to admoniſh the reader, that (although my iudgement be but of one man, and that one ſwallow maketh not ſummer) I doo not ſuppoſe anie thing ſpoken of the Fines conſtables of Douer caſtell to be ſo firme, as that I would bind anie man to beléeue more thereof than he liſteth.

Hugh de Eſſex.

Hugh de Eſſex, afterward earle of Eſſex, was made conſtable of Douer caſtell, at that time when the ſonnes of Henrie the ſecond (as is mentioned before by Geruaſius, which fell about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred ſeuentie and thrée, and the nintéenth of king Henrie the ſecond) rebelled againſt their father not onelie in Normandie but in England alſo: this Hugh being further conſtable of Douer caſtell, when the ſame king ſailed ouer into Ireland, for to receiue the kingdome thereof, which happened in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred ſeauentie and two, the yeare before the rebellion of yoong king Henrie the ſonne againſt his father. At what time yet the right of the inheritance of this office of wardenſhip continued ſtill in the heires of the Fines; by reaſon whereof Adam Fines, then baron, ought to haue continued conſtable thereof. But bicauſe he was hated of the king and the nobilitie, they appointed an other conſtable, which was this Hugh of Eſſex, a perſon in great fauour with the king, and poſſeſſed that office a great time of the gouernement of the ſame king. But of this man I haue no great opinion that he was conſtable of Douer, or earle of Eſſex, yet may I not tie other men to my conceit, bicauſe Barnardus non vidit omnia.

Matthew Cléere.

Matthew Cléere was conſtable or capteine of Douer caſtell, as appeareth by manie authorities, being alſo by writers called ſhiriffe of Kent; who vpon the commandement of William Longchampe biſhop of Elie, legat A latere. protector, chéefe iuſtice and chancellor of England, did (about the third yeare of king Richard the firſt, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred ninetie and one) impriſon in Douer caſtell Godfreie biſhop of Yorke (the baſe ſonne of king Henrie the ſecond) returning from Rome. At which time alſo (as I haue ſéene noted out of the regiſter of the houſe of Canturburie) there were thrée conſtables of Douer caſtell, as is proued by this deed found in the ſaid regiſter.

Gulibelmus comes de Albemerle, & Simon de Auernen. & Matthæus de Clere conſtabularij Doueriæ, & Gulibelmus de Aubuill, & Henricus de Lōgo campo præfecti Cantiæ. Omnibus præſentibus & futuris, ad quos præſentes litteræ peruenerint, ſalutem. Sciatis quòd dominus noſter Richardus rex Angliæ in redditu ſuo a Ieroſolomytana apud Alemaniā detentus eſſet, & inimici eius contra eum & regnum ſuum inſurgerent. Prior & conuentus Cantuar. licèt ab omni conſuetudine regni & exactione ſæculari, liberi & immunes eſſe dinoſcerentur: de mera tamen voluntate ſua non coacti, homines ſuos, ad opus domini regis per octo dies commodauerunt. Vnde ne quis in poſterum ab eis hoc præſumat, quaſi debitum vel conſuetum petere, quod pro tam grati regni neceſſitate ſponte ſtuduerunt impendere, litteras iſtius cū ſigillorum noſtrorum appoſitione in teſtimonium libertatum & immunitatum ſuorum tradidimus, &c.

William of Wrotham.

William of Wrotham, whome ſome call William of Wrothing, was warden of the cinque ports, & conſtable of the caſtell of Douer, in the time of king Iohn, vnto whome he did faithfullie ſtand in all his warres and troubles, after that the king was excommunicated.

Hubert de Burow.

Hubert de Burow after earle of Kent, and cheefe iuſtice of England, was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the time of king Iohn. This man in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and ſeauenteene, as ſome haue, or rather one thouſand two hundred and ſixteene, as other haue, valiantlie defended Douer caſtell. For when Lewis the ſonne of Philip the French king had ſtronglie aſſaulted the caſtell (the monuments and mounts wherof are at this daie yet to be ſeene, wherof one ſtanding on the weſt ſide of the caſtell is at this daie called Lewis ſiege) this Hubert did with no leſſe honor and valor repell the enimie and defend the caſtell, than Lewis did beſiege it egerlie, for which he deſerued ſuch fauor and recompenſe, as after the death of king Iohn he was made protector of England in the minoritie of king Henrie the third. During whoſe conſtableſhip of Douer caſtell, in the yere of our redemption one thouſand two hundred ſixtie and three, or one thouſand two hundred ſixtie and two as ſome write, being about the ſix and fortith or ſeuen and fortith of king Henrie the third, he found meanes that the caſtell gard there, which had continued from the time of William Conqueror, vntill then, was with the aſſent of king Henrie the third conuerted into a paiment of monie, the land being charged with ten ſhillings for euerie warder, which it was bound to find: and the owners thereby diſcharged of their perſonall ſeruice and attendance for euer. At which time alſo he cauſed the ſame king to releaſe by his free charter the cuſtome of forage due to this caſtell, and that doone, himſelfe inſtituted new lawes amongſt the watchmen & increaſed the number of the warders. Which his dooing of changing caſtell gard, cannot vnder correction be attributed to him in the yeare one thouſand two hundred ſixtie and three, bicauſe he was dead twentie yeares before that. For he died in the yere of grace one thouſand two hundred fortie and three, being the ſeauen and twentith of king Henrie the third, as appeareth in my diſcourſe of the protectors of England, in Edward the ſixt, where is more mention made of him. This Hubert as maiſter Lambard noteth, was depoſed from his conſtableſhip of Douer caſtell, which was at ſuch time I gather as Matthew Paris mentioneth, that he fell into the kings diſpleaſure, whereby he loſt alſo the office of cheefe iuſtice of England, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred thirtie and two, and the ſixteenth yeare of king Henrie the third: after which manie things were laid againſt him, the whole diſcourſe whereof is in Matthew Paris, after this order.

Firſt the king did inſtantlie require of him account of his treaſure, paid at the excheker, and of the debts due vnto him in his owne and in his fathers time. Beſides which, he demanded account of all his lordſhips wherof he was in poſſeſſion from the death of William earle of Penbroke, then the kings marſhall and iuſtice, as well of all ſuch as he held in England, as of ſuch as he had in Wales, Ireland, and Poitiers. Thirdlie, of his liberties which he then had in forreſts, warrens, counties, and in other places, how they were kept, or how they were ſold. Fourthlie, of the fifteenths and ſixteenths granted to the king, and of other rents paid at the excheker, and at the new Temple, and otherwiſe. Fiftlie, of priſes made for releaſing of law, as well in lands as in mooueables. Theſe and manie other articles, whereof part concerned treaſon, were ſet downe againſt Hubert of Burow, the tenure wherof doo fullie appeare in Matthew Paris. Vpon the exhibiting of which articles he had daie giuen him to appeare & anſwer them. But he fearing the kings diſpleaſure, hauing a guiltie conſcience, fled to ſanctuarie into the college of Meriton or Merton, where he hid himſelfe amongſt the canons: but after by the means of Lucas the archbiſhop of Dublin he obteined ſome libertie.

Wherevpon he went vnto ſaint Edmundſburie, where his wife was, who paſſing through Eſſex, lodged in the biſhop of Norwich his houſe; at what time the ſame being knowen to the king, greeued thereat, he ſent Godfreie de Crawcome a knight with three hundred men after Hubert, to take and bring him priſoner to the Tower. This knight comming to him in the night, Hubert waked out of his ſleepe, fled all naked to a chapell there by, out of the which he was by force, and with his legs fettered vnder the horſſe bellie, brought vpon a pild iade to London, and put in the Tower fettered. But the biſhop of London complaining of the iniurie doone to the church, by violent taking him from the chapell, the king ſent him to the ſame chapell againe, the fift kalends of October, and after commanded the ſhiriffs of Eſſex & Hertford vpon paine of hanging, to compaſſe the chapell that Hubert might not eſcape, or receiue anie kind of ſuſtenance from anie man. By meanes whereof Hubert did long remaine in that place, with two ſeruants onelie that miniſtred meat vnto him, ſuch as they could get. Wherevpon Hubert being in this ſtreict, came foorth of himſelfe, yeelded his bodie to the ſhiriffes, who led him priſoner to the Tower, where he was laid in irons. After which, the king reſtored him all the lands which he had by the gift of his father, or that he himſelfe had bought; but yet he was ſent into Viſe caſtell, there to be kept in a more large reſtreint vnder the ſuretie of Richard earle of Cornewall, & William earle of Warren, Richard earle Marſhall, William earle Ferrers, vndertaking for him to the king. But after this, in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred thirtie and three, and the ſeuenteenth yeare of the reigne of Henrie the third, on Michaelmas eeue, one of the ſeruants of Hubert, when the keepers of the caſtell were aſleepe, tooke Hubert fettered, & laid him on his ſhoulders, got him out at the great gate, with much difficultie brought him ouer a deepe and long ditch to the pariſh church, & then placed him by the high altar. When the keepers awooke, & miſſed Hubert, they ſought for him, and in the end obteining knowlege where he was, with manie blows tooke him and his two ſeruants out of the church, and committed him againe vnto ſtreicter priſon in the ſame caſtell. But after (by the meanes of Robert biſhop of Saliſburie) Hubert was reſtored vnto the church the fift kalends of Nouember. Whereat the king being greeued, commanded the ſhiriffe of Wiltſhire to beſiege the church, till Hubert ſhould be inforced to die through hunger. But after in the third kalends of Nouember, he was by the ſtrength of his freends taken from the church of the Viſe, put in armor, fled into Wales, & ioined with the kings enimies. Wherevpon, in the fourth kalends of Iune, by much interceſſion he was reſtored to the kings fauor. But about ſix yeares after, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred thirtie and nine, being about the 23 yeare of the reigne of Edward the third, the king afreſh laieng great matters to his charge of treaſon againſt the king and kingdome; he in the end made peace with the king, and deliuered to him foure caſtels (by him greatlie eſteemed) which were the caſtels of Blanch, of Groſmund in Wales, of Skenefrith, or Scheafreth (for I find both written) and of Halfield. This man firſt builded the decaied hoſpitall of the houſe of maiſon de Dieu in Douer (being a ſtatlie and coſtlie peece of worke) as appeareth yet (although wether beaten) by a ſcutchion; the arms of the ſaid Hubert there grauen on the vaulted porch built long ſince the firſt foundation of the houſe, ouer the which ſcutchion is this written: Scutum domini Huberti de Burgo quondam comitis Cantiæ, procurator: huius domus fundatoris. Which being almoſt by age conſumed, much troubled me to read & find it out, in this yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and ſix.

Peter de Riuallis.

Peter de Riuallis or de Oriall, was by mine account conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, which I gather out of theſe words of the records, which (amongſt other offices that he had) doo leaue to vs in memorie, that he was alſo Cuſtos omnium portuum & omnium priſarum in Anglia & Hibernia. Now if he were in generall (which alwaies inferreth a particular) warden of all the caſtels in England, and of all the ports of the ſea: it ſeemeth no doubt vnto me, but that incroching vpon all, he would make choiſe to obteine ſuch as were both moſt of honor, ſtrength, and commoditie, and therefore would haue to deale with Douer caſtell. Of this man is more ſpoken in my diſcourſe of the treaſurors of England. But as I will not affirme this man to be conſtable of Douer, ſo I leaue it to them which better can either approoue or diſprooue him ſo to be.

Bertram de Creoll.

Bertram de Creoll, as haue the records of the excheker, or Bertram de Crioll, as our Engliſh hiſtories haue, was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred fortie and one, being about the fiue and twentith yeare of Henrie the third; who bare for his arms in a golden field two cheuorons, and a quarter gules. He married Elenor by ſome termed otherwiſe, one of the daughters and heires of ſir Hamond Creueceure, by whome he had iſſue one daughter and heire called Ione married to Richard of Rokeſlie, of whom the lord Poinings is deſcended.

Richard Greie.

Richard Greie baron of Codnore, caſtelleine of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, being placed there by the barons againſt the king, did in the two and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fiftie & eight, ſuffer none to paſſe vnſearched, according to that which he had in commandement. Wherevpon he tooke and ſeized into his hands a great part of treſure that was brought thither to be tranſported to the Pictauians the kings halfe brethren that were fled the realme. After which in the three and fortith yeare of the reigne of Henrie the third, being in the yeare of our Lord a thouſand two hundred fiftie and nine, the barons being in armor againſt the king; Richard king of Almaine brother to king Henrie the third landed at Douer (from the parts beyond the ſeas) where king Henrie was readie to receiue him, who brought him from Douer vnto Canturburie, becauſe neither of them was ſuffered to enter into the caſtell of Douer, the lords hauing them in a gelouſie, leaſt they ſhould go about to infringe the ordinances made in the parlement at Oxford. To which ordinances to be performed moſt of the nobilitie had ſet their ſeales, with the common ſeale of London. But notwithſtanding that this Richard Greie ſeemed in the beginning to be ſo faithfull to the barons: yet returning to his dutie, he obeied the kings pleaſure. For which in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fiftie and nine he was by the barons remooued. The occaſion whereof we find to haue beene, becauſe he ſuffered frier Walaſcho (comming from the pope, and hauing the kings letters vnder the great ſeale) to enter the land, not ſtaieng him, nor warning the lords of his landing, contrarie (as it was interpreted) vnto the articles of their prouiſion enacted at Oxford; which frier in truth was ſent from the pope, to reſtore Athelmar or Odomar the kings halfe brother by his mother vnto the biſhoprike of Wincheſter, to the which he had bin long before elected. But the lords were ſo bent againſt Athelmar, that vpon ſuch ſuggeſtions as they laid forth, Walaſcho refrained the dooing of that for which he came. After which, Hugh Bigot chiefe iuſtice of England, haſting to Douer vſed this ſpeech to the ſaid Greie: Sith thou Richard waſt placed by the whole realme as a faithfull warden of the ports, as a ſearcher of all ſuch as go out or come into the land, and that all our truſt dwelleth in thy cuſtodie; whie haſt thou ſuffered ſuch a perſon (though he were ſupported by the kings grant) to enter the land, not giuing intelligence thereof vnto vs, whereby thou haſt gone againſt the common prouiſion of the nobilitie, & haſt impudentlie broken thine oth? Wherefore we iudge thee to be depriued from thine office, and to receiue iudgement worthie that treſpas which thou haſt committed to the common danger of the kingdome. By which words he was diſplaced from his office, and the chiefe iuſtice tooke the ſame into his owne hands. Of this man is ſir Iohn Zouch of Codnore deſcended.

Hugh Bigot.

Hugh Bigot cheefe iuſtice of England, vpon the diſplacing of Greie, taking the conſtableſhip of Douer and the office of warden of the cinque ports into his owne hands, without the kings authoritie, but by the conſent of the nobilitie, did keepe that caſtell in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred fiftie and nine, being the three and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, as haue the records of the excheker: who in the yeare of Grace a thouſand two hundred and ſixtie, being the foure & fortith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, in which yeare he was made chiefe iuſtice, as ſome haue, but Matthew Paris maketh him cheefe iuſtice ſomewhat before, in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand two hundred fiftie and eight, being the one and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third by his account, for he writeth of him in this ſort vnder the ſame yeare: Inſtante verò feſto natiuita- tis beatæ Mariæ, cùm vicecomes Northamptoniæ veſtigia prædeceſſoris ſui Willielmi de inſula (quondam vicecomitis) iureiurando pluribus inſontibus, ſtimulis agitatus auaritiæ, ſequeretur, & ſuper hoc aſcenderet queremonia ad capitalem iuſticiarium Hugonem Bigot, conuictus de iniurijs complurimis, captus eſt, & vix à laqueo liberatus, duro ac diro carceri eſt mancipatus. He married Ione the daughter of Robert Burnell, by whome he had iſſue (as ſome doo ſaie) one ſon Raſe, of whom the erle of Suſſex now liuing is deſcended.

Henrie Braibrooke.

Henrie Braibrooke conſtable of Douer caſtell, whome ſome will haue ſo to be; but I not hauing found authoritie therefore will not preſume (vpon other mens pens, eſpeciallie vpon the notes of parſon Dorrell the corruptor of all things which he tooke in hand) either to receiue or reiect him. For I am not eaſilie led to beleeue that anie Braibrooke was in thoſe daies of ſuch credit, as to haue one of the greateſt offices of credit in the realme (as the conſtableſhip of Douer caſtell was) committed vnto his charge.

Edward the firſt.

Edward the eldeſt ſonne of king Henrie the third, being then prince and after king of England by the name of Edward the firſt, was conſtable of Douer caſtle, and warden of the ports in the time and life of his father. For the ſaid prince Edward (after the ſubduing of Simon Montfort earle of Leiceſter) did about the yere of our redemption one thouſand two hundred three ſcore and ſix, being the fiftith yeare of king Henrie the third, aſſaile the caſtle of Douer, and by the aid of the priſoners within (which had taken the great tower to his vſe) obteined it, and there left priſoner Guie the ſonne of Simon Montfort, but Guie eſcaped ſoone after by corruption of his keepers. During which time that prince Edward was conſtable of Douer caſtle, he made his deputie or lieutenant Henrie Cobham; whoſe ſonne ⁊ heire called Iohn, founded Cobham college: of which Henrie Cobham ſee more vnder the title of the lord Cobhams. This Henrie Cobham, being lieutenant to the prince, was the firſt lieutenant (as far as I can learne) of Douer caſtle, which office hath euer ſince continued to our time.

Roger Leiborne.

Sir Roger Leiborne knight, lord Leiborne, ⁊ lord of Leiborne caſtle in Kent (if my memorie deceiue me not) was in the time of king Edward the firſt, conſtable of Douer caſtle, ⁊ warden of the cinque ports, of whom my good and learned friend maiſter William Lambard dooth diſcourſe in this ſort in his perambulation of Kent, vnder the title of Leeds, pag. 264, where he treateth of the firſt founding of the priorie of Leeds; who after that he had aſcribed the ſame to the Creueceurs lords of Leeds caſtell, goeth on with theſe words: Howbeit I find an heralds note (who belike made his coniecture by ſome cote of armes latelie apparant) that one Leiborne an earle of Saliſburie was the founder of it. In deed it is to be ſeene in the annales of ſaint Auguſtines of Canturburie, that a noble man called Roger Leiborne was ſometime of great authoritie within this ſhire, notwithſtanding that in his time he had taſted of both fortunes. For in the daies of king Henrie the third, he was firſt one of that coniuration which was called the barons warre: from which faction Edward the kings ſonne wan him by faire meanes to his part, and made him the bearer of his priuie purſe. Afterwards they agreed not vpon the reckoning, ſo that the prince (charging him with great arerages) ſeized his liuing for ſatiſfaction of the debt, by which occaſion Roger once more became of the barons deuotion. But after the pacification made at Kenelworth, he was eftſoones receiued to fauor, and was made warden of the cinque ports, and lieutenant of the ſhire of Kent. Now though it cannot be true that this man was the builder of this priorie (for the ſame annales ſaie that it was erected long before) yet if he did but marrie the heire, he might trulie be termed the patrone or founder thereof, for by that name not onlie the builders themſelues but their poſteritie alſo (to whom the glorie of their deeds deſcended) were woont ſo to be called as well as they. Thus much that learned antiquarie William Lambard. Vpon which, to diſprooue the note of the herald, it is too plaine that neuer anie Leiborne was earle of Saliſburie. For the erldome of Saliſburie did alwaies, almoſt euen from the conqueſt, remaine in the names and families of Patrike, Longſpee, Montague, Neuill, and one woman a Plantagenet euen vntill our time. But here might grow the error to make Leiborne erle of Saliſburie, being deceiued with the affinitie of the armes; for that the earls of Saliſburie, the Longſpees, and the Leiborns gaue all one armes, different onlie in colours; for Longſpee bare azure ſix lions or, three, two, and one: and Leiborne bare argent ſix lions ſable, three, two, and one. The houſe of Leiborne hath beene great and of good continuance, and matched with noble houſes. For Iohn Haſtings the father of Laurence Haſtings the firſt earle of Penbroke of the name of Haſtings) maried Iulian the daughter of Thomas lord Leiborne, which Iulian died in the fourth yeare of king Henrie the third, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred threeſcore and ſeuen. Beſides which alſo touching the Leiborns, of whom I ſuppoſe that Leiborne caſtell in Kent was named, I haue ſeene a charter of one Robert Leiborne, made to the houſe of nuns in Clerkenwell in this ſort: Sciant præſentes & futuri, quòd ego Robertus de Leiborne dedi Deo & eccleſiæ ſanctæ Mariæ de fonte clericorum, & ſanctimonialibus ibidem Deo ſeruientibus, pro ſalute animæ meæ & anteceſſorum meorum, in puram & perpetuam eleemoſynā duodecim denarios de Gablo Michaelis filij Hereberti de Luitona. Hanc autem donaitonem & conceſſionem ego Robertus de Leiborne & hæredes mei debemus warantizare prænominatæ eccleſiæ & ſanctimonialibus contra omnes homines. Vt hæc mea donatio rata & inconcuſſa maneat, ſigilli mei appoſitione & ſubſcriptorum virorum teſtimonio eam cōfirmaui; his teſtibus, Gilōne de Badleſmere, Iuone Patric, Radulpho de Hadling, &c. Which charter I haue ſet downe, to prooue the antiquitie of the name of Leiborne. For this charter being without date, was made (as I gather) for this time in the reigne of Henrie the ſecond, or in the begining of king Richard the firſt his gouernment.

igot.

Stephan Pincheſter.

Stephan Pincheſter, the ſonne of Stephan Pincheſter (which died in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand two hundred and eighteene, falling in the ſecond and third yere of king Henrie the third) was a man of great valor, well eſteemed of the king and of his countrie, by reaſon whereof he was aduanced to places of great honour, fauour and truſt. For he was conſtable of Douer caſtell in the two and fiftith yeare of king Henrie the third, being the yere of our redemption one thouſand two hundred three ſcore and ſeuen, or one thouſand two hundred three ſcore and eight. For the ſaid two and fiftith yeare of that king, fell partlie in that one, and partlie in the other yeare of our Lord, begining the yeare at the annunciation of the virgine, which office he long continued and poſſeſſed 6, 8, 15, 17, 18, 19, and in Michaelmas terme in the nine and twentith yeare of king Edward the firſt, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred foure ſcore and thirteene, at what time Giuolo de monte regali was his ſeruant, uant, or perhaps his lieutenant. This man repared the caſtell of Allington, ſituate vpon the riuer of Medwaie in Kent, which caſtell ſtandeth not farre from Medweyſtow, now called Maidſton, ſuppoſed by William Lambard in his perambulation of Kent to be called Duroprouis, and by maiſter Camden, in his Britannia vnder the title of Kent pag. 168, to be Vaginaca mentioned in the itinerarie of Antonine. Which Pincheſter alſo cauſed the bóoke of Dóomeſdaie, belonging to the caſtell of Douer, to be made, a thing altogether vnperfect, & reaching no further than to the time of Hubert de Burow. Beſides which, in the ſame two and twentith of that king, he renewed a particular charge of ſhips to be found by euerie one of the ſeuerall ports and members of the ſame, as appeareth by record therof made in French; the orders whereof are ſet downe in the perambulation of Kent, pag. 96, vnder the title of the Cinque ports. He maried Margaret the daughter of Iohn de Burgh, by whom he had iſſue a daughter called Ione maried to Henrie Cobham of Randall knight, as appeareth in my diſcourſe of the lord Cobhams of Randall.

Robert de Burgerſh.

Robert de Burgerſh or Burwaſh, was coneſtable of Douer caſtell, & warden of the cinque ports in the thirtie and fourth yeare of king Edward the firſt; in which yeare he was ſent ambaſſador into Gaſcoigne to the court of the pope, about the affairs of the king. He had iſſue Stephan Burgerſh, as appeareth before in a note ſet downe in the lord Cobhams of Cobham, vnder Henrie Cobham the firſt baron of Cobham. Touching this name of Burgerſh, I find in a vault in the church of Canturburie, being called our ladie Vndercroft, an ancient monument of ſtone, in which a woman of that name was buried, pretending great antiquitie; on which lieth a ladie in rich habit, with this writing round about the tóome twiſe ſet downe: Pur Dieu pries pur l'áme Iohanne de Burwaſh, que fuit dame de Monſieur. At which word it ſtaieth, and againe reciteth, Pries Dieu pur l'aime, &c. Which to explane more fullie, I will not refuſe to dóo in this ſort, taken Ex veteri martyrologio & capitulari libro eccleſiæ Cãtuarienſis: in which is ſet downe in the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand foure hundred and fiue; Obijt Ioanna de Mohune domina de Dunſter: being the ſame Ione there buried.

Henrie Cobham.

Henrie Cobham knight, the firſt baron of Cobham, was made coneſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the fiue and thirtith yeare of king Edward the ſecond, as more largelie appeareth here following, vnder Robert de Kendall which ſucceeded this lord Cobham in the office of the cinque ports. Of this Henrie Cobham ſée more in my former diſcourſe of the lord Cobhams of Cobham.

Robert de Kendall.

Robert de Kendall ſo called, becauſe (as I for this time take it) he was there borne, and was made coneſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the firſt yeare of king Edward the ſecond, as appeareth by this record of Pellis exitus, hauing this entrance therof in Michaelmas terme, in the fourth yeare of the ſaid Edward the ſecond, being the yeare of our redemption, one thouſand thrée hundred and ten. Henrico de Cobham nuper conſtabulario caſtri Douer, & cuſtodi quinque portuum 80 libras, 15 ſolidos 7 denarios & obulũ liberat. eidem, die 17 Nouẽbris in duabus tallijs ſibi factis, eodem die, pro tot denarijs ſibi debitis à 16 die Octobris, anno regni domini Edwardi patris domini regis nunc 34, vſque 16 diem Decembris, anno regni domini regis nunc primo, quo die idem dominus rex cuſtodiam prædictam Roberto de Kendall cõmiſit, per breue de liberate, datum apud Boger in Scotia, 6 die Octobris præſenti (which was the ſaid fourth yeare of Edward the ſecond) per præceptum theſaurarij, & perſoluitur breue. In which office this Robert continued vntill the twelfe yeare of the ſame king Edward the ſecond, falling in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and eightéene, but was liuing in the twentith yeare of the ſame king, as appeareth by records of the excheker of Pellis exitus, where monie was paid vnto him by the name of Robert Kendall Nuper conſtabulario caſtri Douer, & cuſtodi quinque portuum.

Bartholomew Badleſmer.

Bartholomew Badleſmer (the ſonne, as I for this time gather, of Giles de Badleſmer ſlaine, as hath Ioannes London in the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand two hundred fiftie and nine, falling in the 43 and 44 yeare of king Henrie the third, in the warres betwéene the Engliſh and the Welſh) was Præfectus: ſhiriffe, or lieutenant of Kent, and is vntrulie termed by ſome erle of Kent, by others more rightlie named baron of Léeds: but by the records of the excheker moſt trulie called a baneret. Which name I haue obſerued by manie of thoſe ancient records, to haue béene attributed to ſuch perſons, as chronicles and heralds haue dubbed with the names of barons. This Bartholomew Badleſmer, being in the warres of Scotland with king Edward the ſecond, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and fourtéene, falling in part of the ſeuenth yeare, and part of the eighth yeare of the ſaid Edward the ſecond, did by his demeanor in thoſe wars, occaſion Ioannem Londonenſem to write of him in this ſort.

Humfreie de Bohune earle of Hereford.

Gilbert de Clare earle of Glocester.

> Quadam verò nocte ante futurum in craſtinum vtriúſque exercitus congreſſum, inter cemitem Glouerniæ & Herefordiæ (quis eorum primam aciem contra Scotorum exercitum obtineret) animoſa contentio mouebatur. Porrò in craſtino comes Hereford (cuius intereſt primam habere aciem ratione conſtabulariæ Angliæ) Scotos aggrediens, eorum exercitum viriliter penetrauit. Quo ſic reuerſo, comes Glouerniæ aliquid arduum, & quaſi probitate dignum facere ſatagens, præcipitáter in Scotos minùs cautè inſiliens, &c: in fronte ſui exercitus (qui vulgariter dicitur Sheltrun) infigitur aculeis, & ſic confoſſus de ſella ſua violenter eripitur. Qui protinus exclamans, quendam militem ſuum armis ſtrenuem, conſilio prudentem, ſibi præ cæteris familiarem, & tanquam ſingulare perfugium, de quo ſpecialiùs confidebat, videlicet Bartholomæum de Badleſmer nomine, in auxilium aduocauit. Sed ille pelli ſuæ timens, & magis ſaluti propriæ quàm domini ſui defenſionem qualitercunque proſpiciens, fugam arripuit, & ad dominum regem à latere properabat. Dictus verò comes auxilio deſtitutus, à Scotis ibidem miſerabiliter eſt interemptus.

Which matter I haue béene the willinger to ſet downe at large out of Iohn de London monke of Canturburie, becauſe there be manie góod notes to be gathered out of the ſame; beſides that which concerneth Badleſmer. For, as it is there ſet downe, that Badleſmer was the knight and ſouldior belonging to the earle of Gloceſter, that his conditions be there deſcribed, that he was wiſe in counſell, valiant in armes, and helples to his friend in extremitie: ſo there is more to be gathered thereout. Firſt, that it belongeth to the coneſtable of England by vertue of his office, to lead the vantgard in the battell: ſecondlie, that contention fell betwéene the earle of Hereford and the earle of Gloceſter: and laſtlie, at what time, how, and vpon what occaſion the earle of Gloceſter was ſlaine. After which, this Bartholomew growing in fauor with king Edward the ſecond, the king did make him capteine of Briſtow caſtell, and gaue vnto the ſaid Bartholomew one hundred pounds by yeare out of the exchecker, as appeareth by the records thereof, in the Pell of Exitus of Michaelmasterme, of the twelfe yeare of the ſame king, falling in the yeare of our redemption after the account of England, one thouſand three hundred & eighteene; where it is thus recorded. Bartholomæo de Badleſmer, cui rex conceſſit centũ libras percipiendum annuatim ad ſcaccariũ, ad feſta Paſchæ & Michaelis per æquales portiones, quoúſque manerium de Chatham cum pertinentibus in comitatu Cantiæ, quod Guido ferre tenet ad terminum vitæ ſuæ, & manerium de Langhton cum pertin. in com. Suſſex ac hundred de Sheplake, quæ Ioannes de Vluedale tenet ad terminum vitæ ſuæ de hæreditate regis, & quæ poſt mortem eiuſdem Guidonis præfato Bartholomeo, & hæredibus ſuis virtute conceſſionis regis, ſibi inde factæ remanere debeat, &c. Much about which yeare of our Lord, one thouſand three hundred and eighteene, the ſame king Edward gaue the caſtell of Leeds in exchange (for other lands, called Ingerſlee) to the ſame Bartholomew, and to his heires for euer: being about that time alſo, as I now take it, made conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports: hauing by the kings gift (in the thirteenth yeare of Edward the ſecond) the wardſhip and mariage of the lands and heire of Iohn de Northwood in Kent; for which he yearelie accounted to the king of threeſcore and ſix pounds thirteene ſhillings and foure pence; paieng alſo the like yearelie ſum for the wardſhip of the lands and mariage of Iohn the ſonne and heire of Iohn Godſhall, or Goſhall of Eſſex.

This Bartholomew thus ſtill increaſing in the kings fauor was dailie aduanced to greater honors and offices: for beſides the great reuenues wherewith the king indued him, the king alſo (to haue him neere about him in his court) made him ſteward of his houſhold, as appereth by theſe words of an anonymall chronicle M.S. which reciting the change of officers ſpeaketh in this ſort. In huius recurſus varios temporis labentis, & nociui regni, primorum officialium ſtatus libera diſpoſitione rex tranſmutauit. Nam domino Iohanne de Sandal epiſcopatus honore Winton. eccleſiæ & gloria, theſaurario moriente priuato, dominum epiſcopum Exonien. rex loco defuncti ſubrogauit, ad culmen cancellariæ epiſcopum Norwicen. promouit. In regimine quoque ſeneſcalliæ dominum Bartholomæum de Badleſmer ſtabiliuit. Cuſtodem verò ſui capitis in officio camerariæ conſtituit dominum Hugonem Spenſerum iuniorem, &c. In which thirteenth of the ſame king Edward the ſecond, the king & his queene Iſabell going to Douer, to the end that the king ſhould doo his homage to the French king; this Bartholomew being now the kings ſteward, receiued them into his caſtle of Chilham with moſt glorious ſhew, where he deintilie feaſted the king and all his traine, and at their departure beſtowed liberall gifts vpon euerie noble man according to their degrees.

Regiſtr. Roff.

After which, when the king was come to Douer, he deuiſed with the nobilitie to ſtaie his iournie into France, and to excuſe the dooing of his homage by ſending ambaſſadors thereabout. Wherefore ſending Edmund of Woodſtocke his brother, the lord Hugh Spenſer the father, this Bartholomew Badleſmere, and Adam de Hereford biſhop of that place, to Rome; they were honorablie by the waie receiued of the king of France, and ſo went to Rome; where hauing diſpatched their ambaſſage, & obteined licence to depart, they brought backe with them Henrie Burgherſh nephew of ſir Bartholomew, to whom the pope had giuen at their requeſt the biſhoprike of Lincolne, although the chapter of that houſe had choſen a diuine to haue that ſee, before the election, or rather reſeruation of the pope of this man. Which the pope the rather did at the requeſt of theſe ambaſſadors, becauſe they ſhould not be impediments to ſtand againſt Reginald his procurator in England, vnto whom he had giuen the biſhoprike of Wincheſter after the death of Iohn Sandall againſt the intreatie of the king and nobilitie of England. But although this Bartholomew was thus by the king honored and aduanced: yet ſhortlie after this, ſhewing himſelfe both vnthankfull for ſuch benefits, & vndutifull for his obedience, did (in the yere of our redemption one thouſand threeſcore twentie and one, which fell in part of the fourteenth & fifteenth yeres of that king) ioine in couenant with Thomas earle of Lancaſter, and other euill diſpoſed perſons, rebelling againſt their prince.

Ex libro dedicato Margaretæ reginæ, which was the wife of Edward the firſt, and liuing at this time.

Wherevpon (in deſpight of the kings commandement) he came from Tilleburge or Tilberie in Eſſex vnto Hengham in Kent, where he was with great pompe receiued of his followers, from whenſe going to his caſtle of Leeds (which he had ſtronglie furniſhed) he departed from thenſe with a great traine, and entred his caſtell of Chilham; who after a little abode there left the ſame, and came vnto Canturburie with nineteene knights attendant vpon him; ſo great a perſon was he, both for honor in the court, and fauor in the countrie: all which perſons with their retinue were armed vnderneath their vpper garments. After their entring into Canturburie, ſome of his people, which were the eſquiers attendant vpon him, did with their ſwords drawne enter Chriſts church, and came to the ſhrine of Thomas Becket. Which action in that order performed, troubled and diſquieted the whole citie, and occaſioned ſome of the better ſort to giue intelligence to the king of the behauior of him and his people in that place. On which daie of whoſe entring into the ſame citie, Iohn Cromwell and his wife came vnto him, craued his aid and friendſhip, obteined the ſame, and with him went vnto the rebellious barons ſoiorning now at Oxford. Afterward the king (as it ſeemeth, not yet fullie reſolued that this Badleſmere beſides all reaſon & dutie would be his enimie, but rather ſuppoſing that he ioined with the rebels to vndermine their deuiſe, and for that cauſe deſirous to make full triall of the ſaid Badleſmere) did ſend Iſabell his wife queene of England vnto the caſtle of Leeds. Which being knowne to Badleſmere, at that time remaining with the barons at Whitneie in Oxfordſhire, he ſent certeine ſouldiors to the ſame caſtle, appointing Thomas Aldon to be conſtable and chiefe ouer the caſtle and them: giuing ſtreict charge to the ſame Thomas that they ſhould not open the gates vnto the queene, but valiantlie reſiſt hir, and defend the caſtle.

Walſingham and his followers call the capteine of the caſtle, Thomas Culpeper.

The queene therefore minding hir pilgrimage to Canturburie, and ſo by the waie to ſee Leeds, being ouertaken with night, ſent hir marſhall to prepare for hir lodging. But hir officer being denied anie helpe or ſatiſfieng of hir requeſt, they within the caſtle proudlie anſwered, that neither the queene nor anie other ſhould enter into the ſame caſtle, without letters from the lord of the caſtell. Which anſwer being forthwith brought vnto the queenes eares, ſhe came hir ſelfe in perſon to demand entrance, but could obteine no hope thereof, for which cauſe ſhe was driuen to ſeeke hir lodging in an other place. This matter being greeuouſlie taken by hir, ſhe returned to the king, and complained of the iniurie and diſgrace which ſhe had receiued. By which ſpeeches the king incenſed to further anger, and aſſembling an armie of manie thouſands, did come in perſon to the ſame caſtell, ſtreictlie charging the caſtillians to deliuer the ſame to him: but they obſtinatlie and rebelliouſlie withſtood him, and would not ſurrender the caſtell. Now Bartholomew Badleſmere, hauing intelligence that the king laie in ſiege before the caſtell of Leeds, mooued the barons that they would with their power go to Leeds, to remooue the armie which the king had before the caſtell. Wherevpon the barons came to Kingſtowne vpon Thames; but there better conſidering of that matter wherevnto they had before ſo vnaduiſedlie condeſcended, they would not go anie further in that iourneie.

Wherevpon Badleſmere being abaſhed and confounded, departed from them. Which being knowne to thoſe that kept the caſtell of Leeds, now perceiuing themſelues to be in great extremitie, hopeleſſe of anie ſuccor, and in danger to be all deſtroied by the kings power, they yeelded themſelues to the kings mercie, which was not ſo great vnto them (conſidering that he was driuen to ſuch extreme dealing by their malicious minds) as that he pardoned anie of the chiefeſt, but ſent the wife of Badleſmere, his onelie ſonne Giles, the daughters of the ſaid Badleſmere, Bartholomew Burgerſh and his wife, with Thomas de Aldon conſtable of that place, priſoners vnto the Tower of London. On the firſt daie of Nouember he ſent two knights to the caſtell of Chilham, with commiſſion to enter the ſame; who comming to the caſtell demanded entrance accordinglie, in the behalfe of the king their maiſter. To whom Henrie de Valois knight and then conſtable of the caſtell anſwered, that he would not keepe the caſtell againſt the king, and ſo ſurrendered the ſame into their hands, Cuius deputatus (as ſaith the hiſtorie) erat comes Dathels or de Athels, to whom the caſtell was deliuered, with all things in the ſame, which were belonging to Bartholomew Badleſmere.

After which, Walter Culpepper bailiffe of the ſeuen hundreds, was the ſecond of Nouember miſerablie intreated, drawne at a horſſe taile, and hanged. Wherevpon, Thomas Culpepper and others which were with him in the caſtell of Tunbridge, hearing of the kings approch, left the caſtell and fled to Hugh Audleie then being with the barons. Then were Geffreie de Saie, William de Dine or Diue, the kings iuſtices ſent into Kent, to inquire of the fauorers of Badleſmere, and to doo iuſtice of Hugh Spenſer reuoked. At that time, Thomas earle of Lancaſter, who was the capteine of the barons, and fallen in diſpleaſure with Badleſmere, would not giue aid vnto the barons, ſo long as Badleſmere was in their ſocietie: for which cauſe Badleſmere was forſaken by the barons, & ſtronglie purſued by the king. Who (after the barons had burned one of the gates of Bridgenorth) granted vnto them a diſſembled pardon, with their adherents, Bartholomew Badleſmere excepted. Shortlie after which, Badleſmere was apprehended, and in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred twentie and two, being in the fifteenth yeare of Edward the ſecond, was condemned at Canturburie by the iuſtices aforeſaid. Wherevpon, he was on the eighteenth kalends of Maie, drawne from Canturburie (as hath Ioannes Londonenſis) vnto the gallows ſtanding at the Blene; where he was hanged as a traitor: after which, his head being ſtriken off, and faſtened vpon a pole, was caried to Canturburie, and ſet vpon a gate of that citie called Burgate.

This Bartholomew maried Margaret, the daughter & one of the heires of Thomas de Clare, ſeneſchall of the forreſt of Eſſex, by whome he had iſſue Giles his ſonne & heire; who with his mother, as before is ſaid, being committed priſoner to the Tower, was afterward in the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand three hundred twentie and foure, with his mother in like ſort pardoned, ſet at libertie out of priſon, & reſtored to the kings fauor; beſide which ſon, he had foure daughters, who after being heires to their brother Giles, and their father Bartholomew; one of them called Eliſabeth, was maried to William Bohune earle of Northampton. I haue read touching the antiquitie of this man of Badleſmere of one Peter de Batleſmere, witneſſe to an ancient dateleſſe deed. Wherein Brianus the ſonne of Randulph (father to Iordan Biaſet the baron, which gaue fourteene acres of ground to build the monaſterie of Clerkenwell neere London) did giue twelue acres of arable land in Steeple vnto the nuns of Clerkenwell. Which thing I thought good not to omit in this place, ſpeaking of Bartholomew Badleſmere: as I muſt not doo the name of Gilo de Badleſmere, witneſſe vnto a like dateleſſe deed, made by Robert Leiborne, to the ſame Clerkenwell, the effect whereof is ſet downe before, vnder the name of Roger Leiborne conſtable of Douer Caſtell.

Liber Clerkenwell.

Edmund of Woodſtocke.

Edmund of Woodſtocke (ſo ſurnamed of the place where he was borne, not farre from Oxford, being the ſonne of Edward the firſt, by his ſecond wife Margaret the daughter of the king of France) was borne in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred, on ſaint Oſwalds daie: but as ſaith William Paginton, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred and one, was conſtable of Douer caſtell in Michaelmas tearme, in the fifteenth yeare of king Edward the ſecond his nephue, who aduanced the ſame Edmund to the earledome of Kent in the ſame fifteenth yeare of his reigne, the eight and twentith of Iulie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred twentie & one. At what time it appeareth to me, that then firſt began the penſions out of the excheker, to be giuen to euerie noble man in place, & for his honor of the erldome. For whereas in times paſt, he which was created an earle, had for his creation and maintenance in honor the third penie of the reuenues of that ſhire comming to the kings hands: now the created earle had in lieu thereof a penſion out of the excheker. For thus I find recorded in the Pellis of Exitus of Michaelmas tearme, the fifteenth yeare of the reigne of Edward the ſecond.

Dominus rex 28 die Iulij proximè præterito, gladio cinxit in comitem Cantiæ (Edmund the kings brother) & ei conceſſit, &c: 30. lib. de exitibus comitatus Cantiæ percipiend. per manus vicecomitis comitatus illius, qui pro tempore fuerit, ſub nomine & honore comitatus Cantiæ: ac firma alia & hundreda diuerſa: habend. ad totam vitam ipſius comitis, inter quæ illas 500 lib. annuas ei aſſignauit, quas abbas & conuentus de Rameſey reddunt de firma nundinarum ſancti Iuonis, &c. The occaſion which mooued the king ſo to create him earle of Kent, I haue read ſet downe in one anonymall chronicle in this ſort. Rex moliebatur confuſionē Bartholomæi de Badleſmer, & ne maximus fieret præ cæteris, ſicut ſolebat Edmundum de Woodſtock fratrē ſuū comitē Cantiæ fecit. Of which earle I will not ſpeake anie more at this time, bicauſe I haue more liberallie treated of him amongſt the protectors of England.

Hugh Spencer.

Hugh Spenſer the yoonger was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, being on the ſeas, and keeping the cinque ports (by witneſſe of our chronicles) in the time of Edward the ſecond, as to his office apperteined. He was in great fauour with king Edward the firſt, and made earle of Gloceſter by king Edward the ſecond. He married Elenor the eldeſt ſiſter, and one of the heires of Gilbert de Clare earle of Gloceſter and Hertford, by whom he had iſſue Hugh that died without iſſue, Edward lord Spenſer, and Gilbert, with Iſabell wife to Edward Fitzallen erle of Arundell; he was at Hereford executed, by drawing hanging and quartering, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred twentie and ſix, in the laſt yeare of Edward the ſecond.

William Clinton.

William Clinton, the ſonne of John lord Clinton, was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the twentith yeare of Edward the ſecond (if they haue not miſtaken that king for Edward the third) about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred twentie & ſix, in which yeare the ſame king was depoſed, and Edward the third his ſonne aduanced, who continued his office manie yeares, as in the fift, ſixt, tenth, and thirtéenth of Edward the third. Which Clinton was in Eſter tearme in the ninth yeare of Edward the third, ſent into France, and ſo to Rome, in the companie of John archbiſhop of Canturburie, the abbat of Dore, and ſir William Truſſell, and is the ſame perſon named in a booke belonging to the houſe of Rocheſter (which booke my good fréend and rare antiquarie maiſter Lambard hath rightlie intituled by the name of Regiſtrum Roffenſe) who with Robert de Walkeſar was diſpatcht into Kent to Canturburie, there to heare and determine the breach of the peace in Kent. To whome the king (as appeareth in the records of the exchecker of the Pellis exitus) in Michaelmas terme, of the tenth yeare of king Edward the third, had giuen thrée hundred markes by yeare, for the ſuſtentation of Laurence Haſtings, the ſonne of John Haſtings, as long as the ſaid Laurence ſhould be in his cuſtodie: which Laurence was afterward the firſt earle of Penbroke by the name of Haſtings. After which, in the ninth yeare of Edward the third, he was created earle of Huntington, of whome in the thirtéenth yeare of the ſame king I find this regiſtred in the regiſter of Rocheſter before named. The Frenchmen infeſting the ſea coaſts betwéene Orwell and Cornewall, there was a councell holden to place a watch to repell the enimie from the ſea ſide, whereunto few regarded to come, although manie popular knights and ſoldiours were by diſtreſſe inforced to come thither. Wherefore the lord William Clinton, earle of Huntington, and conſtable of Douer caſtell, aſſembling a great force of armed men in the countie of Kent to reſiſt the enimies, did beſtow manie things of his owne, and ſuſteined greater trauell in labouring thereabout. For when the Frenchmen came to burne Sandwich, the erle with his companie entred the ſhips which were at Sandwich to ſubdue their enimies. Wherevpon, when the French perceiued therby that they could doo no good, they turned their ſailes, and caſt anchor at Heath. Whom when the earle with his companie did purſue vnto Romeneie, they foorthwith fled, & ſo from Eſter vnto Lammas he continued armed with his people, valiantlie kéeping the coaſts of England againſt the enimies. After which, in the yeare following, which was the fouretéenth of Edward the third, he attended the king, ſcowring the ſeas; as ſaith the ſame author, whoſe words although they be long, I ſhall not gréeue to ſet downe in ſuch barbarous ſort as I find them.

*Rex transfretare coactus in craſtino ſanctæ Trinitatis cum paucis nauibus, videlicet 16, ad plus cùm nauigare diſpoſuiſſet, noua recepit, quòd rex Franciæ vnam claſſem ducentarum nauium magnarum cum multitudine armatorum apud Scluſam miſerat, ad prohibendum ingreſſum Flandriæ, ſiue ad capiendum eum ſiue ad occidendum. Quo audito, rex Angliæ totam coſteram maris vſque ad Lin, perſonaliter perſcrutans, omnes naues magnas bene paratas in rebus & perſonis apud Herwich ſumptibus patriæ celeriter venire fecit. Comes verò Huntington ex parte ſua omnes nautas quinque portiũ parari fecit, & ſcripſit omnibus amicis ſuis pro hominibus armorum auxilium ferre. Vnde factus eſt quod * epiſcopus Roffenſis miſit octo homines armatos ſumptibus ſuis apud Sandwichum, ad conducendum regem vltra mare.* And ſo in the end the king paſſed into the parts beyond the ſeas in the ſight of the French kings armie, which durſt not aduenture to ſet vpon them. After which, to go foorth with the words of the hiſtorie: Die ſabbati, videlicet in feſto ſancti Iohannis Baptiſtæ inito concilio, ſole, vento, & tida cum aqua regi Angliæ fauentibus, ductu piratarum, Anglici Francis grandem inſultum dederunt: comite Huntingdoniæ & domino Roberto Morley admerallis ſiue capitaneis dantibus inſultum primum: cæteri verò naues viriliter ſequentes cum Francis congredientes, multos occiderunt, volentibus ſe reddere pepercerunt, & fugientes de nauibus in mare ſaltare vi armata compulerunt: ſagitarij hoc tamen fecerunt.

* Haimo de Heth.

Beſides this, there was a certeine ſhip of Diepe, whereinto were fled foure hundred men of Normandie, who on a night caried awaie from the fléet of England a certeine ſhip of Sandwich, in which were the men of the prior of Canturburie. Which this earle of Huntington and warden of the cinque ports perceiuing, foorthwith he turned the ſhip wherin he was, and directed it towards them: Et (as the ſame author further ſaith) cùm eos attigiſſet, tota nocte vſque manè ad ſolis ortum præliantes acerrimè, pulſis nauibus ambabus vſque ad terram, & deuictis 450 nautis, nauem de Diepe combuſtam reliquerunt. In the which conflict there were ſlaine ſir Hugh Airet admerall and one other great man of Flanders called John Weiuell, with manie other great and ſmall to the number of fiue and twentie thouſand perſons: at what time there was alſo taken a hundred and thrée ſcore ſhips which remained with the Engliſh, who excéeded not aboue ſixtéene thouſand men. After this honorable victorie by this earle, in the yéere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred fortie and ſix, being about the twentith yeare of the reigne of the ſaid Edward the third, Robert Auesberie writeth of certeine letters of the French, conteining the deſtruction of this realme, which this earle deliuered vnto the archbiſhop of Canturburie; the words of which author are theſe. In vigilia aſſumptionis Mariæ virginis anno Domini 1346, reuerendus pater dominus Iohannes de Stratford Cantuarienſis archiepiſcopus, ante proceſſionem generalem pro pace & domino rege Anglorum, tunc in Francia militante, à clero & populo London illa die ſolenniter facienda, verbum Dei ipſius clero & populo London illa die ſolenniter faciendum ad crucem Pauli London prædicans, exponens inter cætera publicauit, quòd nobilis vir comes de Huntington, qui cum domino rege Anglorum in conflictu habito apud Cadamum, fuerat febribus fatigatus, in Angliam tunc reuerſus, litteras quaſdam inuentas in Cadamo, continentes præſumptuoſam Normannorum confœderationem ſeu ordinationem, ad ſubuerſionem ipſius regis & regni Angliæ, per concilium domini Philippi de Valois ordinatas & callidè adinuentas ſibi tradidit vulgariter exponendas.

Robert. Auesb.

All which matter with the letters he openlie declared (as is before ſaid) at Paules croſſe, to mooue the people feruentlie to praie for, and willinglie to aid the king. He liuing in the fiue and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, founded the priorie of Maidſtocke, married Julian the daughter and heire of Thomas lord Leiborne, by whome he had a daughter (as ſome ſuppoſe) Eliſabeth: whereas the office taken after his death (in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred fiftie and foure, being the eight and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third) ſaith that John Clinton, the ſon of John Clinton brother vnto this erle, was heire to the ſame earle.

Bartholomew de Burgerſh.

Bartholomew de Burgerſh baneret, was conſtable of Douer caſtell & warden of the cinque ports, in the ninetéenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third (as ſome note) and in the foure and twentith and ſix and twentith yere of the reigne of the ſame king, being firſt in the ninth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third ſteward of Penteif; and the ſame yeare (or rather the yeare before) in Michaelmaſſe terme he was ſent into France in the companie of William biſhop of Norwich; and likewiſe was diſpatched ambaſſador vnto Rome about the ſame time, whereof I doo find this note in the ſame Michaelmas terme in the records of the excheker being in forme as followeth: Bartholomæo de Burgerſh militi, eunti nuper in negotijs domini regis ad curiam Romanam, videlicet pro diſpenſatione habenda inter ipſum dominum regem & reginam Angliæ conſortem ſuam, &c. Who being thus imploied in the affaires, and by the wiſe cariage of himſelfe therein, growing more and more in the kings fauor, was for the eſpeciall truſt which the king repoſed in him, in the thrée and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being in the yeare of Grace one thouſand thrée hundred fortie and nine, ſent with the earle of Lancaſter, the barons of Stafford, Greiſtocke, and Furneuall about the feaſt of all ſaints to Gaſcoigne, to appeaſe the furious vprore which Iohn de Valois ſonne vnto the French king had made in that dukedome, greatlie ſpoiling the ſame. Which thing being well performed, he was after in the foure and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred and fiftie, made one of the firſt knights of the garter, at the erecting of that honorable order. Wherwith being honored, (to make it appéere to the world that the ſame was not vnworthilie laid vpon him, but moſt iuſtlie for his martiall proweſſe, who ſtill followed the warres) in the fiue and twentith and ſix and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred & fiftie, he went twiſe to Calis in the companie of William biſhop of Norwich. After which, in the nine and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand thrée hundred fiftie and fiue he paſſeth to Burdeaux with the Blacke prince, and followed his armie, as a companion with him in all his conflicts and battels: which in the ſame yeare this Bartholomew, Iohn Chandois, and Iames Audleie with foure & twentie knights comming to the taile of the French armie, flieng awaie, tooke two & thirtie knights and gentlemen priſoners, amongſt whome was the erle of Romenne. After which it ſéemeth that he liued not long, for in the Michaelmas terme in the thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third there is mention made of the executors of Bartholomew Burgerſh conſtable of Douer caſtell.

Roger de Mortimer.

Roger de Mortimer was conſtable of Douer caſtell in Michaelmas terme, in the one and thirtith yeare of Edward the third, being the ſame man (as I ſuppoſe) which was the ſonne of Edward Mortimer lord of Wigmore, and as the Welſh hiſtorie reporteth, pag. 317, by king Edward the third, in the 29 yeare of his reigne reſtored to the earledome of March; or els was Roger Mortimer vncle to Roger earle of March. But becauſe time ſerueth not to decide which of them it was, I leaue it to others.

Iohn Beauchampe of Warwike knight, was conſtable of Douer caſtell, & warden of the cinque ports, the firſt daie of December, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore & one, and the fiue and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, to whome ſuccéeded Robert Herle knight.

Robert Herle knight, liuing in the one and thirtith yeare of Edward the third, being the ſonne and heire of William Herle lord of Kirkbie, who died in the one and twentith yere of Edward the third, was in the fiue and twentith yere of king Edward the third, capteine of Calis, and alſo conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the ſix and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and two, as appeareth by the records of Pellis exitus, where it is thus entred in the firſt daie of December in the Pell of Michaelmas terme of the ſame ſix and thirtith yeare. Roberto de Herle militi, cuſtodi caſtri Douer & quinq; portuum, ad totam vitam ſuam eodem modo quo Iohannes de Bello campo de Warwike dum vixit illam habuit. Which Robert (being lord and baron of Kirkbie) died without iſſue in the eight and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, leauing Margaret his ſiſter to be his heire. Of which Margaret, being married to Rafe Haſtings, the now liuing earle of Huntington Henrie Haſtings is deſcended.

Rafe Spigornell.

Rafe Spigornell knight was conſtable of Douer caſtle, & warden of the cinque ports, in the fortith and fortie fourth of Edward the third, to whome the ſame king gaue fourtie pounds in reward, becauſe that he brought a crowne of gold adorned with pretious ſtones, as a token from his daughter in law the princeſſe of Wales: whereof I haue ſéene this note in the Pellis exitus of Michaelmas terme of the ſix and thirtith of the ſame Edward the third, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and two, and the fouretéenth of October: Radulpho de Spigornell militi, in denarijs ſibi liberatis in perſolutionē 40 libra. quas dominus rex ſibi liberari mandauit de dono ſuo, pro eo quòd idē Radulphus apportauit domino regi quandā coronā de auro & lapidibus pretioſis, de dono dominæ principiſſæ de Wallia, &c. Now for proofe that he was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, ſuccéeding Robert Herle, I find this note entred in the records of the excheker, in Eaſter terme, in the foure and fourtith yere of the reigne of king Edward the third: Radulpho de Spigornell militi, cui dominus rex caſtrū de Douer & quinque portus cum pertinentijs cuſtodiendum ad totam vitam ſuam eodem modo, quo Robertus de Herle dum vixit cuſtodiam illam habuit, percipiens per annum 300 libras pro ſuſtentatione ſua, ac capellanorum, ac vnius carpentarij in dicto caſtro commorantium, & pro robis eorum, &c.

Richard de Penbrig was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the fiue and fortith yeare of Edward the third, being the yere of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and eleuen.

William lord Latimer.

William lord Latimer of Corbie knight, the ſonne of William lord Latimer, and Eliſabeth his wife, owner of Stratton in Bedfordſhire, was conſtable of Douer caſtell in the ſeuen and fortith yeare of Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and thirtéene, in which office he continued in the fiftith yeare of Edward the third, whoſe lieutenant was William de Tidecombe. Which lord Latimer, being in great credit with the king, performed manie notable things, wherof mention is made in our chronicles. For which (as appeareth by record of the excheker of the ſecond part of Michaelmas terme, in the one and thirtith yere of Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and eleuen) it is ſet downe, that the king gaue to this William Latimer one hundred marks a yeare out of the excheker, the words of which record be theſe : Willielmo de Latimer, cui dominus rex 100 marcas annuatim ad ſcaccarium percipiendum pro bono ſeruitio per ipſium eidē domino regi impenſum, quoúſq; terræ quas Eliſabeth, quæ fuit vxor W. Latimer mater prædicti Willielmi tenet in dotem, & aliàs ad terminum vitæ de hæreditate dicti Willielmi ad manus eiuſdem deuenerint, &c.

Walſingham.

Of the actions of which William, warden of the ports, I meane in ſome part here to intreat, beſides that which I haue ſpoken of him in my diſcourſe of the protectors of England, pag. 1076. This man in the eight and thirtith yeare of Edward the third, falling in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred three ſcore and ſeuen, being in the warres of Britaine, in the feaſt of S. Michaell, Charles Blois, (betweene whom and Iohn Montfort there was contention for the dukedome of Britaine) did with an armie of three thouſand and ſix hundred ſuddenlie come vpon Iohn Montfort and the lord William Latimer, whilſt they did beſiege the caſtell & towne of Dowraie, hauing ſcarſe one thouſand and ſix hundred of all ſorts, both Britains and Engliſh. Whereupon the armies going togither without anie deliberation, there were ſlaine on the part of the duke Montfort onelie ſeuen men, and on the part of the intrudor, Charles Blois himſelfe, the lord of Richford, and William Vange knight, and almoſt one thouſand eſquiers; at what time there was alſo taken on the part of the ſaid Charles two earles, twentie lords, and fifteene hundred valiant armed ſouldiors. After this, being the kings chamberlaine, he was (in the fiftith yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred three ſcore and ſixteene) with the duke of Lancaſter by parlement remooued from the king, and others placed in their roomes. But after, the duke of Lancaſter obteining fauour to be protector of the kingdome, reſtored this William Latimer, ſir Richard Sturie and others, to the kings fauour and to their former offices. Which lord Latimer, after the death of Edward the third, continuing in the yoong king Richard his fauour, was before the coronation of the ſaid king Richard, in the firſt yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred three ſcore and ſeuenteene, ſent with ſir Simon Burleie to the Londoners, to ſet an agreement betweene them and the duke of Lancaſter: whereof I will ſpeake more hereafter in the treatie of ſir Simon Burleie, warden of the cinque ports. After which, in the ſame yeare, the Engliſhmen hearing of a multitude of Spaniſh ſhips, which for want of wind were deteined at Scluſe, determined to enter the ſea with a great power, deſirous to requite the wrongs which the Spaniards had doone vnto them the yeare before, in aiding the Frenchmen. Wherefore the Engliſh hauing aſſembled an armie by ſea, Thomas of Woodſtocke erle of Buckingham, William lord Latimer, the lord Fitzwater, ſir Robert Knolles, and manie valiant perſons were made capteins thereof, who going to ſea, felt the croſſe of aduerſe fortune in the midſt of the waues. For by force of extreame tempeſts, their ſhips were diſperſed, broken, drowned, and almoſt all loſt. After which, in the end gathering their nauie together, they returned into England, where anew refreſhing and rigging their ſhips, they tooke another iorneie to the ſea and found better ſucceſſe. He married Eliſabeth the daughter of Edmund erle of Arundell, by whome he had iſſue William which died a child, and Eliſabeth his ſole heire married to Iohn lord Neuill, of whome ſir Fulke Greuill now liuing is deſcended.

mund ntagenet.

Edmund Plantagenet, ſurnamed of Langleie, the ſonne of king Edward the third, was conſtable of Douer caſtle, and warden of the cinque ports, in the one and fiftith of Edward the third, which office he continued in ſome of the firſt yeares of the reigne of king Richard the ſecond, as in his firſt and ſecond yeare, &c. This Edmund, being in his fathers life made erle of Cambridge, was in the time of his nephue king Richard the ſecond, created duke of Yorke, of whome I haue more intreated in my diſcourſe of the dukes of England, pag. 1231.

Robert Aſhton.

Sir Robert Aſhton knight, ſometime treſuror of England, conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the ſixt and ſeuenth yeres of king Richard the ſecond, falling in the yeares one thouſand three hundred foure ſcore and two, and one thouſand three hundred foure ſcore and three of our Lord, who gaue the great bell to the church in Douer caſtell, of whome I haue ſpoken more in my diſcourſe of the treaſurors of England, pag. 1247. He lieth buried in the foreſaid church of Douer caſtell with this epitaph; Hic iacet Robertus Aſhton miles, quondam conſtabularius caſtri Douer, qui obijt 2 die Ianuarij, an. Dom. 1384 cuius animæ propitietur Deus.

Simon Burleie.

Simon Burleie knight of the garter, and banneret, the ſonne of ſir Iohn Burleie knight, which liued in the ſixt of Aprill, in the fortith yeare of Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred three ſcore and ſix, was conſtable of Douer caſtell, as by this ſhort diſcourſe of him it ſhould appeare. Before the obteining of which office, he was on the two & twentith of Iune, being the daie after the death of king Edward the third, and the firſt yeare of Richard the ſecond, in the yeare of our lord one thouſand three hundred three ſcore and ſeuenteene, ſent with William lord Latimer, ſir Nicholas Bond, & ſir Richard Adderburie to the Londoners, who the two and twentith daie of Iulie before, had ſent Iohn Philpot a worthie citizen of London, to touch the death of the late king Edward, and to requeſt the kings fauour about the controuerſies then depending betweene the duke of Lancaſter and the citizens of London. Which ſir Simon Burleie and the reſt comming to London, deliuered to the citizens from the king, that as they brought them heauie newes of the kings death: ſo they were alſo to ſhew them glad tidings of the yoong kings good diſpoſition towards them, who had choſen their citie, and would come vnto them as they had required. Beſides which, the king had ſpoken vnto the duke, who had ſubmitted himſelfe vnto the kings pleaſure in all things. Wherefore they willed the citizens to doo the like, but they refuſed the ſame. Yet at length (after a long diſcourſe had amongſt them therabout, for ſix houres and more) they agreed that if this ſir Simon Burleie and the reſt would enter into bond, that this their ſubmiſſion ſhould not tend to anie temporall loſſe or corporall hurt, that they would willinglie agree to the kings command; wherevpon theſe knights gaue their aſſurance accordinglie. With which ſecuritie the citizens comming to Shene, the king called them before him, and they acknowledged willinglie in all things to ſubmit themſelues to the kings pleaſure. Which doone, the king and nobilitie tooke their iorneie to London towards his coronation, whoſe horſe ſir Nicholas Bond going on foot did lead: at what time alſo this ſir Simon Burleie did carrie the ſword before the king. Which ſir Simon ſtill continuing in the kings fauour, and dailie growing to greater honour, was in the ſeuenth yeare of king Richard, being the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred foure ſcore & foure, made conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, holding that office during his life, as I for this time doo gather. For he was conſtable in the Walſingham.

ſeuenth and eight yeare of Richard the ſecond, hauing beſides that the office of the kings chamberlaine, and manie other great dignities.

Before which, on the foure and twentith of March, in the tenth yeare of the king, being in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred fourеſcore and ſeauen, Richard earle of Arundell admerall for that time, and Thomas Mowbraie earle of Notingham went to the ſea, and tooke about one hundred ſhips laden with wines, conteining one thouſand nine hundred tuns of wines. After which he tooke Breſt in Britaine, and returned into England. Which déeds of the earls being enuied by ſuch as were with the king, as the duke of Ireland, the earle of Suffolke, this ſir Simon Burleie, and Richard Stirie or Sturie, deprauing the earle to the king, ſaid: that he had performed no worthie exploit, but onelie inuaded a few merchants, whoſe amitie it had béene more fruitfull to haue preſerued, than ſo to haue ſtirred vnintreatable hatred. Of all which perſons, the duke of Ireland, ſir Simon Burleie, and the reſt thus in generalitie writeth Walſingham. Hi nimirũ milites plures erãt Veneris quàm Bellonæ, plus valentes in thalamo quàm in campo, plus lingua quàm lancea præmuniti, ad dicendum vigiles, ad faciendum acta Martia ſomnolenti. Hi igitur circa regem conuerſantes, nihil quod deceret tantum militem informare curabant, non dico tantùm armorum vſum, ſed nec ea quæ maximè reges generoſos decent in pace, videlicet, in venationem, vel aucupationem, aut his ſimilia, quibus regni honor creſcit. Thus much by Walſingham.

By which demeanour of this Simon Burleie, he grew in ſuch hatred with the nobilitie, that at a parlement kept at Weſtminſter in Februarie, he was about the firſt of Maie following, in the eleuenth yeare of the king, and in the yeare of our Lord, one thouſand thrée hundred fourеſcore and eight, beheaded: notwithſtanding that the earle of Derbie labored all he could with the nobilitie (which had taken armes againſt the king, for ſupporting of this Simon Burleie and others) to ſaue his life. For which intreatie there fell great diſſention betwéene the earle of Derbie and the duke of Glocеſter. This ſir Simon Burleie being a man of great poſſeſſions in Kent, was lord of manie manors there; and namelie of the manors of Elham, and Colbridge; whereof he did with force diſpoſſeſſe the tenants, as appeareth by theſe letters patents of king Richard the ſecond: the which although they be long, yet for that they conteine manie matters touching the ſaid ſir Simon Burleie, and alſo the names of manie principall perſons and officers in the realme liuing at that time, I ſhall not gréeue to ſet downe in this ſort.

The letters patents of Richard the ſecond, wherein he granted manie parcels of land in Kent with the manors of Elham and Colbridge, to the deane of ſaint Stephans chapell of Weſtminſter, founded by king Edward the third, as by the ſame letters patents plainelie appeareth.

RIchardus Dei Gratia rex Angliæ, & Franciæ, & dominus Hiberniæ, omnibus ad quos præſentes litteræ peruenerint, ſalutem. Sciatis quòd cùm dominus E. nuper rex Angliæ, auus noſter defunctus, collegium liberæ capellæ noſtræ ſancti Stephani infra palacium noſtrũ Weſtmonaſterium de vno decano, & 12 canonicis, 13 vicarijs, & alijs miniſtris ad diuina ſeruitia ibidem pro animabus progenitorum, & ſucceſſorum ipſius aui noſtri in perpetuum faciendum nuper fundaſſet, & per litteras ſuas patentes (quas confirmauimus) conceſſit eidem decano, & canonicis, & eorum ſucceſſoribus pro ſuſtentatione ſua, quingentas & decem libras, percipiend. annuatim de præfato auo noſtro, & hæredibus ſuis in perpetuum, quoúſque eis de terris, aut tenementis, ſeu alijs rebus immobilibus valorem ſummæ prædictæ per annum attingentibus, per prædictum auum noſtrum, vel hæredes ſuos fuiſſet prouiſum: poſtmodúmque idem auus noſter per alias litteras ſuas patētes dediſſet & conceſſiſſet chariſſimo auunculo noſtro duci Aquitan. & Lancaſtr. tunc regi Caſtellæ & Legionis, Simoni tunc archiepiſcopo Cant. Iohan. epiſcopo Lincolniæ, Henrico tunc epiſcopo Wigorniæ, Willielmo tunc domino de Latimer, Iohanni Kneuet tunc cancellario, Roberto de Aſhton tunc theſaurario, Rogero de Beauchampe tunc camerario, Iohanni de Ipres tunc ſeneſchallo hoſpitij, & Nicholao Carew tunc cuſtodi priuati ſigilli eiuſdem aui noſtri, certa caſtra, maneria, dominia, terras, tenementa, redditus, reuerſiones, quæ dictus auus noſter adquiſiuit de quibuſdam perſonis in com. Cant. ac alijs diuerſis comitatibus in Anglia, vnà cum toto ſtauro, bonis, & catallis in eiſdem caſtris, manerijs, terris, & tenementis adtunc exiſtentibus. Habendum & tenendum eidem duci, & alijs perſonis & hæredibus ſuis in perpetuum, abſque aliqua conditione eis declarata, ſuper liberationem chartæ prædictæ, quæ de recordo exiſtit, vt dicitur ſiue antea, aut ſuper liberationem ſeſinam inde eis factam, prout coram nobis, ac dominis, ac paribus regni noſtri, aliàs in parlamento noſtro palam fuerat declaratum, prout ſumus informati. Qui quidem auus noſter poſt dictum feaoffamentum ſic factum in teſtamento ſuo ordinauit, quòd dictum collegium, & aliæ domus religionis, quas fundauit, dotatæ eſſent, & feoffatæ de manerijs, terris, & tenementis, redditibus & reuerſionibus prædictis cum pertinentijs tenendis ſeparatim in perpetuum. Poſt cuius mortem prædicti, dux, Iohannes epiſcopus, Henricus, Robertus, Iohannes de Ipres, & Nicholaus, plenam notitiam vltimæ voluntatis dicti aui noſtri habentes, volentéſque eandem voluntatem, ac ordinationes, & promiſſa ſua prædicta, penes prædictum decanum & canonicos, & ſucceſſores ſuos adimplere, prout in teſtamento ſuo expreſſè fuerũt onerati, maneria, terras, tenemẽta, redditus, & reuerſiones prædicta, inter dictum collegiũ & alias domos religionis prædict. ſecundum diſcretionem ſuam departit. fuerunt, & æqualiter proportionauerunt, ac per ſcriptum ſuum indentatum conceſſerunt, & ad firmam demiſerunt præfatis decano & canonicis, & eorum ſucceſſoribus parcellam maneriorum, terrarum, tenementorum, reddituum, & reuerſionum prædictorum tanquam ratam ſuam eorundem prout intelleximus; videlicet, maneria de Eſhatisford, cum Bartone, Bucwell, Eſeling Meere, Langley iuxta Ledes cum aduocationibus eccleſiarum, francheſijs, warrennis, & omnimodis dominijs ad ea pertinent. ac quandam parcellam prati in Einsford in dicto comitatu Cantiæ, vnà cum toto ſtauro vivo & mortuo in manerijs, terris & tenementis prædictis tunc exiſtent. Nec non reuerſiones maneriorum de Elham, & de Colebridge, cum pertin. in dicto com. Cantiæ, quæ Willielmus Streat iam defunctus, tunc tenens ad terminum vitæ ſuæ, ac etiam reuerſionem manerij de Winchfeeld cum pertinentibus in comitatu Southhampton, quod Iohannes Kimberley tunc tenuit & adhuc tenet ad terminum vitæ ſuæ. Habend. & tenend. præfato decano & canonicis, & ſucceſſoribus ſuis a feſto ſanctæ Paſchæ, anno regni noſtri quinto, vſque ad finem quadraginta annorum, ex tunc proximè ſequentium, ad intentionem quòd dicta maneria

John of Gant fourth ſonne to Edward the third.

Simon Sudberie archbiſhop of Canturburie.

John de Buckingham biſhop of London.

Eſeling otherwiſe called Northcourt, is now in the poſſeſſion of Martin James of Smarden in Kent eſquire, and the other lands in the poſſeſſion of other men.

ria, terræ, tenementa, redditus, reuerſiones, cũ omnibus pertinentijs ſuis, eiſdem decano & canonicis priùs conceſſa, eiſdem decano & canonicis & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, infra eundem terminum ad manum mortuam data forent & aſſignata, tenenda in auxilium ſuſtentationis ſuæ, ac in partem dotationis ſuæ prædictæ in perpetuum, prout per dictum ſcriptum indentatum pleniùs apparet. Virtute cuius dimiſſionis ac attornamenti tenentium præfati decani & canonici inde ſeſiti fuerũt, vt de termino ſuo prædicto & poſſeſſionem ſuam tam dictorum maneriorũ de Elham & Colbridge, poſt mortem prædicti Willielmi Streat quàm omnium aliorum maneriorum, terrarum, tenementorum, & reddituum prædictorum cum pertinentibus in dicto comitatu Cantiæ per tempus non modicũ continuarunt, quouſq; ipſi per Simonem de Burleie chiualer defuncti inde indebitè expulſi fuerunt, vt aſſerunt, cui quidem Simoni ad minùs veram ſuggeſtionem ſuam omnia prædicta maneria, terras, tenementa, & redditus, cum pertinentibus in comitatu Cantiæ, habendum & tenendum eidem Simoni & hæredibus ſuis in perpetuum per litteras noſtras patentes conceſſimus, prout in eiſdem litteris pleniùs continetur. Quæ quidem maneria, terræ, tenementa, & redditus, cum pertinentibus in dicto comitatu Cantiæ, ratione iudicij verſus ipſum Simonem in parlamento noſtro apud Weſtmonaſterium anno regni noſtri vndecimo, tento, reddita in manus noſtras tanquam nobis foriſfacta, ſeſita, & ad centum & vndecim libras per eſchaetorem noſtrum in eodem comitatu Cantiæ extenſa fuerunt: ſubſequentérque ad ſupplicationem prædictorum decani & canonicorum, pro maiore ſecuritate ſua per litteras noſtras patentes conceſſimus Iohanni Sleford perſonæ eccleſiæ de Balſham, Iohanni de Appulton, Thomæ de Oxted capellano, Iohanni Darg capellano, & Richardo Bret capellano, cuſtodiam maneriorum, terrarum, tenemẽtorum, & reddituum prædictorum, cum pertinentijs in dicto comitatu Cantiæ, habendum & tenendum vſque ad finem triginta annorum ex tunc proximè ſequentium, omnimodis exitibus, bladis, fœno, commoditatibus & alijs proficuis, & quibuſcũnq; aiſiamentis maneriorum, terrarum, tenementorum, & reddituum prædictorum cum pertinentibus, præfato decano & canonicis & ſucceſſoribus ſuis exceptis & reſeruatis. Quæ quidem emolumenta per alias litteras patentes eiſdem decano & canonicis priùs conceſſimus, ſicut dicunt. Nos conſiderantes benignum propoſitum & piam intentionem prædicti aui noſtri, de gratia noſtra ſpeciali in complementum vltimæ voluntatis ſuæ, dedimus & conceſſimus pro nobis & hæredibus noſtris, quantum in nobis eſt, præfatis decano & canonicis tam dicta maneria de Aſſhetiſſord, cum Barton, Buckwell, Eſeling Meere, & dictam parcellam in prato Einsford cum toto ſtauro vivo & mortuo ibidẽ exiſtent. quàm dicta maneria de Elham & Colbridge cum aduocationibus eccleſiarum, fœdis militum, parcis, warrennis, piſcarijs, wardis, maritagijs, releuijs, eſchaetis, redditibus, leetis, ſeruitijs, francheſijs, cuſtumis, priuilegijs, & omnibus alijs rebus & proficuis, ad dictum manerium & pratum, vel ad aliquam parcellam eorundem quouis modo pertinentibus ſiue ſpectantibus; habendum & tenendum eiſdem decano & canonicis & ſucceſſoribus ſuis in perpetuum. Conceſſimus inſuper & licentiam dedimus, pro nobis & hæredibus noſtris, quantũ in nobis eſt, prædictis duci & epiſcopo Lincoln. quòd ipſi concedere poſſint, quod manerium de Winchfeeld, vnà cum aduocatione eccleſiæ eiuſdem manerij, quæ prædictus Iohannes Kimberley ſic tenet ad terminum vitæ ſuæ, & quæ poſt mortem eiuſdem Iohannis Kimberley ad præfatos ducem & epiſcopũ Lincoln. eo quòd alij coniunctim ſœffati ſui dies clauſerunt extremos, reuerti deberent poſt mortem ipſius Iohannis Kimberley, remaneant præfatis decano & canonicis, &c. In cuius rei teſtimonium has litteras, &c. Teſte meipſo apud villam Salop. ſexto die Februarij, anno regni noſtri 21.

This patent thus reciting the death of Simon Burleie, amongſt other matters putteth me in mind to ſaie what followed vpon the death of that man, ſo intirelie beloued of the king: who (not ceaſſing to call his death to remembrance, and waiting opportunitie to reuenge the ſame) did in the one and twentith yeare of his reigne, falling in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred foure ſcore and ſeuentéene, giue licence to ſir John Buſſie, to accuſe Thomas Arundell the archbiſhop of Canturburie, and ſometime chancellor to this king Richard the ſecond of thréefold treaſon: whereof the third article was, that by the ſaid traitorous vſurping (meaning of the duke of Gloceſter, of Richard earle of Arundell, and other noble men, vſurping the gouernement of the realme, by a commiſſion granted vnto them therefore by the ſaid archbiſhop, then chancellor) ſir Simon Burleie, and ſir James Barnes knights, faithfull men vnto the king, were traitorouſlie murthered and put to death. Wher vpon the king, although for a time he fullie granted not that the motions of ſir John Buſſie tooke place, yet afterward in reuenge of the death of ſir Simon and others his fréends, the archbiſhop was baniſhed, the duke of Gloceſter murthered, the earle of Arundell beheaded, and the two Cobhams in like ſort forbidden and exiled England. So hard it is for the greateſt power of the nobilitie to contend with their prince, who being the god of the earth, and carieng the ſword, can and will either by force, policie or authoritie iuſtlie with the ſame diſtribute the reward of rebellion.

This ſir Simon died without iſſue, leauing his brother ſir Roger Burleie his heire, of which ſir Roger theſe perſons now liuing are deſcended: Sir Thomas Bromleie knight lord chancellor of England, Philip Howard earle of Arundell, Edward de Wéere erle of Oxford, and John Thin of Longleat in Wiltſhire eſquier, the ſonne and heire of ſir John Thin of Longleat knight, the ſonne and heire of Thomas Boteuile (otherwiſe ſurnamed Thin) and of Margaret his wife, the daughter of Thomas Einus eſquier and of Joiſe his wife, the daughter of John Gatacre eſquire and of Joiſe his wife, the daughter of ſir John Burleie knight, ſonne vnto this ſir Roger Burleie knight (in the chronicles and bookes of the law called Beuerlée) brother to this ſir Simon Burleie, as is before ſaid. To which alſo may be added, as deſcended from this ſir Roger Burleie theſe worſhipfull perſons now liuing, that is to ſaie Corbet of Lée, Ploiden of Ploiden hall, Mitton of Shropſhire, Littleton, Einus, and others; whereof I haue not as yet the full and true deſcents, and therefore cannot lineallie conueie them, as I haue doone ſome of the others before recited.

Sir John Denros.

Sir John Denros knight, of diuerſe chroniclers diuerſlie named (for by ſome he is called Deuereur, by ſome de Euros, and by others de Euers) was conſtable of Douer caſtle and warden of the cinque ports, being ſometime appointed to the cuſtodie of Calis, as appeareth by Walſingham in theſe words, pag. 243. Anno dominicæ incarnationis 1380, qui eſt annus 3 Rich. 2, hoc tempore circa feſtum natalis Domini redijt à Caliſia dominus Gulihelmus de Monteacuto comes Sarum, qui annualem cuſtodiam egerat illius villæ, cui ſubrogatur dominus Iohannes Enros miles, ab antiquo xercitatus in armis. After which, for his worthineſſe, he was made conſtable of Douer caſtell, & warden of the cinque ports, which office he held in the twelfe yeare of Richard the ſecond in Michaelmas terme, falling in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thrée hundred eightie and eight, as appeareth in the records of Pellis exitus of that terme; where mention is made that the king gaue him yearelie during his life, to be paid at Michaelmas and Eaſter, foure ſcore and eight pounds ſix ſhillings and eight pence out of the exchecker for the ſuſtentation of himſelfe, of a chapleine, of ſeruitors, of wardens, and one carpentar, in the ſame caſtell of Douer; which office of warden of the cinque ports he likewiſe held in the fourtéenth yeare of Richard the ſecond, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred eightie and nine. To this man (as ſome haue) was Gefferie Clinton eſquier lieutenant. Beſides which office of the wardenſhip of the ports, he was the kings ſteward, and poſſeſſed both thoſe offices at the time of his death, which ſuddenlie fell vpon him after the manner of an apoplexie in the feaſt of S. Peters chaire: to whom (as hath Walſingham) Thomas Perſie, brother to Henrie earle of Northumberland, and vicechamberleine ſuccéeded in the office of ſteward; and John Beaumont, by ſome (but not rightlie) called Thomas, obteined the honor to be warden of the cinque ports.

John de Beaumont.

John de Beaumont was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the ſixtéenth, ſeuentéenth, eightéenth, & ninetéenth of the depoſed king Richard the ſecond.

Duke Edmund.

Edmund duke of Aumerle and Yorke was conſtable of Douer caſtell and warden of the cinque ports, in the one and twentith yeare of king Richard the ſecond, which office it ſéemed that he continued all the time of the gouernement of the ſame king Richard, vntill his depoſition by Henrie the fourth, who comming to the crowne, not onelie depoſed the king, but alſo remooued this duke of Yorke from the wardenſhip of the ports and Douer caſtell, placing ſir Thomas Erpingham therein, as ſome haue. In which yeare of the one and twentith of that king, Arnold Sauage knight was lieutenant of the caſtell to this Edmund duke of Yorke, of whome is more ſpoken in my diſcourſe of the dukes of England, page, 1231.

Sir Thomas Erpingham.

Sir Thomas Erpingham knight was conſtable of Douer caſtell, in the third yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the fourth, falling in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and two: in which office he continued vntill the tenth yéere of the ſame king, being the yéere of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and nine, who amongſt others (as hath Walſingham) was one, before whome king Richard the ſecond, in the thrée and twentith yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred ninetie and nine, reſigned his kingdome, and releaſed his ſubiects of their oth of obedience vnto him.

Prince Henrie.

Henrie (eldeſt ſonne to king Henrie the fourth, being prince of Wales, duke of Cornewall and erle of Cheſter) was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the twelfe yeare of the reigne of king Henrie his father. Of this Henrie prince of Wales I néed not ſpeake anie more, bicauſe he was after king of England, by the name of Henrie the fift.

John Beaufort.

John Beaufort, marqueſſe Dorſet, whome ſome appoint to be conſtable of Douer caſtell, in the reigne of king Henrie the fourth: which John I ſuppoſe for this time ſuccéeded Henrie prince of Wales.

Thomas erle of Arundell.

Thomas erle of Arundell was conſtable of Douer caſtell, & warden of the cinque ports, in the ſecond and third of the moſt valiant king Henrie the fift. This man being at the ſame time alſo treaſuror of England, occaſioned me to ſaie more of him in my diſcourſe of the lord treaſurors of England, pag. 1250, whereunto I doo refer thée.

Humfrie duke of Gloceſter.

Humfreie duke of Gloceſter was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and lord warden of the cinque ports, in the firſt yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, then being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred twentie and two: which office he continued in the two and twentith yeare of the after depoſed king Henrie the ſixt, falling in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred fortie and foure. Of this man is more ſpoken in my protectors of England, pag. 1078, & in my diſcourſe of the dukes of England, pag. 1233. Beſide which that is there ſet downe, I thinke it not amiſſe in this place to recite ſomewhat of him.

This duke, in the ſeauenth yeare of king Henrie the fift, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and ninetéene, accompanied with the earle Marſhall, and a góodlie tróope of other men, was by the king being in the wars of France, ſent to laie ſiege to the towne and caſtell of Yuorie, which the duke (after manie aſſaults) tóoke by force, but the caſtell thereof was not yéelded vntill the thirtéenth daie of Maie following: ſhortlie after which he alſo tóoke the towne of ſaint Germans. About the feaſt of Simon and Jude, in the fourth yeare of king Henrie the ſixt, falling in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred twentie and fiue, there aroſe gréeuous contention betwéene this duke protector of England, and Henrie Beaufort his vncle biſhop of Wincheſter; whereby great force was aſſembled one both parts. But that diſſention was afterward ſomewhat appeaſed, by the meanes of the prince of Portingall, who rode eight times in one daie betwéene the armies of theſe two great perſons.

Sir James Fines.

Sir James Fines knight, lord Saie, the ſonne of ſir William Fines, was chamberleine to the king, conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the ſix and twentith and ſeuen and twentith of king Henrie the ſixt: of whome I haue more liberallie diſcourſed in the treaſurors of England, as may appeare, pag. 1251, and of whome I will alſo further hereafter intreat in the edition of my other trauels.

Humfrie duke of Buckingham.

Humfreie duke of Buckingham was conſtable of Douer caſtell in the ſeauen and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt, being in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred and ninetéene, which office he continued in the ſeauen and thirtith of the reigne of the ſame king; further holding the ſame office (as I for this time ſuppoſe) vntill his owne death, which happened in the eight and thirtith yeare of that king Henrie the ſixt, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and ſixtie, or thereabouts; of whom is more ſpoken in my diſcourſe of the conſtables of England, pag. 868.

Richard Neuill.

Richard Neuill earle of Warwike and Saliſburie lord Aburgauennie, great chamberlaine of England, and deputie of Calis, was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the firſt yeare of the reigne of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred thrée ſcore and one: of whome I will ſpeake ſomewhat, before that he came to be aduanced vnto this honorable place of warden of the cinque ports. This earle, taking part againſt the king, followed the faction of the familie of Yorke againſt the houſe of Lancaſter; and in the thrée and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt, on the twentith daie of Maie, in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred fiftie and fiue, lieng at Watford or Wadeford beſide S. Albons, did come to the part of Richard duke of Yorke, who with his companie pitched his campe in Keiefield beſides ſaint Albons; at what time the king fixed his banner and power in a place called Goſlew, ſometime called Standforth in ſaint Peters ſtreet in ſaint Albons. Whereupon a battell being had, the king was taken, to whome the duke of Yorke, this earle of Warwike and diuerſe other came, ſubmitted themſelues, craued pardon, and went with the king to London, where the king and this earle were lodged in the biſhops palace. Shortlie after which, a parlement began the ninth daie of Iune, & the ſaid earle was made capteine of Calis, who after he had ſometime remained there, he left the ſame; and on the ſeuenteenth daie of Februarie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred fiftie and ſeuen, being the ſix and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt, came from Calis to London with a great band of men, all attired in red iackets with white ragged ſtaues vpon them, and tooke vp his lodging at the Greie friers. This doone, the king and queene comming to London on the ſeuenteenth daie of March following, there was on the fiue and twentith daie of March, in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand foure hundred fiftie & eight, a feined reconciliation betweene the king, the queene, and the duke of Yorke, this erle of Warwike, and others; who at a generall proceſſion made in S. Paules church in London were thus placed to go in the ſame proceſſion. Firſt the king in his roiall habit with his crown kept the ſtate, before whom went hand in hand the duke of Summerſet, and the earle of Saliſburie, the duke of Exceſter, and this earle of Warwike, and ſo one of one faction, and another of the other ſort. And behind the king, the duke of Yorke led the queene, whome the other ſtates and companie followed orderlie.

But theſe hot coles of diſſention for a time thus coldlie couered with cinders, did in the end breake foorth againe. For ſhortlie after this, in the ſame yere of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred fiftie and eight, in the ſeuen and thirtith yeare of the reigne of Henrie the ſixt, when the king and queene were lodged at Weſtminſter, there did on the ninth daie of Nouember a heauie quarrell ariſe betweene this earle of Warwike, and ſuch as were of the kings houſe, growing to ſuch malicious furie, as that they would haue taken awaie the life of the earle, who hardlie eſcaped their hands to his barge. But hauing ſo recouered himſelfe out of danger, he ſailed to his charge of Calis. Then not being there ſuffered fullie to ſettle (for what will not malice and deſire of reuenge ſeeke to doo in proſecuting the effect of his intent) the duke of Summerſet, by the queenes perſuaſion, and the kings authoritie, which was alwaies vſed as it pleaſed the ſtronger part, was aduanced vnto the gouernment of Calis, and a priuie ſeale directed to this erle of Warwike to giue place vnto him. But the earle, whoſe valiant mind could neuer ſtoope to his enimie, nor brooke anie iniurie by his ſuperior, no not by his king, refuſed the ſame as well for that the duke was then his enimie, and placed by that faction which he hated; as for that the erle was appointed to that place by parlement; which cauſed him to thinke that he ought not to be remoued by anie other authoritie but ſuch as came from a parlement: whereupon by force and will he kept the ſame office. After which, in the moneth of October, in the eight and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſixt, and in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred fiftie & nine, comming from Calis, he ioined with the duke of Yorke, and with the earle of Saliſburie, who all togither directed a letter vnder their hands to the king from Ludlow, dated the tenth daie of October, excuſing them of all their miſdemeanors. But they not finding things to ſucceed to their minds, ſeuered themſelues, and this earle of Warwike returned to Calis, where he ſtill remained: but yet not in ſuch ſafetie for himſelfe and his liuing as he deſired. Who after that he had thus preſumptuouſlie lifted vp his hand againſt our annointed king (an action of plaine rebellion, with what ſhadow ſoeuer he and his complices couered the ſame) was ſhortlie after, amongſt others, at a parlement holden the ſame yeare attainted of high treaſon: wherby his liuings being taken from him, he prepared for preie and ſpoile. For the obteining whereof he rigged a great nauie, kept the narrow ſeas, fought with the Spaniards, killed manie of them, and tooke their great veſſels, with one carricke of Ieane, by which he obteined great riches. Whereupon in the yeare of Grace a thouſand foure hundred and ſixtie, being the nine and thirtith and laſt yeare of the depoſed Henrie the ſixt, the duke of Exceſter admerall was ſent with a great nauie to diſtreſſe this earle of Warwike; but he durſt not ſet vpon the earle now returning from Ireland, where he had bin to haue conference with the duke of Yorke. Theſe things doone, and king Henrie the ſixt depoſed by king Edward the fourth, the ſame king Edward, the ſeuenth of Maie, in the firſt yere of his reigne, being in the yeare of our redemption 1461, made this earle (as is before ſaid) conſtable of Douer caſtell: who being thus honored with the ſame, did (on the tenth daie of Maie following) conſtitute Otwell Worſlie his lieutenant of Douer caſtell, as appeareth by a deed which I haue abridged in this ſort.

The grant whereby Otwell Worſlie is made lieutenant of Douer caſtell by Richard erle of Warwike.

Richardus comes de Warwike, dominus de Burgauenni, magnus camerarius Angliæ, capitaneus villæ & caſtri de Calis ac marchiarum circumuicinarum locum tenens, necnon conſtabularius caſtri Douorenſis, cuſtos & admerallus quinque portuum: omnibus, &c. Cùm nuper chriſtianiſsimus princeps ac metuendißimus dominus noſter Edwardus, Dei gratia rex Angliæ & Franciæ quartus, per litteras ſuas patentes datas ſeptimo die Maij, anno regni ſui primo Angliæ, prout in eiſdem litteris, &c. Nos, &c: de fidelitate, &c: dilecti & fidelis ſeruientis noſtri Otwelli Worſley armigeri ad plenum informati, &c: præfatum Otwellum locum tenentem noſtrum caſtri prædicti, ac portuum prædictorum ſubſtituimus, &c. Datum decimo die Maij prædicti, anno prædicti domini regis Edwardi quarti primo.

After which, about foure yeares, to wit, in the fift yeare of the reigne of king Edward the fourth, this earle of Warwike did by the like grant dated the ſixt daie of Iulie, being the fift yere of the reigne of king Edward the fourth, ſubſtitute Iohn Guilford knight his lieutenant of Douer caſtell and the cinque ports. Thus this much of this earle for this time, of whome I will make a full diſcourſe hereafter, not hauing leiſure now to deliuer both what I know, and haue collected touching him: onlie at this time more ſetting downe, that he married Anne ſiſter and heire to Henrie Beauchamp duke of Warwike: by whome he had iſſue two daughters, Iſabell married to George Plantagenet duke of Clarence; and Anne married firſt to Edward prince of Wales ſonne to king Henrie the ſixt: after whoſe death ſhe was married vnto Richard Plantagenet duke of Gloceſter, after king, by the name of Richard the third.

William Fitzallen.

William Fitzallen earle of Arundell, the ſon of John earle of Arundell, and of Elenor the daughter of ſir John Berkleie knight, was conſtable of Douer caſtell and warden of the cinque ports, in the nineteenth, twentith, and two and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the fourth, but after being diſplaced, he left the ſame to another.

Richard duke of Gloceſter.

Richard duke of Gloceſter vncle vnto king Edward the fift, was conſtable of Douer caſtell and warden of the cinque ports, in the firſt and laſt yeere of the reigne of the ſame yoong but neuer crowned king Edward the fift. This Richard was after king of England, by the name of king Richard the third, of whome I haue ſpoken more in my diſcourſe of the conſtables of England, pag. 869, and of the protectors, pag. 1080.

Henrie duke of Buckingham.

Henrie duke of Buckingham conſtable of England, was alſo conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, after that the duke of Gloceſter had atteined the crowne; which office he kept vntill the yere of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and three, in which he was beheaded in the firſt yeare of the ſame king Richard the third. Of this man I haue ſpoken more liberallie in my treatiſe of the conſtables of England, ſet downe before, pag. 874.

William earle of Arundell.

William earle of Arundell, as I gather the ſecond time made conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, about the firſt of king Henrie the ſeuenth, after that the ſame king had ſlaine king Richard the third at Boſworth field. Which William married Jone the daughter of Richard Neuill earle of Saliſburie, by whome he had amongſt manie other children, Thomas earle of Arundell, and Jone maried to George Neuill lord Aburgauennie.

Henrie prince of Wales.

Henrie prince of Wales, duke of Yorke, and marſhall (as ſome ſaie) of England, and the kings lieutenant in Ireland, being ſecond ſonne to king Henrie the ſeuenth, was conſtable of Douer caſtle, and warden of the cinque ports, about the eleuenth yeare of king Henrie the ſeuenth: of whome, being after king of England by the name of king Henrie the eight, we meane not here to ſpeake anie more.

Arthur Plantagenet.

Arthur Plantagenet, baſtard ſonne to king Edward the fourth, was (as I haue read) made conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports in the time of king Henrie the eight, and was at Bridewell in the right of his wife the ladie Eliſabeth daughter & heire to John Greie vicount Liſle, created vicount Liſle, in the fifteenth yeare of the ſame king, being the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and three. Which doone, in the three and twentith yeare of the ſame king, he attended on the king, when he met the French king betweene Bullogne and Calis. Then in the foure and twentith of king Henrie the eight, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and three, he ſerued as pantler, of right belonging vnto him, when the ladie Anne Bullen was crowned. Which Arthur being committed to the Tower for matters of treaſon, where he a long time remained, being after cleared and to be ſet at libertie, conceiued ſuch great ioie thereof, that he died preſentlie therevpon in March, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and one, being the three and thirtith of king Henrie the eight. He married as before is ſaid, and died without iſſue.

Sir Edward Poinings.

Sir Edward Poinings knight, the ſonne of Robert Poinings was made conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, about the ſeuenteenth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the ſeuenth, falling in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and one; which office he continued, vntill the fifteenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, falling about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and three. During which his conſtableſhip of Douer caſtell, he had two lieutenants, whereof the firſt was Rafe Tuckeie of Bere eſquier: after whoſe deth ſucceded John Cowpeldike eſquire. But before this ſir Edward Poinings was conſtable of Douer, he was in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and fourteene, about the tenth yeare of king Henrie the ſeuenth, made capteine, or (as ſome haue) deputie of Ireland, and ſent with Henrie Deane chancellor of that Iland, amongſt the Iriſh, to purge the realme of ſuch as fauoured Parkin Warbecke; but when he could not bring things to paſſe there as he would, he cauſed the earle of Kildare, whom he ſuſpected to be an hinderance vnto his purpoſe, to be brought into England, but the earle purging himſelfe was returned into Ireland and made deputie.

After this, in the 12 yere of Henrie the ſeuenth, in the yeare of Chriſt 1497, he was with the earle of Kent John Lord Cobham, and ſir Richard Guilford at Blackeheath field, where James lord Audlie, and the Blacke Smith were ouerthrowne. Next, when king Henrie the ſeuenth died, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and nine, he was (when K. Henrie the eight came to the crowne) made one of the priuie councell. Then in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and ten, being the ſecond yeare of king Henrie the eight; this ſir Edward Poinings, being knight of the garter, and controllor of the kings houſe, was as capteine generall ſent with one thouſand and fiue hundred archers to helpe Margaret duches of Sauoie, and regent of the low countries, againſt ſuch as moleſted hir gouenment. Which ladie receiued him with great honor, and ſo they ioined themſelues with hir armie; which after manie other exploits performed, came at length to a towne called Strawlie, of great defenſe, and double ditched, where they planted their ſiege: at what time ſir Edward Poinings, who euer was in the fore-ward with his armie, cauſed ſuch ſpeedie trenches and paſſages to be made, that within three daies after the towne was ſurrendered, and ſir Edward Poinings with the admerall of Flanders and others entered the ſame. This doone, they beſieged Venlow, & when the Engliſh were quiet, and that ſir Edward Poinings was at dinner with monſieur de Romie, they of Venlow iſſued out, ſet vpon the Engliſh, hurt ſome, and tooke two priſoners; whome after the Engliſh reſcued, & got the victorie of their enimies. This doone, they left the ſiege of Venlow, and ſir Edward Poinings departed to the court of Burgognie, where he was honorablie interteined, and richlie rewarded. Wherewith he paſſed into England, not hauing loſt one hundred men in all that iourneie.

But within three yeares after, which was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and thirteene, being the fift yeare of king Henrie the eight, this noble knight went with the king to the warres of France, commonlie called the winning of Turwine & Turneie: at what time in the battell there, ſir Edward Poinings with ſix hundred men kept on the kings right hand, as the king went out of Calis to the ſiege of Turwine: and when Turneie was taken, this knight was made the kings lieutenant of that towne, hauing the cuſtodie thereof committed vnto him; who valiantlie kept it in good order and iuſtice. After this, in the twelfe yeare of king Henrie the eight, he attended vpon the king of England, meeting the French king at Ard. Shortlie after which, he returned into England, & died in the Lent following, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and one, ſuſpected to be poiſoned in the banket at Ard. Who in his life time hauing two hundred pounds penſion yearelie of the emperor, going out of the houſe of Burgognie, began to build a moſt ſtatelie houſe at Oſtenhanger, now commonlie called Weſtenhanger; which being by him left vnperfected, did after come to the hands of hir maieſtie, who gaue the cuſtodie thereof to ſir Thomas Sackeuill lord Buckhurſt; and is now in poſſeſſion of Thomas Smith of London eſquier, cuſtomer of the ſame citie: whoſe wealth in ſhort time hath raiſed him to great reuenues of lands in the countie of Kent, and likewiſe elſwhere. This ſir Edward Poinings did marie Iſabell the daughter of ſir Iohn Scot of Kent knight, by whome he had iſſue.

Henrie Fitzroie.

Henrie Fitzroie earle of Richmond, & duke Summerſet, the baſtard ſonne of king Henrie the eight, (by the ladie Tailboiſe) in the abſence of this ſir Edward Poinings, was conſtituted conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports; of whom I haue ſpoken more in my diſcourſe of the dukes of England, pag. 1237.

Sir Edward Guilford.

Sir Edward Guilford knight (the eldeſt ſonne of ſir Richard Guilford knight, & brother to ſir Henrie Guilford knight of the noble order of the garter, controllor of the houſe, and one of the priuie councell to king Henrie the eight) was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports; of whome I am to intreat, after that I haue ſet downe this note of his father ſir Richard Guilford: who aſſiſting king Henrie the ſeuenth in the atteining of the crowne, was after controllor of the houſe, and one of the priuie councell to the ſaid king Henrie the ſeuenth. Which ſir Richard did after take his iourneie into the Holie land, where he died, and was buried beſides the temple or church of our ſauior in Ieruſalem; of whom I thought good not to omit this ſpeach, becauſe that he was father to three ſuch worthie gentlemen; as were ſir Edward, ſir Henrie, and George Guilford, of all which we onelie meane to intreat.

This ſir Edward Guilford conſtable of Douer caſtell, which office he continued vntill the fiue and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, falling in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and three, which ſir Edward dwelling at Halden in the countie of Kent, in the pariſh of Rowlenden, was alſo one of the priuie councell to king Henrie the eight, as was alſo his brother ſir Henrie Guilford, as is before touched. This ſir Edward, being marſhall of Calis, did with fiftie men of armes richlie beſeene, and one hundred archers on horſſebacke, receiue the emperor Charles the fift at the Turne pike, in the lordſhip of Marke, and brought him to Calis, on the fiue and twentith of Maie, and the foureteenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our redemption, one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and two. After, in the ſame ſummer, whileſt the wars were vehementlie purſued betweene the Engliſh and French on both parts; the capteine of Bullogne called Faiet, ſent ſcoffing letters to the garriſon of Calis, affirming that if the Caliſians would iſſue out, he would incounter them halfe waie with foure thouſand men. Wherevpon this ſir Edward Guilford as yet marſhall of Calis, whome the capteine of Bullogne called the firebrand, becauſe it was his cogniſance, ſet forth from Calis the 11 daie of Iune, with one thouſand two hundred, ſending a purſeuant to the capteine of Bullogne, to aſcerteine him that he was come with his firebrand, and willing him to keepe promiſe, which the officer did accordinglie: but monſieur the French bragger came not. Whervpon ſir Edward Guilford came to Morgiſon, where he yet a while remained, expecting the comming of the capteine of Bullogne.

But when he ſaw that Faiet failed his word, he ſet fire on Morgiſon, burnt the villages about them, forraged the countrie, and returned with a preie of beaſts and other pillages. The next daie following, this ſir Edward deliuered a priſoner freelie without ranſome, on condition that he ſhould tell the capteine of Bullogne that he had beene at Morgiſon with his firebrand: which meſſage the priſoner did accordinglie; in recompenſe wherof, the capteine of Bullogne brake his head. But ſir Edward not contented with this, but ſtill looking for monſieur Faiet, did on the fiue and twentith of Iune, ioine with ſir William Sands treaſuror: and they togither hauing a troope of one thouſand & foure hundred men, iſſued out of Calis, went to the French pale, ſet fire on Whitſandbaie, and tooke the church, wherunto the people were fled, and caried manie priſoners to Calis. Againe, in the ſame yeare, about the two and twentith daie of Auguſt, in the battell which the lord admerall led into France, ſir Edward Guilford was appointed capteine of the horſſemen, by whome the currers and vewers of the countrie were placed and named. Then in the yeare following, in the end of Auguſt, in the fifteenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and three, this ſir Edward was againe appointed to aſſiſt Charles Brandon duke of Suffolke, going with an armie roiall to make war in France: at what time alſo, as he had beene before in the armie of the admerall, ſo was he now againe made capteine of the horſſemen, ſtill continuing the office of marſhall of Calis. During the continuance of which wars vnder the duke of Suffolke, he with the campe about the thirteenth daie of Nouember, remoued two miles from the caſtell of Bowhen, which was iudged impregnable: at what time there was a great froſt which continued long.

Notwithſtanding which, ſir Edward Guilford capteine of the horſemen, viewed the caſtle of Bowhen or Boughan, which he ſuppoſed might be woone; notwithſtanding that the caſtell was inuironed with mariſhes, which by our mens iudgements made it inuincible. But ſir Edward perceiuing the froſt ſo ſtrong, ſaid that they might well beſiege it. Whervpon obteining licence of the duke therfore, he ſet forth with the ordinance ouer the mariſh, which being eſpied by ſuch as were in the caſtell, they were greatlie diſmaid. At length ſir Edward Guilford diſcharging three great ſhot againſt them, the caſtillians requited them with the like. After, as the Engliſh gunners were preparing to the batterie, the capteine perceiuing that his caſtell could not beare it out, yeelded the ſame to the behoofe of the emperor and the king of England. Thus leauing this knight (who had for his lieutenant of Douer caſtell, after the death of Cowpledike, Richard Deering eſquire) continuallie increſing his fame in wars, and his honour in peace, with great fauour of the prince for his worthie deſerts. We ſaie that he married Elenor, the daughter of Thomas Weſt lord Laware, by whome he had iſſue one onelie daughter and heire, married to Iohn Sutton of Dudleie after duke of Northumberland; which noble knight ſir Edward Guilford died and was buried at Halden before named.

George Bullen.

George Bullen knight, lord Rochford, the ſonne of Thomas Bullen earle of Wiltſhire, was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports, in the ſix & twentith yere of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our redemption one thouſand fiue hundred fiue and thirtie, in which office he continued vntill the foure and thirtith yeare of the reigne of the ſame king, falling in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and two, hauing for his lieutenant of Douer caſtell the forenamed Richard Dœring.

Thomas Cheineie.

Thomas Cheineie knight, after the death of the lord Rochford, was in the foure and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the eight made conſtable of Douer caſtell, and warden of the cinque ports: which office he continued in ſome part of the time of foure princes, longer (as far as my memorie ſerueth) than anie of his predeceſſors had doone before him. For he held the ſame in the time of king Henrie the eight, king Edward the ſixt, queene Marie, and ſome ſmall time in the begining of the reigne of queene Eliſabeth, in whoſe firſt yeare by death he left the ſame; hauing for his lieutenants the foreſaid Richard Dæring and William Cripſe eſquire. And yet this ſir Thomas Cheineie, poſſeſſing that office about the ſpace of eighteene yeares, did not inioie it ſo long as the woorthie lord Cobham his ſucceſſor hath poſſeſſed it. For the ſame lord Cobham (as after ſhall appeare) hath honorablie inioied the ſame by theſe eight and twentie yeares. But paſſing ouer that, we are here to talke of ſir Thomas Cheineie: who being a toward yoong gentleman, and full of courage, but not yet knighted, obteined of the king in the ſixt yeare of Henrie the eight, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and foureteene, to paſſe ouer with the duke of Suffolke and others into France, to anſwer a iuſts proclamed at Paris, and challenged by Francis duke de Valois, at the coronation of Marie queene of France, daughter of king Henrie the ſeuenth, and wife to Lewis the twelfe of that name: at what time this ſir Thomas Cheineie behaued himſelfe right valiantlie. Who being after a knight, and the kings ambaſſador in France, did in the fourteenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and two, ſend letters to the king his maiſter being at Calis with the emperor: in which were conteined, that ſir Thomas Cheineie had mooued the French king to peace with the emperor, and reſtitution of the Engliſhmens goods, which he had wrongfullie deteined and ſpoiled: but the French king denied it. At length ſir Thomas Cheineie with Clarenceaux, who denounced war againſt the French king, hauing a ſafe conduct from the French, departed, and came to Bullogne, where he was ſtaied, vntill the ambaſſador of France which had laien at Calis, were cleerelie deliuered out of Calis.

Then in the eighteenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, this ſir Thomas Cheineie being of the kings priuie councell, was ſent by the king his maiſter to the French king as an ambaſſador congratulatorie, in that the king of England greatlie reioiſed at the libertie of the French king, & the end made betwixt him & the emperor, who had taken the French king at the battell of Pauie. After which, in the one & thirtith yeare of the ſame Henrie, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and nine, he in the Chriſtmaſſe time receiued at Deale vpon the Downs the ladie Anne of Cleue landed in England to be maried to king Henrie the eight, from whenſe this lord warden of the cinque ports, with diuerſe dukes and ladies, brought hir to Douer caſtell, where ſhe for a time did reſt hir ſelfe. Beſide which in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and foure, he with the earle of Surreie, ſonne and heire to the duke of Northfolke, did take a towne in the dominion of France called ſaint Requiers.

Then in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and nine, being the third yeare of king Edward the ſixt, he amongſt others of the councell, (for now he was one of that number, and treſuror of the houſhold) ſet his hand vnto a letter directed to the maior and citizens, wherein certeine of the nobilitie praied their aid againſt the duke of Summerſet protector of the realme; which doone, in the ſixt yere of the ſaid king, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and two, this ſir Thomas Cheineie, in a muſter of horſſemen before the king at Greenewich of the nobilitie, did ſhew himſelfe equall in number of horſſe with the moſt of them, hauing of his retinue a hundred perſons well horſſed vnder his banner of the roſe, with the ſun beames. But king Edward not liuing long after, this lord warden did in the ſeuenth and laſt yeare of the ſame king, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and three, among others of the councell ſet his hand to a letter ſent vnto queene Marie, wherein queene Iane was allowed queene; and queene Marie ſiſter to king Edward reiected from the crowne. After which being in the Tower (with queene Iane whome they had proclamed) and miſliking of the ſucceſſe of things which they had attempted, he with others ſought to get out of the Tower, to conſult in London with ſuch others of the councell as were there aſſembled, but he could not haue anie paſſage from thenſe. Yet in the end queene Marie preuailing, and he eſcaping without anie danger for that which he had doone againſt hir, he did in the firſt yere of the reigne of the ſame queene oppoſe himſelfe againſt Wiat, and ſuch as ſuccoured that rebellion. Wherefore he not onlie ſent defiance vnto the ſaid Wiat, but alſo came to Rocheſter with his power againſt him, at what time he ſhewed himſelfe a dutifull ſubiect vnto queene Marie: notwithſtanding all whatſoeuer before doone by him againſt hir. He maried two Wiues, the firſt was Frideſwide, the daughter and one of the heires of Thomas Frowicke knight, cheefe iuſtice: by whome he had iſſue Iohn Cheineie (ſlaine at Mutterell, after that he had maried Margaret the daughter of George Neuil lord of Aburgauennie) Katharine married to Thomas Kempe knight, Francis married to Nicholas Cripſe, the ſonne of ſir Henrie Cripſe knight and Anne married to ſir Iohn Perot knight. His ſecond wife was the daughter and heire of Broughton knight, by whome he had iſſue Henrie, after in the fourteenth yeare of the queene now liuing, falling in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred ſeauentie and one, called by writ to be one of the barons of the parlement houſe, by the name of the lord Cheineie of Tuddington in Bedfordſhire. This woorthie knight ſir Thomas Cheineie died in the firſt yeare of the reigne of the noble queene Eliſabeth, and was buried at Minſter in the Ile of Sheppeie, whereof he was the greateſt lord.

Sir William Brooke.

Sir William Brooke knight, lord Cobham, was made conſtable of Douer caſtell, warden of the cinque ports, and chancellor of the ſame, after the death of ſir Thomas Cheineie, in the firſt yeare of the queenes reigne that now is; being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and nine: of whom becauſe I haue ſpoken more liberallie in my diſcourſe of the lord Cobhams of Cobham, I will not here ſaie anie thing but this; that he hauing poſſeſſed this place by the ſpace of eight and twentie yeares, being much longer time than anie of his predeceſſors, hath (in executing that office) caried himſelfe with ſuch honor and loue, that he woorthilie deſerueth, and his countrie hopeth he ſhall inioie the ſame manie following yeares, to his owne honor, and his countries benefit: whome I will here leaue in his princes fauor, and ſet end to all my diſcourſes inſerted in the new augmented chronicles of Holinſhed, with the ſucceſſion of the lord wardens of the cinque ports.

The note of Reginald Scot eſquier concerning Douer hauen.

¶ In this yeare one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and ſix, certeine of the lords of hir maieſties moſt honourable priuie councell made an appointment to haue met at Douer, to ſuruey a notable peece of worke there latelie performed about the hauen, to the benefit of the whole land. Howbeit the ſaid lords, by means of other accidents of importance, ſtaid at the court, and went not that iourneie. Neuertheleſſe the lord Cobham, lord warden of the cinque ports, one of hir maieſties priuie councell, repairing thither (accompanied with diuerſe knights and gentlemen of great worſhip) did take the view both of the worke finiſhed, and alſo conferred about the buſineſſe then in hand. Now for ſo much as that which is alreadie doone, is a perfect and an abſolute worke, to the perpetuall maintnance of a hauen in that place, being ſuch a monument as is hardlie to be found written in anie record, it might ſeeme abſurd that no mention thereof ſhould be made in this chronicle: and that the coſt and buſineſſe thereabouts imploied hath not beene vnneceſſarie, may appeare by the reaſons inſuing.

Conſiderations why the building of Douer hauen is here recorded.

Douer the nereſt place of England to France.

Douer the moſt conuenient place of England for a hauen.

Reaſons whie a harbor at Douer would be ſo beneficiall

Firſt, Douer hath beene euer reputed the keie and locke (as Matthæus Pariſienſis reporteth) or (as rather he ſhould haue ſaid) the verie doore and entrance into the realme of England, either for freend or fo, and alſo the readie paſſage vnto all nations, but eſpeciallie into France, from whenſe it is not diſtant aboue thirtie Engliſh miles, and is commonlie paſſed in fiue or ſix houres at the moſt, and in a proſperous wind within halfe the time. Secondlie, it ſtandeth in the moſt conuenient place of all this land to offend the enimie, and to defend either domeſticall or forren freend. Thirdlie, a meane harbor would be there (in the opinion of all ſkilfull mariners) more beneficiall and commodious for the nauigation of England, than an excellent hauen placed anie where elſe about the coaſt thereof. Fourthlie, all our paſſengers through the narrow ſeas being diſtreſſed by violence of weather, or by inconuenience of piraſie, or elſe by force of the common enimie in the time of warre, might there haue preſent ſuccor and refuge, and both ſpeedie and eaſie paſſage thereinto, or otherwiſe be beſt reſcued. Fiftlie, of late yeares, the conſiderations aforeſaid haue mooued ſome noble princes of this land, to beſtow infinit treaſure to gaine a harbourough or hauen in that place, to their great honor, fame, and commendation, to the woonderfull contentment of all their ſubiects, and for the good and benefit of all the neighbors adioining, and ſtrangers paſſing theſe narrow ſeas. Finallie, it hath pleaſed our moſt noble queene Eliſabeth to vndertake it, who in all good actions and neceſſarie workes, for the benefit of the realme, and commonwealth of England, hath beene ſo liberall, carefull, and prouident, as thereby hir glorie and renowme is ſpread ouer all the face of the earth, and reacheth vnto heauen, where the King of kings ſitteth, and heareth the praiſes and praiers, not onelie of hir owne people, but of all chriſtians liuing in hir behalfe, for whoſe good (it ſeemeth) ſhe was brought foorth and preſerued in this world.

A true commendation of queene Eliſabeth.

The pent at Douer will mainteine a hauen there for euer.

And now (I ſaie) for ſo much as hir highneſſe hath at this preſent time taken order for the building of a new hauen in this place, and bountifullie imploied great ſummes of monie vpon the ſame (being begun with more probabilitie, iudgement, and circumſpection, and accompanied with better ſucceſſe than euer anie of hir highneſſe predeceſſors haue heretofore had in this caſe, wherein the moſt difficult and dangerous worke is alreadie accompliſhed, ſo as there is now and euer hereafter will be a verie good hauen, except extreame negligence be vſed in mainteining the ſame) I thought it a moſt neceſſarie matter to be here recorded, to hir maieſties perpetuall fame, and partlie alſo to giue light & incouragement to hir ſucceſſors in the crowne of England, to attempt and vndertake, and the better to execute and accompliſh the like famous enterpriſe. For actions of farre leſſe importance are made memorable by hiſtoriographers, as in euerie chronicle may appeare.

In peramb. Cant. tit. Douer.

Douer caſtell reedified by queene Eliſabeth.

Edward the fourth beſtowed 10000 pounds vpon reparations of Douer caſtell.

In this diſcourſe I thought meet to paſſe ouer the antiquitie of the towne and port of Douer, with the liberties thereof; which togither with the ruines and miſfortunes of fire are to be found extant in the perambulation of Kent, written by William Lambard eſquier. Of Douer caſtell ſomewhat might here be ſaid, but for ſo much as maiſter Lambard hath ſo largelie diſcourſed thereupon in his booke, which is likelie to remaine of continuance, I will make bold with the reader to referre him thereunto; and onelie giue this note (to wit) that whereas he iuſtlie complaineth of the miſerable ruines therof; it hath pleaſed hir maieſtie (in reſpect of the neceſſarie maintenance of the ſame) to beſtow more charge of late in reparing and reedifing of it; than hath beene ſpent thereabouts (as it ſeemeth) ſince the firſt building thereof, whether the ſame were doone by Julius Ceſar the Romane emperor, or by Aruiragus then king of the Britains (king Edward the fourth onelie excepted) who (as Iohn Roſſe reporteth) did throughlie repaire it, beſtowing thereon 10000 pounds, inſomuch as it is now reduced to be a peece of great force and importance, and verie beautifull to behold. Wherin the honorable diſpoſition of the lord Burleie lord high treaſuror of England is to be commended, who was a principall furtherer thereof, & whoſe forwardneſſe in all militarie affaires is had in admiration among all the beſt ſouldiours of England, although he himſelfe an aged and a moſt graue councellor. And in theſe commendations if I ſhould omit the praiſes of the honorable lord Cobham, lord warden of the cinque ports, and conſtable of the caſtle of Douer, &c: I ſhould doo him great wrong. For by his prouidence and mediation, togither with the diligent trauell and induſtrie of Richard Barrie eſquier, lieutenant of the ſaid caſtell, that worke is accompliſhed, to the comfort and benefit of the whole realme. Within the wals whereof is now alſo raiſed ſuch a mount at the north ſide thereof, as thereby the caſtell is double ſo ſtrong as before. But omitting all other occaſions and matters concerning Douer, I will now paſſe to my purpoſe.

The ſituation of Douer harbour.

A naturall rode for ſhips at Douer.

The hauen of Rie decaied, whereby more need of a harboure at Douer.

Ships loſt for lacke of ſufficient harbour at Douer.

But yet, before I enter into theſe laſt works, I muſt giue you to vnderſtand, that the verie ſituation of the place miniſtreth incouragement to the executionors, and yeeldeth great fauor and occaſion to the attempt. For Douer cliffes ſtand to the ſea north and eaſt, the towne being placed at the foot of the northerne cliffes, the caſtle on the top of the eaſterne cliffes, called the Caſtell Raie: ſo as there is a naturall baie, through the which from by north iſſueth a proper riuer entring into the ſame baie: and thenſe runneth through the hauen into the ſea. In times paſt, vntill of late yeares, that onelie baie hath ſerued them for a rode, and at manie times in ſome ſort hath ſtood the nauie (but eſpeciallie the fiſher botes) in good ſted. For in a great northernlie and weſternlie wind, the ſhips were driuen from the Downes and the forland to repaire thither, where they might lie ſafelie vntill the wind blew great from by eaſt or ſouth, and then were they driuen to depart thenſe vnto the Camber at Rie (which then was a notable good rode, though now vtterlie decaied) or into the Iſle of Wight. For in a ſudden flaw or ſtorme of wind at ſoutheaſt, there hath bin ſeuen or eight ſhips broken all to peeces in one daie vpon

The firſt benefit beſtowed on Douer harbour.

Little paradiſe.

In the reigne of Edward the Confeſſor.

the ſaid cliffes. To relieue & amend the ſame harborough, and ſomwhat to mitigate the foreſaid inconuenience, there was a round tower built by one Iohn Clarke, prieſt, maiſter of the maiſon de Dieu, about the yere one thouſand fiue hundred at the ſouth weſt part of the ſaid baie, which ſerued ſomewhat to defend the ſhips from the rage of the ſouthweſt wind, but eſpeciallie to moore the ſhips which were tied therevnto. For manie great ringles were faſtened to the ſame tower for that purpoſe, as it maie yet be ſeene, ſith it ſtandeth there at this houre. And hereby that part of the baie was made ſo pleaſant, as euer after that corner hath beene named, and is at this daie called Little paradiſe. Neuertheleſſe this was thought verie inſufficient in reſpect of the place, for the ſafegard of ſuch a multitude of ſhips as vſuallie laie for harbour in that rode. For beſides all ſtrange botes which commonlie repaired thither, it appeareth in the booke of Doomeſdaie, that Douer armed yearelie at his proper charges twentie veſſels to the ſea by the ſpace of fifteene daies, with one and twentie able men in ech ſhip.

Sir Iohn Thomſon prieſt his ſupplication.

Fiue hundred pounds giuen by Henrie the eight towards a beginning of Douer works. The maiſon de Dieu of Douer.

Surueiors and ouerſeers.

Now about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and two, one ſir Iohn Thomſon clarke parſon of the pariſh of ſaint Iames in Douer, being a man ingenious, and ſeeing the conueniencie and poſſibilitie of a good hauen to be made in that place, conſulted with the chiefe and beſt mariners of the towne. Among whom it was agreed, that humble ſute ſhould be made to the kings maieſtie by the ſtate of the towne, for his gratious fauor and aid toward the making of a good hauen there. And it was alſo by them all thought meet, that the ſaid ſir Iohn Thomſon ſhould exhibit their petition to his highneſſe: whereunto he agreed, and drew a plot, and prepared a ſupplication in the name and behalfe of the towne, conteining the neceſſarie cauſes and reaſons, deuiſes and inſtructions, for the erection and building therof. But he told them he was poore, and therefore vnable of his owne proper charges to follow the ſute. In which reſpect they collected among themſelues, and deliuered vnto him foure pounds ten ſhillings, which he accepted, and foorthwith repaired to the court; where he ſo demeaned himſelfe, as he had preſent acceſſe to the king, who heard his ſute with great fauor, and debated with him about the contents of his plot, and liked ſo well of his informations that he willed him to repaire home, & without delaie to returne to his preſence accompanied with ſome of the beſt mariners or ſeamen of the towne, and ſo with commendations diſmiſſed him for that time. When the maiſter of the towne vnderſtood his graces pleaſure, they immediatlie aſſembled themſelues, and made choiſe of Edward Maie, Robert Iuſtice, Richard Cowchie, and Iohn Steward, as the fitteſt and ſkilfulleſt perſons to vſe conference, and to be imploied in that cauſe, being all mariners of good experience. Theſe foure and the ſaid ſir Iohn Thomſon without further ſtaie reſorted to the court, with whom when the king had communed, he conceiued of the neceſſitie of a hauen to be there had, and of the probabilitie and likelihood of good ſucceſſe in the enterpriſe to be performed according to their ſuggeſtion. And becauſe his maieſtie vnderſtood the poore eſtate of the towne, he granted his gratious aid for the ſupplie of their want of monie, deliuering at that time out of his owne cofers vnto them the ſumme of fiue hundred pounds, wherewith he willed them to make a beginning of the worke. At which time he beſtowed on the ſaid ſir Iohn Thomſon the maiſterſhip of the maiſon de Dieu of Douer, which was a hoſpitall, valued at one hundred and twentie pounds by the yeare: the cuſtome and dutie of the which houſe was (as the ancient towneſmen informe me) to interteine and relieue ſouldiors, and others which came from beyond the ſeas, hurt or diſtreſſed, who were allowed ſome reliefe there by the ſpace of certeine daies gratis: which though I find not directlie ſet downe in record, yet doo I know aſſuredlie the ſame to haue beene put in execution, wherewith the verie name of the houſe is agreeable, and as it were a credible witneſſe. The king at that time alſo appointed the ſaid ſir Iohn to be principall ſurueior of the works, and vnder him the other foure to be ouerſeers of the ſame.

Sir Iohn Thomſons deuiſe diſcouered.

The Molehead.

Douer pierre when it was taken in hand, and whereof it conſiſteth.

Now am I to giue you to vnderſtand, that the drift and deuiſe of the ſaid ſir Iohn Thomſon was to erect a huge wall (which he termed by the name of a pierre) from Arcliffe chapell being the ſouthweſt part of the baie directlie towards the eaſt into the maine ſea, about 131 rods in length: ſo as by that means the harborough was to be garded from the rage of all weather, comming from the north, northeaſt, northweſt, and ſouthweſt, and ſo the entrance onelie at eaſt ſoutheaſt, wherinto when the ſhips were once brought, they might there lie ſafe in all weather, at the one ſide or the other. But the pierre was not finiſhed by 530 foot ſo farre as the foundation thereof (which is called the Molehead) was laid, which foundation conſiſted of great rocks, brought from a place neere hand, called Hakcliffe, or the caſtell Raie & Folkſtone. This pierre was begun on S. Annes daie 1533, and it was compiled of two rowes of maine poſts, and great piles, of fiue or ſix & twentie foot long, ſet at each ſide cloſe togither, which were let downe and put in certeine holes hewed in the great rocks, laid for that purpoſe: but ſome of thoſe piles were ſhod with iron, and driuen into the maine rocke of chalke, with a great engine called a ram. Theſe poſts and piles were combined and held togither with iron bolts, and were filled with mightie ſtones of chalke and with beach and other earth: but the bottome conſiſted altogither of great rocks of ſtone, which if they had not beene brought thither by a ſpeciall deuiſe, muſt needs haue beene extreame chargeable, for manie of them were of twentie tun a peece, and few vnder.

A notable deuiſe to carrie great rocks by water.

Foure pence a daie.

The practiſe of this cariage is now common, but it was before that time rare & vnknowne in England, and inuented there by a poore ſimple man named Iohn Yoong, who firſt with a nutſhell, and after with an egſhell, & laſtlie with a ſmall veſſell, made proofe what weight thoſe things could raiſe & beare in the water; and hauing by that experiment made triall, or at leaſt a probable coniecture, that ſtones of great weight might be raiſed and carried in the water by greater veſſels: he diſcouered his experience to ſuch as were officers in the worke, who preſentlie put in practiſe and execution the ſame deuiſe, & making prouiſion of great & ſtrong barrels and pipes of wood, caried them to Folkſtone, and at low water faſtened thereto with chaines ſuch huge ſtones as laie on the ſhore neere the low water marke (where the quarrie or mine of thoſe rocks is) ſo as when the floud or full ſea came, the ſaid veſſels with the ſtones therto faſtned roſe vp & ſwam. And if the ſtone were of ſuch quantitie as two or three emptie caſks could not lift it vp, then did they ad a barrell or two more, which would not faile to do it: then did they drag with ſmall botes the caſks and ſtones thervnto tied, to the place where they were diſpoſed to ſinke them, and ſo the worke wherein conſiſted the greateſt difficultie (in appearance) was with moſt eaſe & leaſt charge accompliſhed. And for this deuiſe the ſaid Iohn Yoong had a yeerelie ſtipend giuen vnto him by the king during his life. With theſe ſtones, as alſo by this meanes was the greateſt worke doone, and with great coſt and labour theſe piles were filled vp.

The chalke and filling therof being brought from the north pierre, was conueied thither in a great bote called a Gaboth, which had nine keeles. There ſtands yet of the timberworke of the old pierre eightie foot in length, & ioines vpon that part of the pierre where ſtood a fort named the blacke bulworke.

A Gaboth.

Now that which was doone on that ſide, with the helpe of nature at the other two ſides made an excellent rode or harborough for the time it continued, and had maintenance. The king for his part ſpared no charge, for he ſpent hereabouts (as I am crediblie informed) fiftie thouſand pounds, nor yet did forbeare anie trauell which might further the worke. For in perſon he purpoſelie repaired thither diuerſe and ſundrie times, being diſtant from the court fiftie miles at the leaſt; yea his highneſſe had ſuch care that it ſhould be well performed, that no expert man in water works, either on this ſide, or beyond the ſeas, but (if it might be) he was brought thither, or at the leaſt conferred withall. And during the time of all the worke, the kings coffers ſeemed to ſtand wide open. But alas, the kings care and charge, and the continuall trouble and trauell of officers was ſuch about the worke preſent, that the prouiſion for the future maintenance thereof was vtterlie neglected. For the kings abſence at his being at Bullougne, his ſickeneſſe at his returne, and finallie his death meeting with the nonage of his ſon king Edward the ſixt, made an end of all this worke: which being once in the ſtate of decaie, there was no reparations nor further proceeding therein, till the time of queene Marie; in the beginning of whoſe reigne (by the ſpace of two yeares) there was ſome rumbling thereabout. But the workmen and officers were not well paid; and after bad paiment, no paiment, & ſo all was giuen ouer. Sir Anthonie Aucher was treaſuror in theſe works, and manie other inferior officers alſo there were, but eſpeciallie of clerks.

The charge of the pierre.

The kings care for Douer pierre. The kings repaire to Douer.

The cauſe of the decaie of the pierre.

Officers about the pierre.

But now I am to declare vnto you the lamentable ruine and decaie of this worke, before the end and finiſhing whereof there was brought along the coaſt from by ſouthweſt a maruellous quantitie of beach and bowlder ſtone, wherof there had beene neuer anie ſeene before in thoſe parts of that coaſt, and a great quantitie thereof reſted vpon the backe of the pierre, eſpeciallie before the blacke bulworke, which (ſo long as it might lie there without further annoiance) was (in appearance) a ſingular helpe for the ſtrength and preſeruation of the ſaid worke, but it fell out otherwiſe. For beſide that, that an eaſterlie great wind would remooue and driue it from that coaſt, and conſequentlie from the pierre, which then would lie naked as before, vntill the ſouth and weſterne wind turned it backe againe; the pierre through negligence decaieng, eſpeciallie at the blacke bulworke (where the greateſt abundance of beach vſuallie reſted) it paſſed through the decaid places thereof in ſuch meaſure, as in ſhort time thereby grew a ſhelfe of beach from that point of the pier to the eaſt part of the baie, butting to the Caſtell Raie: ſo as no entrance thereinto for anie ſhip remained. And the more that the furtheſt point of the pierre decaied and waxed ſhorter, the neerer was the ſhelfe brought vnto the ſhore: inſomuch as if the reſidue of the pierre had not bin preſerued, that ſhelfe would ſoone haue beene brought to the verie towne, and ſo haue choked vp the baie, and bereft all poſſibilitie of euer hauing a harbor in that place.

The ruin of Douer pierre.

Stone called beach or bowlder choked vp Douer hauen.

The decaie of the pier grew now more and more, partlie (as is ſaid) through want of prouidence and coſt to be imploied thereupon, and ſufficient prouiſion to mainteine the ſame: but eſpeciallie through the diſorder of the poorer ſort of the townesmen, who dailie purloined timber, iron, and all that was anie thing woorth, which they could pull or catch from the decaieng places of the pierre. And now (by means of this ſhelfe) the hauen waxed worſe than euer it was, inſomuch as oftentimes, a bote that drew but foure foot of water could not enter into the mouth thereof, and ſometime none at all: for the baie was altogither ſhut vp, ſo as the harborough was become a pent, out of the which nothing could paſſe out or in, ſauing the water that ſoked through the beach. But the riuer, which iſſueth out of the towne at a water gate ſtanding at the northeaſt end of the ſaid pent, in continuance of time would make an iſſue through ſome part of the ſame beach into the ſea, ſometime at one end, ſometime at another, ſometime verie ſhallow, and neuer verie deepe; which iſſue was alwaies their hauens mouth, vntill a contrarie wind did ſtop it vp againe, and then had they no entrance at all, vntill the riuer had made a new fret, or that they had digged a chanell through the beach, which manie times they were driuen to doo.

Two cauſes of the decaie of Douer pierre.

Sometime no harborough at all at Douer.

The loſſe of this hauen, and the loſſe of Calis, which happened about one time, made ſuch an alteration, or rather deſolation in and of the towne, as was lamentable and woonderfull to behold. For of a braue, rich, and populous towne, it preſentlie became a poore and deſolat village, reteining onlie the name and liberties of the famous port of Douer. Neuertheleſſe, the neceſſitie and expedience of a good hauen in that place did ſtill remaine, and a conuenient meane alſo was left for the accompliſhment therof, as it ſeemed to diuerſe which were wiſe and of good experience: inſomuch as that verie matter, which was ſuppoſed to be the deſtruction of the late harborough, ſhould now become a principall help and furtherance to a new hauen of greater importance, and better ſecuritie than euer it was before. For (as you haue heard) Douer cliffes naturallie defend this baie from all tempeſts comming from northeſt and northweſt; the pierre yet remaining gardeth it from the weſt and ſouthweſt winds; and the ſhelfe of beach croſſing from the end thereof to the Caſtell Raie, had made ſuch a cloſe pent, as if anie ſhips could be conueied therinto, they might there reſt in great ſafetie.

How Douer was made deſolat.

That beach which deſtroied the pierre helpeth now the hauen.

The roome within this cloſe baie conteineth almoſt fortie acres, and the riuer (as I haue ſaid) runneth quite through the ſame immediatlie into the maine ſea at ſouth: ſo as the ſaid pent being ſurrounded at euerie high water, & lieng almoſt bare at euerie ebbe, the ouze or ſleech grew to be foureteene or fifteene foot deepe, the bottome thereof being a maine rocke of chalke: inſomuch as a great multitude of ſhips might be placed there in good ſecuritie, if the entrance could be made good. Theſe things conſidered by men of good capacitie and experience, ſundrie deuiſes and conceits were exhibited thereabouts, wherof ſome ſeemed verie probable; and were the rather heard and commended, for that the worke was ſo neceſſarie and beneficiall to the commonwealth. And in that reſpect, it pleaſed the queenes maieſtie to grant to the towne of Douer, towards the reparing of their hauen, the free tranſportation of thirtie thouſand quarters of wheat, ten thouſand quarters of barleie and malt, and foure thouſand tun of beere, without paieng either cuſtome or impoſt: which was a gift of no ſmall importance.

A bountifull gift of queene Eliſabeth towards the reparing of Douer hauen.

For (beſide great ſummes of monie alreadie leuied & imploied vpon the beginning of theſe works) the licence or patent was ſold to a couple of merchants of London named Iohn Bird, and Thomas Wats, after the rate of three ſhillings & foure pence for euerie quarter of wheat, and two ſhillings and eight pence for euerie quarter of barleie and malt;

The patent of the queenes gift ſold vnto two merchants.

and the licence of beere being ſold to diuerſe others amounted to foure thouſand marks at the leaſt. Beſides all this, it was enacted in the parlement holden the three and twentith yeare of the reigne of hir maieſtie, for and in the conſiderations aforeſaid, and for that there was a probable plot contriued by ſkilfull men, to be performed for a conuenient ſum of monie, that for euerie ſhip, veſſell, or craier, whereof anie of hir maieſties ſubiects were owners, or part owners, being of the burthen of twentie tuns or vpwards, loding or diſcharging within this realme, or paſſing to or fro anie forren countrie, during the ſpace of ſeuen yeers then next inſuing from fortie daies after the end of the ſame ſeſſion of parlement, there ſhould be paid for euerie ſuch voiage by the maiſter or owner of all ſuch veſſels, &c: the ſumme of three pence for euerie tun of the burthen of ſuch ſhip, &c.

The act of parlement for Douer hauen 23 Eliſab.

Three pence the tun of euerie veſſell allowed towards Douer hauen.

Hereby there grew great ſummes of moneie to be yeerelie leuied toward theſe works, amounting to 1000 pounds yeerelie at the leaſt, and yet the time not expired by two yeeres. After this, hir maieſtie being carefull that the hauen ſhould with expedition be taken in hand, directed hir letters patents, dated the nine and twentith daie of March, in the foure and twentith yeere of hir reigne, to the lord Cobham lord warden of the cinque ports, &c: ſir Thomas Scot, ſir Iames Hales knights, Thomas Wotton, Edward Bois, the maior of the towne of Douer preſent and to come, Richard Barrie lieutenant of the caſtell of Douer, Henrie Palmer, Thomas Digs, Thomas Wilford, and William Partrige eſquiers, all which were of the ſhire, and men of great wiſedome and iudgement, and no ſmall trauellers in matters concerning the commonwealth: ſome of them maruellous expert in affaires and matters of the ſea, ſome in fortifications, ſome hauing trauelled beyond the ſeas for experience and conference that waie, and to ſee the order of forren ſeaworks & hauens, and none without ſingular vertues. In which reſpect they were commiſſionated and authoriſed by thoſe preſents, to doo, and foreſee to be doone from time to time, all things needfull and requiſit to be imploied about the reparing and mending of the ſaid hauen, and as might tend to the furtherance of the ſaid ſeruice; and to chooſe officers, & aſſigne their ſtipends, and the ſeuerall fees of all miniſters, attendants and clerks needfull for the ſubſtantiall, neceſſarie, ſpeedie, and cheape dooing thereof, and therein to ſet downe particular orders and directions, as might be for the furtherance and accompliſhing of the ſaid works moſt expedient.

The tunnage amounted to 1000 pounds yearelie.

The tenure of the queens commiſſion for Douer hauen.

John True ſurueior generall of Douer hauen.

Now for the performance hereof, manie plots by ſundrie perſons were deuiſed, and firſt of all one John True was commended, or at the leaſt commended himſelfe to the lords of hir maieſties priuie councell, to whome he made great ſhew to be an expert enginor, and by their lordſhips he was ſent to Douer, and preſented to be generall ſurueior of the works, as one in whome they repoſed great hope of furthering and finiſhing the ſaid hauen; whereof he made no doubt, but reſolutelie promiſed the ſpeedie execution and accompliſhing thereof. His deuiſe and determination was, to make within the ſaid baie neere to the ſhelfe of beach, a long wall from the water gate (out of which the riuer iſſueth into the harborough) to the blacke bulworke, in length two hundred rods. This wall was to be made of excellent ſtone at Folkſtone, the which he framed after a ſtrange and contrarie kind of workmanſhip. And there was for this purpoſe alredie perfectlie hewed of the ſame ſtone ſeuen thouſand foot, and ſix thouſand foot more was ſcapled; he beſtowed and ſpent thereabouts one thouſand two hundred foure ſcore and eight pounds, as appeareth in the accounts of the treaſurors for that time being; and yet there was not one ſtone of his ſaid long wall laid, nor that hitherto hath come to anie profitable vſe. But this wall if it had beene, or rather could haue beene finiſhed, it would haue coſt a hundred thouſand pounds, and yet would neuer haue ſerued the turne. For a ſtone wall is ſo contrarie to the nature of that ſandie foundation, as it can make no good coniunction nor perfect pent.

The deuiſe of John True.

Stone hewed at Folkſtone, amounting to 1288 pounds.

Infinit charge to accompliſh the ſtone wall.

For the furtherance of his deuiſe he would haue plucked downe a great part of the old pierre, whereof there was then too little remaining: he detracted the time, for he had ten ſhillings a daie allowed vnto him for his fee, which perhaps he was loth to forgo. He either could or would not render anie reaſon to the commiſſioners of his dooings and finall purpoſe, but alwaies ſaid he would make them a good hauen, neither would he ſet downe anie time certeine for the accompliſhing thereof. All theſe matters with his negligence, delaies, and vntowardlineſſe of his works, being aduertiſed to the lords of hir maieſties councell, he was diſmiſſed.

True had ten ſhillings a day for his fee.

John True is diſmiſſed.

After whom, one Ferdinando Poins, who had beene conuerſant & acquainted with water works in the low countries, & had dealt much about Woolwich and Erith breaches, offered his ſeruice for the accompliſhing of theſe works; affirming, that it was an eaſie matter to bring the ſame to paſſe, in ſuch ſort as there ſhould ſoone be a good harborough; refuſing not to haue taken the worke to do by great, either by a plot of his owne deuiſing, or elſe by the plot agreed on by the commiſſioners, and allowed by the lords of the councell. But this Ferdinando Poins, though he ſeemed a verie good executioner either of his owne, or another mans deuiſe concerning ſuch affaires: yet was he verie loth to diſcouer his order and maner of working, or anie other deuiſe of his owne, leaſt (as he ſaid) he might be preuented by ſome other that would vndertake to doo it by his deuiſes, better cheape than himſelfe could afford it, and ſo he to looſe, and other to gaine the benefit of his inuention. Howbeit, in the end he was content to be imploied anie waie, ſo as therewithall he might haue monie before hand: for Woolwich works did ſo ſticke in his fingers, as moneie was verie palpable and plauſible vnto him.

Ferdinando Poins.

In fine, he vndertooke to make certeine groins or knocks, which at the hauens mouth ſhould cauſe ſuch a depth, as thereby the whole harborough ſhould lie drie at a low water, whereby the works about the wals might the better and more conuenientlie be performed, and the preſent entrie amended. For it was concluded, that there ſhould be made a perfect pent within the baie, conteining in quantitie about ſixteene acres, which ſhould be inuironed with a long wall, reaching from aboue the water gate neere to the Caſtell Kaie, extending in length about a hundred and twentie rods along within the ſhelfe of beach, directlie towards the end of the pierre, where the blacke bulworke was placed; and at the end of the ſaid long wall, a croſſe wall of length about fortie rods, reaching from that wall directlie croſſe to the ſhore at the northerne cliffe, not far from the towns end. And this ſhould make a perfect pent to conteine and reteine the water of the riuer, which (when the ſluſe ſtanding in the croſſe wall ſhould be opened) might be of force to make and mainteine a depth for an entrance or hauens mouth for ſhipping to come into the rode, which lieth betwixt the maine ſea and the pent.

Poins his groine.

The pent 16 acres.

The length of the long wall.

The croſſe wall.

The rode for ſhips.

In this worke there appeared great difficultie, and ſo much the more, in that (for the moſt part) the place where the wall ſhould ſtand, was continuallie ſurrounded, and alſo the ſea did euerie tide ouerflow the ſame, and beſides that annoiance, the croſſe wall alſo muſt croſſe the riuer, the courſe whereof could not be diuerted anie other waie but with extreme charge. The ſpeciall cauſe whie this harborough was continuallie ſurrounded, euen at the low water, was for want of a depth at the hauens mouth, which might at an ebbe conueie thenſe into the ſea (more ſpeedilie and abundantlie) all thoſe waters which remained vpon the face of the hauen. To the execution hereof (I ſaie) the ſaid Ferdinando Poins was appointed, and towards his charge therabouts there was firſt deliuered vnto him one thouſand pounds, by force of a warrant ſent by the commiſſioners for Douer hauen, to Thomas Smith of Oſtinhanger eſquire, farmer of hir maieſties cuſtomes inwards in the ports of London, Sandwich, Chicheſter, Southhampton, and Ipſwich, with their creeks and members, and the creeke of Woodbridge, being a member of the port of Yarmouth, who is neuertheleſſe called by the name of Cuſtomer Smith, becauſe in times paſt his office was by letters patents to collect the ſaid cuſtome, and to yeeld account thereof, as other cuſtomers vſuallie doo, hauing for his fee one hundred and three ſcore pounds yearelie. Now for that he was ſo truſtie and ſufficient a perſon euerie waie, there was committed vnto his charge the receipt of all ſuch ſummes of monie as were due, either for the aforeſaid tunnage, or for the licence of free tranſportation of corne and beere, the which ſummes as need required, were by him to be deliuered to the treaſuror for Douer harborough vpon the councels direction, and a warrant of ſix of the ſaid commiſſioners hands.

One thouſand pounds to Ferdinando Poins.

Cuſtomer Smith.

There might be much written in the renowme and commendation of this man, for his great affaires and aduentures, as alſo for other ſingular vertues: but for that he yet liueth, and is generallie knowne, it maie with modeſtie be deferred; yet thus much I haue ſaid of him, for that he was a ſpeciall fauorer and furtherer of theſe works, neuer making delaie of anie paiment appointed or required, but rather diſburſing great ſummes of monie out of his owne cofers to ſet forwards the ſame. After the receipt of this thouſand pounds, the ſaid F. Poins had 200 more, as it appeareth in thoſe accounts. Trulie, this Ferdinando Poins applied the works induſtriouſlie, and performed ſome thing profitablie for the draining of the harborough, by making two groins, whereby there was a depth made at the hauens mouth. But as it is thought, his worke either was or might haue beene performed with leſſe than halfe that monie: which if he had doone, I would more willinglie haue publiſhed his praiſes. By the premiſſes it maie appeare, that the life of the hauen conſiſteth in the pent, and conſequentlie in the long wall and croſſe wall, without the which no pent could be made, ſo as wals muſt be erected. But now the queſtion grew to be how and whereof they ſhould be framed which were to be wrought in the ſea, vpon the ſand or beach, through a riuer, &c: and the ſame wall to withſtand the violence and rage of the ſea at the one ſide, and to hold and reteine a mightie weight of freſh at the other, ſo as no water might ſoke through or vnder the ſame.

Varietie of deuiſes.

Maiſter True (as you haue heard) would haue made ſtone wals verie coſtlie, and without limitation of time. Maiſter Ferdinando Poins would haue raiſed them with ouze and beach ſhoueled and caſt togither without anie more adoo. An other would haue made a coffin dam, whereof the coſt would haue beene infinite. Pet and Baker, being ſkilfull ſhipwrights, with certeine other copartenees, thought a wooden wall moſt conuenient; and preſented to the commiſſioners a module thereof, deuiſed and framed (for the moſt part) by one Andrew a carpentar, then ſeruant to the ſaid Pet: which deuiſe maiſter William Burroughs, a verie expert ſeaman, exceedinglie liked and commended. Maiſter True his deuiſe was reiected as impoſſible and intollerable. Maiſter Poins his workemanſhip was eaſie for a plaine man of the countrie to conceiue and performe: but verie few could be perſuaded that his wall would be tight inough to make a pent, conſiſting onlie of ſlub and beach ſhoueled together, and lieng ſo hoouer: for that was his deuiſe. Neuertheleſſe, ſir William Winter (a man verie ſkilfull and of great experience in ſea matters, being ſent to Douer by the lords of hir maieſties priuie councell, with maiſter William Burroughs and others, to ſurueie and confer about that hauen with the ſaid commiſſioners) vnderſtanding Ferdinando Poins had delt in the inning of Woolwich & Erith marſhes, being alſo willing to doo him good, gaue fauourable eare vnto him, as to one that propounded an eaſie and a cheape platforme, and not much vnprobable in his opinion, whoſe deſire was to haue it well performed, and with as ſmall charge as might be, for that he was the greateſt preferrer of that bill in the parlement houſe, and yeelded the beſt reaſons for a hauen to be there placed.

Sir W. Winter ſent to Douer to ſurueie the harbor, &c.

At this aſſemblie were propoſed other ſundrie mens deuiſes; namely, of one Thomas Brooker gentleman, John Stoneham carpentar, Bedwell, &c: and among the reſt ſir Thomas Scot, being a man carefull for the affaires of his countrie, and therewithall verie perſpicuous, being wearied with manie fruitleſſe conferences, delaies, ſtrange and vntoward deuiſes, chargeable and vaine attempts, and contrarie proceedings; and among other things, hauing had great experience in Romneie marſh matters (the greateſt buſineſſe whereof conſiſteth in making and reparing of wals to defend the ſame marſh from the inuaſion and inundation of the ſea) and dailie ſeeing the nature and effects therof, weieng alſo in his mind, that Romneie marſh wals are of greater bulke and force than theſe need to be, for that they lie more open to the maine ſea, and without compariſon more ſubiect to the weight and violent rage thereof; and further knowing that the marſh wals are placed not farre from thenſe vpon that coaſt, vpon a foundation in all reſpects like vnto the ſame, if not woorſe (for ſometimes they build vpon a verie quicke ſand, where one maie thruſt downe a pole of a doozzen or twentie foot, and not find or feele the bottome) and after he had compared theſe workes together, perceiuing no impediment whie one rule ſhould not direct two workes of one kind, he conferred with his neighbours of Romneie marſh therein, who allowed and confirmed his deuiſe, and afterward redilie attended on him to Douer, there to approoue his opinion with their reaſons and experience; and not ſo onelie, but alſo to vndertake and performe what ſoeuer he had ſet downe or promiſed in that behalfe. The reſidue of the commiſſioners (hearing and conceiuing ſir Thomas Scot reaſons, ioined and confirmed with experience not far fetcht, but ratified by neere neighbours, being perſons of good account, which were expert from their childhood in the practiſe of thoſe kind of works) inclined greatlie vnto his motion; and the rather, for that they knew him to be ſuch a one as would not ſeeke for priuat gaines. Howbeit, they which exhibited the wooden worke, could not well conceiue hereof, nor eaſilie conſent herevnto. And no waie was thought by them more fit to preferre their owne worke, than to make ſome offer to doo it by great, which the lords of the coun-

Sir Thomas Scot.

The wals of Romneie marſh ſubiect to the raging ſeas.

All the commiſſioners ioine with ſir Thomas Scot, and allow his deuiſe.

Seuen inuincible reaſons againſt the woodden wall.

cell greatlie deſired, as whereby they might vnderſtand the vttermoſt charge and time required for the accompliſhing thereof. But the price of the woodden wall grew to be ſo large (for fiue thouſand and fiue hundred pounds was the loweſt rate of their demand for the long wall onelie) that it was much miſliked. For firſt there was no likelihood or poſſibilitie that the ſame ſhould be ſet faſt and vnmoueable wher the ſlub or ſleech is fifteene foot deepe at the leaſt, and the maine rocke immediatlie vnderneath it. Secondlie, if the ſame could be erected, yet it muſt in ſhort time be ſo ſhaken by reaſon of the weight of the pent water on the one ſide at low water, and by the violence of the ſea on the other ſide at the floud, that through the vnſtedineſſe thereof, it could not continue tight. Thirdlie, the nature of the ſand and ſlub was thought to be ſo different from the condition of woodden boords and planks, whereof this wall was to conſiſt, that though there were no weight or wether that could impech the ſtedie ſtanding thereof, yet there could be no ſuch firme coniunction betwixt them, but that the verie weight of the wall it ſelfe muſt needs cauſe the ſame to decline to one ſide or other, whereby water would draine betwixt, by reaſon of the thinneſſe of the ſlub or ſleech, which could miniſter no certeine ſtaie thereunto, nor likelihood that the ſame ſhould ſo vnite with the wood, as to ſtand ſtedie, and to make a perfect pent in that place: but to helpe that matter, they meant to haue ſhored and braced the ſaid timber wall, in ſuch ſort as the ſame ſhould haue ſtaid the whole worke: yet no bracing could (as the beſt opinion was) haue preuailed to bring that wall to be good or ſtedie. Fourthlie, it was thought that ſuch a wall ſo placed, would be ſubiect to more than ordinarie decaie, by reaſon that anie woodworke lieng in water, eſpeciallie when it is ſometimes wet and ſometimes drie, will in ſhort time rot and diſioint: ſo as if the ſame could be repared (whereof there was great doubt made) yet the reparations would be in reſpect of charge verie intollerable. Fiftlie, the delaie of time herein was alſo diſliked, for two yeares being demanded for the accompliſhing of that one wall, no time could be promiſed. Sixtlie, they being demanded whether they had euer ſeene (either on this ſide or beyond the ſeas) anie ſuch wall or worke; they anſwered, No: but affirmed it to be in their opinions ſo probable, as they would aduenture to vndertake it for thirtie pounds the rod, but in what ſpace to finiſh it they could not ſaie. Seuenthlie, there was required for the building of this wall 7000 tun of timber, which all Kent and Suſſex (without vnrecouerable hurt in depriuation of their timber) was not able to yeeld: and the neceſſarie carriages for ſuch a prouiſion could haue beene by no meanes procured, without the vndooing of the inhabitants, and ſpoile of the countrie. Theſe cauſes were of force inough to ouerthrow a woodden wall. The deuiſe neuertheleſſe deſerued commendation.

The lord treaſurors reſolution.

Theſe matters thus mentioned were afterwards debated before the lords of the councell, and theſe reaſons with manie others were deliuered vnto their lordſhips by maiſter Thomas Digs, the firſt elected ſurueior of the works, as from the commiſſioners. The credit of the parties, who were to vndertake this woodden wall, and their reaſons preuailed ſo much, as diuerſe noble and wiſe men grew to conceiue good liking thereof. But the lord treaſuror, whoſe voice and iudgement in all cauſes of importance hath in all his time worthilie caried the ſwaie, allowed rather of the marſh works; ſaieng that if he erred therein, as not ſeeing but hearing the matter in queſtion, he would erre with diſcretion, as led by the reaſons of the commiſſioners; who had ſeene and tried the experience of that kind of worke.

Of Woolwich and Erith breaches.

Secretarie Walſingham the chiefe director and furtherer of Douer hauen.

Diuerſe liked of Poins his worke, or at the leaſt of his communication: partlie (as it is ſaid) for the cheapneſſe ſuppoſed, though in deed the contrarie fell out in demand: partlie for the expedition promiſed, which could neuer haue beene performed: partlie for that he was knowne to be a ſpeciall executioner in Woolwich breaches, being workes defenſatiue againſt inuaſion of waters, as yet vnaccompliſhed, though no ſmall charges haue beene therein imploied, for the recouerie of two thouſand acres of excellent marſh land, lieng ſeuen miles from London, in the pariſhes of Plumſted, Erith, &c: loſt by a breach made in the wals there with a tempeſt, about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred and thirtie, to the vndooing of manie, but ſpeciallie of ſir Edward Boulton knight: partlie alſo he was kearkened vnto, for that he was reputed to be a good enginor; partlie for his experience in forren works, partlie for his reſoluteneſſe: but eſpeciallie, for that he made a ſhew of more cunning than he would vtter; ſo as although his deuiſe for the erection of the wals was finallie reiected; yet was the matter brought to further conference. For he was commended to the lords of hir maieſties priuie councell, and namelie to ſir Francis Walſingham knight, principall ſecretarie to hir highneſſe; to whome was happilie referred the conſideration and chiefe direction of all matters concerning theſe works; wherin he dealt from time to time, with as great care, trauell, and circumſpection, as though his owne eſtate had depended vpon the well proceeding thereof. Whatſoeuer was thought neceſſarie to be doone thereabouts, was alwaies aduertiſed by the commiſſioners vnto him, and his opinion and direction required, and he without good conference and probabilitie would enter into no action concerning this matter.

Maiſter ſecretaries letter to ſir Thomas Scot.

No dealing by great, in matters of exceſſiue charge and danger.

Now therefore he wrote to ſir Thomas Scot, requiring him to ſend vp ſome ſufficient perſon, acquainted & exerciſed in Romneie marſh works, to ſatiſfie the lords of the councell in all ſuch doubts as ſhould be obiected, ſpeciallie by maiſter Burroughs, who had more liking of the ſhipwrights maner of worke, than either of the Romneie marſh works exhibited by ſir Thomas Scot, or of Plumſted works propounded by Ferdinando Poins. Wherein ſir Francis Walſingham ſhewed maiſter Digs his defenſe, & his owne good liking of the earthen wals; onelie requiring, that ſir Thomas Scot would throughlie informe himſelfe by conference with the marſhmen, to anſwer certeine obiections which he there incloſed, ſent downe vnto him in writing, concerning the paſſage of the long wall, and the diſtance thereof from the ſhore, the higth and tightnes of the ſame, the conueniencie of the foundation, the manner of ſtuffe, the time of finiſhing, the breadth below and at the top, the vndertakers thereof, and of their aſſurance, &c: and laſtlie, that ſome ſufficient perſon ſhould be ſent vp, to confer in theſe matters. All which points were ſo anſwered by ſir Thomas Scot, as ſir Francis Walſingham was greatlie ſatiſfied thereby. Concerning the dooing thereof by great, ſir Thomas Scots aduiſe was, that (ſeeing it was a princes charge) it might rather be performed by daieworkers and good ouerſeers, than by great; wherein no man would aduenture, in reſpect of the quantitie of the charge and difficultie of the works, without certeintie of great gaines. Neuertheleſſe, if it were ſo ſet downe by the lords of the priuie councell, that it ſhould be doone no other waie but by great; he himſelfe would vndertake it better cheape than anie other had profered to doo it by fiue hundred marks, and to that effect would put in verie good and ſufficient aſſurance.

Preſentlie after the receipt of thoſe letters, ſir Thomas Scot ſent to the court a kinſman of his, named Reinold Scot, who had béene deputed a ſurueior of Romneie marſh by the ſpace of foure yeares togither; and Reinold Smith, who had béene clearke of Romneie marſh, and a continuall dealer about thoſe wals by the ſpace of thirtie yeares. Theſe two repairing firſt to Douer, to conſider of the earth, which ſhould ſerue to make the wals of the pent of Douer hauen, and to ſearch where ſuch earth as would ſerue that turne might moſt conuenientlie and néereſt hand be had, with paſture for horſſes which ſhould be imploied for carriage thereof, procéeded to the court at Richmont, where they attended on maiſter ſecretarie Walſingham on the mondaie and tueſdaie before Eaſter daie 1583: and after conference had with him, they deliuered vnto him certeine notes in writing from ſir Thomas Scot, conteining neceſſarie orders, and recounting the charges, buſineſſe, and offices, &c: incident to the erection of theſe walles, imitating as néere as time, place, and matter would giue leaue, the maner of Romneie marſh works: wherein he remembred or rather required a yéerelie aſſemblie of commiſſioners at Douer in Eaſter wéeke, as is by the lords of Romneie marſh at Whitſuntide, with the election of officers, and ſet downe the dutie and charge of ech officer, the order of the works, what prouiſion of ſtuffe ſhould be made, to wit, of timber, thorne, faggots, néedels, keies, béetels, piles, paſture, earth, with totall ſums of all officers fées, of all ſtuffe and prouiſion, of all the labourers, and of all the cariages: which eſtimat was little or nothing differing from the charge as it fell out, ſauing that where he ſet it downe that both walles might be finiſhed in two ſummers, he accompliſhed them in one quarter of a yéere, beyond promiſe or expectation.

Sir Thomas Scots notes.

Douer pent finiſhed in thre moneths.

Maiſter ſecretarie Walſingham (hauing peruſed theſe notes, & ſéene the maner of the works & rates ſet downe therein) liked verie well thereof: howbeit, he ſtrictlie examined the parties aforeſaid, how thoſe works could be performed at ſo low prices, and eſpeciallie, how ſo manie courts could be prouided without commiſſion, or griefe to the countrie, euerie court hauing a horſſe and a driuer, and all for twelue pence a day, in a place where paſtures are for the moſt part barren, and hard to be gotten: and both that and all other things, but eſpeciallie vittels extreame déere. But being ſatiſfied herein by the ſaid Reinold Scot & Reinold Smith, he thought good neuertheleſſe to ſend them two, accompanied with Thomas Digs eſquier, and William Burroughs gentleman, to confer with ſir William Winter, the ſaid Ferdinando Poins, & the Plumſted men, which were workemen in Woolwich and Erith breaches, who propounded to the ſaid workemen certeine queſtions at the houſe of ſir William Winter at Tower hill. Wherein they were demanded amongſt other things, whether they euer had heretofore made anie wals, whereby water hath béene pent to anie highth, and vpon what foundation or ſoile they were ſet, and of what ſubſtance their wals were made, and whether they could remedie ſuch wals if they leaked, or could worke in water: and finallie, what they would aſke for a rod doing, and what ſuerties they could put in for the tightneſſe of their worke.

Reinold Scot and Rafe Smith examined by maiſter ſecretarie about the wals of the pent.

Queſtions propounded to Poins and the Plumſted men.

Ferdinando Poins and his Plumſted men anſwered verie comfortable to euerie queſtion, they ſéemed ignorant in nothing, and promiſed to performe whatſoeuer was required, ſauing aſſurance. But they knew not the order of Romneie marſh works, neither could they poſſiblie haue accompliſhed this: for they were onelie good dikers and hodmen, which arts were little pertinent herevnto. Maiſter ſecretarie being aduertiſed how Ferdinando Poins and his pioners of Plumſted ſhewed themſelues in this conference, wherein neither their owne diſabilitie, nor the difficultie of the worke by themſelues was anie thing at all doubted of, thought it not amis to aduertiſe the reſidue of the lords of the councell thereof: ſo as if thoſe works might in ſuch wiſe be by anie thought poſſible to be performed, then might the marſh works with much more aſſurance be truſted vnto; and that did maiſter Burroughs now verie well conceiue and note: neuertheleſſe, it was thought expedient by their lordſhips, that Poins and his workemen ſhould repaire to Douer to a finall conference in thoſe matters; who perchance might be ſomewaie at the leaſt imploied in thoſe buſineſſes. And therefore maiſter ſecretarie ſent downe to ſir Thomas Scot, that their lordſhips had receiued the reſolution he grew vnto, vpon conference with the marſhmen of Romneie, touching the procéeding in the plot of Douer hauen, and had both well conſidered & allowed of the ſame; and that their lordſhips alſo had appointed, that on the tueſdaie after Eaſter wéeke, maſter Burroughs and maiſter Poins, with certeine marſhmen of Plumſted, ſhould be ſent downe to méet and confer further with him about the going forwards with the ſame plot at Douer: at which time ſuch order might be taken and agréed on among the commiſſioners, for the making of all neceſſarie prouiſions for the ſame, as ſhould be thought moſt expedient.

Sir Thomas Scots deuiſe allowed by the lords of the councell.

On the ninth daie of Aprill next inſuing, the parties aboue ſpecified came to Douer accordinglie, where all the commiſſioners for that harborough met them, who hauing receiued letters from the lords of the councell to ſet downe a finall reſolution; after long debating of matters, agréed that Romneie marſhmen ſhould vndertake the worke; and for the better and more ſpéedie procéeding therein, the commiſſioners made election of all neceſſarie officers, and rated their wages in this ſort. The treaſuror, which was ſir James Hales knight, to haue for euerie fiftie pounds receiued and diſburſed, ſix ſhillings eight pence, and for his clearke fiue pounds yearelie. John Smith the expenditor twentie pounds yearelie, his clearke fiue pounds yearelie. The common clearke twentie marks, and each ſworne man during his attendance eight pence a daie. The generall ſurueior (that is to ſaie) maiſter Digs eſquier twentie marks yearelie, which he gaue to Alexander Pindge his deputie.

The reſolution at a conference at Douer.

Officers elected at Douer.

It was there alſo ordered, that the deputies ſurueior, the expenditor, and clearke, ſhould take preſent order for the inlarging of the waies for carriages to paſſe; for thorne, fagot, béetels, néedels, keies, piles, bauin, and carriages for them, before Whitſuntide following. Theſe things were committed to their charge; but they were afterwards eaſed by purueiors appointed for thoſe and other purpoſes; they hauing more to doo otherwiſe than they could well ouercome. Hauing now diſcouered the firſt & ſecond eſtate of Douer harborough, euerie mans deuiſe for the amending, or rather erecting of a new hauen in that place, with declaration of hir maieſties bountie, and the care of the whole ſtate iointlie and ſeuerallie in that behalfe: I am to make deſcription of the things performed, and of the maner of the execution thereof, in which thing conſiſted the difficultie, and (as ſome thought) the impoſſibilitie of this enterpriſe.

Firſt therefore you are to vnderſtand, that before a hauen could be there erected, there muſt be made a pent, to conteine abundance of water iſſu-

The commoditie of the pent.

ing from the land, which being let out at a ſluſe, ſhould open & mainteine the hauens mouth; the violence whereof ſhould ſcowre it ſo, as neither beach, ſand, nor ſlub might there remaine. The working of theſe wals in the ſea and thorough the chanell, was the great thing to be brought to paſſe, as hath beene before ſaid. The diſcouerie therefore of theſe workes will not be vnprofitable to poſteritie, nor vnneceſſarie for the time preſent. Herein I will omit all contentions & factions concerning theſe proceedings, as alſo all iniurious practiſes againſt thoſe works, whenſe ſoeuer they ſprang: but I would gladlie giue to euerie one his due commendation, which cannot be doone; becauſe therein I ſhould grow too long. I thought meet alſo to omit a controuerſie riſing about the placing of the hauens mouth, excellentlie diſputed betwixt perſons of good acount.

The queſtion was, whether were moſt conuenient a more readie and ſpeedie entrance in times of danger, when contrarie winds permitted no entrie or abode in anie harbourough, though this entrance were ſomewhat more ſhallow, whereby the greateſt ſhips in thoſe caſes ſhould be excluded: or a deeper hauens mouth in an other place more conuenient for great ſhips, with a more calme ingreſſe, and a quieter rode, the hauens mouth ſomewhat more eaſterlie, and therefore not ſo good to enter into at a ſouthweſt wind, which diſtreſſeth men moſt in thoſe ſeas: wherein (I ſaie) I forbeare to repeate the arguments of ech ſide, and the circumſtance of that matter (being now decided and ouerruled) in ſuch ſort as I doo the works of the pent, the deſcription whereof maie be profitable to all that ſhall haue to doo either in hauens or great water breaches. For both Plumſted & Erith marſhes, or anie like breaches by this means doubtleſſe maie eaſilie and moſt aſſuredlie be recouered. In the declaration hereof alſo, the parties which haue deſerued commendation or conſideration maie perhaps in ſome ſort haue a kind of recompenſe: for other reward was not looked after, or ſought for by the beſt executioners hereof, ſith the better ſort imploied their trauell with great charges, the meaner ſort their readie furtherance to their power, the poorer people their labor at a ſmall rate to the preferring and performance of this worke; and all with ſuch forwardneſſe and willingnes of mind, as the like hath not beene knowne or ſeene in this age: the beholding whereof would haue amazed anie man vnacquainted with Romeneie marſh works, from whenſe the patterne hereof was fetcht, and the officers and chiefe workemen thereof brought by ſir Thomas Scot to Douer. Theſe works were digeſted and ordered by them, euen as a battell is marſhalled by officers of the feeld. And trulie it was expedient that good direction ſhould be vſed on this behalfe, for there were to be imploied fiue or ſix hundred courts about a wall of ſmall bredth at one inſtant, none to be idle or hindered by an other, for the ſtaie of one court a verie little ſpace might be to the works an incredible hinderance.

Woolwich breach recouerable.

Euerie degree willing to ſet forward this worke.

Six hundred courts imploied at once in theſe works.

The nature and names of the offices and officers herevnto perteining you haue alreadie heard. For as they were at the firſt ſet downe by ſir Thomas Scot, ſo in all reſpects was it ordered and concluded in that behalfe; ſauing that becauſe theſe works were ſo great, and required ſuch expedition, as the expenditor was ouercharged with buſines, though an expert man trained vp in Romneie marſh in thoſe affaires, truſtie, diligent, and euerie waie ſufficient: vnto whoſe office naturallie belonged the purueiance of all neceſſaries, anie waie aperteining to the mainteinance of the wals. There was appointed by the commiſſioners (as chiefe purueior) a gentleman of good ſufficiencie named John Reies, by whoſe countenance and diſcreet dealing men were brought to yeeld willinglie anie of their commodities towards the helpe and furtherance of theſe proceedings for their iuſt values, which was dulie anſwered vnto them, ſo as no man was ſeene to complaine of anie iniurie or hard dealing. But when the works, or rather the workers grew to be greater and more in number than was expected, (which came to paſſe by reaſon of the multitude of courts and workemen, who proffered their ſeruice ſo faſt, as from the rate of two hundred, which was at the firſt ſet downe, they increaſed to ſix hundred) all paſtures neere the towne being imploied that waie, manie men were content to make their owne prouiſion, conditionallie to be admitted into the works, inſomuch as ſome hired paſture for their working horſſes ſeuen or eight miles from Douer, and neuertheleſſe came to worke with the firſt, and continued the whole daie with them that wrought longeſt. For they came at ſix of the clocke in the morning, and departed at ſix of the clocke at night, except extraordinarie cauſes in preuenting inconueniences of great and fowle tides cauſed them to worke longer. Diuerſe brought thither courts from beſides Maidſtone and Seuenocke, being thirtie or fortie miles from Douer; and in the end the officers were driuen to put backe and refuſe ſuch as made ſute to bring courts into the works: and yet had they for their horſſe, their court, and their driuer but onelie twelue pence a daie. Which becauſe it ſeemeth incredible, I thought good to diſcouer and vnfold to the reader in ſuch ſort, as he might be reſolued and ſatiſfied in the certeintie thereof, and throughlie conceiue not onelie the poſſibilitie but alſo the reaſon of it.

John Smith the expenditor.

John Reies gentleman chiefe purueior.

A horſſe, a court, and a driuer for twelue pence the daie.

Firſt therefore the time of yeare when that worke was to be doone, muſt be conſidered, which was intended, and by proclamations in certeine market towns notified to haue had beginning the thirteenth of Maie (when in thoſe parts barleie ſeaſon is ended) and from that time till harueſt or haieng time little is to be doone in huſbandrie; and aſſoone as harueſt ſhould begin, their purpoſe was to leaue this worke vntill the yere following. So as in this meane time, that is to ſaie, from Aprill till harueſt, the ſeruants, & ſpeciallie the cattell of farmers are rather chargeable than anie waie gainefull vnto them, and therefore at ſuch a time to raiſe profit by them is double aduantage. Neuertheleſſe, he that ſhould make his beſt commoditie herein, was to looke circumſpectlie into the matter, and then might he ſee that it was requiſit to haue two courts: for one boie might driue them both, becauſe whileſt the one was driuen, the other was filled, & the ſame being vnloden or diſcharged, he went for the other, leauing that to be filled. This filler was a labourer allowed to euerie man which had two courts, for whome the owner of the two courts had ten pence the daie: ſo as he had for his filler, his driuer, his two horſſes, and his two courts two ſhillings and ten pence the daie, which amounteth to ſeuenteene ſhillings the weeke. He paied out of the ſame for the boord of his filler and driuer ſix ſhillings weekelie, and ſo had the owner of cleere weekelie gaine for his two ſeruants and two horſſes nine ſhillings, which muſt all this while haue lien at his charge.

There were among this number certeine double courts, which had double wages; becauſe they were furniſhed with two horſſes in a court, being double in quantitie to the reſt, and were ſpeciallie imploied about the cariage of ſleech, a more weightie mould than either the chalke or the earth. A ſingle court conteined in length fiue foot, in bredth two foot, and in depth ſixteene inches: whereunto the expenditor looked verie narrowlie, as alſo to the ſufficiencie and diligence of euerie workeman and horſe, ſo as vpon euerie default their wages was totted and defalked, or the offendors excluded from the works, or ſome times puniſhed with ſtocks and other impriſonment.

The quantitie of one court or tumbrell.

The firſt entrie into the works.

An entrance into this worke was made in the beginning of Maie, one thouſand fiue hundred foure ſcore and three, in the fiue and twentith yeare of hir maieſties reigne, with ſix courts onelie at the croſſe wall; & ſuch was the towardlines thereof, as yeelded ſo great a brute & promiſe of good ſucceſſe, that from that daie forward there were continuallie cariages brought (at the rate before ſet downe) beyond all expectation: in ſo much as by the 27 of Iune, there were aſſembled in thoſe works 542 courts, and almoſt 1000 workemen. And truelie, there conſiſted ſo great difficultie in marſhalling this multitude (for all were to worke at once, none might ſtaie for other, or be impediment to others worke) as without the paterne of former experience the worke could hardlie haue béene performed.

Romneie marſhmen chéefe directors in the works.

Héerein Richard Coaſt and William Norris iurats, and the aforenamed Reginald Smith clearke of Romneie marſh were chéefe directors, and as it were marſhals, as hauing dailie experience in the like works. For in Romneie marſh there are euerie yeare commonlie imploied at one time about making or mending of ſome one wall 700 courts at the leaſt, in each court for the moſt part being two oxen, for whome the owners hire féeding in the marſh, as they can agrée with the landholders, and yet haue had hitherto for their court and driuer but ten pence the daie. And this togither with their manner of working would be woonderfull, famous, and much ſpoken of throughout England, if the continuance of ſo manie hundred yeares exerciſe therof had not qualified the ſtrangeneſſe and admiration of it. For here (though at Douer it could not be ſo, bicauſe they wrought altogither with horſbeaſts) the nights féeding preuaileth ſo much ouer the daies working, that bullocks brought to thoſe works leane and out of fleſh, are returned from the works moſt commonlie in verie good plight.

A benefit to man & beaſt.

The ſtuffe or ſubſtance of the wals.

The ſtuffe carried by theſe courts for the erection of the walles at Douer, was earth, being of a haſelie mould, chalke and fléech, whereunto the carriages were ſeuerallie imploid, the moſt number for earth, whereof the greateſt part of the wall conſiſted; the ſecond for chalke, which mingled and beaten togither with the earth, did make the ſame more firme, and was placed in the midſt of the wall; the ſmalleſt number for fléech, which ſerued for the out ſides onlie. For the ſame being beaten with béetles to the ſides of the wall, would by and by cleaue ſo faſt and cloſe therevnto, as thereby the wals were ſtrengthened; and therevpon alſo the arming might be ſet much more firmelie than vpon anie other mould. This alſo preſerued the wall from annoiance by rage of waters, almoſt as well as if they were otherwiſe armed with thorne and faggot.

The diſpoſing of the works.

Henrie Guilford eſquier, capteine of Arcliffe caſtell.

There was prouided néere to the caſtell called Arcliffe (whereof Henrie Guilford eſquier, being one that tooke eſpeciall care and paines in ſetting forward that buſineſſe, was then capiteine) two acres and a halfe of ground for the prouiſion of earth for the walles: which ground was diſtant from the croſſe wall about twentie ſcore tailors yards, and for the ſame the owner had ten pounds, and the ſoile remaining to himſelfe, which in ſhort time will recouer to be as good as euer it was. At an other place alſo called Horſepoole ſole, lieng behind S. Iames his church, was more earth prouided, which was altogither imploied vpon the long wall, as being néerer therevnto. Hereof euerie court brought commonlie to the walles in one daie about twelue lodes. The chalke was had from diuerſe places of the cliffes, ſomwhat néerer to the wals than the earth, and theſe brought about ſeauentéene or eightéene lode a daie. The fléech was for the moſt part had at the weſt part of the hauen in a place called Paradiſe. And to theſe ſeuerall ſorts of ſtuffe were ſeuerall cariages appointed and diſpoſed, as might moſt conuenientlie ſerue the turne, and as occaſion ſerued; for ſomtimes more and ſometimes leſſe of each ſort of mould was neceſſarilie imploied. Somtimes alſo the fléech was had cloſe at the ſide of the wals, and therefore fewer cariages imploied that waie.

Now to make a perfect triall of the worke before the daie limited that all the courts ſhould come in, there was an experiment of great importance performed, which was the making of a baie head, & therby a pent to kéepe the water in or out of a péece of the hauen called Little paradiſe, which place conteineth about thrée acres and a halfe of ground in great depth, wherein there riſeth manie ſprings. And in the place where this wall or baie head ſhould be made, the ouze & fléech was twentie foot déepe at the leaſt. Herin alſo was laid firſt a pinſtocke, and afterwards a ſluſe of great charge, the ſtreame whereof méeting with the courſe of the great ſluſe increaſeth the force thereof to the benefit of the hauens mouth.

The beginning of the great works at Douer.

On the thirtéenth daie of Maie, in the yeare of our ſaluation one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and thrée, when the courts, which (by proclamation made one moneth before in diuerſe market towns) were to come to begin the works, there were more of them prepared and readie furniſhed for the purpoſe than were expected. Howbeit, the ſame was brought to paſſe by the meanes of ſir Thomas Scot and other of the commiſſioners, who brought both their owne and their neighbors carriages, perſuading all whom they thought able and méet, to ſet forward, and giue incoragement to the execution of theſe works. But Romneie marſhmen, and ſuch as knew thoſe works, were they indéed which onlie gaue light to others of the true & right maner of working, and of the commoditie inſuing hereby; & they in effect ſupplied thoſe works, vntill the countrie did ſée which waie to ſaue themſelues, and make profit thereof. But ſuch was the multitude alreadie aſſembled, that (to auoid the difficultie and confuſion of ſo manie courts working togither at the beginning, and to doo the better and greater ſeruice afterwards) the whole courſe was altered by ſir Thomas Scot, by whome it was thought moſt méet to enter into the execution of both walles (to wit, the long wall and croſſe wall) togither, & to diuide the courts into two parts: with whome the ſaid Richard Barrie eſquier lieutenant of Douer caſtell willinglie ioined, vndertaking the charge or ouerſight of the long wall, as ſir Thomas Scot did of the croſſe wall; and by that meanes all the workmen & courts did with much more conueniencie and ſpéed accompliſh their worke.

Reaſons of the difficultie of the croſſe wall.

The croſſe wall was of more importance, and the difficultie to make it was greater than of the long wall, for manie reſpects. Firſt, for that the croſſe wall ſtandeth néerer to the maine ſea than the long wall, and by that meanes this worke more violentlie impugned, and ſooner interrupted than that of the long wall. Secondlie, they carried the croſſe wall through the chanell (a thing verie ſtrange and difficult) and ſo did they not the long wall. Thirdlie, the ouze and fléech was déeper vnder the croſſe wall than vnder the long wall. Fourthlie, the croſſe wall was to be made déeper or higher, and broder or wider than the long wall. Fiftlie, the tide was to hinder this worke, by approching ſooner, by riſing higher, er, and by more violent raging than it did at the other. Sixtlie, the weight of the pent water was to lie altogither vpon this wall, and conſequentlie the water would ſearch thereinto more dangerouſlie. Seuenthlie, in this wall there was a ſluſe to be laid, which without great circumſpection would haue indangered the whole worke. Adde vnto theſe, that the croſſe wall was more ſuddenlie vndertaken, & of more importance. For vnder fifteene thouſand pounds none euer made offer to doo it before this time: for the firſt purpoſe was to begin with the long wall onlie, or rather a peece thereof, as a worke ſufficient to be performed in one ſummer.

This worke vndertaken and other reiected by ſir Thomas Scots means.

Bowle a notable good workman.

Commiſſioners.

Now if the long wall was thought a worke ſo difficult, dangerous, coſtlie, and tedious, what may be thought of the croſſe wall? Trulie, had not the other commiſſioners beene comforted herein by ſir Thomas Scot, the impoſſibilitie preſuppoſed would haue diſcouraged and ouerthrowne the whole enterpriſe. But he with good comfort and confidence entred vpon the croſſe wall, and maiſter lieutenant on the long wall: inſomuch as the one was called ſir Thomas Scots wall, the other maiſter lieutenants wall. And certeinlie, they might well ſo be termed, in reſpect of the paines, care, and coſts imploied vpon them by thoſe two gentlemen. Sir Thomas Scot dwelt twelue long Kentiſh miles from Douer, yet did he ſeldome faile to come from his houſe to the beginning of the worke euerie mondaie morning while the walles were in hand; and from that daie vntill ſaturdaie in the euening, when he returned home. He lightlie came firſt to the walles, and departed with the laſt: and it behooued him ſo to doo, in as much as by his meanes onelie this manner of worke was vndertaken, and all other deuiſes reiected. He laie in one Iohn Spritwels houſe, who kept an inne in Douer, called the Greihound, and there did he and his followers and ſeruants, togither with maiſter lieutenant and his companie receiue their diet at a deere hand. For although the caſtell ſtand within a quarter of a mile of the worke, and as neere to the towne; yet was the lieutenants induſtrie and charge ſuch, as he or his ſeruants did neuer lightlie returne home from fiue of the clocke in the morning till after ſupper; but remained alwaies there with ſir Thomas Scot, in continuall buſineſſe & extreme charge, not onelie in reſpect of their owne table, but alſo in regard of ſtrangers, who came to ſee them and the workes, whoſe charges they commonlie defraied. Beſides that, they did (not ſeldome times) beſtow rewards bountifullie vpon the poore workmen, who vpon ſundrie occaſions were driuen to worke longer than the reſt, and with more difficultie; for ſome at ſome times wrought in danger of life, & ofttimes in the waters vp to the waſt or ſhoulders. And among the reſt (to whome I could rather wiſh a liberall recompenſe than a due praiſe) there was in theſe workes a poore man named Iohn Bowle, borne and brought vp in Romneie marſh, whoſe dexteritie of hand, fine and excellent inuentions in executing difficult works, and whoſe willing mind and painfulneſſe for his owne part, with furthering and incoraging of others, ought in ſome calling to haue beene honored, and in his poore eſtate ſhould not be forgotten. As touching the reſidue of the commiſſioners, they for their parts (if they were in health) did almoſt dailie viſit the works, with as great care for the good proceedings thereof as was poſſible.

Treaſuror.

Two iurats called directors.

Sir Iames Hales was this yeare choſen by the generall voice and conſent of the commiſſioners, and with the good allowance of the lords of the councell, treaſuror for the works (as ſir Thomas Scot was the two yeares precedent) and did not onelie diſcharge the office and dutie thereof with commendation and iuſt account, which amounted almoſt to fiue thouſand pounds: but beſide his often repaire at other times during the works, he did continue there by the ſpace of one whole month, while ſir Thomas Scot (by meanes of a ſickneſſe taken vpon the wals) was abſent, and all that time kept a bountifull table, and vſed great diligence, in continuall ouerſight and furtherance of the works, whereof Thomas Digs eſquier was generall ſurueior commended thervnto by the lords of the councell, who although he made his chiefe abode then at London, yet did he often repaire to the works, and ſeriouſlie bent himſelfe to ſet forward the ſame there, being alſo a carefull ſollicitor in that behalfe. Certeine of the iurats & chiefe magiſtrats of the towne, were by two at once dailie aſſigned to be directors and ſetters forth of the carriages, and to ſee the courts well filled: theſe alſo did refuſe their allowance, being eight pence the daie, and did neuertheleſſe verie diligentlie attend vpon their charge: their names were Iohn Watſon, Iohn Garret, William Willis, Thomas Brodgat, &c.

Eight guiders

Eight vntingers.

Eight ſheluers.

Eight tingers.

Laborers.

Scauelmen.

Beetlemen.

Armors.

There were eight men called guiders ſtanding at eight ſeuerall ſtations, or places of moſt danger, to guide and helpe the driuers diſtreſſed or troubled with their cattell or courts, and to haſten them forward: for the default of one did make ſtaie of the whole companie, and theſe had eight pence the daie. There attended alſo at the wals eight men called vntingers, to looſe and vndoo the tackle of euerie court immediatlie before the vnloding or ſheluing thereof, and were allowed eight pence the daie. Then were there eight ſheluers, which pulled downe the courts as ſoone as they came to the place where it was needfull to vnlode, and theſe were choſen of the ſtrongeſt and nimbleſt men, hauing ten pence the daie. There were alſo eight tingers, whoſe ſpeciall office was to lift vp the courts immediatlie after they were vnloden, and to make faſt their tackle; for the driuers haſted foorth without making anie ſtaie, otherwiſe all the companie muſt haue tarried for them; theſe had eight pence the daie. The number of the laborers which were to ſhouell abroode and laie euen the earth, chalke, and fleech, as ſoone as it was vnloden was vncerteine, they had ſix pence and eight pence the daie. A great manie marſhmen were aſſigned to laie the fleech vpon the ſides of the wals, and were called ſcauelmen, and had twelue pence the daie. The number of beetlemen alſo were vncerteine, who ſerued to beat or driue the fleech to the ſides of the wals, and to breake the great ſtones of chalke laid on the wals; as alſo to leuell the earth, and to worke it cloſe together, hauing for their wages eight pence the daie. Manie marſhmen alſo were appointed to arme the ſides of the wals, after they were fleeched, & had twelue pence, and ſome ſixteene pence the daie.

The order of arming.

Inferior purueiors.

Clerke. Expenditor.

The order of arming was in this maner. Firſt beginning at the foot of the wall, they laid downe a row of fagot, through euerie one of the which they driue a needle or ſtake about foure foot long, hauing an eie or hole at the great end. Then doo they edder it with thorne and other prouiſion for that purpoſe, and laſtlie driue a keie or wodden wedge (being one foot and a halfe long) through the eie of the needle to keepe downe the edder, which ſtaith downe the fagot. Alſo there was an inferiour purueior for fagot, thorne, needles, keies, &c: who for his horſe & himſelfe was allowed for euerie daie he trauelled two ſhillings. The clerke of the works, who kept all the reckonings of the expenditor (through whoſe hands all the monie paſſed) he at fiue a clocke in the morning, togither with the expenditor, called euerie one that wrought that daie, and ſaw euerie court furniſhed, and recorded all this in his booke; and ſuch as were abſent, had no allowance that daie: if they came late, their wages was totted at the expenditors good diſcretion. There was one Iuline appointed to attend vpon Poins his groins, he was a Dutchman, and more expert in thoſe kind of water workes than Poins himſelfe, his wages was firſt (I meane in Poins his time) two ſhillings a daie, afterwards (to wit) whileſt theſe workes were in hand, and better huſbandrie was vſed, he had but foure grotes a daie. And thus much touching the offices and officers duties.

The groine keper.

The maner of the wall worke.

Euerie court was moſt commonlie filled ouer night, and in the morning at ſix of the clocke they all approched orderlie to the place where the wall ſhould be made. The firſt driuer for good conſideration was choſen to be a ſufficient and a diligent perſon, and that court to haue a good gelding: for as he lead the danſe, ſo muſt they all follow. When the firſt court came nigh to the place where he ſhould vnlode, one vntinged it, and the driuer proceeded with his court, either into the ouze or water, or as neere thereunto as they could; and bringing his horſſe about in his returne, when the taile of the court was turned to the water ſide, the ſheluer plucked downe the lode, as far into the chanell as he could. The driuer neuer ſtaied, but went foorth for a new lode: the tinger runneth after and pulleth vp the court, and faſteneth the tackle, and goeth preſentlie with ſpeed to doo likewiſe to another; and ſo dooth the vntinger. When the whole courſe of courts (being about two hundred) were vnloden, the laborers with their ſhouels and beetels plied to make euen the wall againſt another courſe came.

Sometimes they wrought a whole daie or two, and laid downe manie thouſand lodes of earth and chalke, and no increaſe ſeene at night of the worke, either in higth or length; in ſo much as manie ſuppoſed that the earth was rather waſhed awaie than ſunke. And in truth, ſome part thereof was carried awaie with the floud in a rough tide; for all the water in the hauen was manie times diſcoloured therewith; eſpeciallie, vntill ſir Thomas Scot tooke order, that before euerie floud, not onelie each ſide of the wall, but the end alſo ſhould be armed with fagot; & in the morning or after noone (when returne was made to the works) the end where they were to proceed, ſhould be vnarmed againe: which needed not be doone to the ſides, for they carried the whole breadth of the wall with them. But in truth, the weight of the wall, with the continuall paſſage thervpon, made the whole worke to ſinke to the verie rocke; being from the top of the chanell ſixteene foot, and from the face of the water at the floud, almoſt as much more. But in the end, it was a woonder to ſee how the multitude of carriages (being well plied) preuailed, euen ouer the floud: which though it roſe exceeding faſt, and was come to the verie brinke or vppermoſt lane of the wall, a new courſe of courts came from time to time and ſupplied the want; which if it ſhould haue ſtaied a minute longer, would haue turned to great loſſe: for they could haue wrought no longer that tide.

How the wall was ſaued from being waſted.

In this maner they proceeded, vntill there was made of the croſſe wall about fiue and twentie rods, which they wrought alwaies (as they went) aboue the high water marke (otherwiſe it could neuer haue beene performed) and ſo they paſſed through the chanell or riuer, and caried the wall beyond the ſame three or foure rods, ſo as the backe water or chanell had no iſſue to paſſe downe into the ſea; but as it roſe aboue the flats, and ran awaie before the end of the wall; whenſe they continuallie droue it further and further by lengthening the ſame. Howbe it, by this meanes they wrought alwaies in the water, which was verie diſcommodious. This riuer therefore manie men would haue had turned ſome other waie; otherwiſe it was thought, that this wall could not haue beene made, the turning whereof would haue beene diuerſe waies inconuenient. Firſt, for the extreame charge; ſecondlie, the hauens mouth would (for want heereof) haue ſoone beene ſwarued vp; thirdlie, Poins his worke, which coſt one thouſand & two hundred pounds, ſhould haue bin hereby fruſtrated; fourthlie, the hauen (all that time) and all paſſage vnto Douer had beene vtterlie taken awaie, to the great hinderance and vndooing of the townſmen there. But ſir Thomas Scot, who imploied his head and mind to ſeeke all aduantages for the ſetting forward of this worke, and had conceiued a perfect plot for the finiſhing of the ſame, cauſed a cut to be made in the wall, and a ſmall ſluſe to be laid in the verie place where the chanell did firſt run, which ſerued (for the time) not onelie to giue naturall paſſage to the riuer, and to mainteine the hauens mouth: but as a bridge alſo for the courts to paſſe ouer the water, to the further end of the wall; which now by this meanes remained drie and free from water vntill the floud, to the great aduantage and commoditie of the worke.

The inconuenience which would haue followed the diuerting of the riuer another waie.

A ſluſe made for diuerſe good purpoſes.

This ſluſe was compoſed with two arches, in length ſixtie foot (beſides the ſplaies) at each end, in breadth eight foot, and in depth alſo eight foot, and the charge thereof amounted not to aboue one hundred marks. In truth, the laieng of this ſluſe was a verie dangerous and difficult peece of worke, and the executioners thereof worthie of commendation, for with great courage to doo their countrie ſeruice they aduentured their liues in more perill than I can well expreſſe. Manie were aſtonied to behold the dangerous caſe of the workemen, and diuerſe departed from the place as being loth to ſee the poore mens deſtruction. Wherein the ſaid Reginald Smith, and the Romneie marſhmen dealt with great dexteriſie and courage; when all other almoſt had giuen it ouer, perſiſting in continuall and extreame trauell thereabouts, by the ſpace of two daies and one night without intermiſſion.

A difficult and dangerous worke.

After the cut was digged thorough the wall, the ſluſe was laid by peecemeale, at the direction of him and the foreſaid Richard Coaſt, William Morris, and Iohn Bowle, whoſe hands were as buſie alſo as anie others in the dooing thereof. And as they were trauelling hereabouts, the weight of the wall it ſelfe, with the earth caſt out of the trench thereunto, and the multitude of the beholders ſtanding thereon, made a clift or craſe therein, conſiſting of manie hundred lodes of earth, which declined towards the cut where they wrought to laie the ſluſe, and was redie to fall vpon them all, ſo as they were faine to ſuſtaine the ſide therof with ſhores which they ſupported cheefelie with their owne force. Which if they had not doone with great art & labour, by the ſpace of diuerſe hours together, the wall had fallen into the place where the ſluſe ſhould haue beene laid, to the deſtruction of ſundrie people, and to the diſcomfort of manie belonging to the works. But theſe marſhmen neuer gaue ouer, till euerie ſticke thereof was laid, at what time ech man reioiſed that meant well to the works, and diuerſe beſtowed rewards vpon the workemen, and praiſe was giuen to God for his fauour ſhewed in that behalfe.

This worke being thus performed, the courts (which during that time were altogither ſet to worke at maiſter lieutenants wall) did now diuide themſelues againe, and returne to worke as before at ſir Thomas Scots wall, and at euerie ſide wrought with

Gods bleſſing and fauour ſhewed to the works of Douer.

with ſingular diligence & great facilitie. And God ſo fauored thoſe works, as there were not loſt in all that ſummer by meanes of foule wether aboue thrée daies and a halfe, wherein either courts or laborers were put from their worke, and in all thoſe buſines not one perſon ſlaine, and yet almoſt in euerie action belonging therevnto there was imminent danger, as firſt you heard in the laieng of the ſluſe. And manie times in digging of chalke, they ſtood in the cliffe and vndermined it, ſo as ſometimes an hundred lode fell downe at once from vnder their féet, and ſometimes from aboue their heads; and yet through Gods goodnes, & their diligent care, all eſcaped without hurt: ſauing two perſons, vpon whom great chalke rocks and much abundance of earth did fall, and yet were recouered without loſſe of life or of lim. In the paſſage alſo of the courts, if (by chance) either man or boie had fallen downe amongeſt them (as ſometimes ſome did) the hill was ſo ſtéepe at ſome places, and the court was ſo ſwift, that there could be no ſtaie made, but the courts muſt run ouer them, and yet no great harme hath happened that waie. And I my ſelfe haue ſéene a court loden with earth paſſe ouer the bellie or ſtomach of the driuer, and yet he not hurt at all therby. Manie courts alſo being vnloden (for expedition) were driuen at low waters through the chanell, within the pent, from maiſter lieutenants wall; whereby they gained more than halfe the waie: and ſo long as by anie poſſibilitie they might paſſe that waie, they were loth to go about. And when the flood came, the chanell did ſo ſuddenlie ſwell, as manie horſſes with their courts and driuers which rode in them were ouertaken, or rather ouerwhelmed with water, and were forced to ſwim, with great hazard of life; though therat ſome tooke pleaſure. For ſometimes the boies would ſtrip themſelues naked, and ride in that caſe in their courts through the chanell, being ſo high, as they were ducked ouer head and eares: but they knew their horſſes would ſwim and carrie them through the ſtreame, which miniſtred to ſome occaſion of laughter and mirth. Finallie, this ſummer, being in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and thrée, was verie hot and contagious, & the infection of the plague that yeare more vniuerſallie diſperſed through England than in manie yeares before, and that towne verie much ſubiect therevnto, by means of throughfare and common paſſage, and had béene extremelie viſited therewith not long before, ſo as the towne was abandoned of moſt men; yea of ſome of the inhabitants themſelues for that cauſe: and yet God bleſſed ſo the works, as in this extraordinarie and populous aſſemblie, there was in no part of the towne anie death or infection either of townſmen or workmen, which reſorted thither from all the parts of England.

Dangers happilie eſcaped.

Boies plaie.

The flag of libertie.

And one thing more in mine opinion is to be noted and commended herein, that is to ſaie, that in all this time, and among all theſe people, there was neuer anie tumult, fraie, nor falling out, to the diſquieting or diſturbance of the works, which by that means were the better applied, and with leſſe interruption. For they neuer ceaſed working the whole daie, ſauing that at eleuen of the clocke before noone, as alſo at ſix of the clocke in the euening, there was a flag vſuallie held vp by the ſargent of the towne, in the top of a tower, except the tide or extraordinarie buſines forced the officers to preuent the houre, or to make ſome ſmall delaie & ſtaie therof. And preſentlie vpon the ſigne giuen, there was a generall ſhout made by all the workers: and whereſoeuer anie court was at that inſtant either emptie or loden, there was it left, till one of the clocke after noone or ſix of the clocke in the morning, when they returned to their buſineſſe. But by the ſpace of halfe an houre before the flag of libertie was hanged out, all the court driuers entered into a ſong, whereof although the dittie was barbarous, and the note ruſticall, the matter of no moment, & all but a ieſt: yet is it not vnworthie of ſome briefe note of remembrance; becauſe the tune or rather the noiſe thereof was extraordinarie, and (being deliuered with the continuall voice of ſuch a multitude) was verie ſtrange. In this and ſome other reſpect, I will ſet downe their dittie, the words whereof were theſe:

O Harrie hold vp thy hat, t'is eleuen * a clocke, and a little, little, little, little paſt:
My bow is broke, I would vnyoke, my foot is ſore, I can worke no more.

* Or ſix.

This ſong was made and ſet in Romneie marſh, where their beſt making is making of wals and dikes, and their beſt ſetting is to ſet a néedle or a ſtake in a hedge: howbeit this is a more ciuill call than the brutiſh call at the theatre for the comming awaie of the plaiers to the ſtage. I thinke there was neuer worke attempted with more deſire, nor proceeded in with more contentment, nor executed with greater trauell of workemen, or diligence of officers, nor prouided for with more carefulneſſe of commiſſioners, nor with truer accounts or duer paie, nor contriued with more circumſpection of the deuiſers and vndertakers of the worke, nor ended with more commendation or comfort: ſauing that vpon the ſeuen & twentith of Iulie, being S. Iames his daie, the verie daie when the croſſe wall and the long wall met, and were ioined together, and in effect finiſhed (for both wals were brought aboue the high water marke, and nothing remained to be done of the ſame but highthening, which might be doone at anie time after) ſir Thomas Scot the principall piller of that worke fell ſicke vpon the wals, and was conueied thenſe in a wagon to his houſe, where he remained ſix wéeks, more likelie to die than to liue, whoſe ladie and wife (being a moſt vertuous and noble matrone, & a liuelie paterne of womanhood and ſobrietie, the daughter of ſir Iohn Baker knight, and the mother of ſeuentéene children) vſed ſuch diligent attendance and continuall care for hir huſbands recouerie of helth, as thereby ſhe brought hir ſelfe into ſo weake ſtate of bodie, as being great with two children, ſhe fell ſicke; and after hir vntimelie trauell, being deliuered of a ſonne and a daughter, ſhe ended hir mortall life.

A commendation of them which wrought or had anie charge about Douer works.

Sir Thomas Scot fell ſicke in Douer works.

The death of the ladie Scot.

This ſickneſſe of ſir Thomas Scot, and that which fell out therevpon, was no ſmall diſcomfiture to him and all his. And the workmen at Douer made ſuch mone for his ſickneſſe, and alſo for his abſence, that euerie ſtréet was repleniſhed with ſorrow and gréefe; and the people would be comforted with nothing more, nor anie waie be better incouraged to worke luſtilie, than to be told that ſir Thomas Scot was well recouered, and would ſhortlie be amongſt them againe. And in truth, they tranſlated their barbarous muſicke into a ſorrowfull ſong, and in ſtéed of calling to Harrie for their dinner, they called to God for the good health and returne of their beſt fréend ſir Thomas Scot, and that with a generall and continuall outcrie, euen in their old accuſtomed tune & time. But the courts procéeded in highthening the wals, vntill they were raiſed about two foot higher than they were on S. Iames his daie, when the wals met togither; ſo as the croſſe wall is ninetie foot broad in the bottome, and about fiftie foot in the top. The long wall is ſeuentie foot in the bottome, and almoſt fortie foot in the top, in ſo much as vpon either wall two courts may méet and paſſe, or turne without troubling ech other. The length of the croſſe wall is fortie rods, the length of the long wall a hundred and twentie rods. The charge of theſe two wals, with the appurtenances, amounted to two thouſand and ſeauen hundred pounds, as appeareth in the expenditors books. If there were anie iſſue or draining of water vnder the wals, it was ſoone ſtopped by the peiſe of the wall it ſelfe, which neuer left ſinking till it came to the foundation of the rocke, except (by ſome ouerſight of the workemen) ſome part thereof were ſet vpon the beach, which ſhould by order haue beene firſt remooued, & in that caſe they benched it, digging a trench at the foot of that part of the wall, and filling the ſame with earth, they made it verie tight, and ſo might anie ſuch place be perfected and amended if need ſhould require. But at this houre there leaketh not a drop of water vnder or through anie part of the wall that anie man maie perceiue or ſee: ſo as a full pent ſhrinketh not anie whit at all betwixt tide and tide, whereas the allowance of one foot leakage or fall at the leaſt was required of them, which exhibited the plot of the wooden wall, which being meaſured from the top or face of the high pent diminiſheth almoſt one quarter thereof. And thus betwixt the firſt of Maie and midſt of Auguſt, this pent, which was thought vnpoſſible to be doone in three yeares, was perfectlie finiſhed in leſſe than three months, and remaineth in ſo good and ſure ſtate, as the longer it ſtandeth, the better and tighter it will be.

The bredth, depth, length, and charge of the long and croſſe wall, with the arming, &c.

A neceſſarie remedie if water draine vnder the wall

Expedition neceſſarie and profitable.

The ſtate of the wals.

If neuer anie thing ſhould be added herevnto, this pent (by reaſon of the abundance of water reteined therein, and iſſuing out of the ſluſe) would mainteine a good hauen in that place; for the violent courſe therof will alwaies open the hauens mouth, and make a fret there, euen downe to the rocke, although it be diſtant from the ſame threeſcore rods; inſomuch as at this inſtant there maie come in at quarter floud a barke of fortie or fiftie tun, and at full ſea a ſhip of three hundred tun and vpwards. But when the two iuttie heads are once finiſhed (which are now in hand) ſo as the hauens mouth be perfected, anie ſhip whatſoeuer maie enter in thereat, and remaine within that rode in good ſafetie. But as at manie other times heretofore there hath beene ſure triall had of the good effects of this pent, ſo now in this laſt moneth of October one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and ſix, one gate of the ſluſe being by miſchance broken, ſo as by the ſpace of foure daies there could be no water reteined within the pent, to ſcowre the mouth of the hauen, the ſame was ſo choked and ſwarued vp with ſand and beach in that ſpace, as no bote could enter in, or paſſe out of the ſame: inſomuch as Edward Wootton eſquire, being then at Douer to paſſe thenſe in an ambaſſage from hir maieſtie to the French king, was forced to ſend to Sandwich for a craier, to tranſport him to Calis, becauſe no bote of Douer lieng within the rode could paſſe out at the hauens mouth. But aſſoone as the ſaid gate of the ſluſe was repared, euen the next tide following, a veſſell of three hundred tun might and did eaſilie paſſe in and out thereat, one pent of water had ſo ſcowred and depthened the ſame. Whereby it maie appeare, that neither the coſt beſtowed, nor the worke performed, hath beene vnprofitablie imploied, or vnneceſſarilie vndertaken.

A ſure triall latelie made of the good effect of the pent.

A gate of the ſluſe broken.

Edward Wootton eſquire ambaſſador into France.

The effect of the pent.

Of the ſluſe.

Now you ſhall vnderſtand, that the ſmall ſluſe which was firſt made and laied in the croſſe wall in ſuch ſort, and for ſuch purpoſe as hath beene declared, was taken vp after the ſaid walles were finiſhed, and a ſluſe of far greater charge was made by the aforeſaid Peter Pet, who vndertooke to doo it by great, and had for the ſame foure hundred pounds, the laieng whereof did coſt two hundred pounds more at the leaſt. This ſluſe conteineth in length foureſcore foot, in bredth ſixteene foot, in depth thirteene, and hath in it two draw gates. It was one whole moneth in laieng, all which time the ſaid lord Cobham made his abode there, and kept a moſt honorable and coſtlie table, furthering thoſe works not onelie with his continuall preſence and countenance, but alſo with his good direction, and that not at ſtarts, but from morning till night, and from daie to daie, vntill the full accompliſhing thereof.

ie lord bham remaineth at uer one whole mo eth.

And in the meane time ſir Francis Walſingham hir maieſties principall ſecretarie was not vncarefull of this action, as being the man without whome nothing was doone, directing the courſe, and alwaie looking into the ſtate thereof, and gaue continuall life thervnto, by prouiding monie for it, whereof when anie want approched, he neuer failed to ſee or rather to ſend a ſure ſupplie. Since the finiſhing of theſe wals and ſluſes, there hath beene much worke and charge imploied about one of the iuttie heads, and beautifieng of the harborough, wherin one George Carie of Deuonſhire eſquire, and one John Hill an auditor, haue beene the principall directors. But becauſe that worke remaineth as yet vnperformed, the report thereof ſhall alſo remaine to be made by others that ſhall hereafter haue occaſion to write of ſuch affairs.

Sir Francis Walſingham principall freend to theſe works.

Of the late works.

¶ At the aſſiſes kept at the citie of Exceſter, the fourteenth daie of March, in the eight and twentith yeare of hir maieſties reigne, before ſir Edmund Anderſon knight lord chiefe iuſtice of the common plees, and ſargeant Floredaie one of the barons of the excheker, iuſtices of the aſſiſes in the countie of Deuon and Exon, there happened a verie ſudden and a ſtrange ſickeneſſe; firſt amongſt the priſoners of the gaole of the caſtell of Exon, & then diſperſed (vpon their triall) amongſt ſundrie other perſons: which was not much vnlike to the ſickeneſſe that of late yeares happened at an aſſiſe holden at Oxford, before ſir Robert Bell knight, lord chiefe baron of the excheker, and iuſtice then of that aſſiſe; and of which ſickeneſſe he amongſt others died. This ſickeneſſe was verie ſharpe for the time, & few eſcaped, which at the firſt were infected therewith. It was contagious and infectious, but not ſo violent, as commonlie the peſtilence is; neither dooth there appeare anie outward vlcer or ſore.

The note of Iohn Hooker [illegible] Vowell concerning the ſudden [illegible] happening in Exceſter.

The origen and cauſe thereof diuerſe men are of diuerſe iudgements. Some did impute it, and were of the mind, that it proceeded from the contagion of the gaole, which by reaſon of the cloſe aire, and filthie ſtinke, the priſoners newlie come out of a freſh aire into the ſame, are in a ſhort time for the moſt part infected therewith; and this is commonlie called the gaole ſickeneſſe, and manie die thereof. Some did impute it to certeine poore Portingals, then priſoners in the ſaid gaole. For not long before, one Barnard Drake eſquier (afterwards dubbed knight) had beene at the ſeas, and meeting with certeine Portingals, come from New found land, and laden with fiſh, he tooke them as a good priſe, and brought them into Dartmouth hauen in England; and from thenſe they were ſent, being in number about eight and thirtie perſons, vnto the gaole of the caſtell of Exon, and there were caſt into the deepe pit and ſtinking dungeon.

he originall auſe of this ection hereto imputed.

Barnard Drake eſquier.

Theſe men had beene before a long time at the ſeas, and had no change of apparell, nor laine in bed, and now lieng vpon the ground without ſuccor or reliefe, were ſoone infected; and all for the moſt part were ſicke, and ſome of them died, and ſome one of them was diſtracted: and this ſickeneſſe verie ſoone after diſperſed it ſelfe among all the reſidue of the priſoners in the gaole; of which diſeaſe manie of them them died, but all brought to great extremities, and verie hardlie eſcaped. Theſe men, when they were to be brought before the foreſaid iuſtices for their triall, manie of them were ſo weake and ſicke, that they were not able to go nor ſtand; but were caried from the gaole to the place of iudgement, ſome vpon handbarrowes, and ſome betweene men leading them, and ſo brought to the place of iuſtice.

The miſchiefe of naſtie apparell.

The ſight of theſe mens miſerable and pitifull caſes, being thought (and more like to be hunger ſtarued than with ſickeneſſe diſeaſed, mooued manie a mans hart to behold and looke vpon them; but none pitied them more than the lords iuſtices themſelues, and eſpeciallie the lord chiefe iuſtice himſelfe; who vpon this occaſion tooke a better order for keeping all priſoners thenſefoorth in the gaole, and for the more often trials: which was now appointed to be quarterlie kept at euerie quarter ſeſſions, and not to be poſted anie more ouer, as in times paſt vntill the aſſiſes. Theſe priſoners thus brought from out of the gaole to the iudgement place, after that they had beene ſtaied, and pauſed a while in the open aire, and ſomewhat refreſhed therwith, they were brought into the houſe, in the one end of the hall neere to the iudges ſeat, and which is the ordinarie and accuſtomable place where they doo ſtand to their trials and arreignments.

The aſſiſe at Exceſter appointed to be quarterlie kept.

And howſoeuer the matter fell out, and by what occaſion it happened, an infection followed vpon manie and a great number of ſuch as were there in the court, and eſpeciallie vpon ſuch as were neereſt to them were ſooneſt infected. And albeit the infection was not then perceiued, becauſe euerie man departed (as he thought) in as good health as he came thither: yet the ſame by little and little ſo crept into ſuch, as vpon whom the infection was ſeizoned, that after a few daies, and at their home comming to their owne houſes, they felt the violence of this peſtilent ſickeneſſe: wherein more died that were infected than eſcaped. And beſides the priſoners, manie there were of good account, and of all other degrees which died thereof: as by name ſargeant Floredaie who then was the iudge of thoſe trials vpon the priſoners, ſir Iohn Chicheſter, ſir Arthur Baſſet, and ſir Barnard Drake knights; Thomas Carew of Haccombe, Robert Carie of Clouelleigh, Iohn Forteſcue of Wood, Iohn Waldron of Bradfeeld, and Thomas Riſdone eſquires, and iuſtices of the peace.

This ſicknes was contagious & mortall.

Principall men that died of that infection.

The loſſe of euerie of them was verie great to the commonwealth of that prouince and countrie: but none more lamented than theſe two knights, ſir Iohn Chicheſter, and ſir Arthur Baſſet; who albeit they were but yoong in yeares, yet ancient in wiſedome, vpright in iudgement, and zealous in the miniſtration of iuſtice. Likewiſe Robert Carie, a gentleman ſtriken in yeares, and a man of great experience, knowledge, and learning: he had beene a ſtudent of the common lawes of the realme at the temple, and verie well learned both therein, and vniuerſallie ſeene in all good letters: an eloquent man of his ſpeech, effectuall in deliuerie, deepe in iudgement, vpright in iuſtice, and conſiderat in all his doings. The more worthie were theſe perſonages, the greater loſſe was their deaths to the whole common wealth of that countrie. Of the plebeian and common people died verie manie, and eſpeciallie conſtables, reeues, and tithing men, and ſuch as were iurors, and namelie one iurie of twelue, of which there died eleuen.

Sir Iohn Chicheſter, and ſir Arthur Baſſet bemoned and commended.

Eleuen of the iurie with other officers die of this ſickeneſſe.

This ſickeneſſe was diſperſed through out all the whole ſhire, and at the writing hereof in the fiue of October, one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and ſix, it is not altogither extinguiſhed. It reſteth for the moſt part about fourteene daies and vpwards by a ſecret infection, before it breake out into his force and violence. At the firſt comming, it made the people afraid and diſmaid, manie men then pretending rather than performing the amendement of life. So long as the plague was hot and feruent, ſo long euerie man was holie and repentant: but with the ſlaking of the one, followed the forgetfulneſſe of the other; euen as it is with a companie of ſhrewd children, who ſo long as the rod is ouer the head, ſo long feare of correction frameth them to aptneſſe, conformitie, and obedience.

Affliction draweth men to God, &c.

¶ In the chronicles of Ireland, vpon occaſion of ſeruice in the higheſt office there, mention was made here and there of ſir Henrie Sidneie his ſaiengs and doings, where promiſe did paſſe (by means of diſcourſing his death) that the reader was to looke for a full declaration of his life and death in the chronicles of England, as courſe of time ſhould giue direction. Now therefore hauing entred into the eight and twentith yeare of hir maieſties gratious gouernment, and the yeare of Chriſt 1586, the time moſt fitlie openeth a readie waie into the hiſtorie concerning that nobleman, penned by one that could not be ignorant of his affaires, conſidering the neereneſſe and neceſſarineſſe of his ſeruice, and therefore as a truth to be receiued.

An introducti. to the hiſtoricall remembrance of the Sidneis, the father and the ſonne, &c.

This right famous, renowmed, worthie, vertuous and heroicall knight, by father and mother verie noblie deſcended, was from his infancie bred and brought vp in the princes court, and in neereneſſe to his perſon vſed familiarlie euen as a companion, and manie times a bedfellow. After that by courſe of nature and lawfull deſcent, this yoong prince was inueſted in the kingdome and imperiall crowne, he aduanced this gallant noble gentleman (partlie as it ſeemed for the ſingular loue and entire affection he formerlie bare him) to be a principall gentleman of his priuie chamber. For he was then reputed for comelineſſe of perſon, gallantneſſe & liuelineſſe of ſpirit, vertue, qualitie, beautie, & good compoſition of bodie, the onelie od man & paragon of the court. And from time to time this good and moſt godlie king held ſuch delight in his pleaſant, modeſt, and ſweet conuerſation and companie, as he would ſildome or neuer giue him leaue to be abſent from him, till his laſt breth that he departed this life in his armes at Greenwich. Such exceeding expectation & hope was conceiued of this honorable gentleman in his yonger yeares, as he was ſpeciallie choſen and ſent ambaſſador to Henrie the firſt then French king, concerning matter verie important, being at that time not fullie one and twentie yeares old, and performed his charge with that ſingular commendation, wiſedome, ſpirit and dexteritie, as at ſundrie times not long after, he was emploied in ambaſſage both in France & Scotland, yea ſomtime twiſe in one yere.

The note of Edmund Molineux touching ſir Henrie Sidneis life and death.

His education in his youth.

His emploiment in ambaſſage.

He was foure ſeuerall times lord iuſtice of Ireland, and three times by ſpeciall appointment and commiſſion ſent deputie out of England: at each which ſeuerall time, he by his wiſedome and good gouernement appeaſed and ſuppreſſed a great and an actuall rebellion, the ſeeds whereof were for the moſt part ſowen and the fire kindled (though ſmoothlie and cunninglie hid and couered) before his comming, or in the time of his abſence. In his firſt deputation he ſuppreſſed the rebellion of Shane Oneill, and floured the top of the caſtell of Dublin with the archrebels head. In his ſecond he ſuppreſſed the moſt dangerous inſurrection begun and long continued by ſome of the Butlers. In the third the commotion of the erle of Clanricard, & his two graceleſſe hopeloſt ſonnes Shane and Vlike Bourke.

Foure times lord iuſtice, thriſe lord deputie of Ireland.

He ſuppreſſed by force and policie three actuall rebellions.

Immediatlie after his firſt arriuall deputie, he cauſed the old ſtatutes and ordinances for the aboliſhing of coine and liuerie (the ancient feſtering ſore and creeping canker of that countrie and commonwealth) to be reuiued and put in due execution, againſt ſundrie perſons of calling and note, who were therewithall ſharplie touched, wherevpon followed a long time after great good to the countrie, and a ſpeedie releefe to the poore oppreſſed people of that realme. He deuiſed that the remoter prouinces ſhould be gouerned by preſidents, after the imitation of the marches of Wales, from whenſe he tooke his patterne, being himſelfe at that time preſident, holding opinion that there could be neither better nor a more expedit and eaſie means to reforme and reduce that barbarous countrie to perfect obedience and ciuilitie, than planting of preſidents in the remoter prouinces, to the end vniuerſall iuſtice might be currant amongſt them, whereby the poore might be deliuered from the woonted exactions and tyrannies of the lords and great ones (by whom they were dailie ſpoiled and oppreſſed) and taſt the ſweet benefits and pleaſant fruits of peace and quietneſſe, the onelie ſingular commoditie, and the moſt happie bleſſing of wiſe, politike, and diſcreet gouernement.

He reuiued and put in execution the lawes for the aboliſhing of coine and liuerie.

He deuiſed the planting of preſidents in the remoter prouinces.

He both firſt deuiſed, and conſequentlie prudentlie executed, the plot for the diuiſion and diſtribution of the Iriſh countries into ſhire ground, whereby inſued the currencie of hir maieſties writ, which before that time was either not knowne, or at leaſt neuer vſed amongſt them. He in his gouernment aduanced and increaſed the reuenues of the crowne by waie of cuſtome, impoſt vpon wines, compoſitions with the Iriſhrie for rent and ſeruice, and other direct and commendable means, as out of caſualties creating rents certeine, ten thouſand pounds yearelie. And by good deuiſe and policie he had both intended, and would haue brought to paſſe and performed a farre greater increaſe, if enuie, ſpite, and malice of that vnhappie countrie had not croſſed him, and oppoſed themſelues all that they could, by purſſe or credit againſt his honorable, worthie, and commendable ſeruices & deſſeins: an example of rare note to be duelie followed, and carefullie executed by his ſucceſſors, that Ireland may in ſhort time be reduced to beare Irelands charges, and made both honorable and profitable to the crowne (as were to be wiſhed.) He repared the caſtell of Dubline, being vſed a long time before as a ruinous, vncleane, and filthie place, of no reckoning and accompt, ſtored onlie with mechanicall perſons, and ſome of woorſe ſort (the conſtable and his familie excepted) and left the ſame a conuenient and fit houſe for the gouernour to lie in, to which vſe it now ſerueth and is imploied.

He deuiſed the lawes for the diſtribution of the Iriſh countries into ſhire ground.

He increaſed the reuenues ten thouſand pounds yerlie.

He builded the bridge of Athelon ouer the riuer of Shenin, arched it with maſonrie and free ſtone, ſtrong wall and battlement, and made it of that ſtrength, togither with that ſpaciouſneſſe and bredth, as two carts may (in maner) meet afront. By building of which bridge ouer ſo ſwift & great a ſtreame, the paſſage was ſet open and made free out of the pale into Conaught, which before (by reaſon of the ſtrenableneſſe of the water) was not paſſable, which dawnted and appalled the rebels and traitors more, and kept them in greater awe and due obedience, than anie deuiſe or policie before had doone, or other plot lightlie could then doo. He likewiſe began the walling and fortifieng of the towne of Carickfergus in Vlſter, reedifieng of the towne of Athenrie in Conaught, the ſtrengthening of Athelon with gates and other fortifications, the foundation and plot of the bridge of Caterlagh, and made a ſtrong goale at Molingar, and walled the ſame about with ſtone, to impriſon rebels, theeues, and other malefactors. And likewiſe he begun manie other needfull and neceſſarie works in ſundrie other places which tended to the great furtherance and aduancement of ſeruice, but he left them Quaſi opera inchoata: for he being called awaie ſo ſoone, time would not permit and allow him to finiſh and fullie to end them, or (it may be) by fatall appointment the time is not yet come the countrie deſerueth ſo great a good and benefit of Gods eternall bleſſing.

His buildings, fortifications, and other neceſſarie works for the benefit and good of the countrie.

He found hir maieſties records laid as it were in an open place, whither anie man (that vouchſafed his paines) might come that would, not defended, but ſubiect to wind, raine, and all kind of weather, and ſo in a ſort neglected, that they ſerued now and then (as I haue by good men and good meanes crediblie heard reported) in ſteed of better litter to rub horſſe heeles, which he with great care and diligence cauſed to be peruſed and ſorted, and prepared an apt place within the caſtell of Dubline, well trimmed and boorded with a chimneie in the roome, where neither by the moiſture of the wals, nor vnſeaſonableneſſe of the weather, nor other meanes they could be ſubiect to harme. He prepared fit & conuenient places and ſeuerall diuiſions to laie them apart, according to their ſeuerall natures, and appointed one of diſcretion and ſkill to looke to them, who alſo for his better incoragement was aſſigned a conuenient fee for his labor. He alſo cauſed the ſtatutes, policies, and ordinances of that realme, which laie hid and not knowen to manie (though not deſtroied but kept in ſafetie) to be ſearched, ſurueied, and ouer viewed, by men of the beſt learning, ſkill, and diſcretion he could find or come by in that realme, giuing them in expreſſe charge to peruſe and read all, and to collect ſuch and ſo manie of them as they ſhould in their diſcretions iudge and diſcerne to be expedient and neceſſarie to be publiſhed and knowen, to the end the ſame might be imprinted, as afterward they were, that no man thenſforth might pretend ignorance in the lawes, ſtatutes, & ordinances of his owne countrie where he was borne, which euerie man by our lawes is bound to know. And becauſe he both ſaw and by experience found what defect grew in the adminiſtration of iuſtice, by reaſon of kinred, affinitie, corruption, parcialitie, as otherwiſe; he deuiſed, and earneſtlie ſought to haue Engliſhmen ſent ouer to ſupplie the cheefe places of iuſtice. And for the better increaſe of hir maieſties reuenue and profit, he praied the like to ſerue in the rooms of hir highneſſe attorneie generall and ſollicitor.

He built conuenient rooms for the keeping and preſeruation of the records which before were neglected.

He cauſed the ſtatutes of Ireland to be imprinted which neuer before were publiſhed.

He procured ſome Engliſhmen to be ſent ouer, for the better adminiſtration of iuſtice.

No man had a greater deſire to aduance the publike euerie waie than he had, and in opinion greatlie magnified & eſteemed all them that were of that mind: for he would manie times ſaie, that thoſe were things memorable, of perpetuitie, fame, and laſt, where all priuat things died and periſhed with their priuat perſons. Whereſoeuer he was beſtowed to ſerue, he had ſuch a rare gift, gallant courtlie behauior, and comlineſſe of perſon, as he gained the harts of manie, and ſuch vniuerſall liking and louing of all ſorts of people toward him, as they were euer deſirous and neuer wearie of him; but ſpeciall ſute commonlie made of the graueſt, beſt, and wiſeſt ſort amongſt them, when he was reuoked to haue him returne and continue againe amongſt them. He was (as beſt became him) verie aduiſed, circumſpect, and carefull in the ſeruice of the ſtate, not onelie ſetting apart, but in a ſort neglecting all buſines of his owne, in reſpect of his charge. He was a perfect orator by nature, hauing ſuch readineſſe and facilitie of ſpeech, flowing eloquence, ſweet deliuerie, and paſſing memorie (for he ſeldome or neuer forgat anie thing he either read or heard) as he was ſpeci-

A great furtherer of all publike works.

The great loue he got him in all places where he ſerued.

His carefulneſſe in the ſeruice of the ſtate.

allie noted a moſt rare man of all that did heare him. Such ample inſtructions he would giue for the framing and writing of his letters, or anie other thing he committed to be conceiued and put downe in writing, and diſpoſe the ſame in ſo good order and fine method, as a verie ſimple man, if he reteined and remembred but a part of that he ſaid and deliuered, might ſupplie himſelfe with matter inough to the purpoſe to write of.

Verie expert and able he was of a bad clerke in time to frame a good ſecretarie.

And when by occaſion he happened vpon ſome dull conceipted ſpirited fellow (as Ireland and Wales now and then breed ſome ſuch) to whome he had giuen inſtructions to write, who afterwards brought him the ſame to ſigne, not couched in ſort as he liked or would haue it; his temperance, courteſie, and diſcreet modeſtie was ſuch, as he would neuer ſhew choler and impatience, rent the paper in peeces, or publikelie diſgrace the writer, but bid him not be diſcouraged for that fault: he could giue him the like inſtructions againe he gaue him before, but willed him then to marke and remember them better. At ech ſeuerall time he was ſent deputie into Ireland, he was by occaſion, and as time fell out, furniſhed with a new ſecretarie. The firſt was maſter Edward Waterhouſe, now knighted, and one of hir maieſties councell in Ireland. The ſecond maſter Edmund Tremaine, who after was preferred to be a clearke to hir maieſties councell on hir highneſſe perſon attendant. The third (who although it was thought of manie, who were in that caſe well able to iudge) neither in paine, deſert, birth, nor breeding was much inferiour to the other two that were before him: yet in fortune, reward, or other recompenſe ſo far behind them, as this noble gentleman (who trulie honored vertue) maſter to them all three, would manie times in ſort lament, and deepelie bemone to his good friends, commending highlie this mans paine and diligence, attributing his hard hap to his owne miſhap, the time ſo ſerued he could not doo him good, which manie times & by ſundrie means he had earneſtlie attempted to doo; affirming often in ſolemne and earneſt proteſtation as well to him as others, that it greeued him not a little, his fortune was ſo bad, to come to him now in the declination and wane of the moone: for he was the ſole onelie man he had imploied about him in that neereneſſe and credit of ſeruice, wherein he had vſed him, that euer had quailed vnder his hands (for that was the terme he vſed) howbeit, he well hoped time or ſome good man (in reſpect his ſeruice was publike and not priuat) would repaire that then he could not doo. For he deemed the man right worthie regard and conſideration, that had ſerued him ſo long (and that in his great and roiall ſeruices, in ſo painefull and toileſome a place) without anie great wages, fee, or other interteinment growing to him in perpetuitie or other wais; which was either burthenous to his purſe, or proceeding by or from him by anie other degree, to the gentlemans benefit, increaſe of credit, or further aduancement, in recompenſe of his long ſeruice.

Of great facilitie in diſpatch of common cauſes.

He had both a ſpeciall care & likewiſe a ſingular gift in diſpatch of common cauſes, and the people in like manner had a paſſing maruellous deſire to be heard & diſpatched by him. Therefore as well in part to ſatiſfie their humors and affections, as more completlie to performe the due and full meaſure of his charge (which was to heare and helpe all as neere as he could) he applied himſelfe greatlie thervnto, and would ſpare no paines, but indure maruellous toile and trauell to rid and diſpatch awaie ſutors: which he could doo with ſuch dexteritie and woonderfull facilitie, as the ſame might ſeeme no wearineſſe and tediouſneſſe at all to him (that was halfe a hell to ſome others) but rather to be reckoned a kind of recreation and paſtime. He made manie beholding vnto him, for he (as much as laie in him) did benefit manie, and had more than an ordinarie deſire to doo for all his friends and faithfull followers; and ſo carefullie, earneſtlie, and painfullie he would trauell to aduance their particular ſutes, were it ſometimes to ſpeake to hir maieſtie hir ſelfe, or to the bodie of hir graue and honorable councell, or to anie priuat councellor apart, as though he had purpoſelie followed his owne moſt weightie cauſes.

A great deſire to doo for all men.

A tender father to his children and a louing maſter to his ſeruants.

And as he was a moſt deere, kind, tender, and louing father to his children (for none could loue and eſteeme his children more than he did) and noting in them great minds and hautie courages, which drew them by degrees to exceſſe in expenſe, and more than an ordinarie liberalitie, he would ſometime fatherlie aduiſe them thus; that if they meant to liue in order, they ſhould euer behold whoſe ſonnes, & ſeldome thinke whoſe nephues they were: ſo he was an affable, gentle, courteous, conſtant, and honourable maſter to his ſeruants. For he would often ſaie, it was an eaſie matter for them to keepe him, but hard to recouer his loue and fauour, if they had once loſt him. And when anie of his noble and moſt louing friends would commend him greatlie (as manie times they would) that he made much of his old ſeruants (for few that came to him euer went from him, but ſuch as were firſt aduanced by him to better preferment) he would anſwer pleſantlie after his woonted mirth; Lord I giue thee thanks, that of thoſe thou gaueſt me I haue not loſt one. He was maruellous affable and courteous of nature, of eaſie acceſſe, and pleſantlie familiar with anie that had occaſion to repaire vnto him, & ſtrict and preciſe in the obſeruation of good order: For he would ſeldome breake it in anie reſpect, but vpon euident, knowne, and moſt iuſt cauſe, or when he was ouerruled (as ſometimes he was) by ſuch as had ſouereigne power to direct and command him. Extraordinarie courſes he alwaies vtterlie miſliked, eſpeciallie when order was peruerted, or iuſtice hindered, whereby the common ſocietie of mans life is onelie preſerued and mainteined; which two things ſpeciallie purchaſed him ſuch vniuerſall goodwill euerie where (and namelie amongſt the officers of hir maieſties moſt honorable houſhold, with whome he would manie times be familiarlie conuerſant) as they haue often wiſhed he might haue beene honored with a white ſtaffe, to haue borne office with authoritie amongſt them.

Solitario homini atque in agro vitam agenti opinio iuſtitia neceſſaria eſt.

He was intirelie beloued of the officers of hir maieſties houſhold.

His nature was ſo tempered with modeſtie, pietie and patience, as he ſeldome ſhewed heat or choler, how greeuous ſo euer the offenſe was which was giuen him. He was a faſt friend where he profeſſed friendſhip, and no reuengefull fo when he was offended; & hardlie would he be remooued in friendſhip from his friend or follower, but vpon moſt iuſt, certeine, and knowne cauſe, which he could not ſmulther, and would not hide from the partie. I haue manie times heard him ſaie, and by occaſion haue ſeene the ſame written in his owne letters, that he was dubbed knight (by that noble and vertuous prince king Edward) the ſelfe ſame daie ſir William Cecill (then principall ſecretarie, now lord treaſuror of England) was, by meanes wherof and that ſir William Cecill was (yea euen in thoſe daies) eſteemed a moſt rare man, both for ſundrie and ſingular gifts of nature, learning, wiſedome, and integritie: and partlie by the friendlie good offices of that true paterne of humanitie and courteſie, ſir John Cheeke, then ſchoolemaſter to the king (a choiſe deare friend to them both) that there began ſuch an entrie of acquaintance, knowledge, loue, mutuall goodwill, and intire friendſhip betwixt them, as continued alwais

He was dubbed knight the ſame daie ſir William Cecill was.

ſtedfaſt, firme, and vnuariable after till his dieng daie. Nihil autem eſt amabilius, nec copulantius, quàm morum ſimilitudo bonorum. In quibus enim eadem ſtudia ſunt, eademque voluntates, in hijs fit vt æquè quiſque altero delectetur ac ſe ipſo. So that manie times in his life time he would acknowledge & confeſſe how greatlie he and his were bound in good will, and tied in dutie and friendſhip, to this right worthie and noble perſonage, Verus pater patriæ: to whome manie ages nor worlds can ſcarſe once afford a fellow or peere. For ſpeciall fauours, louing courteſies, and amiable benefits & good turns they had receiued by his meanes, and at his owne hands ſundrie waies.

Fortunat in warre, and no leſſe happie in peace.

Paſſing well beloued of his ſouldiors.

He was vpright in iuſtice, yet withall inclined to mercie.

He was of that euen temperature, commixtion, and perfection, as it was hard to iudge, whether to attribute more commendation and praiſe to his gouernement in the time of peace, or to his good hap and policie in warre, he was in both ſo fortunat. In his iourneis he would comfort his ſouldiors with theſe words; My good friends and moſt louing companions: and where ſoeuer he cāme, his chiefe and principall care was to foreſee their wants, and to prouide for their neceſſities. And when it ſo fell out (as ſometimes it did) that he had not wherewithall to ſupplie the ſame, he would beſtow vpon them ſo good countenance and honorable kind ſpeaches, as the ſame would haue contented and ſatiſfied them much better, than ſome other gouernor could haue doone with halfe a ſupplie of that he would: ſo great a conqueror he was of hearts, and of the goodwils of all men, that ſerued with and vnder him. He was alwaies moſt vpright in iuſtice, yet of himſelfe naturallie inclined to mercie (where he hoped it would worke amendement.)

He reuerenced all men of ſcience.

He omitted not morning and euening praier.

Liberall and honorable in hoſpitalitie.

His ſkill far exceeded other mens in knowledge and ſecrets of Ireland.

He greatlie honored all men of ſcience and ſkill, in what good art ſoeuer, and was moſt apt and readie to pleaſure them: for he would manie times ſaie, Science was to be honored whereſoeuer it was to be found: Nam nemo naſcitur artifex. He was ſo zealous in all vertue and godlineſſe, as he neuer omitted in court nor campe, at home or abrode, publike morning and euening praier; which he did attend deuoutlie vpon his knees, beſides his other priuat praiers & meditations euerie daie he did ariſe, and go to bed, which he ſeldome failed. He would neuer in publike aſſemblies, conſultations, field, or feaſt, omit anie thing that apperteined to his office or honor: & alwaies delighted to keepe an orderlie liberall and honorable houſe (greatlie to the reliefe & comfort of the poore) according to the reputation & degree of his place and calling. He had ſteward, treaſuror, controllor, auditor, clearke controllor, clearke of his kitchen, and maiſter cooke, beſides other ordinarie clearks and inferior officers and miniſters of houſhold, who could in their degrees well and ſkilfullie execute their ſeuerall rooms and places; and knew in honor, ſtate, and ceremonie in aſſemblies, ſolemnities, and feaſts, how to ſerue him as he ſhould be. His knowledge in Ireland was far greater than anie one mans of our time hath beene, aſwell touching the naturall conditions, guiſe and maners of the people generallie, as each particular prouince ſeuerallie: and for the perfect and ſound gouernement of the whole vniuerſallie, no one man could ſaie more. Others that haue ſucceeded him, haue built vpon his foundations, and framed their plots of gouernement after his deuiſes: but the originall came from him, it muſt be confeſſed by them all, if they vouchſafe him but onelie that apperteineth vnto him by iuſt deſert, and moſt meere right.

He placed ſir John Perot and ſir Edward Fitton preſidents.

And here due place is offered (although happilie to ſome it maie ſeeme a digreſſion) to ſpeake ſomewhat of the planting of preſidents; becauſe the ſame hath beene vnder hand obſcurelie and cunninglie carried, and according to mens fanſies and imaginations diuerſlie reported; and ſome of his ſhadows haue ſeemed to cloth themſelues with his vertues, and attribute his onelie ſeruices aſwell in that, as in ſome other things, to their owne priuat and peculiar praiſes. To repeat the matter from the beginning, after this noble knight & right worthie gouernor, had found how neceſſarie a thing it was, the planting of preſidents in the remoter prouinces of Ireland; he certified his opinion ouer: which was well conceiued, liked, and digeſted; both of hir highneſſe, and alſo of hir graue and right honorable councell. So that not long after, certeine ſpeciall men were thought of to be choſen, and ſpeedilie ſent thither, as in deed there were; and ſir John Perot appointed preſident of Mounſter, and ſir Edward Fitton for Connagh. The firſt by reaſon of his ſickeneſſe, feebleneſſe, and that ſome parts and lims of his bodie were ſuddenlie become benummed, neuer poſſeſſed the place he was aſſigned vnto; but ſir John Perot was forthwith ſent, and preſentlie ſucceeded in the roome he ſhould haue had. At whoſe ſeuerall arriuals (for the one came ſomewhat after the other) ech was immediatlie diſpatched to his ſeuerall charge, with ample authoritie, commiſſion, and inſtructions deriued from the deputie for their ſeating and placing in thoſe two offices. And after he had in this ſort ſtalled them both, he made his preſent repare into England, before whoſe returne againe, theſe two preſidents were (as it ſeemed) for vrgent cauſe, and by ſpeciall fauour, licenced to come ouer againe. So that their roomes in their abſence were ſupplied (in a ſort) by interchange of commiſſioners; whereby not long after inſued great hurt, waſt, ſpoile, and diſorder in either of thoſe two prouinces.

He placed ſir William Drurie preſident of Mounſter, and ſir Nicholas Malbie colonell of Connagh.

Sir Edward Fitton was afterwards made treaſuror at the warres, and in that roome paied the due debt to nature; and ſir John Perot returned no more to his former office. By meanes whereof, a ſupplie of others was thought of, and ſir William Drurie was appointed preſident for Mounſter; and capteine Nicholas Malbie, a gentleman hir maieſties ſeruant, was aſſigned for the ſeruice in Connagh. Howbeit, the name of lord preſident being thought a little too high and great for this gentleman, in reſpect of the meaneſſe of his liuing and hauiour; he bare the name onelie of colonell, and chiefe commiſſioner of Connagh; hauing neuertheleſſe equall authoritie as ſir Edward Fitton, late lord preſident there had in the ſaid prouince. Theſe two diſcreet, worthie, and expert marſhall men, were placed by like authoritie, inſtructions, and commiſſion, as their predeceſſors had beene; the lord deputie in perſon accompanieng them to their ſeuerall charges, and ſo left them ſetled. And maiſter Malbie, for the better credit and countenance of the place he was to enter then into, was dubbed knight in the church of Athelon, and with that addition and increaſe of title was left in his charge, who after did acceptable and commendable worthie ſeruice.

He had ſeene and knowne more of Ireland than anie one, yea of that countrie birth.

But now to returne to the place where I left: as for the view and knowledge of the ſoile, hauens, ports, promontories, necks of lands, and creeks, or whatſoeuer ſecret or myſterie elſe was to be vnderſtood; take it from the north to the ſouth, from the eaſt to the weſt: no one man (yea although he were of that countrie birth) had ſeene more, or obſerued ſo much as he had doone. His manie, long, and painefull iourneis compared and laid togither (if they maie be well ſorted, and truelie and ſincerlie reported) teſtifie no leſſe than I haue ſaid. For better manifeſtation whereof, his circular diſcouſes (as he named them) put downe, and written with his owne hand, which are extant and to be ſeene, will make the matter more than euident and apparent.

The loue and affection the Iriſhrie bare him, drew manie of them to ciuilitie.

Summa & perfecta gloria conſtat ex tribus hijs: ſi diligit multitudo, ſi fidem habet, ſi cum admiratione quadam honore nos dignos putat.

Little giuen to repoſe and eaſe in the night.

He would in his iourneis wearie and laie vp moſt of his companie.

Nothing offended him more than ingratitude.

He often inuited the gentlemen of the better reformed Iriſhrie, newlie reclamed to ciuilitie, to comelineſſe in habit, and clenlineſſe in diet, houſe, and lodging; which partlie in reſpect of the great loue & affection they bare him, and partlie of freendlie feare to offend him, manie afterwards obſerued and followed. This one thing, amongſt manie others, was noted verie rare in him; that being a big, well liking, and complet full bodie; he could content nature, and ſatiſfie himſelfe with ſo little ſleepe as he did. For he ſeldome kept his bed aboue ſix houres (if he were in health) neither after he aroſe would he take in the daie time anie kind of repoſe. And when he had occaſion to trauell, were it in poſt for ſpeciall ſeruice, or other ordinarie iourneie; he would manie times laie vp, and throughlie wearie moſt of his traine and companie: for he had that abilitie and ſtrong conſtitution of bodie, that none could lightlie indure the continuall laborſome toile and trauell at all times and ſeaſons as he could; nor that hardneſſe of diet for the time as he himſelfe would doo. Nothing euer offended him more than vnkindneſſe and ingratitude; ſpeciallie where he hoped (and the world thought) he had deſerued otherwiſe (whereof ſometimes in the courſe of his life he had his part) and when he was vexed and oppreſſed with that extreame, vnnaturall, and moſt cruell corroſiue fit, his reuenge was commonlie vpon himſelfe, it went no further; which he could not ſo cunninglie hide, but manie times amongſt his friends he would outwardlie bewraie it, by ſome ſhew and outward action: ſo that the greefe and paſſion of his inward tormented mind would manifeſtlie appeare, which was to him (as it ſeemed) for the time ſome eaſe and contentment.

In his dealings his word was his woorſt.

He would now and then coine words.

Some deſcription of his vertues.

Sociable with his aſſiſtants.

When he had occaſion offered to deale in matters great or ſmall; his ſinceritie, plaine, and naked dealing was euer ſuch, as he would commonlie knit vp his ſpeeches with this phraſe; My word is my woorſt, & ſo they ſhould find it. He had that paſſing readineſſe of ſpeech, and delectable ſweet oratorie deliuerie (when he was yoong) as now and then (as occaſion fell out) that he was forced to ſpeake at length in ſolemne ſittings or publike aſſemblies (as ſometimes he was) that he would readilie make and coine words out of his owne forge, and could in ſuch good ſort, ſo apt, faſhion, fit, and grace them; as albeit they were neuer either heard, vſed, or receiued before: yet his mouth ſeemed a ſufficient warrant to others for their naturalization, admiſſion, and common vſe afterwards. He was naturallie pleaſant, and verie merilie conceipted; yet withall graue, wiſe, diſcreet, expert, readie in matters of councell, both inuentiue and iudicious, a good antiquarie, ſkilfull in ſtorie, pedegree, and armes, languaged (for he profited greatlie both by trauell and conference) and not meanelie learned. Which noble vertues and excellent qualities he manie times did and could well ſhew, as time, place, and occaſion required, with an heroicall preſence and maieſtie. He was ſo ſtored with ſuch ſound grounds and principles for ciuill policie and gouernment, as it would greatlie haue delighted, yea the beſt and ripeſt wits to haue heard him diſcourſe at length in thoſe matters: and he was a ſpeciall rare man, that learned not at euerie time ſomewhat from him he had not heard before worth his comming. So friendlie, courteous, and ſociable he was with all his aſſiſtants, collegues, and companions; as they intirelie loued and greatlie honored him.

He made ſpeciall choiſe of ſir Lucas Dillon, and Francis Agard.

Much more might be ſaid of this honorable gentleman.

His intention to haue erected certeine nurſeries of learning.

In Ireland he made ſpeciall choiſe of two worthie councellors, whom for their faithfulnes in councell for the ſtate, good will and freendſhip towards him, and for their integritie & ſinceritie euerie waie, he intirelie loued and aſſuredlie truſted. One was ſir Lucas Dillon who yet liueth, the other maiſter Francis Agard who is now departed: both theſe ſo agreed and concurred in opinion with him, and applied their wits and indeuors ſo dutifullie, and with ſo great zeale and affection to the aduancement of ſeruice, and the good and quiet of the countrie, as ech in emulation freendlie contended with other who ſhould doo the beſt ſeruice. To the one he would ſaie, Lucas mihi ſolus relictus eſt: the other he commonlie called Fidus Achates. Much more might be ſaid (though a great deale too little) of this complet, honorable, and right worthie gentleman, who priuat and publike carried himſelfe alwaies ſo iuſtlie, vprightlie, and euenlie, as (for the moſt part) noble fame went afore him, and loue followed and accompanied him as a ſhadow wherſoeuer he went. He had an intention, which proceeded by degrees to motion in parlement, to haue erected ſome publike ſchooles and nurſeries of learning, which by degrees and in time might haue growen to an vniuerſitie, for the better reformation of the barbariſme of that countrie, and offered a large yeerelie portion of his owne to the furtherance of ſo good a purpoſe. But I know not how, Nondum venit hora, it tooke no place in deed, though in the beginning great apparance & ſhew in words was made to haue verie manie venerable fautors, and more worthie and rich furtherers.

His ſeruice was ſubiect to the eare, and not to the eie, whereby his vertues manie times were ſuppreſſed.

He was deputie of Ireland and preſident of Wales both at one time.

In one thing his fortune was moſt hard, & he more than twiſe vnhappie, that his ſeruice (for the moſt part) was ſubiect to the eare, and not obiect to the eie, by meanes whereof his noble vertues and deſerts were manie times ſuppreſſed, and ſeldome or neuer ſeene, but his faults often told and willinglie heard; and ſo conſequentlie his ſeruice obedient to great miſreport, ſlander, & calumniation. As it fell out among other matters for his laſt ſeruice in Ireland, that manie gaue out how he had taken that realme to farme, in reſpect of the compoſition he made with the queene: ſo that whatſoeuer paine and trauell he tooke, either for the aduancement of the reuenue of the crowne, or maintenance and defenſe of the prerogatiue roiall, it was giuen out and ſpread abrode, that what he did was for himſelfe and for his owne gaine and benefit: where in truth in that ſeruice he ſpent his yeares, ſold his lands, & conſumed much of his patrimonie to the hinderance of his poſteritie, without anie great recompenſe or reward (though others perhaps that were both before him, and ſince haue ſucceeded him, haue gained by the place and countenance of that ſeruice.) He held both the cheefe offices of Ireland and Wales togither at one time, and was likewiſe companion of the moſt honorable order of the garter (ſuch was his ſpeciall fauor and grace with hir maieſtie) which no one priuat ſubiect hath held at once, and inioied ſo great titles and dignities togither, at the leaſt that I haue heard or read of; were he not a kings ſonne, vncle, or nephue: ſo that his fortune in ſhew and apparance was great, though in reſpect of gaine & benefit to himſelfe, nothing equiualent with his vertues. Which ample authoritie & large ſcope of dominion & gouernement procured him (and not his owne deſerts) manie enuious, heauie, and potent enimies. Howbeit, his innocencie was euer his buckler and ſhield of defenſe againſt them: ſo that their complaints (though for a time they might and did a little hinder him) yet ſeldome or neuer they preuailed againſt him. And when he had paſſed ouer ſuch cloudie miſts and ouerthwart ſtorms, he would pleaſantlie ſaie vnto his freends; friends; Salutem ab ijs qui oderunt nos: for the more they contended to ſuppreſſe him, the more (like the camomill being foiled and troden) his vertues roſe vp and appeared, and their malice was both vnfolded and controlled.

He died at the biſhops palace at Worceſter.

His death greatlie bemoned.

This noble knight, graue councellor, complet gentleman, and moſt worthie and rare ſubiect, departed this life at the biſhops palace at Worceſter, the fift daie of Maie, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and ſix (being 57 yeares old complet, wanting onelie one moneth and fifteene daies) about foure of the clocke in the morning, after he had continued ſeuen daies ſicke of a kind of cold palſeie, as the phyſicians decreed of the diſeaſe, which happened vnto him (as it was of manie ſaid, and of mo thought) by reaſon of an extreme cold he tooke vpon the water in his paſſage and remooue by barge betweene Bewdlie and Worceſter, not long after he had beene purged, and his bodie not fullie ſetled, but his pores remaining ſtill open (as it is moſt like) by reaſon of an extraordinarie looſeneſſe which conſequentlie followed the taking of his phyſike which could not be ſtopped; hauing then beene lord preſident of hir maieſties councell eſtabliſhed in the dominion and principalitie of Wales ſix and twentie yeares complet, without anie change or alteration, or abſolute tranſferring the roome or authoritie to anie other in the meane time. For whoſe death there was great mone and lamentation (eſpeciallie by thoſe vnder his gouernement) as hauing loſt that ſpeciall noble man, whome for courteſie they loued, for iuſtice amongeſt them they highlie honored, and for manie other his rare gifts and ſingular vertues they in his life time greatlie eſteemed, and at his death maruellouſlie beemoned, lifting vp both hands and hearts to almightie God, and heartilie wiſhing, and humblie praieng a like might ſucceed in the place as he had beene.

His corps was buried at Penſhurſt.

His affection to Ludlow & Tikenhill.

And like as he liued and continued euer in much fame, great countenance, credit and honor; ſo his buriall was prepared & performed accordinglie. For his bodie by eaſie iorneies and ſhort remooues was conueied from Worceſter vnto his houſe at Penſhurſt in Kent, verie honorablie and well attended with great traine, ceremonie, and all other things apperteining to funerall order, honor, and ſolemnitie: where he was honorablie interred the one and twentith daie of Iune following. He was before imbowelled, and his intrals buried in the deans chapell in the cathedrall church at Worceſter; his heart brought to Ludlow, and buried in the toome with his deere beloued daughter Ambroſia, in the little oratorie he made in the ſemicollegiat pariſh church there, wherein he erected this monument. To this towne of Ludlow eſpeciallie, and ſo in like maner to Tikenhill houſe he carried euer good liking and affection, as might appeare by his often reſort & abode at thoſe two places in the time of his preſidencie, as by ſome other tokens & worthie remembrances he left in perpetuitie to remaine vnto them that ſhould come after, as certeine demonſtrations and ſignes of his former good will.

His good will to the church of Hereford.

Neither muſt I here forget (except I ſhould herein forget my ſelfe) to ſpeake of the church of Hereford, whome (when by occaſion of iuſtice he was reſident there with them) as they intirelie loued and greatlie honored, ſo he in like ſort accepting and acknowledging their kindneſſe and good will (ſuch was euer the ſetled vertue and paſſing bountie of his good nature) that he preſented them, and left to continue and remaine to poſteritie amongſt them, a ſpeciall note of remembrance. By meanes of which honorable and friendlie gift and courteous token ſo louinglie beſtowed, and left to that ſocietie & companie (as the laſt pledge of his former affection & good will borne towards them) he hath beene ſince manie times honorablie remembred, and (no doubt) is and ſtill hereafter maie and will be both eſteemed, loued, honored, & held (as he alwaies deſerued) in freſh and freſher memorie amongeſt them. With this report concerning ſir Henrie Sidneie (a noble man neuer ſufficientlie commended) accordeth that of C.O. ſet downe in his Eirenarchia, where amongſt diuerſe honorable perſonages, I find this note of coherence:

Henricus Sidneus.

Quid cunctos memorem, ſupereſt tamen vnus, & ille
Vndique non minima memorandus laude, parentum
Stemmate ab antiquo, ſed & illis clarior ipſe
Henricus Sidneus, eques gemino ordine ſplendens,
Quem ter legatum dominæ vice ſceptra tenentem,
Iúſque miniſtrantem iam vidit Hibernica tellus,
Nec vidit modò, ſed ſenſit, verita eſt, & amauit,
Vt nemo vnquam alius (vulgo notiſsima res eſt)
Intrârit maiori illas cum gentis amore,
Rexerit obſequio, luctúue reliquerit oras.
Sola nec illius teſtatur Hibernia laudes,
Verùm etiam Albionis pars altera Cambria, curſu
Interlabentis rapido diuiſa Sabrinæ,
Præfecti illius præconia grandia narrat.
Cuius præſidio iam multos tuta per annos
Floruit, vt dubium ſit, eo fœlicior almo
Præſide lætetúrue, an indice gaudeat æquo.
Iampridem diues legatum Gallia vidit
(Eliſabetha) tuum, præſtanti corpore pulchrum, &c.

The time of my ladie Sidneis death.

Sir Philip, ſir Robert, and maiſter Thomas Sidneies.

The ninth daie of Auguſt next following died the moſt noble, worthie, beneficent, and bounteous ladie, the ladie Marie Sidneie, his onelie ſpouſe and moſt deere wife, who was eldeſt daughter vnto that renowmed duke Iohn late of Northumberland, and ſiſter to the right honorable and moſt worthie the earles of Warwike and Leiceſter, moſt zealouſlie, godlie, & penitentlie, as by the teſtimonie of ſome honorable & other graue perſonages is well auouched, and was intoomed at Penſhurſt, in the ſame toome with hir deere and honorable huſband. During the whole courſe of hir ſickneſſe, and ſpeciallie a little before it pleaſed almightie God to call hir henſe to his mercie, ſhe vſed ſuch godlie ſpeeches, earneſt and effectuall perſuaſions to all thoſe about hir, and vnto ſuch others as came of freendlie courteſie to viſit hir, to exhort them to repentance and amendement of life, and dehort them from all ſin and lewdneſſe, as wounded the conſciences, and inwardlie pearſed the hearts of manie that heard hir. And though before they knew hir to exceed moſt of hir ſex in ſingularitie of vertue and qualitie; as good ſpeech, apt and readie conceipt, excellencie of wit, and notable eloquent deliuerie (for none could match hir, and few or none come neere hir, either in the good conceipt and frame of orderlie writing, indicting, and ſpeedie diſpatching, or facilitie of gallant, ſweet, delectable, and courtlie ſpeaking; at leaſt that in this time I my ſelfe haue knowen, heard, or read of) yet in this hir laſt action and ending of hir life (as it were one ſpeciallie at that inſtant called of God) ſhe ſo farre ſurpaſſed hir ſelfe, in diſcreet, wiſe, effectuall, ſound, and grounded reaſons, all tending to zeale and pietie, as the ſame almoſt amazed & aſtoniſhed the hearers to heare & conceiue ſuch plentie of godlie and pithie matter to come from ſuch a creature. Who although for a time ſhe ſeemed to the world to liue obſcurelie, yet ſhe ended this life, & left the world moſt confidentlie, and to God (no doubt) moſt gloriouſlie, to the exceeding comfort of all them (which are not few) that loued or honored hir, or the great and renowmed houſe whereof ſhe was deſcended. They left behind them yet liuing moſt deere pledges noble and worthie reſemblances deſcended of them, three ſonnes, all forward, martiall, and valorous

Marie counteſſe of Penbroke, William lord Herbert of Cardiffe.

The commendation of ſir Philip Sidneie.

Quidam autem ad eas laudes, quas à patribus acceperunt, addunt aliquam ſuam.

He was ſent ambaſſador to the emperor.

gentlemen, and one onelie daughter, matched in marriage vnto the right honorable Henrie earle of Penbroke, whome God hath alreadie bleſſed with goodlie, rare, and towardlie iſſue: ſir Philip Sidneie his ſonne and heire, Ad quem hæreditas gloriæ & factorum imitatio pertinet, a gentleman of great hope, and exceeding expectation, indowed with manie rare gifts, ſingular vertues, and other ornaments both of mind and bodie, one generallie beloued and eſtéemed of all men, who matched in marriage with the daughter and heire of ſir Francis Walſingham knight, hir maieſties principall ſecretarie, by whom he hath alreadie a goodlie babe, but a daughter. And if his good fortune by almightie Gods good appointment anſwer his noble deſerts & worthineſſe, he is moſt like to prooue a famous, great, and rare perſonage for the ſeruice of his countrie & commonwelth. And the glorie, renowme, & fame of ſo worthie a father can neuer die, hauing left ſo noble a ſon, not onlie to continue, but rather (in ſort) to ſurpaſſe his fathers worthineſſe, fame, and vertues; and therfore to be well hoped (& vndoutedlie almoſt expected) he may in time ſucceed him in his offices, or if it pleaſe God in ſome better and greater. To the atteining wherof he is thus farre in good degrée alreadie aduanced (imitating therein his fathers perfect paterne) that he hath bin imploied ambaſſador to the emperor when he was not aboue one and twentie yeres old (as his father at like age was to the French king) in which iorneie by the waie, he had on hir maieſties behalfe to viſit and treat with ſundrie princes, other potentats, and great ones: which he performed in ſuch exquiſit order, and aduiſed wiſe courſe, omitting nothing he ſhould doo, nor ſupplieng anie thing he ſhould not doo in ceremonie or otherwiſe, as he exceedinglie therein ſatiſfied hir maieſtie, both by his letters and report, and wan to himſelfe great credit and ſingular commendation.

His Arcadia.

Not long after his returne from that iorneie, and before his further imploiment by hir maieſtie, at his vacant and ſpare times of leiſure (for he could indure at no time to be idle and void of action) he made his booke which he named Arcadia, a worke (though a méere fanſie, toie, and fiction) ſhewing ſuch excellencie of ſpirit, gallant inuention, varietie of matter, and orderlie diſpoſition, and couched in frame of ſuch apt words without ſuperfluitie, eloquent phraſe, and fine conceipt, with interchange of deuiſe, ſo delightfull to the reader, and pleaſant to the hearer, as nothing could be taken out to amend it, or added to it that would not impaire it, as few works of like ſubiect hath béene either of ſome more earneſtlie ſought, choiſlie kept, nor placed in better place, and amongeſt better iewels than that was; ſo that a ſpeciall déere fréend he ſhould be that could haue a ſight, but much more déere that could once obteine a copie of it. Which his ſo happie and fortunat beginnings ſo amplie ſet out both his ſufficiencie for the publike, and what he can doo in exerciſe priuat, that manie mens eies are drawen into exceeding hope and expectation of his ſpéedie further aduancement, which to the honor of himſelfe and his houſe I dailie praie for, and moſt heartilie wiſh him.

An additament.

Nihil laudabilius, nihil magno & præclaro viro dignius placabilitate, & quaſi ornatus vita eſt temperantia & modeſtia.

¶ This note you find here before ſet downe, touching ſir Philip Sidneie, being a member of the diſcourſe made of his father, was brought and deliuered to the impreſſion before there was either ſpéech, or could be imagination of his fatall end, which ſoone after happened: who for that he was reckoned for his modeſtie, courteſie, affabilitie, and other ſpeciall vertues, amongeſt the verie prime gentlemen for his yeares that this age hath bred, or our countrie afforded; and ſo complet a man to euerie perfection, as the memorie of him ought not to be forgotten, I haue entred the note verbatim, without adding or altering as it came firſt to my hands.

Lord gouernor of Vliſſingen, commonlie called Fluſhing.

This right worthie, and thriſe renowmed knight ſir Philip Sidneie lord gouernor of Vliſſingen, hauing ſpent ſome time in hir maieſties ſeruice in the low countries, with great honor, ſpeciall credit, and eſtimation; and withall, hauing obteined by his vertue, valor, and great policie ſuch an entrie of entire good will, truſt, and authoritie with the ſtates, as his counſels and perſuaſions could much more preuaile and worke ſingular effect with them than anie one mans could doo in anie cauſe whatſoeuer that happened to fall in queſtion or debate amongſt them: therefore earneſtlie following the courſe he then tooke in hand for the aduancement of that ſeruice, and to win fame (the onelie marke true nobilitie either dooth or ought to leuell at) he imbarked himſelfe at Vliſſingen, accompanied onelie with thrée thouſand footmen, & bending his courſe to Axell, which lieth in the countie of Flanders, vſed both ſuch diligence and ſecrecie in this expedition, as he ſurpriſed the towne, before they could haue intelligence of his comming, without loſſe or hurt of anie one of his companie. By meanes whereof, the forts and ſconſes there néere abouts adioining, being ſtriken vpon the ſudden into ſuch a feare & amazement, as doubting ſome further perils to them intended, than anie at the preſent well appeared; voluntarilie and ſimplie gaue themſelues and their holds into his hands, and yéelded to his diſpoſition and mercie. And ſo after he had well refreſhed himſelfe and his companie in this towne he had thus new taken, he departed thenſe, and remained in the countrie not far off, ten or twelue daies next following, till he had vittelled the ſame and put in a garriſon, and left monſieur Pernon there gouernor.

He ſurpriſed Axell in Flanders.

He drowned the countrie by making an entrie into the ſea.

No reſiſtance made by Mondragon.

Now in the meane time of his ſtaie attending theſe ſeruices (and becauſe he would alwaies be occupied in ſome honorable action) he brake a ſluſe, forced a trench, & cut out a banke, that made ſuch an open paſſage & entrance into the ſea, as ſince it hath drowned & deſtroied the whole countrie (being well néere now worne into a chanell) the ſame hauing béene the beſt & moſt fertill ſoile in thoſe parts, & far exceeding anie territorie néere thereabouts, to ſo great a preiudice and annoiance of the enimie, as by common & well grounded opinion, neither by ſluſe, or lightlie anie other draine or deuiſe, that countrie can poſſiblie be recouered or regained. And this enterpriſe was atchiued without making head or other offer of offence, inuaſion, or reſiſtance by Mondragon, who was of purpoſe imploied with ſufficient force to defend the countrie, and to haue impeached all theſe attempts and actions.

Grauelin.

His hurt at the incounter néere Sutphen.

Moreouer, his aduiſe for the ſeruice intended at Grauelin, (diſſenting in opinion from others, who were thought the moſt expert capteins and beſt renowmed and ſorted ſouldiors) gaue ſuch a ſufficient proofe of his excellent wit, policie, and ripe iudgement; as his onelie act and counſell, with the loſſe of a verie few of his companie, wrought all their ſafeties, which otherwiſe by treacherie had béene moſt likelie to haue béene intrapped. And ſo conſequentlie going forward in other ſeruices, at an incounter with the enimie not far from Sutphen, where he that daie moſt valiantly ſerued (for he bare the inuincible mind of an ancient worthie Romane, who euer where he came made account of victorie) he receiued hurt by a muſket ſhot a little aboue the left knée, which ſo brake and rifted the bone, and ſo entred the thigh vpward towards the bodie, as the bullet could not be found before his bodie was opened. Of which hurt notwithſtanding

The daie of the death of ſir Philip Sidneie.

he liued (though in great paine and extreame torment) ſix and twentie daies following, and died the ſeuenteenth daie of October betweene two and three of the clocke in the afternoone at Arnam in Gelderland. By whoſe vntimelie death (to the hartie and inward ſorow of manie) in the moſt floriſhing and prime time of his yeares (for he was ſcarſlie complet one and thirtie yeares old) there is preſented vnto vs a verie rare example, and that in no common caſe; that father, mother, and ſonne (in line of bloud and ſocietie in that neereneſſe, as none can be neerer) ſhould come to their fatall ends and fall of name and familie, within the compaſſe of leſſe than ſix moneths: and that each died ſo far off by diſtance of place one from another, as where they died they were but ſtrangers, where by birth and propertie they could pretend no intereſt. Whereby we maie note a notable leſſon to our good (though in this example we be taught to our griefe) the variableneſſe of fickle fortune, and the ſmall ſecuritie in all humane and worldlie things whatſoeuer: Et quid Deus ſolus eſt in omnibus ſuſpiciendus.

Prima ſocietas eſt in ipſo coniugio, proxima in liberis.

A ſtate for three liues ſoone determined.

The night before he departed, leaning vpon a pillow in his bed, he wrote a line or two by waie of letter to Wierus, a verie expert and learned phyſician, to praie him to come vnto him. And becauſe it maie thereby the better appeare, how ſound and perfect he remained in ſenſe and memorie (notwithſtanding his moſt extreame griefe and paine) till he rendered his debt to nature; I thought it not inconuenient in this place to remember: Mi Wiere veni, veni, de vita periclitor, & te cupio, nec viuus nec mortuus ero ingratus, plura non poſſum, ſed obnixè te oro vt feſtines. Vale.

Tuus P. Sidneius.

Wierus of Claue a learned phyſician.

Not manie daies before he ſent theſe few words here before recited, he wrote a large epiſtle to Belerius a learned diuine, in verie pure and eloquent Latine (in like ſort as manie times he had doone before to ſome great ones (vpon occaſions) and to others of learning and qualitie) the copie whereof was not long after, for the excellencie of the phraſe, and pithineſſe of the matter, brought to hir maieſties view. And ſurelie rare he was, aſwell in that kind, as in manie other qualities of equall raritie. Yea moſt rare and rareſt vndoubtedlie he would haue prooued, if ſo it might haue pleaſed God to haue left vs ſo rare a iewell of vertue and courteſie. A teſtimonie of diuerſe moſt famous and lerned men, who had him in ſpeciall liking and admiration, allow him no leſſe than I write of him. And amongſt others, here I will remember Henrie Stephans in his epiſtle before his Greeke teſtament dedicated vnto him, who writeth thus: Factum eſt enim neſcio quomodo, vt quibus te videre & tua conſuetudine frui datum fuit interuallis, magis ac magis propenſam meam in te voluntatem ſenſerim. Heydelbergæ primùm videre te mihi contigit, aliquanto pòſt Argentorati: longo pòſt tempore, Viennæ Auſtriæ: ſed Argentorati magna facta eſt acceſſio ad illum amorem quo te Heydelbergæ proſequebar: Viennæ rurſum, is etiam quo te Argentorati proſequutus fueram, magnum incrementum cepit. Nec mirum ſanè meum illum in te amorem ita creuiſſe, quum tuæ, quæ eum excitauerant ingenij dotes, non parum creuiſſe viderentur. Atque vtinam creſcere non deſinant, donec talis tantúſque euaſeris, vt tuæ etiam Angliæ celebritas incrementum à te accipiat.

He greatlie abounded in ſundrie good vertues, which euer, where he came, procured him loue, but chieflie in iuſtice & liberalitie (a worthie & moſt ſpeciall note in a gouernor) which gained him heartie loue coupled with fame & honor. For the which eſpeciallie, thoſe vnder his late charge and gouernment ſo greatlie loued, eſteemed, honored, and in a ſort adored him, when he was aliue; as they made earneſt meanes and intreatie to haue his bodie remaine there ſtill with them for memorie when he was dead; & promiſed, that (if they might obteine it) to erect for him as faire a monument as anie prince had in chriſtendome, yea though the ſame ſhould coſt halfe a tun of gold the building. As his life was moſt worthie; ſo his end was moſt godlie. The loue men bare him hath left fame behind him, his friendlie courteſie to manie procured him good will of all. God hath taken him, we hope to his comfort; we haue loſt him, we feele to our greefe: his diuine will is doone, our humane minds muſt be ſatiſfied, and humblie wiſh (for it were a preſumption to hope) to haue his life. For he had that great care and regard to the conſeruation of his fame and honor entire, when he was gone; that he made a moſt bountifull and liberall will, which if the ſame be performed according to his ſimple, ſincere, and good meaning; it will appeare he died not indebted to anie, neither to thoſe that were neere his perſon, familiars, or domeſticks, nor to anie other he was indebted vnto by bond or borrowing, nor otherwiſe in credit for wares or merchandize, or in other degree whatſoeuer, he had to treat or deale with him in; yea not ſo much as for common courteſie and goodwill: but he ordered and appointed him ſatiſfaction, and honorable contentment. His bodie was moſt honorablie conueied from Arnam to London, where it remained at the Minories certeine daies, and from thenſe brought and remooued to the place of his interrement; where with great ſolemnitie and funerall honor, amongſt the monuments of his moſt renowmed parents and worthie anceſtors, he was buried.

Omnis virtus nos ad ſe allicit, facitque vt diligamus eos in quibus ineſſe videatur, tamen iuſtitia & liberalitas id maximè efficit.

His bountifull will.

And here behold the end of two worthie perſons, who for that their deuiſes anſwered in a ſort the ſtate of both their fortunes, I thinke it not impertinent in this place to ſpeake of. The father bare for deuiſe, placed vnder his armes: Quo me fata vocant: applieng the ſame to his good hap in his yoonger yeares when fortune ſmiled, & time and friends flattered, and none more accounted of and eſteemed than he. The ſonne, ſuſpecting future haps, and not truſting ouer much in preſent fortune, bare for his deuiſe, placed in like maner vnder his armes: Vix ea noſtra voco: ſignifieng thereby, that he would not call thoſe his owne, which he knew not how worthie he was to beare, nor how long he ſhould inioie and keepe them; ſith that both ſtates and perſons are ſubiect to time and mutation, as by his vntimelie death appeared. And albeit this was his laſt word and deuiſe, which accompanied his funerall; yet not ſealed before as occaſion fell out, & as time wrought alteration in his deepe and noble conceipt, at iuſts, torneis, triumphs, and other ſuch roiall paſtimes (for at all ſuch diſports he commonlie made one) he would bring in ſuch a liuelie gallant ſhew, ſo agreeable to euerie point, which is required for the expreſſing of a perfect deuiſe (ſo rich he was in thoſe inuentions) as if he ſurpaſſed not all, he would equall or at leaſt ſecond the beſt. Wherein (as he rightlie deſerued) he euer gained ſingular commendation.

Their words and deuiſes.

There are fiue ſpeciall points required in euerie deuiſe to be perfect.

There grew ſome diuerſitie of opinion (amongſt their well affected friends) in one point of compariſon touching the helps of nature, that were diſtinctlie placed in them both. Some gaue commendation to the father for his gallant toong, and others to the ſonne for his readie pen; both were rare gifts in them both, and both two gifts placed in both. And when ſome of the fathers familiars would tell him, how men were of opinion that he could nothing ſo well frame his mind in writing, as he could deliuer the ſame in ſpeaking: he would ſaie that it ſeemed ſo onelie to them, that neuer heard him reade his owne letters.

The father commended for his toong, and the ſonne for his pen.

He left (beſides his other fatherlie bleſſings and liberalitie for increaſe of patrimonie) to his yonger ſonnes, that happie and rich inheritance Cicero ſo highlie commendeth; whoſe words here I will recite, for better impreſſion of the matter hereafter in their minds to whome of right it apperteineth. Optima autem hæreditas à patribus traditur liberis, omnique patrimonio præſtantior gloria virtutis rerúmque geſtarum, cui dedecori eſſe nefas & vitium iudicandum eſt.

The happie inheritance he left to his yonger ſons.

And thus far goodwill hath led me, and dutie bound me, to remember and commend theſe two noble and worthie perſons the father and ſonne, as perfect examples for vs to follow (for they now dwell too far off to heare their owne praiſes) who as when they liued, the one I long and faithfullie ſerued, the other I deerelie loued and greatlie honored, euen from his yonger and tender yeares: ſo in regard of mine owne meane fortune, albeit I muſt acknowledge it my great miſhap and verie heauie croſſe (almoſt at one inſtant) to looſe two ſuch noble patrons and furtherers of my good and benefit, on whome onelie I depended, and to whome wholie I had dedicated my good will and humble ſeruice: yet in reſpect of them now departed, to whome both dutie and courteſie bindeth me to wiſh and praie all happineſſe (for ſeeking their fauours and good wils aliue with diligence: reaſon willeth me to eſteeme their images dead with reuerence) this conſideration then greatlie ſtirreth me vp to exceeding comfort, to ſpeake in ſaint Iohns words: Beati mortui qui in Domino moriuntur; amodò iam dicit ſpiritus, vt requieſcant à laboribus ſuis: opera enim illorum ſequuntur illos. Who as in their liues they had great honors, ample credit and authoritie heaped vpon them, the better to grace them amongſt vs: ſo being departed henſe from vs, noble fame and good report ſoundeth forth both their praiſes euerie where to accompanie their memories, to dwell & remaine ſtill euer freſh & liuelie floriſhing with vs. And they haue (by the ſcale of their vertues) atteined (I hope) the higheſt type and degree of honor (which all men in this world ſhould mightilie contend for) which is the crowne of eternall life, wherewith (I truſt) they be now both decked and crowned in great glorie, ioy, bleſſedneſſe, and eternitie. And here to end the memorie of them, it ſhall not be amiſſe, to record an epitaph made and publiſhed, for the perpetuating of the name of ſir Henrie Sidneie, neuer ſufficientlie commended.

Bleſſed are the dead from henſeforth, now ſaith the ſpirit, that they reſt from their labors.

¶ In mortem illuſtriſſimi viri domini Henrici Sydnei, Edwardi ſexti in Galliam, Mariæ in Hiſpaniam, & ſereniſſimæ noſtræ reginæ Eliſabethæ in Galliam & Scotiam, legati, aureæ periſcelidis & Sancti Georgij equitis aurati, vicémque olim regiæ maieſtatis Hiberniæ ter gerentis, & Walliæ 26, annis præſidis, & regiæ maieſtatis à concilijs: Henricus Dillon,

LVminibus mentis perluſtrans ſæpe ſtudebam,
Paruum quàm filum cuncta caduca tenet:
Sicut enim multis tribuit fortuna ſecunda,
Sic donat multos iſta nouerca malis.
Inſula noſtra dijs ſuperis inuiſa videtur,
Fortunæ lapſu labitur illa ſimul.
Nullus patronus fidus, nec verus amicus,
Quin ſubito caſu morte ruente perit.
Clarius hoc luna monſtrat digniſſimus ille
Sydneus Henricus, nominis ille decor.
Qui nos protector viuax defendit & autor,
Qui fuerat patriæ, ſpéſque ſalúſque ſuæ.
Ter patriam curua petijt comitante carina,
Aduentus dignus laudibus ille fuit.
Palladis imbutus muſis hic armipotentis,
Hoſtes imperio ſe dedidere ſuo.
Legibus inſtituit priùs armis omnia vinci,
Legibus expulſis attamen arma tulit.
Hoſtes ſub pedibus calcauit Marte feroce,
Sedibus in ſummis conſtituítque bonos.
Henrici virtus valuit plus omnibus armis,
Aſpectu primo quiſquis amaret eum.
Oſtendit vultu naturæ dona ſereno,
Verbis erexit docta Minerua virum.
Conſtans & lenis minimè permobilis ira,
In bello nullis ille ſecundus erat.
Dapſilis in cunctos, ratio tamen omnia rexit,
Qui vulgi famam ſpreuit habere leuis.
In patriam tandem curſu felice reuerſus,
E medio lapſus culmina ſumma rapit.
Wallicus en conſul ſuperis præconia fudit,
Magna ſic pompa terra tegebat eum.

Laus Deo.

Suſtulit è ſacro me nudum fonte poëtam
Henricum Dillon Sydneus ipſe manu.

Ioannes Cawell in eundem.

MOtibus aduerſis verſatur machina rerum,
Quolibet & moles voluitur iſta breui.
Gignitur inſtanti quod creſcit tempore longo
Diuerſas formas inde ſubire ſtudet.
Culmine fatali ſenſim deflectitur ipſum,
Interitus falcat lubrica fata ſua.
Illis inſeritur porro motúſque localis
Omnes amplexu continet ipſe ſuo.
Sydneus his heros fauſtum produxerat æuum,
Fluctibus & nullis exagitatus erat.
Summis hic attauis cretus natione Britannus
Extendit ſtirpem viribus ille ſuam.
Poſthabuit partum ſemper ſectando decorum,
Maiorum laudes auxit honore ſuo.
Muſarum teneros ſtudio deuouerat annos
Auſpicijs miris inde beatus erat.
Quæſtor fiſcalis ſignatus munere primo,
Térque vicem regis geſſit amore loci.
Per multos præſes regnauit Wallicus annos,
Diſtribuens æquè iura cuique ſua.
Aurati fulgens equitis ſignitus honore,
Conſilio princeps illius vſa fuit.
Tantum vitali filo decreuerat heros
In partes totum ſoluitur omne ſuas.
Sicque nouis corpus formis transfertur ad vnum,
Pars terrena perit, cœlica forma manet.
Nobilis Henricus Mæcenas verus amicis,
Hoſtibus armatus ſæuus habendus erat.
Wallia læſa iacet, caſus & Hibernia plorat,
Vertitur in luctus regia tota domus.
Ipſe baro Dillon conſul tum iure dolebat,
Soluitur in lachrymas nocte diéque ſuas.
Quorſum ſic lugent, cum Sydneus alta petebat?
Turpi pro mundo ſydera pura tenet.

Laus Deo.

Now to leaue matters of the dead, and to touch affaires of the liuing, ſomewhat out of place in reſpect of the moneth; but occurring in the ſame yeare (which prepoſterous courſe could not for the preſent time be auoided, but hereafter maie be redreſſed) you ſhall vnderſtand, that not long after the beginning of Hilarie terme, in this preſent yeare 1586, for foure ſeuerall reſpects well worthie the remembrance, and therevpon breefelie to be put downe

Thomas Louelace trecherouſlie ſought to ſpoile his neereſt kinſmen of their liues to haue his lands, by example of T. S. who before had ſought to ſpoile his eldeſt brother of his life, after he had defrauded him of his goods and catels, and was neuer puniſhed therefore.

downe in this hiſtorie, there did befall this accident that hereafter followeth. It ſo being, that one Thomas Louelace late of Staple Inne gentleman, had diuerſe waies ſo wilfullie behaued himſelfe toward maiſter Leonard Louelace eſquier, his neere kinſman, as that the ſaid Leonard Louelace was inforced to attempt a ſute of waſte againſt the ſaid Thomas which being in courſe of law ordered for the plaintife: yet did the ſaid plaintife offer verie fauorable conditions to the defendant, hauing long time beene by ſo manie malicious practiſes purſued by his ſaid kinſman, as he deſerued to find no fauor at all at the plaintifes hands. But yet ſo deepelie had an old cankered & inueterat hatred poſſeſſed the heart of this defendant, that theſe new fauours towards him could nothing mollifie or remooue the ſame. Which vngratious humor, hauing long boiled in his vnquiet breſt, he conceiueth this courſe to put it on foot, ſounding in the higheſt degree of danger, to the liues and perſons of his two neereſt kinſmen, and peſtilent to their whole poſteritie.

Conſiderations wiſe inough, if they had beene accordinglie vſed and applied.

For conſidering with himſelfe, that the late laws of king Henrie the eight doo giue vnto the crowne the lands and poſſeſſions of tenants intaile atteinted of treaſon, ſo long as there be anie iſſues remaining vnder the ſame eſtate intaile; and weighing with himſelfe, that the plaintife in the foreſaid ſute might by his verie late mariage be likelie to haue children (during whoſe liues he could by no colorable meanes make himſelfe waie to the whole inheritance of his ſaid couſin) he now obſerueth it to be the onelie due ſeaſon, aſwell to cut off his kinſman from his life, and all other things which we hold pretious in this world; as to make himſelfe capable of all his liuing, by colour of a remaindor limited vnto him and his line by the will of one John Louelace eſquier. For full accompliſhment of which intent, becauſe the life of maiſter Richard Louelace, next brother to the plaintife, was a barre to one part of his purpoſe; he calleth him likewiſe within the compaſſe of the ſame danger, and frameth his drift after this manner.

Note the manner of his drift.

A third brother of the plaintifes, deſirous of ſeeing the vniuerſities abrode for the ſtudie of the ciuill law, and being latelie noiſed to haue beene profeſſed in religion there; from him he deriueth the groundworke of his deſperat deuiſe, counterfeiting letters to come from the third brother to the plaintife, and the ſaid maiſter Richard Louelace; which letters did ſet forth an intent of moſt dangerous treaſons againſt hir maieſties moſt gratious perſon, whereof the plaintife was put downe to be the compaſſer, and the ſaid maiſter Richard Louelace the executioner. Then it was compacted betweene the defendant, and a certeine lewd fellow, who was before manie waies beholding to maiſter Leonard Louelace, that he hauing acceſſe without ſuſpicion, ſhould either leaue theſe letters in the plaintifes ſtudie, or elſe beſtow them vnſeene in ſome other place; which being ſo doone, there ſhould no time be left by the defendant for ſuch preſent proceeding as ſuch cauſes required. But maiſter Leonard Louelace, being gone from his London lodging before this meſſenger came, he returning homeward, and not well aduiſed what to doo, thought better to hazard the ſucceſſe of his meſſage, than to ſeeme to doo nothing at all: and therefore not far from Graueſend, did ſuffer the ſame letters to fall from him, as was ſufficientlie perceiued by an honeſt poore man, who was not far off about the topping of a tree.

Note how God will haue lewd dealing and ill meaning reuealed.

Theſe letters were preſentlie taken vp by a boy, who was by the ſaid fellow allured by monie, to make deliuerie according to their direction. This boy being ſeruant in a vittelling houſe, did carrie them home & caſt them vpon a cupboord, as papers ſpotted with mire and of no valure. There comming that night a waifaring man, did eſteeme of them accordinglie, and carrieng them to an houſe of office, going ouer a few lines, did find them to conteine a dangerous intention of moſt weightie importance; and therevpon carried them to the lord Cobham, who with requiſit ſpeed directed the ſame to the lords of the councell. Who according to the qualitie of the cauſe, hauing in their due reſpect of preſeruing hir highneſſe ſafetie, a verie honorable care ouer the gentlemens good fame and credit, who were to be touched in ſo foule a cauſe: whoſe former good courſe of life had cleared them from anie ſlender ſuſpicion of ſo great a villanie, as the lord Cobham had likewiſe before informed: they therevpon thought good to refer the ordering of this ſo ſtrange a caſe to the lord treaſuror; who for his great wiſedome was likelie ſoone to diſcerne (for his moſt tender well wiſhing of hir highneſſe well dooing) and moſt ſpeedilie to preuent all danger; and for his ſingular zeale to iuſtice, to deale indifferentlie with the parties in queſtion.

The lord treaſuror had the diſcuſſing and ſifting out of the matter.

The lord treaſuror in the abſence of maiſter Leonard Louelace, hauing called before him maiſter Richard Louelace; and being by him informed of ſuch ſenſible circumſtances, as did directlie induce his lordſhip to be of opinion, that all this villanous practiſe ſhould proceed from the defendant, he in courteous and honorable manner, without baile, bond, or mainepriſe, did diſmiſſe the ſaid maiſter Richard Louelace to his owne libertie; and did giue preſent direction for the apprehenſion of the defendant, and other his complices: who as vpon his comming before their honors, did by manie aduiſed oths make colourable purgation of this obiected action; ſo yet by ſome amazedneſſe of his countenance, and by certeine repugnances in his owne anſwers, he left a more ſetled ſuſpicion that it ſhould be his dooing. Wherevpon the lord treaſuror well regarding and peruſing the letter, and finding by the cloſe couching and ſetting togither of the ſame, that although the indicter lacked not a malicious kind of learning; that yet in his orthographie there were certeine ſuch ſlips committed, as by a cuſtome of negligent writing were likelie to grow into an habit with him. Thoſe verie words did his lordſhip interlace vnder the forme of another matter, and bad him to write the ſame; who keeping his former cuſtome, did verie iuſtlie fulfill his lordſhips expectation. Which being well conceiued and compared with the former forme of letters, did ſeeme to haue ſome difference rather in policie than in ſubſtance: but the ſame ſlips & imperfections of orthographie did clearelie diſcouer the workeman of this whole matter.

What we are to gather for our owne benefit, by the former declaration.

The concluſion of the former points premiſed in the beginning, muſt be this ſhort aduertiſement of good ſubſtance. Firſt, to what deſperat diſpoſitions and moſt inhumane actions, that cankered humor of malice driueth them vnto, whome it hath deepelie touched and attached. Secondlie, how woonderfull is the working and goodneſſe of God, in preſeruing innocencie from the moſt dangerous and ſubtill drifts of the aduerſarie. Thirdlie, how profitable it is to thoſe countries & common wealths, where the councellors doo rather ſeeke with ſharpeneſſe of iudgement to diſcerne and diſcouer the qualities and cauſes, before they applie the princes diſpleaſure, or the heauie burthen of laws to the firſt apperance of anie ſuggeſtions. Laſtlie, how neceſſarie it is to the good eſtate of gouernments, that iuſtice be dulie deliuered: which in this caſe was in ſo due and honorable manner performed, vpon the hearing of the cauſe before the lords in the ſtar chamber; as that the poſteritie to come maie from thenſe fetch a right fruitfull preſident, to take heed of ſuch odious practiſes. And now to ſet downe the matter according to the record: thus it followeth.

In camera ſtellata coram con. ibidem, 11 die Februa. anno 28 Eliſabethæ reginæ.

On this daie (to wit the eleuenth of Februarie) Thomas Louelace was brought to the bar, as a priſoner from the Tower; againſt whome hir maieſties attorneie generall did informe, that the ſame Louelace, vpon malice conceiued againſt Leonard Louelace & Richard Louelace his couſine germans, had moſt lewdlie, falſlie, and diueliſhlie, contriued and counterfeited with his owne hand, a verie traitorous letter in the name of Thomas Louelace, another brother of the ſaid Richard and Leonard, now reſident at Rome (as it is ſuppoſed) purporting in ſhew, that the ſame Thomas, now reſident beyond the ſeas, ſhould thereby incite and prouoke the ſaid Leonard, to procure the ſaid Richard his brother to worke and execute hir highneſſe deſtruction, with manie more verie wicked and horrible circumſtances of treaſon in the higheſt degree, ſpecified in the ſame letter: as by the contents thereof, which was this daie openlie read in court, moſt euidentlie appeared. And yet not ſo contented, either caſt or let fall, or cauſed the ſame letter to be caſt or let fall in the open high waie; pretending thereby, that vpon the diſcouerie thereof, his ſaid kinſmen, Leonard and Richard, ſhould be drawne in queſtion for the treaſonable matter againſt hir maieſties perſon in that letter conteined, euen in the higheſt degree. For which offenſe, hir maieſties ſaid attorneie praied on the behalfe of hir maieſtie, that the ſaid Thomas Louelace the priſoner might receiue condigne puniſhment.

Thomas Louelace condinglie puniſhed by iudgement of the honorable court in the ſtarchamber: a notable and praiſe worthie example of iuſtice, the like whereof is to be wiſhed to the like offendor.

Herevpon the court demanded of the ſaid Louelace what anſwer he could make to the ſaid accuſation. Who immediatlie confeſſing his ſaid lewd and diueliſh offenſe, to be by him committed, in ſuch maner and forme as is before expreſſed, humblie ſubmitted himſelfe, and praied the fauor of this honorable court. Wherevpon the court had therefore conuicted him thereof, by the full and whole conſent of all the perſons there ſitting: and haue adiudged him to ſuffer ſuch corporall puniſhment and impriſonment, as hereafter followeth. That is to ſaie: that he ſhall be remitted to the Tower from whenſe he came, that he ſhall be caried on horſſebacke about Weſtminſter hall with his face to the horſſe taile, and with a paper on his backe, wherein ſhall be written theſe words: For counterfeiting of falſe and trecherous letters againſt his owne kindred, conteining moſt traitorous matter againſt hir maieſties perſon: and from thenſe ſhall be carried in that manner, and ſet on the pillorie here in the palace at Weſtminſter, & there ſhall haue one of his ears cut off: and ſhall alſo be carried in like manner on horſſebacke into London, and ſet on the pillorie on a market daie in Chepeſide with the like paper on his backe: and after that, ſhall be carried downe into Kent, and at the next aſſiſe there ſhall be ſet openlie in the pillorie, in the place where the aſſiſes ſhall be kept, with the like paper on his backe, and there ſhall haue his other eare cut off. And alſo that he ſhall be ſet on the pillorie one market daie in Canturburie, and one other market daie at Rocheſter in the ſaid countie of Kent, with the like paper on his backe (as afore ſaid) at either of the ſame places. And it is further ordered, that in euerie of the foreſaid places, where he ſhall ſtand on the pillorie, the order taken by this honorable court, touching his ſaid offenſe and puniſhment, ſhall be openlie read and publiſhed. Thus far the record, the ſentence whereof was dulie executed.

An offenſiue ſermon at Pauls croſſe.

Vpon ſundaie being the firſt daie of March 1586, the preacher appointed to ſupplie the place at Paules croſſe failed therein: by occaſion whereof, one George Cloſſe (a preacher of the citie) was procured to ſupplie his roome that was abſent, and in his ſermon intreating vpon iuſtice, reproued the maior of London particularlie being there preſent, for ſhuffling vp a cauſe (as he termed it) that came before him; and whereat the ſaid Cloſſe was alſo preſent the fridaie before he preached. Herevpon grew much varietie of talke and rumors amongſt the people, coniecturing and ſcanning diuerſlie vpon the cauſe. And the daie following, the maior, aldermen, and the councell of the citie entered into conſultation about it; and vpon tueſdaie, the preacher was warned to anſwer the cauſe before the maior, aldermen, and councell of the citie, in the Guildhall. Where, after much debating of the matter, it was finallie concluded, that certeine of the aldermen of the citie, with the recorder, ſhould commenſe complaint hereof before the archbiſhop of Canturburie. And in the afternoone the ſame daie, it was ordered by the archbiſhop and other his collegues in cauſes eccleſiaſticall; that becauſe the ſaid Cloſſe had delt ſo particularlie againſt the magiſtrate, he ſhould be inioined to preach in the ſame place againe the 27 daie of March following (being Palmeſundaie) and in his ſermon ſhould make his ſubmiſſion, which the common people called a recantation.

The preacher is troubled for his ſermon, and vrged to a ſubmiſſion commonlie termed a recantation.

In the meane ſpace were diſperſed ſundrie rumors and great diuerſities of reports of the matter, and great expectation of the daie appointed. And at the daie and place prefixed was gathered ſuch an aſſemblie and concourſe of people, as by eſtimation had not beene ſeene there at anie rehearſall ſermon. This confluence of people grew the greater, for that the precher who ſupplied the ſaid place the verie next ſundaie following, did intimat to the people (commanded ſo to doo) that the ſaid Cloſſe, whoſe ſermon was offenſiuelie taken, as tending againſt the chiefe magiſtrate, was verie ſorie for that which he had doone; and was to ſignifie no leſſe vpon Palmeſundaie inſuing in another ſermon, which he was appointed to make in forme of ſubmiſſion. Now by the waie of parentheſis, before we come to ſhew how the ſaid Cloſſe did acquite himſelfe; we are to declare, that vpon the ſame ſundaie, that this inioined ſubmiſſion was imparted to the people, there ſtood before the preacher at Pauls croſſe, in the verie eie of the multitude, a moſt heinous malefactor in a white ſheet, with a rod of about halfe a yard long in his hand, and about his head a paper faſtened, with the inſcription of the offenſe for the which he did penance. This lewd fellow (hauing a wife) did notwithſtanding for the ſpace of fiue yeares paſt, keepe in his houſe an harlot or ſtrumpet vnder the name of his maid, whoſe bodie he vnlawfullie vſed; inſomuch that ſhe bare him certeine baſtards, which in time were made awaie and murthered, this horrible deed ſtill remaining vndiſcloſed; vntill the laſt whome ſhe bare and liue, which was then bewraied, and ſhe of the fact by courſe of law orderlie conuinced, was executed at Tiborne the laſt ſeſſions next before the publication hereof by the preacher.

A fowle offendor, or heinous malefactor did penance at Pauls croſſe, his companion hauing beene executed at Tiborne not long before.

Now (ſaith the preacher) although the law haue acquited this heinous malefactor, and releaſed him from the gallows: yet is it not likelie that he can be excuſable from priuitie in the offenſe. For it cannot be, but that as he was not, nor could be ignorant of the harlots being with child; ſo muſt he needs know what became of them after their procreation and bringing forth into the world. Neuertheleſſe (ſaith the preacher) although he haue eſcaped the like execution as his fellow offendor hath ſuffered: yet except he doo hartilie repent, and be inwardlie ſorie for the ſame, he is certeine to hang in hell fier. In ſignification therefore of his heartie repentance, he was inioined to make open confeſſion of his fault, the forme whereof was deliuered in writing to the preacher, he reading it, and the offendor ſaieng after him the ſame, with as lowd a voice as conceiued ſhame for ſo greeuous a treſpaſſe would admit.

The offendor openlie confeſſeth his fault with a lowd voice.

Now vpon this repentance and confeſſion, the preacher tooke occaſion to aggrauat the dangerous ſinne of fornication and adulterie, ſhewing by ſundrie examples what puniſhments haue beene inflicted vpon offendors in that kind, by the laws of diuerſe nations: as of the Tartars, Turks, Iews, and Aegyptians, &c: ſome ſtripping the man that was giltie, ſtarke naked in ſight of the people, who receiued a thouſand yerks vpon his fleſh; the woman had hir noſe cut off, and ſo liued with a perpetuall note of infamie, bearing a viſible badge of hir former lewd life. Among others it was ſentenced by law, that the wife offending, ſhould be ſtripped naked, and whipped from ſtreet to ſtreet, euen of hir owne huſband; who was appointed the executioner of that puniſhment. This fault was likewiſe reuenged with ſtoning to death, and other corporall ſmarts and torments; all which ſhew how odious a ſinne it is, both in the ſight of God and man.

Laws for adulterie and fornication ſharplie executed.

Hauing waded ſo far in the argument, the preacher ſpake verie honorablie of the dignitie of mariage, and againſt the frequented vice of vſurie, whereof he deliuered examples verie dreadfull, intending an amendment of that enormitie. And imputing the lacke and neglect of forbearing to ſinne, vnto the idle hearing of the word; the preacher ſhewed that ſome hearers there are, who after they haue heard their lewd liues vehementlie inueighed againſt, for a moment of time entring into a conſideration of the horror of the ſame, go home, ſeeme ſomewhat ſorowfull; and for one, two, or three daies appeare verie forwards and towards in reformation. On the firſt daie they can ſaie, Gloria patri; on the ſecond, Et filio, on the third, Et ſpiritui ſancto: but on the fourth, Sicut erat in principio; and ſo they become as bad as they were in the beginning; naie much woorſe, and ſo continue to their latter ending. Thus much by waie of interpoſition, touching that ſundaies worke, being a note none of the worſt in the booke, and maie doo much good by Gods grace, if it be well marked and throughlie thought vpon.

How people are affected in hearing of Gods word, and therefore no maruell though vnfruitfull.

And now to returne to the continuation of the report of the ſaid Cloſſe, who during the time of reſpiration, furniſhed himſelfe for the place which he was appointed to ſupplie, and for the time of expectation now approching and at length preſent. When & where (as aforſaid) thouſands were gathered togither of each age & ſex; ſome comming to ſee, ſome to heare, and ſome to obſerue what was ſaid and doone. The moſt part of the maiors officers, the children of the hoſpitals, and manie other were there, to write and take notes of the ſermon. Beſides, there were ſix preachers appointed to heare the ſermon, and to certifie how he diſcharged his deſignement. During the time of the ſermon was vſed great ſilence, but much and ſecret whiſperings, ſtrange countenances, often lookings to and fro of the people, and ſome intercourſe of ſpeech among the aldermen, eſpeciallie when the preacher entred his diſcourſe of the matter of expectation; wherein he made report of the whole cauſe as it had paſſed before the maior, alleging ſundrie reaſons diuine and humane, which had mooued him in his former ſermon to deale ſo particularlie.

The report of George Cloſſes matter continued.

The preachers ſermon is noted.

The matter of expectation.

In concluſion, the ſermon finiſhed, the auditorie departed with generall approbation and applauſe to the preacher, and the maior with greater diſcontentment: inſomuch as after Eaſter, when the ſermons at the ſpittle and other buſineſſe was ouerpaſſed; the maior by his brethren renewed a further complaint before the archbiſhop of Canturburie. But in the meane ſpace, the ſaid Cloſſe had obteined from the archbiſhop and others his collegues of the eccleſiaſticall commiſſion, ſentence of diſmiſſion from further moleſtation touching this cauſe; vpon a certificat made from the ſix preachers before mentioned, whereof there were three doctors, and three bachellors in diuinitie, which had made report vnto the biſhop of London (according to his appointment touching the ſermon) that the ſaid Cloſſe had fullie in all good ſort ſatiſfied the order of the archbiſhop: ſo as the complaint and accuſation of the maior could not be anie further admitted. Then was the matter complained of vnto the lords of the priuie councell, and a commiſſion granted by them to haue the cauſe further examined.

Further complaint renewed againſt the preacher, who is diſmiſſed from further moleſtation.

Commiſſioners were appointed by the councell, three eccleſiaſticall perſons, & fiue temporall lawiers, namelie the biſhop of Wincheſter, the biſhop of London, and the biſhop of Saliſburie; the lord chiefe iuſtice of the common plees, the maiſter of the rols, the lord chiefe baron, the queenes attorneie generall, and the maiſter of ſaint Katharins. The cauſe being heard vpon articles preferred and anſwered, it was finallie thought conuenient by the commiſſioners, vpon conference with both parties, to draw them to a priuat reconciliation; whereunto after the preacher had aſſented, the maior would in no wiſe accept it: but vrged a certificat to be made to the councell, and after ſome ſuſpenſe of his requeſt, at laſt he obteined of the biſhop of London, & others of the temporall commiſſioners, a certificat to be made, and the matter was continued in ſuſpenſe till his maioraltie was expired.

The matter brought before the councell, and ordered by commiſſioners.

A priuat reconciliation of the partie offended and offending intended.

This yeare on the ſeuenteenth daie of March, a ſtrange thing happened, the like whereof before hath not beene heard of in our time. Maiſter Dorrington of Spaldwike in the countie of Huntington eſquier, one of hir maieſties gentlemen penſioners, had a great horſſe that died ſuddenlie; & being ripped to ſee the cauſe of his death, there was found in the hole of the heart of the ſame horſſe a ſtrange worme, which laie in a round heape in a kall or ſkin, of the bigneſſe of a tode, which being taken out and ſpred abrode, was in forme the faſhion not eaſie to be deſcribed in words, but in picture. The length of this worme diuided into manie grains, to the number of fiftie, ſpred from the bodie like the branches of a tree, was from the ſnowt to the end of the longeſt graine ſeuenteene inches; hauing foure iſſues in the grains, from whenſe dropped foorth a red water. The bodie in bigneſſe round about was three inches and a halfe, the colour whereof was like vnto a mackerell. This monſtrous worme found in maner aforeſaid, cralling to haue got awaie, was ſtabbed in with a dagger and died: which after being dried, was ſhewed to manie honorable perſonages of this realme.

A ſtrange worme found in a horſſe heart.

In the ſeſſions of oier and terminer holden at London in the iuſtice hall, on the eighteenth daie of Aprill, William Tomſon aliàs Blackeborne, made prieſt at Reims in France by the authoritie of the biſhop of Rome, and remaining within this realme after the terme of fortie daies after the ſeſſion of the laſt parlement, was condemned of treaſon. Alſo Richard Lea aliàs Long, made prieſt at Laon in France (as aforeſaid) and remaining here in this realme after the terme aforeſaid, was likewiſe there condemned for treaſon: which ſaid William and Thomas, were both on the twentith daie of Aprill drawne to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered, according as they before had receiued iudgement.

Seminarie prieſts executed at Tiborne.

The note of Iohn Waller concerning the arreignement of a witch.

At a great ſeſſion holden in a towne of Kent called Feuerſham, being a towne incorporat, and a lim or member of Douer; vpon the ninteenth daie of Aprill, in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and ſix, before Thomas Barming, then maior of the ſame towne, and others; Jone Caſon late the wife of one Freeman, was accuſed, attached, indicted, and arreigned for witchcraft; but condemned & adiudged to die, and executed for inuocating of wicked ſpirits, according to a ſtatute made In 5. Eliſa. ca. 2: for that ſhe, the ſtatute aforeſaid not at all regarding, vpon the firſt of Aprill, in the ſeuen and twentith yeare of queene Eliſabeth, and at diuerſe daies and times ſince, the art of witchcraft and inchantment had vſed, and vpon wicked ſpirits had inuocated and called, contrarie to the peace of our ſoueraigne ladie the queene; and namelie, that ſhe the ſecond of Februarie in the eight and twentith yeare of queene Eliſabeth, had bewitched Jane Cooke of the age of three yeares, who by hir inchantment languiſhed and died. Hereupon ſeuen women and one man gaue euidence againſt hir, who though they were all verie poore people, yet were they the rather admitted to accuſe hir, for that they were hir neere neighbors, and hir offenſe verie odious.

The euidence of Sara Cooke againſt Jone Caſon.

The firſt and principall depoſition was made by Sara Cooke, mother to the bewitched child in theſe words following (that is to ſaie) that after hir ſaid child had beene ſicke, languiſhing by the ſpace of thirteene daies, a trauellor came into hir houſe, to the end to drinke a pot of ale (for ſhe kept an alehouſe) who ſeeing the lamentable caſe and pitious griefe of the child, called hir vnto him, ſaieng; Hoſteſſe, I take it that your child is bewitched. Whereunto ſhe anſwered, that ſhe for hir part knew of no ſuch matter. Well (ſaid the gheſt) if you thinke it to be ſo, doo no more but take a tile from ouer the lodging of the partie ſuſpected, and laie it in a hot fier: and if ſhe haue bewitched the child, the tile will ſparkle and flie round about the cradle where the child lieth. Now ſhe, conceiuing that trauellors haue good experience in ſuch matters, did ſteale (as ſhe depoſed) a tile from the houſe of the ſaid Jone Caſon (though not from ouer hir lodging) and laied it in the fier beſides the cradle, which ſoone after ſparkled about the houſe, euen according to hir ſaid gheſts information. And within ſhort ſpace, the ſaide Jone (being the ſuſpected partie) came into this deponents houſe, to ſee how the child did, which (ſoone after hir comming) looked full in hir face, and had not lifted vp hir eie, nor looked abrode all the night precedent; but within foure houres after died: ſo as by the circumſtance of that euidence, ſhe thought it might plainelie appeare to the iurie, that the ſaid Jone had bewitched hir child to death. Neuertheleſſe, the priſoner did abſolutelie denie anie thing doone, or purpoſed by hir to haue beene doone in this behalfe.

A pretie point of witchcraft.

Howbeit, to purſue this matter to proofe, and hir to death, the other ſeuen perſons were all depoſed; by whome it was affirmed conſtantlie, and approued manifeſtlie, that to the houſe of one Freeman (whoſe wife the ſaid Jone Caſon then was) not latelie but diuerſe years ſince reſorted a little thing like a rat (but more reddiſh) hauing a brode taile, which ſome of them had ſeene, and ſome had heard of. Inſomuch as one heard it crie in the wall like a cricket, another like a rat, another like a tode, another that it ran vnder a tub, and ſpake theſe words (that is to ſaie) Go to, go to, go to. And it was further depoſed by one goodwife Oſwld (the ſubſtantialleſt perſon of them all) that hir cat could not kill it.

A. Reim.

All theſe depoſitions were made and taken, to proue Jone Caſon a witch; and conſequentlie, that ſhe had through hir inchantments, and by the helpe of this vermin or ſpirit, killed the ſaid Jane Cooke. But ſhe (with great atteſtations) pleaded not giltie, alleging diuerſe matters and inſtances of the malicious dealings of hir aduerſaries againſt hir, reciting alſo certeine controuerſies betwixt hir and them, wherein they had doone hir open wrong. But although ſhe ſatiſfied the bench and all the iurie touching hir innocencie for the killing of hir child, denieng alſo that ſhe had anie ſkill in the art of witchcraft; ſhe then and there confeſſed, that a little vermin, being of colour reddiſh, of ſtature leſſe than a rat, and furniſhed with a brode taile, did diuerſe yeares ſince (but not latelie) haunt hir houſe, and manie other houſes in the towne; & further, that ſhe (as ſhe imagined) heard it crie ſometimes; Go to, go to, go to; ſometimes, Sicke ſicke; ſometimes, Come, come. Whereby ſhe gathered, that it charged hir to ſee hir maiſter Maſons will performed; which ſhe had not executed according to the confidence he had in hir; to the trouble of hir conſcience, and vexation of hir mind. And yet ſhe honeſtlie confeſſed, that he had the vſe of hir bodie verie diſhoneſtlie, whileſt ſhe was wife to hir husband Freeman.

Hir accuſers hir profeſſed enimies.

The iurie meant well.

Vpon theſe forſaid depoſitions, and vpon this hir owne confeſſion, the iurie was charged, went togither; and being loth to condemne hir of witchcraft (which they knew to be fellonie) they acquitted hir thereof, and found hir giltie vpon the ſaid ſtatute, for inuocation of wicked ſpirits; thinking thereby to haue procured hir puniſhment by pillorie, or impriſonment, and to haue ſaued hir from the gallowes. So as when the verdict was giuen vp by the iurie to the maior and his brethren, ſitting on their iudgement ſeat, togither with their learned counſell; the ſaid maior vttered this ſpeech following: (that is to ſaie) Jone Caſon, for ſo much as it hath pleaſed God to ſhew ſuch fauor this daie vnto you, as to put it into the hearts of the iurie, to acquite you of the fellonie, whereupon you were arreigned; it behooueth you to render moſt humble thanks to God and the queene, and hereafter to beware that you giue no ſuch occaſions of offenſe againe. And you ſhall doo well, henſe forwards to ſerue God better, and to reſort to ſermons oftener: whereby you maie learne your obedience to God, and your dutie to your neighbors.

The firſt ſentence of the maior of Feuerſham.

A gentleman (being a lawier, & of counſell with the towne, ſitting vpon the bench with the maior, to aſſiſt, or rather to direct him in the courſe of law and iuſtice) hearing this mild iudgement to proceed out of the maiors mouth, ſtept vnto him, and told him, that (vnder correction) he thought him to erre in the principall point of his ſentence (that is to ſaie) that inſtead of life he ſhould haue pronounced death; becauſe inuocation of wicked ſpirits was made fellonie by the ſtatute whereupon ſhe was arreigned. Then (quoth the maior) goodwife Caſon, you muſt be conueied from henſe to the Whitehouſe from whenſe you came, and from thenſe to the place of execution, where you muſt be hanged vntill you be dead; and ſo God haue mercie vpon you.

The maiors ſecond ſentence.

Then was ſhe carried back to their priſon, which they call the White houſe. And becauſe there was no matter of inuocation giuen in euidence againſt hir, nor proued in or by anie accuſation, whereby the iurie might haue anie colour to condemne hir therfore: hir execution was ſtaied by the ſpace of three daies after iudgement was giuen. In the meane time

Jone Caſons confeſſion.

time, ſhe was perſuaded by ſundrie preachers and learned men to confeſſe it. But no perſuaſion could preuaile, to make hir acknowledge anie other criminall offenſe, but hir lewd life & adulterous conuerſation with one Maſon, whoſe houſe ſhe kept whileſt he was in health, and whoſe perſon ſhe tended whileſt he was ſicke; with whome ſhe was conuerſant at the houre of his death, mainteining his concupiſcence all the daies of his life; & in the end abuſed the truſt repoſed in hir, touching the diſpoſition of certeine bequeſts, which he made hir onelie priuie vnto. For he died of the plague, for feare of which infection none other durſt repaire vnto him; ſo as ſhe vſed that matter according to hir wicked conſcience. In which reſpect, ſhe ſaid in hir confeſſion vpon the gallowes (taking hir death that ſhe died giltleſſe herein) that the iudgement of God was in ſuch meaſure laid vpon hir, and therewithall made ſo godlie and penitent an end, that manie now lamented hir death, which were (before) hir vtter enimies. Yea ſome wiſhed hir aliue after ſhe was hanged, that cried out for the hangman when ſhe was aliue: but ſhe ſhould haue beene more beholding vnto them that had kept hir from the gallowes, than to ſuch as would haue cut the rope when ſhe was ſtrangled. Neuertheleſſe, they extended to hir as much fauor herein, as their combarons of the ancient towne of Rie ſhewed to a neighbour of theirs named Foule. Which ſtorie being not altogither impertinent, and certeinelie performed about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred fortie & ſeuen, I thought it not vnfit to be in this place inſerted; eſpeciallie, becauſe both theſe townes are ruled by one kind of gouernement, for they are of the ports.

Jone Caſon taketh hir death that ſhe died giltleſſe.

The ſtorie of Foule of Rie, hanged for robbing his wife.

There haunted to the houſe of this Foule, in reſpect of the good will he bare to his wife, a little honeſt man, whoſe name I will not diſcouer, who committed vnto hir cuſtodie a bag of monie, amounting to the ſumme of ten pounds ſtearling! Fouls wife locked it vp in hir cupboord. Howbeit, ſhe handled not the matter ſo couertlie, but hir couert baron eſpied it, and (in hir abſence) either picked or brake open the locke, and tooke out the monie; wherewith afterwards he plaied the good fellow all the daies of his life. For immediatlie his wife accuſed him (not of ſubtill dealing) but of plaine theft, regarding more hir friends loſſe, than hir huſbands life. Hereupon, the maior of Rie (at the next ſeſſions) cauſed him to be indicted and arreigned, and being conuinced of the fact, he was condemned and adiudged to death. For whoſe better execution, there was preſentlie a new paire of gallowes erected, whereupon without further delaie he was hanged vntill he was dead; which gallowes hath beene euer ſince called by the name of Fouls mare. And now he cared not ſo much for the maior, as the maior did for him. For Foule was ſkant cold, but manie murmured at the maiors haſtie proceedings; which moued them to doubt and whiſper, that Fouls fault was no fellonie.

Fouls mare.

But the maior (although it be ſaid that portſmen maie tell their tale twiſe) could not now deuiſe, how (Foule being dead) he might reuerſe this foule ſentence. Neuertheleſſe, he ſent vp with all ſpeed to one maiſter Ramſeie of Greies Inne, who was of counſell with the towne, to learne what the law was in that caſe: who hauing fullie weied and conceiued thereof, told the partie directlie, that the matter was without the compaſſe of fellonie. Whie ſir (quoth the meſſenger) goodman Foule is alreadie hanged. Goodman Foule (ſaid he againe) whie came ye then to me for counſell? But what was he for a man (ſaid maiſter Ramſie?) A bad fellow (ſaid the meſſenger.) Well (quoth he) go thou thy waies home, & then there is but one knaue out of the waie. Such concluſions are manie times made in the ports, who ſometimes vſe the priuilege of their liberties, not as they ought, but as they liſt, ſeldome times applieng their authoritie to ſo good purpoſes as they might: for commonlie they vſe more circumſpection in their expenſes, than in their ſentences.

Counſell asked too late.

Henrie Ramelius ambaſſador out of Denmarke.

On ſundaie the eight daie of Maie, an ambaſſador, named Henrie Ramelius, intituled Cancellarius Germanicus, arriued at the Tower of London, A gentleman he was of goodlie perſonage, ſomewhat corpulent, and of ſanguine complexion: verie eloquent likewiſe and learned, not onelie in the knowledge of diuerſe toongs, as Latine, French, Italian, and Germane; but alſo in diuerſe ſciences. He came in ambaſſage from Frederike the ſecond of that name, king of Denmarke, vnto the queens maieſtie of England, and arriuing (as you haue heard) at the Tower, was honorablie receiued by the lord Cobham and other great eſtates; who conueied him from thenſe through Tower ſtreet into biſhops gate ſtreet, and ſo to a faire and large houſe called Croſbies place, where he was lodged, and remained.

The Daniſh ambaſſador honorablie interteined.

The ſaid Ramelius, during the time of his tariance, had attendance doone him conuenient for his perſon, both by water and by land: the queens maieſties barges and ſeruants imploied about him to and from London, the court then being at Greenewich; whither alwaies when he came, the nobilitie of England failed in no point of courteſie that might be ſhewed. Which he ſeemed (as he could no leſſe) verie acceptablie to take. Now being in England, and in the Engliſh court, he might (and no doubt did) marke the magnificence of hir maieſtie, in all reſpects admirable. Whereof a notable preſident was giuen in Whitſunweeke; at what time the ſaid ambaſſador, being at the court, was accompanied with certeine Engliſh lords to hir highneſſe chapell, and placed not far from hir excellencie, did heare diuine ſeruice ſo melodiouſlie ſaid and ſoong, both by voice and inſtruments of conſort, as a man halfe dead might thereby haue beene quickened. The gentlemen of the chapell with the reſt of the quier bending themſelues, both with ſkill and zeale, that daie to honor their prince according to their place. The biſhop of Saliſburie and others diſtinctlie reading part of diuine ſeruice, and in preſence of all the auditorie dooing ſuch obeiſance with knee and countenance, as the preſence of ſo gratious a ſouereigne as they had in their eies did require.

The maieſtie of the Engliſh court.

Heauenlie muſike in the queens chapell.

The ambaſſador of Denmarke ſeeth the roiall ſeruice of the queene of England.

Now when this ſolemnitie was ended, hir maieſtie departed; and ſo did the ambaſſador, attended vpon and accompanied vnto the place appointed for dinner: where ſtanding neere to a faire window fronting into the open court, he might (being in communication now with one, and then with another Engliſh lord, as the lord Charls Howard lord admerall, the lord Cobham lord warden of the cinque ports, &c:) behold the roiall ſeruice of hir maieſtie, verie perſonable gentlemen thereto ſorted, carrieng couered diſhes, all of ſiluer & gilt verie beautifull; themſelues in veluet and ſilke ſutable in each reſpect, and as decentlie made, ſo decentlie worne; the trumpets ſounding, and the drum plaieng thereunto: a maruellous delightſome thing to heare, and a paſſing gallant ſight to behold. When dinner was doone, the ambaſſador was made partaker of ſuch courtlie recreations, as for that time were fit, wherewith he could not but be pleaſantlie conceipted; conſidering that as euerie thing was doone with purpoſe to delight: ſo he with others muſt needs be accordinglie affected. And as the better ſort had their conuenient diſports, ſo were not the ordinarie people excluded from competent pleaſure. For vpon a greene verie ſpatious and large, where thouſands might ſtand and behold with good contentment, there bearebaiting and bulbaiting (tempered with other merie diſports) were exhibited; whereat it can not be ſpoken of what pleaſure the people tooke.

Recreations and diſports for prince and people.

Bearebaiting deſcribed.

For it was a ſport alone of theſe beaſts, to ſee the beare with his pinke eies leering after his enimies, the nimbleneſſe and wait of the dog to take his aduantage, and the force and experience of the beare againe to auoid the aſſaults: if he were bitten in one place, how he would pinch in another to get free; and if he were once taken, then what ſhift with biting, clawing, roring, tugging, graſping, tumbling, & toſſing he would worke to wind himſelfe awaie; & when he was looſe, to ſhake his eares with the bloud and ſlauer about his phiſnomie, was a pittance of good releefe. The like paſtime alſo of the bull, & the horſſe with the ape on his backe, did greatlie pleaſe the people, who ſtanding round, ſome in a ring vpon the greene, other ſome aloft, and ſome below, had their eies full bent vpon the preſent ſpectacle, diuerſe times expreſſing their inward conceiued ioy and delight with ſhrill ſhouts and varietie of geſture. Now the daie being far ſpent, and the ſun in his declination, the paſtimes ended, and the actors therein wearie; the ambaſſador withdrew to his lodging by barge to Croſbies place, where (no doubt) this daies ſolemnitie was thought vpon, and talked of; if not by him, yet by his traine, and perhaps (as like enough) of both. Now after this, and manie other Engliſh courteſies elſewhere, verie bountifullie giuen and taken: the ambaſſador, after the finiſhing of ſuch affaires as he was put in truſt withall, taking his leaue both of the court, citie, and countrie, returned towards Denmarke on the thirtith daie of Maie next following, whome we will leaue vpon his voiage, and touch other matters happening at home.

Bulbaiting and an old ape on horſſebacke.

This Croſbie was a knight, ſee his gift to the citie of London, pag. 702, a 50.

The ambaſſador departeth home towards Denmarke.

Lord Edward earle of Rutland ambaſſador into Scotland.

In this yeare one thouſand fiue hundred foure ſcore and ſix, and on the fourth daie of Iune, a commiſſion was directed from the queens maieſtie then at Greenewich, tending to the ratification of a firme league of amitie betweene the two mightie princes, Eliſabeth queene of England, and Iames the ſixt of that name king of Scots, vpon certeine cauſes neceſſarie and important: the reigne and gouernement of the ſaid princes, happening in ſo doubtfull and dangerous times, wherein the princes neere adioining, who will be called catholike, agniſing the popes authoritie, by mutuall leagues doo knit friendſhip, for the rooting vp and throwing out of the true, pure, and ſincere religion of the goſpell, not onelie out of their owne territories and dominions, but alſo out of other forren kingdoms; and thereto haue obliged their faith.

The queens maieſtie hath ſpeciall care of chriſtian religion to be preſerued and propagated.

Leaſt they therefore that loue the religion of the goſpell, ſhould ſeeme leſſe carefull for the defenſe and ſupportation thereof, than they which earneſtlie indeuour to mainteine and vphold that of Rome, leaſt it ſhould be ouerthrowne: the ſaid princes, for the greater ſecuritie of their perſons, vpon whoſe ſafetie the ſafetie of the whole people dooth depend; and for the preſeruation of the true, ancient, and chriſtian religion, which they now profeſſe; haue thought good that a ſtricter bond of mutuall and ſociall league, than at anie time hitherto hath beene agreed vpon betweene their maieſties progenitors, ſhould now be ſubſtantiallie concluded. This league was articulated, and commiſſioners thereto appointed; the right honorable Edward earle of Rutland, (a complet noble man, anſwerable to the etymon of his name, and deſeruing the poets report ———nomen virtutibus æquat, Nec ſinit ingenium nobilitate premi) the lord William Euers, and alſo Thomas Randolph eſquier; who with their traine of attendants came to Berwike the nineteenth of Iune, where (the ambaſſadors of Scotland being in like ſort preſent) they accompliſhed the matter, whereto they were commiſſionated: the articles of the ſaid league in all and euerie part ſufficientlie confirmed, on the fift of Iulie. All which being diſpatched, the ſaid earle of Rutland with his traine returned. This ambaſſage is reported in the hiſtorie of Scotland, wherevnto (for the auoiding of tautologie) we refer the reader.

A league betweene England and Scotland confirmed.

See more of this ambaſſage in the hiſtorie of Scotland, pag. 456, b, 60.

And here (by the waie) hauing entered into a remembrance concerning Scotland, it is noteworthie, a little to glanſe at the preſent ſtate of the ſame, whereof let the wiſe conſider, how ſoeuer the leſſe aduiſed paſſe it ouer. The king himſelfe we omit as touching his port be it as it is, neuertheleſſe by name to be thought vpon: Vtpote nomen minime felicitatis, maximi vero infortunij perhibetur. For if a man toſſe ouer the Scotiſh hiſtorie, and caſt an eie vpon the ſucceſſion of their kings; not medling with anie of anie name, ſauing ſuch as were of the ſame with him now in ſtate of principalitie; he ſhall ſee Fatale quoddam malum nomini innatum. For certeine conſpirators forceablie breaking vp the firſt kings chamber doore, hauing before died their hands with the bloud of the kings fauorers, did now alſo with like continuall bloudthirſtineſſe murther their ſoueraigne, inflicting vpon his bodie manie cruell and deadlie wounds at eight and twentie ſeuerall blowes.

Iames the firſt ſlaine, ſee the Scotiſh hiſtorie, pag. 266. b 40, 50.

Compare this murther with that of Brutus and Caſſius vpon Iulius Ceſar.

The ſecond king of that name, hauing great experience in knowledge of ſhooting great artillerie, came to the trenches where the great ordinance was planted, which he cauſed to be ſhot off. And here by great miſfortune he was ſlaine by the ſlice of a great peece of artillerie; which by ouercharging chanced to breake, and ſlue not onelie the king ſtanding ſomewhat neere it, but alſo hurt the earle of Angus with others. The third of that name banded himſelfe againſt certeine rebellious lords, who had made their forces ſo ſtrong, that they durſt enter a pitcht field; and in deed ſo did: where after great ſlaughter and murther made of an huge multitude, the king being put to the worſt, fled into a mill, whither being fiercelie followed and found therein, he was cruellie ſlaine, and vnreuerentlie left ſtarke naked.

Iames the ſecond ſlaine, ſee the Scotiſh hiſtorie, pag. 278. a 10.

Iames the third ſlaine, ſee the Scotiſh hiſtorie. pag. 287. a 40,

The fourth of that name, with no leſſe infelicitie than the former, ended his daies. For in a battell attempted, tried, and fiercelie fought with the Engliſh (notwithſtanding manie prodigious chances as forewarnings of miſfortune to befall both prince and people, as an hare ſtart among them, which hauing a thouſand arrowes, daggers, & other things floong at hir with great noiſe and ſhouting, yet eſcaped ſhe from them all, ſafe and ſcotfree: the buckle leather likewiſe of the kings helmet was gnawne with miſe, & the cloth or veile of his inner tent of ſanguine red) yet nothing moued with theſe extraordinarie accidents, nor the perſuaſions of ſuch as were neere to & about him, he made againſt the Engliſh; & breaking his araie of battell (more hardie than wiſe) ruſhed forward (with a companie of noble men) and accompliſhing the office of a footman, he found the Engliſh manfullie ſtanding at reſiſtance. In fine it fell out verie fatallie againſt the king & his power, by meanes that the Engliſh comming forceablie vpon them, and both ſides for a long ſpace fighting verie cruellie, at length the victorie inclined to the Engliſh; king Iames being there beaten downe and ſlaine.

Forewarnings of miſfortune and ill lucke to befall.

Iames the fourth ſlaine, ſee the Scotiſh hiſtorie, pag. 300 b 60, 301. a 10.

The fift of that name, a man neither certeine in doubtfull things, nor doubtfull in things of certeintie, eger to reuenge iniuries, and of an high ſtomach; hearing of the diſcomfiture giuen vnto his people in a conflict by the Engliſh, was maruellouſlie amazed: and therewithall ſuch an impreſſion of penſiueneſſe ſurpriſed him, that he ſuſpected a conſpiracie of all his nobilitie (vpon probable reaſons) to haue beene intended againſt him. Inſomuch that he tooke ſuch a vehement and deepe diſpleaſure, increaſed with a melancholicall thought, that he departed ſuddenlie from place to place, and at laſt to Falkland, where he remained as a man deſolat of comfort, ſore vexed in ſpirit and bodie, and would not permit anie manner of perſon to haue acceſſe vnto him, his ſecret and familiar freends onelie excepted: ſo that in a ſhort tract of time he died euen in the vigor of his manhood and ſtrength, at the age of thirtie and three yeares. Now, in how little time the reigns and ruines of theſe forſaid princes were concluded, we leaue to ſuch as liſt to looke into the courſe of the Scotiſh hiſtorie, where they are to obſerue not onelie that point, but alſo manie matters of good conſideration.

s the his end, e Sco-hiſtorie,
329, a 60,
o.

uching
s James ixt, ſee at ge in the lt of Scot-nd, and ſo in e hiſtorie.

The ſixt and laſt of that name, of rare qualitie, and now in reialtie (the ſonne of Marie Dowager malicious and murtherous, of whome in diſcourſe hereafter, as occurrences of conſequence ſhall direct our pen) what dangers he paſſed, &c: by ſearch into the Scotiſh annals maie appeere: what remaineth behind we leaue to the Lord Gods counſell and working. Touching the countrie it ſelfe, it is diuided into factions; a plague to kingdoms, and a verie entrance to ruine and deſolation. As for the tumults and ſeditions (which haue often happened) they haue had their begining from a pretended care of religion, which diuerſe times hath beene altered, not in profeſſion but in diſcipline; and which at this preſent (biſhops remooued) is in the power of ſuperintendents; neither can the ſame, by meanes of old hatred remaining in ſeed, be at quiet. How the people are affected, the nobles inclined, the officers diſpoſed, the king obeied, the commons gouerned, law adminiſtred, religion reuerenced, dutie generallie exhibited, and Gods holie name honored, Eloquar an ſileam? grauis eſt in vtroque querela.

Thomas encie the Scotiſh queenes oraor as he wri-
th himſelfe.

Howbeit, by the report of the * author of the Blacke booke, bearing ſhew to be printed at Cullen, and dedicated vnto the foreſaid Marie the Scotiſh queene, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie and fiue (whome this deuiſer intituleth high and mightie princeſſe) euen then it was ſaid that the commonwealth of Scotland was paſt hope, &c. To which purpoſe Cicero verie aptlie ſaith, that ſuch commonwealths as are readie to be ouerthrowne, and haue all things forlorne and deſperat in them, fall into this miſerable iſſue, that they whome the laws condemne are reſtored, and iudgements giuen are reuoked and broken. Now when ſuch things come to paſſe, let none be ignorant of this, that deſtruction is at hand, neither can anie man iuſtlie conceiue hope of ſafetie. From which remedileſſe miſcheefes God defend this realme of England! But enough of this, and now to matters of our owne.

A ſure token of a deſperat common-wealth, and declining to deſtruction.

Elks execu-ted at Ti-borne for counterfeiting the queens ſignet ma-nuell.

This yeare vpon the ſeuen and twentith daie of Iune, at the ſeſſions of oier and terminer at iuſtice hall in London, a lewd fellow named Henrie Elks clerke, for counterfeiting the Q. ſignet manuell to a preſentation of the parſonage of all ſaints in Haſtings, directed to the archbiſhop of CanturLurie, or to his vicar or commiſſarie generall (the ſee or dioceſſe of Chicheſter being void) that he might be inſtituted parſon there, was condemned, and had iudgement to be hanged, bowelled, & quartered: who was accordinglie on the next morrow, being the eight and twentith daie of Iune, executed at Tiborne, in companie of ten other priſoners that were hanged for felonies by them committed. About this time alſo a lotterie, for maruellous rich and beautifull armor, was begun to be drawen at the great weſt gate of ſaint Pauls church in London, in a houſe of timber newlie erected for that purpoſe, which lotterie continued drawing daie and night for the ſpace of two or three daies.

A lotterie for armor in London.

The horrible conſpiracie of Babington & other his fellow traitors diſcourſed by A.F.

¶ In the moneth of Iulie a verie dangerous conſpiracie was diſcouered, tending to the ſubuerſion of the ſtate and lamentable confuſion of all things: wherin, as the turbulent ſpirited did what they could to proceed, ſo it pleaſed God the author of peace to intercept them in the plot of their miſcheefous deuiſe, and to ouerthrow them in their owne imagined nets. Ringleaders in this pretended treaſon were certeine gentlemen and others (of whome hereafter by particular name we will ſpeake) who had waded and ventured ſo farre therein, that vpon the notice thereof (as God will ſuffer no ſuch attempts to lie long vndetected) order was taken for a verie ſtrict inquirie and ſearch vniuerſallie to be made for their apprehenſion.

The faithfull and feruent ſeruice of ſuch as were in office in and about London in ſearching for the conſpirators.

In the execution whereof, ſuch officers, as vpon whome the charge was impoſed, demeaned themſelues ſo preciſelie (and ſpeciallie the conſtables of London, to their praiſe be it ſpoken) that they ſpared not their next neighbors houſes, but indifferentlie and without parcialitie did ſearch them; proceeding ſo farre by vertue of their office & preſent commiſſion (wherein they had a ſpeciall regard by their ſeruice to iuſtifie their allegiance and faithfull ſubiection to the whole world) that they went into the verie bedchambers of manie a welthie and worſhipfull perſon, not forbearing the drawing of the corteins, &c: which was offenſiuelie taken for the inſtant, vntill that the reaſon of their ſo ſeuere inquiſition was aduiſedlie conſidered.

The conſpirators diſtreſſed and ſuccorleſſe are put to verie hard ſhifts by inquiſition and purſute.

This ſearch continued for certeine nights, with watch and ward conuenient, to the terrifieng of the conſpirators whom the ſame principallie concerned, and draue them to ſuch a perplexitie, that being ferretted from place to place, they wiſt not in what corner to take vp their ſafe repoſe. Neuertheleſſe, great and diligent ſearch hauing beene made daie and night, and the expected iſſue failing, peoples minds grew vnquiet and diſcontented: ſo much the rather, for that now the rumor of the ſaid hainous attempt was ſo ranke, that the ſame was noiſed and voiced by verie children: inſomuch that double diligence was vſed in a further inquirie, and indeed ſuch circumſpection had on all hands, that hedge and buſh was ſo beaten, as at length ſome of thoſe noiſome birds were vnneſted and ſurpriſed.

The conſpirators apprehended and detected, to the great reioiſing of the citizens of London, &c.

The ſound hereof rang brim in diuerſe places, and people thronged togither to ſee the vnnaturall beaſts that were attached, whoſe hearts were ouerwhelmed with horror, and their faces couered with confuſion; their conſciences inwardlie exulcerated and galled with the guilt of their offenſe: which how damnable it was, the whiſperings, communications, and lowd ſpeeches of the multitude, pointing at them with the finger of infamie as traitors of ſingular note (ſome ſaieng, Looke, looke, yonder go the errant traitors that would haue killed our queene, yonder go the wretches that would haue burnt our citie, that would haue alienated the ſtate of the land, that would haue laid all open vnto bloudſhed, ſlaughter, deſolation, and ſpoile: yonder they go whome heauen aboue dooth abhorre, the earth below deteſt, the ſun, moone, and ſtarres be aſhamed of, all creatures doo curſſe and count vnworthie of breath and life) might make them conceiue, euen to the extreme torment of their minds, which were now to meditat vpon nothing more than compunction of ſpirit, repentance, ſubmiſſion to the law and ſentence of deſerued death, with reconciliation to God, whome they moſt ſhamefullie betraied in betraieng his annointed, euen good queene Eliſabeth, the Lords lieutenant and vicegerent generall ouer vs.

O caitiues moſt execrable, begotten and borne to miſerie! How much better had it beene for you, neuer to haue beene conceiued, to haue prooued an vntimelie frute, to haue beene ouerthrowen in your cradles, to haue periſhed in your ſwathling clowts; than in ſo vnhappie an houre, vnder ſo infortunat conſtellations, to ſo vnluckie a life, and ſo reprochfull a death to be reſerued; whome none can pitie without ſuſpicion of impietie, none lament but with lacke of loialtie, none fauorablie ſpeake of without great note of ingratitude and priuie trecherie? To this effect tended the interchangable ſpeeches of the people, all with one voice diſcloſing the conceipts of their mind, againſt theſe eminent traitors: a moſt odious name and flat againſt all humanitie, the pernicious plague of kingdoms & commonwealths, hated of God and man, wherewith periured perſons being bewitched, feare not to betraie themſelues, ſo they may betraie others alſo, and their countrie. Wherevpon they become intollerable to euerie one, yea euen to thoſe that vſe them to ſerue their owne wicked turns in diſloiall & lewd actions, receiuing in the end the reward due to their execrable impieties.

No malefactor ſo odious as a traitor.

For this is the common affection that men beare towards ſuch people, ſo to ſeeke them out (which notwithſtanding is not the propertie of a noble heart) when they ſtand in feare of them, as they that want gall or the poiſon of ſome venemous beaſts: afterwards to giue them ouer and to reiect becauſe of their wickedneſſe. If a man be called ſlouthfull, he maie become diligent; if talkatiue, ſilent; if a glutton, temperat; if an adulterer, continent; if furious, diſſemble; if ambitious, conſtant; if a ſinner, amend: but he that is once called a traitor, there is no water to waſh him cleane, nor meane to excuſe himſelfe. And in truth, what man of anie good iudgement will truſt ſuch a one, as betraieth his prince, his benefactor, his citie, his countrie, his kinſfolks and freends into the hands of tyrannie and thraldome, from the which (aſwell the one of bodie as the other of conſcience and religion) good Lord deliuer vs. But to proceed in our diſcourſe, you ſhall vnderſtand, that by meanes of common report both in ſtreet and lane, the conſpirators diabolicall purpoſes being knowne, there was ſuch an exceſſe of ioie bred in the peoples hearts vpon their apprehenſion, and preuention of the imminent miſchiefs, through Gods almightie goodnes, that neighbor with neighbor and friend with friend, yea familiars and ſtrangers by companies fell in talke of the preſent accident, diuerſe diuerſlie diſcourſing thereof, ſome wiſhing a whole weeks exquiſit torment, others renting in peeces with wild horſſes, and the mildeſt (for concluſion) not forbearing imprecations of extreme bitterneſſe againſt the traitors.

Proditionem amo proditores odi: Treaſon I loue, but traitors I hate: the ſaieng of Cæſar Auguſtus.

Now beſides theſe were a ſort of people of an other diſpoſition, in whom the preſent occaſion forced ſuch a ſudden impreſſion of ioie, that they made the bels in ſteeples witneſſes of their inward conceipt; the ſame being ſo ſtrong & deſirouſlie ſought to be teſtified, that ſome galled themſelues with ringing, chooſing rather to looſe a little lether, yea a portion of their fat and fleſh, than not (as time mooued, and leaſure was made to ſerue) to giue a ſigne of their good affection. This liked them well that miſliked the ill, the euaſion whereof was the cauſe of this mutuall reioiſing.

Diuers kinds of reioiſings among the people.

Beyond this the well affected of the citie did paſſe certeine degrees: for beſides that ſome wearied themſelues with pulling at the bell ropes, which were roong both daie and night, as vpon the daie of hir maieſties coronation; ſo others deuiſed a further teſtification of ioie, inſomuch that although wood was then at a ſore extent of price, yet they ſpared not their ſtacks or piles, were the ſame little or great; but brought (we thinke in conſcience) euerie houſe a portion, where fires might conuenientlie be made and without danger. Memorandum that none were more forward herein than the meaner ſort of people, who rather than they would omit to ad little or much to a fire, being vnprouided of fuell, parted with a penie or two to buie a few ſticks by retaile. Inſomuch that now by common conſent this action grew to be generall, for few places might a man ſee in the citie, of anie ſpaciouſneſſe or compaſſe, where a cleare fire was not made.

No ſparing o wood to mak bonfires,albe the price was verie high.

The poore peoples diſp ſition in this exultation.

And ſurelie infinit was the wood ſpent for the preſent time, as maie appeere by the number betwixt Ludgate and Charing croſſe (fires made in biturnings, lanes, yards, &c: excepted) amounting vnto aboue threeſcore, by count of the writer hereof, who went of purpoſe to view them, and indeed did note them all. The people hauing thus doone, did not ſo ſtaie their inward reioiſing; but bringing out their ſquare and round tables into the open ſtreets, like neighbors ſitting togither, and furniſhing the boords with ſuch prouiſion as the preſent time affoorded, made merrie in comelie and honeſt ſort. Where (by the waie) this is noteworthie, that manie times an euill thing dooth effectuat a good.

A true and iuſt obſeruat on of the wi ter.

Neighbors make merrie in the open ſtreets for io of the conſpirators detec on and apprehenſion.

An euill thing dooth procreat a good.

For by the breaking out of this conſpiracie, wherevpon inſued this remembred reioiſing; it ſo came to paſſe, that manie a priuat reconciliation was procured by this mutuall meeting of neighbors betweene diuerſe that before had beene at ouerthwarts and in ſecret grudge, all which was waſhed awaie with a cup of merrie go downe for hir ſake, that ſecundum Deum eſt columen ſalutis noſtræ. In ſome places the people ſang pſalmes, and made ſuch melodie as their ſkill could deuiſe, with tabber and pipe marching about their fires, and giuing manie a ſhowt, that the aire rang withall. Now by this preſident hir maieſtie is to be comforted, and alſo perſuaded, that ſhe hath ſubiects in this hir citie, to whome hir health and ſafetie is more pretious than lim or life, and who could be content to ſpare the beſt bloud in their heart, ſo hir little finger might not ſo much as ake: in which mind they liue, and ſo meane to die, herein ſaieng by waie of deprecation:

The queens maieſtie may perſuade hi ſelfe that ſhe is not with thouſands o faithfull hearts, &c.

Viue, vale, regina vale, viue Eliſabetha,
Viue valéque tibi, viue valéque tuis:
Seu tua te Windſora capit, quæ ſydera lambens,
Subiectas alta deſpicit arce domos:
Quæque præit forma reliquas, Hamptonia, quamuis
Pontificis fuerat, regibus apta domus:
Seu te Londinum cunctorum regia regum
Detinet, & gremio certat habere ſuo.
Viue, vale, regina vale, viue Eliſabetha,
I, comitante Deo, quo duce ſoſpes eris.
Ah pereat! quicunque tuo liueſcit honore,
Quiſquis te nolit, qualis es, eſſe diu.
Viue (precor) decus excellens, ſpes vna tuorum,
Viue valéque tibi, viue valéque tuis.

Now by reuelation of this peſtilent practiſe, & apprehenſion of the conſpirators in ſeeking to eſcape, the minds of people latelie perplexed, were preſentlie diſburthened of manie miſtruſtfull douts, & their hearts yerwhile heauie, grew foorthwith ſomewhat lighter by the extenuation of feare & ſuſpicion, wherewith

The hearts and minds the people greatlie qu ted and eaſ with before they carefullie trauelled; and ſome that before could not ſleepe, not ſo much for their priuat as their princes and publike eſtate diſquieted, did take their wiſhed reſt; moſt perſuading themſelues that as a traine of gunpowder, being fiered but in ſome little part, ceaſeth not till it be vtterlie conſumed: ſo would it befall theſe traitors vpon their deſcrie and apprehenſion.

Treaſons and conſpiracies can not be ſo cloſelie wrought but they will out at laſt.

After mirth heauie cheere.

But as after a pleſant ſummer followeth a ſharpe winter, and the greateſt pleaſures haue their ouerthwarts: ſo fared it with this ioie of the multitude, which (as the bright ſun in a cleere daie ouercaſt with clouds) was dawnted with a ſudden dread, & the necke thereof in a ſort broken with the brute of an arriuall of forren enimies vpon the coſts of Suſſex. For towards the euening, there were ſeene fiftie ſhips houering to and fro before Brighthemſton, and ſailing towards the towne, as though they had purpoſed to haue come to the ſhore: whereof the towne within a few houres aduertiſed the lord Buckehurſt, the meſſenger adding ten to the number, and bringing word that threeſcore ſhips were deſcried; and that if they ment to come on land, they would doo it within an houre following, which if they did, then they would ſend him further word; but ſuppoſed they would not land till the next morning, the tide then ſeruing verie conuenient. Thervpon alarums were rung, and meſſengers ſent out to giue notice to the other parties to be in a readineſſe: but expreſſe charge to fire no beacons, vnleſſe they had warrant ſo to doo, and that the enimies were firſt landed.

The redineſſe of the lord Buckhurſt to repell the enimies, if anie ſuch arriuall as was noiſed had beene.

The lord Buckehurſt redilie arming his men, gaue ſpeedie direction what ſhould be doone, & went out and laie on the downes all night with the companie, betweene a village called Rottingdeane and Brighthemſton, whither reſorted vnto him about one thouſand and ſix hundred people, readie there to doo their dutie, if need required. His preſence greatlie confirmed the people ſomewhat troubled with this rumor; but yet with great alacritie they flocked from all parts in heaps, and made towards the coaſt. The Kentiſhmen likewiſe with all celeritie aſſembled, and with no leſſe willingneſſe addreſſed themſelues to march in good order, well furniſhed and prepared to haue come downe, had not contrarie news of all things quieted beene brought. For not long after, the coaſt was cleare, & no more but ten ſhips with a pinneſſe ſeene a far off, about ſixteene miles in the ſea, againſt the downs, betweene Newhauen and Brighthemſton; whereof two were ſaid to haue come ſomewhat neere to the ſhore about Salt Deane, and to haue diſcharged two peeces of ordinance. Afterwards being deſcried what they were, by a veſſell manned forth for that purpoſe by the lord Buckehurſt to parle with them; it was found they were Hollanders come out of Spaine loden with merchandize, and bound to Holland, who (by reaſon the wind had continued eaſterlie) were forced to houer alongſt the coaſt, their making towards Brighthemſton being onelie to get the wind, and that they were freends and no enimies. Beacons were none fired (although the contrarie were reported) but one at Burriſh (as was ſaid) from which error ſome perhaps might in like ſort be fired in Kent, but yet verie few.

Vpon what occaſion the falſe voice of forren arriuall did grow.

A great mariage ſolemnized at the time of the falſe voice of forren arriuall.

At the ſame time that this rumor of tumult was ſo rife, a great mariage (wherat the biſhop of Chicheſter made a ſermon in the chapell) was ſolemnized at the lord Mountagues houſe; whereat the earle of Worceſter, the counteſſe of Southampton, the ladie Marie Arundell, the ladie Greie ſiſter to the ſaid lord Mountague, with diuers other knights, ladies, gentlemen & gentlewomen of great traine & attendance were preſent; inſomuch that the number was ſo great, as it was thought there were not ten gentlemen of Suſſex, which might diſpend two hundred pounds lands by yeare, that were abſent: which number as they were great, ſo was their tariance long in that place. Now as the ſaid companie was redie to ſit downe to ſupper, ſudden news came that Newhauen was burned, & the lord Buckhurſt with a power gone to Brighthemſton to ſaue the towne from forren inuaſion, intended by certeine ſhips redie to make arriuall. Which although it was a meere lie and vaine report (as by the premiſſes appeareth) yet notwithſtanding it bred ſuch an abaſhment in the minds of the multitude, from the beſt to the worſt, that therevpon a partile diſſolution of the companie was procured, to the number of a hundred horſſe making awaie vpon that occaſion: howbeit, there ſupped (as it was ſaid) fifteene hundred people in and about the ſaid houſe, the ſame night that theſe troubleſome news arriued. Which might well be true: for the beere tap neuer left running, during the ſpace of foure daies; a time wherein a great part of the good prouiſion was ſpent, to the founders praiſe and the feeders releefe.

Theſe falſe news came flieng from diuerſe places.

Hoſpitalitie commendable.

But to let that paſſe, you ſhall vnderſtand, that when the truth of this whole matter was knowne, all former feare, whereto falſe report had made paſſage into the minds of men, was foorthwith put to flight; and though for a ſeaſon, being ſudden, the preſent conſpiracie (ſo greene of memorie) gaue it force for the time; yet neuertheleſſe at length, like a cloud in the aire, or a dreame in ſleepe, it vaniſhed quite awaie, and the rumor thereof was the reſtoring of the people to their former reioiſing, ingendring likewiſe in them an expectation of deſerued iuſtice againſt the troublers of Iſraels bleſſed peace. Howbeit (a matter of great moment, and at no hand to be omitted) hir maieſtie hauing intelligence of hir louing peoples demeanor, in ſuch ſort as you haue heard, did moſt gratiouſlie accept of the ſame, and conceiued no ſmall comfort in heart, that God had giuen hir a people ſo ſtudious of hir ſafetie, and ioifull for the ſame. Inſomuch that the conſideration thereof did ſo worke in hir highneſſe, as herevpon (a thing rare in a prince) ſhe directed letters of thanks to the citie, for the manifold teſtifications of their loue and loialtie: which becauſe they are materiall (as no word nor tittle proceeding from ſo ſingular a ſoueraigne, is to fall to the ground vnrecorded) we are in dutie bound trulie to annex them, as we had them vnder publication. And firſt a breefe oration of maiſter Iames Dalton, one of the councellors of the citie of London, in the abſence of the recorder, as followeth.

The reioiſing of the people for hir maieſties preſeruation commeth to hir eares, &c.

The oration of maiſter Iames Dalton, &c.

RIght worſhipfull, my good countriemen and citizens of this moſt noble citie of London: ſince the late brute and report of a moſt wicked & traitorous conſpiracie, not onelie to take awaie the life of our moſt gratious ſoueraigne (whome God grant long to liue and reigne ouer vs) but alſo to ſtir vp a generall rebellion throughout the whole realme: the great and vniuerſall ioie of you all of this citie, vpon the apprehenſion of diuerſe of that moſt wicked conſpiracie alate declared and teſtified, by manie outward acts and ſhewes, hath wrought in the queens moſt excellent maieſtie ſuch a gratious contentment; that it hath moued hir highneſſe, by hir letters ſigned with hir owne hand, to ſignifie vnto my lord maior of this citie and his brethren, hir moſt noble and princelie acceptation thereof, and that in ſuch ſort, as thereby maie appeare, that hir highneſſe hath not more, no not ſo much reioiſed at the moſt happie eſcape of the wicked miſchiefe intended againſt hir owne perſon, as at the ioie which hir louing ſubiects, & namelie you of this citie of London tooke at the apprehenſion of the practiſers of that intended treaſon.

By occaſion whereof, hir highneſſe brought to a thankefull remembrance, and acknowledging of Gods infinit bleſſings beſtowed on hir, comparable with anie prince or creature in the world, no worldlie thing more or like accompteth of, than of the heartie loue of hir louing and faithfull ſubiects manie waies, and manie times before now; but eſpeciallie by this our great ioie in this ſort, at this time, and vpon this occaſion ſhewed. And that hir exceeding great loue and acceptation of our reioiſing maie the more appeare vnto you; it hath pleaſed hir highneſſe in the ſame letters to declare, that ſhe deſireth not longer to liue among vs, than ſhe ſhall mainteine, continue, nouriſh, and increaſe the loue & goodwill of hir ſubiects towards hir. And this hir highneſſe hath willed to be made knowne vnto you all, with this; that ſhe will not faile with all care, and by all good meanes that apperteine to a chriſtian prince, to ſeeke the conſeruation of you all, ſo louing and dutifullie affected ſubiects.

Sir Wolſtan Dixie lord maior of London, Anthonie Ratcliffe and Henrie Pranell ſhiriffes.

This hir maieſties pleaſure in part now declared, and more to be made knowen vnto you by hir owne letters, which you ſhall heare read, my lord maior and his brethren haue required me to declare vnto you all, that they doo heartilie reioiſe and thanke God for the happie daie of the good acceptation of this your great ioie; and my lord himſelfe hath willed me to giue you all heartie thanks in his name; for that in the time of his ſeruice, your dutifull behauiours haue gotten to the citie ſo noble and worthie a teſtimonie of dutie and loialtie, of ſo noble and worthie a queene. Now, for ſo much as Gods bleſſings woonderfullie abound, & one ioie commeth vpon another, let vs not be vnthankefull to God, but acknowledge his goodneſſe, and attribute the ſame (as in deed we ought) to the ſincere religion of almightie God, moſt godlie eſtabliſhed by the queens moſt excellent maieſtie, which hath taught vs to know God aright, our dutie to our ſouereigne, and to loue our countrie, and hath made vs dutifull and obedient ſubiects, reioiſing at all good things happening to hir maieſtie, hir realme, or to anie in hir noble ſeruice, the true effects of a true and good religion: whereas the contemners thereof, and immoderat affectors of the Romiſh religion and ſuperſtitions, being void of the true knowledge of God, haue declined from God, their allegiance to their prince, their loue to their countrie, and haue become inuenters of miſchiefes, bruters and ſpreaders abrode of falſe and ſeditious rumors, ſuch as ioie at no good thing; but contrariwiſe reioiſe at euerie euill ſucceſſe, the badges and marks of their profeſſion, who haue before this, in this realme and in other hir highneſſe dominions, ſtirred vp rebellion, forren inuaſion, and manie times practiſed the verie death & deſtruction of the queene hir ſelfe; the ruine & ſubuerſion of the whole realme; the proper effects of their Romiſh religion.

We haue beheld all theſe things, and ſeene in our daies the ruine and miſchiefs inuented againſt others, fall vpon the inuenters themſelues; and haue knowne the wicked and violent hands of diuerſe of them, diuerſlie to kill and murther themſelues, when moſt traitorouſlie they would, and moſt happilie they could not, ſlea the Lords annointed. As we haue knowne all theſe things, ſo God be thanked, that by a better religion, hauing beene better taught, we haue beene no partakers of their wicked deuiſes, but haue put to our helping hands, as occaſion hath ſerued; and euer readie to ouerthrow the authors and deuiſers thereof. And I haue no doubt, but we of this noble citie, who hitherto haue beene alwaies readie, dutifullie and faithfullie to ſerue hir maieſtie vpon all occaſions (hir highneſſe now ſo gratiouſlie accepting onelie of our reioiſing at the apprehenſion of hir enimies, euen the leaſt part of the dutie of a good ſubiect to ſo good a queene) will be readie euerie one with all that we can make, and with the vttermoſt aduenture of all our liues, ſpeedilie to be reuenged vpon all ſuch as ſhall villanouſlie and traitorouſlie attempt or put in vre anie miſchiefe to hir noble perſon; and in the meane time will haue a better eie and eare to all ſuſpicious and miſcontented perſons, to their ſaiengs and doings, to their falſe brutes and reports, to the places and corners of their haunt and reſort, to their harborers companions, aiders and mainteiners. God vphold and continue his religion among vs, and increaſe our zeale therein, which hath made vs ſo louing and loiall, and ſo beloued and acceptable ſubiects to ſo worthie a prince; and root out that wicked and Romiſh religion, that hath made ſo manie diſloiall and traitorous ſubiects; to whome is both odious and irkeſome the long life and proſperous reigne of our moſt noble queene Eliſabeth. God confound all ſuch traitors, and preſerue hir highneſſe long to liue & reigne ouer vs. ¶ Hauing thus ſpoken, the multitude all the while no leſſe ſilent than attendant, the ſpeaker verie reuerentlie opened hir maieſties letters, and read the ſame with a verie diſtinct and audible voice, as followeth.

To our right truſtie and welbeloued, the lord maior of our citie of London, and his brethren the aldermen of the ſame.

Right truſtie and welbeloued, we greete you well. Being giuen to vnderſtand, how greatlie our good and moſt louing ſubiects of that citie, did reioiſe at the apprehenſion of certeine diueliſh and wicked minded ſubiects of ours, that through the great and ſingular goodneſſe of God haue beene detected, to haue moſt wickedlie and vnnaturallie conſpired, not onelie the taking awaie of our owne life, but alſo to haue ſtirred vp (as much as in them laie) a generall rebellion throughout our whole realme: we could not but by our owne letters witneſſe vnto you the great and ſingular contentment we receiued vpon the knowledge thereof; aſſuring you, that we did not ſo much reioiſe at the eſcape of the intended attempt againſt our owne perſon, as to ſee the great ioie our moſt louing ſubiects tooke at the apprehenſion of the contriuers thereof: which, to make their loue more apparant, they haue (as we are to our great comfort informed) omitted no outward ſhew, that by anie externall act might witneſſe to the world the inward loue and dutifull affection they beare towards vs. And as we haue as great cauſe with all thankefulneſſe to acknowledge Gods great goodneſſe toward vs, through the infinit bleſſings he laieth vpon us, as manie as euer prince had; yea rather as euer creature had: yet doo we not for anie worldlie bleſſing receiued from his diuine maieſtie, ſo greatlie acknowledge the ſame, as in that it hath pleaſed him to incline the hearts of our ſubiects, euen from the firſt beginning of our reigne; to carie as great loue toward vs, as euer ſubiects carried toward prince, which ought to moue vs (as it dooth in verie deed) to ſeeke with all care, & by all good means that apperteine to a Chriſtian prince, the conſeruation of ſo louing and dutifullie affected ſubiects: aſſuring you, that we deſire no longer to liue, than while we maie in the whole courſe of our gouernment carie our ſelues in ſuch ſort, as may not onelie nouriſh & continue their loue & good will towards vs, but alſo increaſe the ſame. We thinke meet, that theſe our letters ſhould be communicated in ſome generall aſſemblie to our moſt louing ſubiects the commoners of that citie. Giuen vnder our ſignet at our caſtell of Windſor, the eighteenth daie of Auguſt 1586, in the eight and twentith yeare of our reigne.

Thus you ſee hir maieſties mindfulneſſe and thankefulneſſe of and for ſlender and bounden dutie: a propertie of princelie imitation, and wherein hir highneſſe father of famous memorie king Henrie the eight did excell; who in the fift yeare of his reigne, managing wars in France (at what time alſo the Engliſh forces, vnder the conduct and gouernment of the earle of Surrie, the kings lieutenant generall, atchiued manie notable exploits againſt the Scots at the battell of Bramrton, to the enimies great diſcomfiture, both by ſlaughter and captiuitie) where he heard how happilie his people had demeaned themſelues, to the renowme and credit of their natiue countrie; but ſpeciallie to his roiall contentment: inſomuch that at his returne into England from his conqueſt of Terwin and Tornaie, he forgat not the acceptable ſeruice of his ſaid people doone in the Scotiſh wars; but verie thankefullie eſteeming thereof, wrote vnto them his louing letters, leuened with words and clauſes of ſuch ſingular liking and paſſing fauour, that euerie man thought himſelfe ſufficientlie rewarded. Euen ſo bleſſed queene Eliſabeth (a naturall branch of that ſpreading vine) treading the ſteps of hir great progenitor, gaue like publike teſtimonie of heartie good will and gratious acceptance, of hir peoples foreremembred reioiſing. Which as it is a note of no common exemplification, ſo it cannot but excite and ſtir vp much matter of multiplieng and ratifieng all dutifull kindneſſe and ſeruiceable ſubmiſſion to hir highneſſe: wherein as we doubt not anie neglect, when occaſion is miniſtred; ſo we leaue hir to the Lords holie hand, the onelie hope of hir and our helpe; purpoſing now for a while to leaue the conſpirators in ſafe cuſtodie, and to touch the next occurrence comming to hand, as courſe of time offereth direction.

Queene Eliſabeth a right patterne of king Henrie the eight.

About this time, returned into England, ſir Francis Drake knight, a man of rare knowledge in nauigation, & verie fortunat in the euent of his enterpriſes, after manie feats of good ſeruice accompliſhed in forren countries (as at Baion, Hiſpaniola, S. Dominico, Carthagena, &c: to the admiration of all people amongeſt whom he came, and contrarie to the expectation of the Spaniards, who vpon ſuppoſall of places impregnable grew ſo confident, that they ſeemed lightlie to eſteeme anie purpoſed force of the enimie, and therefore doubted no kind of annoiance. Howbeit, they were as ſafe as he that hangeth by the leaues of a tree in the end of autumne, when as the leaues begin to fall. For they were ſo terrified at the ſight of ſacke and ſpoile, as alſo doubting a totall waſt by fire and ſword, that they were glad to yeeld to compoſition. And here, becauſe mention is made of Hiſpaniola, it ſhall not be amiſſe to honor this voiage with an hiſtoricall report of that countrie.

Sir Francis Drake his returne into England after his laſt voiage finiſhed.

Hiſpaniola (of ſome affirmed to be Ophir, wherof mention is made in the third booke of the kings) is of latitude fiue ſouth degrees, hauing the north pole eleuat on the north ſide ſeuen and twentie degrees, & on the ſouth ſide (as they ſaie) two & twentie degrees; it reacheth in length from eaſt to weſt, ſeuen hundred and foure ſcore miles, being diſtant from the Ilands of Gades (now Cales) nine and fortie degrees and more, as ſome ſaie. The forme of the Iland reſembleth the leafe of a cheſnut tree, with a gulfe towards the weſt ſide, lieng open againſt the Iland of Cuba. But the expert ſhipmaiſter Andreas Moralis deſcribeth it, from the eaſt and weſt angle to be indented and eaten with manie great gulfes, and the corners to reach forth verie farre, placing manie large and ſafe hauens in the great gulfe on the eaſt ſide. It may be compared (without ſhame or blame as ſome ſaie) to Italie, ſometimes queene of the world. For if the quantitie be conſidered, it ſhall be found little leſſe, and much more fruitfull. It reacheth from the eaſt into the weſt foure hundred and fortie miles, according to the computation of the later ſearchers. It is in bredth ſomewhere almoſt three hundred miles, and in ſome places narrower, where the corners are extended. But it is ſurelie much more bleſſed and fortunat than Italie, being for the moſt part thereof ſo temperat and floriſhing, that it is neither vexed with ſharpe cold, nor afflicted with immoderat heat. It hath both the ſtaiengs or conuerſions of the ſun called ſolſtitia in a maner equall with the equinoctiall, with little difference betweene the length of the daie and the night throughout all the yeare. For on the ſouth ſide the daie aſcendeth ſcarſlie an houre in length aboue the night, or contrariwiſe: the cold is accidentall, and not by the ſituation of the region, their ſpring and ſummer is perpetuall, their ground of maruellous fruitfulneſſe, their oxen and ſwine of exceeding bigneſſe, & fed with mirobalans, an eare of wheat with them as big as a mans arme in the brawne; great plentie of cattell, wholſome waters, & gold euerie where; for there is in maner no riuer, nor mounteine, and but few plaines that are vtterlie without it.

It is ſuppoſed that Salomon king of Ieruſalem had his great riches of gold from henſe, and that his ſhips ſailed to Ophir by the gulfe of Perſia, called Sinus Perſicus.

Hiſpaniola compared to Italie.

The temperature of Hiſpaniola.

The equinoctiall.

The bigneſſe of an eare of wheat.

A particular deſcription of the Iland of Hiſpaniola.

This Hiſpaniola is reputed the head, and as it were the principall mart of all the liberalitie of the ocean, hauing a thouſand and a thouſand faire, pleaſant, beautifull, and rich Nereides or Ilands, which lie about it on euerie ſide, adorning this their ladie and mother, as it were an other Thetis the wife of Neptune, inuironing hir about, and attending vpon hir as their queene and patroneſſe: and therefore aptlie denominated and likened vnto the earthlie paradiſe. Where, by the waie might be touched who firſt inhabited Hiſpaniola, how it was firſt named, the peoples maner of learning, their ballads and rimes, their ſinging and danſing, their ſongs of loue and moorning, their propheſies, familiaritie with ſpirits, their ſerpents, their riuers and pooles, their prouinces, their delights and pleaſures, and how they can abide no labor nor cold, what gold is yearelie brought from thenſe into Spaine, namelie the ſumme of foure hundred, and ſometimes fiue hundred ducats of gold, as may be gathered by the fift portion due to the kings excheker, amounting to an hundred and foureſcore, or foureſcore and ten thouſand caſtellans of gold, and ſometimes more. Here alſo might be diſcourſed the manifold and admirable things in that countrie, the variable motions of the elements, the colonies & villages which the Spaniards haue builded, the ſundrie goodlie Ilands round about it, as Arethuſa, Sanctus Iohannes, Cuba, Iamaica, Guadalupea, &c: the ſuger preſſes wherwith great plentie of ſuger is made, the canes or reeds wherein the ſame groweth, being as big as a mans arme in the brawne, & higher than the ſtature of a man by the halfe, the like whereof is in no place: the wheat, wine, with infinit other commodities and circumſtances; and ſpeciallie the chéefeſt gold mines, how the ſame is fined and diſtributed, as alſo that onelie in the melting ſhops of the two golden mines of Hiſpaniola, are molten yerelie aboue thrée hundred thouſand pounds weight of gold: ſo likewiſe might we ſaie much of Sancto Dominico, the chiefe citie and head of Hiſpaniola, reported in hiſtorie, as touching the building, that there is no citie in Spaine, Tanto pro tanto, no not Barſalona, that is to be preferred before it generallie. For the houſes are for the moſt part of ſtone, as are they of Barſalona, or of ſo ſtrong and well wrought earth, that it maketh a ſingular and ſtrong binding. Touching the ſituation thereof enough is extant in bookes of nauigation, whereto we remit the readers. We might alſo ſpeake of Carthagena, of the authoritie of the viceroie of Hiſpaniola, the mother and principall of all other lands and Ilands, of the ſenat and iudges there, who giue lawes to all the inhabitants of theſe tracts. But if we ſhould take that courſe, there would be no end of our worke. Onelie this we haue ſaid in honor of the knight, who with extraordinarie fortune trauelled to the places aboue ſaid: and vnto whome with his companie much maie be aſcribed by waie of commendation, becauſe that they haue made knowne vnto poſteritie ſo manie thouſands of Antipodes, which laie hid before and vnknowne to our forefathers.

What gold is brought yeerelie from Hiſpaniola into Spaine.

The ſuger of Hiſpaniola.

Sancto Dominico the chiefe citie in Hiſpaniola.

And now reſuming the perſon of him, whoſe valor did induce vs vnto this remembrance; note this, that hauing augmented his former renowme with new acceſſe of praiſworthie ſeruice, he grew ſo famous in places far & néere, that among nations abrode his name grew verie common, inſomuch that ſome of the learned ſort maligning his honorable atchiuements, euen againſt their owne conſciences & knowledge did report verie ingloriouſlie of him and his actions, againſt whoſe obloquies the truth is a ſufficient target. But thus much by the waie to the ſlanderer, who hath learned the peſtilent precept of Medius giuen to backbiters, who taught that they ſhould not ſpare to nip boldlie, and to bite with ſtore of ſlanders. For (quoth he) although he that is bitten ſhould be cured of the wound, yet the ſkar at the leaſt will ſtill remaine. Howbeit true it is, that this comfort can not be taken awaie from good men, namelie to be perſuaded, that the ſleights of backbiters and ſlanderers are able to preuaile but little againſt the inuincible tower of ſacred vertue, and of an aſſured hope well grounded, which (whatſoeuer commeth to paſſe) triumph alwaies, and victoriouſlie hold enuie and backbiting vnder their féet. In the meane while, it is the greateſt griefe in the world to ſée the honor of a good man in the mercie of a venemous toong: and true is and will be the common prouerbe, Non e alcuna perſona ſi libera, a chimanchi il ſuo bargello. As for the opinions and conceipts of people at home concerning him, they were extraordinarie: inſomuch that after his arriuall and being in London, manie did flocke about him in the open ſtréets, with admiration as a worlds woonder: yea the report of his exploits abrode did ſo rauiſh their minds, that leauing preacher and ſermon, they ran apace to behold him: ſuch force hath magnanimitie, wherwith this worthie knight tempered all his enterpriſes, ſorted to a verie proſperous iſſue.

Rerum in orbe geſtarum, &c. comment. in octauo.

There is no man ſo free that hath not his perſecutor or enimie.

Now hauing touched (though not with conuenient dignitie) the laſt voiage of this ſingular gentleman, it were not amiſſe to annex in this place a memoriall of a former voiage by him attempted, namelie on the thirtéenth daie of December, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie and ſeuen: at what time accompanied with fiue tall ſhips well manned and appointed, he ſailed into the weſt Indies: and by the ſame aduenture (moſt luckilie accompliſhed) eterniſed his name. At what time the king of the Moluccaes admiring his order, and aſtonied at the hearing of the peales of Engliſh ordinance, roring like thunder (which he there at his arriuall valiantlie and liberallie diſcharged) receiued him right honorablie, cauſing foure galliaſſes to conduct and bring his ſhip into the ſureſt harborough, and himſelfe with his companie to his preſence. In this voiage he diſcouered a countrie erſt vnknowne, which he named Noua Albion, where by his courteous deling he ſo allured and woone the hearts of the inhabitants, that twiſe they crowned him king. Beyond the large countrie of Chilie, where it hath béene heretofore thought that nothing had béene but continent and firme land, he found ſundrie Ilands, the furtheſt wherof lieng moſt ſouth, he called by hir maieſties name Eliſabetha. Now after manie a ſingular note of his incomparable valorouſneſſe exhibited in places where he came, and purpoſing to make his aduenture profitable, he neglected no meanes that might ſtand with his honeſtie & honor; returning home into England with great riches the ſix and twentith of September, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred and eightie; with one ſhip onelie. For of the fiue, wherwith (at his firſt ſetting foorth) he was furniſhed, he was forced to ſet two on fire, the third periſhed, the fourth came backe and went not forwards at the firſt. A voiage of great aduenture and proſperous ſucceſſe, contrarie to the ackward and frowning hap of ſundrie worthie gentlemen, whoſe attempts albeit honorable and commendable, yet matched with miſfortune, or at leaſt defectiue in deſerued and hoped iſſue: a ſore diſcoragement to gentlemen of trauell, and not a little impeaching the art of nauigation. For with what corage can men put in practiſe the rules of their knowledge, when they ſée the ſucceſſe of their ſkill and actions inferior vnto the tediouſneſſe of their labors, oftentimes accompanied with loſſe of life? A forceable motiue to withdraw mens minds quite from all deſire to ſea, and to bréed in them a good liking of the land, yea of their owne houſes and ſmoking chimnies: wherby in fine might follow a contempt of nauigation, and a neglect of all profit that trauell might afford.

The returne of ſir Francis Drake into England with great riches, &c.

Manie voiages of great difficultie haue béene vndertaken, but failed in the iſſue.

To which purpoſe Fabatus the conſull is worth the noting, who in ſeuentie yeares which he liued, departed not once from his village of Regio to go to Meſſina, which was but two miles off by water. And when one aſked him the cauſe whie? The barke (quoth he) is fooliſh, for it alwaies ſtirreth vp and downe; the mariner is fooliſh, for he neuer abideth in one opinion; the water is fooliſh, for it neuer ſtandeth ſtill; the wind is fooliſh, for it runneth continuallie. Now if we vſe to go from a foole when we méet him vpon the land; what reaſon were it for me to hazard my life with foure fooles vpon the ſea? But if all men had béene of Fabatus his mind, or vpon ſome ouerthwart caſualties and fatall accidents ſhould grow into a miſlike of ſhip and ſea (as diuers both wiſe, graue, and aged philoſophers were of the contrarie opinion) then would not Plato, after he had béene well inſtructed by Socrates, ſought out the Magies & wiſe men of Egypt, by whoſe means he ſaw the bookes of Moſes: then he went into Italie, to heare Architas Tarentinus, the moſt renowmed philoſopher of that countrie. Apollonius, who matched in learning all the philoſophers of his time, trauelled ouer all the thrée parts of the world, to ſée and conferre with all the ſkilfull men of his age: and being returned into his countrie, inriched with Fabatus an old conſull, but no traueller, ſpeaketh according to his ſmall ſkill.

Philoſophers haue béene great trauellers for knowledge, &c.

wonderfull knowledge, he diſtributed all his goods (whereof he had great abundance) amongſt his brethren, and to the poore: and withdrawing himſelfe into the field, he liued with bread and water onelie, that he might haue his mind free for the contemplation of heauenlie things. Wherein we are the more willing to vſe the authorities of philoſophers, becauſe they were counted wiſe, and no mens iudgement in the world more conſonant to the truth, as likewiſe their examples are of force to perſuade.

The benefits of nauigation or trauelling by ſea, &c.

And ſurelie as wiſdome with experience is purchaſed by trauelling; ſo wealth and worſhip is thereby obteined: all which are moſt vrgent prouocations to draw men forwards to great and doubtfull aduentures: beſides a carefull and louing regard of common vtilitie, which to a valorous mind is a verie ſpurre. Wherefore we may iudge that Frenchman ſcarſe well aduiſed or affected, who vpon a light gheſſe concludeth, that want of prudence and ambitious deſires did firſt inuent the art of nauigation and ſailing into farre countries: a thing ordeined of God, and time out of mind vſed amongeſt men, as may appeere by the words of the prophet Dauid, They that go downe to the ſea in ſhips, and occupie their buſineſſe in great waters: theſe men ſee the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deepe. But to end with him at whome this preſent note tooke beginning, it were to be wiſhed, that in memorie of this gentlemans incomparable atchiuement, ſome monument might remaine to ſucceeding ages: and none fitter than the brittle barke wherein he arriued ſafe and ſound, which a knight of good account and rarelie qualified, thought meet to be fixed vpon the ſtumpe of Paules ſteeple, in lieu of the ſpire, that being diſcerned farre and neere, it might be noted and pointed at of people with theſe true termes: Ponder is the barke that hath ſailed round about the world. The emperor Adrian tooke ſuch glorie and pride in all execrable vices, that he commanded a temple with a ſumptuous toome to be made for a naughtie man named Antinous, whom he had miſerablie abuſed in his life. The gentleman whome this remembrance concerneth, preferring the honor of his countrie before his owne life, with magnanimitie vndertooke vnwonted aduentures, and went through the ſame with wonderfull happines: were it not then iniurie to burie his name in obliuion, matters of no moment in a manner compared to this noted in our annales? Wherefore till time produce a more ſufficient commemoration of him, let this ſerue the turne: whereto we will adde a few verſes written in his fame, and ſo leaue him vnto the bleſſed ſucceſſe whervnto he is by Gods moſt gratious appointment (no doubt) reſerued:

Nauigation in vſe before Chriſts time: note pſalme 107.

The words of a knight concerning the barke wherein ſir Francis Drake ſailed about the world.

The obſeruations in all his voiages remaine in writing, &c.

T.N.Ciceſt.

Ante Dracum multi heroes freta multa Britanni
Non ſine laude citis ſulcârunt ſalſa carinis,
Nec potuere tamen votis potirier: alti
Nec reſerare vias pelagi (ſors omnia verſat)
Quamuis mente pia imbuti atque ingentibus auſis:
Dracus at ex multis (gallinæ filius albæ)
Quem decorat Pitho, quem Suada venuſtat amica,
Quem pia relligio, quem dia Modeſtia adornat,
Omine felici cuncta incipit, omine ſancto
Perficit, & patriæ ſeruit, viuitque fidelis,
Colla petulca domans, & opima trophea reportans.

And now backe againe to our former ſtop in the conſpiracie; the proceſſe wherof who would not willinglie heare, the ſame being ſo odious & vnnaturall? The miſchiefes againſt hir maieſtie and the bodie of the land preuented, and the imaginers thereof now in durance: the honorable lords of the councell (whoſe vigilancie hath beene alwaies moſt wonderfull for the tranquillitie and ſecuritie of the ſtate) did now enter into the diſcuſſing and winnowing out of ſuch vnnaturall treacheries, as the conſpirators had in their lewd conuenticles conſulted vpon, & in their ſeditious letters ſolicited. Wherein although the offendors had capitallie tranſgreſſed, and in a degree ſo eminent as none aboue, and therefore deſerued what rigor (were it neuer ſo ſharpe) might be thought vpon, or vſed: yet not ſo much as falling into a conceipt of anie ſuch proceeding, they ſo dealt with the conſpirators by clementie, circumſpection, & perſuaſion; that whatſoeuer concerned their attempt in that heinous kind, they diſcouered, and vpon hope of fauour (which it were ſin againſt God to grant to malefactors ſo miſchieuouſlie bent) opened the whole forme of the action, with the circumſtances of the ſame. By which their voluntarie confeſſion they ſatiſfied the examinants, whoſe wiſedoms in a courſe of that kind it is impoſſible for a giltie conſcience to outreach.

No rigor vſed againſt the conſpirators, whereby anie thing might ſeeme to be violentlie extorted in examination.

The conſpiraters do voluntarilie confeſſe the plot of their purpoſed practiſe.

How this great conſpiracie came to light is ſignified by the preacher.

Matters thus far paſſed, and the greater ſtates much quieted, the people were in dailie expectation & deſire to heare ſome report of the conſpirators now by their owne confeſſions ſufficientlie conuicted: wherevpon a preacher at Pauls croſſe was commanded from authoritie, to deliuer ſome notice to the aſſemblie, anſwerable to the knowledge which he himſelfe receiued by eare at the beſt hand; namelie, that diuerſe of the traitors were apprehended, and without anie torture or torment confeſſed their treaſonable intentions; which were, to murther hir maieſtie, and procure meanes for the arriuall of forren powers, whereby the land might be ouerrun, heauen and earth confounded, and all things turned topſie turuie. It was not the policie of man (ſaid the preacher) that cauſed this diſcouerie, but Digitus Dei, the finger of God that found them out. Thus much being intimated to the people in that publike ſermon, they gaue God thanks for the ſame; as ſurelie we cannot ſufficientlie magnifie his diuine maieſtie, who of his infinit mercie hath preſerued hir highneſſe from manie imminent miſchiefes, and wrapped the wretched imaginers and intenders thereof in their owne ſnares, to their foule ſhame and confuſion.

The queenes wiſe councellors are hir eies and hir eares.

Now after voluntarie confeſſion, and examination by hir maieſties wiſe councellors, being hir eies and eares, there ſeemed no further euidence or proofe requirable for their conuiction: the giltineſſe of their conſcience inducing them to the diſcouerie of their intollerable treacheries: than the which there cannot be a hell of more extreame torment. And ſurelie true it is, that the conſcience of a malefactor is vnto him in ſtead of an accuſer, a witneſſe, a iudge, and a hangman: the ſcripture importing no leſſe, in ſaieng, that the wicked ſhall tremble at the fall of the leafe of a tree, and be as if their life hoong by a thread. Which violence of mans conſcience we ought to be perſuaded commeth from God, who cauſeth his enimies (which be ſuch as oppoſe themſelues againſt his annointed) to feele his iudgement and furie in ſuch ſort, that they cannot abide it, but are conſtrained to condemne themſelues: as we ſee notablie exemplified in theſe conſpirators, who being now ſcarſelie the ſhadows of men, and all hope of life or mitigation of deſerued death quite extinguiſhed, were to thinke vpon their preſent downefall into deſtruction, reſtleſſe in bodie, troubled in ſoule, heauie in heart, and wholie ouerwhelmed with waues of moſt wofull miſerie. And doubtleſſe, if at anie time, moſt likelie now were they touched with compunction and remorſe, euen to the quicke, if the grace of God were not vtterlie exiled out of their hearts.

The wretched ſtate of the conſpirators now waiting for the award of iudgement and death.

Now had they iuſt cauſe and fit time to curſſe their vngratious meetings, their execrable conſultations

The remembrance of death is dreadfull to all traitors.

The ſocietie of men is the bond of life, which who ſo ſeeketh to diſſolue is worthie of death.

tations, their diueliſh deuiſes, the vnhappie houre of giuing conſent to effectuat, or anie waie to preſer a practiſe of ſo peſtilent a plot; & finallie the diſmall daie of their deſtruction, the mindfulneſſe whereof could not but ſo terrifie and torment them, as that no meane could releeue them, no place ſuccor them: being not vnlike vnto fearefull men at ſea ſubiect to caſting, who thinking to be better in one place than in another, go from the ſterne to the ſtem, then to the bottome of the ſhip, afterwards to the higheſt part, from thenſe into the ſkiph, and in the end returne into the ſhip, without anie amendement of their euill, becauſe they carrie alwaie about with them both feare and greefe. And ſurelie thus it muſt be by the ineuitable decree of God, with all ſuch as inſurge and riſe againſt their ſouereigne (in whome is power to preſcribe laws vnto all in generall, and to euerie one in particular, and not to receiue anie but of God; who is the iudge of princes, as princes are the iudges of their people) and labour to diſſolue the ſocietie of men, which is the bond of life; nature ſpurning againſt ſuch malicious minds, whoſe ordinance tendereth the preſeruation of all creatures in their kinds, whether earthie, waterie, aierie, or flieng, tame or wild, they all ſeeking after fellowſhip of like with like to liue togither; as ſheepe by flocks, kine, oxen, harts & hinds feeding by heards; horſes & mules by companies; choughs, ſtares, cranes, & other birds by flight; fiſhes both in freſh & ſalt waters following one another in ſholes; bees dwelling in hiues, pigeons in doouehouſes, ants in little hills, &c.

God eſtabliſheth no principalitie but he ſupporteth the ſame by his omnipotencie.

The rule of chriſtianitie teacheth obedience and loialtie.

Princes whereto compared in their dignities.

What a miſchiefe meant theſe, ſhall I ſaie men, naie monſters of men, to tranſgreſſe the limits of all loialtie in ſuch an outragious ſort? The wretches might well thinke, that God eſtabliſheth no principalitie, but he will by his power ſupport the ſame, euen to the confuſion of all them that ſeeke either directlie or indirectlie to ſupplant the ſame. But theſe men troubled their minds with no ſuch cogitations, which might haue reuoked or reſtreined them from their attempts, or forewarned them of dangers inſuing vpon conſultations held againſt princes, of plots laid againſt the whole ſtate of a kingdome, of innouations, of alienations, of intruſions, and confuſions. Wherein it is to be woondered, what legion of diuels poſſeſſed them, that profeſſing the name of chriſtians, and linked with the ſocietie of Ieſus, they ſhould ſo degenerat as to kicke againſt the rule of chriſtianitie, which teacheth that princes and potentates are to be obeied, ſpeciallie ſouereignes and monarchs, who in their ſeuerall territories and dominions are like the ſun, which is as king among the ſtars, the moone as queene, the eagle among birds, the lion among beaſts, the whale in the ſea, and the pike in pooles among fiſhes: finallie, as the heart in a liuing creature, which giueth life to the whole bodie, becauſe it is the founteine of bloud and vitall ſpirits.

What it is to attempt euill againſt the perſon of a prince.

Euerie thing taketh his being of a ſmall beginning.

Communication with a lewd perſon reproued, and iudged puniſhable.

Now to enter either into conſultation or action againſt a perſon of ſuch excellencie, what is it elſe but to pull the ſunne out of heauen, and to teare the heart out of the bodie? Wiſe men will ground their affections and enterpriſes vpon right and equitie onelie, knowing that they ought not alwaies to be meaſured by their euent and end, which oftentimes ſeeme to fauor vniuſt counſels and doings; and offer ſome colour and occaſion to the wicked to proſecute their dealings, hauing no care of violating right and iuſtice: but howſoeuer it be, a miſerable end bringeth them an ouerlate repentance. There is no action but hath his originall intention, no intention but iſſueth from a premeditation, no premeditation but proceedeth from a conceipt: all theſe concurring with their acceſſaries, make a complet action: as we ſee in ſciences and arts, as in grammar, which taketh beginning from letters, geometrie from the point, arithmetike from vnitie, muſike from the minnem and ſembreefe; and alſo in things naturall, as plants and trees, which riſe and increaſe out of a verie ſmall ſeed. And therefore let men take heed how they giue place vnto a wicked thought, much more to a miſcheefous deed. In which reſpect it is woorth the noting that is reported of Diogenes, who beholding one of his ſcholars in a publike place talking verie earneſtlie with a yoong man, that was ſuſpected wanton and effeminat, demanded what communication they had? To whome the ſcholar anſwered that the other rehearſed vnto him a notable tricke of youth, which he had plaied the night before. Then Diogenes ſaid to them both; My will and commandement is, that each of you haue fortie ſtripes with a whip within the amphitheater or plaieng place: thou (quoth he to his ſcholar) for giuing eare vnto him, and he for the follie committed; becauſe a philoſopher deſerueth as much for hearkening to follie recited, as dooth the vagabond that rehearſeth it.

Now if this were the puniſhment ſentenced againſt theſe two, in this caſe of lightneſſe and follie: what iudgement might a wiſe man deeme, would haue beene awarded by Diogenes againſt conſpirators, whoſe conuentions and conſultations are the whetting of daggers and ſwoords, to thruſt into the bowels of their ſweet natiue countrie? But whither wade we? Trulie the matter in preſent diſcourſe is ſo ample, and therewithall ſo odious, that the further we ſaile, the more ſea we ſee. Wherefore to draw neere to the verie ſubiect, this maie not be omitted, that the conſpirators, who had wouen the web of their owne wo, being now forlorne, as hated of heauen, and irkeſome to the earth, ſeeing no hope of life, but deſerued death imminent and hanging ouer their heads, occupied their wits in dolorous deuiſes, bemoning their miſeries, of the like ſtampe to this here annexed, ſauouring more of prophane poetrie than chriſtianitie, of fanſie than religion:

Tichborns elegie written with his owne hand in the Tower before his execution, printed by Iohn Wolfe. 1586.

My prime of youth is but a froſt of cares,
My feaſt of ioie is but a diſh of paine:
My crop of corne is but a field of tares,
And all my good is but vaine hope of gaine:
The daie is paſt, and yet I ſaw no ſun,
And now I liue, and now my life is doone.

My tale was heard, and yet it was not told,
My fruit is falne, and yet my leaues are greene:
My youth is ſpent, and yet I am not old,
I ſaw the world, and yet I was not ſeene:
My Thred is cut, and yet it is not ſpun,
And now I liue, and now my life is doone.

I ſought my death and found it in my wombe,
I lookt for life, and ſaw it was a ſhade:
I trod the earth, and knew it was my tombe,
And now I die, and now I was but made:
My glaſſe is full, and now my glaſſe is run,
And now I liue, and now my life is doone.

The like elegies alſo did the reſt (and namelie Babington) deuiſe, with letters ſupplicatorie for fauour of high eſtates, whome he had moſt greeuouſlie offended: which becauſe the copies are common (but yet neuer authoriſed for the print) we will omit, onelie touching in ſuperficiall ſort the tenor thereof. As firſt his aſking of grace and fauour with all humilitie, to acknowledge his vnaduiſed offenſe (as he termeth it) wherein he pretendeth certeine motiues to compaſſion, as his vncoloured petition, his gentrie, his brainſicke yeares, the order of his behauiour and plaine courſe of dealing in his confeſſion, his moſt heartie repentance, his inward vow of aſſured ſeruice hereafter, both to hir gratious maieſtie and his countrie. Furthermore, to procure the ſpeedier commiſeration (in his fanſie) he falleth into a familiar tale of a certeine man, that hauing a great flocke of ſheepe, mooued either with a ſheepiſh vnrulineſſe, or for his better commoditie, threatened euerie daie by one and by one to diſpatch them all: which he dailie performed according to his promiſe, vntill ſuch time as the terror of his accuſtomed butcherie ſtrake the whole flocke into ſuch a feare, as whenſoeuer he came and held vp his knife, aduiſing at that inſtant but the ſlaughter of one, the whole number of them would quake, fearing each one his particular chance. Which tale he applieth vnto himſelfe, being one of the brutiſh herd (as he confeſſeth) that for their diſordinat behauiour the law iuſtlie condemneth, and threatneth to diſpatch one after another, &c. Laſtlie, ſuing for his life, he ſaith, that to take it, were as if one ſhould take out of the ſun beame a mote, or from the ſea a ſpoonefull of water: but to ſaue it, were by his vowed ſeruice to hir highneſſe happie eſtate to merit more, than the loſſe thereof could procure: and ſo with remembrance of the lamentable conditions of his peruerſe eſtate, &c: he concludeth.

A fable or tale which Babington applieth to his preſent caſe of wretchedneſſe.

What good ſeruice was to be hoped for at this wretches hand if he had liued, who did what he could to procure his princes death?

Theſe and ſuch like were the ſtudies and meditations of thoſe dangerous wits, too ſudden to be ſound, and wanting prudence, which preuenteth too late repentance. But with what face, with what heart might this enimie to all humanitie (hauing deſerued a death of exquiſit crueltie) aſke, ſeeke, or hope for fauour, much leſſe for pardon, who with his complices had conſpired to be an actor in a tragedie of bloudſhed and ſlaughter vniuerſallie, peſle meſle to be perpetrated? By the law of nature men ſhould doo as they would be doone vnto; a precept which prudence inuiteth them to put in practiſe, as ſhe mooueth them to nothing that is either vndutifull, or not beneficiall. For ſhe is amongſt the reſt of the vertues, as the ſight amongſt the fiue ſenſes; thereby giuing vs to note, that as the eie of all the other ſenſes is moſt beautifull, ſubtill, and pearſing: ſo the vertue of prudence by hir quicke and cleare light, directeth and conducteth all vertues in their good and commendable operations. It is by hir that a man is clothed with a mild and ſetled diſpoſition, whereof he ſtandeth no leiſe in need, than a ſhip floting on the ſea dooth of the preſence of a pilot, that he maie prudentlie vndertake and wiſelie execute whatſoeuer he knoweth to be good, after mature deliberation & conſideration of all the circumſtances of the fact. So that if theſe men had beene guided by prudence, which is ſaid to haue three eies, namelie memorie, vnderſtanding, and prouidence (with the firſt beholding the time paſt, with the ſecond the time preſent, with the third the time to come) they would neuer haue fallen into conceipts of common confuſion, much leſſe haue entred into conſultation, or giuen conſent to further the action, or ſo lightlie yeelded to become deſperat workers of the ſame; knowing that the ſtate of a land is not ſo negligentlie regarded, as that the deuiſes and diueliſh practiſes of ſome few helhounds (content with nothing that ſtandeth not with their liking) can violat the ſame.

The neceſſarie vſe of prudence in all attempts and actions.

The conſpirators had liued true ſubiects if they had not wanted prudence and hir three eies.

But to returne. Theſe fellowes hauing ſo heinouſlie offended againſt the lawes of nature and nations, drawing out their ſword of furie and cruell outrage againſt the bodie of the commonwealth; now after the preuention of their purpoſe, detection of all their treaſons, and guilt of conſcience, ſeruing in lieu of a thouſand peremptorie witneſſes; ſeeing no waie with them but the halter and the hatchet, like prophane perſons laie the cauſe of their fall vpon cruell and ineuitable deſtinie, accuſing that to excuſe their owne fault. Wherein we maie compare them to blind folks, who are angrie, and oftentimes call them blind that vnawares doo meet and iuſtle them. They ſhould rather, if they had meant to liue alwaies happilie, haue propounded to themſelues and deſired things poſſible, and to be content with things preſent: they ſhould haue preferred their countries ſafetie before their owne proſperitie, & haue frequented the academie of philoſophers, and the temple of mercie, whereby ignorance of dutie might haue beene abandoned, and whatſoeuer ſauoring of crueltie trodden vnder foot. Wherein it were to be wiſhed, that all ſuch as are anie waie leaning to a life of that qualitie as theſe men lead; would be taught by the example of Pythagoras, to abſteine from crueltie and iniuſtice; who was ſo tender hearted, and ſo farre eſtranged from deſire of bloudſhed and death, euen of creatures reſonleſſe, that he requeſted foulers, when they had taken birds, to let them flie againe; and of fiſher men he bought their draughts, and cauſed all the fiſh to be caſt into the ſea aliue: he alſo forbad all his diſciples to kill a tame beaſt at anie time. But theſe conſpirators had not the grace of a heathen man granted vnto them, whereby they became ſubiect to ſinne as to a tyrant: and no remedie but ſubmitting themſelues therevnto, it muſt needs reigne in their mortall bodies, yea though it haue hard entrance at the firſt into the heart. For as a wedge maketh but a ſmall cleft in the beginning, but afterwards the cleft being greater ſundereth all in peeces: ſo the ſufferance of all vnlawfull things, how ſmall ſo euer it be, leadeth men by little and little to an vniuerſall licentiouſneſſe: and therefore men had need beware how they make paſſage for ſinne into their thought, which (without the aſſiſtance of Gods grace) commonlie breaketh out into action. As we ſee exemplified in theſe deſperat perſons, in danger of death & deſtruction; to whoſe arreignement, as tract of time mooueth, we will now proceed: and ſo to the ſequele of the tragedie: wherein this would be remembred as a comfort, that they were paſſiues and not actiues; as is to be wiſhed all of that ſtampe and leuen maie be.

Deſtinie commonlie accuſed of malefactors and offendors, that their owne villanies might be excuſed.

Chriſtian men diſuaded from crueltie and iniuſtice by the example of an heathen man.

The nature of ſinne after it hath once found paſſage into the heart.

On the ſeuenth daie of September, certeine of theſe diueliſh and wicked ſubiects were led from the Tower of London to Weſtminſter by water, hauing neuertheleſſe manie an eie gaſing vpon them, as ſpectacles odious to God and man; manie a toong talking of the greeuouſneſſe of their offenſe; and manie a true Engliſh heart wiſhing their preſent cutting off from the face of the earth, as wretches vnworthie to inioie the common aire: all which the vnnaturall beaſts could not but conceiue, to the kindling of manie a pinching paſſion in their minds and conſciences. But to let all that paſſe, to the place aforeſaid at laſt they were brought, where they were indicted; firſt, for intending treaſon againſt the queens owne perſon; ſecondlie, for ſtirring ciuill warres within the realme; and thirdlie, for practiſing to bring in forren power to inuade the land. Seuen of them appeared at Weſtminſter on the thirteenth daie of September, who all pleaded giltie, and therefore had no iurie, but were condemned, and had iudgement on the next morrow.

Traitors indicted, arreigned, and condemned at Weſtminſter.

I. S.

The firſt ſeuen condemned without anie iurie.

On the fifteenth daie of September, other ſeuen of them were likewiſe arreigned at Weſtminſter, who pleaded not giltie, were tried by a iurie, found giltie, and had iudgement accordinglie. The effect of whoſe treaſons ſhortlie to touch were theſe. Iohn Sauage, remaining long in France at Rheims, was perſuaded by doctor Gilbert Gifford, that great honor ſhould redound to him, if he would take in hand to change religion, to inuade inuade the realme by forren power, to diſpoſſeſſe the queene of England, and to proclame the Scotiſh queene, and ſet hir in hir place. All which Sauage promiſed to doo, or elſe to loſe his life, and therevpon returned into England; where he imparted his purpoſe to Anthonie Babington, requiring his aid therein. Then Iohn Ballard, prieſt, alſo perſuaded the ſaid Babington to the purpoſe before expreſſed, promiſing him aid of three ſcore thouſand men that ſecretlie ſhould be landed, and told him both how & when (as he thought.) Wherevpon Babington promiſed and concluded to make a ſlaughter vpon the councell of hir maieſtie in the Star chamber, then to haue ſacked London, to haue burned the nauie & chiefeſt ſhips, to kill or diſplace the lords, knights and magiſtrats, that remained true ſubiects to our right and lawfull queene & realme, and alſo to haue cloied and poiſoned the greateſt ordinance, &c. Theſe were their purpoſes.] But God, diſappointing their diueliſh deuiſes, prepared for them the reward of iniquitie, namelie death in a dreadfull ſort; which when they had heard denounced againſt them by the mouth of the iudge, they were conducted backe againe to the place of ſafe cuſtodie, all the waie repleniſhed with horror and feare, wiſhing that the water, wherevpon they were rowed, might ſwallow them vp, the earth open and they ſinke thereinto, or ſome ſudden end betide them, that the time of their heauie execution might be preuented.

The effect of the laſt ſeuen their treſons notable.

God being the fountaine of iuſtice abhorreth vnrighteouſneſſe: Ergo, &c.

But God, who is the founteine of iuſtice, as he is the founder of princes and principalities, hauing proportioned out for them a due and ineuitable puniſhment, and being the author of all godlie deſiers, vouchſafed them no ſuch fauour of anie element, wherby the courſe of iuſtice might anie waie be ſtopped or hindered. So that remaining two or three daies in durance after their condemnation, and definitiue ſentence thundered againſt them (a time of reſpiration giuen them to humble their hearts, and reconcile their ſouls to God; a ſpeciall end which the execution of iuſtice in England reſpecteth, in fauour of all malefactors) they were all that while (if touched with anie remorſe) not deſtitute of greeuous agonies. For what man, if he conſiſt of fleſh & bloud, knowing himſelfe, after the law hath paſſed againſt him, to be a meere dead man, but muſt needs tremble & quake at the remembrance of his end, through the vehement affects of feare poſſeſſing his heart? With which feare they needed not haue beene ſurpriſed, if a former feare, grounded vpon a good diſcourſe of reaſon and iudgement, had preuented them in all their actions. Which feare was ſo eſteemed and honored of the ancients, that in the citie of Sparta there was a temple dedicated and conſecrated vnto it: the ſame (as was affirmed) better mainteining and preſeruing the ſtate of commonwealths, than anie other thing whatſoeuer; becauſe thereby men were lead to ſtand more in aw of blame, reproch, and diſhonor, than of death or greefe. But what ſhould we ſpeake of that which they wanted, who were indued with nothing, either godlie or honeſt? Let vs therefore proceed in the reſidue of this diſcourſe, hauing atteined now after a long tract, to the time of their execution; whereof when there was a report among the people, a woonder it was what reckoning they did make before hand to heare and ſee them put to death.

What feare is neceſſarie in euerie chriſtian ſubiect.

Seuen of the traitors are laid on hurdels and conueied to their execution.

Now when the twentith daie of September was come, and therewithall their fatall hours, the two ſhiriffes of London, aſſiſted with the officers of the citie, and other attendants in great number, with weapons anſwerable to the maner of an execution, came to the Tower, into whoſe hands and charge ſeuen of the ſaid conſpirators were committed, who being combined & laid on hurdels faſt bound (Ballard excepted who laie alone as a notable archtraitor, and firſt of the ranke) were drawne from the ſaid Tower through the ſtreets of London to the place of execution, the magiſtrats and officers, with a multitude of others conuenientlie appointed, ſeeing them conueied thither, and the cenſure of iuſtice dulie adminiſtred. Now it is no queſtion whether there wanted people at this publike ſpectacle, no more than it is to be doubted whether their treaſons deſerued death. For there was no lane, ſtreet, allie, or houſe in London, in the ſuburbs of the ſame, or in the hamlets or bordering townes neere the citie, (and like enough that they would come from far, both by water and by land, to ſee that and the next daies worke diſpatched) out of the which there iſſued not ſome of each ſex and age; in ſomuch that the waies were peſtered with people ſo multiplied, as they thronged and ouerran one another for haſt, contending to the place of death for the aduantage of the ground where to ſtand, ſee, and heare what was ſaid and doone: the traitors all this while beholding this infinit aſſemblie, and the further they were drawne, the neerer to their end.

A ſcaffold and gallowes of extraordinarie height erected.

Now when they were come within ſight of their deſtinie, where they might diſcerne their dolefull downfall; in what agonies might we imagine theſe moſt vile malefactors fell; if they were not vtterlie Stoicall and ſenſleſſe? For beſides the preſent obiects of terror that were in euerie beholders eie, although of low ſtature, as the ſcaffold and gallows of extraordinarie altitude and height, they might, as they did ſucceſſiuelie aſcend and attend their fatall turns, take full view of the inſtruments ordeined and prepared for their diſpatch; as the executioner with the halter, hatchet, and knife, whereby they were to be ſeuered, diſmembred, and quartered; the fier wherein their bowels were to be burned; the ſtakes whereon their heads were to be faſtened vpon the gallows, and what elſe belonged to the accompliſhment of that tragedie: thouſands of people with earneſt eie preſent, and purpoſing to tarrie out the verie laſt act. The leaſt of which motiues (much more all togither) had beene ſufficient to haue rent a ſtonie heart in ſunder; and what affections were wrought in them thereby, he beſt knoweth from whome no ſecrets are hid.

Concordat cum libro approbato.

But that this execution maie be deliuered in ſome orderly diſcourſe, we will (for the ſatiſfieng of manie thouſands) note the maner thereof, with the behauiors and ſpeeches of theſe traitors at their laſt end; according to a copie of credit from a preſent obſeruer and marker of this great execution. Touching the full number of theſe ranke traitors, that ſought to bereaue the queens maieſtie of hir life, they were fourteene, who made their confeſſion at the gallows, and receiued a iuſt recompenſe of their vnnaturall diſloialtie. For our eies ſaw their traitorous harts burned, and their bodileſſe heads aduanced, to the view and comfort of manie thouſands of people: a happie ſight for the quietneſſe and ſafetie of hir highneſſe, a generall comfort to all good ſubiects, and a fearefull example to all conſpirators.

The ſum of the traitors intended practiſes, agreeing with the courſe of their indictment.

The nature of iuſtice requireth that puniſhments and offenſes ſhould be proportioned.

But forſomuch as they offended in the higheſt degree of treaſon, as traitors reſolued to kill hir highneſſe, to ſpoile hir nauie, to cloie the ordinance, to kill the honorable lords of the priuie councell, to moue a generall rebellion, and (what in them laie) to procure forren inuaſion: all which being treaſons of ſuch danger (as the leaſt of them ſhut vp the ſluſes of mercie) it ſeemeth conuenient that their executions ſhould be with more ſeueritie, than the common iudgement of traitors. Howbeit, the limits of law were in no ſort tranſgreſſed, though the ſame according to the preciſe rule thereof were ſharplie adminiſtred.

The firſt ſeuen were executed with leſſe fauour than the laſt, as ſhall appeare by the ſequele of this narration, & the conſideration of their iudgments; namelie to be drawne to the place of execution, there to be hanged till they were halfe dead, their bowels to be burnt before their faces, &c. And trulie the firſt ſeuen as the moſt malicious (if there be anie difference in treaſon) were executed neere the ſeueritie of laws definitiue ſentence; but the other ſeuen were ſo fauorablie vſed, as they hoong vntill they were euen altogither dead, before they ſuffered the reſt of their iudgement. Now touching the names of the traitors, their behauiours and ſpeaches, with the maner of their executions, you ſhall vnderſtand, that vpon the twentith daie of September, being tueſdaie, John Ballard a preeſt, and firſt perſuader of Babington to theſe odious treaſons, was laid alone vpon an hurdell, and ſix others two and two in like ſort, all drawne from Tower hill through the citie of London, vnto a field at the vpper end of Holborne, hard by the high waie ſide to ſaint Giles in the field, where was erected a ſcaffold for their execution, and a paire of gallows of extraordinarie hight, as was that wherevpon haughtie Haman was hanged for his ambition, &c: the place likewiſe ſo railed to keepe off horſſemen, as the people might plainelie ſee the execution.

Paria delicta pari pœna compenſanda, niſi inſtiterit aliqua mitigationis cauſa.

John Ballard prieſt perſuader of Babington to theſe odious treaſons executed.

The place of their execution was ſometime the meeting place of their conſultation.

And although the thouſands were thought (& in deed ſo ſeemed) to be numberleſſe: yet ſomewhat to note the huge multitude, there were by computation able men enow to giue battell to a ſtrong enimie. Howbeit, one thing was ſpeciallie regarded, that although the aſſemblie were woonderfull great, & the traitors all goodlie perſonages, clothed in ſilkes, &c: and euerie waie furniſhed to mooue pitie, and that the order of their execution was in euerie mans eie; yet the odiouſneſſe of their treaſons was ſo ſetled in euerie mans heart, as there appeared no ſadneſſe or alteration among the people, at the mangling and quartering of their bodies. Yea the whole aſſemblie without anie ſigne of lamentation ſtedfaſtlie beheld the ſpectacle from the firſt to the laſt.

The multitude ſheweth no motion of pittie at the execution of the traitors.

The order of the traitors execution.

On the firſt daie the traitors were placed vpon the ſcaffold, that the one might behold the reward of his fellowes treaſon. Ballard the preeſt, who was the firſt brocher of this treaſon, was the firſt that was hanged, who being cut downe (according to iudgement) was diſmembred, his bellie ript vp, his bowels & traitorous heart taken out & throwne into the fire, his head alſo (ſeuered from his ſhoulders) was ſet on a ſhort ſtake vpon the top of the gallows, and the trunke of his bodie quartered and imbrued in his owne bloud, wherewith the executioners hands were bathed, and ſome of the ſtanders by (but to their great loathing, as not able for their liues to auoid it, ſuch was the throng) beeſprinkled. This Ballard, at the verie time of his death not denieng his treaſon, died an obſtinat papiſt, and in his proteſtation doubtfullie ſaid, that If he had offended the queens maieſtie, or anie man elſe, he was ſorie, and ſo conditionallie deſired forgiueneſſe. The malicious affection of his heart towards hir highneſſe appeared in the trembling paſſage of death, that whereas his treaſons were impious, odious, and damnable, as the moſt wicked (to wit his confederats for the moſt part) confeſſed (as the common fame goeth) that they exceeded the greatneſſe of hir maieſties mercie, which maie not be meaſured, where there is anie meaſure in offending. And yet in his deſire of remiſſion at hir highnes hands, he added this condition (If) as one that doubted if he had offended hir perſon.

How Ballard was affected at his death.

Ballards ſophiſticall aſking of the queens maieſtie forgiueneſſe.

Anthonie Babington eſquier executed.

Next vnto this preeſt, Anthonie Babington was made readie to the gallows, who in euerie point was handled like vnto Ballard; in whome a ſigne of his former pride was to be obſerued. For whereas the reſt (through the cogitation of death) were exerciſed in praier vpon their knees and bareheaded; he (whoſe turne was next) ſtood on his feet with his hat on his head, as if he had beene but a beholder of the execution. Concerning his religion, he died a papiſt. His treaſons were ſo odious, as the ſting of conſcience compelled him to acknowledge himſelfe a moſt greeuous treſpaſſer againſt the diuine maieſtie, and the queens highneſſe. Next vnto Babington, Sauage was likewiſe prepared for the execution. This notable traitor (as the fame goeth) was the man that conferred with doctor Gifford at Paris; and by the confirmations of the Engliſh fugitiues at Rhemes was reſolued, and reſolutelie determined to kill the queene. It is likewiſe ſaid, that vpon the apprehenſion of Ballard the preeſt, Babington accellerated and haſtened this Sauage to diſpatch his reſolution, and that he onelie deferred the matter for the making of a courtlike ſute of apparell.

A note of Babingtons pride at the verie inſtant of his execution.

John Sauage gentleman executed.

The frutes that iſſue from liſtening to the counſell of Jeſuits, Romaniſts, and Rhemiſts.

Robert Barnewell gentleman executed.

When Sauage was executed, Barnewell was made readie to die, an obſtinate papiſt, who for his treaſon made conſcience his beſt excuſe; howbeit a rotten conſcience, which was infected with the murther of a vertuous queene; which ſith it was ſo bad, few there were that heard him, but forbad their conſcience to pitie him, otherwiſe than charitablie to be ſorrowfull for his offenſe, deſeruing ſo ſhamefull a fall, and damnable before God and man. After this Barnewell, Tichborns turne was ſerued, a proper yoong gentleman, whoſe humilitie and mone mooued much compaſſion. He was not ſetled ſo much in papiſtrie as the others, but ſo far gone with the proud humor of Babington, as his head could no longer hold with his ſhoulders. In his mone (which was verie well marked) he compared his ſtate to Adams, who ſaid he was placed in paradiſe, & there inioied all the pleaſures of the earth; he was onelie forbidden to eat of the frute of one tree: but for his tranſgreſſion he not onelie procured wretchedneſſe and miſerie vpon his owne head, but vpon the heads of all his poſteritie: ſo (quoth he) I wanted nothing, but had health, wealth & freends, and ſo might long haue liued, if I could haue forborne to haue bene vntrue to prince: But alas! by mine offenſe I haue brought my ſelfe vnto this miſerie, whereby my good mother, my louing wife, my foure brethren and ſix ſiſters, yea our whole houſe (neuer before attainted) is infamed, and our poſteritie for euer like to be vndoone.

Chidiocke Tichborne eſquire executed.

Tichborns lamentation moued manie to commiſeration.

In this mans confeſſion thus much is to be obſerued, that in comparing his offenſe to Adams, was implied a reſembling of hir highnes to the pleaſant and glorious frute, ſo pretious in Gods eies, as he forbad Adam & all others to laie violent hands vpon. And thus by the mouth of hir enimies, God cauſeth hir ſacred excellencie to be blazed. Tilneie one of the queens maieſties penſioners, next vnto Tichborne, made worke for the hangman, a wretch well worthie of death, who went about to take awaie hir highneſſe life. In ſtatute law it is petie treaſon for a ſeruant to murther his maiſter or miſtreſſe, being but a ſubiect; how deteſtable a tteaſon is it then for a ſworne ſeruant to laie violent hands on his annointed prince? The offenſe being in the extreameſt degree, the puniſhment ought to be according to the ſeuereſt cenſure of iuſtice.

Hir maieſties praiſe by hir enimies.

Nolite tangere Chriſtos meos, Touch not my Chriſts or annointed.

Charls Tilneie a penſioner executed.

Edward Abington e-

The laſt of theſe ſeuen that ſuffered was Edward Abington, whoſe father was an officer of good credit ſquire executed, his thretning ſpeech.

in hir highnes houſe, and for manie aduancements was bound to ſaie; God ſaue good Q. Eliſabeth. But his ſonne was a notable papiſt, and an archtraitor, who at his death did all that in him laie, to fix a feare in the hearts of the ignorant multitude, with this ſpeech, that there could not chooſe but be great effuſion of bloud in England verie ſhortlie. But Gods prouidence maketh it apparant, that the propheſies of traitors prooue not euermore ſcripture. For Throgmorton the traitor ſaid, that before one yeare was expired, the proſperitie and peace of England ſhould be turned into generall calamitie. Howbeit, the date of that diuination is out, & they both (as maie betide the reſt of that rebellious rout in their appointed time) by Gods grace partakers of ſemblable deſtinie. This Abington was the laſt of the firſt ſeuen that were executed, and thus ended that daies worke, to the comfort of Iſraell, for that the execrable thing which troubled the whole land (and highlie offended the diuine maieſtie) was taken awaie.

Throgmortons propheſie and Abingtons of like truth in euent.

Now when theſe venemous vipers were thus hewne in peeces, their tigers hearts burned in the fire, and the ſentence of law ſatiſfied: their heads and quarters were conueied awaie in baſkets, to be fixed vpon poles and ſet ouer the gates of London, that all the world might behold the iuſt reward of traitors. Then decreaſed the multitude, and withdrew to their manſions and abodes: howbeit the fields were frequented all that daie of the weaker ſex, as womenkind, with the yoonger and tenderer ſort: who albeit they could not with wiſhed opportunitie ſee the execution of theſe traitors, when it was at the quickeſt: yet they ſatiſfied their eies with beholding the fier wherein their bowels were burned, & the ſcaffold ſtained with the tincture of their bloud, diuers diuerſlie talking of that diſmall daies worke, according as they were for that preſent time paſſionat: but all giuing God thanks, that the commonwelth was diſcharged of ſuch putrified members, whoſe maladie was of ſuch malignitie, that it was altogither deſperat, and not to be helped but by extremities of cauterie or inciſion.

An ingreſſion to the ſecond daies execution.

Now making a period or ſtop at the diſpatch of theſe firſt ſeuen, let vs addreſſe our pen to the deſcription of the remanent, who being in continuall trauell of terror at the meditation of iuſtice ſtill proceeding againſt them by moments and degrees, till the laſt act were ended, were miſerablie tormented with multiplicitie of imaginations, fearing euerie knocke at the priſon doore to be a meſſenger of deth: inſomuch that their hearts could not but be ouercome with horror & heauineſſe, the ſame beating and thumping (as the ſmiths hammer dooth the anuill) euen till it pant. In which irrecouerable diſtreſſe of theirs, whether they bethought themſelues of their ſoules, defiled with the fog and ſlime of their ouglie ſinnes; or of their bodie, which was made a pretious tabernacle wherein the image of God ſhould haue beene inſhrined; but now become a doongeon of diſcomfortable obſcuritie and darkeneſſe: he onelie knoweth, to whome it is proper to giue that ſpeciall grace. But to leaue all iudgement to the iudge of all, we will now proceed, and (as we haue in the former) ſhew what the laſt ſeuen ſaid at their ſufferings.

Thomas Saliſburie eſquire executed.

The laſt ſeuen traitors executed with great fauour.

On the daie following (according to generall expectation) being the one and twentith daie of September, Saliſburie was laid alone vpon an hurdell, and other ſix, two and two in like maner, all drawne from Tower hill through the citie of London, vnto the former place of execution. Saliſburie was the firſt man that ſuffered, who in all points was handled as the other ſeuen the daie before; ſauing that he and the latter ſix were executed with this fauour, that they were permitted to hang vntill they were fullie dead, before the reſt of their execution was performed. And albeit this man was blinded with the ſuperſtition of papiſtrie, euen at the point of death, yet he mildlie acknowledged his greeuous offenſe againſt the queene, and in his laſt commendation charged all catholikes (for ſo he onelie accounted the papiſts) that they ſhould leaue attempting to ſet vp their religion by violent hand, and by double and treble repetition exhorted them to patience, and earneſtlie forbad them all maner of violence.

Saliſburie acknowledgeth his greeuous offenſe: a note of repentance. Violence forbidden by Saliſburie.

Henrie Dun gentleman executed.

After Saliſburie was with all poſſible fauour executed, Dun was ſtripped into his ſhirt, and ſeemed penitent for his greeuous offenſe: who after that with verie earneſt perſuaſions he had likewiſe diſuaded the Romaniſts from attempting anie matter of violence, he was executed with exceeding fauour. This Dun (as the report goeth) liued reaſonable wealthilie, but it ſeemeth the man was of a diſcontented humour, and in diſlike with a competent vocation; as appeared by this his vaine imagination. For in Trinitie terme laſt, comming into the Kings bench office, among other pleaſant ſpeeches to one of his familiars; You will maruell (quoth he) to ſee me within one quarter of a yeare to walke vp and downe the ſtreets with twentie men after me. Wherevpon one of his acquaintance pleaſantlie anſwered, that he feared he ſhould firſt ſee him followed to the gallowes with a thouſand people. Dun ſhewed his deſire, and the other read his deſtinie. But let the end of this traitor be a warning to all ambitious men, that deſtruction followeth preſumption, and pride will haue a fall.

The ambitious humour of Henrie Dun.

Edward Iones eſquire executed.

When the execution of Dun was finiſhed, the next in that tragedie was Iones. This traitor (by that which was eaſie to be gathered of his behauiour at the gallowes) was a verie cloſe papiſt, of a ſhrewd reach, and a moſt dangerous member in this common wealth. For notwithſtanding his proteſtation that he diſſuaded Saliſburie from this odious enterpriſe; yet his owne talke ſhewed that his counſell proceeded of a feare which he had, that the proud humor of Babington threatened an ouerthrow of their purpoſe; rather than of anie dutifull zeale that he bare towards the ſafetie of the queens maieſtie. For he neither would himſelfe diſcouer this treaſon of the higheſt degree, neither did he counſell his friend Saliſburie to preuent his owne danger in detecting the conſpiracie of his companions: yea when the odiouſneſſe thereof brake out into publike knowledge, he (contrarie to the generall duetie of a good ſubiect, and in contempt of a ſpeciall warrant directed vnto him) not onelie refuſed (as he himſelfe confeſſed) to apprehend Saliſburie being in his owne houſe, but (ſo far as hee might) ſuccoured him, after that he was publiſhed to be a firebrand of that moſt wicked treaſon. One ſpeciall thing neuertheleſſe, which mooued manie to pitie him aboue the reſt, was, bicauſe with vehement words he proteſted, that although he was a catholike in religion, yet he ſo deepelie weied the libertie of his countrie, as that he would be (and euer was) readie to ſpend his life in withſtanding anie forren enimie, French, Italiſh, Spaniſh, or whatſoeuer: by whoſe opinion the tolleration of inuaſion was ſo far from nature and chriſtian duetie, as no excuſe or puniſhment might ſatiſfie the crime.

Forren inuaſion reprooued by Iones.

After Iones had paid the price of his treaſon, with all poſſible fauour, then Charnocke was executed, and after him Trauers, both two men (as it ſeemed) bewitched with an ignorant deuotion; for that in their ends nothing was to be obſerued but their Iohn Trauers and Iohn Charnocke gentlemen executed.

praieng to our ladie, calling vpon ſaints, ioined with a number of ceremonies, croſſings, and bleſſings, &c. So that it appeared that in their praiers, they were bound to forme more than to faith.

Robert Gage executed.

When the hangman had giuen theſe two his heauie bleſſing, Gage prepared himſelfe to die, who began his proteſtation, that there was neuer ſubiect more bound to a prince than his father was to hir maieſtie: and from that reuerend recogniſance and true acknowledgement of hir maieſties gratiouſnes, he fell to excuſe him ſelfe of the odious treaſons for which he was to die: but on ſo weake a ground, as the ſimpleſt iudgement then preſent, found (by the order of his owne confeſſion) that he was a dangerous inſtrument for the pope. He confeſſed that he accompanied Ballard the ſeminarie prieſt (who hatched the great eg of this peſtilent practiſe) into Yorkeſhire, & that he wrote a letter for the ſaid prieſt to a Frenchman or Spaniard of account beyond the ſeas. To be ſhort, in all the courſe of his confeſſion, in indifferent iudgements, he accuſed himſelfe to be an hollow hearted ſubiect, and a ſound papiſt. This cunning traitor Gage could neuer haue made a confeſſion of more infamie to himſelfe, than in acknowledging the queens maieſties moſt excellent fauour, ſhewed to his father (which a dutifull ſonne ought to eſteeme a benefit vnto himſelfe) and ſo to redouble the reproch of his treaſons, he condemned himſelfe of ingratitude, an vnnaturall vice, which the verie foules of the aire abhorre: as (to vſe one example of ſufficiencie for a thouſand) is reported of the ſtorke; which ſo often as ſhe hath yoong, caſteth one out of the neſt for the hire of the houſe, and reward of him that lodged hir.

Hir maieſties gratiouſneſſe commended by this traitor.

Hipocriſie of Robert Gage.

Jerom Bellamie gentleman executed.

The laſt that ſuffered was one of the Bellamies, whoſe countenance diſcouered him to be a ſetled papiſt, and who as he could ſaie little to ſaue his life; ſo at the gallows he ſpake nothing to defend his death. Although this traitor had but a dull ſpirit, yet (as it ſeemed) he had a malicious heart, anſwerable to that of his freends, who ſuccored Babington and ſome of his aſſociats, when feare of the law, and ſhame of their odious treaſons, made them to ſhrowd themſelues like foxes in holes and couerts. And it ſeemeth that they were as reſolute to follow the treaſons of Babington, as they were readie to releeue him from the danger of the law. Otherwiſe if this Bellamies brother had not had an accuſing conſcience, he would neuer with violent hands haue hanged himſelfe.

One of the Bellamies, hanged himſelfe in the Tower.

Thus ended the ſecond daies execution, to the full ſatiſfaction of the peoples expectation; who neuertheleſſe (as the daie before) were inwardlie touched with paſſions ingendred by the deepe impreſſions of the preſent obiects: but touched they were, as nothing pitieng their deſerued deaths, in regard they were moſt heinous malefactors: but as they were men, in whome humanitie ſhould ſo haue preuailed, as that they ſhould rather haue choſen loſſe of life & liuelod, than to haue intended the deſolation of their natiue countrie, the depriuation of prince, the depoſition of peeres, the deſtruction of people; and whatſoeuer might ſeeme as a directorie to bloudſhed and ſlaughter, from the higheſt gouernor ſitting in roialtie adorned with crowne and ſcepter, to the ſucking babe lieng in the cradle wrapped in ſwathing clouts. Which extremities of butcherlie crueltie and vnnaturall ſauageneſſe, haue had an ancient purpoſe of practiſe, as maie appeare by a clauſe or two of John Nichols his recantation; where ſpeaking of Pius Quintus, excommunicating our liege ſoueraigne, he ſaith that the ſame was within a twelue moneth of the firſt publication reuiued, and fiue hundred copies printed at Rome, which were diſperſed throughout Italie, Spaine, & Germanie. Whereof what were the contents, is at large ſet downe in the treatiſe of execution of iuſtice in England for treaſon, not for religion.

Ex libello I. Nich. typis C.B. excuſo 1581.

See before pag. 1357, a, 60, &c. 1358, b, 60, &c.

But thus ſaith the ſame conuert, that a reader of diuinitie poſitiue, in the hearing of two hundred ſcholers, vomited theſe prophane words out of his vncircumciſed mouth; that it was lawfull for anie of worſhip in England, to authoriſe the vileſt wretch that is, to ſeeke the death of hir highneſſe: whoſe proſperous eſtate the Italiſh prieſt and Spaniſh prince doo ſo maligne, that they would worke wonders, were it not for certeine impedits: as father Pais a Spaniard, reader of diuinitie ſcholaſticall in the Romane college, affirmed in an auditorie of three hundred, saieng: Bona papæ voluntas trita & manifeſta eſt; & eius crumena parata: ſed R. P. aut metus ſubtrahit, aut poteſtatis defectus vetat, vt ſuum in Angliam exercitum ducere non audeat. Where (by the waie) would be noted an inuaſion long ſince pretended. And that the queens maieſties eſtate was then maliciouſlie aimed at, maie appeare by theſe comminations and threats, that they would burne hir bones, and the bones of all ſuch as loued hir, either aliue or dead; of whome, ſome were lords temporall, ſome ſpirituall, &c. Memorandum, that this was to be doone, when they held the ſterne of gouernement: which ſhall be, when errant traitors are good ſubiects, and ranke knaues honeſt men.

The cauſes that haue ſo long hindered king Philip to inuade England.

And now to touch the puniſhment inflicted vpon the foreſaid wretches, there is none (if he be not a ſworne aduerſarie to the ſtate, and an enimie to iuſtice) but muſt needs confeſſe, that although ſome of the conſpirators were no leſſe ſharpelie executed, than by law was cenſured: yet conſidering the qualitie of their offenſe, it was a death tempered with lenitie, if no more but the ſpeedines of their execution be conſidered, whereby their paine and ſmart was but momentanie. Oh with what ſeueritie did the ancients puniſh offenſes of this nature! And not without cauſe. For beſides that nothing is more vſuall in all the whole ſcriptures, than prohibition to kill or to ſeeke the life or honor, not onelie of the prince, but alſo of inferior magiſtrats, although they be wicked (and it is ſaid in Exodus; Thou ſhalt not raile vpon the iudges, neither ſpeake euill of the ruler of the people) ſo is it prouided by the laws of nations, that not onelie he that hath killed his ſoueraigne, but he alſo that made the attempt, that gaue counſell, that yeelded conſent, that conceiued the thought, is giltie of high treaſon. Yea, he that was neuer preuented nor taken in the maner, in this point of the ſoueraigne, the law accounteth him as condemned alreadie; and iudgeth him capable of death, that thought once in times paſt to haue ſeized vpon the life of his prince, anie repentance that followed notwithſtanding.

The reuerend regard that ſubiects ought to haue of their ſoueraignes, &c.

And trulie there was a gentleman of Normandie, who confeſſed to a Franciſcane frier, that he once minded to haue killed king Francis the firſt; but repented him of that euill thought. The frier gaue him abſolution, but yet afterwards informed the king of the ſame; who ſent the gentleman to the parlement at Paris there to be tried, where he was by common conſent condemned to die, and after executed. Amongſt the Macedonians there was a law, that condemned to death fiue of their next kinſfolks that were conuicted of conſpiracie againſt their prince. And moſt notable is the hiſtorie of Romilda, who ſeeing hir towne or citie beſieged by a barbarous king, but yet youthfull and wanton; ſhe ſignified vnto the enimie by meſſengers, that ſhe would betraie the citizens into his hands, if he would honour hir with mariage. Which when the

A gentleman iudged to die becauſe he once thought to haue killed his prince.

A ſeuere law againſt treaſon.

king had promiſed to doo, ſhe in the night ſeaſon opened the gates, and (the people vnwitting and ignorant) let in forren force. Now the king being entered & in poſſeſſion, commanded that the towne ſhould be ſacked, and all the people ſlaughtered, Romilda excepted, the vſe of whoſe bodie (for his oth ſake, which he was loth to violat) he had the ſame night as in wedlocke: howbeit, the next daie he caſt hir off, and betooke hir to twelue ſcullions by turns to be abuſed; & laſtlie pitcht hir vpon a ſtake. Here you haue examples in both ſexes (man and woman) of treaſon and conſpiracie moſt ſeuerelie executed: which if they be compared vnto the ſufferings of our late offendors, Ieſu what ods ſhall we ſée and confeſſe? And as the ancients had treaſon in mortall hatred; ſo could they not awaie with ingratitude, as maie be obſerued by the laws of Draco (which were ſaid to be written in bloud, they were ſo ſharpe and peremptorie) amongſt which, there was a commandement, that if anie man had receiued a benefit of his neighbor, and it were proued againſt him long after that he had béene vnthankefull for it, and had ill acknowledged the good turne receiued; ſuch a one ſhould be put to death. So then we ſée how in old time they oppoſed their affections againſt particular vices, perſecuting them with ſeueritie, as laboring to ſupplant them: this age of ours beholdeth ingratitude and treaſon combined, with a fowle neſt of other irkeſome and noiſome ſins, in the hearts of helhounds (for we maie not vouchſafe them the name of men) breathing out the vapors of their venemous infection, to the damnifieng of the whole commonwelth: what fauour then deſerue ſuch to find where they haue offended, or rather what rigor are they not worthie to ſuffer?

A woman tratoreſſe well rewarded.

Againſt ſéeking after nouelties, and to teach men to be well aduiſed, &c.

Among the Locrians there was a ſtrict decrée, that euerie citizen, deſirous to bring in a new law, ſhould come and declare it publikelie before the people with a halter about his necke; to the end that if his new law was not thought méet to be receiued, and verie profitable for the commonwelth, he might preſentlie be ſtrangled with the ſame rope. If they in old time went ſo ſhort a waie to worke in a caſe of vnaduiſedneſſe, to teach others that they vndertake nothing without mature deliberation: what are we taught to be conuenient for ſuch, as breake not their wits either to deuiſe or prefer new laws; but indeuor what they can to diſſolue all law and order, all peace and ſocietie, all gouernment and ſubiection; and by the impulſion of a furious mind to let in libertie, contempt, and all the enormities and abuſes that accompanie a licentious life? To let paſſe the pluralitie of examples & authorities of this kind, the number being ſo great as that they would fill vp Erotoſthenes ſiue; and to ſaie ſomewhat of ſeueritie, that by oppoſition of countrie to countrie in that reſpect, we maie ſée the great difference betwéene ours and theirs.

Extreame kinds of torments in other countries for treaſon, &c.

It is ſeueritie to flea men quicke, to chaine them aliue to a ſtake, in ſuch ſort as they maie run round thereabout, the fier inuironing them on all ſides: it is ſeueritie to haue collops of fleſh pluckt from the bodie with hot burning tongs: it is ſeueritie to be caſt downe from a ſtéepe place ſtarke naked vpon ſharpe ſtakes: it is ſeueritie to be torne in péeces with wild horſſes, and to haue the bones broken vpon a whéele. All theſe be extremities of torments awarded by law, and at this daie practiſed in forren regions for treaſon, and ſometime for crimes of nothing ſo dangerous a nature. Finallie, if we confer the ſeueritie of this execution, exerciſed vpon rebellious and traitorous ſubiects in a ſuperlatiue degrée of diſloialtie, with that of other nations commonlie vſed, namelie in principall affaires, which concerne peace and warre, and matters of gouernment, to accept the ſeruice of runnagate ſlaues, to place them in authoritie, to change or depoſe at pleaſure anie whatſoeuer; yea to ſtrangle them vpon the leaſt ſuſpicion or diſlike: our ſeueritie is clemencie. For in this is ripe reaſon and iudiciall proceſſe; in the other will without wit, & (as commonlie they ſaie) Omnia pro imperio, nihil pro officio.

Traitors iuſtlie rewarded, and yet nothing ſo as they deſerue.

A prettie apolog alluſorie to the preſent caſe of malcontents.

And therefore we conclude, that ingratitude being counted vnnaturall, and treaſon (a vice vomited out of hell mouth) linked togither with manie knots of other ſhamefull ſinnes, and all concurring in the hearts and liues of theſe outragious conſpirators as in a centre: whie ſhould it be thought ſeueritie to haue iuſtice iuſtlie adminiſtred, that traitors ſhould be drawne vpon hurdels, ſtrangled in a halter, cut downe aliue, diſmembred, their bellies ripped, their bowels taken out and burned, their heads chopt from their ſhoulders, their bodies clouen in foure quarters, and ſet ouer the gates of London, for the foules of the aire to féed vpon at full? Unto which fowle end maie all ſuch come, as meane anie miſchiefe againſt good quéene Eliſabeth, the lords of hir highneſſe councell, the bodie politike of the land, the ſlander or innouation of true religion, &c: wherein God make prince and people of one mind, and plant in all ſubiects a reuerend regard of obedience and contentment of preſent eſtate, ſupported with iuſtice and religion: leaſt longing after nouelties, it fare with them as with the frogs, who liuing at libertie in lakes and ponds, would néeds (as miſliking their preſent intercommunitie of life) with one conſent ſue to Iupiter for a king, and ſo did. Whereat he woondering, granted their deſires, and caſt them an huge trunke of a trée, which beſides that it made a great noiſe in the water as it fell, to their terrifieng; ſo it was cumberſome by taking vp their accuſtomed paſſage: inſomuch that diſcontented therewithall, they aſſaulted Iupiter with a freſh petition, complaining that (beſides diuerſe miſlikes otherwiſe) the king whom he gaue them was but a ſenſeleſſe ſtocke, and vnworthie of obedience: therefore it would pleaſe him to appoint them another indued with life. Wherevpon Iupiter ſent the herne among them, who entring into the water, deuoured vp the frogs one after another: inſomuch that the reſidue, ſéeing their new king ſo rauenouſlie gobling vp their fellowes, lamentablie wéeping beſought Iupiter to deliuer them from the throte of that dragon and tyrant. But he (of purpoſe vnchangeable) made them a flat anſwer, that (will they nill they) the herne ſhould rule ouer them.

Whereby we are taught to be content when we are well, and to make much of good quéene Eliſabeth, by whom we enioie life and libertie, with other bleſſings from aboue; beſéeching God we maie ſée a conſummation of the world, before the ſcepter of the kingdome be tranſlated to another. For (as the prouerbe ſaith) ſeldome commeth the better. But to the purpoſe, this execution being diſpatched, and the teſtimonies thereof diſperſed and viſible in diuerſe places about the citie, as at London bridge, where the traitors heads were ranged into their ſeuerall claſſes: manie rimes, ballads, and pamphlets were ſet forth by ſundrie well affected people, wherein bréefelie were compriſed the plot of their conſpiracie, the names of the traitors, and their ſucceſſiue ſuffering, which growing common and familiar both in citie and countrie, were chanted with no leſſe alacritie & courage of the ſinger; than willinglie and delightfullie liſtened vnto of the hearer. So that, what by one meane and what by another, all Seldome commeth the better.

Engliſh

England was made acquainted with this horrible conſpiracie, not ſo much admiring the maner of the miſchéefes intended, as comforted that hir highneſſe had the holie hand of God ouerſhadowing hir, the ſureſt protection that prince or people can haue againſt perill. So that England is repleniſhed with faithfull and louing ſubiects, though here and there (like darnell among wheate) lurke a viper or aſpe waiting opportunitie to bite or ſting.

Now to make a complet diſcourſe of all theſe heauie & tragicall accidents, hauing thus far continued much important matter concerning the ſame: the reader is with due regard to peruſe the addition following, wherein is argument of aggrauation touching theſe treaſons, which being aduiſedlie read, conſidered, and conferred with the former narration, will yéeld as ſound, pithie, and effectuall information for the knowledge of the conſpirators purpoſed plot, as anie ſubiect would deſire: and more than without gréefe or teares anie true Engliſh heart can abide to read or heare. Where, by the waie, is to be noted, that Marie the Scotiſh Q. was a principall.

It is apparant by the iudiciall confeſſions of John Ballard préeſt, Anthonie Babington, and their confederats, that the ſaid John Ballard (being a préeſt of the Engliſh ſeminarie at Rheims) in Lent paſt (after he and ſundrie other Ieſuits and préeſts, of his ſect, had trauelled throughout all parts almoſt of this realme, & labored to their vttermoſt to bréed in hir maieſties ſubiects an inclination to rebell againſt hir) he went into France, and there treated and concluded with Barnardino de Mendoza (the Spaniſh ambaſſador reſiant at Paris) with Charles Paget & Thomas Morgan two Engliſh fugitiues, and inexcuſable traitors for an inuaſion to be made by forren forces into this kingdome. And becauſe no aſſurance could then be made vnto Mendoza for the interteining, aſſiſting, and good landing of thoſe whome the king his maiſter, the pope, and the houſe of Guiſe ſhould diſpatch for that ſeruice, he ſent the ſaid Ballard into England at Whitſuntide laſt, with expreſſe charge to informe the catholikes, that for ſundrie important conſiderations, the king his maiſter had vowed vpon his ſoule to reforme England, or to looſe Spaine: and for that purpoſe had in readineſſe ſuch forces & warlike preparations, as the like was neuer ſéene in theſe parts of chriſtendome. And therefore willed him to ſtirre the people, and worke the meanes to make ſome faction to giue them landing & interteinment at their comming: & ſpeciallie to preſerue the Scotiſh Q. in that confuſion; letting the catholiks vnderſtand, that in caſe they did not aſſiſt the inuaders, they would then enter as conquerors, put no difference betwixt man & man.

Barnardino de Mendoza, alwaies miſchéefouſlie minded againſt the ſtate of England: note his practiſes with Ballard.

The Scotiſh quéene is an actor in this purpoſed conſpiracie.

With this diſpatch Ballard by the ſpeciall direction of Morgan (a notorious traitor to this ſtate, yea a profeſſed & ſworne ſeruant vnto the Scotiſh quéene) repaired to Anthonie Babington, a gentleman to whom the ſaid Scotiſh Q. vpon the commendation of Morgan & the biſhop of Glaſcow, had long before written letters of gratulation, & with whom ſhe had ſecret intelligence by ſending of letters & other meſſages, the ſpace almoſt of two yeares before. To this gentleman Ballard diſcouered at large the whole purpoſe of Mendoza, Paget, & Morgan, and ſaid (as he had in charge) that if happilie a ſtrong partie could be made here to aſſiſt the inuaſion, and aduance the Scotiſh quéene, men, munition, monie, and vittels ſhould be abundantlie ſupplied from beyond the ſeas; and therefore perſuaded Babington to ſound the whole realme, and to vndertake the action. Babington at the firſt propoſed manie difficulties, but principallie this, that the inuaders or their aſſiſtants could haue no hope (the ſtate being ſo well ſetled) to preuaile during hir maieſties life. Where vpon Ballard preſentlie replied, that hir life could be no hinderance therein. For vpon like doubts mooued beyond the ſeas by meanes alreadie laid, John Sauage (a conſpirator conuicted hereof by his owne confeſſion) through the perſuaſion and procurement principallie of one William Gifford (an Engliſh fugitiue, and reader of diuinitie in the Engliſh ſeminarie at Rheims) had vowed and ſworne to kill hir maieſtie, as a thing reſolued vpon to be lawfull, honorable, and meritorious.

John Sauage had vowed and ſworne to kill the quéene.

This difficultie being thus remooued, and Ballard from daie to daie continuing his perſuaſions, and highlie commending the murthering of hir maieſtie as a déed of great honor, ſingular merit, and eaſie to effectuat: Babington vndertooke the managing of the whole action, and hauing firſt with his complices entred into manie ſeuerall propoſitions of ſundrie treaſonable natures, as to ſurpriſe hir maieſties perſon by force, to kill the lord treaſuror, the earle of Leiceſter, and ſir Francis Walſingham, to remooue hir councellors, and to place new, to murther the nobilitie whileſt they were ſet in adminiſtring iuſtice, to ſacke the citie of London, to fire the nauie of the realme, to ſurpriſe ſome forces and hauens, to furniſh the paie of their forces by an vniuerſall ſpoile and robbing of the richer ſort; hauing (I ſaie) firſt entred into theſe and ſuch like propoſitions) in fine, he with Ballard and others reſolued vpon theſe thrée principall points: firſt, that the inuaders ſhould be aſſiſted by a prepared readineſſe in the people to rebell in diuerſe places, and to ioine with them vpon their firſt landing; that hir maieſtie ſhould be murthered by ſix gentlemen of reſolution; and laſtlie, that the Scotiſh quéene ſhould be aduanced to the crowne of England. For the better performance of theſe reſolutions, Ballard and Babington ſounded diuerſe, and dealt with manie; and ſo farre Babington procéeded in ſhort time, that a choiſe was made by him of the ſix that ſhould execute the attempt againſt hir maieſties perſon, that ſome others were eſpeciallie aſſigned by him to attend and aſſiſt the inuaſion, with direction from Babington to be popular vnto their vttermoſt; and that himſelfe reſolued vpon the firſt aſſurance either of hir maieſties death, or of the ſtrangers arriuall, to proclame the quéene of Scots quéene of England.

Babington vndertaketh the managing of the whole action: note their treſons.

Things ſtanding in theſe terms, and Babington deferring onelie the execution of this plot, vntill ſignification therof were giuen to the Scotiſh quéene, and hir good pleaſure knowne therein (God ſo ordeining it) the Scotiſh quéene in Iune laſt wrote vnto Babington a ſhort letter in cipher, ſignifieng hir diſcontent for the breach of their intelligence, and requiring him to ſend by that bearer a packet receiued for hir in Aprill before, and vntill that time reteined by Babington, as wanting good meanes of conueieng, and therefore fearing the danger of that ſeruice. Where vpon Babington vſing that opportunitie, both deliuered hir packet vnto that meſſenger, and by him wrote vnto hir touching euerie particular of this plot aboue mentioned, and how farre he had procéeded therein; ſignifieng amongſt manie other things, how deſirous he was to doo hir ſome ſeruice, how well it might be performed, if aſſurance were giuen from beyond the ſeas for that which was vndertaken thenſe, and how neceſſarie it were that rewards were promiſed vnto the chéefe actors for their better incoragement, and to be giuen to their poſterities, in caſe they miſcaried in the execution. And therefore he required, that ſhe would grant authoritie to ſome ſuch as it might like hir to giue certeine offices and dignities neceſſarie for this action. Vnto this letter Babington about twentie daies after in the ſame cipher, by which he did write before, receiued anſwer from the Scotiſh quéene, with which ſhe alſo ſent incloſed (as hir ſecretarie now confeſſeth) a new alphabet in cipher, to be vſed betwéene them from that time forward.

The Scotiſh quéene writeth vnto Babington in cipher: with his aduiſe, direction, and requeſt.

And in this hir letter ſhe not onelie declared hir good opinion of Babington, gaue him due thanks for his readineſſe to doo hir ſeruice, promiſed correſpondencie in all that ſhe might, and willed that the reſolution being taken, he ſhould with all ſpéed impart it to Barnardino de Mendoza, conſidering firſt what forces on foot or horſſebacke he could make, what place for their aſſemblie, what leaders in euerie ſhire, what generall or chéefe leaders; but alſo amongſt infinit other traitorous directions (apparant by the verie letters) ſhe aduiſed that vpon returne of anſwer from Mendoza, with aſſurance that all things were in a readineſſe, then and not before it ſhould be conuenient to ſound the countrie. And to colour the prouiſion and preparation, it ſhould be giuen out, that what they did, was not vpon anie euill or diſloiall diſpoſition towards hir maieſtie, but for the iuſt defenſe of catholikes, their bodies, liues, & lands, againſt the violence of the Puritans, the principall wherof being in the low countries with the chéefe forces of the realme, purpoſed at his returne to ruine not onelie the whole catholikes, but alſo meant to depriue hir maieſtie of the crowne. And that they ſhould giue it out, that therefore the preparation was for the defenſe of hir maieſtie, and hir lawfull ſucceſſors, not naming the Scotiſh quéene: vnder which pretenſe an aſſociation alſo might be made amongeſt the catholikes.

The Scotiſh quéenes aduiſe in this miſchiefous plot ſauoring altogither of inhumanitie.

Six gentlemen of reſolution, &c.

Which being doone, and all things in readineſſe both within and without the realme, it ſhould be then time for the ſix gentlemen to worke, taking order that (becauſe the time would be ſomewhat vncerteine of the exploit vpon hir maieſties perſon) there ſhould be continuallie ſome men in readineſſe about the court well horſſed, to bring word in poſt into the countrie (by foure ſeuerall waies for feare of intercepting) when that deſignment was performed, to the end ſhe might be taken awaie before hir kéeper could either conueie hir awaie or fortifie the place. She wiſhed that ſome fire might be kindled in Ireland, to the end the councellors attention might be diſtracted from that part whenſe the ſtroke ſhould come, which was from Flanders, Spaine, and the houſe of Guiſe. She aduiſed Babington to deale carefullie and vigilantlie, to prouide all things neceſſarie for effecting the enterpriſe, in ſuch ſort that it might take good effect by the grace of God (for ſo it pleaſeth hir to vſe the phraſe.) Laſtlie, after great promiſes of large requitall to all the conſpirators, and manie other particular aduiſes tending wholie to the ſubuerſion of this ſtate, and depriuation of hir maieſties life, ſhe groweth towards a concluſion, with praier for his good ſucceſſe in the aforeſaid conſpiracie. It were néedleſſe to expreſſe more particularlie the contents of his or hir letters, the originals themſelues being extant and ſurpriſed.

To theſe letters Babington wrote for anſwer by the ſame meſſenger, that ſo ſoone as the reſolution was fullie taken with Mendoza, he would informe hir more; and therevpon within thrée daies after addreſſed Ballard towards Mendoza with ſignification, that all things were here in a readineſſe, and attended onelie the arriuall of their forces. But God, who hath alwaies protected hir maieſtie in all mercie beyond the expectation of man, euen almoſt in the verie point of execution, diſcouered the conſpiracie. And therevpon Ballard (being readie to imbarke himſelfe) was taken, vpon whoſe apprehenſion Babington forced (as he ſaid) with the extreme danger to be diſcouered, and the no hope of anie pardon for ſo hatefull an offenſe, entred a new reſolution with Sauage aforenamed & Charnocke, to take hir maieſties life awaie preſentlie, otherwiſe intended to haue béene reſpited vntill the inuaſion, which (as Ballard from the mouth of Mendoza ſwore) muſt at the vttermoſt haue béene performed by September. But Babington, finding himſelfe reſtreined before he wiſt, and thereby aſſuring himſelfe that all was knowne, found the meanes to eſcape, in hope to haue recouered the ſea, and ſo to haue ſaued himſelfe and his confederats. Yet after ten daies ſearch through all countries adioining to London, though diſguiſed in clownes attire, and diſcolored with walnut leaues, he was diſcouered, apprehended, and with ſome other of the conſpirators brought vnto London, with greater manifeſtation of true ioie in the people for their ſurpriſe, than toong can expreſſe or pen maie write.

Ballard apprehended being readie to be imbarked and tranſported ouerſea.

The conſpirators diſguiſed themſelues, thinking by that meane to ſhift the matter.

The apprehenſion of Ballard and flight of Babington diſmaied the reſt, and diſperſed the other conſpirators; yet not ſo farre, but that iuſtice hath ſince laid hold vpon the moſt of them. And though in the beginning they ſéemed all reſolued to ſtand vnto the deniall of euerie part of this action; yet ſuch is the force of truth, that without either hope of fauor or feare of torture, they haue all acknowledged the conſpiracie, and confeſſed their ſeuerall offenſes, agniſing the Scotiſh quéene to be the principall comforter, directer, and imbracer of theſe treaſons, and imputing this error to their deceiuable expectation of hir future greatneſſe in this land, the hope whereof ioined with hir allurements, hath heretofore as the world can witneſſe (though theſe could not beware thereby) bred diuerſe rebellions within this kingdome, ouerturned manie happie eſtates, and defiled ſundrie families of vnſpotted fidelitie in former time.

Magna eſt veritas & praeualet.

How th[illegible]piſh catholiks are affected to the Scotiſh quéene.

All which notwithſtanding our catholikes and others owe and attribute ſo great a priuilege to hir perſon onelie, that being paſt expectation (as they terme it) of anie good from the king hir ſonne, and not regarding the intereſt of anie other to the ſucceſſion of this ſtate, if ſhe by death or otherwiſe maie not be aduanced vnto this kingdome: they are then determined to ſet the crowne on the houſe of Spaine, either by pretenſe of ſome putatiue title, to which effect ſome pamphlets haue béene alreadie compoſed; or rather (to auoid all controuerſies) by ſome grant and inueſture from the ſée apoſtolike: for the diſpatch wherof (as the conſpirators confeſſe) doctor Allen an Engliſh fugitiue, and ſome others attend in Rome to ſollicit the pope. Which being once performed, ſome of the grauer and more reuerend ſort (as they call them) of our fugitiue diuines, muſt ſecretlie make their repaire hither, and in auricular confeſſion perſuade the principall catholikes of this land, and ſuch as are able to ſwaie the reſt, to fauor, mainteine and aduance that title of Spaine againſt all others, vnder paine of damnation. By meanes whereof it is intended that Spaine ſhall mount to ſo huge a greatneſſe, as to be able of himſelfe to giue lawes to all the ſtates of chriſtendome. ¶ With this note, being the verie flower and grace of all the former diſcourſe, we will conclude, hauing now no more to ſaie touching the conſpiracie, but theſe few verſes, which we will vſe in lieu of a concluſion, and ſo procéed vnto other matters of conſequence, conuenient for the booke:

What the fugitiue diuines muſt doo for their parts.

Quid non papa ruens ſpondet, modò iuſſa capeſſas?
En diadema tibi, ſceptráque, pactus Hymen.
Diſsimilem votis mercedem nacta, ſed auſis
Et ſceleri retulit turba nefanda parem.

In nefariam Babingtoni cæterorumque coniurationem, hexaſtichon.

Succeſſere rogi regno, coruique coronæ,
Pro ſceptro laqueus, pro thalamo tumulus.]

Sir Philip Sidneie ſlaine at Zutphen in Gelderland: of whome ſée more pag. 1554.

In this meane time, to wit, on thurſdaie the 22 daie of September, ſir Philip Sidneie knight, a moſt valiant & towardlie gentleman, ſonne & heire to ſir Henrie Sidneie (late deceaſed, as is before ſhewed) in ſeruice of his prince, and defenſe of his countrie, in the warres of the Netherlands, was ſhot into his thigh with a muſket at Zutphen in Gelderland, whereof he died on the 17 of October, whoſe bodie was conueied into England, to be honourablie buried. On the eight of October, John Low, John Adams, and Robert Dibdale, being before condemned for treaſon, in being made préeſts by authoritie of the biſhop of Rome, ſince the feaſt of John Baptiſt in the firſt yeare of hir maieſties reigne, and remaining here after the terme of fourtie daies after ſeſſion of the laſt parlement, were drawne to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered.

Seminarie préeſts executed at Tiborn.

A tempeſtuous wind in October terrible and hurtfull.

On the ſame daie at night being ſaturdaie, there aroſe the greateſt ſtorme that happened ſince the wind which ſome doo call Doner wind; and ſome others, the wind that blew awaie Calis, which was in the time of the reigne of quéene Marie. For beſides great harmes, which happened that night vpon the ſeas, there were vpon the land in euerie quarter ouerthrowne thereby, houſes, cottages, barnes, haieſtaks, tiles, chimneies, pales, and gates innumerable, and manie trées both great and ſmall were not onelie torne and rent aſſunder, but grubd vp by the roots: in ſo much as vpon the mondaie next in manie places men could not paſſe on horſebacke in the high waies, by reſon of the trées that laie blowne and broken downe croſſe ouerthwart the ſtréets. And among other ſtrange chances happening in that tempeſt, I thought good (for a taſt) to recite thrée accidents which befell not farre aſunder within the countie of Kent. The one was at Sittingborne, where a woman paſſing in the ſtréet by hir neighbors houſe, ſaw a great trée ſtanding cloſe by the ſame, to wauer and wag at the verie root, in ſuch ſort as ſhe ſuſpecting the ruine thereof, called vnto hir neighbors who were then in bed, and told them the danger thereof, who preſentlie ariſing, deſcended from out of the loft where they lodged, and were no ſooner departed thenſe, but downe fell the trée and brake through the roofe of that houſe, and reſted on the bed where they laie.

The accidents noteworthie by meanes of this bluſtering wind.

A ſtrange accident of a walnut trée blowne downe with the wind, &c.

There was alſo blowne downe with the violence of the ſame wind not far off a great walnut trée, the armes and branches wherof bare and bent a couple of imps, in ſuch ſort as the owner in the morning to ſaue them, did cut off two branches from the walnut trée, and ſo departed to the church to heare morning praier: but before he was returned home to dinner, his walnut trée ſtood as vpright as euer it did, and ſo remaineth and groweth as before. The third ſtrange chance happened that night at Dartford in the ſaid ſhire, at the dwelling houſe of maiſter Béere eſquire, where by the force of the ſaid wind, all the coping of one ſide of a great gable hed of bricke (reaching from below the top or roofe of the ſame houſe almoſt to the eaues thereof) was blowne quite ouer the houſe vnder which it ſtood, and neuer touched anie part thereof at anie ſide. By theſe accidents happening within ſo ſmall a circuit, it maie be conceiued what great harmes were doone that night throughout the whole realme. For it was thought vniuerſall, as was alſo that which raged in the end of September, therewithall fell ſuch ſharpe ſhewers of raine, that the drops thereof beating againſt the faces of trauellers made them to ſmart, as with twigs of birch: and ſo vehement they were that they perſed through their clothing to their ſkin: ſo that manie wringing wet and ſore beaten with wind and weather, being verie ill appaid, were glad to ſhorten their purpoſed iournies, by taking the next towne for their preſent ſuccour, where they might ſée the roofes and raffers of houſes naked of tiles, and heare the donging of belles as they hong in the ſtéeples, &c. At what time it was reported by people of great age, that they had béene in manie tempeſts they thanked God, but none comparable to this: which might well be ſo, if a man were diſpoſed to ſet downe a regiſter of the particular caſualties, loſſes, damages, hurts, hinderances, &c: thereby occaſioned. In the table if you looke for tempeſts and winds, you ſhall read ſtrange matter and worthie obſeruation, though ſome account this and manie more but ridiculus ſtuffe: which kind of people I doubt are not of the number that wonder at Gods works, but are too too much addicted to naturall philoſophie.

The third ſtrange chance

Ludgate of London newlie builded.

One of the weſt gates of the citie of London, commonlie called Ludgate, being ſore decaied, and in perill to haue fallen, was taken downe, the priſoners thereof in the meane time remaining vnder the charge of Thomas Lutwich cuſtos or kéeper of Ludgate, in the ſoutheaſt quadrant to the ſame gate adioining: which quadrant, for the eaſe of the priſoners fréemen of that citie, was ſometime builded by ſir Steuen Foſter fiſhmonger, lord maior of that citie, in Anno 1453. And this yeare, the ſaid gate was againe not onelie newlie, but alſo ſtronglie and beautifullie builded, at the charges of the citizens of the ſame citie, the foundation whereof, in the name and preſence of ſir Wolſtan Dixie maior, certeine of his brethren the aldermen, Anthonie Ratclife and Henrie Pranell ſhiriffes, was laid on the ſecond daie of Maie, and ſo forthwith ſo diligentlie applied by William Kirwine frée maſon (and other workmen of diuerſe craſts vnder his charge) who for a certeine ſum had taken vpon him for all maner of ſtuffe & workemanſhip to the ſame belonging, that the ſame gate was fullie finiſhed in the ſpace of ſix moneths or leſſe. So that on the 29 daie of October in the ſame yeare, the ſaid gate was ſet open to ſir William Cicill knight lord treaſuror, who firſt entered the ſame on horſebacke, accompanied of diuerſe other honorable perſons, and noble men of hir maieſties priuie councell, who all rode to the Guildhall, where on the ſame daie kept his feaſt George Barnes lord maior of that citie, after he had taken his oth and charge in the exchecker at Weſtminſter.

Parlement at weſtminſter.

On the 29 daie of October the archbiſhop of Canturburie, the lord treaſuror, and the earle of Derbie, repreſenting the quéens maieſties perſon, began the high court of parlement by prore, which ſeſſion of parlement was at this time aſſembled for triall of matters concerning Marie quéene of Scots, as more plainlie ſhall appeare; by that which followeth the end of that ſeſſion. In the moneth of Nouember about the 23 daie, the right honorable lord Robert earle of Leiceſter, lieutenant generall of all hir maieſties forces in the vnited prouinces of the low countries, returning from thenſe, arriued at London, and went late to the court, where as he was not ſo ſuddenlie come, as forwardlie welcome of the principall, and others, to the great reioiſing of all eſtates throughout the whole realme, as maie appeare by verſes of gratulation, in part as followeth:

Anno reg. 29.

The earle of Leiceſter returned from the low countries, and arriued in England.

In reditum magnanimi herois, Roberti Comitis Leceſtrij, Δωδεκάστιχον gratulatorium.

Solonem ingenio, magnum qui Neſtora vincis
Conſilio, pietate Numam, grauitate Catonem:
Gratus ades, ter gratus ades, Comes inclyte, ab oris
Teutonicis, ſalſi emenſus vada cærula ponti:
Raucæ fuit Wanſteda diu, te abſente, nec vllas

Lætitiæ ediderat voces: Ilſordia eclypſin
Paſſa fuit, modulis fleuit Laitona canoris:
Hammáque mæſtificis vlulauit percita curis.
At veluti auricomus diſpellit nubila Titan,
Exhilarat tua ſic noſtros præſentia vultus
Magne Comes, terræ decus, immortale Britannæ,
Magnanimos inter meritò numerande dynaſtas.

The Parlement proroged.

On the ſecond daie of December, the ſeſſion of parlement (begun the nine & twentieth of October as is afore ſhewed) was diſſolued & broken vp, and was proroged vntill the fiue & twentie of Februarie next following. The ſubſtance and effect of matters handled in the ſame parlement, is ſet downe in a letter learnedlie penned, and directed to the right honorable the earle of Leiceſter, as followeth.

THE COPIE OF A LETTER TO the right honorable the earle of Leiceſter, lieutenant generall of all hir maieſties forces in the vnited prouinces of the low countries, written before, but deliuered at his returne from thenſe: with a report of certeine petitions and declarations made to the queenes maieſtie at two ſeuerall times, from all the lords and commons latelie aſſembled in parlement: and hir maieſties anſweres thereunto by hir ſelfe deliuered, though not expreſſed by the reporter with ſuch grace and life, as the ſame were vttered by hir maieſtie.

To the right honorable the earle of Leiceſter, &c.

Albeit with earneſt deſire of my heart (right honorable my verie good lord) I haue alwaies indeuored to do your lordſhip ſome acceptable ſeruice, for the honour you firſt vouchſafed me from beyond my cradle, and after confirmed with the fauorable opinion wherewith you haue alwaies countenanced me euer ſince, euen thus far onward on my daies, which alſo togither with my yeares hath increaſed faſter than mine abilitie to performe; being croſſed in nothing more deepelie, than when I was letted by the ouermuch tendering of me by my parents, to attend your lordſhip in your late voiage and honorable expedition into the low countries: yet haue I béene euer ſince moſt ſtudious to obſerue and apprehend ſome good occaſion, or fit opportunitie, to teſtifie the dutifull reuerence I beare to your lordſhip: wherein if hitherto I haue béene ſlacke in performance during your abſence, it hath procéeded of the care I had, not to interteine your lordſhip with matter either friuolous or vulgar: though things of that nature might beſt become my condition, and well agrée with my vnderſtanding.

In which cogitation it came to my mind, that the report of the ſpéeches deliuered by the quéens moſt excellent maieſtie in a late and weightie cauſe dealt in this parlement, in anſwer to the petitions preſented to hir maieſtie the twelfe and foure and twentith daie of Nouember at Richmond by the lord chancellor and ſpeaker, reſpectiuelie, in the name and behalfe of both eſtates, accompanied with diuerſe of either ſort, would doubtleſſe be a thing to your lordſhip moſt gratefull, as one euer pleaſed iuſtlie to admire the rare perfections of hir mind, and approoued iudgement, wherewith according to your eſtate and place, deſeruedlie, your lordſhip hath béene vſuallie acquainted: as alſo worthie of eternall monument and euerlaſting memorie, for as much as on the ſudden they were deliuered by hir ſelfe, for anſwer of a matter propounded, debated, reſolued, and digeſted, with great labor and premeditation of the greateſt, graueſt, wiſeſt, and moſt choiſe perſons of the whole realme, whereof although I haue but ſlenderlie purtraied the lineaments, without expreſſing to life the externall ornaments of hir roiall ſpeach, accompanied with all princelie and gracefull accomplements: yet doubt I not but your lordſhip will eaſilie find hir inward vertues, whereof it is impoſſible for me to make the leaſt adumbration.

And becauſe in the dailie expectation of your lordſhips returne, I reſted vncerteine how theſe might come ſafelie to your lordſhips hands: I did therefore aduiſe to haue this my letter with the included copies to be readie to attend your firſt arriuall, in gratulation of the ſafetie thereof, which hath béene long deſired. Wherein, as I ſtriue to performe a particular dutie to your lordſhip, ſo truſt I you will haue that honorable conſideration, that in the communication thereof with others, there grow not anie preiudice to me for my preſumption, in aduenturing to be a reporter of that, which in the deliuerie wrought ſo great aſtoniſhment to all the hearers, as it excéeded the fulneſſe of euerie mans expectation: and therefore, without ſome fauorable conſtruction of mine attempt, I might incurre great blame by my ſlender maner of report, ſo to haue blemiſhed the excellencie of hir maieſties ſpéeches, whereof I humblie beſéech your lordſhip to haue fauorable regard. Thus referring them to your lordſhips diſpoſition, and my ſelfe to your fauorable protection, I humblie take my leaue. 25. Nouember, 1586.

Your lordſhips moſt humblie in all dutie to command, R. C.

The briefe of the lord chancellors firſt ſpeach, at the time when he deliuered hir moſt excellent maieſtie a petition in writing, for and in the name of the lords and commons: which ſpeaches were of more length than here are by me collected: but ſure I am, the ſubſtance thereof is here trulie expreſſed.

That the lords and commons, hauing of long time to their intolerable greefe, found, by how manie practiſes the Scotiſh quéene had compaſſed the deſtruction of hir highneſſe moſt roiall perſon (in whoſe ſafetie next vnder God they acknowledged their chiefe felicitie to conſiſt) thereby not onelie to bereaue them of the ſincere and true religion in this realme profeſſed and eſtabliſhed, but to bring backe againe this noble realme into the thraldome of Romiſh tyrannie, and to ouerthrow the happie eſtate thereof: wherein, although hir highneſſe of hir abundant gratious naturall clemencie, and princelie magnanimitie, hath either lightlie paſſed them ouer, or with no ſmall indulgence tolerated, notwithſtanding the often and earneſt inſtances of hir nobilitie and commons in ſundrie parlements heretofore: and further hath protected hir from the violent purſute of hir owne people: ſhe yet, as a perſon obdurat in malice (as it appeareth) continued hir former practiſes, as had béene latelie manifeſted by certeine wicked conſpiracies plotted by one Anthonie Babington, and diuerſe deſperat perſons, that had combined and confederated themſelues by vow and oth in a moſt horrible enterpriſe, by murther to take awaie the life of hir maieſtie: wherein the Scotiſh quéene did not onelie aduiſe them, but alſo direct, comfort, and abbet them, with perſuaſion, counſell, promiſe of reward, and earneſt obteſtation.

Whereupon hir maieſtie at the earneſt requeſt of ſuch as tendered the ſafetie of hir roiall perſon, and the quiet of the realme, did direct commiſſion vnder the great ſeale to ſundrie lords and others of hir maieſties priuie councell, & a great number of lords of parlement, of the greateſt and moſt ancient degrée, aſſiſted with ſome of the principall iudges of the realme, to heare, examine, and determine the ſame, according to a ſtatute in that behalfe, made in the ſeuen and twentith yeare of hir reigne. Who to the number of thirtie and ſix, hauing attended the execution of the ſaid commiſſion, and diuerſe daies and times heard the allegations againſt the ſaid Scotiſh quéene in hir owne preſence and hearing (ſhe being permitted to ſaie what ſhe would in hir owne excuſe) did with one aſſent, find hir culpable both in priuitie & conſent to the ſaid crimes obiected, and alſo in compaſſing the quéens maieſties death.

· Which ſentence, by hir owne directions, vpon the hearing of the proofes and proceſſe in parlement, was iudged to haue béene moſt honorable and iuſt. and thereupon they all beſéech hir maieſtie, that forasmuch as the ſaid quéene of Scots, was the verie ground and onelie ſubiect, whereupon ſuch dangerous practiſes and complots had béene founded, againſt hir maieſties moſt roiall perſon, and the eſtate of this realme for theſe manie yeares, to the ouerthrow of ſundrie of the nobilitie of the land, and danger of chriſtian religion, and that they could ſée no hope of hir deſiſting, and hir adherents; but that ſtill hir maieſties ſafetie muſt be hazarded, and ſtand to the euent of the like miraculous diſcoueries:

Therefore, as moſt humble and inſtant ſuppliants, they did vpon their knées at hir moſt gratious féet, beſéech and requeſt in moſt earneſt maner, that aswell for the continuance of Gods religion, the quiet of this kingdome, preſeruation of hir perſon, and defenſe of them and their poſterities, it would pleaſe hir highneſſe to take order, that the ſaid ſentence might be publiſhed, and ſuch further direction giuen, as was requiſit in this ſo weightie a cauſe, according to the purport and intent of the ſaid ſtatute. Wherein, if hir maieſtie (purſuing hir wonted clemencie) ſhould now be remiſſe, beſides the imminent danger to hir perſon, ſhe might by the ſtaie thereof, procure the heauie diſpleaſure of almightie God, as by ſundrie ſeuere examples of his iuſtice in the ſacred ſcriptures dooth appeare. And ſo he deliuered to hir maieſties owne hands the petition in writing, which he ſaid had béene with great deliberation aſſented vnto by all the whole parlement.

A SHORT EXTRACT OF SVCH reaſons, as were deliuered in ſpeach by maiſter ſargent Puckering, ſpeaker of the lower houſe, before the queens moſt excellent maieſtie in hir preſence chamber at Richmond, the twelfe of Nouember 1586, in the eight and twentith yere of hir reigñe, conteining diuerſe apparant and imminent dangers, that maie grow to hir maieſties moſt roiall perſon, and to hir realme from the Scotiſh queene and hir adherents, if remedie be not prouided.

Firſt touching the danger of hir maieſties perſon.

1 BOth this Scotiſh quéene and hir fauorers, doo thinke hir to haue right, not to ſuccéed but to inioie your crowne in poſſeſſion: and therefore as ſhée is a moſt impatient competitor, ſo will ſhée not ſpare anie meanes whatſoeuer, that maie bereaue vs of your maieſtie, the onelie impediment that ſhe inioieth not hir deſire.

2 She is obdurat in malice againſt your roiall perſon, notwithſtanding you haue ſhewed hir all fauour and mercie, as well in preſeruing hir kingdome, as ſauing hir life, and ſaluing hir honor. And therefore there is no place for mercie, ſince there is no hope that ſhe will deſiſt from moſt wicked attempts: the rather, for that hir malice appeareth ſuch, that ſhe maketh (as it were) hir teſtament of the ſame, to be executed after hir death, and appointeth hir executors to performe it.

3 She boldlie and openlie profeſſed it lawfull for hir to mooue inuaſion vpon you. And therefore, as of inuaſion victorie maie inſue, and of victorie, the death of the vanquiſhed: ſo did ſhe thereby not obſcurelie bewraie, that ſhe thought it lawfull for hir to deſtroie your ſacred perſon.

4 She thinketh it not onelie lawfull, but honorable alſo and meritorious to take your life from you, as being alreadie depriued of your crowne by the excommunication of the holie father. And therefore it is like ſhe will (as hitherto ſhe hath doone) continuallie ſéeke it by whatſoeuer meanes.

5 That ſhe is gréedie of your maieſties death, and preferreth it before hir owne life and ſafetie: for in hir direction to one of hir late complices, ſhe aduiſed (vnder couert termes) that whatſoeuer ſhould become of hir, that tragicall execution ſhould be performed vpon you.

1 IT is moſt perillous to ſpare hir, that continuallie hath ſought the ouerthrow and ſuppreſſion of true religion, infected with poperie from hir tender youth, and being after that a confederat in that holie league when ſhe came to age, and euer ſince a profeſſed enimie againſt the truth.

The danger of the ouerthrow of the true religion.

2 She reſteth wholie vpon popiſh hopes to deliuer and aduance hir, and is thereby ſo deuoted to that profeſſion, that aswell for ſatiſfaction of others, as for féeding of hir owne humor, ſhe will ſupplant the goſpell, where and when ſo euer ſhe maie: which euill is ſo much the greater, and the more to be auoided, as that it ſlaieth the verie ſoule, and will ſpread it ſelfe not onelie ouer England and Scotland, but alſo into thoſe parts beyond the ſeas, where the goſpell of God is mainteined, the which cannot but be excéedinglie weakened, by the defection of this noble Iland.

1 As the Lydians ſaid, Vnum regem agnoſcunt Lydi, duos autem tolerare non poſſunt: So we ſaie, Vnicam reginam Elizabetham agnoſcunt Angli, duas autem tolerare non poſſunt.

The perill of the ſtate of the realme.

2 As ſhe hath alredie by hir allurements brought to deſtruction more noble men and their houſes, togither with a greater multitude of the commons of this realme, during hir being here, than ſhe ſhould haue béene able to doo, if ſhe had béene in poſſeſſion of hir owne crowne, and armed in the field againſt vs: ſo will ſhe ſtill be continuall cauſe of the like ſpoile, to the greater loſſe and perill of this eſtate: and therefore this realme neither can, nor maie indure hir.

3 Againe, ſhe is the onelie hope of all diſcontented ſubiects, ſhe is the foundation whereon all the euill diſpoſed doo build, ſhe is the root from whenſe all rebellions and trecheries doo ſpring: and therefore whileſt this hope laſteth, this foundation ſtandeth, and this root liueth, they will reteine heart, and ſet on foot whatſoeuer their deuiſes againſt the realme, which otherwiſe will fall awaie, die, and come to nothing.

4 Mercie now in this caſe towards hir would in the end proue crueltie againſt vs all. Nam eſt quædam crudelis miſericordia, and therefore to ſpare hir, is to ſpill vs.

5 Beſides this, it will exceedinglie greeue and in a maner deadlie wound the hearts of all the good ſubiects of your land, if they ſhall ſee a conſpiracie ſo horrible not condignlie puniſhed.

6 Thouſands of your maieſties moſt liege and louing ſubiects, of all ſorts and degrees, that in a tender zeale of your maieſties ſafetie, haue moſt willinglie both by open ſubſcription and ſolemne vow, entered into a firme and loiall aſſociation, and haue thereby proteſted to purſue vnto the death, by all forcible and poſſible meanes, ſuch as ſhe is by iuſt ſentence now found to be: can neither diſcharge their loue, nor well ſaue their oths, if your maieſtie ſhall keepe hir aliue: of which burthen your maieſties ſubiects are moſt deſirous to be releeued, as the ſame maie be, if iuſtice be doone.

7 Laſtlie, your maieſties moſt louing and dutifull commons doubt not, but that as your maieſtie is dulie exerciſed in reading the booke of God: ſo it will pleaſe you to call to your princelie remembrance, how fearefull the examples of Gods vengeance be, that are there to be found againſt king Saule for ſparing king Agag, & againſt king Achab for ſauing the life of Benadad; both which were by the iuſt iudgement of God depriued of their kingdoms, for ſparing thoſe wicked princes, whome God had deliuered into their hands, of purpoſe to be ſlaine by them, as by the miniſters of his eternall and diuine iuſtice. Wherein full wiſelie Salomon proceeded to puniſhment, when he tooke the life of his owne naturall and elder brother Adonias, for the onelie intention of a marriage, that gaue ſuſpicion of treaſon againſt him. Herein we your maieſties moſt louing and obedient ſubiects earneſtlie depend vpon your princelie reſolution, which we aſſure our ſelues ſhall be to God moſt acceptable, and to vs no other than the ſtate of your regall authoritie maie afford vs, and the approoued arguments of your tender care for our ſafetie vnder your charge dooth promiſe to our expectation.

A REPORT OF HIR MAIESTIES moſt gratious anſwer, deliuered by hir ſelfe verballie, to the firſt petitions of the lords and commons, being the eſtates of parlement, in hir chamber of preſence at Richmond, the twelfe daie of Nouember 1586, at the full almoſt of eight and twentie yeares of hir reigne. Whereof the reporter requireth of all that were hearers, a fauorable interpretation of his intent, because he findeth that he can not expreſſe the ſame anſwerable to the originall, which the learned call Prototypon.

THe bottomleſſe graces and immeſurable benefits beſtowed vpon me by the almightie, are, and haue beene ſuch, as I muſt not onelie acknowledge them, but admire them, accounting them as well miracles as benefits; not ſo much in reſpect of his diuine maieſtie, with whome nothing is more common than to doo things rare and ſingular: as in regard of our weakeneſſe, who can not ſufficientlie ſet foorth his wonderfull works and graces, which to me haue beene ſo manie, ſo diuerſelie folded and imbroidered one vpon another, as in no ſort I am able to expreſſe them. And although there liueth not anie, that maie more iuſtlie acknowledge themſelues infinitelie bound vnto God than I, whoſe life he hath miraculouſlie preſerued at ſundrie times (beyond my merit) from a multitude of perils & dangers: yet is not that the cauſe, for which I count my ſelfe the deepelieſt bound to giue him my humbleſt thanks, or to yeeld him greateſt recognition; but this which I ſhall tell you hereafter, which will deſerue the name of woonder, if rare things and ſeldome ſeene be worthie of account. Euen this it is, that as I came to the crowne with the willing hearts of my ſubiects, ſo doo I now after eight and twentie yeares reigne, perceiue in you no diminution of good wils, which if happilie I ſhould want, well might I breath, but neuer thinke I liued.

And now, albeit I find my life hath beene full dangerouſlie ſought, and death contriued by ſuch as no deſert procured: yet am I therein ſo cleare from malice (which hath the propertie to make men glad at the fals and faults of their foes, and make them ſeeme to doo for other cauſes, when rancor is the ground) as I proteſt it is and hath beene my greeuous thought, that one, not different in ſex, of like eſtate, and my neere kin, ſhould fall into ſo great a crime: yea I had ſo little purpoſe to purſue hir with anie colour of malice, that as it is not vnknowen to ſome of my lords here (for now I will plaie the blab) I ſecretlie wrote hir a letter vpon the diſcouerie of ſundrie treaſons, that if ſhe would confeſſe them, and priuatlie acknowledge them by hir letters to my ſelfe, ſhe neuer ſhould need be called for them into ſo publike queſtion. Neither did I it of mind to circumuent hir: for then I knew as much as ſhe could confeſſe, and ſo did I write. And if euen yet, now that the matter is made but two apparant, I thought ſhe trulie would repent (as perhaps ſhe would eaſilie appeare in outward ſhew to doo) and that for hir, none other would take the matter vpon them; or that we were but as two milke maids with pailes vpon our armes, or that there were no more dependencie vpon vs but mine owne life were onelie in danger, and not the whole eſtate of your religion and well doings, I proteſt (wherein you maie beleeue me, for though I maie haue manie vices, I hope I haue not accuſtomed my toong to be an inſtrument of vntruth) I would moſt willinglie pardon and remit this offenſe.

Or if by my death other nations and kingdoms might trulie ſaie, that this realme had attained an euer proſperous and floriſhing eſtate: I would (I aſſure you) not deſire to liue; but gladlie giue my life, to the end my death might procure you a better prince. And for your ſakes it is, that I deſire to liue, to keepe you from a woorſe. For as for me, I aſſure you, I find no great cauſe I ſhould be fond to liue: I take no ſuch pleaſure in it, that I ſhould much wiſh it, nor conceiue ſuch terror in death, that I ſhould greatlie feare it: and yet I ſaie not, but if the ſtroke were comming, perchance fleſh and bloud would be mooued with it, and ſeeke to ſhun it. I haue had good experience and triall of this world: I know what it is to be a ſubiect; what to be a ſouereigne; what to haue good neighbors, and ſometime meet euill willers. I haue found treaſon in truſt, ſeene great benefits little regarded, and in ſtead of gratefulneſſe, courſes of purpoſe to croſſe.

Theſe former remembrances, preſent feeling, and future expectation of euils, (I ſaie) haue made me thinke, An euill is much the better, the leſſe while it indureth: & ſo, them happieſt, that are ſooneſt henſe: and taught me to beare with a better mind theſe treaſons, than is common to my ſex: yea, with a better heart perhaps, than is in ſome men. Which I hope you will not meerelie impute to my ſimplicitie or want of vnderſtanding, but rather, that I thus conceiued, that had their purpoſes taken effect, I ſhould not haue found the blow, before I had felt it: and though my perill ſhould haue béene great, my paine ſhould haue béene but ſmall and ſhort: wherein, as I would be loth to die ſo bloudie a death, ſo doubt I not, but God would haue giuen me grace to be prepared for ſuch an euent, chance when it ſhall, which I refer vnto his good pleaſure. And now, as touching their treaſons and conſpiracies, togither with the contriuer of them, I will not ſo preiudicat my ſelfe and this my realme, as to ſaie or thinke, that I might not, without the laſt ſtatute, by the ancient laws of this land, haue proceeded againſt hir, which was not made particularlie to preiudice hir; though perhaps it might then be ſuſpected, in reſpect of the diſpoſition of ſuch as depend that waie. It was ſo far from being intended to intrap hir, that it was rather an admonition to warne the danger thereof: but ſith it is made, and in the force of a law, I thought good, in that which might concerne hir, to proceed according therevnto, rather than by courſe of common law: wherein, if you the iudges haue not deceiued me, or that the books you brought me were not falſe (which God forbid) I might as iuſtlie haue tried hir by the ancient laws of the land.

But you lawiers are ſo nice in ſifting, and ſcanning euerie word and letter, that manie times you ſtand more vpon forme than matter, vpon ſyllables than ſenſe of the law. For in the ſtrictneſſe & exact following of common forme, ſhe muſt haue béene indicted in Staffordſhire, haue holden vp hir hand at the barre, and béene tried by a iurie: a proper courſe forſooth, to deale in that maner with one of hir eſtate. I thought it better therefore, for auoiding of theſe and more abſurdities, to commit the cauſe to the inquiſition of a good number of the greateſt and moſt noble perſonages of this realme, of the iudges and others of good account, whoſe ſentence I muſt approue: and all little enough. For we princes, I tell you, are ſet on ſtages, in the ſight and view of all the world dulie obſerued; the eies of manie behold our actions; a ſpot is ſoone ſpied in our garments; a blemiſh quicklie noted in our doings. It behooueth vs therefore to be carefull that our procéedings be iuſt and honorable.

But I muſt tell you one thing more, that in this laſt act of parlement you haue brought me vnto a narrow ſtreict, that I muſt giue direction for hir death, which cannot bée to mée but a moſt gréeuous and irkſome burthen. And leaſt you might miſtake mine abſence from this parlement (which I had almoſt forgotten) although there bée no cauſe whie I ſhould willinglie come amongſt multitudes, for that amongſt manie ſome maie bée euill: yet hath it not béene the doubt of anie ſuch danger or occaſion that kept me from thenſe; but onlie the great griefe to heare this cauſe ſpoken of; eſpeciallie, that ſuch a one of ſtate and kin ſhould néed ſo open a declaration, and that this nation ſhould be ſo ſpotted with blots of diſloialtie. Wherein the leſſe is my gréefe, for that I hope the better part is mine, and thoſe of the worſe not ſo much to be accounted of, for that in ſéeking my deſtruction, they might haue ſpoiled their owne ſouls. And euen now could I tell you, that which would make you ſorie. It is a ſecret, and yet I will tell it you; although it is knowne I haue the propertie to kéepe counſell, but too well oftentimes to mine owne perill. It is not long ſince mine eies did ſée it written, that an oth was taken within few daies, either to kill me, or to be hanged themſelues: and that to be performed yer one moneth were ended. Hereby I ſée your danger in me, and neither can nor will be ſo vnthankefull or careleſſe of your conſciences, as not prouide for your ſafetie.

I am not vnmindfull of your oth made in the aſſociation, manifeſting your great good wils and affections, taken and entered into, vpon good conſcience, and true knowledge of the guilt, for ſafetie of my perſon, and conſeruation of my life: doone (I proteſt to God) before I heard it, or euer thought of ſuch a matter, vntill a great number of hands with manie obligations were ſhewed me, at Hampton court, ſigned and ſubſcribed with the names and ſeales of the greateſt of this land. Which as I doo acknowledge as a perfect argument of your true hearts, and great zeale to my ſafetie: ſo ſhall my bond be ſtronger tied to greater care for all your good. But for as much as this matter is rare, weightie, and of great conſequence, I thinke you doo not looke for anie preſent reſolution: the rather, for that, as it is not my maner, in matters of far leſſe moment, to giue ſpéedie anſwer without due conſideration; ſo in this of ſuch importance, I thinke it verie requiſit with earneſt praier to beſéech his diuine maieſtie, ſo to illuminat my vnderſtanding, and inſpire me with his grace, as I maie doo and determine that, which ſhall ſerue to the eſtabliſhment of his church, preſeruation of your eſtates, and proſperitie of this common wealth vnder my charge. Wherein (for that I know delaie is dangerous) you ſhall haue with all conueniencie our reſolution deliuered by our meſſage. And what euer anie prince maie merit of their ſubiects, for their approued teſtimonie of their vnfained ſinceritie, either by gouerning iuſtlie, void of all parcialitie, or ſufferance of anie iniuries doone (euen to the pooreſt) that doo I aſſuredlie promiſe inuiolablie to performe, for requitall of your ſo manie deſerts.

¶ The occaſions of the ſecond acceſſe.

This anſwer thus made by hir maieſtie, the lords and commons were diſmiſſed. And then hir highneſſe ſome few daies after, vpon deliberation had of this petition, being (as it appeared) of hir mercifull diſpoſition of nature, and hir princelie magnanimitie, in ſome conflict with hir ſelfe what to doo in a cauſe ſo weightie and important to hir and the realme, ſent by the lord chancellor (as I heard) and by the mouth of an honorable perſon, and a right worthie member of the lower houſe, this meſſage to both houſes: moouing and earneſtlie charging them, to enter into a further conſideration, whether there might not be ſome other waie of remedie, than that they had alreadie required, ſo far diſagréeing from hir owne naturall inclination. Wherevpon, the lords and commons in either houſes aſſembled, had ſundrie conſultations, both in their ſeuerall houſes generallie, and by priuat committées deputed ſpeciallie. And after conference had betwixt the ſaid committées, it was reſolued with vnanimitie of conſent amongſt them in the lower houſe, and by vniuerſall concord in the vpper houſe (the queſtion there propounded to euerie one of the lords) that there could be found no other ſound and aſſured meane, in the depth of their vnderſtanding, for the continuance of the chriſtian religion, quiet of the realme, and ſafetie of hir maieſties moſt roiall perſon, than that which was conteined in their former petition. The reaſons whereof were ſummarilie theſe that follow, which are more ſhortlie reported than they were vttered.

A briefe report of the ſecond acceſſe the foure and twentith of Nouember 1586: and of the anſwer made in the name of the lords of the parlement, to a meſſage ſent from hir maieſtie by the lord chancellor after hir firſt anſwer.

The lord chancellor, accompanied with aboue fiue or ſix and twentie lords of parlement, came before hir highneſſe in hir chamber of preſence, to deliuer the reſolution of all the lords of parlement, concerning a meſſage which he had not long before deliuered from hir maieſtie, for further conſultation, whether anie other means could be thought of, or found out by anie of them, how the Scotiſh quéens life might be ſpared, and yet hir maieſties perſon ſaued out of perill, and the ſtate of the realme preſerued in quiet; declared, that according to that he had receiued in commandement from hir maieſtie, he had imparted the ſame vnto the lords aſſembled in the vpper houſe, whom he found by their generall ſilence much amazed at the propounding thereof, conſidering the ſame had béene before in deliberation amongeſt them, and reſolued vpon, and as appeared by their former petition exhibited to hir highneſſe, wherein they had expreſſed the ſame reſolution.

Notwithſtanding, for hir maieſties further ſatiſfaction, they had entred into a new conſultation, & for that purpoſe ſelected a great number of the choiſeſt perſons of the higher houſe of parlement to confer thereof, either priuatlie or togither with the lower houſe: which alſo was doone accordinglie at ſeuerall times. At all which conferences it was concluded by them all, & ſo afterwards by the whole aſſemblie of both houſes, that there could be no other aſſured means for the preſeruation of hir maieſties life, and continuance of Gods religion & quiet of this ſtate, than by the full execution of the ſentence according to their former petition, inſtantlie preſſing hir maieſtie with manie arguments and reaſons tending thereto. All which, though by diſtance from his lordſhip I could not well conceiue, yet this I did remember preciſelie and eſpeciallie was one: that as it were iniuſtice to denie execution of law at the ſute of anie one particular, and the meaneſt of hir people: ſo much more not to yeeld to the earneſt inſtance and humble praiers of all hir faithfull and louing ſubiects. And ſo concluded, with earneſt petition for hir maieſties reſolute determination and anſwer, for a preſent and ſpéedie direction by proclamation, and otherwiſe alſo, according vnto the forme of the ſtatute.

A ſummarie report of the ſecond ſpeach, vttered by the ſpeaker of the lower houſe, by direction of all the commons.

That if hir maieſtie ſhould be ſafe without taking awaie the life of the Scotiſh quéene, the ſame were moſt likelie and probablie to grow, by one of theſe means following.

1 Firſt, that happilie ſhe might be reclamed and become a repentant conuert, agniſing hir maieſties great mercie and fauors in remitting hir heinous offenſe, and by hir loialtie hereafter performe the fruits of ſuch conuerſion.

2 Or elſe by a more ſtreict gard be ſo kept, as there ſhould be no feare of the like attempts hereafter.

3 Or that good aſſurance might be giuen by oth, bonds or hoſtages, as cautions for hir good and loiall demeanor from henſeforth.

4 Or laſtlie by baniſhment, the realme might be voided of hir perſon, and thereby the perils further remooued that grow to hir maieſtie by hir preſence. The moments whereof being dulie pondered, did yet appeare ſo light in all their iudgements, that they durſt not aduiſe anie ſecuritie to reſt in anie, no not in all of them. For touching hir conuerſion, it was conſidered, that if pietie or dutie could haue reſtreined hir from ſuch heinous attempts, there was cauſe abundantlie miniſtred vnto hir on hir maieſties behalfe, when ſhe not onelie protected hir againſt the violence of hir owne ſubiects, who purſued hir to death by iuſtice, but couered hir honor when the ſame by publike fame was touched, and by verie heinous and capitall crimes (obiected and prooued againſt hir before certeine commiſſarie delegats aſſigned to examine the ſame) more than blemiſhed; and ſpared hir life, when for hir former conſpiracies and confederacies with the Northerne rebels, hir highneſſe was with great inſtance preſſed by both the houſes in the fouretéenth yeare of hir maieſties reigne, to doo like iuſtice vpon hir, as now is deſired, and as hir treaſonable practiſes then had moſt iuſtlie deſerued.

And where the penaltie of this act ſufficientlie notified vnto hir, ſhould haue terrified hir from ſo wicked attempts; ſhe hath neuertheleſſe inſiſted in hir former practiſes, as a perſon obdurat in malice againſt hir maieſtie, and irrecouerable; ſo as there was no probable hope of anie conuerſion, but rather great doubt and feare of relapſe and recidiuation, foraſmuch as ſhe ſtood obſtinatlie in the deniall of matter moſt euidentlie prooued, and now moſt iuſtlie ſentenced againſt hir, and was not entred into the firſt part of repentance, the recognition of hir offenſe, and ſo much the further off from the true fruits that ſhould accompanie the ſame.

As for a ſurer gard & more ſtreict impriſonment, it was reſolued that there was no ſecuritie therein, nor yet in the other two means propounded of bonds and hoſtages: foraſmuch as the ſame meanes that ſhould be practiſed to take hir maieſties life awaie, (which God forbid) would aptlie ſerue for the deliuerie of hir perſon, and releaſe of the bonds & hoſtages that ſhould be giuen for cautions in that behalfe: which being vnhappilie atchiued, and to our irreparable loſſe, who ſhould ſue the bonds, or deteine the hoſtages? Or being deteined, what proportion was there in bonds or hoſtages whatſoeuer, to counteruaile the value of ſo pretious & ineſtimable a iewell, as hir maieſtie is to this realme, & to vs all? But ſhe will ſolemnlie vow & take an oth, that ſhe will not attempt anie thing to the hurt of hir maieſties perſon. She hath alreadie ſundrie times falſified hir word, hir writing, and hir oth; and holdeth it for an article of religion, that faith is not to be holden with heretiks, of which ſort ſhe accounteth your maieſtie and all the profeſſors of the goſpell to be: and therfore haue we little reaſon to truſt hir in that, wherof ſhe maketh ſo ſmall a conſcience.

As for baniſhment, that were a ſtep A malo in peius, to ſet hir at libertie, a thing ſo greatlie deſired and thirſted for by hir adherents, and by ſome princes hir alies, who ſought hir inlargement chéeflie to make hir a head to be ſet vp againſt hir maieſtie, in time of inuaſion. To the which were added ſome few reaſons collected out of hir owne letters and the confeſſion of Babington, hir inſtrument and conſpirator: by which appeared how hir owne conſcience bewraied what might iuſtlie fall vpon hir, in caſe anie of hir intended deſignements came to light, that ſhe might haplie be ſhut vp in ſome more cloſe end ſtrict priſon, as the Tower of London, if there befell hir no worſe thing. And in that ſhe directed Babington, in caſe he failed in the action of hir deliuerie, that he ſhould neuertheleſſe procéed in the reſidue; which was the death of hir maieſtie: who alſo confeſſed, that vpon aſſurance of hir maieſties death, or the arriuall of ſtrangers, he intended to proclame the quéene of Scots, and made no doubt of the deſired ſucceſſe: and therefore hir maieſties death being ſo earneſtlie ſought, for aduancement of this competitor, hir highneſſe could not remaine in quietneſſe or ſecuritie, if the Scotiſh quéene ſhould longer continue hir life.

THE SECOND ANSWER made by the queens maieſtie, deliuered by hir owne mouth, to the ſecond ſpeach, vttered in the names of the lords and commons of the parlement.

FUll gréeuous is the waie, whoſe going on, and end, bréed cumber for the hire of a laborious iourneie. I haue ſtriued more this daie than euer in my life, whether I ſhould ſpeake, or vſe ſilence. If I ſpeake and not complaine, I ſhall diſſemble; if I hold my peace, your labour taken were full vaine. For me to make my mone, were ſtrange and rare: for I ſuppoſe you ſhall find few, that for their owne particular, will cumber you with ſuch a care. Yet ſuch I proteſt hath béene my gréedie deſire and hungrie will, that of your conſultation might haue fallen out ſome other meanes to worke my ſafetie ioined with your aſſurance (than that for which you are become ſuch earneſt ſutors) as I proteſt, I muſt néeds vſe complaint, though not of you, but vnto you, and of the cauſe; for that I doo perceiue by your aduiſes, praiers, and deſires, there falleth out this accident, that onelie my iniurers bane muſt be my lifes ſuertie.

But if anie there liue ſo wicked of nature, to ſuppoſe, that I prolonged this time onelie, Pro forma, to the intent to make a ſhew of clemencie, thereby to ſet my praiſes to the wierdrawers to lengthen them the more: they doo me ſo great a wrong, as they can hardlie recompenſe. Or if anie perſon there be, that thinke or imagine, that the leaſt vaineglorious thought hath drawne me further herein, they doo me as open iniurie as euer was doone to anie liuing creature, as he that is the maker of all thoughts knoweth beſt to be true. Or if there be anie, that thinke, that the lords appointed in commiſſion durſt doo no other, as fearing thereby to diſpleaſe, or elſe to be ſuſpected to be of a contrarie opinion to my ſafetie, they doo but heape vpon me iniurious conceipts. For either thoſe put in truſt by me to ſupplie my place, haue not performed their duties towards me; or elſe they haue ſignified vnto you all, that my deſire was, that euerie one ſhould doo according to his conſcience, and in the courſe of his procéedings ſhould inioie both fréedome of voice and libertie of opinion; and what they would not openlie declare, they might priuatlie to my ſelfe haue reuealed. It was of a willing mind and great deſire I had, that ſome other meanes might be found out, wherein I ſhould haue taken more comfort, than in anie other thing vnder the ſun.

And ſith now it is reſolued, that my ſuretie can not be eſtabliſhed without a princeſſe end, I haue iuſt cauſe to complaine; that I, who haue in my time pardoned ſo manie rebels, winked at ſo manie treaſons, and either not produced them, or altogither ſlipt them ouer with ſilence, ſhould now be forced to this procéeding, againſt ſuch a perſon. I haue beſides, during my reigne, ſéene and heard manie opprobrious books and pamphlets againſt me, my realme and ſtate, accuſing me to be a tyrant; I thanke them for their almes: I beléeue, therein their meaning was to tell me news, and news it is to me in déed; I would it were as ſtrange to heare of their impietie! What will they not now ſaie, when it ſhall be ſpread, that for the ſafetie of hir life, a maiden quéene could be content to ſpill the bloud, euen of hir owne kinſwoman? I maie therefore full well complaine, that anie man ſhould thinke me giuen to crueltie, whereof I am ſo giltleſſe and innocent, as I ſhould ſlander God, if I ſhould ſaie he gaue me ſo vile a mind: yea, I proteſt, I am ſo far from it, that for mine owne life I would not touch hir: neither hath my care béene ſo much bent how to prolong mine, as how to preſerue both: which I am right ſorie is made ſo hard, yea ſo impoſſible.

I am not ſo void of iudgement, as not to ſée mine owne perill; nor yet ſo ignorant, as not to know it were in nature a fooliſh courſe, to cheriſh a ſword to cut mine owne throte; nor ſo careleſſe, as not to weigh that my life dailie is in hazard: but this I doo conſider, that manie a man would put his life in danger for the ſafegard of a king, I doo not ſaie that ſo will I: but I praie you thinke, that I haue thought vpon it. But ſith ſo manie haue both written & ſpoken againſt me, I praie you giue me leaue to ſaie ſomewhat for my ſelfe, & before you returne to your countries, let you know, for what a one you haue paſſed ſo carefull thoughts. Wherein, as I thinke my ſelfe infinitlie beholding vnto you all, that ſéeke to preſerue my life by all the meanes you maie: ſo I proteſt vnto you, that there liueth no prince, that euer ſhall be more mindfull to requite ſo good deſerts. And as I perceiue you haue kept your old woonts, in a generall ſéeking of the lengthning of my daies: ſo am I ſure that I ſhall neuer requite it, vnleſſe I had as manie liues as you all: but for euer I will acknowledge it, while there is anie breath left me. Although I maie not iuſtifie, but maie iuſtlie condemne my ſundrie faults and ſinnes to God: yet for my care in this gouernment, let me acquaint you with my intents.

When firſt I tooke the ſcepter, my title made me not forget the giuer: and therefore began, as it became me, with ſuch religion, as both I was borne in, bred in, and I truſt ſhall die in. Although I was not ſo ſimple, as not to know what danger and perill ſo great an alteration might procure me: how manie great princes of the contrarie opinion would attempt all they might againſt me: and generallie, what enimitie I ſhould bréed vnto my ſelfe: which all I regarded not, knowing that he, for whoſe ſake I did it, might, and would defend me. For which it is, that euer ſince I haue béene ſo dangerouſlie proſecuted, as I rather maruell that I am, than muſe that I ſhould not be: if it were not Gods holie hand that continueth me, beyond all other expectation. Then entered I further into the ſchoole of experience, bethinking what it fitted a king to doo: and there I ſaw, he ſcant was well furniſhed, if either he lacked iuſtice, temperance, magnanimitie, or iudgement. As for the two latter, I will not boaſt, my ſex dooth not permit it: but for the two firſt, this dare I ſaie; amongſt my ſubiects I neuer knew a difference of perſon, where right was one: nor neuer to my knowledge preferred for fauour, whome I thought not fit for woorth: nor bent my eares to credit a tale that firſt was told me: nor was ſo raſh, to corrupt my iudgement with my cenſure, before I heard the cauſe. I will not ſaie, but manie reports might fortune be brought me by ſuch as might heare the caſe, whoſe parcialitie might mar ſometime the matter: for we princes maie not heare all our ſelues. But this dare I boldlie affirme, my verdict went euer with the truth of my knowledge. As full well wiſhed Alcibiades his freend, that he ſhould not giue anie anſwer, till he had recited the letters of the alphabet: ſo haue I not vſed ouer ſudden reſolutions, in matters that haue touched me full neere: you will ſaie that with me, I thinke.

And therefore, as touching your counſels and conſultations, I conceiue them to be wiſe, honeſt, and conſcionable: ſo prouident and carefull for the ſafetie of my life (which I wiſh no longer than maie be for your good) that though I neuer can yeeld you of recompenſe your due: yet ſhall I indeuour my ſelfe to giue you cauſe, to thinke your good will not ill beſtowed, and ſtriue to make my ſelfe worthie for ſuch ſubiects. And now for your petition, I ſhall praie you for this preſent, to content your ſelues with an anſwer without anſwer. Your iudgement I condemne not, neither doo I miſtake your reaſons, but praie you to accept my thankefulneſſe, excuſe my doubtfulneſſe, and take in good part my anſwer anſwerleſſe: wherein I attribute not ſo much to mine owne iudgement, but that I thinke manie particular perſons maie go before me, though by my degree I go before them. Therefore if I ſhould ſaie, I would not doo what you requeſt, it might peraduenture be more than I thought: and to ſaie I would doo it, might perhaps breed perill of that you labour to preſerue, being more than in your owne wiſedoms and diſcretions would ſeeme conuenient, circumſtances of place and time being dulie conſidered.

The ſentence giuen againſt the Scotiſh queene ſolemnlie proclamed.

Thus far the proceeding againſt the Scotiſh queene, as the ſame is reported by R. C. Now followeth the publication of the ſame, which was doone with great port and ſtatelineſſe. For vpon tueſdaie, being the ſixt daie of December, the lord maior of London, aſſiſted with diuers earls, and barons, the aldermen in their ſcarlet gownes, the principall officers of the citie, the greateſt number of gentlemen of the beſt accompt in and about the citie, with the number of foureſcore of the moſt graue & worſhipfulleſt citizens, in cotes of veluet, and chaines of gold, all on horſſe backe, in moſt ſolemne and ſtatelie maner, by the ſound of foure trumpets, about ten of the clocke in the forenone, made open and publike proclamation and declaration of the ſentence latelie giuen by the nobilitie againſt the queene of Scots, vnder the great ſeale of England, bearing date at Richmont the fourth daie of December, being openlie read by maſter Sebright, towne-clerke of London, & with lowd voice ſolemnelie proclamed by the ſargent at armes of the ſaid citie, in foure ſeuerall places, to wit, at the croſſe in Cheape, at the end of Chancerie lane in Fleetſtreet, ouer againſt the Temple, at Leaden hall corner, and at ſaint Magnus corner neere London bridge.

During which time, the like ſolemne proclamations were made with great ſolemnities in the countie of Middleſex, namelie in the palace at Weſtminſter, without Temple barre, and in Holborne, by the ſhiriffes of London and Midleſex, aſſiſted with ſundrie noblemen, gentlemen of good account, and the iuſtices of peace of the ſaid countie, to the great and wonderfull reioiſing of the people of all ſorts, as manifeſtlie appeared by their eger running after the portlie traine, their thronging to heare the ſame publiſhed, their ringing of bels, making of bonfires, and ſinging of pſalmes in euerie ſtreet and lane of the citie. The ſaid proclamation followeth.

A true copie of the proclamation latelie publiſhed by the queenes maieſtie, vnder the great ſeale of England, for the declaring of the ſentence latelie giuen againſt the queene of Scots, in forme as followeth.

ELiſabeth by the grace of God, queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. Whereas we were giuen to vnderſtand very crediblie, though to our great greefe, that diuerſe things were, and of late time had beene compaſſed, imagined, and reſolutelie intended, tending directlie to the hurt and deſtruction of our roiall perſon, and to the ſubuerſion of the ſtate of our realme by forren inuaſions and rebellions at home, as well by the queene of Scots, remaining in our realme vnder our protection, as by manie diuerſe other wicked perſons with hir priuitie, who had freelie confeſſed the ſame, and had therevpon receiued open triall, iudgement, and execution according to the lawes for their deſerts. And though in verie truth we were greatlie and deeplie greeued in our mind, to thinke or imagine that anie ſuch vnnaturall and monſtrous acts ſhould be either deuiſed, or willinglie aſſented vnto againſt vs, by hir being a princeſſe borne, and of our ſex and bloud, and one alſo whoſe life & honor we had manie times before ſaued and preſerued: yet were we ſo directlie drawne to thinke all the ſame to be true, by the ſight and vnderſtanding of ſuch proofes as were manifeſtlie produced afore vs, vpon matters that had as well croceeded from hir ſelfe, as from the conſpirators themſelues, who voluntarilie & freelie without anie coercion had confeſſed their conſpirations, both iointlie with hir, and directed by hir, againſt our perſon and our realme: and therefore alſo we ſaw great reaſon, to thinke the ſame ouer dangerous to be ſuffered to paſſe onward to take their full effect.

Wherefore we were by ſundrie lords of our nobilitie, and others our louing ſubiects, earneſtlie mooued and counſelled, to take vndelaied order for the inquiſition and examination of all theſe dangerous enterpriſes & conſpiracies, by ſundrie waies directlie auowed to be by the ſaid queen of Scots againſt vs and our realme certeinlie intended; and alſo to vſe all preſent meanes with expedition to withſtand or rather to preuent the ſame. And for that we were verie vnwilling to proceed againſt hir, conſidering hir birth and eſtate, by ſuch vſuall ſort as by the common lawes of the realme we might haue lawfullie doone, which was by indictment and arreignment by ordinarie iuries: therefore, in reſpect both of our owne honor, and of hir perſon, we yeelded, by good aduiſe giuen to vs, to proceed in the moſt honorable ſort that could be deuiſed within our realme, to the examination hereof, according to a late act of parlement, made the three and twentith daie of Nouember, in the ſeuen and twentith yeare of our reigne.

Wherevpon by our commiſſion vnder our great ſeale of England, bearing date at our caſtell of Windſore in our countie of Barkeſhire, the ſixt daie of October now laſt paſt, we did (for that purpoſe) according to that ſtatute, aſſigne, name, and appoint all the lords and others of our priuie councell, and ſo manie other earls and barons lords of parlement, of the greateſt degree and moſt ancient of the nobilitie of this our realme, as with the ſame lords and others of our priuie councell, made vp the number of fortie and two, adding alſo thereto a further, number according to the tenor of the foreſaid act of parlement, of certeine of the cheefeſt and other principall iudges of the courts of record at Weſtminſter, amounting in the whole to the number ber of fortie and ſeuen, to examine all things compaſſed and imagined, tending to the hurt of our roiall perſon, as well by the ſaid quéene of Scots, by the name of Marie the daughter & heire of James the fift late king of Scots, commonlie called the quéene of Scots & Dowager of France, as by anie other by hir priuitie, and all the circumſtances thereof, & therevpon according to the tenor of the ſaid act of parlement, to giue ſentence or iudgment, as vpon good proofe the matter vnto them ſhould appeare, as by the ſame commiſſion more fullie appeareth.

And where afterwards the more part of the ſaid councellors, lords, and iudges, in our ſaid commiſſion named, that is to ſaie, the number of ſix and thirtie, did in the preſence and hearing of the ſaid quéene of Scots, where ſhe remained at our caſtell of Fotheringhaie, at diuerſe daies and times in publike place, verie exactlie, vprightlie, and with great deliberation examine all the matters & offenſes, whereof ſhe was charged and accuſed, tending vnto the dangers afore rehearſed and mentioned in our ſaid commiſſion and all the circumſtances thereof, and heard alſo at large in all fauourable maner, what the ſame quéene did, or could ſaie for hir excuſe and defenſe in that behalfe. Wherevpon afterwards on the fiue and twentith daie of October now laſt paſt, all the ſaid councell, lords, and iudges, that had heard and examined the ſame cauſe in the ſaid quéenes preſence, as afore is mentioned, with one aſſent and conſent, after good deliberation did giue their ſentence and iudgement, in this ſort following:

That after the firſt daie of June, in the ſeuen and twentith yeare of our reigne, and before the date of our ſaid commiſſion, diuerſe things were compaſſed and imagined within this realme of England by Anthonie Babington, and others with the priuitie of the ſaid Marie, pretending title to the crowne of this realme of England, tending to the hurt, death, and deſtruction of our roiall perſon. And likewiſe, that after the ſame firſt daie of June, and before the date of our ſaid commiſſion, the ſaid Marie, pretending title to the ſame crowne, had compaſſed & imagined within the ſame realme, diuerſe things tending to the hurt, death, and deſtruction of our roiall perſon, contrarie to the forme of the ſaid ſtatute: which ſentence and iudgement the ſame lords and commiſſioners haue with one full conſent cauſed to be put in writing, and dulie ingroſſed, with the whole proceſſe of their procedings therevnto belonging, and haue ſubſcribed the ſame with their hands, as by a record thereof ſhewed to vs more fullie and largelie doth appeare.

And whereas alſo, ſithence the ſame ſentence and iudgement ſo giuen and recorded, the lords and commons in this preſent parlement aſſembled, haue alſo at ſundrie times in open parlement, heard and conſidered the principall euidences, proofes, and circumſtances, wherevpon the ſame ſentence and iudgement was grounded, and haue by their publike aſſent in parlement affirmed the ſame to be a iuſt, lawfull, and true ſentence, and ſo haue allowed and approoued the ſame in writing preſented vnto vs: and haue alſo notified to vs, how déepelie they did foreſée the great and manie imminent dangers, which otherwiſe might and would grow to our perſon, and to the whole realme, if this ſentence were not fullie executed: and conſequentlie therefore, they did by their moſt humble and earneſt petitions in that behalfe, of one accord, hauing acceſſe vnto vs (vpon their ſundrie requeſts) moſt inſtantlie vpon their knées, praie, beſéech, and with manie reaſons of great force and importance, moue and preſſe vs, that the ſaid ſentence and iudgement ſo iuſtlie & dulie giuen, and by them approoued, as is aforeſaid, might (according to the expreſſe tenor of the ſaid act of parlement) by our proclamation vnder our great ſeale be declared and publiſhed, and the ſame alſo finallie executed.

But after ſuch moſt earneſt requeſt, ſo made to vs from all the ſaid lords and commons in parlement, they perceiuing by our owne ſpéeches and anſwers, how déepelie we are grieued to heare of theſe horrible and vnnaturall attempts and actions of that quéene; whoſe manie former offenſes, manifeſtlie and dangerouſlie committed againſt vs, our crowne and realme, we had ouerpaſſed with our ouer great clemencie, contrarie to the manie aduiſes and requeſts of our ſubiects, aſwell in parlement as otherwiſe: and therefore they alſo vnderſtanding from our ſelfe, how deſirous we were to haue ſome other meanes deuiſed by them in their ſeuerall places of parlement, to withſtand theſe miſchiefes intended both againſt our ſelfe, and the publike quiet ſtate of our realme, and ſuertie of our good ſubiects, than by execution of the foreſaid ſentence, as was required: they did after their long and ſundrie conſultations apart, and conferences iointlie with one accord, in the names of all the lords of parlement, giuen by the particular votes of them all aſſembled, and alſo of the commons with one vniuerſall aſſent, repreſenting the ſtate of all our realme, at their ſeuerall times of acceſſe vnto vs, alledge, declare, and proteſt, that vpon their long, manie, & aduiſed conſultations and conferences by our commandement, and for our ſatiſfaction in that behalfe had, they could not by anie meanes find or deuiſe, how the ſuertie of our roiall perſon, and the preſeruation of themſelues and their poſteritie, with the good ſtate of the realme, might be prouided for and continued, without the publication and due execution of the ſaid ſentence.

Wherevpon, being not onelie mooued to our griefe, but alſo ouercome with the earneſt requeſts, declarations, and important reaſons of all our ſaid ſubiects, the nobles and commons of our realme, whoſe iudgement, knowledge, and naturall care of vs, and the whole realme, we know doth farre ſurmount all others, being not ſo intereſſed therein, and ſo iuſtlie to be eſteemed; and perceiuing alſo the ſaid ſentence to haue béene honourablie, lawfullie, and iuſtlie giuen, agréeable to iuſtice and to the lawes of our realme: we did yéeld, and do according to the ſaid ſtatute by this our proclamation vnder our great ſeale of England, declare, notifie, and publiſh to all our louing ſubiects, and other perſons whatſoeuer, that the ſaid ſentence and iudgement is giuen in maner aforeſaid, to the intent, that they and euerie of them, by this our proclamation may haue full [illegible] knowing and knowledge thereof. We do alſo will you, that you returne this our proclamation into our court of Chancerie, as ſpéedilie as you maie conuenientlie, with the place and time of the proclaming thereof therevpon indorſed, whereof faile you not. In witneſſe whereof, we haue cauſed this our proclamation to be made patent, and ſealed with the great ſeale of England. At our manor of Richmont the fourth daie of December, the nine and twentith yeare of our reigne, and in the yeare of our Lord God, one thouſand fiue hundred fourescore and ſix.

Now to conclude with a remembrance of perpetuitie concerning the quéens maieſtie, of whoſe louing care and tender affection towards all hir faithfull ſubiects as we haue manifold teſtimonies in the hiſtorie of hir highneſſe time, whereby their hearts are linked vnto hir maieſtie with an indiſſoluble knot of deſerued loue and loialtie: ſo we maie not omit in anie caſe the publike witneſſe of hir highneſſe naturall care and mercifull prouidence ouer hir liege people, euen thoſe of the poorer ſort, vnto whome the comfortable ſtreames of hir tender regard for their benefit and welfare, in a hard time of ſcarſitie, doo moſt plentifullie flow. But becauſe our barren and ſapleſſe ſtile is inſufficient, with conuenient dignitie to deſcribe, nay not ſo much as to delineat or ſhadow out this incomparable pitie and pietie of hir highneſſe tender heart to hir commons, I will ſurceaſe to intermedle therein; reſeruing the ſame vnto the due conſideration of euerie particular member of this bodie politike (whereof hir maieſtie is the ſoueraigne head) by the view and peruſall of the proclamation and orders here annexed.

A true copie of the ſaid proclamation concerning corne, &c.

THe queenes moſt excellent maieſtie, foreſeeing the generall dearth growne of corne & other vittels, partlie through the vnſeaſonableneſſe of the yeare paſt, whereby want hath growne more in ſome countries than in others, but moſt of all generallie through the couetouſnes & vncharitable greedineſſe of ſuch as be great cornemaſters & ingroſſers of corne, vſing all the ſubtill meanes they can, to worke their owne preſent vnconſcionable gaine againſt the rules of charitie, which hir maieſtie of hir princelie care and loue towards hir people, vtterlie condemneth, and earneſtlie deſireth to remedie, for the reliefe of the poorer ſort. And therefore, hir maieſtie with hir princelie care towards hir people, hauing (with the aduiſe of hir councell) had good conſideration hereof, doth by this hir proclamation, giue expreſſe commandement and charge vnto all them to whom it ſhall or maie apperteine, that ſuch good orders as hir maieſtie hath commanded to be deuiſed for that purpoſe, and now alſo are ſent to all parts of hir realme, be diligentlie and effectuallie put in ſpeedie execution: ſignifieng withall vnto all hir good and louing ſubiects, that if anie ſhall be found obſtinat or negligent in the due execution, or otherwiſe in the obſeruation thereof, that then vpon due information and proofe thereof made vnto hir highneſſe ſaid councell, which ſhe requireth not to be ſpared by anie, hauing iuſt cauſe of complaint, for reſpect of anie perſon, ſhe hath giuen ſpeciall commandement and order, that they ſhall be ſpeedilie called to anſwer, & therevpon, according to the qualitie of their offenſes, ſhall receiue ſharpe puniſhment, whereby others maie take example to auoid the like contempt, negligence, or other defaults.

And although this dearth hath in ſundrie parts of the realme firſt growne by the viſitation of almightie God, in the alteration of ſeaſonable weather this laſt yeare, which neuertheleſſe of his great mercie hath not beene ſo extreme in this realme, as in manie other countries adioining, where the dearth is by manie occaſions manifeſtlie knowne to be far greater than is in this relme hitherto, or by his goodneſſe is like to be: yet it is manifeſtlie knowne the ſaid dearth to haue bin wilfullie increaſed in verie manie places of this realme, not onelie by & through the couetouſnes of manie ingroſſers of corne & cornmaſters, but alſo by vnlawfull tranſportation of graine, & lacke alſo of preſeruation of ſtore in time requiſit. Hir highneſſe acknowledging this maner of Gods mercie and fauour in a more fauourable meaſure towards hir countrie and hir people, than to other forren parts neere adioining, hath thought good and neceſſarie, for a further remedie againſt the vncharitable couetouſneſſe of the cornemaſters, as cauſe ſhall require, to notifie, that if ſuch as be the great cornemaſters and owners of graine, or of other neceſſarie vittels for food of the poore, ſhall not be willing, or doo not performe theſe orders, whereby the poorer ſort maie be releeued in the markets at reaſonable prices; or that if ſhall appeare that other needfull vittels ſhall by couetouſneſſe of anie perſons grow to exceſſiue prices, to the pinching of the poorer ſort: then hir highneſſe doth hereby ſignifie, that ſhe will not onelie ſeuerelie puniſh the offendors for their cruell couetouſneſſe and offenſes againſt hir orders; but will alſo for redreſſe of the exceſſiue prices of other needfull vittels, giue order that reaſonable prices ſhall be ſet both on corne and other vittels, to be ſold for the releefe of hir maieſties poore ſubiects, according both to hir prerogatiue roiall, and to the order of iuſtice, as by ſpeciall law of parlement therefore made in the fiue and twentith yeare of the reigne of hir late noble and deare father king Henrie the eight, is ſpeciallie in ſuch caſes prouided. Giuen at Greenewich the ſecond daie of Ianuarie, one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and ſix, in the nine and twentith yeare of hir highneſſe reigne.

Now the ſaid orders before ſpecified, being a matter of conſequence (deuiſed by the ſpeciall commandement of hir maieſtie, for the releefe and eaſe of the preſent dearth of graine within the realme) and publiſhed at large, doo here follow (agreeable to that which was ſent from the court at Greenewich abrode into the realme, the ſecond daie of Ianuarie, one thouſand fiue hundred foure ſcore and ſix, in the nine and twentith yeere of hir maieſties reigne, by hir maieſties priuie councell) but abridged accordinglie to the ſubſtance. And firſt; That the iuſtices ſhall diuide themſelues into ſundrie parts to execute theſe orders: To appoint ſundrie iuries to inquire of things hereafter following: The oth of the iurors, with charge to inquire what number of perſons be in the houſes of them that haue ſtore of corne: Of badgers, kidders, and carriers of corne: Of maltmakers, bakers, and brewers: Buiers of corne to ſell againe: Sellers of corne vpon the ground: Againſt ſuch as ſhall refuſe to declare the truth of the matters inquirable: Parties offending to appeare afore the councell: A conſideration of all perſons that haue corne, to determine how they ſhall ſerue the markets with ſuch portions as they maie ſpare: The forme of the recognizance to be taken of them.

An abridgement of the orders deuiſed for the releefe of the poore in this time of dearth, &c.

Orders to be obſerued by ſuch as ſhall be appointed to ſerue the markets with corne, for the releefe of the poore people firſt: To whome corne ſhall be ſold, after that the poore are ſerued: No corne brought to the market vnſold, to be caried out of the towne: None to buie ſuch kind of corne as they ſhall bring to ſell, but by licence vpon reaſonable cauſe: No corne to be bought to ſell againe; No corne to be bought but in open market: Inquirie to be made againſt ingroſſers: An order for all licences from the iuſtices of the peace, to be kept in a record: Regard to the bakers for keeping of the ſiſe of bread: Bread faultie in anie exceſſe to be ſold towards the releefe of the poore: No badger to buie corne but in open market, and with a ſufficient licence in writing: The badgers to ſhew weekelie their books of buieng: No iuſtices ſeruant to be a badger, nor none other, but ſuch as ſhall be licenced in open ſeſſions: No badger, baker, brewer, or purueior, to buie graine, vntill an houre after the full market begin: Some iuſtices to be preſent in the market, to ſee the poore releeued vpon reaſonable prices.

Where iuſtices are wanting in anie hundred for Starch.

for to appoint ſome rich perſons to ſupplie the want: That miniſters and preachers exhort the rich ſort to be liberall to helpe the poore with monie or vittels néedfull: To make malt of oates in countries where there hath béene vſe thereof: No waſte of bread corne ſuperfluouſlie, nor anie expenſe thereof but for féeding of people: None ſuffered to make ſtarch of anie graine: Able poore people to be ſet to worke: Stocks of monie for prouiſion of works for poore people: Clothiers to continue their workefolks: Souldiors hurt, and impotent people, to be reléeued in their dwelling places: That no millers be ſuffered to be common buiers of corne, nor to ſell meale, but to attend to the true grinding of the corne brought, & to vſe meaſurable tole theſe deare ſeaſons: Conferences to be had betwixt the iuſtices of peace in the ſhires, and the principall officers of cities and townes corporat for prouiſions of graine, for the inhabitants in cities and corporat towns: Order for places exempted from the iuriſdiction of the iuſtices of peace in the bodies of the ſhires: Regard to ſtaie all tranſportation of graine out of the realme: Certificat to be made of the execution of theſe orders monethlie to the ſhiriffe, and he to certifie the ſame to the priuie councell within euerie fortie daies: To certifie what iuſtices be abſent from the ſeruice, that ſuch as without iuſt excuſe ſhall not attend, maie be diſplaced, and their rooms, if there be néed, ſupplied.

The concluſion of theſe orders is this Ad verbum, That if anie ſhall offend againſt the true meaning of theſe inſtructions, or of anie part thereof, or ſhall vſe anie ſiniſter meane to the defrauding thereof, that ſuch be ſeuerelie puniſhed according to the lawes; and for ſuch obſtinat perſons as ſhall not conforme themſelues, the iuſtices ſhall at their pleſure bind them to appeare before the quéenes maieſties priuie councell by a daie certeine, there to be further delt with by ſeuere puniſhment, for the better example of all others.

P. T.

Now as Holinſhed and ſuch as with painfull care and loue to their countrie haue thought good before me, to knit vp the ſeuerall reigne of euerie ſeuerall king with a generalitie of the ſeuerall writers in that princes daies: ſo haue I béene importuned by manie of my fréends, to knit vp the ſaid whole hiſtorie with a particular catalog of all ſuch as haue purpoſelie in ſeuerall hiſtories of this realme, or by the waie in the hiſtories of other countries written of England and Engliſh matter. For which cauſe (with the title of other anonymall chronicles) I haue here for that purpoſe, by order of alphabet ſet downe the ſame. Wherein, although I ſhall not ſet downe euerie mans name, nor of what time & qualitie euerie one was (for he is not liuing I ſuppoſe that can doo the ſame) yet hauing doone my good will therein, and that more than perhaps ſome others would haue doone, I praie thée to beare with the defaults, and accept that which I haue doone and could doo. And although perhaps I maie ſet downe one man twiſe, as firſt by his name, and then ſet downe the worke without his name, as another ſeuerall thing: yet is it not of purpoſe doone, or to the end that I would make a great ſhew, and ſéeme ambitious of names or knowledge; but for that I haue not as yet atteined to that perfection, which hereafter I hope to doo in diſtinguiſhing of the ſame. For Rome was not built in one daie, & yet if one daies foundation thereof had not béene firſt laid, it had neuer béene after builded: and ſo to the matter.

A, Abbo Floriacenſis liued in the time of Dunſtane archbiſhop of Canturburie, to whome he dedicated his booke: Abbas Wiſeburgenſis, Nicholaus Adams liued in the daies of king Edward the firſt, Alfric Abbas, Alfric that gathered the liues of the ſaints in Saxonie, which I ſometimes had, it maie be that theſe two were all one man; Alfridus Beuerlacenſis theſaurarius whom Leland calleth Aluredus Fibroleganus; Alanus abbat of Teukeſburie, one of the foure that writ the Quadrilogium of Thomas Becket in the time of king Iohn; Alexander Heſſebienſis, he writ Epitome Britannicæ hiſtoriæ; Alexander Somerſetenſis, Alexander Staffordienſis, Aelius Spartianus, Alured or Alfred king of England in the yeare of Chriſt nine hundred and thrée, Adam Merimuth canon of Paules in the reigne of Richard the ſecond, Anianus Marcellinus, Richardus Angeruil ſurnamed De Berie, biſhop of Durham, died in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred fortie and fiue; Antoninus, Arnold of London in the time of king Henrie the eight, Aſſerius Meneuenſis, Aurelius or Aluredus Riualenſis, Robert Auerſberie.

B, Sir Nicholas Bacon knight lord kéeper of the great ſeale vnto quéene Eliſabeth, Benedictus Claudioceſtrenſis, Balantine a Scot, William Baldwin liued in the time of king Edward the firſt, Stephan Batemaine died in the yere one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and foure, Beda an Engliſh Saxon died in the yere of Chriſt ſeuen hundred thirtie and two; G. de Barrie archdeacon of S. Dauids writ the life of Remigius biſhop of Lincolne, Iohn Bale flouriſhed in the time of Edward the firſt, Barnardus Andreas writ a chronicle intituled Liber Barnardi Andreæ Toloſati poetæ laureati regij hiſtoriographi de vita atque geſtis Henrici ſeptimi, in whoſe time he flouriſhed; Robert Boſton in the time of Edward the ſecond, Rafe Baldocke biſhop of London vnder Edward the ſecond, Peter Baſſet in the time of Henrie the fift, whoſe life he did write; Robert Bale recorder of London, he died in the yere of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred thrée ſcore and one, about the latter end of the reigne of Richard the ſecond; Edmund Bedenhame writer of the chronicles of Rocheſter; Iohn Bramus, and not Bromus as ſaith Bale, a monke of Tedford; Iohn Bracklow a Benedictine monke, in the yeare one thouſand two hundred fourtéene; Iohannes Brompton, hiſtoria vetus quam contulit Iornal. monaſterio, as hath Mathew Parker In vitis epiſcop. Cantu. Ferdinando Blake liued in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred foure ſcore and foure, Bodinus, Iohn Bouchet a Frenchman of Aquitaine, Nicholas Brodingham or Brodringham, Iohn Boſue of Burie, Blondus Foroliuienſis, Henrie Bradſhaw borne in Cheſter a blacke monke there in the time of Henrie the eight, Iohn Burgh a monke in the daies of K. Edward the third, Nicholas Bungeie borne in a towne of the ſame name in Northfolke in the daies of king Henrie the firſt, ſir Iohn Bourchier knight lord Barnes tranſlated Froiſſard, Bullerus, Roger Bond, Thomas Buckhurſt lord Buckhurſt now liuing, Stephan Birchington, George Buckhanan liued in the yere of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred and foure ſcore.

C, Thomas Caſtleford: ſir William Cicill knight lord Burleigh lord treaſuror of England now liuing, William Caxton liued in the daies of king Edward the fourth, Campbell, Carion a Germane, Caradocus Lancarnauenſis liued in the daies of K. Stephan, Iulius Cæſar a Romane, Iohn Capgraue borne in Kent an Auguſtine frier died in the fourth yere of king Edward the fourth, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred thrée ſcore and foure; Cornelius Hibernenſis, Cornelius Tacitus, Albertus Crantz, Iohn Caius died in the reigne of our quéene Eliſabeth, William Campden now liuing, George Cauendiſh gentleman vſher vnto cardinall Wolſeie, whoſe life he did write, Iohn Clinn or Linn an Iriſhman, he flouriſhed in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand thrée hundred and fiftie, Rafe Coggeſhall abbat of Coggeſhall in Eſſex liued in the time of king Henrie the third and writ the appendix to Radulphus Niger, Thomas Cooper biſhop of Wincheſter now liuing, Richard Carguent flouriſhed in the daies of king Edward the firſt, Thomas Churchyard now liuing. D, Demetrius a Britaine, Diodorus Siculus, Dionyſius, Dion Caſſius, Thomas Dando a Carmelit frier of Marleborow, writ the life of Alphred king of Mercia or rather of weſt Saxons, and liued in the time of king Henrie the ſixt; Diuionenſis, Dolenſis writ De laudibus Britonum.

E, Edmerus a monke of Canturburie liued in the time of Henrie the ſecond; Elwardus, Eutropius a Romane préeſt, Enguerrant de Monſtrellet a Frenchman, and ſcholer in Paris in the time of king Henrie the ſixt; Edmund Campian a Ieſuit brought vp in Oxford, & executed in the yere of our Lord 1581; Iohn Euerſden a monke of Burie flouriſhed in the time of king Edward the firſt, and ſo continued in the time of king Edward the third; Ernulphus biſhop of Rocheſter liued in the time of king Henrie the ſecond, and compiled Textus Roffenſis, conteining the grants of the lands to the ſame houſe, & the copies of ſundrie ancient lawes in the Saxon tong, Thomas Elmcham prior of Lenton.

F, Robert Fabian alderman of London, liued in the time of Henrie the ſeuenth, Geffreie Fenton now liuing; Samuell and Abraham Flemings both liuing, brethren by one bellie, and Londoners borne, Quorum prior hiſtoriolam quandam de regimine Maria nuper Anglorũ principis, eámq; elegantem, Latino idiomate (nunquã tamẽ excuſam) cõtexuit: poſterior in hiſce chronicis detergẽdis atque dilatandis, vna cum vberrimorũ indicum acceſſione, plurimùm deſudauit; Iohannes Fibernis or Beuer writ the hiſtorie of Weſtminſter, Iohn Froiſſart, Ferculphus, Flaccus Albinus or Alcuinus, Philip Flatteſberie a worthie Iriſh gentleman flouriſhed in the yere 1517, Iohn Fourdon a Scot, Iohn Fox a learned diuine, that writ the Acts and Monuments, and is now liuing; George Ferres liuing in the yere of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and eight, Fabius Queſtor, Florentius Wigornius died about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred and eightéene, being about the eightéenth yeare of king Henrie the firſt.

G, Robert Gagwin a Frenchman, Iohn Greie biſhop of Norwich in king Iohns time, Thomas Gardiner a monke of Weſtminſter in the time of Henrie the eight; Robert Glouer by office named Somerſet now liuing a moſt rare antiquarie, and worthily deſeruing to be named Scientiſſimus antiquitatũ; Francis Guiciardine an Italian liuing in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and eightéene, Laurence Guiciardine, Gildas Sapiens, Gildas Cambrenſis, Gildas Badonicus, Gildas Albanius, Geffreie of Munmouth liued in the time of king Stephan, Iohn Gower knight died about the ſecond of Henrie the fourth, Giraldus Cambrenſis liued in the time of Henrie the ſecond, Richard the firſt, and king Iohn; Nicholas Gill a Frenchman, Gocelinus firſt a monke of ſaint Bertine beyond the ſeas, and after a monke of Canturburie; Giraldus Cornubienſis De geſtis Anglorum, Gulielmus Malmsberie in the daies of K. Stephan, Gulielmus Parus aliàs Gulielmus Nouoburgenſis or Newberie, Geruaſius Dorobernenſis. Geruaſius Tilberienſis, Richard Grafton in the time of quéene Eliſabeth, Robert Gréene, Guido de Columna.

H, Iohn Hales, Hugo Albus Petroburgenſis, in the time of king Iohn; Iohn Harding eſquier liued in the daies of Edward the fourth, Edward Hall a counſellor of Greies inne flouriſhed in the time of Henrie the eight and Edward the ſixt, Abrahamus Hartwellus Academicus Cantab. that writ in verſe Regina literata; Henrie of Marleborow, Gualter Hemigſford a monke of Giſborne in the daies of Edward the third, Hector Boetius a Scot, Hirmannus archdeacon in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée ſcore and ten, Heribert de Boſham one of the foure that writ the life of Thomas Becket, Hoclet one that liued in the time of Henrie the ſixt in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred fiftie and foure, Iohn de Hexam and Richard de Hexam liued in the daies of king Richard the firſt, Wilfrid Holme vnder Henrie the eight, Raphaell Holinſhed in the time of quéene Eliſabeth, William Harriſon now liuing, Iohn Harriſon doctor of arts and of phyſicke, Rafe Higden aliàs Ceſtrenſis flouriſhed in the time of Edward the third, Iohn Higgins now liuing, Roger Houeden liued in the time of king Iohn, Hugo de ſancto Victore; Hugo Abbas Petroburgenſis, it maie be that Hugo Abbas before & this Hugo were one man, although for this time I ſuppoſe the contrarie; Hugo de Geneſis an Italian, Iohn Hooker aliàs Vowell now liuing.

I, Iehan de Bauge, Iohannes Maior a Scot, Iohannes Seuerianus, Iohannes Carnotenſis one of the foure that writ the Quadrilogium of the life of Thomas Becket, Iohannes Anglicus writ Hiſtoriam aureã, Iehan Maior de Belgis, Iohannes Londonienſis, Iohn a monke of Ford, Ioffridus Crowlandenſis, Ingulfus abbat of Crowland in the daies of William Conqueror, Thomas Ichingham whome Leland calleth Thomas Vicanius, Ioſephus Domnonienſis, Ioceline of Furneis, Peter de Icham or Itham a monke, whoſe booke beginneth Non ſolùm audiendus ſacra ſcriptura verbis aurem ſedulus auditor accomodare tenetur, which booke Caius de antiquitate Cantab, doth aſcribe to Robert Remington, as after ſhall appeare; Iulius Capitolinus In vita Antonij Pij.

K, Albertus Krantz a Dane, Kentigernus, Henrie Knighton liued in the time of king Richard the ſecond. L, Lanfrancus that writ a chronicle in Welſh, Stephan Langton biſhop of Canturburie writ the life of king Richard the firſt, Iohn Leland in the time of Henrie the eight and Edward the ſixt, William Lambard eſquire now liuing, and deſeruing well of all antiquitie; George Lillie, Humfreie Lhoid, he died in the time of quéene Eliſabeth; Piers de Longtoft, Thomas Lanquet, Iohn Leſle a Scot biſhop of Roſſe in Scotland now liuing, Iohn Langden biſhop of Rocheſter.

M, Marcerius an Engliſhman, of whom Iohn Baconthorpe ſpeaketh in the prolog of the fourth booke of Senten. quæſt. 10. Iohn Maluerne monke of Worceſter continued Ranulphus in the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand thrée hundred thrée ſcore and ſixtéene; Marianus Scotus liued about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure ſcore and ten, Matthew Paris, Matthew Weſtminſter aliàs Flores hiſtoriarum a monke of Weſtminſter, and liued in the time of king Edward the third; Thomas More knight lord chancellor of England, Thomas de la More knight liued in the daies of Edward the ſecond, Radulphus Marham, Merlinus Ambroſius, Merlinus Sylueſter, Melkinus, Nicholas Montacute liued in the time of Henrie the ſixt, Edmund Molineux now liuing, Sebaſtian Munſter a Germane.

N, Nennius Helius brother to Caſſiuelane & Lud kings of Britaine, Nennius Banchorenſis, Nauclerus Alexander Neuill now liuing, Laurence Nowell died about the ſixtéenth yere of quéene Eliſabeth,

Niuianus

Ninianus that wrote Eulogium. O, Osbert de Clare prior of Weſtminſter, Osbernus Dorobernenſis in the time of William the Conqueror, Thomas Otterborne a Franciſcan or greie frier liued in the time of Henrie the fift, Abraham Ortelius now liuing a Fleming; Chriſtopher Ocland now liuing ſometime ſcholemaiſter in Southworke.

P, William Pakington clerke & treaſuror to the blacke prince of his houſhold in Gaſcoigne, Patricius Conſul, Ioannes de Prato a writer of Aquitaine & protonotarie, Paulus Aemilius, Petrus Bleſſenſis archdeacon of Bath, Philip de Comines aliàs monſieur de Argentone ſecretarie to Charles duke of Burgoine, Polydor Virgill an Vrbinat Italian and canon of Paules in the daies of Henrie the eight, Paulus Iouius an Italian biſhop of Nucerne, Iohn Pike, Iohn Price knight died in the reigne of quéene Eliſabeth, William Paten now liuing, Iohn Proctor ſcholemaiſter of Tunbridge to whom I was ſometime ſcholer, Ptolomeus, Dauid Powell now liuing.

R, Iohn Read in the time of Edward the firſt, Iohn Raſtall, Radulphus Londonienſis, Radulphus Niger liued in the daies of king Henrie the third, Radulphus de Diceto deane of Paules in London in the time of king Iohn, Reutha king of Scots, Michaell Ricius, William Riſhanger a monke of ſaint Albons in the daies of Edward the ſecond, Richeſter a monke of Weſtminſter liued in the time of Edward the third, and wrote an excellent chronicle beginning at the comming of the Saxons in the yeare of our Lord foure hundred fortie and nine, & continued it vntill the yeare one thouſand thrée hundred fortie and eight, conteining eight hundred foureſcore and nihetéene yeares; Richardus Deuiſienſis, Richardus Cadneus, Richardus Elienſis whoſe ſtorie beginneth Cùm animaduerterem excellentiam Elienſis inſulæ, &c. Richardus Elienſis an other from the former that wrote an other hiſtorie of Elie, Robert abbat of ſaint Michaels mount floriſhed in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and eight; Robertus Montenſis, Robertus ſine cognomento, Robertus Remingtonus De geſtis Anglorum, cuius initium, Non ſolùm audiendis ſacræ ſcripturæ verbis, &c. This ſaieth Caius In antiquitate Cantabrigiæ. But others attribute that worke to Peter Icham, Sée before in the letter I.

Robert Record liuing in the time of quéene Marie, Robert biſhop of Hereford which liued in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand thréeſcore and twelue, Robertus de Paterna that wrote the regiſter of Oxford, Robert a prior of Shrewſburie, Roger of Abindon, Roger of Winſore, Roger de Windore, Roger of Cheſter liued in the daies of Edward the third, Iohn Rouſe borne in Warwikeſhire liued in the daies of Henrie the ſeuenth, and being a canon of Oſneie died at Warwike in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and eleuen, Thomas Rudborne archdeacon of Sudberie after biſhop of S. Dauids in Wales liued in the time of Henrie the fourth, Henrie the fift, and Henrie the ſixt; Thomas Rudborne an other from the former was a monke of Wincheſter and followed manie other authors, amongſt which was the ſaid Thomas Rudborne biſhop of S. Dauids.

S, Saxo Grammaticus a Dane, Samuel Britannus, Sextus Aurelius, Sentleger, Edward Segeſwike now liuing, Iohannes Sulgenus or Sullenus, Solinus, Sigebertus Gemblacenſis, Thomas Spot who liued in the reigne of Edward the firſt, Antonius Sabellicus a Venetian, Iohn Sleidan a Germane, Richard Sowthwell, Reginald Scot now liuing, Simon Dunelmenſis, Iohn Stow now liuing, Iohn Kniſh a Corniſh man in the daies of Henrie the eight, Richard Stanihurſt borne in Ireland now liuing, Sharton now liuing, Iohn Swapham, Stephanides aliàs Fitzſtephan. T, Titus Liuius Patauienſis, Titus Liuius Foroliuienſis an Italian liued in the time of Henrie the fift, Iohn Tartor a monke of Burie, Andrew Theuet a Frenchman, Nicholas Triuet a blacke frier borne in Northfolke ſonne to ſir Thomas Triuet knight one of the kings iuſtices liued in the daies of Edward the third, and died in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand thrée hundred twentie and eight; Iohn Tilberie floriſhed in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred foureſcore and ten; Iohn Treuiſa a Corniſhman préeſt and vicar of Barkleie, Teleſinus a Briton, Francis Boteuile aliàs Thin now liuing, Brian Tuke knight liued in the daies of Henrie the eight, Iohn Twine died in the reigne of quéene Eliſabeth, William Thorne liued in the daies of Richard the ſecond, Richard Turpin borne of a worſhipfull familie in England ſerued in the garriſon of Calis, he died in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and one; Tobias Roffenſis, Turgotus which liued in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand ninetie and eight in the time of William Rufus wrote a chronicle of Durham.

V, Veremund a Spaniard, Raphaell Volateran, Giouanni Vilani a Florentine, Ponticus Virunnius an Italian, Iohn Vfford, Iohn Vton. W, Iohn Whethamſted otherwiſe called Frumentarius a learned man abbat of S. Albons liued in the daies of Henrie the ſixt, Roger Wall an herald who in Latine writ the doings of Henrie the fift, Thomas Walſingham a monke of the abbeie of S. Albons liued in the reigne of Henrie the ſixt, William of Riuall liued in the age of king Stephan, Willielmus Cantuarienſis one of the foure that wrote the Quadrilogium of Thomas Becket liued in the time of king Iohn, Willielmus Gemeticenſis, Willielmus filius Stephani a clerke of the Chancerie and deane of the chapell of Thomas Becket in the daies of Henrie the ſecond, Willielmus Summerſetenſis, Willielmus Crowlandenſis (for the other Williams ſée in the letter G, in the name of Gulielmus) Thomas Wike canon of Oſneie, Iohn Walworth, Walterus Exceſtrenſis, Walterus Couentrenſis.

Annales Burtonenſes, Memoriale hiſtoriarum, Chronica Dunſtable; Chronicle of Tinmouth, Chronicles of S. Albons, Deflorationes Galfridi, Hiſtoria obſidionis Elienſis inſulæ, Chronica, cuius initium, Calendarium Bruti, Chronicle beginning Rex Pictorum, Chronica Weſtmonaſt. Chronicle beginning In diebus ſanctiſsimi regis Edwardi, Chronicle beginning Aeneas cum Aſcanio, Chronica chronicorũ, Supplementum chronicorum, Faſciculus temporũ, Hiſtoria Richardi ſecundi beginning De parte Bruti, Eulogiũ, Hiſtoria Iornalenſis, Hiſtoria Carina written in Latine compiled in the thirtéenth yeare of Richard the ſecond by whom it was cauſed to be written, as the title declareth, which for that it ſheweth no name of the author, and for that maiſter Fox borowed the ſame of maiſter Carie citizen of London, maiſter Fox in his Acts and Monuments the ſecond edition calleth the ſame booke Hiſtoria Carina.

Anonymall or nameleſſe chronicles, treating wholie or in part of England.

The epitome of chronicles from Brute to Henrie 6. beginning Ab origine mundi concurrunt anni ſecundũ Hebræos, 6646. Chronicle beginning Chronicorũ verò quæ ſunt imagines hiſtoriarum, Chronicle of genealogies beginning Cuilibet principi congruum, The chronicles of S. Swithin, The commentaries of Hide, The continuances of Roger Houeden beginning Excerpta ex dictis viri religioſi, An other chronicle of S. Albons beginning Fecit rex Edwardus tertius comites, Hiſtoria regia vel ſancti Edmundi, Chronicle of Elie beginning Anno ab incarnatione dominica, 616. qui eſt annus 21, ex quo Auguſtinus cum ſocijs ad prædicandum genti Anglorum miſſus eſt, Hiſtoria Anglorum beginning Conſiderans hiſtoriæ Britonum, Pictorum, Scotorum, Saxonum, Anglorum, Danorum, & Normannorũ prolixitatem, &c. Le mer des hiſtories, Les annales de France, Les annales d'Acquitaine, Les grand cronicqz de Britane, Les petit cronicqz de Britane, Les cronicqz de Normandi, Le Roſarie, Les genelogies des roys, Cronicles de Flandres, The chronicles of London, The chronicle called Brute, The Saxon chronicle of the church of Worceſter, The Saxon chronicle of the abbeie of Peterborrow, The Saxon chronicle written in the yeare of Chriſt eight hundred foure ſcore and fiue, The chronicles of England. Thus far this catalog. Now peraduenture ſome will looke for a rehearſall omnigatherum of ſuch as haue written in the reigne of our bleſſed ſoureigne: but herein as it paſſeth our poſſibilitie to ſatiſfie their expectation, their number being infinit, and manie of them vnknowne and vnworthie of remembrance: ſo it were to be wiſhed that ſome fauourer of learned mens fame, would compriſe their names and works in a particular volume, therein imitating either the order of Bale, or Geſner; or elſe the commendable method of Iohn Iames the Friſlander, printed at Tigurie one thouſand fiue hundred fourescore and thrée, either of which courſes being taken would well ſerue the turne.

The concluſion of A. F.

* Thus far (bleſſed be Chriſt) the extent of Engliſh chronicles; a long labour, of great care and expenſe: howbeit at length conquered and ouercome, by the benefit of his grace who enableth vs to go through with all things that be good: his name be praiſed therefore. Wherein if the helpe of ſuch as are furniſhed with varietie of knowledge, or as by gorgeous ſhew of words and rich pompe of phraſe pretend profound ſkill, had béene as forward to aduance this worke (being of vnexpected magnitude by means of the multitude of contents) as ſome of low ſaile, willing to laie out their poore talent, haue afforded what furtherance they were able (ſomewhat to the ſatiſfieng of thoſe honeſt minded men and parteners, at whoſe great coſts and charges the ſame is now newlie printed, though not to their full contentment, who were euer deſirous and diuerſlie made aſſaies to haue it ſo abſolute, as nothing might want of due perfection, if the meanes might haue béene obteined) the chronicles of England, both for matter & maner, had béene comparable to anie hiſtorie or annals in Chriſtendome. Howbeit perfected as it is, though not with exquiſit curiouſnes to pleaſe euerie fickle fanſie, yet according to the proportion of ſkill vouchſafed of God to the dealers therein (men of commendable diligence though not of déepeſt iudgement) ſomewhat to ſatiſfie the well affected and indifferent mind, the ſame is now come abroad, yéelding matter no leſſe manifold than the ſpring doth floures, and the ſame maruellous frutefull, if they haue their right vſe and due application: which indéed is the verie end of hiſtories and chronicles. And ſo crauing a fauorable acceptation of this tedious trauell, with a toleration of all ſuch defaults as haplie therein lie hidden, and by diligent reading maie ſoone be ſpied; we wiſh that they which beſt maie, would once in their life grow reſolute and at a point, in this laudable kind of ſtudie (moſt neceſſarie, next to the word of God, for common knowledge) little or much to exerciſe their head and hand. Finallie beſéeching God to bleſſe the realme of England, and the pretious iewell of the ſame (euen good quéene Eliſabeth) to ſaue as the apple of his eie; to protect hir with the target of his power againſt all the pernicious practiſes of ſatans inſtruments; to lengthen the liues of hir highneſſe honorable councellors, by whoſe vigilant policie this whole land fareth the better; in preuenting, intercepting and making fruſtrat (God directing and proſpering their conſultations and procéedings) all the attempts of traitors, to whom O Lord in vengeance giue the iudgement of Iudas, as they haue béene partakers of his ſinne; let them be intangled and taken in the traps of their trecheries, and ſwallowed vp in the ſeas of deſerued confuſion, that they be no more a familie. And we beſéech God to increaſe the multitude of loiall ſubiects, to make them ſtrong in faith towards him, and in loue one with another, that the goſpell (which is the doctrine of pacification and obedience) maie be glorified in the commonwealth of England, a corner of the world, O Lord, which thou haſt ſingled out for the magnifieng of thy maieſtie, and whereof we praie thee to giue vs a dailie remembrance: ſo ſhall we make conſcience of ſin, & addict our ſelues to the exerciſes of righteouſneſſe, Amen.

FINIS.

The third table for the Chronicles of England from the conqueſt vntill this preſent regiment: wherin the reader is to obſerue theſe notes for his better direction; namelie, to ſeeke for the ſurnames of perſons as more commonlie knowne than the proper; and alſo when the name faileth to looke for the dignitie, title, office and degree of ſuch perſons; as Armenia, Cipriots, Spaine, France, Portingall, Nauarre, Denmarke, &c; if they were kings: Archbiſhop, Biſhop, Pope, Cardinall, Legat, &c; if they were Clergiemen: Chancellors, Treaſurors, Lord high conſtables, Lord wardens of the cinque ports, &c; Duke, Earle, Marqueſſe, Queene, Ducheſſe, Counteſſe, &c; if they were great ſtates: Maior, Sargents at law, Officers, &c: if they were of that degree: knights and eſquires excepted, who as they were of renowme, are accordinglie noted by their vſuall names. Likewiſe for ſuch as haue beene executed as notorious offendors againſt the prince and the ſtate, to come to the knowledge of their names, looke for the qualitie of their offenſe; as counterfeting, coineclippers, conſpiracie and conſpirators, murther and murtherers, rebellion and rebels, treaſon and traitors, preeſts ſeminarie, &c: of all which this table affoordeth infinit examples. Finallie, whereſoeuer you find this word (Note) there dooth matter of conſideration come to hand.

If the reader be not ſatiſfied with this table, let him not blame the order, but his owne conceipt. Gathered by Abraham Fleming.

A.

Abbaſie of wincheſter obteined for monie, 21, a 40

Abbat Agelnothus, ¶ Sée Agelnothus. Of Battell in reſcuing winchelſeie is put to flight, 427, a 50. Egelſin. ¶ Sée Egelſin. Egelwine. ¶ Sée Egelwine. Fecknam of weſtminſter inſtalled, 1132, b 20. Frederike. ¶ Sée Frederike. Ioachim, a man of great fame, 126, a 10. Of Glaſtenburie an erls ſon, 42, a 60. Loſanage. ¶ Sée Loſanage. Paule. ¶ Sée Paule. Of ſaint Auguſtine capteine of an armie, 2 a 10. Of S. Edmundſburie, Robert Lou an earls ſonne, 20, a 40. Thurſtan. ¶ Sée Thurſtan. Of weſtminſter dieth ſuddenlie, 516, b 30. ¶ Sée Conſpiracie.

Abbats ordeined by william Rufus, 20, a 60. They and priors depriued, and whie, 30, b 10. Not to be made knights, &c: note, 30, b 50

Abbie of Battell with the roll thereof, 3, 4, 5. The firſt of white moonks when and by whom founded, 26, a 60. Of S. Albons repared by Lanfranke, 18, a 60

Abbies builded thrée by duke william, 15, a 40. Founded in king Stephans time, 64, b 60 Eleuen let out to farme, 26, a 40. Searched and ranſacked at duke williams commandement, 8, b 50. Suppreſſed, 945, b 50, 946, b 10, 947, b 50. Their lands promiſed by quéene Marie to be reſtored: note, 1127, b 10, &c. ¶ Sée Churches and Nunneries.

Abiuration for ſpeking againſt the popes authoritie, 898, b 30. Of biſhop Pecocke, 646, a 60. ¶ Sée Biſhop Pecocke.

Abſolution to be purchaſed from Rome, 214, b 60. Of the clergie ſued for from Rome, 201, b 60. Of Oxford by legat Otho, 222, a 50. For vowes & other offenſes, 257, b 60. For an oth obteined, 313, b 60. For the offenſe of diſobedience, 201, b 10. Pronounced by cardinall Poole to the parlement houſe, 1123, b 10

Aburgauennie lord arreigned at weſtminſter, 872, b 10. Aſſembleth a power againſt wiat, & putteth them to flight, 1094, a 10, b 20

Accuſation falſe for a time preuailed but in fine fruſtrate: note, 223, b 50, 60. Of a iuſtice for taking of bribes, 243, b 50. Of two noble men that had the cuſtodie of the king and quéene of Scots, 251, a 30. Againſt prince Henrie to king Henrie the fourth his father, 539, a 10. Vniuſt redoundeth to the accuſants ſhame, 937, b 60. Interchangable and doubtfull tried by combat: note, 992, b 60, 993, a 10. Falſe puniſhed, 968, a 50. By the pillorie: note, 1132, b 30. Of a maiſter againſt his ſeruant whereof followed ſecret vengeance, 1084, b 20, 30

Acton knight his rebellion, ſurpriſed, he and his complices condemned of treaſon and hereſie, 544, a 60, b 40

Adela married to Richard Henrie the ſecond his ſon, 94, a 30

Adelicia. ¶ Sée Quéene.

Admonition. ¶ Sée warning.

Adnothus maſter of the horſſe to king Harold ſlaine in fight 6, a 60

Aduenturers, 875, b 10. Soldiers and whie ſo called, 880, b 60, 881, a 10. Their capteine ſlaine, and they diſcomfited, 882, b 10. Good ſeruitors, 882, b 60. Slaine and diſcomfited, their finall end, 883, b 50. ¶ Sée Kréekers.

Aduiſe. ¶ Sée Emperour.

Adulterie puniſhed with hanging, 211, b 60. Seueritie corrected in a maiors time of London, 440, b 10. ¶ Sée Inceſt and Whoredome.

Affinitie ¶ Sée Fréendſhip and Marriage.

Agatha the mother of Edgar Etheling driuen by tempeſt into Scotland, 6, a 30

Agelmarus biſhop of Thetford depoſed and whie, 9, a 20

Agelnothus abbat of Glaſtenburie, 5, a 10

Agincourt battell, 552, b 60. when fought, 618, b 20. The number of the ſlaine, noblemen priſoners, 555, a 50, 60, b 10, &c.

Agréement. ¶ Sée Peace.

Aire red as though on fier, 38, a 40. Full of clouds, red, yellow, & gréene, 102, b 60. Ruddie of colour as though it burned and of a ſanguine hue, 142, a 10. Séemed to be on a bright fier, 167, a 40. ¶ Sée Sights.

Aiſke a towne, burned by the Engliſh, 810, b 30

Alane earle of Britaine aduanced by duke william his vncle, 7, a 60

Alane the blacke earle, iſſuleſſe, 7, b 20

Alane le Rous, iſſuleſſe, 7, b 20

Alan the ſon of Stephan, 7, b 30

Alanſon beſieged & yéelded vp, 561, a 40

Albemarle beſieged by French king, 146, b 30. wonne by the earle of Flanders, 88, b 30

Albemarle william, whoſe ſon ſhould haue béene made king of England, 22, a 10

Alberike ruler of Northumberland, 13, a 40

Albertus de Laſco, &c: his comming into England, 1353, b 40. Prepareth for his returne into Poland, 1354, b 60. Deſcribed, 1355, a 10. Interteined at Oxford, 50, 60, b 10. His departing thenſe, 20. ¶ Sée Polander.

Alderman of London his authoritie, 120, a 30. Seuen deceaſed within the ſpace of ten moneths, 1209, b 60, 1132, b 10 ¶ Sée Almeshouſes, Charitie, Londoners, and Schoole.

Aldgitha quéene, ſiſter to Edwin & Mercia ſent to Cheſter, 1, a 30

Aldred archbiſhop of Yorke, 1, a 40. Crowneth duke william, 1, b 20. And Mawd quéene, 6, a 60. Dieth for griefe, b 60.

Alexander king of Scots deceaſſeth, the manner thereof, 283, a 10

Alexander biſhop of Lincolne fled into Scotland, 8, a 30

Alexander Robert. ¶ Sée Iuſts triumphant.

Alexander. ¶ Sée Pope.

Alice the daughter of erle Morteine ſold for monie, 84, a 60,

Allum déere, 791

Almaine great and tall incountred withall by the duke of Suffolke, 833, b 60, 834, a 10

Almes. ¶ Sée Charitie.

Almeshouſes for the poore, 1311, b 20. within Biſhopſgate, 1062, b 30. Of Dauid Smith for poore widows, 1375, b 50, 1376. For the reliefe of the poore, 1377, b 30

Almiramumoli king of the Saracens feineth himſelfe dead, 124, a 20

Altars taken downe and tables ſet in their roome, 1062, b 10

Ambaſſadour into Denmarke, 892, b 10. 1348, a 20, 30, &c. Sent into France, 110, b 10, 167, a 50, 205, a 60, 209, a 20, 257, a 20, 336, a 20, 351, a 50, 477, a 30, 485, b 30, 546, b 30, 849, a 10, &c: 1229, a 10, a 10, 20, 1129, a 50, 1380, a 50, 60, 1381, all. 1382, a 10, &c. ¶ Sée Sackuill. Sent to the generall councell, they come to the councell, 236, b 60. At Cambreie, 260, b 10. Sent into Germanie, 292, b 20. Sent to the king of Almaigne, 260, b 60. To Philip archduke of Burgogne, 777, a 50. To the pope, 242, a 20, 365, a 50, 380, a 20, 535, a 20, 30, 381, b 10, 237, a 60, 205, b 10, 179, b 60, 187, a 50, b 30, 29, a 50, 31, b 10, 20, &c. Sent to the king of Scots, 297, b 20, 162, a 60, 163, b 30, 1402, b 30. Sent into Spaine, 248, b 30. To the emperour Charles, 897, b 60. The anſwer which they receiue, 899, a 10. Sent from Alfonſe king of Caſtile, &c: 100, b 50. Sent from the king of Connagh in Ireland, 96, b 40. Sent from the emperour, 1093, a 30, 961, a 50, 894, a 30, 891, a 60, 839, a 60: note, 791, a 30, 35, a 10, 38, a 10, 75, a 60. Out of France into England, 1238, a 20. From the K. of Spaine, 808, b 60, 894, a 60, b 10. From the French king with a traine, 848, a 40, 50, 60, 771, a 50, 546, b 30, 1315, b 60, 1316, a 10, 518, a 30, 474, b 40, 350, b 60, 282, b 50, 334, b 60. From the good townes in Flanders, 368, a 60. From the king of Hungarie, 894, b 40. Out of Muſcouie, 1132, b 60, 1211, b 50, 60. From the duke of Burgogne, 693, b 30, 60. From the pope, 336, a 10. Out of Scotland, 705, a 30, 518, a 60, 159, b 60, 875, b 40. From Swethen about a marriage, 1185, a 60, b 10

Ambaſſador ligier of Spaine. ¶ Sée Mendoza.

Ambaſſage diſdainefull, 545, a 10. Roiall into France, 477, a 60

Ambervilliers caſtell taken, 589, a 60

Amphibalus bodie found and buried at ſaint Albons, 101, b 30

Amphibologie of this word daughter, 156, b 10

Ambition was Anſelme loth to be ſuſpected of, 28, a 10. Of earle Robert of Northumberland, 22, b 10. Of earle John, 132, b 40. In the French and Spaniſh kings aſpiring to the empire, 851, a 40, &c. Of archbiſhop Thurſtane notable, 38, b 10. Of biſhop Longchampe, 129, a 10. Of an old aged biſhop of Durham: note, 119, b 40, 50, 60. Of earles ſuing to be kings, 1, a 30. Of two archbiſhops, 39, b 60. Of biſhops, 38, b 20. Contentious, 121, a 30. Of two monks labouring for an abbaſie, 18, b 60. Of mans nature, 76, a 40, 714, a 30. The working thereof, 739, b 60. And fruits thereof: noted in Robert, 12, a 30. It will haue a fall: note, 734, b 60. Note the whole ſtorie, from page 1083, a 60, b 10, &c. 1084, b 10, &c. ¶ Sée Selim and Turke.

Amſterdam a towne of great concourſe and commerce, inexpugnable, 1430, b 30, 50

Anabaptiſts doo penance and are burned, 946, a 40, 50. Their hereſies, recantation, and penance at Pauls croſſe, 1260, b 10, 20, 30, &c. Baniſhed. 1261, b 20. Burned in Smithfield, 1261, b 40. Manie in Amſterdam, 1430, b 40

Anger and what the heat thereof driueth a man vnto: note, 211, b 10. ¶ Sée Enuie.

Angiers citie taken, 158, b 30. Wonne of king John by aſſault, 170, a 30. And by him repared, 170, b 30

Angleſeie inuironed with the ſea, 23, a 40

Angoleſme recouered by the Frenchmen, 369, a 30

Aniou, a rode made thereinto by the duke of Clarence, 579, b 60

Anne Aſkew and others arreigned and acquited, 968, b 10, &c.

Anne Bullen created marchioneſſe of Penbroke, 928, b 30. ¶ Sée Quéene.

Anne of Cléeue, a marriage betwéene hir and king Henrie the eight concluded, 947, b 60. She is receiued at Calis, landeth in Kent, the order of hir receiuing on Blackheath, 948, a 40, b 30. The méeting of hir and the king, hir chariot wherein ſhe rode all hir iournie, hir welcome to Gréenewich, 949,, a 50, b 20, 60. She is married to king Henrie the eight, 950, a 10, &c. At quéene Maries coronation, 1091, a 30. Deceaſeth, 1133, b 60

Annates forbidden to be paid to the pope, 928, a 40

Annuities. ¶ Sée Patents.

Anſelme archbiſhop of Canturburie elected, 20, a 60. At ſtrife with william Rufus, and whie, 24, a 10. His ſhift for his paiment to william Rufus and his honeſt ſatiſfaction, 22, b 10. ¶ Sée Archbiſhop. Prepareth to auoid the realme by ſhip, and complaineth to the pope of william Rufus, 26, a 10. His admonition from Rome to william Rufus, returneth into England, 27, b 60. At the inſtance of Hugh earle of Cheſter commeth ouer into England, 28, a 10. Reſtored home, 28, b 20. Goeth to Rome, 31, b 20. Denieth to doo homage to Henrie the firſt: note, 29, a 50. Holdeth a councell at weſtminſter: note, and what was there decréed, 30, a 60. Refuſeth to conſecrat the biſhops inueſted by the king, 31, a 60. Baniſhed, and his ſée ſeized vpon into the kings hands, 32, a 10. Receiued into Henrie the firſts fauour and returneth home, 33, b 20, 30. Held a ſynod, and what was there decréed, 34, b 10. Writeth to pope Paſchall that he would not ſend archbiſhop Thomas of yorke his pall, 35, a 20. His curſſe feared of king Henrie the firſt and his biſhops, 36, b 30. He falleth ſicke, 35, b 60. His death, and what countrie man he was, 36, a 30

Antedating of the kings ſeale treſonable and ſo executed, 953, a 20

Anticipation. ¶ Sée Subſidie.

Antipape, 421, a 50, b 50, 475. a 10, 535, a 10, 24, b 20. ¶ Sée Fitzleo, Pope, and Schiſme.

Antiquitie reuerenced, note the meaning of the proclamation, 1321, b 30. Preſented vnto quéene Eliſabeth at Norwich, 1293, b 30, 1294, a 60, b 10

Antwerpe entred into by the Spaniards who plaied the cruell tyrants, 1263, a 10. Interteineth the duke of Alanſon right roiallie: note, 1332, 1333, &c: to 1344, a 10. Reioiſeth at the duke of Alanſons comming, 1331, a 60. ¶ Sée Duke of Alanſon.

Apparell of king Henrie the eight at his coronation, 801, a 40. Running at the ring, 805, b 60. Of him and his nobles going to méet Maximilian, 820, a 10, 20. After the taking of Tornaie, 822, b 60. Sumptuous at quéene Annes coronation, 931, a 10, &c. b 60. Of the duke of Alanſon whereat the French wondered, 1337, a 10. Of william Rufus counted gorgious then, but now verie ſimple, 27, b 40. Of Edward the ſecond gorgious and triumphant, 322, a 20. Sumptuous of Richard the ſecond, 501, b 40. Of ſir John Arundell verie ſumptuous, 423, b 50. Strange of prince Henrie, ſonne to Henrie the fourth, 539, a 30. Gorgious of Richard the ſeconds court: note, at the verie end of his ſtorie, 544. Of Edward the fourth at an interview with the French king, 699, a 60, b 10, &c. Sumptuous of the earle of Northumberland, 791, a 60. Sumptuous of the duke of Buckingham, 801, a 10. Of great eſtates, 825, a 20. Statelie in France at a tilt, 834, a 30. Of the earle of Surie receiuing the French kings ambaſſadors, 148, a 40. Statelie of the duchie of Brabant, 1336, a 20. Of the monſieur of Brabant, 1333, b 60. Of the king of England and France at an interuiew, 851, a 50, b 60, 859, a 60, 860, a 20, 30, 40. Right gorgious in a ſhew, 807, b 40. Faire ſutes giuen by king John and the archbiſhop of Canturburie to their ſeruants: note, 163, a 60. Diſguiſed ſouldiers in womens apparell: note, 1188, b 40. Of women wherein a biſhop diſguiſeth himſelfe, 132, a 10. Coſtlie forbidden, 211, b 40. An act for it, 353, a 40, 396, b 40. Of a knight all not worth foure ſhillings, 1099, b 20. Changed from robes to rags: note, 460, b 30. ¶ Sée Maſke.

Apparition. ¶ Sée Viſion.

Appeales to Rome, 213, a 40, 133, a 60, 98, a 50, 210, a 30. Forbidden, &c, 74, a 30. Of the prince of wales before the French king, 401, a 20

Appletrée. ¶ Sée Gun.

Apprentiſes at what time admitted to fellowſhips of companies, 120, a 20

Aques beſieged by earle Richard, Henrie the ſeconds ſonne, 99, b 40

Aquitane full of warre, 403, a 50. The grant thereof to the duke of Lancaſter reuoked, 485, b 10. Recouered by the French, the dignitie and ſtate of that dukedome, 641, a 40, 50

Arbitrement of certeine graue perſons in the ſtrife betwéene william Rufus and his brother Robert reiected, and whie, 21, a 60

Archbiſhop Aldred ſubmitteth himſelfe to duke william, 1, a 50. ¶ Sée Aldred. Anſelme, ¶ Sée Anſelme. Arundell of Canturburie his anſwer for the clergie, he chafeth, the kings anſwer to him, 526, a 20, 40, 60. Baldwine of Canturburie exhorted men to go to war againſt the Saracens, 108, a 40. Deceaſeth, 130, b 50. Boniface of Canturburie vncle to quéene Elenor, 225, a 60. Deſcribed, and how he came to be aduanced, 226, a 60. He deceaſeth, 767, a 30. Courtneie of Canturburie his viſitation, 483, b 60. He excommunicateth the wickleuiſts: note, 484, a 10. Authoriſed by the pope to leuie foure pence of the pound, &c: note, 485, a 20. Cranmer of Canturburie, 929, b 30. ¶ Sée Cranmer. Edmund of Canturburie getteth him to Pontneie to remaine in voluntarie exile, 224, b 60. What cauſed him to depart England, his death and ſurname, reputed a ſaint, 225, a 10, 20. Grindall of Canturburie elected, 1262, a 30. Deceaſeth, 1354, a 20. Heath of Canturburie his words vttered in the parlement houſe touching the proclaming of quéene Eliſabeth, 1170, a 40. Lord chancellor, 1130, b 40. Hubert elected of Canturburie, lord chéefe iuſtice, 140, a 30, 145, b 30. Complained of to the pope, 153, a 20. His words at the coronation of king John, 158, b 60. Lord chancellor, to the miſlike of ſome: note, 159, b 30. Deceaſeth, 169, a 50. Lanfranke. ¶ Sée Lanfranke. Langton of Canturburie elected whiles two others were ſtriuing for it, 171, a 10. Neuill of Canturburie commended, 213, a 60. His conditions, b 10, &c. Parker of Canturburie deceaſeth, 1261, a 10. His commendation, 20. A benefactor diuerſe waies, 40, 50, 60. ¶ Sée Parker. Rafe of Canturburies returne into England out of Normandie, 41, a 10. Dieth, 42, a 60. Reignolds election of Canturburie bred much diſcord, 169, a 60. Richard of Canturburie elected receiueth his pall, 37, b 20. His conſecration diſturbed, 85, b 60. His death, and conditions: note, 108, a 40. Robert of Canturburie accuſed by Edward the firſt to the pope, ſuſpended, 313, b 50. Roger of Canturburie, 64, b 20. Seuage of Canturburie deceaſeth, 795, b 30. Stephan of Canturburie deceaſeth, 210, a 10. Stigand. ¶ Sée Stigand. Stratford of Canturburie in Edward the the thirds diſpleaſure, he writeth vnto him, refuſeth to come to the court, 361, a 10, 30, 60. Sudburie of Canturburie made lord chancellour, 424, b 50. Theobald of Canturburie conſecrated, 50, a 60. Deceaſed, 68, b 60. Thomas, 9, a 20. ¶ See Thomas. wetherſheid elected to Canturburie, 210, a 10. whitegift doctor of diuinitie, thankfull for his aduancements, the armes of both ſees which he ioined blaſoned, his poſie anſwerable to his propertie, 1355, b 30, &c. Made of the priuie councell, 1434, b 60. william of Canturburie, 42, a 60

Archbiſhop of Canturburie primat of Ireland, 22, b 50. Made the popes legat, 147, b 50. Beſieged Marleburgh caſtell, 142, a 40. Flieth out of the realme, 59, a 60. Goeth to Rome, 39, b 60. Hath power legantine, 69, a 10. He and king william at contention and whie, 24, a 20. Capteine of an armie, 2 a 10. Put by from crowning the king, 1, b 20. Accuſed of treaſon by the ſpeaker in parlement, 490, b 40. Condemned to perpetuall impriſonment, 491 a 50. His words at a parlement in the behalfe of the clergie, that would be exempted from paieng of ſubſidies, &c: 301, b 60. His goods confiſcat, his obſtinacie, 302, a 20, 50. Purchaſeth a grant of the pope to leuie monie, 238, a 60. Reſtored to his ſee, 514, a 10, His curſſe, 241, a 60. He and wincheſter made freends, 247, b 10. Standeth againſt Henrie the third in defenſe of his clergie, at contention with the earle of Kent, appealeth to Rome, dieth in his returne from thenſe, 213, a 30, &c. Readie to broch new contention, 204, b 60, Legat and lord cheefe iuſtice of England, 147, b 60
Archbiſhops at contention for primaſie: note, 9, a 30. Decided by the king and biſhops of the lands, 9, a 60. Sentenced by decree of the pope, 9, b 40. Go both to Rome, and whie, 31, b 20. At ſtrife, 35. all. For the primaſie: note, 37, b 40. Thorough ambition, 39, b 60 Sue both perſonallie for their conſecration to the pope, 40, a 10, &c. At ſtrife for a peece of ſeruice about king Henrie the firſt, 43, a 40. At ſtrife for carrieng of their croſſes, 142, b 20. At ſtrife in king Henrie the eights time, 919, b 30. Of Canturburies ſee void foure yeares, and in Henrie the firſt hands, 37, a 60
Archbiſhops of Canturburie from the firſt to the laſt, their names and liues, &c: ſet downe in a collection, 1435, a 10, &c.
Archbiſhop Geffreie baſtard of yorke, 119, b 10. Obteineth his pall, 130, b 20, Committed to priſon: note, 130, b 60. Depriued and whie, 161, b 60. Reſtored to all his dignities, 163, b 20 Stealeth out of the realme, 170, b 50. Deceaſſeth, 176, b 10. Gerard of yorke conſecrateth the biſhops of Henrie the firſts inueſting, 31, b 10. Receiueth his pall, 31, b 60. Deceaſeth, 35, a 10. Greie of yorke, 182, a 60. Greenewich, and what ſummes of monie the pope had of him, 315, a 20. Neuill, 969, b 10, Roger ſent to the pope, 72, a 60. Forbidden the vſe of the ſacraments, 76, b 10. Deceaſeth, 105, b 20. Sands, 1145, b 50. ¶ See Sands. Thomas ſometimes Henrie the firſts chapleine and much a doo about his conſecration, 35, a 10. &c. Refuſeth to come to Canturburie to be conſecrated, 35 a 50. Suſpended, &c. 35, b 60, 36, a 10. Hath his pall ſent him from the pope, 36, a 50. Submits himſelfe to Canturburie, note the forme, 36, b 30. Dieth, 37, b 40. Thurſtane of yorke, 37, b 40. Reſtored vpon condition, 40, b 60. Made lieutenant of the north parts, 49, a 20. In armes againſt the Scots, 49, a 50. Deceaſeth, 1211, a 50
Archbiſhop of yorke acknowleged primat of all Scotland, 9, b 20, His ſubiection to the archbiſhop of Canturburie: note, 9, b 10 Sent ouer to Guiſnes to be kept in ſafe cuſtodie, 693, b 10. Inconſtant and variable: note, 683, a 20, 60, b 10 A conſpirator, he is in armes, 529, b 10, 20. Forbidden to be at Richard the firſts coronation, 143, b 30. The eſtimation that was had of him, his proteſtation whie he put on armes, b 60. He and others arreſted, put to death, reputed a martyr, 530, a 30, 60, a 10. Of counſell with the Perſies conſpiracie, 522, a 10, 20. Made cardinall, reſigneth his archbiſhoprike, 279, b 20. Crowneth Henrie the firſt, and whie, 28, a 20. Depriued of his croſſe, 257, b 50. Accurſſed by the pope, his conſtancie: note, 256, b 40. Gouernour of the realme, 229, b 10. Proud, depoſed, and out of fauour with Richard the firſt, 147, b 40. Accuſed but to no purpoſe, 143, a 10. His preſumptuous demeanor, 98, a 30. He and Elie reconciled by Richard the firſts means, 144, a 60. He and Durham at ſtrife, 133, a 60. Sicke and his place ſupplied, 49, a 60
Archbiſhop of Cullen viſiteth Beckets toome, 107, b 60. Of Rone cheefe gouernour of England, 132, b 30. Of ſaint Andrews in Scotland receiueth his ſtaffe from an altar, 41, a 50. A deadlie enimie to Henrie the eight, 959, b 10. Of Vienna the popes legat not receiued as legat, and whie, 29, a 40
Archbiſhops of England are in no reſpect to deale with the pope: note, 24. Their authoritie notablie exemplified in Anſelme: note, 24, 25. Their election annulled vpon good cauſes: note, 210, a 10. Six at London in time of the parlement, 256, a 10
Archbiſhoprike of Canturburie void more than three yeares, 225, a 60. Void foure yeares: note, 18, b 10. Let out to farme, 206, a 40
Archbiſhopriks giuen to ſtrangers by duke william, 9, a 20
Archdecons ſhould be decons, 30, b 30
Archdeconries not to be let out to farme, 30, b 30
Archer good was Henrie the eight, 806, a 40
Archer Engliſh of the garriſon of Calis, a notable peece of ſeruice againſt the enimie, 380, a 60
Archers of England driue the French from their ſiege, 363, a 10. Notable ſeruice againſt the Genowaies: note, 372, a 40, 50. Victorious againſt the French, 373, a 60. Seruice againſt the Scots, 987, a 60. Fulfill a propheſie: note, 388, b 50. Force againſt the French, 389, a 40, worthie actiuitie, 396, b 60. Valiancie againſt the Spaniards, 399, a 30. Good ſeruice vnder ſir Hugh Caluerlie, 422, b 50. Vnder the conduct of a preeſt, 443, b 50 Shot killeth in a quarell, 447, a 50. Great ſeruice againſt the Spaniſh & French 448, a 10. Good ſeruice againſt the Saracens, 473, a 60. In the time of a conſpiracie: note, 516, a 30. The greateſt force of the Engliſh armie: note, 553, a 60. Good ſeruice at Teukeſburie field, 687, b 60. Good ſeruice vnder ſir Humfreie Talbot, 770, b 30. Good ſeruice againſt the enimie, 771, a 10. Of the Corniſh rebels whoſe arrowes were in length a full cloth yard, 782, b 10. Game made with laieng waſt of gardens in Moorefield, 785, a 20. A ſhew of two hundred in a maigame before king Henrie the eight, 836, b 40. Gall the French horſſemen, 966, a 60
Archers Iriſh, 986, a 20. Diſcomfited, 984, b 40. ¶ See Incloſures.
Ard aſſaulted by the Engliſhmen, 528, b 40
Arden murthered by the means of his wife a notable whore: note, 1062, b 40, &c.
Arden. ¶ See Sumeruill.
Arks beſieged, 819, a 30
Arlet duke william Conquerors mother the daughter of a burgeſſe, 20, a 10
Armach in Ireland, where the ſee metropolitane is, 100, b 40
Armenia, the king thereof commeth ouer into England for aid againſt the Turkes, 448, b 50. Sueth for a ſafe conduct to come into England, which is denied him, 453, b 30. would gladlie that a peace betweene England and France ſhould be concluded, 480, b 30
Armetrida the wife of Hugh Lou earle of Cheſter, 20, a 40
Armie called the armie of God and the holie church, 185. a 50
Armour, and an ordinance for the ſame, 105, a 30. ¶ See England.
Arnalt knight his valiantneſſe, 997, a 10, 40
Arrogancie of Becket blamed, 77, b 10. ¶ See Ambition and Pride.
Arſacide. ¶ See Saracens.
Arthur made awaie by meanes of his vncle king Iohn, and whie, 7, b 30
Arthur the eldeſt and firſt ſon of Henrie the ſeuenth borne, 769, b 10. Had carnall knowledge with his wife, he is ſent into wales, 789, a 50, 60, b 20. Deceaſeth, 790, b 10
Arthur Plantagenet created vicount Liſle, 878, a 50. Deceaſeth in the tower, 955, a 60. ¶ See Plantagenet.
Arthur of Britaine. ¶ See Duke.
Arundell caſtell beſieged, 30, a 50
Arundell knight drowned, his exceſſe and ſumptuous apparell, 423, b 10, 60
Aſke a notable rebell pardoned: note, 942, b 30. He and others practiſe to raiſe a new rebellion, 944, a 10, &c. He with his coparteners is executed, 944, b 10
Aſſaſſini. ¶ See Saracens,
Aſſemblies vnlawfull an act there againſt, 1061, a 30
Aſſiſe of bread publiſhed by proclamation: note, 166, a 20, 30
Aſtronomers deceiued, and how they excuſed their falſe predictions, 882, b 20. Deceiued in their predictions, 1356, b 30, &c.
Attaindors at parlament, 946, b 20. 955, a 10. ¶ See Treaſon.
Audleie lord cheefe capteine of the Corniſh rebels ignominiouſlie drawne vnto Tiburne and executed, 782, a 10, b 30. Slaine. 649, b 10
Audleie knight lord chancellor, 929, b 20. Keeper of the great ſeale, 928, b 20
Auricular confeſſion. ¶ See Confeſſion.
Auxerre citie taken by ſir Robert Knols, 391, b 30

B.

BAbington and his confederats. ¶ See Traitors.
Bacon knight lord keeper deceaſeth, 1271, b 60. His epitaph in Paules, 1272, a 10. See more of him, 1286, b 40. ¶ See Chancellors.
Baddie his notable conſtancie, 536, a 60
Badge of the bright ſunne the earle of Marches badge, 660, a 20. Of the earle of warwike worne in euerie mans cap: note, 678, b 40. Of Richard the ſecond, 500, b 60. Of queene Eliſabeth, note, 1290, b 10
Badges a bill againſt the wearing of them, 472, b 60
Baffuling what it is among the Scots, 427, a 30
Bagot knight and priſoner diſcloſeth ſecrets of trouble, 512, b 50, 60, &c: 513, a 10, &c.
Bailiffes firſt that bare rule in London, 119, b 60. ¶ See London, and Officers.
Bainards caſtell new built, 788, a 10
Baion yeelded to the Engliſhmen, 293, b 20
Bakers ſell bread lacking ſix or ſeuen ounces weight in a penie loſe, 282, b 60. Puniſhed by the pillorie, 259, b 40

Bales writing within the compaſſe of a penie, 1262, b 10
Balioll king of Scots obteineth the kingdome of Scotland, 288, b 60. The forme of his fealtie to the king of England, 288, b 60, 289, b 50. His homage, 290, a 20. Crowned king of Scotland, 349, b 60. Chaſed out of Scotland, 350, a 20. Doth homage to Edward the third, 350, b 20. Departeth this life, 308, b 60
Banbourgh. ¶ Sée Caſtell.
Banket roiall: note, 254, a 50. 825, a 30. Of two hundred and thrée ſcore diſhes. 849, a 40. Of two hundred diſhes vpon the ſudden, 922, b 20. Of thirtie or fortie diſhes and not one of them fiſh nor fleſh, 1192, b 50. Full of proper deuiſes, 1425, a 30
Banketting houſe of French king deſcribeth, 849, b 10, &c. Of Henrie the eight in his palace at Guiſnes, 857, b 60. within the towne of Calis, 861, b 20, &c. At weſtminſter builded, 1315, b 10. How garniſhed and decked, 30. The coſts and charges thereof, 40
Bankerupts practiſe, 812, b 20
Baniſhment of biſhops and other Engliſh in duke williams time, 8, a 30. By whome ordeined, 33, b 50. For twelue moneths, 269, b 10. Of the earle of Cornewall out of the realme, 319, b 60. Perpetuall, 465, a 30
Baniſter the duke of Buckingham ſeruant receiueth the duke in perill of life into his houſe, 743, b 50. Betraieth him into the hands of his enimies for monie, Gods ſecret iudgements vpon him and his children: note, 744, a 50, 60
Barnabées daie kept holie daie all London ouer, 1062, b 10
Barnard of Newmarch a Norman, 17, a 60
Barnes doctor and two merchants of the Stilliard did penance at Paules croſſe for hereſie, 892, b 60. For a ſermon inuectiue againſt biſhop Gardener aſketh him forgiueneſſe, 950, b 10. He and others executed, 952, b 30
Barnet towne how ſeated, 684, a 10
Barnet field. ¶ Sée Battell.
Barons foure vnder tht earle of Cheſter, 20, a 20
Barton the Scotiſh pirat, 426, b 20. Incountreth the lord Howard, he is ſlaine, 811, a 20, &c.
Baſtard of Burgogne ambaſſadour into England, iuſts betwixt him and the lord Scales, 669, a 10, 20
Baſtard to a king made a biſhop, 99, b 60
Baſtards made legitimat, 487, b 10
Bath taken by the biſhop of Conſtance, 17, a 40. It and welles when and by whome vnited, 27, b 50
Battell of Agincourt, 552, b 60, 553, a 10, &c. At Barnet, 684, a 10, &c. 685, a 10, &c. Of Blorehеath, 649, a 50, 60, b 10. Of S. Edmundſburie, 90, b 20. Of Northhampton, 654, b 20. Of Palmeſundaie, 664, a 40. Of Saxton. ¶ Sée Palmeſundaie. At Hedgcote or Banberie, 672, b 30. At Exham, 666, b 10. At Teukeſburie, 687, b 60. The firſt at ſaint Albons, 643, a 60, 644, a 20. At wakefield, 659, b 10. Of thrée long houres betwéene the Engliſh & French, great loſſe on the Engliſh ſide, 601, b 30. Second at ſaint Albons, 660, a 60. Of Mortimers croſſe, 660, a 20. Of Uerneuil, 588, a 50, b 40. Of Ferribrig the thirtéenth of March, one thouſand foure hundred thrée ſcore and one, wherein twentie thouſand were ſlaine, moſt knights and gentlemen, 1234, a 50. Betwéene duke william and his ſonne Robert: note, 12, a 40. Betwéene the Danes and Normans verie fierce, 7, a 40. Begun with praier: note, 371, a 60. At Kenils croſſe, 376, a 20. Of Aulroie, 396, b 10, &c. Of Sluiſe where the Engliſh were victors, 358, b 10. Of Banokeſburie, 322, a 40. Called the white battell, and why, 325, a 10. Of Boroughbridge, 341, a 10. Of Comeran in Ulſter, 322, b 60. At Dunbar betwéene the Engliſh and Scots in Edward the firſt time, 299, b 30. Betwéene the earle of Lincolne and the earle of Arthois, 302, b 30, 40, &c. Of Fowkirke, 307, b 30. Betwéene Henrie the third and his barons: note, 267, b all. Of Eueſham, 270, a 50. Of Cheſterfield, 272, a 40. Betwéene king Richard the third and the earle of Richmond, called Boſworth field, 758, b 60. At Stoke néere to Newarke betwéene the earle of Lincolne, &c: and Henrie the ſeuenth, 766, b 40, 50, 767, a 10, 20. Of ſaint Aulbin in Britaine betwéene the duke of Britaine and the French king, 769, a 30. At Blackheath, 782, b 10. Of Spurs, 822, a 50. At Fleddon betwéen the Engliſh and the Scotiſh, 426, 427, 428. Of Pauia, 884, a 60, b 10, &c. At Muſkleborow. ¶ Sée Leith and Scotland. Staied by Gods prouidence: note, 943, a 30. Of the bridge of Bouins, 183, a 60. Sharpe and bloudie betwéene duke Robert and Henrie the firſt brethren, 33, a 10, 20, &c. Thrée things to be foreſéene by them that ſhall giue it, 52, b 50, 60. Of Monadmore in Ireland, 59, b 10
Battell betwixt fiſhes, 225, b 60. Of herrings, 600, a 40. Betwixt flies and gnats, 465 b 60. Their ſlaughter, 466, a 10. ¶ Sée warres.
Battell abbeie, why ſo called and by whome built, 15, a 40. The church to what ſaint dedicated, 21, a 40. Their abbie roll, 3, 4, 5
Baulbaſon a French knight valiant fighteth with Henrie the fift hand to hand, 577, a 10, 60
Becket Thomas archdecon of Canturburie, 64, b 20. Lord chancellour, 65, a 40. Sent into France, 67, a 50. His & Henrie the ſeconds firſt falling out, 68, b 20. His authoritie, 69, a 10. A better courtier than a preacher, 69, a 30. Practiſeth ſecret treaſon, 69, b 10. Receiueth an oth, 70, b 10. Repenteth him thereof, and would haue fled the realme, 70, b 20, &c. Cited to appéere before the king and ſentence againſt him, 70. b 60. Condemned in fiue hundred markes, 71, a 10. Called to an account, 71, a 20. will not be perſuaded to ſubmit himſelfe to the king, appealeth to Rome, goeth to the court, is reputed a traitor, and diſallowed to be archbiſhop, 71, all. His ſtout courage, 72, a 10. His flight by night, 72, a 40. His complaint to the pope, 72, b 50. Reſigneth his pall, 73, a 50. His curſſe, 74, b 20. An edict againſt him, 74, a 20. Six yeares in exile, 77 a 30. His arrogancie and wilfulneſſe in opinion, in fauour with the French king, reconciled to Henrie the ſecond the king of England, 77, b all. Is aduiſed by the French king, returneth into England, is complained of to Henrie the ſecond by the archbiſhop of yorke, he is killed, 78, all, 79, all. His death diſcuſſed, 82, b 50. The king purgeth himſelfe of his death, 83, b 30. Canonized a ſaint, his holie daie and collect for the ſame, 85, b 10, 20. His towme viſited by the French king, 103, a 60. His towme viſited by the archbiſhop of Cullen, 107, b 60. His ſhrine viſited by the earle of Flanders, 152, a 60. His ſword in the miniſtration of an oth, 303, b 40. His ſhrine taken awaie and his dead bones burnt, 945, b 50
Becons and the vſe of them in countries néere the ſea, 752, a 30
Bedford caſtell beſieged, 206, b 20. Deliuered to the barons, 185, a 60
Bele doctor an vndiſcréet and ſeditious preacher, 841, a 10, 20
Beleſme. ¶ Sée Erle.
Bell a ſeditious préeſt arreigned, condemned, his propheſie, his ſermon to the rebels, his ſeditious letter, his execution at ſaint Albons, 437, a 40, &c.
Bell rong at eight of the clocke at night by whom appointed, and whie, 6, a 50. ¶ Sée Chime.
Bell caſtell aſſaulted and yéelded vp to the Engliſh, 879, b 30
Belman. ¶ Sée Common crier.
Benbrike doctor poiſoned at Rome, 835, b 50
Benefices belonging to ſtrangers their valuation taken, 236, b 40. The value of them in ſtrangers hands, 247 b 20. Beſtowed without conſent of patrones, 224, a 10. Impropriat, 214, b 60. with requeſt to the pope that he would not meddle with their reſeruations, 408, b 60, 409, &c. Inhibited by the king & how: note, 363, b 60. The beſt in ſtrangers hands, 365, a 60. A proclamation that all Engliſh beneficed men in Rome ſhould returne into England, 474, b 50, 60. ¶ Sée Abbeies, Biſhops, Churches, Clergie, Pope, Sequeſtration.
Beneuolence granted to Edward the fourth, 694, a 50. Put into Henrie the ſeuenths head to be leuied ouer the whole land, 792, a 20. An exaction of monie of whole deuiſe, 771, b 60. ¶ Sée Subſidie.
Beneuolence of the French king to the earle of Richmond: note, 745, a 40
Beningfield knight his churliſh vſing of the ladie Eliſabeth his priſoner and in his kéeping, 1117, b 40. He is too ſtreict and ſeuere in his office againſt the ladie Eliſabeth, 1155, b 10, &c. He grudgeth at the gentle interteinement of hir, his rude and vngentle behauiour, 1156, a 60, b 10, 20, &c. 60. His cruell dealing towards hir, 1157, a 30
Berebeating on ſundaie reuenged by Gods iuſt iudgment: note, 1353, a 30
Berds ſhauen, and rounded haire in vſe with the Normans, 5, b 10
Berengaria daughter to the king of Nauarre, king Richard the firſts wife, 126, b 40, 127, a 40
Berkhamſtéed caſtell ſurrendred, 198, a 60
Bertie, huſband to the ducheſſe of Suffolke attached by biſhop Gardiner: note, 1142, b 10, &c. ¶ Sée ducheſſe Katharine of Suffolke.
Berwike fortified, 320, b 10. Taken by the Scots, 383, a 60. Beſieged, 350, a 30. Surrendred, 350, a 50. Betraied to the Scots, 324, a 20. Summoned and woone by Edward the firſt, 298, a 20, 50. Fortified by Edward the firſt, 299, a 30. Chéeſtie regarded, 881, b 40. yéelded to Henrie the fourth, 530, b 50. The caſtell woone by the Scots, recouered by the earle of Northampton, 446, b 20. woone by the Scots, 421, a 60. Recouered by the earle of Northumberland, 421, b 10. woone by the Scots, recouered by the Engliſh, 418, a 60. The capteine thereof will not ſuffer the duke of Lancaſter to enter, 439, a 10. Deliuered to the French king and of him poſſeſſed, 665, a 60. woone by the Engliſhmen, 705, b 60. Deliuered to the lord Stanlie, &c: 706, b 60
Betrice Henrie the thirds daughter borne, 230, b 10
Beuchamps iournie to the holie land againſt the Saracens, 22, a 60. His valiantneſſe, 88, a 10
Beuclerke Henrie why ſo called, 15, a 60
Beuer caſtell to whom it apperteined, 189, a 30
Beuerleie towne burned, 113, b 20
Beumont vicount his daughter married vnto the Scotiſh king, 110, a 60. Diſcomfited by the Scots, 323, a 40
Beaumont lord of Heinault: note, note, 337, a 60, 346, b 60, 347. Forſaketh the king of Englands ſeruice, 367, b 50. Lord high conſtable of England, 627, a 20

Bible in euerie church commanded to be read, 945, b 40. The neceſſarie vſe and benefite thereof, 1042, b 50. Preſented to quéene Eliſabeth which ſhe promiſeth the citie often to read ouer, 1175, b 60

Bigod Roger his ſpoiles and booties, 17, a 50. Hugh ſometime ſteward to Henrie the firſt, 46, b 40. Knight procureth a commotion, 943, b 60. Apprehended and executed, 944, a 10, b 10

Bilneie burned, 928, a 10

Biſhop Adrian an Italian of Hereford, Bath and Wels, 771, a 40. Agelmarus. ¶ Sée Agelmarus. Alexāder. ¶ Sée Alexander. Anthonie of Durham his great reuenues, kept out of the abbeie of Durham, ſummoned to appeare before Edward the firſt, refuſeth, the concluſion of the ſtrife betwéene him and the moonks, 315, a 40, &c. Athelmarle Henrie the thirds halfe brother biſhop of Wincheſter, 243, a 10. Beauchampe of Saliſburie is ſent to the duke of Yorke, &c: to know the lords meaning that were vp in armes, 649, b 60. Beaufort of Wincheſter ſonne to Iohn duke of Lancaſter, 590, b 60, 591, a 10, &c. Otherwiſe called the rich cardinall, deceaſed, and deſcribed, 627, b 60, 628. Chriſtianus. ¶ Sée Chriſtianus. Cox of Elie deceaſeth, his epitaph, 1321, b 60. Egelwinus. ¶ Sée Egelwinus. Ermenfred. ¶ Sée Ermenfred. Fiſher of Rocheſter complained of to king Henrie the eight, 911, b 40, 50. Beheaded 938, a 60. Foliot of London ambaſſador to the French king, 72, a 50. Fox of Durham owner of Norham caſtell, 782, b 50. Of Exceſter ambaſſadour into Scotland, 767, b 50. Of Wincheſter, 839, b 50, 60. ¶ Sée Corpus Chriſti college. His wiſedome in procuring the clergie to be contributors of monie for Henrie the ſeuenths behoofe, 792, a 50, 60. Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter ambaſſador into France, 939, a 60. ¶ Sée Gardiner. Geffreie of Lincolne king Henries baſe ſonne, 99, b 60. His letter to the archbiſhop of Canturburie, he reſigneth his biſhoprike, 104, b 10, 40. Gifford of Wincheſter refuſeth to be conſecrated at the archbiſhop of Yorks hands, and therefore baniſhed and depriued, 31, b 10. ¶ Sée Gifford. Godfreie of Wincheſter ſonne to the lord Richard de Lucie deceaſeth, 168, b 30. Graie of Norwich lord lieutenant of Ireland, 174, b 30. Graie of Norwich preſident of the councell, 169, b 10. Groſted of Lincolne deceaſed, his praiſe, 249, a 10. Haruie firſt biſhop of Elie, 36, a 30. Horne of Wincheſter deceaſeth, 1299, b 60. Hugh of Lincolne his bold courage to king Richard the firſt, 143, b 60. Deceaſeth, a deſcription of his doings, and life preſumptuous, 162, b 30. Admitted into the number of ſaints, 163, a 10. Of Couentrie reſtored to his ſée, 147, b 30. Iewell of Saliſburie deceaſeth, 1226, b 30. Liſle of Elie and the ladie Wake at variance, 392, a 10. Longchampe of Elie the popes legat, his ſtatelie port, 129, a 10. Depriueth biſhops, meaneth to kéepe earle Iohn low, beſiegeth the caſtell of Lincolne, raiſeth his ſiege with diſhonour, breaketh agréements concluded, 129, all. Lord chancellor of England, 121, a 10. Morton of Elie commended, 791, a 10. Buildeth vpon the dukes ambition, 737, b 10. Deuiſeth to be at his owne libertie in his biſhoprike of Elie, he ſaileth into Flanders to the earle of Richmond, 741, a 60, b 10. What pagents he plaid, the high honour wherein he was placed, his ſubtill vndermining of the duke of Gloceſter, 736, b 10, 30, 50. Defeated the practiſes of king Richard the third and Peter Landoiſe, 747, b 60. Adiureth duke Richard to releaſe the realme by ſome deuiſe from the preſent euill eſtate, 738, a 60. A new conference betwéene them, b 20. Made archbiſhop of Canturburie, cardinall, and lord chancellor, 767, a 30. Odo. ¶ Sée Odo. Oſmond. ¶ Sée Oſmond. Pecocke of Chicheſter abiured at Paules croſſe: note, 646, a 20. Peter of Wincheſter gouernor of king Henrie the third, 202, a 60. Rafe of Durham his warlike exhortation, 49, a 60. Ralegh of Wincheſter conſecrated by the pope, he ſtealeth out of the realme, he giueth to the pope ſix thouſand marks, 231, b 60. Ranulfe. ¶ Sée Ranulfe. Remclid of Hereford inueſted by the king: note, 31, a 50. Remigius. ¶ Sée Remigius. Richard of London tranſlated to the archbiſhoprike of Canturburie, 37, b 10. Roger of Saliſburie put in truſt with the gouernement of the realme, 45, b 50. Ruthall of Durham, one of king Henrie the ſeuenths priuie councell, his booke of priuat affaires vnaduiſedlie deliuered in ſtéed of the kings, diſaduantageable to himſelfe, 796, b 60. He dieth with griefe, 797, a 10. Samſon of Worceſter the mouth of the biſhops, 36, a 60. Tunſtall. ¶ Sée Tunſtall. Wainfléet of Wincheſter founder of Magdalene college in Oxford, 628, b 10, &c. Walkhelme. ¶ Sée Walkhelme. Walkher. ¶ Sée Walkher. Walter of Alba bringeth Anſelme his pall, 25, b 60. ¶ Sée Walter, 1, a 50. Waltham of Saliſburie buried at Weſtminſter among the kings, 485, a 40. Warlewaſts words to pope Paſchall in behalfe of Henrie the firſt, 31, b 40. Watſon of Wincheſter deceaſeth, 1368, b 60. Wickham of Wincheſter remembred and commended: note, 526, b 60, 527, a 10, &c. Made lord chancellor, 466, b 50. William. ¶ Sée William. Wolſtane. ¶ Sée Wolſtane.

Biſhop of Beauuois taken priſoner, 150, b 50. An aduerſarie to Richard the firſt, two of his chapleins come to Richard the firſt, to intreat that they might wait vpon their maiſter, but are denied, 151, a 10

Biſhop of Carleill bold and faithfull, commended, 513, b 40. The firſt was a prior, and the kings confeſſor, 44, b 20. Of Conſtance with others taketh Bath, 17, a 40. Of Couentrie committed to priſon, 318, a 30. Of Dublin made archbiſhop, 59, b 20. Of Durham created an earle, 119, b 50. Beſieged the caſtell of Tickhill, 142, a 30. Loſt his earledome. 144, a 10. Reſtrained of his libertie, 122, b 60. Chiefe ruler of the north parts, 121, a 10. He & earle Patrike at ſtrife, 161, a 10. By letters aſſwageth the Scotiſh kings diſpleaſure, hée goeth into Scotland, 785, a 30, 40. Winneth caſtels, 307, a 40. Of Elies taking vp of horſes to K. Richard the firſts vſe, 122, b 50, 60. Summoned to appeare at Reading, his returne to London, a declaration againſt him, he péeldeth by the tower, 131, all. His letter to the ſhiriffe of Kent, 130, b 30. Diſguiſeth himſelfe in womans apparell, he flieth, is betraied, and committed to priſon, complaineth of his wrongs to the pope, 132, a 10. He deceaſeth, 151, b 10. Of Elie impriſoneth archbiſhop Geffreie of Yorke, 130, b 30. Arriueth in England as a ſimple biſhop, 139, b 30. Sent ambaſſadour to the emperour, 148, a 30. Baniſhed, 50, b 30. Blund of Exceſter ſent to Rome from Henrie the firſt, 37, b 30. Put in charge with the citie of London, beheaded by the Londoners, 338, a 40, b 30. Hereford arreſted for treſon, 335, a 10. His deuiſe to get monie of the biſhops, 251, b 10. Of Ireland elected out of England, 22, a 50. Of Léege murthered, 140, a 10. Of Lincolne viſiteth abbeies, and is ſuſpended by the pope, 244, a 40, 50. Capteine of a band of men, 30, a 50. Of London taken vp with reprochfull words, and reuenged by the Londoners, 412, a 20. His palace, where Richard ſecond kept open houſe, 474, a 10. Stout words to an earle, 458, a 20. Made lord chancellor, 440, b 60. Ambaſſadour to the emperour, 168, b 20. Deane to the archbiſhop of Canturburie, 35, b 20. Of Norwich in armes againſt the antipape, 441, b 50, 60, 442, a 40. Couragious and warlike, 444, a 20. Setteth forward with his armie, & inuadeth Flanders, 442, b 10, 50. The order of his battell againſt the Flemings, 443, a 30. His diſobedience puniſhed, 445, a 20. His armie of fiue hundred footmen and manie horſmen, 176, b 50. Returneth out of Flanders into England, 444, b 60. Of Roſſe an enimie to the Engliſh eſtate, 1370, b 60. Of Saliſburies men and the Londoners in a riot, he maketh a great complaint of them to the king, 478, a 20, 50. Dieth for thought, 50, b 30. Made lord chancellor, 51, a 10. Shamefullie murthered: note, 636, a 10. Of Whitherne conſecrated, 119, b 10. Of Wincheſter lent Henrie the fift two hundred thouſand pounds, 580, b 10. Made a cardinall, 596, b 10. Legated and vnlegated by the pope, 602, a 60, b 60

Biſhop earle of Kent, 13, a 60. Capteine of an armie, 7, b 40. Wiped of fiue thouſand pounds by William Rufus: note, 20, b 10. Depriued of his ſtaffe by the king, 21, a 40. ¶ Sée Herbert. One reuengeth anothers death, 12, b 20

Biſhops choſen principall iuſtices of the realme, 115, b 20. Sent ambaſſadours to the French king, 112, b 50. Forbidden the vſe of the ſacrament, 76, b 10. Diſallow archbiſhop Thomas Becket, 71, b 40. Thinke to pleaſe God in breaking their oth, 46, b 40. Of Man firſt and ſecond, 59, b 10. Threatened, 59, a 40. In ſuſpicion to be diſloiall, 50, b 10. Inueſting done by the kings of England, 29, a 50. ¶ Sée William Rufus. At ſtrife about crowning the king, and ſaieng maſſe before him, 37, a 10. Tranſlation from ſée to ſée, 36, a 30. Of priuie councell and ambaſſadors to Rome, 31, b 20. Fiue conſecrated by Anſelme in one daie, 34, a 40. Inueſtitures giuen awaie from the king by the popes ſentence, 31, b 60. Of a late election Saliſburie and Hereford, 30, a 60, b 10. Depriued by the biſhop of Elie, 129, a 50. Contentious and ambitious, 121, a 50. Elected and conſecrated, 119, a 60, b 10. Quarell with the moonks of Canturburie, 169, b 30. Thrée dead in one yeare, 788, b 20. Reſtored and others depriued, 1089, a 20. Trauell to make peace, 265, a 30. Would rather become martyrs than looſe their monie, 252, b 40. Practiſe to diſappoint the archbiſhop of Canturburie of his purpoſe, 243, a 50. Readineſſe to reſiſt the Saracens, 209, a 50. Ambaſſadors, 205, a 60. Cannot tell what to ſaie in the contention betwéene king William Rufus and Anſelme: note, 25. Of Ireland their names and ſées, 22, b 50. Seditious and ranke warriors, 17, a 30, 40. In fault that duke William was king of England, 1, a 40, 50. Submit themſelues to duke William, 1, a 40. Sworne to be loiall, 1, b 20. Flie into forren lands and countries, 6, a 20. Sées remooued from ſmall towns to cities of more fame, 11, b 60. In armes againſt rebellious earls, 11, a 50. Of

Scotland

Scotland conſecrated by the archbiſhop of yorke, 9,b 20. Of Exceſter from the firſt to the laſt ſet downe in a catalog, 1300,a 20,30,1301, &c. Six receiue the communion, 1185,a 60. Depriued, & others ſucceeding, 1184,b 30. ¶ Sée Ambition, Archbiſhops, and Conſecration.

Biſhoprike of Carleils erection 44,b 20. Of Elie firſt erected, 36,a 30. Of Lincolne void ſeuentéene yeares, 75, a 60, 109,b 40. Of waterford in Ireland erected, 22,b 40

Biſhoprikes beſtowed by king Henrie his gift thought inſufficient, 31,a 50. Bought of king william Rufus, 21,a 40. Let out to farme, 26,a 40

Biſhopſgate new builded, 702, b 60

Biſkains and Engliſhmen togither by the eares, 813,b 60

Blackwagon that followed euill Maie daie, 844,a 60

Blackheath field, 782,b 10

Blackeneſſe an hauen towne on the ſouth ſhore of Scotland, 989,b 50

Blackwell knight ſmothered to death in a throng, 319,a 10

Blacke will a notorious murthering ruffian, 1063,a 50, b 40. Receiueth ten pounds in reward for murthering of Arden, 1065,a 10. Burnt at Fluſhing, 1066,a 20

Blaſing ſtar, 1131,b 10, 252,a 50, 204, b 40, 277,b 40, 1344, a 40, 1314,a 50. Of ſtrange appéerance, 37,a 40. with other ſtrange ſights, 519,b 60. Verie dreadfull for thirtie daies ſpace togither, 225,b 60. In the north of a moneths continuance, 323,a 10. with long & terrible ſtreames, 353, a 20. Appéering in a faire & cleare daie, 11, b 50. ¶ Sée Comet and Starre.

Blaſphemie of pope Julie againſt God, 1128, a 40. Of a popiſh preacher ſeuerelie puniſhed by God, 1128, b 60, 1129,a 10

Bleothgent king of wales partaker with a rebell, 5,a 20

Blewbeard, capteine of rebels, 632,a 20

Blockhouſes & bulworks builded, 946,b 10

Bloreheath field, 649,a 50

Bluet Robert biſhop of Lincolne: note, 20,b 10

Blunt knight, his notable ſeruice againſt the French, 540, b 50

Bohune John, his wife and iſſue, 20,a 50

Boier maior of Bodwin in Cornwall hanged: note, 1006, b 50, &c: 1007,a 10

Boldneſſe. ¶ Sée Magnanimitie, and words.

Bolton prior of S. Bartholomews buildeth an houſe at Harrow on the hill to auoid flouds prognoſticated that yeare, 882,b 20

Bondage. ¶ Sée Seruitude.

Bondmen by letters reuocatorie diſfranchiſed, 437, a 10. Letters of manumiſſion called in, 438,a 10

Boner biſhop of London emploied about the controuerſie of Henrie the eights vnlawfull marriage, 923,b 30. Beareth with the enimies of the L. Eliſabeth, 1160,a 10. His god was the rood of Paules, 1121,a 60. writeth to cardinall Poole concerning perſecution, 1164, a 10. Head broken: note, 915,a 60,b 10

Bookes anie waie imparing the popes dignitie are forbidden, 1131,a 60. Seditious ſcattered, and the offendors executed, 1353,b 40. Printed & the printer executed, 1357, a 40. Popiſh dangerous and damnable to read or liſten vnto, 1391,b 50. Seditious publiſhed againſt the ſtate, and the offendors executed, 1413,a 50 ¶ Sée Libels.

Borne doctor preaching at Paules croſſe hath a dagger throwne at him, 1089, a 60, b 10

Boſworth field. ¶ Sée Battell.

Bounarme with his ten ſpeares all at once about him, 834,a 50

Bowes Raſe. ¶ Sée Juſts triumphant.

Bow ſtéeple builded, 815, b 60

Brabanders and the reaſon of their name: note, 98,b 50,60, 99,a 10. Ouercome by earle Richard, Henrie the ſeconds ſonne, 98, b 50. The number of 20000 reteined by Henrie the ſecond to beare armor, 87,a 50

Braie knight of the garter commended. 791,a 10

Brambre knight executed with an ax of his owne deuiſe, 464, a 10

Brandon knight ſtandardbearer to the earle of Richmond ſlaine, 759, a 50. Knight his pompe at a iuſts, 807, b 60. He is created vicount Liſle, 816,a 30

Bread made of bran & puffens, 1022, a 10. Made of ferne roots, 616,b 60. ¶ Sée Aſſiſe.

Breame. ¶ Sée Bruiſtar.

Breſt yéelded vp to the duke of Britaine, 487,b 30. Beſieged by the duke of Lancaſter, and the maner how, 449, b 10. Force intended againſt it, 1149,b 50

Brethren at deadlie hate & purſuing one another, 32, b 40. Set at variance by factious perſons, 32,a 60. In armes one againſt another, 19,a 10. Forces vnited how valiant & effectuall in warre, 6, b 50,7, a 20

Brereton capteine of the aduenturers taken and ſlaine, 882,b 20

Briake in Britaine aſſaulted & taken, 534,b 30

Bribe of fiue hundred markes giuen to come to the popes preſence, 80,b 30

Bribes the ouerthrow of lawes & good orders: note, 862,b 40. Of a iuſtice ſeuerelie handled for taking them, 243,b 50. 244, a 10. Hinder the execution of good orders & ſtatutes: note, 380,b 30,40. Refuſed, 18, b 60

Briberie how it tempteth mens minds: note, 361,b 50. ¶ Sée Gifts and Rewards.

Bridges made with hard ſhift, 1138,b 60. In England borne downe with landflouds, 38, a 40. ¶ Sée Flouds.

Brudgenorth beſieged, 30,a 60

Bridewell a place which Henrie the eight put to vſe of pleſure. 894, a 20. Henrie the eights new palace, a place receiuing noblemen, 873, b 30. The maior and aldermen enter and take poſſeſſion thereof, 1130,b 40. when it became a place to puniſh vagarant and lewd perſons, 1082,b,10

Briſtow taken by the earle of Gloceſter, 48, b 60. ¶ Sée Faire.

Britaine was the firſt name of England & Scotland, 1000, a 10. ¶ Sée Earles.

Britains plagued by the lord admerall, 814,a 10, &c.

Bromleie eſquire his manhood, 551,b 10

Bromleie knight his deceaſe, 565, b 40. Made capteine of Dampfront, 563, b 30. The old armes of their houſe, 564, a 30. Knight lord chancellor, 1272,a 20, 1286,b 60

Brotherton Thomas K. Edward the firſt his ſonne, 309, a 60

Browne his ſeditious bookes procure loſſe of life, 1353,b 40

Browne. ¶ Sée Murther.

Brunkard Henrie. ¶ Sée Juſts triumphant.

Bruſe crowned king of Scotland, in armes againſt prince Edward and the Engliſh power, put to flight by the erle of Penbroke, fled into Kentrie, his wife and brethren taken, his words to his wife, he is executed, his lands giuen awaie by the king Edward the firſt, wherein note the end of diſloialtie, 314,a 10, 40,60,b 20,40,50

Bruſe inuadeth England, 332. His ill dealing with welſhmen, 95,b 30. His wife whoſe daughter ſhe was, 314, b 20. Pronounced accurſed, 324,a 50. Thriueth in his ſucceſſe, inuadeth England, & raiſeth his ſiege, 322,a 10,b 30,40

Bruiſtar and Marie Breame ſmothered to death, 1353, a 60,b 10

Bucchanan reprouing and reproued, 112,a 30

Buckhurſt lord made of the priuie councell, 1434,b 60. ¶ Sée Sackuill.

Buggerie committed by a lord and puniſhed, 952,b 20

Buieng and ſelling on the ſundaie a law againſt it, 624,a 20. ¶ Sée Selling.

Buildings of william Rufus verie great and famous, 23, a 60,b 10

Bull ſeditious hanged on the biſhop of Londons gate, and the partie executed as a traitor, 1221, a 20, &c. 1222, a 30. ¶ Sée Felton and Pope.

Bullen beſieged, aſſalted, deliuered vp, the number of them that went forth of the towne, 964, a 40, b 30, 60. Manie feats of armes exploited betwixt the Engliſh & French, 972, a 40. The Frenchmen buſie to build a fort there, 970, a 60, b 10. To be reſtored to the French king by accord, note how, 973, b 20. And Bullenois reſtored to the French vpon certeine conditions: note, 1061,b 60. Deliuered vp and entered into, a 10, 20. By the French king, 1062, a 10, &c. Beſieged by the Engliſhmen the king himſelfe being preſent, 775,a 10. The baſe, a canuaſado giuen vnto it, the French haue an ouerthrow, 967,a 20, &c.

Bullocke a mercileſſe murtherer hanged within Biſhopſgate: note, 1228,b 20, &c. ¶ Sée Murther.

Bulmer knight rebuked for refuſing K. Henrie the eights ſeruice, and taking the ſeruice of the duke of Buckingham, 852,b 60, 853,a 10

Burchet gentleman of the middle temple hanged: note, 1259 a 30

Burdet knight his valiantneſſe againſt the enimie: note, 590, b 40

Burdet knight ſlaine, 618,a 40

Burdet for a word ſpoken beheaded. 703,a 10

Burdeux yéelded againe to the French king, 641,a 30

Burgeſſe of the parlement arreſted, and what miſchéefe thereof inſued: note, 955,b 40, &c. 956,a 10, &c.

Burgognians ioine with the Engliſh hoſt & make it ſtronger, 875,a 30

Burlie knight and the earle Véere in faithfull fréendſhip, 464, a 40. what the ſame Burlie was: note, a 50, &c.

Buriall of duke williams bodie not ſuffered without ſatiſfaction to the lord of the ſoile, 15, a 50. Of more than two hundred ded corpſes in the Charterhouſe yard, 379,b 30. Chriſtian forbidden préeſts concubines, 207,b 30. Of nobles and great men in a moonks cowle: note, 195,b 10,20. Neglected: note, 157,a 10. Of the dead doone with honor and reuerence, 576, a 60. For the dead, 1211,b 10. Of dead bodies within their owne pariſhes, 31, a 10. Of the Jewes at London, 101, b 20. ¶ Sée Churchyard new.

Burning in the hand when inacted, 787,a 60,b 10

Burſſe, ground purchaſed to build it, the firſt ſtone thereof laid, 1209,a 40, 50. Finiſhed & named The roiall exchange by the now quéene Eliſabeth, 1224,a 60

Buſhie knight, 495. ¶ Sée Flatterie.

Butcher ſtrangelie ſaued from drowning, 41, b 30. Hanged for fauouring rebels, 943,a 60

Butterwiſe ſet on the pillorie, 702,b 40

C.

Cadwallon prince of wales ſlaine, 103,b 20

Caen taken by the Engliſh, 559 b 60. Beſieged and yéelded to the French king, 630,a 50

Cages and ſtocks ordeined, 792 a 10

Caldwell doctor in phyſicke founder of ſurgerie lecture in London: note, 1349, a 20, &c. Deceaſeth, his diſtributions in his life, and bequeſts after his death, his commentaries vpon Paulus Aegineta and other books, his infirmitie that was his end, his age, 1369,b 10, &c. His armes blaſoned, his epitaph, 1370,a 10,20

Calendar. ¶ Sée Kalendar.

Calis, the French commiſſioners would haue raſed to the ground, 480,a 40. Preparatiõ made to win it, the enimies fruſtrated, 536,b 10,40. Beſieged; note: the commodiouſneſſe of that towne, 373,b 10. Surrendred to Edward the third, vpon what conditions, 377, b 60. Inexpugnable: note, note,375,a 10. Six burgeſſes thereof preſented to Edward the third,378,a 10. yéelded to the king of England, 378,a 30. Made a colonie or Engliſh, a practiſe to betraie it, Edward the third paſſeth ouer ſecretlie thither,378,a 30, 40, b 40, 60. Not furniſhed with a ſufficient number of men,deliuered to the French, 1135,a 10,b 60. Rifled & ſpoiled by the French, the pooreſt auoid out of the ſame, conquered and loſt in leſſe than eight yéeres,how long in poſſeſſion of the kings of England,1136, a 10, 50, b 10,20. Hauen,the Frenchmens meaning to deſtroie the ſame diſappointed, 878, b 50. How the French were in loue with it after it was loſt,note the words of the lord Cordes 771,a 20. King Henrie the ſeauenth ſaileth thither, 788, a 10, &c. The mart of all Engliſh commodities kept there,778,a 20. The duke of Burgognies armie of 40000 men,613,b 60. Beſieged, he breaketh vp his ſiege and flieth,614,a 20,b 30. A report that Richard the ſecond ment to reſigne it into the French kings hands,462,b 10. The ioie that the French made euerie waie for the getting of it,1136,b 60,1137,a 10. The French king goeth to viſit Calis,1141,b 20. The loſſe thereof with what indignation quéene Marie taketh it, 1149,b 40. Might haue béene recouered from the French, 1150,b 60. The eleuenth king from the conqueſt got it, and the eleuenth againe after him loſt it, 1161, b 10. Quéene Marie penſiue for the loſſe of it, the cauſe of hir ſickneſſe and death,1151,b 10,20. Triumphs in France for the getting againe thereof, 1141, a 30. ¶ Sée Calis, Duke, and Victorie.

Caluerleie knight a valiant capteine,418,b 60. He recouereth Marke caſtell, 419, a 10. His exploits againſt the French,419,b 10. His valiantnes, 422,b 50

Cambridge, quéene Eliſabeths progreſſe thither,1206, b 20, &c. Preſenteth a faire & ſtatelie cup to quéene Eliſabeth, 1299,a 10. ¶ Sée Emanuell college.

Campeius refuſeth to giue iudgement in the matter of Henrie the eight his vnlawfull mariage with quéen Katharine, 908,b 50,60. ¶ Sée Cardinall.

Campians deſcription of cardinall woolſeie, 917, b 20. ¶ Sée préeſts ſeminarie.

Campbell a Scotiſh pirat or rouer taken on the ſea,872, b 20

Canons regular put in préeſts places,100, a 10. Of yorke refuſe to receiue the archbiſhop of Canturburie as their primat, 147,b 60

Canonizing of kings déere, 691,a 40

Canturburie. ¶ Sée archbiſhoprike.

Canutus ment to haue attempted a ſubduing of London, and what hindered, 7, a 30. Diſcomfited by the Normans retireth to his ſhips, 7,a 40. ¶ Sée Oſborne.

Cardinall Campeius ſent into England about Henrie the eight his vnlawfull mariage, 906,b 60, Sent from the pope & the cauſes of his ſtaieng at Calis, receiued with great pompe, what traſh was incloſed in his cheſts,the pomp of him and woolſeie going to the court, 845, a 10,&c. Of Canturburie,thought the fitteſt man to deale with the quéene for ſurrendring hir ſonne,717,a 50, he vſeth another waie to perſuade hir, 720,b 20. De Comos letter to Parrie, touching reſolution to kill the quéene, 1388, b 10,&c. Gualo commeth ouer into England,192,a 20. A couetous prelat and fauourer of king Iohn,187,b 20. Iohannes de Anagnia, prohibited to paſſe no further into England than Douer, 120,a 60, b 10. Nicholas ſent into England to take awaie the interdiction,181,b 20. Octauianus legat into Ireland, 110,b 30. And what words Richard the firſt vſed to him againſt Rome,123, b 50. Otho commeth into England,the lords grudge at his receiuing without their knowledge, he is praiſed for his ſober behauiour, ſtrifes by him are compounded,221,b 30,&c. He holdeth a ſynod at London, he goeth to Oxford, a fraie betwixt his men & the ſcholers,his cooke ſlaine,he complaineth to the king, he curſſeth the miſdoers, 222, a 10, &c. Made to bluſh at a Charterhouſe monks words,225, b 10. Lieth in the wind ſtill for the popes profit,224,a 40, &c,b 40. Beginneth to looke to his owne commoditie,224, a 10. His perſuaſions to the Engliſh cleargie, touching tribute to the pope,fruſtrate, 208,a 40,50, &c, b 10. Peito become a begging frier,1365, b 10. Petrus Hiſpanus ſent from the pope,the cauſe of his comming,his demand of monie of religious houſes,315,b 50,60. He preacheth,& curſſeth Bruſe the vſurper, 316, a 10. Piergot his trauell to treat a peace betwéene both kings of England & France, 388,b 40: note. Poole made archbiſhop of Canturburie, 1132,a 10. was to reduce the church of England to the popes obedience, 1092, a 10. Sent for home into England,1092,b 60. The councell diuided about the receiuing of him,1093,a 10. Arriueth at Douer, his reſtitution in bloud, commeth to the parlement houſe, his oration there tending to the publike eſtate, 1122, all. Againſt the pope, 1365,a 60. Cõmeth to Pauls croſſe in great pompe, 1126,a 60. A ſupplication exhibited vnto him, his authoritie apoſtolike: note,1123,a 60. His malice againſt Henrie the eight,1134,b 60. Boners letter touching perſecution vnto him,ſtaieth Boners crueltie ſomewhat, a papiſt but no bloudie papiſt,halfe ſuſpected for a Lutheran at Rome, an errant traitor, ſeditious and impudent, his treaſons detected by his owne brother, worſe than a pagan, 1164, all. Vnkind to Henrie the eight that brought him vp, the manner of his death and diſtribution of his goods, 1165,a 10,20,&c. Deceaſeth, deſcribed,1162, a 60, earneſt in burning the bones of the dead,b 10, articles touching the cleargie to be inquired of in his viſitation, 30, &c, and the laitie, 1163, a 30. Of Praxed, liberall of the faculties: note 428,b 60,429, a 10, &c. Viuiano of S. Stephans in mount Celio,100,a 40. Of wincheſter complained againſt by the duke of Glouceſter,620,a 50,&c. Otherwiſe called the rich cardinall, deceaſeth: note,627,b 20. woolſeie. ¶ Sée woolſeie.

Cardinall commeth into England, receiuing an oth not to preiudice the realme, 239, b 60. He maketh ſhift for monie, 240, a 10. Two, Iohn and Peter ſent into England in commiſſion from the pope,8,b 60. Two robbed and the robbers executed, 323, a 60,they curſſe the Scots,3, b 10. Two from the pope to accord the two kings of England and France, 377,b 50. Two come into England about a treatie of peace 354,a 30. Their returne to Rome, a 60. Appointed to treat a peace betwéene England and France,406, b 30. Sent to the king of England and France, to treat of peace, they gather monie, 295, a 10.

Cardinals of England all from the firſt to the laſt, collected, 1165,b 10,&c,1166,1167,1168.

Careie George knight deſirous of combat with the lord Fleming, his letter of challenge, and replie to a former anſwer, 1218,a 10,30,b 30

Carew baron ſlaine with a bullet ſhot,817,b 10. Knight taken of the French,960,b 60. Beheaded: note, 946, a 60. Vſed as an inſtrument to appeaſe rebellion in Deuon, 1015,b 30. Charged with the rebellion in Deuonſhire,1022 b 30. ¶ Sée Dinham.

Carlill deſtroied by the Danes, repaired and peopled by william Rufus,19,b 50,60. Aſſalted by the Scots,447,b 40

Carter an Engliſhman ſeruing among the French, but to their diſaduantage,an hardie ſoldiour, and good ſeruitor, 997,a 20,b 10

Caſſimere ambaſſador from the emperor Maximilian: note, 791,a 30. His comming into England, receiuing at London,going to the court, made knight of the garter, 1271, b 10,&c.

Caſtell of Banbourgh how wonne and gotten, 21, b 50. yéelded vnto king william Rufus,21,b 60. Of Beauer ſummoned to yéeld to king Iohn,189,a 30. Of Biham yéelded,203,a 30. Chartleie and Beſton built, 202, b 50. Of Doll in Britaine belonging to earle Rafe, beſieged, 11,b 40. Of Douer & windſor could Lewis neuer ſubdue,192,a 60. yéelded vnto the quéene,49,a 10. Dowth Lewis the French labour to get but in vaine, 193, a 30. Of Durham by whom built, 10, b 60. Of Faringdon built,56, b 20. Of Fodringheie taken by diſſimulation, 203, a 20. Galiard beſieged and wonne by the French, 166, b 50. Builded by Richard the firſt 155,a 60,b 10. Of Horne ouerthrowne by william Rufus,17,b 40. Of Huntington wonne,92,a 60. Of Maluaſin built by william Rufus, and white,21,b 50. Of Montgomerie built,203,a 60. woon by the welſhmen, 21. Of Newarke in whoſe kéeping, 192,b 20. where king Iohn died, 194, a 60. Of Newberrie wonne,59,b 30. Norham by whome begun,42, a 40. Notingham wonne by Richard the firſt, 142, a 60. In whoſe kéeping,192, b 60. Of Ramſeie where Odo late fortified againſt william Rufus, 17, b 40. Of Richmont néere Gillingham builded, 7, b 10. Of Rocheſter. ¶ Sée Rocheſter. Of Rockingham,25,a 10. Of Rutland builded,67,a 30. Of Tickhill yéelded,142,b 10. Of Tunbridge yéelded into william Rufus his hands, 17, b 40

Caſtels beſieged and ſurrendered to Lewis the French kings ſonne,198,b 20. wonne by the biſhop of Durham, 307,a 40. Builded by duke william for the ſuppreſſing of rebellions,6,a 40. Fortified by king Iohn,192. Beſieged by biſhops,142,a 30,40. Deliuered to king Richard the firſt,128,a 60. Deliuered by the king of Scots,95, a 30. wonne by the Scots,91,a 60. Held by great men againſt king Stephan,48,b 60. Licenced to be builded,47, a 30. Manie builded in king Stephans daies,65,a 10. In number 1115 to be raſed,61, b 20. Fortified by the biſhop of wincheſter,54,a 20. Built by the biſhop of Saliſburie, 50, b 20. Recouered by K. Stephan,50,a 50. Of Briſtow & Cardiff, &c: by whome builded,37,a 50. Fortified againſt Henrie the firſt, 30,a 30

Caſtell ſéene in the aire and armed men, 395,a 60

Caſteller. ¶ Sée Shoomaker.

Caſtile inuaded by the duke of Lancaſter and the king of Portingale,450,a 30. Philip king thereof ſaileth out of Flanders into Spaine, caſt by caſualtie of ſea vpon the Engliſh coaſts, promiſeth to deliuer to Henrie the ſeuenth the earle of Suffolke, 794,a 20,30,50

Cat hanged in Cheape diſguiſed like a maſſing préeſt,1102, b 50

Cataia. ¶ Sée Frobiſher.

Cateſbie and his conditions deſcribed, 722,a 30

Cauendiſh lord chéefe iuſtice of England beheaded by the rebels, 434,b 10,20

Cementarius and his miſchéeuous preaching, 173,b 60

Chancellor lord elected biſhop, 20,b 10

Chancellors of England firſt & laſt laid downe in a collection, 1272,a 30,1273,&c. 1286,b 60

Chancerie court by whome inſtituted, 8, a 60. It and Kingſbench kept at yorke, & from thenſe remoued to London, 480, a 10
Chanell from Torkſeie to Lincolne made by hand, 42, a 40
Chapell of our ladie of peace, 486, b 60
Chapels none to be newlie built without the biſhops conſent, 30, b 40
Charing croſſe and others erected, 285, b 40
Charles de Valois chaſeth the Engliſhmen, his returne into France, 294, a 40, b 60. Sent to Bruges, and diſappointed of his preie, 304, b 40, 50, ¶ Sée French king.
Charles James yong prince of Scots chriſtened, 1209, b 50
Charitie of Henrie the fift, 566, b 20. Of Henrie the ſeauenth, 797, a 20. Of Londoners towards the hoſpitals, 1083, a 10, &c. Of ſir Rowland Hill: note, 1060, b 50, 60. Of william Lambe eſquier, 1311, a 60, b 10, &c, 1312, 1313. Of ſir Andrew Jude, 1062, b 20. Of Juſtice Randolph, 1349, a 40, 1354 a 40. Of archb. Parker, 1261, a 20, 30, &c. Of ſir william Harper, 1194, b 40. Of ſir Roger Manwood, 1377, a 60, b 10, &c. Of ſir william Peters, 1227, b 50. Of Dauid Smith, 1375, b 50, 1376. Of John Ligh a préeſt, 796, a 10, 20, &c. Of Kneiſworth maior of London, 792, b 10, 20. Of ſir John Allen, twiſe maior of London, 961, a 60, b 10, &c. Of George Monex maior of London, 830, a 30. Of Thomas Huntlow ſhiriffe of London, 948, a 10. Of Thomas Gibſon ſhiriffe of London, 945, b 60. Of ſir Thomas white, 1092, a 30. Of ſir John Greſham, 1131, b 10. Preached before Edward the ſixt, and the effects that followed: note, 1081 b 20, &c. It and concord in a commonwealth be things moſt neceſſarie: note, 971, b 30 ¶ Sée Almeshouſes, Pittie, and Mercie.
Charta de Foreſta, 308, b 10, 185, b 60, 207, a 40, 306, a 40.
Charter of Alexander king of Scotland made to Henrie the third, 233, b 60. The ſame confirmed by the pope, 235. Of articles concerning a league betwéene Henrie the third & the nobles of wales, 226, b 60. Of the articles of Dauid of wales his ſubmiſſion, 227, b 60. wher Edward the firſt is acknowledged ſuperior lord of Scotland, 286, b, 10, &c, 287, a all. Of king Johns ſubmiſſion, as it was conueied to the pope at Rome 177, b 50. Of Richard the firſt concerning turnaments. 146, a 10. Conteining articles of the peace and agréement concluded betwixt the two kings read in S. Peters church in Yorke, 96, a 10. Of agréement betwéene the king of England and the king of Conagh, 96, b 60. Of king Stephan and the pacification of troubles betwixt him and Henrie Fitzempreſſe, 62, a 10. Of manumiſſion granted to the rebels by Richard the ſecond, 434, a 10. Blanke ſealed: note, 496, a 10, Confirmed vnder Henrie the thirds acknowledgment and ſubſcription of witneſſes, 220, b 20. Cancelled and much gréeued at, 208, b 60.
Chartres taken by treaſon notwithſtanding the truce, 607, a 60
Chaſtitie of the ladie Graie, and hir wiſdom, 726, a 50. Should ſuch profeſſe as would be admitted ſubdeacons, 30, b. 30. ¶ Sée Clergie.
Charugage a certeine dutie for euerie plowland, 229, a 50
Chaucer the Engliſh poet in what kings time he liued, 541 b 50. ¶ Sée Dukes.
Chaumount Hugh taken priſoner, 152, a 10
Chéeke knight his deſerued commendation: note 1055, a 50, 60, b 10, &c. His treatiſe ſhewing how gréeuous ſedition is to a commonwealth: note, 1042, 1043, &c, to 1055.
Cheinie knight, lord warden of the cinque ports, authoriſed by Henrie the eight to the chriſtening of the Dolphins daughter, 973, b 50, 60. An enimie to wiat: note, 1094, a 40. Henrie the eights letter to him for a preſcript forme of demeanor in the Engliſh towards the French, 974, a 40, &c. Lord warden of the cinque ports his death, his old ſeruices at home and abroad, much ſpoken to his praiſe and honor: note, 1171, a 30, 40, 50, 60, b 10, 20, 30.
Cheapſide conduit builded, 704, b 10
Cheſhire made a principalitie, 492, b 40
Cheſhiremen gard Richard the ſecond, 489, b 50. Slaine: note, 523, b 60
Cheſter abbeie by whome builded, 27, b 60. And who gaue order thereto, 28, b 10. Earledome by whome poſſeſſed and inioied, 20 a 10
Chierburgh beſieged by the Engliſh, 562, b 50. yéelded to the Engliſhmen, 563, a 10. Deliuered to the Engliſh, 420, a 10. Poſſeſſed by the Engliſh, 564, a 40
Child of eleuen years old ſpeaking ſtrange ſpéeches. 1315. a 10, &c.
Chime of ſaint Giles without Criplegate to be mainteined, 1312, a 60. ¶ Sée Bels.
Chimniage. ¶ Sée Subſidie.
Chinon taken by force of aſſault. 169, b 60
Chiſie william, a notable théefe hanged, 124, a 20
Chriſt and of a portion of his bloud ſhewed in a ſolemne proceſſion, 240, a 40
Chriſt counterfet whipped, 1194, a 10. Falſe apprehended and puniſhed, 203, b 40, 50
Chriſts hoſpitall erected, 1082, b 10
Chriſtians preuaile againſt the Saracens at Damieta, 202, b 20. At enuious diſcord, 134, a 20. Beheded by the Turks 133, a 30. And Saracens are a peace 135. Two hundred and thréeſcore deliuered from the captiuitie of the Turks, by means of one John Fox: note, 1310, b 20. ¶ Sée Saracens.
Chriſtianitie abiured for monie: note, 27, a 40
Chriſtianus a biſhop of the Danes, & capteine in warre, 7, b 40
Chriſtine a quéenes ſiſter, a nun ¶ Sée Margaret.
Chriſtmas roiall, 807, a 40
Chriſtmas ſhewes, 816, a 10
Chriſtmaſſe called The ſtill Chriſtmaſſe, 892, b 40
Chronicles whereof and whie ſo named, and their neceſſarie vſe, 1268, 1269
Chroniclers deſerue a dutifull reuerence, and whie, 1268
Church of ſaint Anthonies in London, when and by whom builded, 779, a 50. Of ſaint Dunſtans in the eaſt defiled with bloud: note, 562, a 20, &c. Of Elie dedicated: note, 246, b 30. Of Hales ſolemnlie dedicated, 244, b 60, 245, a 10. Of Scotland obedient to the church of England, 97, b 10. Of England ſore fléeſed of hir wealth, 18, b 30. Ruinated by the Danes in the north parts, and verie ſcant: note, 11, a 20. Depriued of temporall proſperitie, 256, a 50. Impropriat, and that the biſhop of Lincolne had authoritie to inſtitute vicars in them, 246, a 40. Occupied by incumbents ſtrangers of the popes preferring, what grudge it bred: note, 214, a 60 Spoiles aduantage not the getter: note, 194, a 50. That for feare of the cenſure thereof the Engliſh pledges were releaſed, 147, b 10, Jewels &c, turned into monie for Richard the firſt his ranſome, 139, b 10. The ſtate thereof in Beckets time, 77, a 60. Liuings reſtored by act of parlement: note, 1130, a 20. Cathedrall to inioie the right of their elections, 409, a 10. Ouerthrowne by an earthquake, 440, b 40. In London ſtriken and broken by tempeſt, 1185, a 10. Made a kenell of hounds, reuenged, 23, a 50. ¶ Sée Conſecration, Fines, Inueſtitures, Lands, Schiſme.
Churchmen. ¶ Sée Clergie.
Churchyard new néere Bedlem firſt made, 1211, b 10
Ciceſter, the ſituation thereof, 796, b 10
Cicill knight commiſſioner into Scotland, about an accord of peace, 1192, a 30. Created lord treaſuror, 1238, a 50. His diſcent, 1255, b 30
Cipriots reſiſt Richard the firſt his landing, and are purſued, vanquiſhed, 127, a 60, b 10. Their offers in reſpect of his diſcontentment & loſſe, 127, b 60. Submit themſelues and are receiued as his ſubiects, 128, a 40. Their king ſubmitteth himſelfe to Richard the firſt, 128, a 10. Stealeth awaie, & ſubmitteth himſelfe againe, is committed priſoner and chained in giues of ſiluer, 128, a 10, 60, b 10
Circumciſion for loue of a Jewiſh woman, 203, b 60
Ciſteaux monks. ¶ Sée monks white.
Citie whereof it conſiſteth, 1046, b 50
Cities their neceſſarie vſe and ſeruice: note, 1047, b 10, 20, 30
Citizens, ¶ Sée Londoners.
Clergie their preſumptuous authoritie reſtreined by acts, 239, b 40. Large offer to Henrie the third in a parlement, 255, b 30. Depriued of their liuings and liberties, 8, b, 60, and Normans preferred, 9, a 10. Kicked at by duke william, againſt whome note his malice, 9, a 10. Pinched by their purſſes, fret and fume againſt the popes procéedings in that behalfe, 252, b 30. Reſiſt duke williams decrées, and are baniſhed, 8, a 30 Hardlie delt withall, and out of order: note, 24, a 30. Of England complaine to pope Vrban againſt william Rufus, 18 b 40. Cardinall Pools articles concerning them, 1162, b 30. Grant halfe of all their ſpirituall reuenues for one yeare to Henrie the eight, 877, b 20. Complained of by the commons, 911, a 30. Both head and taile one with another againſt them, 911, b 10. In danger of a premunire, their offer to Henrie the eight 923, a 20, 30. The ſame pardoned, 923, b 10. Their ſubmiſſion to H. the eight: note, 923. Speake euill of Henrie the eights procéedings in the reformation of religion, 941, a 20, 30. Conuocation for the reforming of religion, 940, b 60. Complained of for their crueltie Ex officio. 928, a 20. The cauſe whie ſo heinouſlie offending was ſo fauoured, 787, a 50, &c. Of two ſorts and both deſirous to ſpare their purſſes, 792, a 30. Of Exceſter againſt Henrie the ſixt and the duke of Summerſet, in defenſe of their eccleſiaſticall priuileges, 637, b 30. A bill exhibited againſt them in the parlement, 545, b 10. Libels againſt them caſt abrode 558, b 20. Sorelie brideled, 475, a 30. Inueied againſt of the wickleuiſts. 481, b 60. They complaine of them to the king, 482, a 10. Ignorant and couetous in Richard the ſeconds time: note, 508 a 30. Mainteined by archbiſhop Arundell of Canturburie, 526, a 20, 30, &c. Fauoured of Henrie the fourth, 536, a 50. Diſpleaſed by Henrie the firſts doings, 31, a 40. Of England conſiſted moſt of préeſts ſonnes, 34, a 20. Exempted from dealing in anie temporall cauſe or office, 30, b 20. To kéepe no women in their houſe: except, &c, 34, b 10. Of liberties obteined for them, 99, a 40. Againſt Henrie the ſecond, whome he laboureth to bridle, 70, a 10. A heauie time for them: note, 172, a 50. In what awe they had K. John, 180, b 20, &c. Repining againſt king John, 184, b 30. More malicious to K. John than he deſerued, 196, a 20, 30, &c, b 20. Complaine to Henrie the third againſt the collections for the pope, 225, a 10. Of Durham glad to flie into the holie Iland, 7, b 60. Paid a tenth ſooner than the time appointed, 355, a 40. Depoſed for denieng the ſubſidie, 406, b 20. Preſumptuous demeanors, 335, a 30. without head: note, 293, a 10. Grant halfe part of their liuings to king Edward the firſt, 293, a 20.

Grant the eleauenth part of eccleſiaſticall things to Edward the firſt,285,b 20. And tenths of ſpirituall liuings to Edward the firſt,285,b 50. Continue in deniall of a ſubſidie, 301, b 60. Excuſe to be frée from ſubſidies,&c,301, b 40. Their pride abhorred of Edward the firſt, 316, b 20. Oppreſſed complaine, & the ſame redreſſed,315,b 30. Fined,but the temporaltie pardoned: note,201, b 60. In a miſerable caſe,302,a 40. Pinched with courteſies,beneuolences, and aids: note, 315, a 30. Mainteined & defended by archbiſhop Richard of Canturburie,213,a 50. Sore gréeued at the popes exactions, 224,b 40,&c. ¶ Sée Biſhops, Churchmen,and Préeſts.
Clerke knight, a valiant capteine, 422,a 50
Clinton lord admerall, ſent againſt the rebels in the north, 1212,b 40. Sent out againſt Breſt,1149,b 60. His ſeruice in Scotland, 986, 987, 988, 989,b 50. Deceaſeth,1378,b 50,1379,a 10
Clinton Gefferie, a noble man accuſed of treaſon, 43,b 50
Clinton Atkinſon. ¶ Sée Pirats.
Clothiers in diuerſe places reléeued,1311,b 40. In Burton had two hundred pounds lent gratis for euer, 1369,b 30
Clippers of gold. ¶ Sée Coine.
Cnuto with certeine Danes, arriueth in England: note, 11,b 30
Cobham lord with his new ſupplie of ſoldiors, valiant,998,a 10,40. Condemned: note,493
Cobham lord vnable to reſiſt Wiat and his power, 1095, b 50. Made of the priuie councell,1434, b 60. His lineall deſcent, 1505,b 30,&c.
Cocke of weſtminſter. ¶ Sée Caſtelier.
Cogniſances. ¶ Sée Badges.
Coine baſe, 963, b 10. New, 1090,b 50. Of ſmall péeces, as ſixpence, &c, 1194, b 50. New of ſundrie ſorts, 1193, b 50. Thirtie barrels carried ouer ſea for ſoldiours paie, 229,b 20. Of ſundrie ſorts in England currant,prohibited by proclamation, 309, a 20. ¶ Sée Monie. Of Edward the firſt amended, 280, a 20. Of grotes and halfe grotes, firſt coined,380,b 10. To be inhanſed or abaſed,400,b 40. Diſanulled, and degrées of Florens made,367,a 30. New of gold called the Floren, 366,a 10. Of Ireland reformed,174,b 30. Altered, 67,a 40. Of Henrie the ſeconds changed in forme, and whie, 104,a 30. Crackt, wherein note Henrie the firſts art, 45, b 10. Changed,540,a 40. Imbaſed,1066,b 40. New ſtamped,667,b 10. Diuerſe ſorts newlie ordeined,791,b 60. Of gold ſet at their valuation, 893,b 60. Salute, 578
Coine clipped an ordinance for the ſame: note, 241,a 10
Coine clippers, waſhers, &c, ſearched for, 279,b 30
Coine clippers both gold and ſiluer, executed as traitors, 1262,a 40: note,1270, a 30
Coine counterfettors executed, 1271,a 60,1211,a 60
Coiner executed, 792,a 20
Colcheſter caſtell beſieged, and deliuered to king Iohn, 190, b 30
Collect deuiſed in honour of Thomas Becket: note, 85, b 20. ¶ Sée Praiers.
Collection. ¶ Sée officers.
Collingborne a fauourer of the earle of Richmond, his purpoſe to aid him at Poole in Dorſetſhire, indicted to be a libellor againſt the king,he is executed, 746,b 10,&c.
Collingham a valorous gentleman of Suſſex, 192,a 50
Colonie of ſoutherne men planted in Carlell, 19,b 60
Combat appointed at Tuthill, in a controuerſie of land, but not tried: note, 1225, b 60, 1226,a 10,&c. with the lord Fleming, ſued for by ſir George Carrie, 1218, a 10. Fought at weſtminſter,379, b 50. In a caſe of debate,appointed and diſappointed,381, a 10. Required betwixt the king of England & France, for triall of all matters in controuerſie betwéene them 152,a 30. Purpoſed in a controuerſie of lands,100, b 50. Betwixt Henrie de Eſſex, and Robert de Montfort,67, a 20. Fought betwixt two eſquires of differing nations, 446,a 60. Betwéene two dukes, ſtaied by Richard the ſecond,493,a 60. Appointed betwéene the duke of Lancaſter, and the duke of Norfolke,494,b 30,&c,495,a 10,&c Betwéene a knight and an eſquire, with the maner thereof: note,424,b 50,425,a 10,&c. For triall of treaſon,in what caſe lawfull: note,424, b 10. Betwéene two Scotiſh gentlemen, accuſing each other, 992,b 60,993,a 10. Betwéene Henrie the fift, and monſieur Baulbaſon, 577, a 10,60, b 10,&c. Vpon triall of manhood betwéene an Engliſhman & a French,628,b 40. Appointed and diſappointed, 626, b 10. Betwéene Iulian Romero, and Marow, 974, b 60. The French king challengeth the emperor thereto,and giueth him the lie, 905,b 60
Comet. ¶ Sée Blaſingſtar.
Commandement bloudie,executed on the Engliſh, 10,b 10
Common crier for ſale of houſhold ſtuffe, 1207,a 50
Commons proponed certeine articles againſt the duke of Suffolke, 631,a 30
Commotion of the commons in diuerſe parts of the realme, by reaſon of the great ſubſidie,and other oppreſſions,429 a 60,b 10,&c. In Summerſetſhire & other places: note, 1002, a 40. In Yorkeſhire, 672,a 10. In Norwich againſt the prior of the place: note,626,a 60. ¶ Sée Inſurrection,Rebellion,and Subſidie.
Communion booke and common praier publiſhed, 996, b 10. Confirmed, 1066, a 60.
Communion in both kinds, 980,a 10. Receiued of ſix biſhops, 1185,a 60
Companie lewd,and what miſchéefe and diſorder it worketh,318, b 10. with ill counſell how miſchéefous, 321, b 10
Compaſſion of an Engliſhman to a French,628, b 50. Of Perkin warbecke counterfet, 781,a 40
Compiegne ſurrendered to the Engliſh by a policie, recouered from the French,587, a 60,b 30.
Complaint out of England to Rome againſt Henrie the third,222,b 30. Made to the pope by the monks of Chriſts church of their archbiſhop, 153,a 20. Of Becket to the pope,72,b 50. Of Anſelme to the pope againſt william Rufus,26,a 10. ¶ Sée Clergie.
Compremiſe. ¶ Sée abitrement.
Compulſion voluntarie, 1015, a 30
Conan the ſonne of Alane earle of Britaine, married to a kings daughter, 7,b 30
Concubine of the duke of Lancaſter married vnto him,485, b 60,486,a 10. Of the duke of Gloceſter,whom he marieth, 590, a 60. Thrée of Edward the fourth, 725, a 10. ¶ Sée Shores wife, Perers, and Préeſts.
Concubines loue to hir paramour,notable, 149,b 60
Conduit at walbrooke new built,1211,a 60. In Holburne founded and finiſhed, 1311, b 60. In Cheapſide builded, 704, b 10. At Biſhopſgate builded, 792,b 10
Confeſſion of the duke of Suffolke at his beheading, 1100, b 60,1101,a 10. Of ſir Thomas Palmer on the ſcaffold at Tower hill, 1090, a 60. Voluntarie of Francis Throckmorton the traitor, written to quéene Eliſabeth, with his letters of ſubmiſſion: note,1373,b 60, 1374,&c. Voluntarie of Parrie the notable traitor that ment to haue murthered the quéene, 1384,b 60,1385, 1386, 1387. Of the ladie Iane at hir beheading,1099,b 60.1100,a 10. Of ſir Thomas wiat, before iudgement paſſed againſt him,1104. Of the duke of Northfolke, when he ſhould be executed on Tower hill: note,1229,b 20,&c,1230. Of Richard the firſt his lewd life: note,126,b 10. Of Iack Straw at the time of his death,438,b 10. Of the duke of Summerſet at his death on the Tower hill,1068,a 10, b 50. Of the lord Cromwell when he was beheaded, 951, b 20. Of Eliſabeth Barton the holie maid of Kent,at hir execution,937,a 40. Auricular ſpoken againſt, and how the ſame was puniſhed: note, 968,b 30
Confirmation of children by the biſhop, 1003,a 40
Coniers knight, a capteine of Durham tower,101,a 20. Of rare valiantneſſe, 672,a 50
Coniunction of Iupiter and Saturne,484,b 40. Propheſied,but the propheſier deceiued, 1356,b 30,&c.
Coniuror ſuddenlie dieth when a caſe of his ſhould haue béene tried in law: note, 1271,a 20. Puniſhed: note,348,a 50,60, b 10. Hanged, 1314,b 60
Connagh in Ireland how ſeated,81,b 60. A kingdome,96, b 40. The king thereof entreth into the marches of England,he and his are vanquiſhed, 212, b 50,60. The king is taken and committed to priſon, 213,a 10
Conquet and diuerſe other places burnt by the lord admerall of England, 814, b 10. Taken and burned, 1151,a 10
Conrade duke of Auſtrich. ¶ Sée duke.
Conſcience guiltie of an offendor vnquiet: note,1228, b 50, 60. Guiltie in extremitie of ſickneſſe pincheth ſore, 541,a 40. Grudging and accuſing what a torment, 735, b 50. Troubled for offenſe of rebellion: note,18, a 30. Guiltie. ¶ Sée Suſpicion.
Conſecration of biſhop Samuell: note,22,a 40. Of Richard archbiſhop of Canturburie diſturbed by yoong king Henrie,85,b 60, 86,a 10. Of churches in what reſpect allowed,30,b 50. Of Thomas archbiſhop of yorke vpon his ſubmiſſion, and recouereth his pall 36,b 40. Of the archbiſhop of yorke deferred: note 35,all. Of biſhops denied bicauſe of their inueſtiture by the king: note, 31, a 60,b 10. Of the archbiſhop of Canturburie by pope Calixtus, 40,a 50. Of Eadmer, whereabout was contention, 41,a 20. Of the Lords bodie,1003, a 50,&c. Of an Iriſh biſhop, 22,b 60 Conſpiracie againſt king william Rufus, to put him beſide the crowne,17, a 10, 20. Of Robert earle of Northumberland,and whie,21, b 30. In Northfolke towards, and how extinguiſhed: note, 1221,b 60,1222,a 10. Of the lords againſt Henrie the third,209,a 50,60,&c,b 10. Of Foukes de Brent, againſt Henrie the third, and his foule end,206,a 40. Againſt the lord chéefe iuſtice, 204, a 40. To ſet priſoners at libertie,333,a 30. Of lords againſt king Iohn, 184,a 10, 185, a 30, &c. Of lords banding themſelues againſt king Iohn,185, a 10. Of great men againſt king Stephan, 48,b 60. Diſcloſed, and the diſcloſer ſlaine, 531, b 40. what an ill euent it hath,530 a 40, 60,b 30, &c. A freſh againſt Henrie the fourth, by the earle of Northumberland and others,529,a 60. Of the Perſies with Owen Glendouer,521,b 50,522,523. Deuiſed, but not practiſed, and yet puniſhed: note,520,a 10, &c. Againſt Henrie the fourth & the parties executed,516,a 50,60,b 10,&c. Of the noblemen ſtrangelie diſcloſed: note 515,a 10,20. Of the abbat of weſtminſter againſt Henrie the fourth: note, 514, b 20. Betwéene the duke of Gloceſter and the abbat of ſaint Albons, their purpoſe, & is diſcloſed,488,b 10,40,50. Of Richard the ſecond againſt the duke of Gloceſter, 489, a 60. Of Frenchmen againſt the Engliſh, 568, b 60. Of nobels againſt Edward the fourth: note,670,b 20,30,671 672,&c. Of the Pariſiens againſt the duke of Bedford puniſhed puniſhed with death,586,a 60 At Exceſter againſt Richard the third, ſome of the parties executed,746,a 10,30. Of the duke of Buckingham againſt Richard the third, had ill ſucceſſe: note,743,a 10,&c, 744,a 10,&c. Againſt Henrie the ſeauenth, and what an ill end it had,765, 766,767,a 10, &c. Againſt the prince falleth out alwaie to the cõſpirators ſhamefull death, 790,a 30,40. Traitorous: note,941, vpon a malcontentment. ¶ See Lincolneſhiremen. Againſt the ladie Eliſabeth whiles ſhe was in trouble,1157,a 50,60, b 10,&c. Againſt queene Marie, ſorting to an euill end: note,1132, a 20, 40, 60. Of queene Maries death, and the offendors executed, 1117, a 60. ¶ See Duke of Buckingham, Noblemen, Rebellion.

Conſpirators ouerthrowne and diſcomfited: note,18,a 10,20. Extreamitie puniſhed, and that diuerſlie,21,b 60. Vanquiſhed and puniſhed: note, 188,a 30, 40, In league, and inuade Henrie the ſeconds dominions,87,b all. Againſt Henrie the firſt, to put him beſide the crowne, 29, b 20

Conſtable. ¶ See France.

Conſtables of England, called high conſtables, the office ending in the duke of Buckingham, 865,b 60,866,&c.

Conſtance the mother of duke Arthur. ¶ See Duke.

Conſtance wife to Euſtace ſent home, 61,a 30

Conſtancie of the archbiſhop of Yorke,256,b 40. Of the earle of Carlill at his death, 334,a 60. In martyrdom, 536, a 60. Of a good Iew in chriſtianitie, 27,a 60

Conſtantia the daughter of Margaret counteſſe of Britaine, how married, 7, b 30

Conſtantinople the emperor thereof commeth into England, 222,a 60

Contention betwixt the earles of Leiceſter and Gloceſter, 261,b 10. Betweene the two princes of wales purſued: note, 226, b 20,&c. Betwixt prelats,244,b 10. Betweene Henrie the third, and the biſhop of Lincolne, 228, b 40. Betwixt Frederike the emperour and pope Innocent, 224,b 30. Betwixt two welſh princes for the principalitie, 224,b 10. Betweene the archbiſhop of Canturburie and the earle of Kent,213,a 40,&c. Newlie broched by the archbiſhop of Canturburie, 204,b 60. Betwixt the earles of Leceiſter and Gloceſter,259, a 60. About the chooſing of the emperor,155,a 20. Betweene biſhops for ſuperioritie, 133. a 60. Betwixt two ambitious biſhops,121,a 50. Betweene Henrie the ſecond and Thomas Becket, 68, b 20. Betweene biſhops,36,b 60, 37, a 10. About the election of the maior of London, 445, a 60. Hot betweene william Rufus & Anſelme,24, 25. ¶ See Diſcord, Diſſention, Variance.

Contracts of marriage to be void without witneſſes, 30, b 60. ¶ See Mariage.

Contribution appointed by Henrie the ſecond, 74, a 60

Controuerſie betwixt king Henrie the third, and the biſhop of wincheſter, 231, b 60, 232,a 10. About the crowne of Scotland,285, b 60, 286, a all. Betweene the archbiſhop of Canturburie & the moonks 120,b 10. Betwixt the nobles and peeres appeaſed by Henrie the firſt,38,a 60. ¶ See Combat and Contention.

Conuocation at weſtminſter called by biſhop Longchamp, 129,a 20. ¶ See Councell and Synod.

Cooke Anthonie. ¶ See Iuſts triumphant.

Copland refuſeth to deliuer his priſoner the king of Scots to anie except to the king of England, 376,a 60

Copſi ſlaine by Oſulfe,13,a 30

Cordes lord a Frenchman maketh aduantage of occaſion, 770,a 60. His malicious and fooliſh words, 771,a 20

Corniſhmen ſtrong archers,782 b 10. Rebell againſt Henrie the ſeauenth, their ſhamefull end, 781, b 20, 30, &c: 782, a 10,&c.

Coronation ſolemne and ſtatelie of Richard the ſecond,416, a 60,b 10,&c,417,a 10,&c. Of Richard the firſt roiall, 118, a 30

Corpus Chriſti college in Oxford, by whome and when founded, 839,b 50,60

Coſneie beſieged by the Dolphin, & reſcued by the duke of Bedford, 582,b 40,60

Cotteſhold ſheepe tranſported into Spaine, 668,b 50

Couentrie the queenes Henrie the ſixts wife ſecret harbour, 654,a 30. She is a better capteine than the king hir huſband, 654, a 50. The church when and by whom ioined to the ſee of Cheſter,27 b 60

Couetouſneſſe of Henrie the firſt: note,37,a 60. Of Cardinall Viuiano noted, 100, a 10,b 10. Of the emperor, hauing Richard the firſt his priſoner,137,a 30 Of the emperor notable againſt honeſtie and honour, 141, a 20,30,40, 50. To be noted in Richard the firſts demands,124, b 40. Of king Iohn,184,b 20. Of cardinall Gualo, 187, b 20. Of Gualo notable, 193, a 20. Of duke william, 8, a 40, b 50. Of william Rufus,18,b 10,20,b 10. Purchaſed Henrie the ſeuenth hatred among his people,791,b 20,30,40. Of two moonks,18,b 50. Of officers in a collection, 139,a 60. Inueighed againſt,213,a 60, b 10. Of monie the cauſe of murther: note, 1228,b 20,&c. Cloaked with an excuſe,37,b 10. ¶ See Flemings, and Rome.

Councell held at Rockingham caſtell: and why, 25, a 10. Held at London, 204, b 60. Generall ſummoned by the pope,236,b 20,237,a 10,&c. In Edward the thirds ſhip,368, a 10. Of the cleargie called by the cardinall, 181, b 40. At yorke,322,a 60. At weſtminſter by the archbiſhop of Canturburie,162, a 10. At wincheſter and traitors proclamed,143,b 10. At Canturburie,120, b 20. At Pipewell,119,a 60. At London by king Henrie the firſt, and why,34,a 30. At Oxford, 68, a 60. At Clarendon,70,a 30. At Tours,69,a 60. Generall at Rome,102,b 20. At weſtminſter, 85, a 60. At Gaitington,111,b 60. Of biſhops, 71,a 20. At Caſſill, called by K. Henrie the ſecond, 82, a 40. Of lords at Clarkenwell, 108,b 30. Generall at Piſa, 535,a 20. Prouinciall,535,a 20. At Stamford,477,b 30. At Notingham, and who preſent,456,a 60. Generall at Conſtance, 547, a 40. Generall the prerogatiue of the Engliſh nation, 558, a 60. Of Henrie the ſixt, moſt ſpirituall perſons: note, 622, b 60. ¶ See Aſſemblie, Folkmote, Parlement, & Synod.

Counſell good, the want whereof a cauſe of committing foule ſinnes: note,18,b 10. Euill of nobles to duke Robert, to put king william his brother from the crowne,17, a 10, 20. Good of Lanfranke to william Rufus, to win and keepe fauour of people, &c, 16, b 10. Of ſtrangers folowed, homebred refuſed,231,a 30. Good giuen, and ſafelie followed: note,215,a 10,20,30. That bred grudge and miſlike betweene Henrie the third and his nobles, 205,b 40. Euill turneth to the hurt of the counſellor,205,a 40. Euill of a biſhop to his ſouereigne, againſt the commonwealth, 204,b 60. Euill falleth out ill to the counſell giuer: note, 204,a 40,50. Euill and lewd companie how miſcheeuous, 321,b 10. Good giuen, ill rewarded,332,a 40. Good not to vſe crueltie, 188,a 30. Good ill requited,184,b 20. Giuen for the which the counſellors were curſſed,168,b 50,60,169 a 10, Of euill perſons to the ſonne againſt the father, dangerous to a ſtate,86,a 50,b 10 Euill forteth ill to the counſellor,112,a 50. Lewd falleth out ill to the counſellor,28, b 30. Euill and dangerous,430 b 20. Good neglected, 447, b 50. Euill and what inconuenience followeth it: note,507, b 50. Taken how to deale with the lords that conſpired againſt Richard the ſecond, 458,b 20. Euill how preualent and miſcheeuous,670, b 30,50,&c. Of the lord Haſtings to his acquaintance: note,675,b 10. Of a damſell to the duke of Clarence,675, a 10, 20. Good regarded of a king: note,852. Ill giuen to a king,248,a 60. Euill giuen & followed: note,12,a 40. couetous & miſcheefous of the earle of Hereford practiſed, 8, b 60. ¶ See warnings.

Counter in woodſtreet not ancient, 1129,b 40

Counterfet of Richard Plantaganet, 775,a 60

Counterfet earle of warwike, 785,a 30

Counterfet king Edward the ſixt, whipped, and executed as a traitor, 1127, a 40, and b 10

Counterfet king Richard the ſecond, 515,a 50,525,b 10

Counterfet duke of yorke. ¶ See Perkin warbecke.

Counterfet Chriſt whipped, 1194,a 10

Counterfet to be poſſeſſed with the diuell, puniſhed by dooing open penance, 1259,b 60

Counterfet ſpirit in a wall without Alderſgate, 1117, b 60. ¶ See Diſſimulation and Diſſemblers.

Counterfetting of licences, and antedating them, 953, a 20 ¶ See Antedating.

Counterfetting of queene Eliſabeths hand, puniſhed as an offenſe treſonable,1227, b 60, 1315,a 40

Counteſſe of Bierne a woman receiueth ſoldiors paie, 230, 30. Of Boughan hir puniſhment for ſetting the crowne on Robert Bruſe his head: note,314, a 10. Of Oxford practiſe to brute that Richard the ſecond was aliue, 525, a 60. Committed to priſon,525, b 20. Deceaſeth,702,b 40,237 b 20

Counteſſe of Prouance commeth ouer into England,231 b 50,240,b 20. Dealeth vniuſtlie with Henrie the third hir ſonne in law, 238,a 40

Counteſſe of Richmond and Derbie,&c, mother to Henrie the ſeauenth, 678,a 60

Counteſſe of Saliſburie beheaded, being the laſt of the right line and name of Plantagenet, 953,a 60

Counteſſe of warwike taketh ſanctuarie, 685,b 50

Court, certeine lords, ladies, and others put out of Richard the ſeconds court, 463, a 50,60

Court miſliked, 496,a 60

Courtneie lord, priſoner in the Tower, he hath priuie enimies, 1101, b 10, &c, 1102,a 10,&c.

Courtneie earle of Deuonſhire goeth ouer into Italie, deceaſeth, deſcended of the bloud roiall, 1129,a 20,30.

Couper. ¶ See Follie.

Cox doctor the duke of Summerſets ghoſtlie father at his death, 1069, a 40

Cranmer arreigned of treaſon, 1093,a 30. Nominated archbiſhop of Canturburie, 929,b 30. He, Latimer & Ridlie ſent to Oxford to diſpute, 1102, b 60. Committed to the tower, 1090,b 60. Examined, condemned, burned, deſcribed, 1131, b 20,30,60

Credulitie how miſcheefous, 780,a 40,50,&c: 781,a 10, &c.

Creichton a Scot apprehended with diuerſe plots for inuaſion of this realme, 1387,b 60

Creplegate builded, 705,b 40

Criſpine william taken priſoner,33,a 40. ¶ See earle.

Crofts knight, generall of Hadington,996,b 60. Examined touching the ladie Eliſabeth, 1154,a 60. went to talke with the queene of Scots, 1188, a 10. His militarie ſeruice in Scotland, 1187,a 30

Crotoie beſieged by the duke of Burgognie, & reſcued, 616, b 10

Crome at Pauls croſſe recanteth, 973,b 30,40.

Cromwell ſometimes cardinall wolſeis ſeruant, aduanced to Henrie the eights ſeruice, 913,b 20. Maiſter of the iewell houſe,929,b 50. Created lord lord and kéeper of the priuie ſeale,941,a 10. Made knight of the garter,944.b 20. Lord earle of Eſſex, & great chamberleine of England,950, b 50, 60. Committed to the Tower,951,a 10. The words he ſpake at his death,951,b 20. A deſcription of him by ſundrie circumſtances, b 60, 952,a 10,20,&c.

Croſſe called the blacke croſſe, 347,b 30. Of the biſhop of Elie and the print thereof, 131, b 60. The ſigne thereof ſolemnlie vſed by the duke of Lancaſter,505,b 30. And the priuilege of thoſe that tooke vpon them the ſame,191,a 60. Preached againſt Manfred, 252,b 10. Séene in the aire long and large, with a crucifix,113,b 30. In Cheape defaced: note,1321,b 30.
Croſſes red, white, and gréene differences of nations: note, 111,b 10
Croſbie knight his gift to the citie of London, 702,a 50
Crowne eſtabliſhed by act of parlement: note. 937, a 60. And what king Iohn did for feare to be depriued thereof,7, b 30. Intailed, 514, a 20. ¶ Sée Oth, Parlement, Succeſſion.
Crowne of ſedges and bulruſhes ſet vpon the duke of Yorkes head in deriſion,659, b 50
Crueltie paid with ſudden miſchéefe,664,b 20. Of the Britans and Flemings, 525, a 50. Beaſtlie and barbarous, 528,a 30. Reſtreined by Gods iudgment,147,a 40,50. Without direction of iuſtice, 173, b 30 Of king Iohn by the preaching of Cementarius a preacher,173,b 60. Of duke William againſt the Engliſh, 14,a 20, 8, a 30,40, b 50. Of the Scots,299,a 60. Of king Malcolme againſt the Engliſh,10,b 10. Of the papiſts in quéene Maries time toward the martyrs, 1363, a 40,50. Ioined with victorie,23,a 50. And extremitie ſhewed vnto gentlemen by rebels, 1052, b 20. ¶ Sée Frenchmen.
Culpepper vndermarſhall of Calis, 819,b 30
Culuerings ſeauen, called the ſeauen ſiſters, taken from the Scots, 829, a 60. ¶ Sée Guns.
Cumberland ſore ſpoiled by the Scots, 447,b 40
Cumin Robert captein againſt the Northumbers in a rebellion, 6,b 10
Curcie Iohn winneth Dun in Vlſter,100,a 30. His valiantneſſe, 100,b 40
Curcie Robert ſlaine, 67,a 10
Curfue, or couer fue, when and who firſt inſtituted, 6,a 50
Curſſe of duke William againſt Robert his rebellious ſonne, 12,a 40. Of archbiſhop Gefferie of Yorke, 170, b 50. Of Thomas Becket for curtailing his horſſe,79, b 60. Of the pope againſt the archbiſhop of Yorke: note,256,b 40. Againſt the troublers of peace, 273, a 40. Vpon the people of the ſouth parts of England,214,b 30. Againſt the breakers of Oxford ſtatutes,262,a 10. For oppreſſing of the poore, and how feared: note,175,a 40. Of a legat to Lewis the French kings ſonne, 200, a 10. A great péece of eccleſiaſticall diſcipline in old time: note, 35,b 60,36,a 10. Euerie ſundaie to be read,31,a 20. ¶ Sée Pope.
Curſſes of the oppreſſed heard and reuenged: note, 1066, a 50
Curthoſe Robert, Henrie the firſt his brother, dieth for gréefe, 44,b 50
Cuſtome that the kings of Englands eldeſt ſons were euer made dukes of Normandie,38,a 30. Of buieng and ſelling of men like oxen & kine,31,a 10. Of wooll, and the augmentation thereof grudged at: note, 304, b 10. Raiſed to an higher price, 303,a 40

D.

Darcie lord knight of the garter, generall of a power ſent againſt the Moores, 808,b 60. His companie readie at Plimmouth, honourablie receiued of the king of Aragons councell, diſcontented at a biſhops declaration, 809,b 10,40,60. His returne out of Spaine. 810,a 40
Dacres lord arreigned, but found cléere to his great honor,937,b 60. Arreigned for murther, executed at Tiburne: note, 954, a 40, 60. Rebelleth,1213,a 20. Flieth into Scotland, 1213,a 50
Dale pewterer his fault and releaſment after long impriſonment: note, 968,b 30
Damiets,202,a 40. ¶ Sée Saracens.
Dampfront yéelded to Henrie the fift, 563,a 20
Damport one of the gard hanged for robbing, 953,a 60,b 10
Danes rob the Engliſh merchants, and win great priſes, 485,a 10. Arriued in England to ioine with the rebels againſt duke William, and returne dooing nothing,11,b 30. Winter betwixt Ouſe and Trent,7,a 40. Waſted and ruinated religious places in the north parts,11,a 20. Vnder the conduct of Canute, &c preuaile mightilie in the North,6,b 50,7 a 30. ¶ Sée Normans, Sweine.
Darlington knight, lord gardian of London, remooued, 478, a 60,b 10
Daubeneie lord with others ſent againſt the French king, his feats of armes,770, b 10,&c. Henrie the ſeauenths chéefe chamberl[illegible] Deceaſeth, [illegible]
Dauid of wales [illegible] becommeth a rebe[illegible]. Condemned of tr[illegible]cuted, 282,a 60,b 10
Debate betwixt the dukes of Lancaſter and Brunſwike, 381,a 10 Betwixt the townſmen and ſcholers of Oxford: note,381,b 20. And how it was ended and taken vp,382 a 50,60,b 10,&c. ¶ Sée Contention.
Debt of Henrie the third, thrée hundred thouſand markes, 252,a 20. Henrie the thirds ſparing to bring him out of it,242,b 20. Maketh foes of fréends: note, 312,a 20
Dedication of churches. ¶ Sée Church.
Déed of gift with the forme thereof in duke Williams time, 7,b 10
Delaies did not William Rufus vſe, but excéeding ſpéed: note,23,b 20. Bréedeth loſſe: note, 17,b 60
Demands of the pope of a large tenth,210,b 60. Out of ſpirituall liuings in England, 208,a 40,50. In a treatie of peace,160,b 20. Moderated, 480,a 60. Hard, that hindered the peace betwéene England and France,410,a 60, b 10. Too large, & hinder the concluding of peace,362,a 60. Verie large for a dowrie of gold and ſiluer,124,b 40 Vnreaſonable,233,a 50,60. Preſumptuous of the French king concerning peace, 388, b 10
Denie Edward. ¶ Sée Iuſts triumphant.
Denmarke king arriueth in England, the citie of London banket him, he departeth into Flanders,878,a 60,b 10. Inueſted into the order of the garter, 1348,a 50
Deriſion of the Engliſhmen in a time,347, a 40. Of quéene Ione, called Ione Makepeace,347,b 50. Of the duke of Yorke aſpiring to the crowne,659,b 50, Lewis his faire, 200,b 10
Derth,381,a 50. Of corne,473, a 20,204,b 30,292,b 40. Increaſeth,323, a 30,260,a 10. By means of raine,404,b 60, 58,a 60. By extreame cold weather, 217,b 50. After a wet ſeaſon,898,b 40. Of vittels: note,959,b 50,616,b 10. 237,b 50. For ſpace of thrée yeares,156,b 60. Made markets déere,284,b 20. Through out all England, 150, b 30. Excéeding great, 257, a 40. In Henrie the thirds campe: note, 248,b 50
Derth and plentie, 1133, a 30. Without ſcarſitie and plentie to them that had monie, 1259, b 10. Where none néeded,476, b 40
Derth and death,323,b 50,258, a 30,97,a 50,323,a 10, 351, a 40. ¶ Sée Scarſitie.
Deſire hard to be brideled: note 576,a 10
Deſmond Iohn his miſerable end: note,1366,a 10,&c. ¶ Sée more in earle of Deſmond.
Deſperation, 677,a 10
Deſtinie cannot be auoided,639 b 10
Deth of great perſonages, 312, b 30,295,b 60,263,a 10,247,a 20,236,a 50,239,a 60,241,a 50,240,b 10,352,b 10,20,231, b 10,244,b 40,230,b 50,228, b 50,223,b 30,514,b 10, 1171, b 50,60,795,b 10,&c, 30, 791, a 10,950,a 60, 944, b 60,108, a 30,&c,481,a 20,30. In Spain through heat of that countrie, 450,a 60,b 10,395,b 30, 237,b 30. And multitudes of people,410,a 30, Of learned biſhops,249,a 10. In one yeare, 778,b 20. Of ſeauen aldermen in London within the ſpace of ten moneths, 1209, b 60. ¶ Sée Aldermen.
Deth preferred before loſſe of monie, 252, b 40. Great by the flix, 537, a 20. Of people,21, a 30. Deſperate of Summeruile,1366,a 20. In winter,892, b 30. Of much people in London, &c, 825, a 60. By ſtrange diſeaſes: note, 1132,b 10. By the ſword preferred before famiſhment,166 b 20. Of old people,1142,a 50. After a great derth,97, a 50. Of horſſe and men in the Engliſh hoſt, 445,b 30. In the North countries, with ſpoile done by the Scots, 422,b 60 In Yorke and ſundrie other places, 475, b 10. Of men and beaſts, called the third mortalitie,404,b 20. After a ſort ſudden,397, b 50. Moſt men, few women,395, a 50. Of people betwixt Candlemas and Eaſter,379,b 30. Lamentable,323,b 50. It endeth diſcord: note,395, a 60. ¶ Sée Burtall.
Death ſudden of ſir Thomas Greſham,1310, b 50. Of a woman that forſware hir ſelfe. ¶ Sée Periurie. Of a ſorcerer: note,1271,a 20. Of quéene Anne, the wife of Richard the third, 751, a 40. Sudden and dreadfull of a blaſphemous preacher,1128, b 60,1129,a 10. Of a merciles & tyrannicall biſhop,1130, a 60. Of the erle of Suffolke: note,440,a 10. ¶ Sée Abbat.
Deth and derth, 323, a 10,258, a 30,217,b 50,953,a 10: note, 1049,a 10,404,b 60,378,b 20, 30. ¶ Sée Mortalitie, Plage, Peſtilence, & Sweating ſickneſſe.
Deuotion ſuperſtitious of Henrie the yoong prince: note,107 a 20. ¶ Sée Moore knight.
Diches about London clenſed, 789,b 40,50
Diet of frée coſt: note,1425,b 60 Moderated by an ordinance made by the maior and aldermen, 959, b 60,960,a 10. Exceſſiue reſtreined,111,b 40 A ſtatute cõcerning it: note, 396,a 50
Digbie Edward. ¶ Sée Iuſts triumphant.
Digeon. ¶ Sée Gun.
Dimmocke knight his challeng at Richard the thirds coronation,734,a 40. The kings champion, the manner of his tenure at a coronation, 802,a 20. His championlike office, 1180,a 40
Dinham eſquier high treaſuror of England,650,b 30. Valiant,651,a 20. He and baron Carew with their powers come to Exceſter, 676, a 40.
Diram and Culpepper quéene Katharins paramors, arreigned at Guildhall, executed, 954.b 30,60,955,a 10
Diſcord what commeth of it, 406,a 10. Vnnaturall of brethren abhorred,30,a 10. Betwéene the French king and his nobles,103, b 40. Betwéene Henrie the ſecond and the French king, 107, b 30. Cauſing ciuill warre that might haue béene foreſéene 83 a 10. Mainteined betwéene ſonnes by the mother,86,b 60 87, a 10. Sowne betwixt Henrie the father and Henrie the ſon,84,a 20. Increaſeth betwéene Henrie the ſecond and Thomas Becket: note, 69,b 40. Enuious among the chriſtians,134,a 20. Betwixt the pope and the emperor,75, b 10, b 10. Betwixt the cardinall and the archbiſhop of Canturburie, 182, a 40. Betwixt king Iohn and his barons, with the cauſes, 184, b 20. It and concord with their differing effects, 1054, b 20. What it bréedeth, 672, b 40. In an armie the hinderer of all profitable enterpriſes, 126, a 30. Ciuill, & inconueniences thereof, 636, a 30, b 20. &c, 60. Among the French nobles, 557, a 60. Giueth opportunitie to the enimie: note, 19, b 10. Offereth occaſion of inuaſion: note, 21, b 20. How inconuenient, 1, a 40, 50. About trifles, and how vnhappie it fell out, 13, b 30, &c. Betwixt Sauerie de Mauleon and the earle of Saliſburie, 206, a 20. Betwixt the Norman mariners and them of Baion, 288, b 30. Betwixt Edward the firſts men and the Gantners, 306, a 50 Betwixt préeſts and friers, 392, a 20. Of thrée or foure yeares ended by the death of one man, 395, a 60. ¶ Sée Contention and Malice.

Diſme granted of the clergie, 409, a 10. To Edward the firſt and his brother, 277, b 10. To Henrie the third by the pope, for one whole yeare, 271, b 10

Diſobedience of the biſhop of Norwich to Richard the ſecond puniſhed, 445, a 20. Of the archbiſhop Thurſtane againſt Henrie the firſt, 38, b 10. To Richard the firſts commandement, 140, b 50. 10. Mainteined, 86, b, all, 87, a 50. Of erle Robert of Leiceſter, 89, b 50. In Henrie the ſonne to Henrie the ſecond his father, 76, b 10, &c. 77, a 20. To the prince, a ſinne moſt abhominable, 1044, a 40. To the king, is diſobedience to God, 1004, b 60. Of a ſubiect againſt his king ſending for him, 21, b 30. Of the nobles to Edward the firſt: note, 302, a 60, b 10. It and preſumption of the biſhop of Durham againſt Edward the firſt: note, 315, a 60, 99, b 10. ¶ Sée Rebellion.

Diſpenſation. ¶ Sée Mariage, and Pope.

Diſputation of grammar ſcholers, 1129, b 10, &c.

Diſſemblers puniſhed, 203, b 40, 50

Diſſention among the Noblemen, 451, b 40. Betwéene Richard the ſecond and the parlement houſe, 452, b 10. And his nobles, 458, a 30. The fruites thereof, 1052, b 40. In France made the earle of Richmond renew his ſute, and put him to his ſhifts, 752, a 60. He hath men and monie of the French king for hoſtages, he is greeued at the newes of king Richard the thirds intended marriage with his néece, 752, b 30, 50, Ciuill among Noblemen, proſecuted with ſword and ſlaughter: note, 672, a 10, 60, b 10, &c. Betwixt the duke of Gleceſter and the biſhop of Wincheſter, 590, b 60, 591, a 10, &c. Order taken by the lords for the pacifieng thereof, 594, b 30, &c, 595, a 10, &c, 620, a 30, 50, &c. Ciuill and the inconuenience thereof, 645, b 20. Among the Scotiſh nobilitie, 531, b 40. Betwixt prince Edward and the earle of Gloceſter, 262, a 60

Diſſimulation of Edward the ſeconds wife, 336, b 30. To auoid danger: note, 498, b 60, 490, a 10. Of yoong king Henrie: note, 106, b 30. Notable of a wench counterfetting a ſpirit, 1117, b 60. Of Wolſeie, 909, a 10. Of the French king, 774, b 40. Of the duke of Gloceſter dangerous, 715, b 40. To auoid imminent danger, 124, a 20. Of Richard the firſt did him no good: note, 135, b 50. Moſt profound and notable, 721, a 40. Singular of duke Richard the third, 731, b 10, 732, a 30, 40. Of the erle of Warwike, 667, b 20. Of the king of Cipres, 128, a 10. Of Edward the fourth, to paſſe the countries without danger, and bring his purpoſe to paſſe, 679, a 40, &c, b 10, &c. Of the duke of Clarence, 681, b 60. Of the high conſtable of France, 695, a 50. Of the French king vpon a naughtie meaning, 698, b 30. With other ill qualities: note, 600, b 10, &c. Notable, 548, b 10. Of Parrie notorious, 1393, b 20, 1382, b 10. ¶ Sée Flatterie and Policie.

Diuell appeareth in the likeneſſe of a frier, 520, a 50

Diuiſion in a realme, and the mortall miſchéefe thereof, 630, b 60

Diuorſe ſought betwéene honorable perſonages, 458, a 10. Betwéene Henrie the eight and quéene Katharine. ¶ Sée Quéene Katharine.

Dog in a rochet vnder the name of Gardiner. 1143, a 20

Dolphin of France commended, 560, b 20. Fléeceth his old mother of hir treaſure, and what miſchéefe roſe thereof, 560, b 30. Cauſeth ſolemne iuſts to be proclaimed at Paris, 833, a 10, &c. He is hurt in the hand, b 50. His ſecret malice, 60. Commeth before Bullen with a great power, 969, b 60. Cauſeth himſelfe to be proclamed king of France, 585, b 50. He is tempering with the Engliſh, 586, a 10. Sentence againſt him for the murther of Iohn duke of Burgundie, 578, b 30. Purſued by Henrie the fift, 580, b 60. Whie called king of Berrie, 581, a 10. Calling himſelfe king of Sicill, 552, a 40. Deceaſeth, 556, a 60. Whie the ſunne and heire of euerie French king is ſo called, 1141, b 60

Dolphins taken in the Thams 1083, a 50. At London bridge 477, a 40

Douer robbed by the French, 295, b 10. A conuenient and perpetuall harborough for ſhips: 1535, a 10, &c. The caſtell inuincible, 191, b 50. Deliuered to Henrie the third, 271, b 60. ¶ Sée Caſtell.

Dowrie verie large demanded: note, 124, b 40

Drake ſir Francis knight. ¶ Sée Voiage.

Drake ſir Barnard knight, deceaſeth, 1547, b 60, 1548, a 40

Drake burning ſéene in the aire 277, b 40.

Dragon fierie ſéene in diuerſe places, 484, b 30. Two ſéene fighting in the aire, 216, b 30.

Dreame of a knight that had long haire: note, 46, a 10. Of Richard the thirds, foretelling him of his end, 755, a 50. Of William Rufus: note, 26, b 10. Of a monke concerning William Rufus, 26, b 20

Dreames of Henrie the firſt, ſtrange and troubleſome, 43, b 60. Horrible that vexed Richard the ſecond, after the execution of the earle of Arundell, 492, a 20. Import ſomewhat to befall, 44, a 10. And prognoſticat the true euent of an action, 723, a 30

Dreux beſieged and rendred to the Engliſhmen, 580, b 30

Drie wedneſdaie, 818, b 20

Drinke more than ordinarie taken, cauſeth forgetfulneſſe of good aduiſe, 26, b 30

Dronkenneſſe the ouerthrow of right and manhood: note, 626, b 20

Drought, 284, a 40. In the ſpring, 249, a 30. At Michaelmas, 249, a 30. Great, 245, b 40, 785, a 30. Excéeding great 381, a 40. ¶ Sée Summer.

Drowning of a lad in a kenell, 1260, a 10. Of people, cattell, &c, by the breaking in of the ſea, 220, a 60. Of aboue a thouſand men in one place, and more in others: note, 423 a 60, b 10, &c.

Drurie capteine his good ſeruice at the rebellion in Norffolke, 1038, a 40. Knight, his militarie ſeruice, his aduancement, 1216, b 10, 40

Ducheſſe Katharine, of Suffolke hated of Stephan Gardiner: note, 1142, a 60, b 10, &c, hir trouble, perſecution, and voluntarie baniſhment, 1143, 1144, 1145. Of Gloceſter deceaſeth, 514, b 10. Of Yorke mother to Edward the fourth, deceaſeth, 779, b 10. Of Saliſburie beheaded, 703 b 10. Of Bedford deceaſeth, 607, b 50 Of Burgogne hir appeale, 578, a 30. ¶ Sée Margaret. Of Saxonie deliuered of a child, 106, a 10, 107, b 60. Of Sauoie, ſends for aid to king Henrie the eight againſt the duke of Gelders, 810, a 50 Beſtoweth new cotes on the Engliſh ſouldiors, 810, b 60. Of Angoleſme méet about a tretiſe of peace, 909, b 60

Duchmen come into England holding a contrarie opinion to the Romiſh church, 68, a 50 Two of ſtrange and monſtrous ſtature, 1322, a 10

Dudleie choſen ſpeaker for the commons at the parlement, [illegible] ¶ Sée Empſon. [illegible]ght lord admerall [illegible]th from London [illegible] Scotland, 961, b 40. [illegible]o France to receiue the French kings oth, his interteinment, 975, a 10, &c. Lord Howard impeacheth the French power, 1140, b 60. Lord Henrie ſlaine at the beſieging of ſaint Quintins, 1134, b 10, 20. Biſhop of Durham of honorable deſcent deceaſeth, 761, b 40. Robert, the creation of him baron of Denbigh, and earle of Leiceſter, 1207, a 60, b 10. ¶ Sée Earle.

Duke Alan of Britain, 52, b 10, 51, b 60. Of Albanie leuieth an armie to inuade England, 875, b 20. Albert of Holland commeth into England, 556, b 60. An earneſt mediator for peace, entreth in league with Henrie the fift, 557, a 10, b 20 Albert of Saxonie his policie to get the towne of Dam, he ſendeth for aid to Henrie the ſeauenth to win Sluis, 772, a 20, 50

Duke of Alanſon commeth into England, 1322, a 40. Departeth out of England with all the nobilitie and gentlemen attending vpon him, 1329. Attempteth diuerſe exploits vnfortunatlie falling out, 1349, b 60. His ambition ſpreading like a canker, glad to retire notwithſtanding a confident clamor, he ſickneth, 1350, a all. Arriueth at Fluſhing, 1331, a 20. Receiued at Middleborough, 40. Refuſeth to ride on horſebacke, b 60. Goeth to ſée the towne of Ermwiden, 1332, b 10. His ſhips painted with his owne colours, 20. He prepareth to make his entrie into Antwerpe, 40. His roiall interteinment: note, 50. Created duke of Brabant, the ſtates promiſe their loialtie, an offer of the marqueſſhip of the ſacred empire, &c: 1336, all. His poſie, & ſtrange habillements, the order of his entring into Antwerpe, 1337, a 10, &c. Saileth towards Antwerpe, landeth at a village in Brabant, a theater erected for him, kiſſing of his hand, his chaire of eſtate, obeiſance done to him, 1334, all. The ſtates loialtie vnto him, his anſwere vnto an oration made in their behalf, his promiſe euen to the ſhedding of his bloud, he is content to ſweare to articles agréed vpon 1335, b 10, &c. Keies of Antwerpe preſented to him, a canopie caried ouer his head, 1338, a 10, 60. Readie to take his oth of the magiſtrats and people, it is read in French, he caſteth largeſſe of gold & ſiluer among the people, 1342, a 10, &c. The manner of his diſeaſe, 1351, a 10. His reſoluteneſ to die, 50. Great hope conceiued of him if he had not béene preuented with death, b 20. Falleth into an extremitie of his maladie and paſt recouerie, 40. His words vpon his death bed, 1352, a 10, 30, His departure out of this world like a lampe, whoſe light faileth for want of oile, 30. His death gréeuouſlie lamented, 50, 60, 1353, a 10

Duke Alphonſe of Calabrie made knight of the garter. 775, b 20

Duke Arthur of Britaine made knight, 160, a 10. His miſtruſt in his vncle king Iohn, 160, b 60. Doth homage to K. Iohn, 162, a 20. Proclaimeth himſelfe earle of Aniou, &c: 164, b 10. Taken priſoner, 164, b 60. His mother accuſeth K. Iohn for the murther of hir ſonne, 166, a 10, 20. Committed to ſtreict priſon, 165, a 50. His death verie lamentable, 165, b all

Duke of Aumarle conſtable of England, 495, b 50. Accuſed 512, a 10. His anſwere vnto

Bagots

Bagots bill, he is appealed of treaſon, chalengeth triall with the lord Fitzwater, 512, a 10, &c.

Duke of Auſtrich whie he bore king Richard no goodwill, 136, a 10. Threatneth the Engliſh hoſtages with loſſe of life, 147, a 40. He catcheth a fall beſide his horſſe, & dieth of the hurt, a 60

Duke Beauford of Summerſet ſon vnto him that was ſlaine, 645, a 10. Conan of Britaine deceaſſeth, 75, a 10. Geffreie of Britaine his homage, 75, b 60. Guildebald of Vrbin in Italie made knight of the garter, 795, b 10. John the ſecond & Philip the ſecond aduancers of the ſtate, 1343, a 30. Philip of Burgognie ſurnamed the Hardie, 1343. Siward. ¶ See Siward. William of Aquitaine his feined freendſhip, 67, b 20. William of Normandie his politike conqueſt of England, 1, a 10. ¶ See William.

Duke of Bauier commeth to K. Henrie the fift with a number of horſemen, 577, a 50. He & his troope departeth with king Henrie the fifts fauor, 578, b 10

Duke of Bedford againſt the lord Louell in armes, 764, b 10. Regent of England, 558, b 10. Calleth a parlement, 581, a 60. He reſcueth Coſnie 582, b 60. Giueth the French a great ouerthrow by ſea, 557, a 40. Returneth into France, 596, a 60. His endeuors in France where he was regent, 585, a 40, b 20, &c. His deceaſe: note, 612, a 50

Duke of Britaine pretendeth a right to the earledome of Weſtmerland, 513, b 60. Sendeth ambaſſadors to Henrie the fift, 582, b 60. His loue to the erle of Richmond and cre of his ſafetie, 748, b 20. In armes againſt the French K. 767, a 10, &c: 768, a 10, &c. The battell is tried, he dieth, a 60. Reſtored to his dukedome. 422, b 20. A freend to the Engliſhmen, 444, a 60. His diſſimulation, he & the French K. accorded, 427, b 50, 60. Commeth ouer into Britaine, 408, a 40. Deceaſeth, 367, b 40

Duke of Buckingham highlie commended, 737, b 40. Rich arraie, 801, a 10. Enuied & hated of cardinall Woolſeie, 855, b 10, &c. Means to wind him out of Henrie the eights fauor, 855, b 40, 40, 60. Bils of complaints exhibited to him, he depriueth Kneuet of his office, 856, a 10. He & his companie ioine with Henrie the ſeuenth againſt Perkin Warbecke, 784, a 50. His words to Q. Eliſabeth, 717, b 40. His oration to the maior, aldermen, and commons at Guildhall, 728, a 60, &c. He & Gloceſter fall out, and whie, 376, a 30. They miſtruſt one an other, 736, a 50. Conſpired againſt Richard the third, he is a profeſſed enimie to him, his power of wild Welſhmen (falſeharted) doo faile him, a great water his vndooing, his adherents & their power diſperſed, 743, a 30, 50, b 10, 30, 60. The principall cauſe whie he conceiued ſuch inward grudge againſt duke Richard the third, 739, b 20. His imaginations to depriue Richard the third, 739, b 40, 60. Rewards promiſed by proclamation for the attaching of him, betraied of his owne ſeruant, beheaded without arreignment or iudgement, 744, a 20, 50, b 10. Conuinced with others to worke miſchief, 715, a 30. His reſolution not to medle in ſeeking to obteine the crowne, but by depoſing Richard the third to prefer the earle of Richmond thereto, the ſumme of his purpoſe, 740, a 60, b 40, 60. Is ſent to the duke of Yorke to know the cauſe of his being in armes, 643, a 40. Deſtruction deuiſed and practiſed, 862, b 50, 60. He is accuſed & indicted of treaſon, 863, a 10, &c: 864, a 10, &c. Arreigned at Weſtminſter, conuinced of hie treaſon, iudgement giuen vpon him, beheaded on Tower hill, the laſt lord high conſtable of England, 865, a 20, 40. ¶ See Duke of Gloceſter.

Duke of Burbons practiſes to make the Engliſhmen reuolt from their owne king, 517, b 50. Incampeth neere Rone, ſlaine at the aſſalt, 895, b 30, 60. Dieth at London, 610, a 40

Duke of Burgognie chiefe dooer in France, 560, b 40. Prepareth to beſiege Calis, 528, b 40. Enuieth the glorie of the Engliſh, 616, b 10. His oth to Henrie the fift, 572, b 40 Prepareth an armie againſt Calis, 613, b 40. His armie of 40000 men, b 60. Beſiegeth it, his enterpriſe to bar the hauen, his baſtile taken, he breaketh vp his ſiege, & flieth, 614, all. He & Charles of France at peace, and what miſchiefe inſued it, 611, a 50, 60, 612, a 10, &c. Commeth to king Edward the fourth, 695, a 20. He departeth ſuddenlie to the kings diſcontentment, a 60, b 10. Departeth from Edward the fourth in a rage, 698, a 30. Commeth in haſt to Edward the fourth, 697, a 50. His behauiour and ſpeech, a 60, b 10, &c. Sendeth ambaſſadors to Calis, 678, a 60. He inuadeth Edward the fourth, &c: 678, b 60, 679, a 10. Deceaſeth, 690, a 60, 702, b 20. Murthered, 571, a 60

Dukes of Burgognie iſſued out of the houſe of France, 1342, b 60, 1343, a 10, &c.

Duke of Clarence lord Lionell, 395, b 50. Sent to aid the duke of Orleance, 539, b 60. Marcheth towards Guiſnes, 540, a 20. Made a rode into Aniou, 579, b 60. He is betraied by Ferguſe a Lombard, 580, a 10. He and diuerſe nobles ſlaine, a 20, 30. Before Paris with his armie, 570, b 20. Seeketh to make peace betweene Edward the fourth and the earle of Warwike, 682, a 50. Weighing the inconuenience of diſcord, wareth wiſe, & ſlow to aid the earle of Warwike, his diſſimulation, 681, a 60, b 1050, 60. He and the earle of Warwike ſoiourned at Exceſter to paſſe ouer the ſeas, they arriue on the Engliſh coaſts, 676, b 10, 60. A conſpirator againſt his brother Edward the fourth, he taketh the ſeas, 674, a 40. His promiſe to a damſell perſuading him to peace, 675, a 10, 20. Drowned in a but of Malmeſeie, 703, a 40

Duke of Exceſter his pithie ſaieng, 546, a 60. Vncle to Henrie the fift, 560, a 30, 40. Capteine of Harflue, 556, a 60. His ouerthrow by the French, b 10 with a power at Newarke, 680, b 60. Left for dead but recouered: note, 685, a 60. Deceaſeth, 596, b 60, 598, b 50. Found dead in the ſea, 694, b 10

Duke of Gelderlands letters to Richard ſecond, 475, b 50. Cõmeth into England, diſuadeth Richard the ſecond from peace with the French K. 477, b 30

Duke of Gloceſters proteſtation vpon his oth, 458, a 10. Areſted, 489, a 30. Confeſſeth all wherwith he was charged, he is ſmoothered to death: note, 489, a 60, b 10. He & Richard ſecond at priuie grudge, talke betweene them, 487, b 40, 50. Excuſed to K. Richard ſecond by the duke of Lancaſter & Yorke, he & the abbat of S. Albons conſpire, 488, a 40, b 10, &c. Made duke of Ireland, his iournie thither vnluckilie ſtaied, 479, b 50, 60. His iournie into Prutzenland, in great fauour with the commons, 475, a 60. A ſeuere man, 464, a 40. His death, the dooers therein exempted from king Henrie the fourths pardon, 514 a 50. In queſtion, 525, b 40. His deth in part reuenged, 513, b 20 Much adoo about it: note, 512, a 50, 60, 513. a 10. His complaint to Henrie ſixt againſt the cardinall of Wincheſter, 620, a 50. Liketh well of the kings mariage with the earle of Armenaks daughter: note, 624, b 60. Winneth Rockeſburgh caſtell, 657, a 60. His deth, & what miſchiefe followed it, 627, a 60. He is commended: note, b 10, &c. Diſcharged of all gouernment, the faint quarell piked againſt him, he is ſuddenlie murthered, 627, a 10. Ill practiſes againſt him vnder faire countenances, 622, b 60. Spoileth Flanders, 614, b 60. Calleth a parlement, Henrie the ſixt in France, 607, b 10. Articles againſt the biſhop of Wincheſter, 591, a 60. Mariage in queſtion, he wareth werie of his wife, 590, a 60 He and biſhop of Wincheſter at diſſention, 590, a 60, 591, a 10, &c. Murthereth Henrie the ſixt in the Tower, 690, b 60. An enimie to peace, 697, a 10. Proclamation againſt the lord Haſtings, &c: 724, a 20. Marieth another mans wife: note, 586, a 30. His behauiour in the aſſemblie of lords, 722, b 10. His oration to the lords againſt the queene, 717, a 10. His reſolution to go through with his diuelliſh enterpriſe, 721 b 20 Solicitations tending wholie to trouble and bloudſhed, 714, a 60. His & Buckinghams practiſes, 715, a 30. Made protector, 716, b 50. ¶ See duke of Buckingham.

Duke of Guiſe with a great armie commeth towards Calis, entreth the Engliſh frontiers, his policie, 1135, a 20, 40, b 10. His proclamation to bring in monie, plate, &c, 1136, a 10. Marcheth to the towne and fort of Guiſnes, 1137, a 40. And monſieur Dandelot with their powers, in a rage with his ſoldiors, a trumpetter from him to the lord Greie, they haue communication one whole houre, 1139, a 10, 30, b 30 Appointed to be a principall leader and executor of forren inuaſion, 1371, b 30, 40, &c, b 60

Duke of Hereford appealeth the duke of Northfolke of treaſon, 493, b 20. Beloued of the people, honourablie intertained with the French king, 493, b 30

Duke of Irelands paſſage ſtopped by the lords, his ſouldiors reuolt from him, he flieth from his armie, getteth him into Holland, letters found in his trunks, 421, a 10, 50, 60. He and his aſſociats attainted of treaſon by parlement, 463, b 30

Duke of Lancaſter and the Londoners ſubmit their quarels to the kings order, 416, a 20. He & Yorke excuſe the duke of Gloceſter to king Richard the ſecond, 488, a 40. High ſteward of England at an arreignment, 491, a 60. He & Yorke aſſemble their powers to reſiſt Richard the ſeconds dealings, 490, a 10. Returneth into England out of Gaſcoigne, 467, a 60. Created, 380, b 50. Debate betwixt him and the duke of Brunſwike, 381, a 10. Goeth ouer ſea with a nauie, and two of Edward the thirds ſonnes with him, 382, a 30. Is ſent to aid the king of Nauarre, 386, b 30. Perſuadeth Edward the third to peace with the French king, 393, b 50. Maketh a iournie into France, 404, a 50. Sent into France with an armie, fortifieth his campe, 403, b 30, 50. Commeth to Burdeaux, 408, a 50, &c. In danger by the Londoners: note, 412, a 20. Goeth into Spaine with an armie, 448, b 60. He landeth at Breſt, and winneth two baſtides from the French, landeth at Groigne, 449, a 50, 60. He & the king of Portingall allied, they inuade Caſtile, he returneth out of Portingale into Gaſcoigne, 450, a 20. Reconcileth the king and the lords, 467, b 10. Made duke of Aquitaine, 473, a 10. Commeth to Cheſter citie, the countrie ſubmit them ſelues vnto him, Holt caſtell deliuered vnto him, 500, a 10, 30. He and Gloceſter ſent into France to treat of peace, 480, a 30. The grant of the duchie of Aquitane vnto him reuoked 485, b 10. He marieth a ladie of meane eſtate, whom he kept as his concubine, b 60. Calleth a parlement in Richard the ſeconds name, 502, a 10. His behauiour to the king, their meeting, his demand, & receiuing into London, 501, b 10, 20, 50. His baſtards made legitimat, 487, b 10. Ambaſſador for the K. into France, 475, b 30. A prince of great renowme, 477, a 60. Saileth into Aquitaine, 481, a 60. Solicited to expell king Richard the ſecond, b 60. And to take vpon him' the regiment, 497, b 60. The duke of Britain his great freend, the commons denie to reſiſt the duke, he landeth in Yorkeſhire, his oth to the lords that aided him, the harts of the commons wholie bent vnto him, he marcheth to Briſtow, 498, a 10, 50, 60, b 10, 30, 60. Feaſteth ſtrangers, 474, a 20. Enuied of the rebels: note, 431, a 20, &c. Not ſuffred to enter into the towne of Berwike, 439, a 10. Chargeth the erle of Northumberland with manie crimes, commeth to the parlement with a great troope of men, 439, b 20, 60, b 10. Sent into France to treat of peace, 446, a 40. Miſliking the manners of the court getteth himſelfe to Killingworth caſtell, 419,b 20. He & the erle of Cambridge appointed protectors, 418,a 20. Saileth to Britaine with a great power, 420, a 60. Getteth him to his caſtell of Pomfret and fortifieth it,446,b 60 . Laieth challenge to the crowne,505, b 40. He is placed in the regall throne,b 60. King elect,his words to the lords, 507,a 60. His coronation,proclamed by the name of Henrie the fourth,507,b 10,30. Inuaded Scotland with an armie, 445,b 10. Appeached of treaſon, 445,b 40. His deceaſe,395,b 10, 496,a 20. ¶ Sée Edmund.

Duke of Normandie commeth downe into Britaine, 364,b 10

Duke of Northfolke in armes againſt Wiat,ariueth at Strow 1094,b 50.He with the capteine of the gard put to their ſhifts, 1095,a 10. He and Suffolke elected into the order of S.Michaell,929,a 10.Ambaſſador into France,950,a 50.Henrie the eights lieutenant, 942, b 60. Cōmeth with a power againſt the rebels in Suffolke, 891, b 40. He & the earle of Surrie on Richard the thirds ſide,755, b 20.His conſtancie & allegiance to Richard third, he is ſlaine, 759,b 10.Accuſed of treſon,493 b 20. Obiections againſt him, 494, a 30. Committed to the Towre, atteinted, and the atteindor reuerſed, 976,b 10,50. Deceaſeth, 514,a 60,b 10,891,a 60, 1124,b 30. Inueſted into the order of S.Michaell,1209, a 20.Sent to the Towre,1211, b 60.Remoued from the Towre to the Charterhouſe,1222,a 20. Cōmitted to the Towre,1226, b 30. Arreigned, condemned, and iudged,1227, b 60. Beheaded, forren nations write thereof,his attire, behauior & ſpéech at his execution: note,1229,a 50,60,b 10,&c: 1230

Duke of Northumberlands enterpriſe againſt the ladie Marie incouraged, 1085,b 50,60. His words to the lords of the councell about quéene Iane, who adhered vnto him,he ſetteth forward with all ſpéed, 1086,a 10,&c: b 10,20. Writeth for more ſuccours, 1087, a 30. His ſons releaſed out of the Towre,1127,a 10. Arreſted by the earle of Arundell and committed to the Towre with his adherents,1088,a 60,b 30. Arreigned, his requeſt to vnderſtand the opinion of the court in two points, 1089, b 40, 50. His foure requeſts after his iudgment to die,he with others are executed at Towre hill, 1090,a 10,50

Duke of Orleance partaker with the duke of Britaine againſt the French king, 768, b 10. How long priſoner in England,his ranſome and releaſe, 618,b 20,50.Chalenge,524,b 60 He beſieged Vergig in Guien, 525,a 20. Beſiegeth townes in Gaſcoigne,533,a 50.Commeth to the Engliſh armie, 540,b 30.Murthered, 537,a 60

Duke Richard his ſingular diſſimulation,731,b 10. He ſpeaketh otherwiſe than he meaneth,731,b 20. His electiō hard to be preferred,730, b 20. Preferred at laſt by voices of confederacie,730,b 60. Adiured by biſhop Morton , their conference, he openeth himſelfe and his ſecrets to the biſhop,complaineth of lacke of preferment in K.Edwards daies, 738,all. His title to the crowne, with the office and dignitie of a king, he is commended to the people as worthie and ſufficient,730,a 20,30. ¶ Sée Duke of Glouceſter and Richard.

Duke of Richmond a martialiſt or warrior Henrie the eights baſe ſonne, 929, a 10. Henrie Fitzroie Henrie the eights baſe ſonne deceaſſeth,941, a 10

Duke of Saxonie in diſfauour and exile, 105,b 60. Commeth into England, his goodlie ſtature,212, b 40. Pardoned and reuoked out of exile, 108,a 10

Duke of Suffolke created,627, b 30. Winneth the goodwill of the quéen Dowager of France 836,b 10. They married togither, b 30. Entreth France with an armie, 879,a 50. Breaketh vp his armie & commeth to Calis, 881,a 40. Chiualrie & valiant ſeruice in France, he knighteth diuerſe gentlemen, 879, b 60, 880, all. Hope hindered by cardinall Wolſeie, 839,a 60. And others ſent into France to fetch the French quéene into England,836,a 50. Incountereth with a ſtrong and tall Almaine,833,b 60. He foileth the Almaine,834, a 10. Deceaſſeth, his iuſt commendation,969, b 30. The commons exclaime againſt him, 631,a 10,20,40. Committed to the Towre,his wretched deth, 632, a 10, 50.He with others brought to the Towre, 1099,a b 10.Committed to the Towre and releaſed,1088,b 40. Goeth downe into Leiceſterſhire,is a fauourer and furtherer of Wiats practiſes, he is kept ont of Couentrie,apprehended, 1095, a 40,60,b 10. Arreigned, condemned, beheaded, 1100, b 20, 40,50. What words he ſpake to the people at his death, b 60.

Duke of Summerſet made regent of Normandie , and the duke of Yorke diſcharged, 625, b 30. Made capteine of Calis, 650,b 60. His valiantneſſe,619, a 30. Reuolteth from Edward the fourth, taken & beheaded, 666,a 40,&c: b 20, &c. Made lord protector,979,a 40,50.His returne from Scotland,992, a 60. Not deſirous of ſlaughter, 988, b 20. With his power againſt Scotland,980, a 30,&c: b 30. Sendeth an herald to ſummon a caſtell,981, a 10, 20. Anſwer to a Scotiſh herald at armes,983, b 60. His diligence to further the fortification to Rockeſburgh,991,b 10. His ſtatelie ſtile with his epiſtle exhortatiue ſent to the Scotiſh nobles,&c:998,b 10,&c. He & the earle of Warwike outwardlie fréends,1062,a 50. And others ſubmit themſelues to Edward the fourth, 665, b 60. Againe apprehended and committed to the Towre,1066,b 60 Charged ſir Peter Carew with the rebellion, 1022, b 30. He and the earle of Deuonſhire comfort quéene Margaret,685, b 60.Politike & puiſſant,687,b 60. More hardie than wiſe, 687,b 60,688,a 10,&c.Striketh out the lord Wenlocks brains, 688,a 50. His infortunatneſſe, 615,b 60.Arreſted,642,a 20.Set at libertie,made deputie of Calis,40,50. Accuſeth the earle of Yorke of high treaſon,639,a 50. Burthened with all things that happened amiſſe, 643,a 40. He is ſlain,b 10 His diſplacing out of his protectorſhips conſulted on,remoueth in haſt with K. Edward ſixt to Windſore, his letter to the lord priuie ſeale 1057,a 20,50,60. His letters to the lords,1058,a 30. A proclamation with articles againſt him,b 20,30,&c. Priſoner,committed to the Towre, articles obiected againſt him,1059,b 10, 30,40,1060,a 10,&c. Releaſed & reſtored,1060,b 10,20. Deliuered out of the Towre, 1062,a 50.Arreigned both of fellonie & treaſon, condemned of fellonie, people murmur at his condemnation, deliuered o be executed, his behauior at his death,1067, a 10,30,40, 50, b 40, 60. His words at his death, a ſudden noiſe & feare among the people aſſembled, 1068, a 10,&c: 50,b 19,1069,a 60. Deſcribed,b 10. Beheaded, 688,b 60

Duke of Surris marſhall of England, 493,b 50

Duke of Yorke lieutenant generall of England,497,a 10. Miſliketh the court & goeth home, 496, a 60. Noted for crueltie, what maner of man he was,his end,712,a 10,20, Plantagenet afterwards Richard third,595 b 40. Made regent of France, enuied of duke of Summerſet,612,b 10,617,b 10,619,a 30. Appointed againe to be regent of Normandie,625,b 50.A perſecuting enimie to the duke of Summerſet:note,630,b 20.Aſſembleth an armie , his words in writing ſent to the K. 642,a 50,b 20, &c: 643:a 10. His comming againſt the K.iuſtified,he is made protector of the realme, 644,b 20.Diſcharged of his office,645,a 10,20.Aſſembleth an armie,649,b 30.Cōmeth out of Ireland,his ſtrange demenors held ſpéech and oration to the lords of parlement,655, a 30, &c. Crowned with ſedge or bulruſhes in deriſion, 659,b 50. He and his complices flie, 650, b 20, He and others atteinted, 652,a 10,&c. Articles that he and the other earles ſent to the archbiſhop of Canturburie and the commons,652,b 10,&c. Articles of peace and agréement betwéene him and Henrie the ſixt, his claime to the crowne,657,b 20, &c. Proclamed heire apparant to the crowne,he is ſlaine,659,a 30,b 10.Tempering about his title to the crowne, 627, b 40. Reconciliation to Henrie the ſixt, he accuſeth the duke of Summerſet of treaſon, 639, a 40. Set at libertie and whie, his ſubmiſſion to king Henrie the ſixt vnder his oth, 639, b 50. Maketh claime to the crowne, 637, a 50. Raiſeth a great power to recouer it, his letter to Henrie the ſixt, 637, a 50, b 10,50,638,a 10,&c. Fauourers executed and ſpoiled,653,b 20. Séekes the deſtruction of the duke of Summerſet, banded himſelfe with yͤ Neuils, 641,b 60.Slaine in Agincourt field, 555,b 60.Buried at Fodringhaie caſtell,556,a 20. Taketh indenture ſextipartite of the conſpired noblemen out of his ſonnes boſome: note,515,a 20. Deceaſſeth,520,b 30. Accuſed by his ſiſter the ladie Spenſer,527,b 30. His head ſet on a pole at Yorke,659,b 60. ¶ Sée Richard the third.

Dukes of Glouceſter infortunate: note,627,a 50 Of Normandie were the kings of Englands eldeſt ſons,38,a 30. Of Yorks honorable emulation, 776,a 50

Dukes and earles, &c: created, 537, b 60,546, b 30,625,a 10, 702, a 60, 1081, a 60, b 10,&c, 1066,b 60,492, b 40,448, a 60, 395,b 50. Depriued of their titles,513,b 10. Of England from the firſt to the laſt, all ſet downe in a collection,1230, b 30,&c, to 1238,a 10.

Duncane a Scot waſteth Kendall, 91,b 10

Dunkirke wonne & ſacked by the Engliſh,442,b 50. Taken and burnt by the French,1150,a 40

E.

EAdmer. ¶ Sée Archbiſhop.

Eclipſe of the ſunne ſtrange, 102,b 50,348, b 30,212, b 40, 229,a 10

Eclipſe of the moone,241,a 50. At thirtéene daies old, 212, b 40. Of foure houres continuance, 251,a 50. Of the ſunne and moone extraordinarie,44, a 40. Verie ſtrange: note,128,b 50.

Eclipſes foure in a yere,961,a 60

Edenburgh caſtell beſieged,353, b 40. Entred forceablie by the Engliſh,962,a 60. Deliuered to Edward the firſt,300, a 60. Burnt by Richard the ſecond, 447,b 10.Left deſolate,445,b 10

Edgar Etheling where borne,6, a 30.Purſueth the Normans, 6,b 40. Flieth into Scotland, 7,a 50. Ioineth forces with Osborn againſt the Normans 6, b 50. Should haue béene made king of England,1,a 40. And whie he was not aduanced to the crowne of England, 1,a 50. Sent into Scotland with an armie, and whie, 23,a 30. The ſonne of king Malcolme to be placed in the kingdome,23,a 30.In ſeruice at the warres vnder the Scotiſh king,19,b 30. In great account with Robert duke of Normandie,19,b 50.Depriued of his honor by William Rufus,19,a 50. Obteineth licence of duke William to depart the realme,14,b 10.Groweth in fauour & honor with duke William,10,b 60, 11,a 10. Capteins in rebellion againſt duke William after a reconcilement and pardon,deſcribed: note, 9,b 60. Second flight into Scotland, 10,a 40. ¶ Sée Edwin.

Edgars K. of Scotlands ſiſter, wife to Henrie the firſt, 29,a 10

Edmund ſon to Henrie the third, 236,a 60. Shewed in parlement as K.of Naples,255,b 10 Inueſted king of Sicill & Naples, 252, b 60. Created duke of Lancaſter, 249,a 10

Edmund of Langlie borne, afterwards duke of Yorke,363, a 30

Edmund the great,ſonne to Harold,his exploits. 6,a 60

Edrike Syluaticus rebelleth in the abſence of duke William, 5,a 10

Edward the firſt proclamed king of England , his coronation and beginning of regiment,277,all. He entreth into wales to reſcue his people againſt the welſh, 281, a 20. Goeth ouer into France, 279, b 20. His fauour and goodwill to the princes of wales, 279, a 10, &c. Dauid of wales preferreth him in marriage, 279, a 20, &c. Commeth to Cheſter, 278, a 20. Surnamed Longſhanke (and whie) borne, 223, b 40. Sendeth an armie into Scotland, 314, a 20. His prouiſion for his iournie into France, 303, a 50, Putteth prince Edward in priſon, 313, b 30. Anſwer to pope Boniface prouing the right of Scotland to belong to him, 309, b 60, 310, a 10, &c. Entreth into Scotland to reuenge the death of his people, 322, a 40. Goeth with an armie into Scotland, 309, a 50. Vexeth them, &c: b 30. Goeth to Scotland, 311, a 50. Married to the French kings ſiſter, 309, a 10. His liberalitie towards his nobles, 308, a 40. Earles Marſhall and Hereford refuſe to go ouer with him into Flanders, 304. Gardians appointed ouer his ſonne in his abſence, he paſſeth ouer into Flanders, b 20. Taketh vpon him the croſſe, 284, a 20. Paſſeth ouer into France, 283, b 30. Recogniſed for ſuperior lord of Scotland: note, 286, all. Summoned to appeare at Paris, 290, b 50. Condemned in the French court, 291, b 20. His requeſt made to the Scots denied, 296, a 30. Entreth into wales 293, b 30. Shift to get monie, 280, a 50. Goeth about to purchaſe his peoples goodwill, 277, b 50. Renounceth the French king, his ſhift for monie, an excuſe that he vſed, 292, b 10, 60. Concludeth a league with the erle of Flanders and the earle Bar, 296, b 50. Fortifieth Berwike, 299, a 30, Summoneth and winneth Berwike, 298, a 20, 50. Planteth his ſiege about Edenburgh caſtell, 299, b 60. Paſſeth forth through Scotland, bringeth the marble ſtone from thenſe, the nobilitie ſubmit themſelues vnto him, the forme of their homage, his words accepting it, 301, a all. Meant to haue made a full conqueſt of Scotland as he had doon of wales, 317, a 10. The forme of fealtie that Balioll king of Scots did to him, 289, b 60. Appointeth wardens for the realme of Scotland, beareth ſwaie in the election of their chancellor, the nobilitie ſweare fealtie to him: note, 288, a 30, &c. Sickeneth, dieth, is buried at weſtminſter: his iſſue, his ſtature and forme of bodie, his vertues and vices, 316, a 60, b 10, &c.

Edward the ſecond borne, 282, b 20. when he began his reigne, 318, a 10. He & the erle of Lancaſter made freends, 324, a 40. Goeth into Scotland, what he did there, his entrance, 320, b 10. Hath his nobles in no regard: note, 318, b 10. Depoſed by act of parlement, 340, b 10. Saileth into wales, 338, b 60. His fauour to the welſhmen, 339, a 10. Sought vnto to reſigne his crowne, his griefe therat, 340, b 50, 60. Betraied into his enimies hands, brought to Killingworth caſtell, 339, b 50. withſtood in armes by his wife, 336, 337, 338. Sendeth for his wife and ſonne home out of France, 336, b 10, 20. writeth to the duke of Britaine, 335, b 30. Like to be betraied, the traitors executed, 333, 334. Goeth to Scotland with an armie, 332, b 50. Subdueth his barons, 330, 331, 332, a 10. In armes againſt his enimies, his proclamation, 329, b 60. Paſſeth by a foord, commeth to Tutburie, cauſeth hue & crie to be made, 330, a 30, 50. Durſt not but yeeld to his nobles requeſt, 327, b 10. He goeth to Canturburie, talketh with lord chamberleine, beſiegeth the caſtell of Leeds, 327, b 10. Affection and loue to Piers Gaueſton, 320, a 10. His requeſt for his life, his diſpleaſure for his deth, 321, a 30, 60. Paſſeth ouer to France, 318, b 50. Dooth homage to the French king, marrieth his daughter, returneth, is receiued into London, crowned, 318, b 60, 319, a 10. Goeth to Berwike, 324, b 50. Paſſeth into Scotland, what iſſue his armie had there, he eſcapeth danger of death, 322, a 20, 40. Murthered, 341, b 60. His nature and conditions, his iſſue, 342, a 10, &c

Edward the third borne, 321, b 10. Beginneth his reigne, 343, a 60. Paſſeth ouer into Calis, inuadeth France, returneth for want of vittels, the conſtable of France demandeth battell of him, 383, a 10. Lodgeth his armie neere Berwike, the Scots yeeld vnto him, the realme of Scotland reſigned vnto him, 386, a 50, 60. Three kings come vnto him about buſineſſe, 396, a 50. Aduanceth his ſons to degree of honor, 395, b 50. Prepareth to make a iournie to France, arriueth at Calis, 392, b 10, 30 Draweth towards Paris, 393. a 60. Returneth out of France into England, 394, b 30. His foure ſons take part with the lord maiors, &c: chalenge at iuſts, 392, a 50. Sore afflicteth the Scots, 386, b 20. His honorable hart to his enimie, 379, b 10, Hath Calis ſurrendred vnto him. ¶ See Calis. His pitie towards the poore: note, 375, a 20. His voiage, inuaſion, and victorie againſt the French ſummarilie ſet downe in a letter miſſiue, 373, b 30, &c. His words & behauior to his ſon the yoong prince after his victorie againſt the French, 372, b 60. Paſſeth ouer into Normandie, his armie landing, & ordering of his ſoldiors, 369, b 40, &c. His enterpriſes and atchiuements againſt towns & people, his ſpoile & booties, he is in danger, 370, all. Beginneth his enterpriſe againſt the enimie with praier to God, his demeanor before the battell, 371, a 10, b 30. Hath towns reſtored him, 360, a 60. Taketh into his hands all the profits that the cardinals, &c: held within his realme, 369, b 30. Goeth ouer into Flanders, 367, b 60. Paſſeth ouer into Britaine, 364, a 40. Returneth by ſea out of Britain, he is in danger of drowning, 365, a 30. Feaſted by the erle of Flanders, he goeth into Zeland, arriueth at the Tower, dealeth roundlie with his officers, 360, b 10, &c. Is offended with the archbiſhop of Canturburie, 361, a 10. Taketh ſea, ſetteth vpon his enimies the French, getteth the victorie, goeth to Gaunt, couenants betwixt him & his confederats, 358, a 50, 60, b 50 359, a 40. Signifieth his right to crowne of France, taketh vpon him the title and armes thereof, 357, a 20, 30. Taketh vpon him the name of K. of France, 356, b 30, and by what right he clamed it, 40, &c. Beſiegeth Cambrie, 355, b 20. He raſeth his ſiege, b 40. Hath Flanders at commandiment, he ſaileth to Antwerpe, 354, b 60. His confederats, 355, a 10. Practiſeth to alienat the Flemings harts from obedience to their earle, 353, b 50. Entreth into Scotland with an armie, 351, a 10. Maketh ſpoile by fier and ſword, the Scots ordeine a ſtatute in fauor of him, towns fortified by him there, he ſtudieth to gather monie to mainteine his wars, 352, all. Aideth the K. of Scots and whie, 350, a 10. Paſſeth the ſea apparelled like a merchant, 348, b 40. wareth feeble & ſicke, 411, a 20. Deceaſſeth, his iſſue, praiſe, proportion of bodie, and vertues, 412, a 40, &c: 413.

Edward the fourth borne, 623, a 30. Feaſteth the maior and aldermen of London, 705, a 10. He and the French king their interview, the manner thereof: note, 699, a 30, 40, &c. His ſhift to get monie: note, 694, a 40, &c. He paſſeth ouer into France, and ſendeth a defiance to the French king, 694, b 10, 40. Returneth into England, 701, a 10. without interruption paſſeth forward to Yorke, marcheth to the citie gates, receiueth the ſacrament & an oth, the marqueſſe Montacute ſuffereth him to paſſe by, he cometh to Northhampton, 680, a 30, &c. Diſpraiſed and fowlie ſpoken of by the earle of warwike, 671, a 20. His communication with the duke of Burgognie: note, 697, a 50, 60, b 10, &c. Shamefull and ſlanderous words againſt him, 698, b 30. His politike foreſight, 688, a 20. Commeth to Leiceſter, prouoketh the earle of warwike to fight, commeth to warwike, he and his brother the duke of Clarence reconciled vnwitting to the earle of warwike, 681, a 10, &c. His victorie, and the offering vp of his ſtandard, 685, b 10. Lodgeth with his armie before his enimies, 684, a 10. Set forward againſt his enimies the nobles of England, 686, a 40. His painfull march with his armie, the ordering of his battels, 687, b 10, 30. Paſſeth to London, 682, b 30. The Londoners reſolue to receiue him, the Tower recouered to his vſe, he entreth into London, 683, a 60, b 10. Arriueth on the coaſt of Northfolke, then at the head of Humber, landeth at Rauenſpurgh, the people let him paſſe hearing the cauſe of his comming into the countrie, he paſſeth towards Yorke, 679, a 10, &c. Iudged a vſurper, 678, a 10. His freends take ſanctuarie, 677, b 10. Receiued verie honorablie into the citie of Exceſter, 676, b 30. The citizens beneuolence to him, how long he continued there, b 30, 50. Commeth to Lin, taketh ſhip to paſſe ouer ſea, the number that paſſed ouer with him, he arriued at Alquemarie, 675, b 10, 20, 40. Taken priſoner and brought to warwike caſtell, 673, a 60. He is deliuered out of captiuitie, commeth to London, b 10, 20. His proclamation to ſuch as were aſſembled vnder him, 664, b 10. His title to the crowne, 663, b 664, a 10. Proclamed king, 725, b 10. Notablie ſlandered and ſpoken againſt in the duke of Buckinghams oration, 728, a 50, 60, &c, 729, a 10, &c. His words to his mother about marriage, 726, b 30. Slandered in a ſermon, 727, b 50. His flight into Holland, 727, a 50. The cheefeſt deuiſe of the conſpirators to depoſe him, 725, b 60. Deſcribed, his qualities, 711, a 40, &c. His three concubines, 725, a 10. His laſt words vttered on his death bed, 708, b 30, 50, &c. Deceaſeth, his iſſue male and female, 710, a 20, &c.

Edward the fift his comming to London, 716, b 50. He and his brother murthered in the Tower: note, 734, b 20, &c, 735, all.

Edward the ſixt borne, 944, a 10 Proclamed king of England rideth through London to weſtminſter, crowned, 979, a 10, b 10, 30. His letter to the citizens of London, 1059, a 10. He rideth through London, 1060, b 40. His princelie ſpeech to doctor Ridleie after his ſermon made of mercie & charitie, 1081, b 60. His meſſage to the rebels of Cornewall and Deuonſhire, 1003, b 60, 1004, a 10. Founder of the hoſpitals in London, 1082, b 30. His victories againſt the Scots, 1161, b 10. His feare and miſtruſt of three mariages which fell out to be true, he falleth ſicke & dieth, 1083, b 20, 30, 60. His praiſeworthie qualities, and death reuealed, 1084, a 30, &c, b 10. His buriall, 1089, a 50. Counterfeited, and the partie executed, 1127, a 40, &c, b 10

Edward created prince, 365, a 40. Made knight, 660, b 60. Setteth forward into the holie land, 274, b 60. Traitorouſlie wounded, 275, a 20. Getteth diuerſe caſtels, 266, a 60. Eſcapeth a danger, 269, b 50. He and the earle of Gloceſter not ſuffred to come within the citie of London, 262, b Euill intreated in manie places, 262, b 60. Goeth againſt the welſhmen, 264, a 10. Receiueth the croſſe, 274, a 40.

40. Taketh monie out of the treaſurie of the temple, 264, a 60. Arriueth at Acres, in danger to be ſlaine by treaſon, 275, a 20. Hath the rule of London, he appointeth the maior & ſhiriffes, 274, b 20; Sent to the king of Caſtile, 249, b 50. He marrieth the ladie Elenor daughter to king Alfonſe, b 60. Created prince of wales. 250, a 10. His wife commeth to London, 252, a 50. Purſueth the Londoners, 268, a 10. Impriſoned for riot, 313, b 30. Made knight, and ſent into Scotland, 314, a 30. Goeth ouer into Gaſcoigne, 382, b 50. His proceedings in Aquitane, 383 b 20, &c. Two biſhops ſent vnto him from the pope, 383, b 50, &c: 384, a 10, &c. His firſt ſonne borne, 397, a 60. And duke of Aquitaine, 332, a 40. Sent into France, 336, a 60. Inuadeth the French dominions, 387, a 10, His order where he came, his feats of armes, the paſſages ſtopped againſt him, he returneth, lodgeth in the towne of Remorentins, he is followed by the French king, 387, all. Contented to come to a parlee, his offer, his exhortation to his ſoldiors when he ſaw he muſt needs fight, 388, a 60, b 10, 60. Noblemen that were with him, the number of his armie, both powers ioine iſſue, 389. He obteineth the victorie, his meeke oration to the French king his priſoner, he returneth to Burdeaux, bringeth the French king ouer into England, 390, a 10, b 20, 60. Made lord warden of the realme, 339, b 20. Setteth forward into Spaine, 398, a 20. He paſſeth into Guien, 395, b 60. Put to his ſhifts for default of monie, he returneth into Gaſcoigne, conſtreined to burden his ſubiects with a ſore ſubſidie, 400, a 10, 30, b 30. Appealed to appeere before the French king, 401, a 10. His anſwer, a letter publiſhed by him to appeaſe the Gaſcoignes, b 40. Diſeaſed with ſickneſſe, 402, b 20. Deceaſeth, buried at Canturburie, his death grieuouſlie taken, 410, b 50, 60. Returneth out of France into England, 406, a 60. Married to the erle of warwikes daughter, 674, b 60. Taken in flight, he is murthered, 688, a 60, b 20

Edward called the Blacke prince borne, 348, b 20

Edward the third, ſon of Henrie the ſeuenth chriſtened, 788 a 10

Edwin earle of Northumberland withdraweth from the battell againſt duke william, 1, a 30. His lands giuen to Alane earle of Britaine, 7. Reconciled to king william, 9, b 40. He and Edgar Etheling reſiſt duke william and his Normans, 6, a 10. He & Marchar ſubmit themſelues to duke william, 1, a 50. Slaine of his owne ſoldiors, 10, a 50. ¶ See Marchar.

Egelſin abbat. ¶ See Stigand.

Egelſin abbat of S. Auguſtine his martiall mind, vnpatient of forced ſeruitude, 1, b 50, 2, a 10

Egelwine abbat of Eueſham a warrior, 11, a 50

Egelwinus biſhop of Durham flieth from Durham: note, 7, b 60. In armes againſt duke william, taken priſoner, and famiſhed to death, 10, a 40, 50

Egmond countie lieutenant generall for king Philip in the low countries, his valiant onſet vpon the French, 1150, a 60, b 20

Egremond knight a capteine rebell, 769, b 50. Flieth into Flanders, 770, a 10

Egremond lord Perſie, 647, b 30 committed to Newgate, his eſcape, 645, b 60

Election & choiſe of three things 284, b 60

Elenor counteſſe of Britaine deceaſeth, 228, b 60

Elenor prince Edwards wife commeth to London, 252, a 60

Elenor K. Henrie the ſeconds daughter married to the king of Caſtile, 98, b 30

Elenor Cobham accuſed of treſon: note, 622, b 60, 623, a 10. ¶ See Marriage, and Queene.

Elephant ſent to Henrie the third from the French king, 252, a 30. Two preſented to the pope: note, 837, b 10

Elie held againſt Henrie the third, 273, a 50. Spoiled & the church: note, 190, a 40

Eliſabeth ſecond daughter to king Henrie the eight priſoner in the Tower, ſhe hath heauie enimies of the clergie, 1101, b 10, &c: 1102, a 10, 20, &c. Hir bloud thirſted after by Gardiner, hir life preſerued by maſter Briges lieutenant of the Tower, 1130, b 20, 30. The whole ſtorie of hir troubles in the daies of queene Marie, and how ſhe was preſerued, notable to read, 1151, b 50, 60, 1152, 1153, 1154, 1155. Deliuered out of the Tower, hir words to Beningfield knight hir keeper in the time of durance, 1117, b 40. Proclamed queene the ſame daie that Marie died, 1160, a 40. And the ladie Anne of Cleeue ride togither in a rich chariot, 1091 a 30. ¶ See Queene.

Eliſabeth wife to Henrie the ſeuenth hir birth, 668, b 50

Eliſabeth Barton hir practiſes diſcouered with hir adherents, ſhe is attainted, becommeth a nun, 936, a 20, b 10, 60. Biſhops giue credit to hir hipocriticall doings, ſhe is executed, hir confeſſion at hir death, 937, a 10, 20, 30

Emmanuell college at Cambridge founded, 1396, a 10, &c.

Emperor Adulfe breaketh promiſe with the king of England and the earle of Flanders, 304, b 60

Emperor of Conſtantinople commeth into England, 239, b 60, 519, a 20

Emperor Ferdinand deceaſeth, foretelleth the vttermoſt daie of his death, his goodlie iſſue male and female, 1208, a 10, 20, 30

Emperor Charles, preparation for receiuing of him into England, 853, a 50. Landeth in England, meeteth with Henrie the eight at Douer, laboureth to hinder the purpoſed interuiew betweene Henrie the eight and the French K. ſaileth into Flanders, 856, a 40, b 60, a 20. Commeth to Calis to K. Henrie the eight, 861, b 20. His interteinment: note, b 30, &c. And the French king at wars, 781, a 10, Landeth at Douer, he and Henrie the eight ſweare each to other to obſerue the league interchangeablie made, 873, a 60, b 50. Moderation and temperance at the news of victorie, 885, b 10, 30. And what the French kings mother offered him for the deliuerance of hir ſonne, he hopeth to recouer more profit by the French king in peace than warres, 886, a 50, 60, b 60. Departeth out of England into Spaine, 874, a 10. Sendeth Henrie the eight a preſent, 882, a 40. His anſwer to the Engliſh ambaſſador, articles ſent to them, he releaſeth twelue preiudiciall articles to the French king, 898, a 10, 60, b 60. His anſwer to the Engliſh heralds and oration, 201, b 30. Cõmandeth that the French king, being his priſoner, ſhould be receiued with honour in all places where he ſhould paſſe, 887, b 10. A truce betweene him and the gouernors of France, 887, b 60. He viſiteth the French king in durance, couenants of accord by him to be performed, 888, a 20, b 60. Commeth to heare what the Engliſh & French heralds had to ſaie, 899, He giueth them libertie to ſpeke, a 40. His munificence: note, 921, a 20. Deceaſſeth, an obſequie kept for him, 1171, b 50

Emperor Maximilian & Henrie the eight meet roiallie, 820, a 10. weareth a croſſe of George as ſouldier to the king of England Henrie the eight, 821, a 50. Inueſted into the order of the garter, 1210, a 60. Deceaſſeth, a deſcription of his qualities, 851, a 10

Emperor Sigiſmund cometh into England, the ſtrange maner of receiuing him at Douer, 556, b 30, 40

Emperor concludeth a peace with the French king, 965, a 40. Anſwereth the French kings letters, 904, a 30. Gift to Philip prince of Spaine, 1120, a 20. wonne from the king of Englands freendſhip, 361, b 50. He offereth to be a meane to conclude a peace betweene the two kings of England and France, 361, b 60. Hath the electing and aſſigning of the pope, 24, b 20. Commandeth the Engliſh herald to leaue his oration behind him in writing, his words to the French herald, he giueth him his anſwer in writing, 902, a 10, b 10, 50

Emperors. ¶ See Popes.

Empire deſired by the king of England and France, 905, b 40. ¶ See Spaniſh king.

Empſon and Dudlie with their promoters, 791, b 30. Rauening woolues and caterpillers to the commonwealth, 794, b 20, 30. Atteinted of treaſon, his words to the lords of the councell to find fauour, 803, b 40, 50, 60. Moſt of the lords of the counſell againſt him, ſometime recorder of Couentrie, indicted and found guiltie, condemned, 804, a 30, &c. Committed to the Tower, 799, b 50. Beheaded, 809, a 10

Empſon an obſtinat monke, the laſt monke ſeene in that clothing in England till queene Maries daies, 952, b 60.

Emulation of the dukes of Yorke, 776, a 50

Engins to caſt ſtones, 312, a 60

England & Scotland like to go together by the eares afreſh, 785, a 60. How manie pariſhes it hath: note, 877, b 50. Prouiſion for the defenſe thereof, 946, b 60. It and Scotland made one by amitie, what able to doo, 1001, a 50. Reconciled to the catholike church, and what ioie in Rome therfore, 1123, b 30. Gouerned by Normans & French kings one hundred twentie and two yeares after william Conquerors comming in, 116, b 40. Diuided into foure parts, and the gouernors: note, 103 a 60. It & France the armes quartered, 356, b 30. How gainfull to the court of Rome 171, a 40. Became tributarie to the pope, 177, b 20. Shrewdlie vexed, ſubdued, and ſpoiled in diuerſe places by the French, 192, 193. A great nauie of French ſhips purpoſe to inuade it, 451, a 20. Manie townes burnt and deſtroied on the coaſts thereof by the French and Spaniſh. ¶ See Frenchmen, and French king, and Spaniards, 427. In a lamentable caſe in the time of duke william: note, 5, b 20. Guided by deputies in the abſence of duke william, 5, a 10. without a king and who towards it, 1, a 40. Furniſhed with armor and munition, 1193, b 60. Inuaſion thereof by forren forces intended: note, 1371, a 10, &c, b 30, 40, &c. To be inuaded and diuerſe plots taken by traitors and conſpirators, for the practiſe thereof, 1387, b 60. The proſperitie thereof during the popes curſſes, 1366, a 40 To be inuaded by a Scotiſh power, 1386, a 10. In a ſhort ſpace brought from a troubled to a peaceable eſtate, 203, b 20. Subiect to foure and twentie gouernours: note, 259, a 20

Engliſhmen ſore afflicted, 552, a 20. The order of their armie and archers at Agincourt battell, 553, a 50. Giue the onſet to the French, both armies ioine battell, 554, a 50, 60. Three great victories within a ſhort time togither, 566, b 10. Take diuers towns and caſtels in France, 568, b 30, &c. Diſcomfited vnder the duke of Clarence, 580, a 30. A ſore conflict betweene them and the French, 556, b 10. Take caſtels and townes in Normandie, 559, a 50, &c. Campe greatlie hindered for want of beaſts to draw their ordinance, & the king of Nauars gentle offer to them, 813, a 30, 40, 50. Their nauie & the French incounter ter vpon the coaſts of Britaine, their cruell fight, the French flieth, 815, a 60, b 10, 20. Unrulie behauior being in ſoldiers ſeruice, 809, b 30. Manie purpoſing to ſet vpon the French in the hauen are defeated by a miſchance, 816, a 50. Ouer raſh hardineſſe turneth them to hurt, 829, b 10. Shamefullie abuſed of Frenchmen and other ſtrangers: note, 840, a 20, &c. Plaie the coragious ſoldiers in France, 879, all, 880, all. Beſieged Heding caſtell, win a greet bootie from the French 875, a 40, b 10. Negligent for not putting their valiant doings in writing, 965, b 40. Goods areſted in Burdeaux, 872, b 40. Good ſeruice at the taking of Leith in Scotland: note, 962, a 30, &c: 963, a 10. Burne S. Iehans de Lucie, breake vp their campe at Biſkaie, diſperſed into ſundrie villages, vnappeaſable rage among them, they return out of Biſkaie, 814, a 10, &c. Ualiant ſeruice againſt the French & Scots, their horſemen diſcomfited, 994, a 20, b 40. Go by ſea and land into Scotland, 980, a 30, &c. The order of the armie in marching forward, 980, b 60. Patient in ſuffering all wants of releefe, 995, a 40. Manerlie, French vnmanerlie, 699, b 30 In a mutinie & murmuring, 1140, a 20, 30. Looſe all by Henrie the ſixt, that they got by Henrie the fift. ¶ Compare both ſtories togither, 601. Shamefullie foiled by the French, 601, b 10. Gaine eightéene ſtandards and one banner, 590, b 40. And French at hot ſkirmiſhes: note, 596, b 10, &c. Compaſſion to a Frenchman an enimie, 628, b 50. Looſe all in France, 629, b 30, &c. In a mutinie, committed to priſon, 124, a 40. Ouerthrowne at Formigni, 630, a 30. And Frenchmen fight vpon a ſmall occaſion, 126, a 30. Uictorie againſt the French & their booties, 144, b 50, 60. Spoile Louthian, 89, a 60. God directeth their battell, fighteth for them, their valiantneſſe: note, 372, a 30. Uictorie at Halidon hill, 350, a 40. Derided in a rime, 347, a 40. They & Genowaies méet & fight on the ſeas, 363, b 10. Win the paſſage ouer the water of Some againſt the French, 371, a 20. Make forraies and rodes into the borders of France, 374, b 60. Againſt the Scots, incouraged by the quéene, 375, b 50, 60. Obteine the victorie, 376, a 10. Imbateled before Paris, 393 b 10. Lodge with their armie before Paris, 405, b 10. Uictorie againſt the Flemings on the ſea, 407, a 20. Burne townes in France, 356, a 10. Diſcomfited by conſtable of France, 408, a 20. Flie to ſaue their liues, a great ſlaughter of them, and all by the Scots, 322, a 40, 50. Seruice againſt the French at Leith in Scotland, 1186, a 40, 1187, all. They giue the French the repulſe, 1188, a 50. A number of them ſlaine, 60, their hot ſkirmiſhes 1189, all. They win a trench from the French, 1190, a 30, b 10. Giue them the repulſe, b 60. Repelled by the policies of French, 1191, a 50. A number ſlaine & hurt, 60. Slaine in Scotland, 303, b 10. And Flemings vanquiſhed by the French, 180, a 10. Aſſaile the French ſhips, 179, a 50. Spoil the Iles of Orkneie, 518, b 10 Plaie the men, they beſiege Ard & Sluis, 528, a 60, b 10, Aſſalt Briake in Britaine, 534, b 30. The fortune of the earle of ſaint Paule againſt them, 538, b 40. Die in Spain by reaſon of the great heat of that countrie, 450 a 60. Prouiſion to reſiſt the gret power of the French, 451, a 40. Subdue diuerſe townes in Flanders and ſpoile the countrie. 443, b 10. Their armie tournie through France, 426, b 60. Driuen out of Flanders by the French K. 444, a 60 Nauie ouermatched & ouercome by the Spaniſh, 420, a 30. Cruellie abuſed vnder the pretenſe of peace, by duke William, 10, a 30. Hoſt entieth into Britaine, 427, a 10. They beſiege Naunts, breake vp their ſiege, 427, b 30. Atchiue an exploit againſt the French 422, a 30, &c. Sailing ouer ſea ſcattered in a tempeſt, 423, a 60. Ouerthrowne by Scots, 418, b 10. Ouerthrowne by the French, 418, a 10. Cats, not to be caught without mittens 426, b 60. Weapons before the vſe of the long bow, 15, b 50. Extremelie hated & handled of duke William & his Normans, 8, a 10, 20, 30, 40. Miſerable eſtate in the daies of Malcolme, 10, b 10. Seruice in forren lands well liked of duke William, 10, b 60. Kept low by duke William and his Normans, 14, a 10, &c. Thraldome in the ſeuere regiment of duke William, 1, b 10. Fairlie intreated at king William Rufus hands, & why, 17, b 30. Retire to Newhauen with honor, 1397, a 10. Much made of at Utricht, 1431, b 40. Win towns from the French, 207, b 10. Sent to Spaine againſt the Saracens, 213, a 10. Diſtreſſed by the Welſh, 214, a 20 How manie vnder Henrie the third againſt the French K. 329, b 40. Ouerthrowne by the Welſh, 255, a 20. Diſtreſſed by the Scots, 297, b 50. And the French incounter, 229, b 60. And Welſh at grudge, 278 a 60. Diſtreſſed by the Welſh, 281, a 10, Taken by French, 294, b 10. Uictors by ſea againſt the French, 290, b 30, 40. Stand in doubt of the Welſh, 307, a 60. Uanquiſhed by the Scots, 311, b 60

Engliſh gentlemen mainteined by the French warres, 480, b 10. Light & toieſh behauior in the French court, 850, a 10. Diſcharged of their places & offices vnder quéene Marie the French kings wife, 833, a 10. ¶ Sée Flanders, Flemings, French and Scots.

Enimie vittelled by the enimie, 426, b 20

Enimies domeſticall verie roiallie dealt withall: note, 459, b 30, 40. ¶ Sée Forgiueneſſe.

Enuie, and that perſons indued therewith are readie to forge matters of ſuſpicion, 95, b 10. Of the lords againſt the Spenſers, 325, a 30. Borne for a ladie beſtowed in marriage, 164, a 60. Of quéene Elenor againſt Arthur, 158, a 60. Of the Flemings, 64, a 30 At anothers proſperitie, 37, a 50. Of the earle of March at Henrie the fourths aduancement, 511, a 30. The purſuer of vertue and prowesse, 455, a 30. Iſſue and fruits thereof: note, 422, b 60. Againſt anothers honorable aduancement, 451, b 60. And ſpite betwéene the lords ſpirituall & temporall, & what miſchiefe inſued, 1, a 50. How miſchieuous: note, 708, a 50, 60. ¶ Sée Diſcord and Spite.

Equalitie in a land how inconuenient, 1043, a 60. How hurtfull and vnconſcionable to wiſh, b 30

Erle Aimer of Penbroke arreſted, 332, a 50. Alane. ¶ Sée Alan. Albericke de Uére an eloquent pleder for K. Stephan, 51, a 30. Slaine in a ſeditious tumult, 54, a 60. Arundell. ¶ Sée Iuſts triumphant. Auberie de Uére of Oxenford, 480, a 10

Erle Baldwin de Riuers of Ile of Wight, 224, a 60. His oration to king Stephans armie, 52, b 50. Beleſme of Shrewesburie a factious man: note, 32, a 60. Subdued and baniſhed, 30, a 60. Beauchampe of Warwike protector of England, 424, a 40, Of Warwike deceaſeth, 519, b 60 405, a 10, Beauford of Surrie deceaſeth, 536, b 10. Bigod of Northfolke a valiant chiefeteine, 47, b 60. Accorded with king Henrie the ſecond, 92, a 60, 51, b 60. Bolinbroke of Derbie afterwards king, 448, a 90. Bourchier of Eſſex deceaſeth, 950, a 60

Erle Charles of Weſtmerland, ſore iudgements of God vpon him: note, 1359, a 40. Charles of Flanders murthered and iſſueleſſe, 43, a 50. Clinton of Lincolne ambaſſador into France, the maner of his interteinment, 1229, a 10, 20. Courtneie of Deuonſhire the firſt deſtroier of Exceſter hauen, 1008, a 40. Created, 1089, a 20. Criſpine of Eureux woundeth Henrie the firſt, and is taken priſoner, 40, a 60

Erle de Gaunt of Lincolne, 192, b 60. Dudleie of Warwike ſent into Normandie with an armie, 1195, a 60

Erle Edmund of Lancaſter ſent into Gaſcoigne, his ſeruice in armes, his death, 296, a 50, &c, b 10. Edmund of Suffolke flieth ouer into Flanders, his diſcontented mind, 780, a 10 Beheaded 816, a 10. Edward of Warwike, ſonne & aire to George duke of Clarence, beheaded, 703, b 10. Edwin of Northumberland. ¶ Sée Edwin, 1, a 30. Euſtace. ¶ Sée Euſtace.

Erle Ferreis of Derbie commeth to Cheſter with twentie thouſand men, 269, a 60. Fitzoſborne. ¶ Sée Fitzoſborne. Fitzpeter created erle of Eſſex, 159, b 20. Deceaſeth, 181, b 10. Foulke of Anion quarrelleth with Henrie the firſt, and why, 42, a 50. Accords the kings of England and France, 40, b 60. An enimie to Henrie the firſt: note, 37, a 50, 60. Became allied to Henrie the firſt, 40, b 20

Erle Geffreie Plantagenet, of Anion married the daughter of Henrie the firſt, 43, b 10. Putteth awaie his wife, and taketh hir againe, 44, a 40, Had a ſonne by Mawd the empreſſe, afterwards king of England, 44, b 10. Put to flight by king Stephan, 48, a 30. Raiſeth commotions in Flanders, 48, a 20. Dealeth vnfaithfullie, 106, a 60 Dieth 110, a 30. Gerald of Kildare deputie of Ireland, apprehended, examined, & releaſed, 779, b 20. George of March flieth into England, 518, a 60. Goſpatrike. ¶ Sée Goſpatrike. Guido. ¶ Sée Guido.

Erle Haſtings of Penbroke, as he was learning to iuſt, is wounded to death, 467, b 20. Helias. ¶ Sée Helias. Henrie of Eſſex diſhonoured, 67, a 10. Henrie of Huntington his valiantneſſe, 50, a 10. Herbert of Penbroke prepareth againſt the earle of Warwike, 672, a 60, b 10. Holland of Huntington, 465, b 60. A great exploit doone by him againſt the French, 558, b 50, &c. Holland of Kent in fauour with Henrie the fourth, he marrieth a daughter of a lord of Millain, 532, a 40, 50. Sent to the ſea with an armie, 534, b 20. Hugh of Cheſter deceſeth, 105, b 10. Hugh of March commeth ouer to Henrie the third, and offereth him ſeruice, 209, a 10. Worketh to induce the Normans and Poictouins to fauour king Henrie the third, 210, a 40. Hugh of Montferrat taken priſoner, 423 b 20. Hubert de Burgh created earle of Kent, and why, 209, b 60. In Henrie the thirds diſpleaſure: note, 211, b 10. Eſcapeth out of priſon, and taketh ſanctuarie, 217, a 30, &c. He is brought backe, reſtored to ſanctuarie, reſcued, conueied into Wales, diſcharged of his office of chéefe iuſtice, taks ſanctuarie, reléeued by the Londoners, apprehended, caſt in priſon, and baniſhed, 215, a 50, &c. Hubert of Morienne and his daughter ſold for monie, 84, a 60, b 10

Erle Iaſper of Penbroke, 678, a 60. Beheadeth Roger Uaughan, paſſeth ouer into Britaine with his nephue, 693, a 50, 60. Iohn of an ambitious nature, 132, a 40. No fréend to the biſhop of Elie, 132, a 10. In armes to vſurpe the kingdome, 137, b 60. Purpoſed to ſeize vpon the kingdom in his brothers abſence, 134, b 50. Submitteth himſelfe to his brother Richard the firſt, and craueth pardon for his offenſe, 146, b 60. Pardoned of all his rebellions, 147, a 10. Iohn Scot of Cheſter poiſoned by his wife, his foure ſiſters, 220, b 60. Iohn of Morteigne licenced to returne into England, 121, b 10

Erle Lambert. ¶ Sée Lambert. Lacie of Lincolne deceaſeth, his buriall, his requeſt on his death bed, 320, b 30

Erle Mandeuill of Eſſex licenced to go into the holie land, 101, a 10. william of Eſſex taken, 56, a 20. Marchar of Mercia. ¶ Sée Marchar. Marſhall of Penbroke his oration in the aſſemblie of péeres, 197, a 40. Recouereth his caſtelles taken by the prince of wales, 205, a 30. Killed with a fall from his horſſe, 228, b 60. Deceaſeth, his buriall, 202, a 60, 213, b 60 Mathew of Bullongne, 87, b 10. wounded and dieth, 88, b 40. Montacute of Saliſburie a politike man and valiant, 598, b 60. Miles of Hereford, 51, b 10. Deceaſeth, 56, a 10. Mortimer of March his good ſeruice in Ireland, 440, a 30. Slaine by the wild Iriſh, his iſſue, 448, b 10. Laſt erle of March of that name deceſeth without iſſue: note, 590, a 10. Montgomerie. ¶ Sée Montgomerie. Mowbraie. ¶ Sée Mowbraie. Mulbraie. ¶ Sée Mulbraie.

Erle Neuill of weſtmerland, &c: Prepareth to reſiſt the kings enimies, his ſubtill policie, 529, b 40, 50. Perſuadeth king Henrie the fift vnto the conqueſt of Scotland, 546, a 40. Neuill of Saliſburie his iſſue, 641, b 60

Erle Patrike of Saliſburie ſlaine, 75, b 30. Perſie of Northumberland created, 1133, a 60. warden of the whole marches, 875, b 50. Sent to the ſeas, 455, a 50. Lieutenant of Calis, 475, b 10. Conſpireth with Owen Glendouer, 521, b 50, 522, 523. Reſtored, 545, a 20. Beheaded at Yorke, 1257, a 20. Murthered himſelfe in the Tower, 1403, b 50 A queſt of inquirie vpon the fact, 50, 1404, all. Buried in the Tower, b 20. The whole maner of killing himſelfe, b 40, &c: to. 1419, a 10. Perſie of worceſter leaueth the king and flieth to the duke of Lancaſter, 500, a 10. Sent ouer into Gaſcoigne to appeaſe the people, 518, a 10, 20. Petwike of Perch, 67, b 10. Philip of Flanders, 87, b 10. A meane to make peace betwene the kings of England & France, 114, a 60. His deuotion at Thomas Beckets toome, 100, b 60. Doth homage to the king of England, 103, b 60. His releaſe made at Henrie the ſeconds requeſt, 95, a 60. Plantagenet of warwike ſon and heire to George duke of Clarence committed to the Tower, 762, a 10

Erle Rafe. ¶ Sée Rafe. Raimond of Barzelon, 67, b 10. Of Tripolis, 129. Ranulph of Cheſter taketh his wife the ducheſſe of Britaine priſoner, 150, b 20. Laieth ſiege to Montſorell caſtell, 199, a 60. He raiſeth his ſiege, 199, b 20. Returneth from the holie land, 202, b 20. Goeth into the holie land, 202, b 40. Deceaſeth, thriſe married, the partition of his lands, his exploits, 215, b 40. Reinold of Cornwall baſe ſonne to king Henrie the firſt departed this life, 95. b 40. Reinold Greie of Kent. 1227, b 40. Deceaſeth, 1258, a 20. Richard obeieth his father Henrie. 109, a 60. Seizeth vpon his father Henrie the ſeconds treaſure, 111, a 30. Is rebelled againſt, he inuadeth the earle of Tholous lands, 112, a 60. Reuolteth from his father vnto the French king, 113, a 50. Richard of Cheſter vnder king Henrie the firſts tuition, 32, b 10. He & his wife drowned, 41, b 10. Richard of Clares ſubmiſſion, 92, b 20. Richard of Cornwall returneth out of Gaſcoigne, 209, a 40. Departeth from the court ſecretlie, ioineth himſelfe with the erls of Cheſter and Penbroke, 209, a 60. King of Almaine, deceaſeth, his buriall and iſſue, 275, a 60. His ſonne murthered, b 20. Richard of Eſſex, 961, a 60. Richard of Gloceſters ſubmiſſion, 92, b 20. Richard of Gloceſter dieth, 95, b 50. Richard of Poitow king Henrie the ſeconds ſon, his victorie againſt the Brabanders, 98, b 50. His ſharpe aſſalt of Talburgh, 104, a 10. Robert of Derbie, 92, a 20. Robert of Gloceſter Henrie the firſts baſe ſonne, 37, a 50. An enimie to king Stephan, 48, b 50. Deſcribed, 53, a 10. Commeth to Gloceſter, 51, a 60. Father in law to Iohn king Richards brother, 117, a 30. Taken priſoner, 54, a 50. Dieth, 56, b 50. Robert of Leceſter famous and valiant, 134, a 50, 60. Put to flight, 89, a 30. Taken priſoner, 144, b 40, 90, a 40. Offer for his ranſome, 146, b 40. Robert Dudleie created baron and erle, 1207, a 60, b 10. Inueſted into the order of ſaint Michaell, 1209, a 20. ¶ Sée Erle of Leiceſter. Robert of Mellent rebelleth againſt king Henrie the firſt, 42, b 10. Robert of Richmond againſt the Frenchmen, his martiall acts, in danger to be ſlaine, 359, b 10, &c: 60. Robert de Beleſme of Shrewesburie rebelleth, 30, a 30. Robert de Vére owner of Hidingham caſtell, 190, b 50. Robert paſſeth ouer into Normandie, 55, a 20. Roger Fitzmiles of Hereford, 66, a 10

Erle Saier de Quincie of wincheſter 199, a 60. Seimor of Hereford lieutenant of the North goeth againſt the Scots, 961, b 30. His anſwer to the prouoſt of Edenborough, 962, a 30. Simon of Hampton, 51, b 60, 52, b 20. Dieth, 60, b 10. Simon of Huntington dieth, 108, a 20. Simon of Leiceſter maried with Henrie thirds ſiſter, 222 b all. Maketh his poſſeſſions into monie and goeth into the holie land, 224, a 60, b 10, 225, b 40. Fled ouer into France, 223, b 30. Stanlie of Derbie deceaſeth, his life, death, and qualities, 1257, a 60, b 10. Stephan of Bullongne ſworne to the ſucceſſion of the crowne, 43, a 10. ¶ Sée Stephan. Strangbow marieth Dermutius his daughter, 81, a 50. Confined, ſéketh king Henrie the ſeconds fauor, and is pardoned, 81, a 50, 60. He maketh ſurrender to king Henrie the firſt, b 20. Strangbow of Straguill, 81, a 10. Summerſet of worceſter ſent into France robbed vpon the ſea, 1257, b 40, 50, 60

Erle Talbot of Shrewesburie and his ſon manfullie ſlaine, 639, a 60, b 50. Sent into France with an armie, 817, a 40. Theobald of Champaigne his deſcent in armes againſt the French king, 39, b 20. His countrie inuaded by the French king, 40, b 20. Theodorike of Flanders, 66, b 60. Tiptoft of worceſter beheaded, 678. Turketillus. ¶ Sée Turketillus.

Erle Waleran of ſaint Paule put to flight, 528, b 20. Vére of Oxford, his charge to his bands of men, his valiantneſſe, 759, a 10, 20. Yéldeth himſelfe to king Edward the fourth, ſent ouer ſea, and kept priſoner twelue yeares, 693, b 20. Made marqueſſe of Dublin, 448, a 60. Created duke of Ireland, 451, b 60. Duke of Ireland, to be ſafelie conducted to the kings preſence by the ſhiriffe of Cheſhire, 460 b 60. Deceaſeth in miſerable neceſſitie: note, 479, b 60. His corps conueied from Louaine into England and there roiallie buried, 485, a 60. Séketh to be diuorced from his lawfull wife: note, 458, a 10. Sent ouer into Gaſcoigne, 294, b 60. His valiantneſſe, 684, b 20. Getteth out of priſon, and he with others go to the erle of Richmond, 749, a 10, 20. He leuieth a power & commeth into England, his valor and chiualrie, a 50, 60. He ſubmitteth himſelfe and yéldeth to the king, b 50. The erle of Richmond is glad of him and his companie, b 60. Deceaſeth, 950, a 60.

Erle walter of Eſſex ſaileth into Ireland, 1258, b 60. Deceaſeth, 1263, a 40. The place of his birth, 60. His praiſe in ſundrie reſpects, b 20. Diſpoſed to inlarge his nobilitie, 60 ¶ Sée Erle of Eſſex. waltheof. ¶ Sée waltheof. warren, 51, b 60. warren of Surreie his words to Edward the firſt, 280, b 10. Of Shrewesburie warden of the welſh marches, 42, a 40. william of Arundell ambaſſador to the French king, 72, a 50. Dieth, 98, b 20. william of Kent, william de Ypreſſe, 54, a 30. william ſonne to duke Robert erle of Flanders, 43, a 50. Dieth of wounds, 43, b 20. Duke Robert of Normandies ſon by Sibill, 34, a 10. william named de Longſpée with others go into the holie land, 241, b 50. william of Mortaigne and Bullongne, 68, a 20, 66, b 50. A factious man, 32, a 60. His wilfulneſſe and malcontentment, b 10. william of Saliſburie inuadeth the countries about London, 89, b 30.

Erle of Albemerle, 52, a 10, 52, b 10. whie ſuppoſed to betraie the towne, 88, b 30. Of Aluergnes lands ſpoiled, 75, a 40 Of Aniou, 55, a 20. ¶ Sée Normandie. Departeth this life, 58, b 20. Of Arminacks daughter affied to Henrie the ſixt, he, his ladie, ſonne & two daughters taken, 624, a 10. An open enimie to England: note, 636, b 10. Of Arundels fréendlie ſpéech to ladie Eliſabeth, 1154, a 50. His exploits in France: note, 609, a 10. His death, 610, a 20. Goeth to ſea with fiue hundred men of armes and a thouſand archers, 454, a 50. His liberalitie: note, 454, b 50. Saileth into Britaine with a great power, 455, a 10. Returneth into France, 465, b 10. Sent to the ſea with a great nauie in aid of the duke of Britaine 465, a 50. Ioineth with the lords in conſpiracie, 458, a 60. To be apprehended by the earle of Northumberland, 60. Anſwer to his indictment, he is condemned, 491, b 10, 50, 60. Executed, 492, a 10, 20. Ouerthrowne in the middeſt of a water, 56, a 30. Profeſſeth himſelfe ſorie that he goeth not with the duke of Northumberland againſt the ladie Marie, 1086, b 10. Apprehended, 489, b 20. Arreigned, 491, a 60

Erle of Bedford and his ſonne the lord Ruſſell deceaſeth, 1413, b 10. Of Blois his ſon made biſhop of wincheſter, 42, a 60. Of Britaine aſſiſted againſt the French king, he ſubmitteth himſelfe, 219, a 10, 20. Of Buckingham ſent into Britaine to aid the duke againſt the French king, 425, b 60. He maketh knights at his entrance into France, 426, a 30. Diſpleaſed with the duke of Britaine, returneth into England, 427, b 60. Of Bullogne prepareth ſix hundred ſhips to inuade England. 75, a 50

Erle of Carleill raiſeth an armie, put to death for treaſon, 333, a 10, b 20. His iudgment and conſtancie at his death, 334, a 60. Of Cambridge returneth out of Portingale, 441, b 20. His ſonne affianced to the king of Portingals daughter, 441, b 20, 40. He and other lords apprehended for treaſon, 548, b 10. Executed, 50. The effect of his indictment, 549, a 30, &c. Of Cheſter deſcribed, 53, a 10. His exploits being the kings lieutenant, 212, b 20. withſtood the gathering of tenths for the pope, 211, a 50. Bare S. Edwards ſword before Henrie the third at his mariage, 219, b 40. His oration to the erle of Gloceſter, 52, a 10. His right and title thereto, and priuileges, his foure barons vnder him: note, 20, a 20. Dieth, 60, b 10. Of Cornwall marrieth the counteſſe of Gloceſter, 213, b 50. Elected emperour, 254, b 10. Stans againſt the K. his brother for grant of a ſubſidie, 251, b 40. He lendeth the king monie, 252, a 20. Elected king of Almaine, taketh his leaue of the king his brother, 256, a 20. And king of Almaine, his proteſtation to the Engliſh ambaſſadors, he commeth ouer into England, receiueth an oth not to infringe the ſtatuts of Oxford, 261, 261, a all. An interceſſor for peace to be had betwixt the pope and the emperour, 226, b 10

Erle of Derbies exploits in France and his taking of townes, 368, b 40, &c: 369, a 10, &c. Aſſembleth an armie, winneth townes, and is victorious, 375, a 30, &c. His exploits againſt the infidels, 473, b 10. Kéepeth Newland bridge, 377, b 20. Ambaſſador into France, his interteinement, 1380, a 50, 60, &c: 1381, all, 1382, a 10, &c. Of Deſmond a rebell and others brought to order by the earle of Surrie & his power, 855, b 60. His ſtrange and miſerable end, 1365, b 60. His head ſet on London bridge, 1356, a 20

Erle of Eſſex capteine generall of Vlſter, in Ireland, 1259, a 20. How he ſpent his youthfull yeares, 1264, a 10. Perfect in the ſcriptures, 1264, a 30. A fauourer of preachers, 40. Expert in chronicles, hiſtories, &c: 50. Indued with martiall knowledge and proweſſe, b 20. His humanitie, affableneſſe, &c: 1265, a 10. His equanimitie, 40. He could not awaie with ſwearing, chafing, &c: 50. His deuotion in ſickneſſe, 60. Heauenlie contemplation toward his death, b 10. How his ſeruants were affected at his ſpéeches, 30. Eternallie bleſſed, 60. His epitaph geneologicall, 1296, a 10. His deth much lamented, b 20. Quéene Eliſabeths teſtimonie concerning him, 60. Why his epitaph geneologicall was added to the ſermon, 1267, a 10. His counſell to the yoong earle his ſonne now aliue, 20. Goeth to Leger, 1431, b 20

Erle of Ew. ¶ Sée william.

Erle of Flanders his oth, 91, a 10. Aſſiſteth king Sweine to inuade England, 14, a 50. wounded and dead, 40, b 10. Allured from Richard the firſt to the French K. 126, b 50. His deuotion vnto Thomas Beckets ſhrine, 152, a 60. winneth townes, 151, b 50. In armes againſt the Turkes, 164, a 20. Flieth into Gant, 354, b 40. He returneth and eftſoones flieth, 354, b 50. Forced to a promiſe of marriage, 376, b 30. Diſhonorable abuſing of Edward the third & his owne people, 376, b 40. He & his wife arreſted, inforced to agrée with the French king, releaſed, & returned home, he defieth the French king, till he is accurſed, his ſonne appealeth from an interdiction, 297, a 10, &c. Pacifieth his people, 306, b 40. Feaſteth the king of England, 360, b 10. Sendeth to the biſhop of Norwich to know the cauſe of his inuaſion, 442, b 60

Erle of Gloceſters anſwer to the earle of Cheſters oration, 52, a 30. Maketh warre on the welſhmen, 281, b 10. Raiſeth a commotion, 272, b 60. Confederateth with the earle of Leiceſter, 262, b 50. Admoniſhed to obeie Henrie the third, the Towre defended againſt him, 273, a 10. Sworne to the peace by Henrie the third on his death bed, 276, a 40

Erle of Henault defieth the French king, 357, b 60. Of Herefords euill counſell to duke william, 8, b 60. He & Lancaſter ioine, 329, a 40. They flée, come to Pomfret, the one ſlaine the other taken, 330, a 40, b 60. Of Hertford forraieth the middle marches of Scotland, 969, b 10, 60. Of Huntington politike & wiſe, 616, b 60, 617, a 10

Erle of Kent a biſhop, 18, a 60. Diſpoſſeſſed of his lands, but pardoned of life, but excluded from libertie, 216, a 60, b 10. ¶ Sée Odo. Of Kildare reſtored to his deputiſhip in Ireland, 878, b 10, 20. Made deputie of Ireland, 883, b 30. Committed to the Towre by cardinall woolſeis meanes, 855, b 20. Executed, 943, b 50. Of Kime otherwiſe Angus beheaded, 666, b 40

Erle of Lancaſter vntrulie fained to be ſurnamed Crokebacke, 511, a 50. Canonized for a ſaint, 472, b 50. A great ſtrife whether he ſhould be reputed a ſaint or no, 331, b 60, 332, a 10. Arreigned, found guiltie, and beheaded, 331, a 40, 60

Erle of Leiceſter brother to the earle of Mellent, 58, b 60. Offered to ſtrike the king. 89, b 50. In armes againſt the French king, 138, a 52. Put to flight by the French, his valiantneſſe at a freſh aſſault, 154, b 20. Put to a hard ſhift by the Gaſcoignes, 246, b 60. Seruice in Gaſcoigne, 242, a 60. Threateneth the earle of Penbroke, 252, b 40. Reſigneth his gouernment of Gaſcoigne, 247, b 60. Daunteth his enimies, 245, b 10. Slain, 270, a 60. His ſonne raiſeth an armie, winneth wincheſter, his armie is diſcomfited, 270, a all. His pride bringeth the barons to confuſion, b 10.

Erle of Leiceſter baron Denbigh, paſſeth ouer ſea to the low countries as the quéens lieutenant, 1419, a 20. Arriuall at Fluſhing, 1424, a 20. Saileth towards Middleborough, b 40. His interteinment there, 50. Honourablie feaſted in Chriſtmaſſe time of the ſtates, 1425, a 20. He feaſteth them againe, 40. Landeth at williamſtat, 60. Entreth into Dort, b 10. Commeth to Rotherdam, 50 Entreth into Delfe, 60. Magnificent interteinment of the quéene, and the bountifull fare he kept for his attendants, in progreſſe, 1299, a 30. On the right hand of the prince Dolphin, 1337, b 30. Kéepeth ſaint Georges feaſt ſolemnlie at Vtricht, 1433, b 20. Inueſted with the robes of the order, 60. Commeth to Vtricht, and how receiued, 1431, a 60, b 10. A placard conteining the authoritie giuen him by the ſtates of the low countries, 1428, b 10, &c, 1429, a 10, &c. Lodgeth in the houſe where the prince of Orange was ſlaine, 1426, a 10. Remoueth to Donhage, and worthilie interteined, 30. Interteined at Leidon, he rideth to Skeneling, titles of honor aſcribed vnto him, 1427 b 60. Commeth to Harlem, and how he was receiued, 1429, b 40, &c, 1430, a 10, &c. Goeth to Amſterdam, and how interteined, 40

Erle of Leiceſters onelie ſonne & heire deceaſeth, 1375, b 40.

Erle of Lincolne proclaimed heire apparant, 747, a 30. Sonne to Iohn de la Poole, duke of Suffolke, a conſpirator, 766, a 10. His flight into Flanders, doubted of Henrie the ſeuenth, he entreth Yorkſhire with his power, trieth battell with the king, he is ſlaine, 766, b 60, 767, a 10. Deceaſeth, 1378, b 60, 1379, a 10. ¶ Sée Lacies.

Erle of March duke of Yorke, 659, b 60. The great hope of the people conceiued of him, he is elected king, he taketh vpon him the regiment, 661, a 60, b 10, 40. His badge: note, 660, a 20

Erle of Mellent, 51, b 60, 52, b 10. Diſcontented with the biſhops in an aſſemblie, 36, a 60, b 10, 20. A councellor to Henrie the firſt, to hold the title of inueſtitures of prelats, 32, a 30. Taken priſoner, 42, b 20. His ſonnes praiſed for their learning: note, 44, a 60. Of Mortaigne taken priſoner, 33, a 40. Mortimer. ¶ Sée Mortimer.

Erle of Northumberland charged by the duke of Lancaſter with ſundrie crimes, the Londoners are his fréends, they are accorded, 439, a 60, b 10. Sent to apprehend the erle of Arundell, 458, a 60. His words to the king, in behalfe of the lords loialtie, 459, a 20. His meſſage to Richard the ſecond, 500, b 20. Cléereth himſelfe of much ſuſpicion, 525, b 20, 30. Flieth, 530, b 40. Againſt weſtmerland, he is reſtored, 524, a 10, b 10. His returne into England, 534, a 30 Slaine, 534, a 60. Murthered by the northerne rebels, 769, b 30, 40. His rich arraie, 791, a 60. Committed to priſon by the cardinall wolſeis means, 855, b 60. Arreſteth wolſeie, 915, b 20, 30, 40. He and weſtmerland rebell, and what ill ſucceſſe it had: note, 1212, 1213. ¶ Sée Conſpiracie, Erle Perſie.

Erle of Ormond high treaſuror of Ireland, 883, b 30. Of Oxford. ¶ Sée earle Véere.

Erle of Pearch ſlaine, 200, a 60. Of Penbroke paſſeth ouer into Ireland, he is taken priſoner, his death, 218, a 60, b 10. In danger of taking, he is reſcued, 217, b 40. Lord warden of Scotland, 312, b 10. Diligent: note, 201, a 20. Valiant manhood, 672, b 60. Diſcontented, waiteth for aduantage, 667, a 60. Conductor of the earle of Richmonds companie, 748, a 20. Generall of quéen Maries armie againſt wiat and his companie, they incounter. 1098, a 30, 60. Deceaſeth, his epitaph, 1213, b 10

Erle of Richmond cauſeth his men to put on armor, he ſetteth them in order, and appointeth chiefteins, 755, b 20, 40. His perſon deſcribed, his cauſe iuſt and right, a great motiue to the nobles to aſſiſt him, incouragements to his armie to plaie the men, 757, a 50, b 20. His oration by Richard the third to the chéefteins of his armie, 755, b 60. Politike, 758, b 60. Preparation of ſhips and ſouldiors to the ſea, diſparkled by tempeſt, he ſéeth all the Engliſh bankes furniſhed with ſouldiors, 744, b 50, 60. Sendeth to know whether they were with him or againſt him, arriueth in Normandie, and paſſeth by land into Britaine, in fauour with the French king, he lamenteth and reioiſeth, the lords giue faith and promiſe each to other for his furtherance, he ſweareth to marrie Eliſabeth the daughter to Edward the fourth after poſſeſſion of the crowne, diuerſe of his faction apprehended and executed, 745, a 10, 30, 40, 60, b 10, 20, 50, 60. Arriueth at Milford hauen, his power made ſtrong by acceſſe of the confederats, he ſendeth ſecret word to his mother & fréends that he ment a direct paſſage to London, and deſired their conference, he is aided of the welſhmen, 753, a 60, b 20, 40. At Lichfield, remoueth his power to Tamworth, and of a ſtrange chance that happened to him, put to a hard ſhift, 754, b 10, 30, 50, 60. Informed of his roiall preferment, &c. He maketh the duke of Britaine priuie to the matter, preparation to bring in, receiue and erect him to the kingdome, 742, b 10, 40, 60. Atteinted in parlement, and all other that fled ouer ſea to take his part, 746, a 40. Smal traine for a policie, apparelled like a page, he attendeth vpon one of his men, he is fauored of foreine and homeborne, he goeth to the French king and requireth ſuccour to recouer the crowne, 748, a 30, 40, b 10, &c, 50. Diuerſe Engliſhmen ſubmit themſelues vnto him in France, 750, a 10. Proffereth to incounter Richard the third bodie to bodie, 759, a 40. Deuout behauiour after the victorie, 760, a 30. Crowned by the lord Stanlie in the field, by the name of Henrie the ſeuenth, 760, a 40, 50. ¶ Sée Henrie the ſeauenth. Of Rutland put the French armie in danger of an ouerthrow, 1240, b 30. Emploied in martiall affaires about Scotland, 1061, a 10. Detecteth the nobles conſpiracie to king Henrie the fourth, 515, a 40. Sent ouer ambaſſador into France, 519, a 40. His follie the cauſe of diſcloſing the noblemens conſpiracie, 515, a 10, 20. Being yoong cruellie murthered: note, 659, b 30, went againſt the rebels in the north, 1212, b 20 ¶ Sée Manners.

Erle of Saliſburie gathered a power, 649, a 20. Charged with treaſon, his requeſt, he is mainepriſed, 513, a 50, b 50, 60. Slaine by the Saracens, 243, a 10. Deceſeth, 150, b 30. Sealicke, deceaſeth, 207, b 10. Deceaſeth, bruiſed at the iuſts, iuſts,366,b 60. Slaine,599. b 30. Of Shrewſburies great diligence, policie and and true ſeruice againſt the northerne rebelles, 942,a 30. His loialtie, what he ſaid to them that talked lewdlie of him, prouided of ill ſouldiors, his oth in preſence of the people neceſſarie, 942,a 30,60,b 10,30,50. Generall of an armie againſt the Scots and French,994,b 60. Commeth to Hadington, and of his doings againſt the enimie, 995, a 10,20,60,b 10,&c. Of Southampton deceaſeth, 1062,b 20. Of Suffolke in great fauor with K. Richard the ſecond: note, 454, a 40. Put to his ſhifts and diſtreſſed, 790, a 60,b 10. Gréeuouſlie charged by the parlement houſe for ſundrie offenſes,453, a 60. Flieth ouer into Calis diſguiſed: note, 460, b 30. Sudden death, 440, a 10. Of Surreie entreth Scotland, defacing caſtelles and towers, his valiant heart, reioiſing at his hap likelie to fight hand to hand with the king of Scots, ambaſſadors to treat a peace betwene both nations, 783,a 20,40. High treaſuror of England, 781,b 60. Sent with a great power againſt the northerne rebels, 769,b 60. Valiant determination to incounter the Scots, the ordering of his armie, 828 a 10,20. And his ſonne the lord admerall with ioined powers againſt the Scots, 825, b 50,60. Their meſſage to the king of Scots, 826,a 60,b 10. They remooue their camps to and fro as occaſion mooueth 827,b 20,50. High admerall, his attire at the receiuing of the French kings ambaſſadors, 848,a 40. His ſeruice againſt certein rebels, 855,b 50 High admerall and his companie come vnto Hampton court, 873, b 60. Entereth Scotland, 306,b 60. His maner of winning Morleis in Britaine, he maketh knights 874,a 30, 40. Sent with an armie to inuade France, commeth with his power to Calis, returneth into England, 875,a 10,60,b 10. Inuadeth Scotland and preuaileth againſt them, 881,a 60,b 10,&c. And Southampton ſent to Calis, 953,a 40. Committed to the Tower notwithſtanding his ſubmiſſion, 759,b 50. Beheaded, 976,b 40,50. Of Suſſex maketh a iornie into Scotland, his valorous ſeruice, 1222,a 40,&c. Inuadeth Scotland, 1213,b 60. Vieweth Hume caſtell, 1214, a 40. Went againſt the rebelles in the north, 1212,b 10. Gentle to ladie Eliſabeth, 1153,a 50, Viſiteth madam de Parma, 1210,a 60. His iornies during his abode beyond ſeas, b 10. Interteined of the emperor, 20. Saluted of the duke of Auſtria, 40. Departeth from Vienna, 60. Deceaſeth, 1353,b 50. His honorable funerall, 60, 1354,a 10. ¶ Sée Fitzwater. Of ſaint Giles accorded with king Henrie the ſecond, 85,a 20. Otherwiſe Tholouze, 67,b 30. Of ſaint Paule reuolteth to the French, 619,b 10. Confedered with the duke of Burgognie, 694,a 30. His counſell vnto king Henrie the firſt, 488,a 10 Came out of France to ſée a chalenge performed at Couentrie, 495, a 20. Aſſalteth the caſtell of Guiſnes, 538,b 40. His fortune againſt the Engliſhmen, 538,b 40. Landed in the Ile of wight, he maketh ſpoile, 521,a 60. Deceaſeth, 608,b 50

Erle of Tholouze lands inuaded by earle Richard, 112, a 60
Erle of warwike made gouernor of king Henrie the ſixt, 596,a 50. And others ſent to the generall councell, 547,a 50,60. Denieth that euer he acknowledged himſelfe guiltie of treaſon, 513,a 30. Aſſalted, 648, b 20. Lord admerall and lieutenant of Calis, he ſcowreth the ſeas and taketh a rich priſe, 648,a 10, &c. Regent of France, 616,a 20. His entrance thereinto, a 60. Anſwer to the duke of Clarence his meſſage, 682,b 10. And Edward the fourth incounter, his manfull courage, 684, a 10,&c: b 40. He is ſlaine, 685,a 10. Followeth king Edward the fourth to foile him, 683,b 40. And the duke of Clarence tooke the ſeas, he is kept out of Calis, landed at Diepe, 674, a 50,b 30. The loue which the people bore vnto him, 675, a 40. In a chaſe becauſe of king Edward the fourths deliuerie, 673,b 30. In Couentrie, prouoked to fight by king Edward the fourth, 681,a 10. His houſekéeping, inſtituted gouernor of the realme, his badge worne in euerie mans cap: note, 678, a 30,40,b 40. Diſcourageth king Edward the fourth, and maketh him flie for feare out of England, 675,a 60,b 10,&c, His ſtandard, what enſigne it bore, 673,a 10. The fruits of his malice, 673,a 30. Beareth a continuall grudge vnto king Edward the fourth, his perſuaſions to his two brethren againſt him, 670,b 20,50,671, b 10,&c: b 50. Offended with king Edward the fourths marriage, 668,a 60. He kéepeth his gréefe ſecret, b 20. Sent ouer into France about K. Edward the fourths marriage, 667, b 60. His corage, a truſtie fréend to king Edward the fourth, 664,a 60 b 10. The right one, order taken for the ſhewing of him abrode, 765,b 30. Had in feare & gelouſie in forren regions, 787, b 60. Shewed openlie in proceſſion, 766, a 10. His manlie corage, 982,a 50. His preſence greatlie incorageth the Engliſh ſouldiors, 987,a 10, His requeſt and meſſage to the erle of Huntleie, 984, a 20. Arreigned of treaſon, Confeſſeth it, ſubmitteth himſelfe, is pardoned, 492, a 50,60,b 10. In higheſt authoritie, 1061,b 10. Commended, he is ſlaine, 727,a 60. Sent againſt the rebelles in the north, 1212, b 40. Commended, 1205,a 50. Deceaſeth, 404,b 20. His valiantneſſe, 1204,a 60, Shot through the thigh with an harquebuſe, b 50. Noble men of France ſent vnto him from the admerall about conference, 1199 b 30. Landeth at Newhauen, 1196, a 20. An oth taken by him and his officers 30. He and the Rheingraue talke togither, b 10. He appointed to go againſt Norfolke rebels, 1034, b 30. Commeth to Cambridge, b 40. He ſendeth an herald at armes to the rebels offering pardon, &c: 1036,a 10,&c. Counſell giuen him to abandon Norwich, goeth forth to giue the enimies battell, 1038, a 60, b 70. The rebels yéeld to him, & ſheweth them mercie, 1039, b 20, Counterfet of warwike ¶ Sée Simenell. Of wiltſhire and others ſpoile Newberie, he ſaileth ouer ſeas, 653 b 20,30. The duke of Buckinghams brother 803,b 20. Of winchester beſieged by his owne tenants, 240,b 10. Reprochfullie executed, 339,a 50. Of worceſter gouernor to the prince ſlippeth from him, 522,b 30. And others beheaded, 523,b 60
Erles of Cheſter the true and famous geneaologie, 221,a 10 Tooke end in Iohn Scot, 221,a 10. Of Leiceſter from the firſt to the laſt by ſucceſſion, ſet downe in a collection, 1419,a 40,&c: vnto 1424,b 10. Of Richmond line that firſt bare their title of honor of the ſaid caſtle and towne, 7,b 20
Erles created, 332,a 20,568 a 60 347. b 60. 892, a 50.912 b 50. And dukes created, 395,b 50. And barons, 960, a 20. And lords, 1061,a 40, 1228, a 60,b 10. At a parlement, 353,a 30. Thrée taken and beheaded, 183,b 10
Erledome of March purchaſed, 102,a 50.
Erminfred biſhop of Sion or Sitien a chéefe commiſſioner from pope Alexander, 8,b 60.
Ermingard vicount Beaumonts daughter married to william king of Scots, 110, a 60
Erthquake, 217, b 50. In Kent, &c: 1313,a 10. Ouer all England, 109, a 40. Generall in England.11,b 50. In H. the firſts time, 39,b 10. Senſible and viſible, 44,b 40. That did much hurt, 440,b 40. In the fourtéenth of duke williams reigne, 14, a 30. Vniuerſall how frightfull and hurtfull, 1311,a 20. &c: That ouerthrew buildings, 239, b 20. At ſaint Albons counted ſtrange, and white, 243,a 60. That ouerthrew houſes, 241, a 60. Generall, did much hurt, 278,a 30. In diuerſe places of England, 1206,a 20,30 In ſundrie places of England, and what harme was thereby doone, 1260, b 10. After a thunder, 204,b with lightening and thunder, &c: 277,b 40: note,
Erth lifted vp it ſelfe like a huge towre, 102, b 60. Remooued in Dorſetſhire, 1353, a 20. And trées ſonke and ſwallowed vp in Kent: note, 1413, b 20,30. Strangelie mooving in the countie of Hereford, 1224,b 10
Eſcuage demanded: note, 213,a 20. Granted, 233,b 40, 248, a 40,262,a 10. Paid, 203, a 60. Gathered, twentie ſhillings of euerie knights fée, 230, b 50. Termed the great, 229, a 50
Eſpeke walter, the firſt that brought the order of white monks into England, 26,a 60
Eſſexmen beginers of a ſhrewd rebellion, 429, b 60. They proſecute it, 430, &c.
Eſter daie fell at the higheſt, namelie on ſaint Marks daie 167,a 60
Eſterlings. ¶ Sée Riot.
Eſtouteuille Robert taken priſoner. 33,a 40
Euill Maie daie. ¶ Sée Rebellion of Lincolne.
Euers, conſtable of Douer caſtell, &c, 480, a 20. Lord that now liueth, his noble anceſtrie 412,b 50. Knight his good ſeruice in the North, 942, b 30. His proweſſe and valiant ſeruice, 962, b 30. Slaine, 968,a 60
Eureux citie yéelded vnto the Frenchmen, 386,b 50. Taken by treaſon, 619, b 60
Euſtace earle of Bullongne, againſt william Rufus, 17, b 60. Sonne to king Stephan duke of Normandie, 48,a 40. Angrie with his father, 60,a 60. He dieth ¶ Sée Monke.
Exactions cauſe commotions, 626,b 10. Great, 145, a 40. with ſhifts of extortion practiſed, 146, a 10. New and ſtrange: note, 496,a 20. Intollerable, 239, b 10. ¶ Sée Couetouſnes, Subſidies, &c. Taxes, Tenths, and Tributes.
Example euill how it preuaileth, 430,a 60. Of great ones what it doth for imitation, 845,b 60
Execution without iudgement vpon noblemen, 673,a 30,693, a 50. Of the duke of Buckingham without arreignment or iudgement, 744,b 10
Exceſter rebelled againſt duke william, and is ſubdued, 6, b 10. Preſerued from fier, 784, a 10. Beſieged, the loialtie of the citizens, 1002, b 40, 60. Citie deſcribed, with the ſundrie aſſaults of the ſame, 1007 b 10, 1008, 1009, 1010, 1011, 1012, 1013, 1014. Commended for loue and loiall ſeruice to the king and ſtate: note, 1047 b 40,50. Noble & true, 1048, a 10. Great practiſes to procure the citizens thereof to ioine with the Deuonſhire rebels: note, 1020, a 30, &c. The antiquitie, foundation, and building of the cathedrall church .of ſaint Peters in Exceſter, 1027, a 20, &c. ¶ Sée Clergie, Edward the fourth, and Richard the third.
Excommunication denounced againſt the rebellious barons in king Iohns time, 188, b 60 Of Romiſh vſurers, and the excommunicator called to his anſwer, 219,b 10. A dart that made both king and people to quaile, 223, b 60. Of préeſt for incontinencie, 242, a 60. And ſuſpenſion threatned againſt the Engliſh clergie, 239, a 40. Thretned to ſuch as aſſiſted king Iohn, 181, a 50. Of Lewis the French kings ſonne by name, 192,a 20. By name and in particular, 190,a 20, 10. Of king Iohn when it was to be releaſed,178,b 40. Of Guie de Montfort, 277, a 40. Of duke Leopald for impriſoning of Richard the fourth,147.a 50. Extended to the dead & buried: note,392, a 10. Flaſhed and thundered out againſt the wicleuiſts: note,484,a 10,&c: Threatened againſt attempters of tumults,205,b 60. The feare thereof conſtreined a contribution,211,a 10. Of pope Sixtus quintus eſtéemed as nothing: note,1401, a 40,&c: ¶Sée Legats, Popes, and Prieſts.

Excheker, and the officers vnto the ſame by whome inſtituted, 8, a 60. Remooued from weſtminſter to Northhampton,173,a 10. It and the kings bench remooued vnto Shrewesburie, 278,b 10.
Excuſe of Edward the firſt to auoid an inconuenience, 308,a 60. Of the clergie to be frée from ſubſidies,&c: 301, b 40. ¶Sée Couetouſneſſe.
Exham field. ¶Sée Battell.
Exton knight a murtherer of king Richard the ſecond 517, a 10. His too late repentance and ſorrow. a 20. Extortion of william Rufus made him euill ſpoken of amongeſt his ſubiects,23,b 10. An ordinance againſt it, 260, b 10. ¶Sée Oppreſſion &, Vſurie.

F.

FActions of Yorke and Lancaſter vnpoſſible to be mingled without danger of diſcord, 647,a 40
Faire kept at weſtminſter at ſaint Edwards tide,241,a 30 Fifteene daies togither, 247, a 20. Of Lewis the French kings ſonne in deriſion, 200, b 10. At Briſtow robbed,263, b 50
Falaiſe beſéeged and rendered vp to king Henrie the fift,561 b 10,60. ¶Sée Arbet.
Falſhood betwixt brethren, 32,a 60
Familie of loue, fiue of that ſect ſtood at Paules croſſe, 1261,b 30. Proclamation againſt them: note, 1314,a 60,b 10.
Famine extreme within Rone, 566,b 20. Richard the ſecond died therof,516,b 60. Suffred, 68,b 20. The cauſe whie Rone was ſurrendred,167,b 60. Refuſed, and death by the ſword choſen, 166,a 20. The puniſhment of witchcraft, 204,a 10. Lamentable,323,b 40. ¶Sée Peſtilence.
Farrer an haberdaſher of London a ſore enimie to the ladie Eliſabeth, 1159,b 20,30,&c:
Faſt generall proclamed and deuoutlie obſerued, 1427,b 50
Faſts & proceſſions vſed, 260 a 10
Fauour. ¶Sée People.
Fecknam. ¶Sée Abbat.
Fées.¶Sée Annuities.
Feare cauſeth want of ſpéech, 659,b 30. Made king Edward the fourth forſake his kingdome, 675,a 60, b 10. what it forceth men vnto,293 a 20. Cauſeth reſtitution of wrongfull deteined townes, 311,b 20. Forceth agréement: note, 114,b 20. Among the people aſſembled at the duke of Summerſets execution, 1068,a 50, b 10. ¶Sée Suſpicion.
Ferguſa a Lombard betraieth the duke of Clarence, 580,a 10
Felton ¶Sée Bull ſeditious.
Ferdinando archduke of Auſtrich made knight of the garter, 882,a 60
Ferrers lord of miſrule at a Chriſtmas at the court, his behauiour and port, 1067,a 60,b 10,&c:
Ferrers knight william taken priſoner, 33,a 40
Ferrers a traitor.¶Sée Treaſon.
Feſcampe william, his deuiſes of a plaine ſong whereabout was ſtrife, 13,b 30
Feaſt rare and roiall, 1332,a 60 At quéene Katharins coronation, 579, a 10,&c: Sumptu- and full of rare deuiſes, 1434, a 30
Fetherſton, alias Conſtable. ¶Sée Counterfet of king Edward the ſixt.
Feuerſham abbeie by whome founded, 58,a 20
Fifteenth granted vnto king Henrie the third by the temporaltie,213,a 10. Of the ſixt penie after the rate of mens goods,312,b 20. Of all the mooueables to be found within the realme,207,a 30. Thrée granted, 402, a 60. ¶ Sée Subſidie.
Fight among ſparows,397,b 50
Finch knight drowned, 1202, b 10
Fine for miſdemeanor,704,a 60 Of fiue thouſand markes paid to king Henrie the third by the Londoners, 208,b 40. For murther,122,b 30. Of a kéeper for a priſoners eſcape, 152,a 20
Fines ſet on priſoners for their ranſoms,144, a 50. Paid for licence to exerciſe turnements, 145, b 60. Set on the nobles by king Iohn for not aiding him againſt the French king, 167, a 20. For not comming to the church,1322. Of prieſts that had wiues, 26,a 30. Extreme leuied vpon the clergie: note, 201,b 60, 202, a 10. Set on the maior of London and the ſhiriffes,256,b 30: note. Set on ſhiriffes heads, 254, a 60. Of foure hundred pounds ſet vpon aldermens heads of London by king Henrie the ſeuenth, 795,b 60,796,a 10. Seſſed vpon them, that fauored the Corniſh rebels,785, a 10.¶Sée Eſcuage, Forfeits, and Nobilitie.
Fire burſteth out of the earth, 44,b 40. It & the ſword Gods angrie angels, 1001,b 10
Fiſh monſtrous taken in Norfolke,1355,b 60. Of twentie yards long,&c: note, 1259,b 30. Driuen to the Engliſh ſhore,1206,a 40. Like vnto a man, 168,a 10
Fiſhes at the ſea fight, 225,b 60 115, a 10. Monſtrous at Downam bridge in Suffolke 1211,a 50. In weſtminſter hail after the fall of an high floud, 1271, b 50.
Fiſhmongers bound to find foure ſcholers at the vniuerſities,&c: note, 792,b 10. Sore trobled by the maior of London,440,b 30. An act againſt them within the citie of London, 441, a 50. The ſtatute againſt them repeled and they reſtored to their liberties,442 a 60. Benefited by iuſtice Randolph, 1354,a 40,50.
Fitzalan william a conſpirator 49,a 10
Fitzarnulfe a Londoner procureth the citizens to reuenge their cauſe by rebellion, he is apprehended and executed, 204,a 40
Fitzbaldrike ſhiriffe of Yorke, 10,a 10
Fitzempreſſe Henrie, his returne into England 58, a 20. and is knighted, 40
Fitzfergus Gilbert killed his brother: note, 98,b 40
Fitzgeffreie chamberleine vnto king Richard the firſt, 128,a 60. His death, b 60
Fitzhammon Robert his tale to william Rufus, 26,b 20
Fitziohn Euſtace a conſpirator,49,a 10. Slaine, 67,a 10
Fitzleo Peter an vſurping pope, 44,a 50
Fitzmiles Roger. ¶Sée Erle.
Fitzmoris his miſerable end, 1365,b 60
Fitzoſbert his vnnaturall ingratitude, and complaint to K. Richard the firſt againſt the citie of London, 149,a 40. whie he ware his long beard, his oration to the people, he is called before the archbiſhop of Canturburie lord chéefe iuſtice & preſident of the realme, he flieth into the church of ſaint Marie Bow, he is attached, his concubines, 149, all. Is executed, the archbiſhop of Canturburie euill ſpoken of for his death, an old whoremonger and new ſaint 150,a 10,20
Fitzoſborne william earle of Hereford, &c: gouernor of England in duke williams abſence, 5,a 10
Fitzroie Oliuer ſonne to king Iohn, 202,a 20
Fitzſcrope Richard in armes againſt Edrike the rebell,5, a 10
Fitzwalter lord deceaſeth in Spaine,450,b 10. Appealeth the duke of Aumerle of treaſon,512,a 60. He is mainpriſed,513,b 60. Earle of Suſſex, his ſeruice againſt the Scots, he is in great danger: note, 986,a 20
Fitzwilliams recorder of London his wiſedome in a dangerous caſe, 730,b 30
Flanders ſpoiled by the duke of Gloceſter, 614,b 60. wholie at the deuotion of Edward the third,354,b 60. Interdicted,358,a 10. Diuerſe rodes made thereinto by the Engliſh, and great ſpoile done, 454,b 60. Inuaded by the biſhop of Norwich, 442, b 60; a great part drowned by an exundation, 34, a 60. ¶ Sée Erle of Leiceſter, & League.
Flatterie impudent of ſir Iohn Buſhie to king Richard the ſecond, 490,b 60. Vſed in a ſermon: note, 725, b 40 Notable, 727, b 50, 60, 728,a 10,&c. ¶Sée Diſſumulation.
Fléetwood recorder of London made ſargent at law. ¶Sée Sargents at law.
Fleming biſhop of Lincolne, founder of Lincolne college in Oxford, 604,a 20
Fleming knight maiſter of the ordinance, 991,b 50
Fleming lord required to come to parlée with the generall, 1217,b 20. His diſhonorable dealing,30. His double dealing,1218,a 10. His letter to ſir George Carewe, 1218,a 60
Flemings thréeſcore thouſand came to the aid of the earle of Henault,359,a 10. Releaſed of debts and interdiction,360, a 50. Beſiege Aire, and doo much miſchéefe the French 377, a 60. Doo what they might to indamage the French in behalfe of Engliſh,376, b 20. Their hearts alienated from the obedience of their erle,353,b 50. Swere fealtie to Edward the third, 357,a 40. Vanquiſhed by the earle of Arthois, 303, a 60. Set vpon the Engliſhmen in their lodgings,306,b 10. Baniſhed the land, 313, b 50. Their fléete looſeth the victorie to the Engliſh nauie, 454,b 20. Kill an Engliſh herald of armes, 443, a 10. Diſcomfited by the Engliſhmen,443,a 40. Sent home into Flanders,92,b 10. Their enuie,64,a 30. Comming ouer into England, haue places appointed them to inhabit,34,a 60. Motion to haue Edward the third take vpon him the title to the crowne of France,356,b 10. Slaine through their owne couetouſnes, 1151,a 20
Flies in Februarie the number ſtrange,1260, a 60. Manie ſéene in a yeare, a prognoſtication naturall of a plague like to follow, 1050,b 30
Flint caſtell built, 279,b 50
Flix, great death thereby in the Engliſh hoſt, 550, b 50. By vnwoonted diet, and thereupon death,813,b 10. Gotten by exceſſiue eating of frutes, 476, b 10. Cauſing a great death, 537,a 20
Flodden field, 826,a 40,&c. 427, a 10,&c,428,a 10,&c.
Floren. ¶Sée Coine.
Flouds and high waters dooing much hurt, 1129, b 50. Foretold by aſtronomie, but falling out falſe, 882, b 20. Drowning the mariſhes on Eſſex and Kent ſide,&c, 914, b 40. That hindered a great and bloudie conflict,943, a 30. That did much hurt, 480, b 60. In the riuer of Thames, 1207, a 50. High by means of a great thaw, 1208, a 60. High that did much hurt, 1310,b 30. Thrée without ebbe betwéene,540,a 50. High that drowned weſtminſter hall,1271,b 50. Great and violent,161,a 10,355,b 10. That did great hurt,220,b 50. In the night, 284, a 30. ¶Sée Bridges, and Riuers.
Floure delices thrée, and how they come annexed vnto the armes of England, 15,a 10
Fluſhingers trouble the Engliſh paſſengers, 1262,b 40,50
Folkmote at Paules, 262,a 20, 263,a 30,264,a 30
Follie of a couper, 819,b 60
Forfeits,312,b 60. For breaking peace concluded betwixt Richard the firſt, and the French king,148,b 50.¶Sée Fines.
Forgerie of william Rufus to get monie, 20,b 10
Forgetfulnes of dutie in yoong men aduanced to dignitie,76,

Forgiue=

ſuits,366,b 60. Slaine,599, b 30. Of Shrewſburies great diligence, policie and and true ſeruice againſt the northerne rebelles, 942,a 30. His loialtie, what he ſaid to them that talked lewdlie of him, prouided of ill ſouldiors, his oth in preſence of the people neceſſarie, 942, a 30,60,b 10,30,50. Generall of an armie againſt the Scots and French,994,b 60. Commeth to Hadington, and of his doings againſt the enimie, 995, a 10,20,60,b 10,&c. Of Southampton deceaſeth, 1062,b 20. Of Suffolke in great fauor with K. Richard the ſecond: note, 454, a 40. Put to his ſhifts and diſtreſſed, 790, a 60,b 10. Greeuouſlie charged by the parlement houſe for ſundrie offenſes,453, a 60. Flieth ouer into Calis diſguiſed : note, 460, b 30. Sudden death, 440, a 10. Of Surreie entreth Scotland, defacing caſtelles and towers,his valiant heart, reioiſing at his hap likelie to fight hand to hand with the king of Scots, ambaſſadors to treat a peace betwene both nations,783,a 20,40. High treaſuror of England, 781,b 60. Sent with a great power againſt the northerne rebels, 769,b 60. Valiant determination to incounter the Scots, the ordering of his armie,828 a 10,20. And his ſonne the lord admerall with ioined powers againſt the Scots,825, b 50,60. Their meſſage to the king of Scots,826,a 60,b 10. They remoue their camps to and fro as occaſion moueth 827,b 20,50. High admerall, his attire at the receiuing of the French kings ambaſſadors,848,a 40. His ſeruice againſt certein rebels,855,b 50 High admerall and his companie come vnto Hampton court,873, b 60. Entereth Scotland,306,b 60. His maner of winning Morleis in Britaine,he maketh knights 874,a 30, 40. Sent with an armie to inuade France,commeth with his power to Calis,returneth into England, 875,a 10,60, b 10. Inuadeth Scotland and preuaileth againſt them,881,a 60,b 10,&c. And Southampton ſent to Calis,953,a 40. Committed to the Tower notwithſtanding his ſubmiſſion, 759,b 50. Beheaded,976,b 40,50. Of Suſſex maketh a iornie into Scotland, his valorous ſeruice,1222,a 40,&c. Inuadeth Scotland,1213,b 60. Vieweth Hume caſtell, 1214, a 40. Went againſt the rebelles in the north,1212,b 10. Gentle to ladie Eliſabeth, 1153,a 50, Viſiteth madam de Parma, 1210,a 60. His iornies during his abode beyond ſeas,b 10. Interteined of the emperor,20. Saluted of the duke of Auſtria, 40. Departeth from Vienna,60. Deceaſeth, 1353,b 50. His honorable funerall,60,1354,a 10. ¶ See Fitzwater. Of ſaint Giles accorded with king Henrie the ſecond,85,a 20. Otherwiſe Tholouze, 67,b 30. Of ſaint Paule reuolteth to the French,619,b 10. Confedered with the duke of Burgognie, 694,a 30. His counſell vnto king Henrie the firſt,488,a 10 Came out of France to ſee a chalenge performed at Couentrie, 495, a 20. Aſſalteth the caſtell of Guiſnes, 538,b 40. His fortune againſt the Engliſhmen,538,b 40. Landed in the Ile of wight,he maketh ſpoile,521,a 60. Deceaſeth, 608,b 50

Erle of Tholouze lands inuaded by earle Richard, 112, a 60

Erle of warwike made gouernor of king Henrie the ſixt, 596,a 50. And others ſent to the generall councell, 547,a 50,60. Denieth that euer he acknowledged himſelfe guiltie of treaſon,513,a 30. Aſſalted,648, b 20. Lord admerall and lieutenant of Calis, he ſcowreth the ſeas and taketh a rich priſe,648,a 10, &c. Regent of France,616,a 20. His entrance thereinto,a 60. Anſwer to the duke of Clarence his meſſage, 682,b 10. And Edward the fourth incounter, his manfull courage,684, a 10,&c: b 40. He is ſlaine, 685,a 10. Followeth king Edward the fourth to foile him, 683,b 40. And the duke of Clarence take the ſeas, he is kept out of Calis, landed at Diepe,674, a 50,b 30. The loue which the people bore vnto him, 675, a 40. In a chaſe becauſe of king Edward the fourths deliuerie, 673,b 30. In Couentrie,prouoked to fight by king Edward the fourth,681,a 10. His houſekeeping, inſtituted gouernor of the realme, his badge worne in euerie mans cap: note,678, a 30,40,b 40. Diſcourageth king Edward the fourth, and maketh him flie for feare out of England, 675,a 60,b 10,&c, His ſtandard, what enſigne it bore, 673,a 10. The fruits of his malice,673,a 30. Beareth a continuall grudge vnto king Edward the fourth, his perſuaſions to his two brethren againſt him,670,b 20,50,671, b 10,&c: b 50. Offended with king Edward the fourths marriage, 668,a 60. He keepeth his greefe ſecret, b 20. Sent ouer into France about K. Edward the fourths marriage,667, b 60. His corage, a truſtie freend to king Edward the fourth, 664,a 60 b 10. The right one, order taken for the ſhewing of him abrode,765,b 30. Had in feare & ielouſie in forren regions, 787, b 60. Shewed openlie in proceſſion,766, a 10. His manlie corage,982,a 50. His preſence greatlie incorageth the Engliſh ſouldiors, 987,a 10, His requeſt and meſſage to the erle of Huntleie, 984,a 20. Arreigned of treaſon, Confeſſeth it, ſubmitteth himſelfe, is pardoned,492, a 50,60,b 10. In higheſt authoritie,1061,b 10. Commended, he is ſlaine, 727,a 60. Sent againſt the rebelles in the north, 1212, b 40. Commended,1205,a 50. Deceaſeth,404,b 20. His valiantneſſe,1204,a 60, Shot thorough the thigh with an harquebuſe,b 50. Noble men of France ſent vnto him from the admerall about conference,1199 b 30. Landeth at Newhauen,1196,a 20. An oth taken by him and his officers 30. He and the Rheingraue talke togither,b 10. He appointed to go againſt Norfolke rebels,1034,b 30. Commeth to Cambridge,b 40. He ſendeth an herald at armes to the rebels offering pardon, &c: 1036,a 10,&c. Counſell giuen him to abandon Norwich, goeth forth to giue the enimies battell, 1038, a 60, b 70. The rebels yeeld to him, & ſheweth them mercie, 1039, b 20,Counterfet of warwike ¶ See Simenell. Of wiltſhire and others ſpoile Newberie,he ſaileth ouer ſeas,653 b 20,30. The duke of Buckinghams brother 803,b 20. Of winchester beſieged by his owne tenants, 240,b 10. Reprochfullie executed,339,a 50. Of worceſter gouernor to the prince ſlippeth from him, 522,b 30. And others beheaded, 523,b 60

Erles of Cheſter the true and famous genealogie,221,a 10 Tooke end in Iohn Scot, 221,a 10. Of Leiceſter from the firſt to the laſt by ſucceſſion,ſet downe in a collection, 1419,a 40,&c: vnto 1424,b 10. Of Richmond line that firſt bare their title of honor of the ſaid caſtle and towne, 7,b 20

Erles created,332,a 20,568 a 60 347. b 60. 892, a 50.912 b 50. And dukes created,395,b 50. And barons, 960, a 20. And lords,1061,a 40, 1228, a 60,b 10. At a parlement, 353,a 30. Three taken and beheaded, 183,b 10

Erledome of March purchaſed, 102,a 50.

Erminfred biſhop of Sion or Sitten a cheefe commiſſioner from pope Alexander, 8,b 60.

Ermingard vicount Beaumonts daughter married to william king of Scots, 110, a 60

Erthquake,217,b 50. In Kent, &c: 1313,a 10. Ouer all England, 109, a 40. Generall in England.11,b 50. In H. the firſts time,39,b 10. Senſible and viſible,44,b 40. That did much hurt, 440,b 40. In the fourteenth of duke williams reigne,14, a 30. Vniuerſall how frightfull and hurtfull, 1311,a 20. &c: That ouerthrew buildings, 239, b 20. At ſaint Albons counted ſtrange, and whie, 243,a 60. That ouerthrew houſes, 241, a 60. Generall, did much hurt,278,a 30. In diuerſe places of England,1206,a 20,30 In ſundrie places of England, and what harme was thereby done,1260, b 10. After a thunder,204,b with lightening and thunder, &c: 277,b 40: note,

Erth lifted vp it ſelfe like a huge towre,102, b 60. Remooued in Dorſetſhire, 1353, a 20. And trees ſonke and ſwallowed vp in Kent: note, 1413, b 20,30. Strangelie mouing in the countie of Hereford, 1224,b 10

Eſcuage demanded: note,213,a 20. Granted,233,b 40, 248, a 40,262,a 10. Paid,203, a 60. Gathered, twentie ſhillings of euerie knights fee, 230, b 50. Termed the great, 229, a 50

Eſpeke walter, the firſt that brought the order of white monks into England,26,a 60

Eſſexmen beginers of a ſhrewd rebellion,429,b 60. They proſecute it, 430, &c.

Eſter daie fell at the higheſt, namelie on ſaint Marks daie 167,a 60

Eſterlings. ¶ See Riot.

Eſtouteuille Robert taken priſoner. 33,a 40

Euill Maie daie. ¶ See Rebellion of Lincolne.

Euers, conſtable of Douer caſtell,&c,480, a 20. Lord that now liueth, his noble anceſtrie 412,b 50. Knight his good ſeruice in the North, 942, b 30. His proweſſe and valiant ſeruice,962, b 30. Slaine, 968,a 60

Eureux citie yeelded vnto the Frenchmen,386,b 50. Taken by treaſon, 619, b 60

Euſtace earle of Bullongne, againſt william Rufus, 17, b 60. Sonne to king Stephan duke of Normandie,48,a 40. Angrie with his father, 60,a 60. He dieth ¶ See Monke.

Exactions cauſe commotions, 626,b 10. Great, 145, a 40. with ſhifts of extortion practiſed, 146, a 10. New and ſtrange: note,496,a 20. Intollerable, 239,b 10. ¶ See Couetouſnes, Subſidies,&c. Taxes, Tenths, and Tributes.

Example euill how it preuaileth,430,a 60. Of great ones what it doth for imitation, 845,b 60

Execution without iudgement vpon noblemen,673,a 30,693, a 50. Of the duke of Buckingham without arreignment or iudgement, 744,b 10

Exceſter rebelled againſt duke william,and is ſubdued, 6, b 10. Preſerued from fier,784, a 10. Beſieged,the loialtie of the citizens,1002, b 40, 60. Citie deſcribed,with the ſundrie aſſaults of the ſame,1007 b 10, 1008, 1009, 1010, 1011, 1012,1013,1014. Commended for loue and loiall ſeruice to the king and ſtate: note,1047 b 40,50. Noble & true,1048, a 10. Great practiſes to procure the citizens thereof to ioine with the Deuonſhire rebels: note, 1020, a 30, &c. The antiquitie, foundation, and building of the cathedrall church of ſaint Peters in Exceſter,1027,a 20,&c. ¶ See Clergie, Edward the fourth, and Richard the third.

Excommunication denounced againſt the rebellious barons in king Iohns time,188,b 60 Of Romiſh vſurers, and the excommunicator called to his anſwer,219,b 10. A dart that made both king and people to quaile,223,b 60. Of preeſt for incontinencie,242,a 60. And ſuſpenſion threatned againſt the Engliſh clergie,239,a 40. Thretned to ſuch as aſſiſted king Iohn, 181, a 50. Of Lewis the French kings ſonne by name,192,a 20. By name and in particular,190,a 20, 10. Of king John when it was to be releaſed,178,b 40. Of Guie de Montfort, 277, a 40. Of duke Leopald for impriſoning of Richard the fourth,147.a 50. Extended to the dead & buried: note,392, a 10. Flaſhed and thundered out againſt the wicleuiſts: note,484,a 10,&c: Threatened againſt attempters of tumults,205,b 60. The feare thereof conſtreined a contribution,211,a 10. Of pope Sixtus quintus eſtéemed as nothing: note,1401, a 40,&c: ¶Sée Legats, Popes, and Préeſts.

Excheker, and the officers vnto the ſame by whome inſtituted, 8, a 60. Remoued from weſtminſter to Northhampton,173,a 10. It and the kings bench remoued vnto Shrewesburie, 278,b 10.

Excuſe of Edward the firſt to auoid an inconuenience, 308,a 60. Of the clergie to be frée from ſubſidies,&c: 301, b 40. ¶Sée Couetouſneſſe.

Exham field. ¶Sée Battell.

Exton knight a murtherer of king Richard the ſecond 517, a 10. His too late repentance and ſorrow. a 20. Extortion of william Rufus made him euill ſpoken of amongeſt his ſubiects,23,b 10. An ordinance againſt it, 260, b 10. ¶Sée Oppreſſion &, Vſurie.

F.

Factions of Yorke and Lancaſter vnpoſſible to be mingled without danger of diſcord, 647,a 40

Faire kept at weſtminſter at ſaint Edwards tide,241,a 30 Fiftéene daies togither, 247, a 20. Of Lewis the [illegible] kings ſonne in deriſion, 200, b 10. At Briſtow robbed,263, b 50

Faleiſe beſéeged and rendered vp to king Henrie the fift,561 b 10,60. ¶Sée Arbet.

Falſhood betwixt brethren, 32,a 60

Familie of loue, fiue of that ſect ſtood at Paules croſſe, 1261,b 30. Proclamation againſt them: note, 1314,a 60,b 10.

Famine extreme within Rone, 566,b 20. Richard the ſecond died therof,516,b 60. Suffred, 68,b 20. The cauſe whie Rone was ſurrendred,167,b 60. Refuſed, and death by the ſword choſen, 166,a 20. The puniſhment of witchcraft, 204,a 10. Lamentable,323,b 40. ¶Sée Peſtilence.

Farrer an haberdaſher of London a ſore enimie to the ladie Eliſabeth, 1159,b 20,30,&c:

Faſt generall proclamed and deuoutlie obſerued, 1427,b 50

Faſts & proceſſions vſed, 260 a 10

Fauour. ¶Sée People.

Fecknam. ¶Sée Abbat.

Fées. ¶Sée Annuities.

Feare cauſeth want of ſpéech, 659,b 30. Made king Edward the fourth forſake his kingdome, 675,a 60, b 10. What it forceth men vnto,293 a 20. Cauſeth reſtitution of wrongfull deteined townes, 311,b 20. Forceth agréement: note, 114,b 20. Among the people aſſembled at the duke of Summerſets execution, 1068,a 50,b 10. ¶Sée Suſpicion.

Ferguſa a Lombard betraieth the duke of Clarence, 580,a 10

Felton ¶Sée Bull ſeditious.

Ferdinando archduke of Auſtrich made knight of the garter, 882,a 60

Ferrers lord of miſrule at a Chriſtmas at the court, his behauiour and port, 1067,a 60,b 10,&c:

Ferrers knight william taken priſoner, 33,a 40

Ferrers a traitor. ¶Sée Treaſon.

Feſcampe william, his deuiſes of a plaine ſong whereabout was ſtrife, 13,b 30

Feaſt rare and roiall, 1332,a 60 At quéene Katharins coronation, 579,a 10,&c: Sumptu-and full of rare deuiſes,1434, a 30

Fetherſton, alias Conſtable. ¶Sée Counterfet of king Edward the ſixt.

Feuerſham abbeie by whome founded, 58,a 20

Fiftéenth granted vnto king Henrie the third by the temporaltie,213,a 10. Of the ſixt penie after the rate of mens goods,312,b 20. Of all the moueables to be found within the realme,207,a 30. Thrée granted, 402, a 60. ¶Sée Subſidie.

Fight among ſparows,397,b 50

Finch knight drowned, 1202, b 10

Fine for miſdemeanor,704,a 60 Of fiue thouſand markes paid to king Henrie the third by the Londoners, 208,b 40. For murther,122,b 30. Of a kéeper for a priſoners eſcape, 152,a 20

Fines ſet on priſoners for their ranſoms,144,a 50. Paid for licence to exerciſe turnements, 145, b 60. Set on the nobles by king John for not aiding him againſt the French king, 167, a 20. For not comming to the church,1322. Of prieſts that had wiues, 26,a 30. Extreme leuied vpon the clergie: note, 201,b 60, 202, a 10. Set on the maior of London and the ſhiriffes,256,b 30: note. Set on ſhiriffes heads, 254, a 60. Of foure hundred pounds ſet vpon aldermens heads of London by king Henrie the ſeuenth, 795,b 60,796,a 10. Seſſed vpon them; that fauored the Corniſh rebels,785, a 10. ¶Sée Eſcuage, Forfeits, and Nobilitie.

Fire burſteth out of the earth, 44,b 40. It & the ſword Gods angrie angels, 1001,b 10

Fiſh monſtrous taken in Norfolke,1355,b 60. Of twentie yards long,&c: note, 1259,b 30. Driuen to the Engliſh ſhore,1206,a 40. Like vnto a man, 168,a 10

Fiſhes [illegible] the ſea fight, 225,b 60 115, a 10. Monſtrous at Downam bridge in Suffolke 1211,a 50. In weſtminſter hall after the fall of an high floud, 1271,b 50.

Fiſhmongers bound to find foure ſcholers at the vniuerſities,&c: note,792,b 10. Sore trobled by the maior of London,440,b 30. An act againſt them within the citie of London,441,a 50. The ſtatute againſt them repeled and they reſtored to their liberties,442 a 60. Benefited by iuſtice Randolph, 1354,a 40,50.

Fitzalan william a conſpirator 49,a 10

Fitzarnulfe a Londoner procureth the citizens to reuenge their cauſe by rebellion, he is apprehended and executed, 204,a 40

Fitzbaldrike ſhiriffe of Yorke, 10,a 10

Fitzempreſſe Henrie, his returne into England 58, a 20. and is knighted, 40

Fitzfergus Gilbert killed his brother: note, 98,b 40

Fitzgeffreie chamberleine vnto king Richard the firſt, 128,a 60. His death, b 60

Fitzhammon Robert his tale to william Rufus, 26,b 20

Fitziohn Euſtace a conſpirator,49,a 10. Slaine, 67,a 10

Fitzleo Peter an vſurping pope, 44,a 50

Fitzmiles Roger. ¶Sée Erle.

Fitzmoris his miſerable end, 1365,b 60

Fitzoſbert his vnnaturall ingratitude, and complaint to K. Richard the firſt againſt the citie of London, 149,a 40. Whie he ware his long beard, his oration to the people, he is called before the archbiſhop of Canturburie lord chéefe iuſtice & preſident of the realme, he flieth into the church of ſaint Marie Bow, he is attached, his concubines, 149, all. Is executed, the archbiſhop of Canturburie euill ſpoken of for his death, an old whoremonger and new ſaint 150,a 10,20

Fitzoſborne william earle of Hereford, &c: gouernor of England in duke williams abſence, 5,a 10

Fitzroie Oliuer ſonne to king John, 202,a 20

Fitzſcrope Richard in armes againſt Edrike the rebell,5, a 10

Fitzwalter lord deceaſeth in Spaine,450,b 10. Appealeth the duke of Aumerle of treaſon,512,a 60. He is mainpriſed,513,b 60. Earle of Suſſex, his ſeruice againſt the Scots, he is in great danger: note, 986,a 20

Fitzwilliams recorder of London his wiſedome in a dangerous caſe, 730,b 30

Flanders ſpoiled by the duke of Glouceſter, 614,b 60. Wholie at the deuotion of Edward the third,354,b 60. Interdicted,358,a 10. Diuerſe rodes made thereinto by the Engliſh, and great ſpoile done, 454,b 60. Inuaded by the biſhop of Norwich, 442, b 60; a great part drowned by an exundation, 34, a 60. ¶Sée Erle of Leiceſter, & League.

Flatterie impudent of ſir John Buſhie to king Richard the ſecond, 490,b 60. Vſed in a ſermon: note,725, b 40 Notable,727, b 50, 60, 728,a 10,&c. ¶Sée Diſſimulation.

Fléetwood recorder of London made ſargent at law. ¶Sée Sargents at law.

Fleming biſhop of Lincolne, founder of Lincolne college in Oxford, 604,a 20

Fleming knight maiſter of the ordinance, 991,b 50

Fleming lord required to come to parlée with the generall, 1217,b 20. His diſhonorable dealing,30. His double dealing,1218,a 10. His letter to ſir George Careie, 1218,a 60

Flemings thréeſcore thouſand came to the aid of the earle of Henault,359,a 10. Releaſed of debts and interdiction,360, a 50. Beſiege Aire, and doo much miſchéefe the French 377, a 60. Doo what they might to indamage the French in behalfe of Engliſh,376,b 20. Their hearts alienated from the obedience of their erle,353,b 50. Sweare fealtie to Edward the third, 357,a 40. Vanquiſhed by the earle of Arthois, 303, a 60. Set vpon the Engliſhmen in their lodgings,306,b 10. Baniſhed the land, 313, b 50. Their fléete looſeth the victorie to the Engliſh nauie, 454,b 20. Kill an Engliſh herald of armes,443, a 10. Diſcomfited by the Engliſhmen,443,a 40. Sent home into Flanders,92,b 10. Their enuie,64,a 30. Comming ouer into England, haue places appointed them to inhabit,34,a 60. Motion to haue Edward the third take vpon him the title to the crowne of France,356,b 10. Slaine through their owne couetouſnes, 1151,a 20

Flies in Februarie the number ſtrange,1260,a 60. Manie ſéene in a yeare, a prognoſtication naturall of a plague like to follow, 1050,b 30

Flint caſtell built, 279,b 50

Flix, great death thereby in the Engliſh hoſt, 550, b 50. By vnwonted diet, and therevpon death,813,b 10. Gotten by exceſſiue eating of frutes, 476, b 10. Cauſing a great death, 537,a 20

Flodden field, 826,a 40,&c. 427, a 10,&c,428,a 10,&c.

Floren. ¶Sée Coine.

Flouds and high waters dooing much hurt, 1129, b 50. Foretold by aſtronomie, but falling out falſe, 882, b 20. Drowning the mariſhes on Eſſex and Kent ſide,&c, 914, b 40. That hindered a great and bloudie conflict,943, a 30. That did much hurt, 480, b 60. In the riuer of Thames, 1207, a 50. High by meanes of a great thaw, 1208, a 60. High that did much hurt, 1310,b 30. Thrée without ebbe betwéene,540,a 50. High that drowned weſtminſter hall,1271,b 50. Great and violent,161,a 10,355,b 10. That did great hurt,220,b 50. In the night,284, a 30. ¶Sée Bridges, and Riuers.

Floure delices thrée, and how they come annexed vnto the armes of England, 15, a 10

Fluſhingers trouble the Engliſh paſſengers, 1262,b 40,50

Folkmote at Paules,262,a 20, 263,a 30,264,a 30

Follie of a couper, 819,b 60

Forfeits,312,b 60. For breaking peace concluded betwixt Richard the firſt, and the French king,148,b 50. ¶Sée Fines.

Forgerie of william Rufus to get monie, 20,b 10

Forgetfulnes of dutie in yoong men aduanced to dignitie,76,

Forgiue=

Forgiueneſſe of an enimie, a notable example, 156,a30
Forreſt called New forreſt, and what waſte & deſolation was made to make it, 14, a30. Of Shirewood pleaſed king Richard the firſt verie greatlie,142,b10. ¶See Frier.
Forreſts to be ſeuered the new from the old, 207,a50. The perambulations of them appointed to biſhops, 308,b30. Seized into duke W. hands, 14,a20. Their gouernement diuided,108,a30. And ordinances for them, 153,b50. King Johns commandement againſt the white moonks concerning them, 162,a40
Forſter doctor of phyſicke firſt reader of ſurgerie lecture in London,1349,a20,30,&c: his faithfull and freendlie epitaph vpon doctor Caldwell deceaſed, 1370,a20
Forſwearing. ¶See Periurie.
Forteſcue, and the reaſon of the name, 749,b30
Fortreſſe. ¶See Caſtell.
Fortune. ¶See walden.
Fouks de Brent a man of great ſtomach and raſhneſſe, 202,a10. An enimie to reſt and quietneſſe, 206,a40. His fowle end.206,b40. ¶See Erle.
Founteine flowing with blood, 23,b20
Foules tame leaue houſes, and waxing wild get them to the woods,14,a60,b10. wild forbidden to be taken, 173,a10
Foulgier Rafe a valiant man, aſſiſtant to prince Henries rebellions, 886,b60. Taken by ſir Francis ſurnamed the Arragonois, 628,b60
Fox, his practiſe to deliuer certeine chriſtians from the Turks, 1310,b20
Foxleie ſlept more than foureteene dais & as many nights: note, 972,b20
Fraie at Oxford betwixt legat Othos men and the ſcholers, 222,a20. Betwixt the Engliſh archers and the Henniers,347,a20. In ſaint Dunſtans church in the eaſt,562,a20. Neere Clerknwell where the maior of London,&c: was reſiſted,641,b10. In Fleetſtreet betweene the ſtreetdwellers and gentlemen of courts,646,b60: note. Betweene Spaniards and Engliſhmen about whores,1126 b60. On Cliſt heath two miles from Exceſter,644, a30. In London againſt the maior, 636,a20. Great by night in Fleetſtreet,623,a30. whereby inſued murther and execution: note, 954, a20, &c: Betweene the Almans of king Henrie the eights camp and the Engliſhmen, 821, a60. Betweene the Engliſhmen and the townſmen of Sancta Maria, 813, b60. Betweene the Engliſh and towneſmen of Calis vpon a ſmall occaſion,810,a10. Betweene goldſmiths & tailors of London,274,a50. Betwixt the monks & citizens of Norwich,275, b60. Betwixt the welſh and Engliſh, 307,a60
France interdicted by the popes legat,160, a60. At diuiſion in it ſelfe by ciuill warres, 1195, a20. The troubles thereof touch moſt the Q. of England,1195,b30. Diſquieted with two factions, 537,a50,60,b10,&c: Inuaded by duke william, and what waſt he made there by fire,&c: 14,b30. The iornie of the Engliſh armie through it, 426, a60. Their whole puiſſance vanquiſhed by the Engliſh archers,373,a60: note and read the order and proceeding of that battell two pages before. The frontiers thereof full of men of warre,357,b50. And how king Edward the third tooke vpon him the name of king thereof,356,b30. And by what right he claimed it, 40, &c:357,a10,20,&c: And great preparation made in England for wars againſt it, 547, a60. Ciuill diſcord amongeſt the nobles thereof, 557,a60: The oth of the three eſtates, 578,a30. Henrie the fift taketh vpon him to be regent there, 578, a50. And what townes and caſtelles king Henrie the fift got. ¶See the hiſtorie of king Henrie the fift,563,564,565. All loſt there through ciuill diſcord at home 636,b30,&c:60. The Engliſh loſe all there,629,b30. The duchie of Britaine incorporated vnto it,769, b10. The conſtable thereof a deepe diſſembler,695,a50. His offer to king Edward the fourth,698 a40. All aſlant in whoſe time, 748,b60,749,a10. It is concluded in parlement that king Henrie the eight ſhould perſonallie inuade it, 815, b50. An armie leuied to inuade it, three battels appointed with their ſeuerall lieutenants,963 b30,40,&c: Afflicted by the Engliſhmen and their aids, 879,a10,&c: It is agreed among the lords of England to annoie and infeſt it,1061,b30
Francis knight ſlaine in Deuonſhire rebellion,1024,a20, 60
Francis de Valois, &c. ¶See Duke of Alanſon.
Fratricide, 1270, a10. ¶See Murther.
Frederike abbat of ſaint Albons a rich & a puiſſant prelat: note, 9,b60,10,a10
Frederike the emperor alied to king Henrie the third, 219,a60. ¶See pope Alexander.
Freendſhip,395,and 394. ¶See Peace. Interteined by affinitie,586,a40. Feigned of duke william of Aquitane,67 b20. Found in a forren countrie, 6, a30. Betweene the erle of Cornwall and the erle of Penbroke,209,a60. Sold for gifts and bribes: note,361 b50
Freemen of London,120, a20
Free ſchoole at wuluerhampton 796,a10. ¶See Schoole.
French king maketh warre againſt the duke of Normandie, 58,b60. Open warres proclamed againſt him by Q. Marie,1133, b10, 20, &c: His ſon trauelleth in vaine to take Douer,193,a30. Sendeth to the pope, commeth vnto Calis, taketh the ſea, landeth in Kent, the lords do him homage,191,b10,&c: Goeth to viſit Calis,1141,b20. His ſonne mainteineth his pretended title to the crowne of England, 191,a50. Alleadgeth that king John is not lawfull king of England,191 a20. His ſonne came to fight with king John, 183, a60. Returneth into France,179, b40. Burneth his ſhips,180 a20. Inuadeth Flanders, 179,a10. Diſpleaſed for the reconciliation of king John with the pope, he meaneth to proceed in his iornie againſt England,178,b50, 60. Prepareth to inuade England, 176, b20. winneth diuerſe things from the king of England,169,b40. will not accord to peace with king John 166,b30,40. Inuadeth Normandie,160,a10. Demands in a treatie of peace,160, b20 Maketh warre againſt king John, 164, a60. Inuadeth Normandie,166,b10. winneth towns from king John, 167,b10. Almoſt drowned being purſued by king Richard the firſt,153,b10. Purſued by king Richard the firſt in danger of drowning,148,a40 Raiſeth his ſiege from Verneuill, 144, b20. Inuadeth Normandie, 141,b30. His and earle Johns offers to haue king Richard the firſt kept ſtill in priſon, 141, a20. His euill dealing and promiſe breaking with king Richard the firſt,133, b60. Entereth Giſors,151,b60. Confeſſeth earle John to vſurpe againſt his brother king Richard the firſt,137,b50. Setteth from Meſſina towards the holie land, 127, a40. Maketh an ouerture for peace, he leaueth his ſeege,93,b50. Soweth ſedition betweene Henrie the father and Henrie the ſonne, 84,a30. Commeth a madding to viſit Beckets toome, 103, a60. Entereth the towne of Mauns and maketh ſpoile, 114,a20. Hideth his head at the arriuall of Henrie the ſecond,112,b30, 40. His ſubiects arreſted in Normandie, 110,b20. Troubled with a frenſie,519,a50,60. Picketh a quarrell againſt England, 551,a30. Inueſted with the order of the garter, 1382,a10. Francis the great his court a vniuerſitie: note,1343,a60 b10. Deceaſeth, an obſequie for him in Paules, 1259,b50. Commeth to the camp before Newhauen,1205,a60. Deceaſeth, an obſequie kept for him, the cheefe mourners,1185 a40,50. Procureth a peace betwene duke Robert and william Rufus,19,a30. His policie againſt the Engliſh,426, b50. For monie raiſeth his ſeege, and forbeareth to aid duke Robert,19,a20. Reſtoreth townes in Gaſcoigne to king Edward for feare,311,b20. with an huge armie driueth the Engliſh out of Flanders,444,a60. The order of ſeruice at his table, 487,a20, 30. Giueth his daughter to king Richard in marriage, 487,a10. His priuie practiſes diſcloſed by the popes nuntio,475,a10. Two of his ſhips taken with a great priſe in them,453,b40. Aideth the Scots againſt the Engliſh, 447,a20. Inuadeth Flanders,303, a50. His vniuſt dealing, he renounceth what he had ſaid,292,a40. Sendeth out a fleet againſt England, 295,a50. Deceaſeth,427,a10. ¶See Normandie, & Philip. Arbitrateth a matter betwixt Henrie the third and his nobles, and giueth ſentence againſt the barons, 265, b60. Requeſted by the pope to make warre againſt England, refuſeth ſo to doo, 238,a20. His brother named Charles made earle of Prouance,238, a50. Inuadeth the earle of Marches lands, 229,b30. To whom the earle of Britaine ſubmitteth himſelfe,219,a20. His carriages diſtreſſed by the earls of Britaine & Cheſter,214,a40 Deceaſeth,205,a60. His ſonnes armie diſcomfited, and his gentlemen taken priſoners, 200,a60. Anſwer to Henrie the third, requiring reſtitution of his right,203,b10. Aſſembleth an armie, commeth to Calis, his lords requeſt to Edward the third, he returneth into Rone, 377, a40,60. b30,60. Licenced to depart, goeth ouer to Calis,394,b10 His oth of peace, hoſtages deliuered for him, priſoner in England foure yeares,395,a10. Priſoner, & comforted by the prince, whom he thanketh for his bountie, he is brought ouer into England,390,a30, b20,60. He is ſorowfull, he is remooued to windſore, 391, a10,40. Remooued from the caſtell of Hertford to Somerton, his allowance,392,a60. His ranſome,394,a60. Followeth the prince of wales, 387,b40. His preſumptuous demands,388,b10. Commeth to giue the duke of Lancaſter battell,386,b60. Taken priſoner,389, b40. Departeth out of the field by conſtraint: note,372,b40. His great armie, and the ſeruice doone by them,360,a10. Prepareth a great nauie againſt Flanders,358,a40. Not of ſound memorie,557,b10. Conſulteth how to deale with the Engliſhmen, ſendeth defiance to Henrie the fift, the number of his armie, 552, a40,&c. Deceaſeth,584,a60. Turneth the ciuill diſſention of England to his aduantage: note,636,a30,&c. Practiſeth with a witch,602,a20 Armed, fled in the night, 602, a60. Deceaſeth,795,b40,50. Deſcribed both for perſon and qualitie,775,b40. Diſſimulation, a motion for a treatie of peace with the Engliſh,774,b40,60. Requeſt for aid againſt the duke of Britaine,768,a20. Feedeth Edward the fourth with faire words and promiſes,704, b30. Large offers to Edward the fourth,704,a20. Buieth peace with tribute of Edward the fourth: note,700,b10. Nothing preciſe in outward ſhewes of honor, 695, b20. His ſpeech to the Engliſh herald that gaue him defiance,694,b60, 695, a10, &c. Diſſimulation vpon purpoſe and ill meaning, 698, a10. Promiſeth the erle of Richmond aſſiſtance to recouer the crowne,748,b50,60. His beneuolence vnto the earle of Rich-

Richmond,745,a40. Francis the firſt comes to the crowne, his praiſeworthie properties, 836, a60. His roiall ornaments at an interuiew, the deſcription of his perſon, his rich araie at a iuſts,858, a50, 60,b50. His and his partners atture at a chalenge,859, a60. His furniture and deuiſe vpon his ornaments, 860,a40. Afflicted with forren power on all ſides,965,a30,&c. An enimie to all chriſtian princes, his power againſt king Henrie the eight and the emperor, he retireth backe with his armie,960. His children deliuered when the ranſome of their father was paid,914, a20, 40. His ſitting in his roialties with his great eſtates about him,&c: with an oration made to the aſſemblie, 904,a30,40,&c: b40. His oration before an honorable aſſemblie at Paris wholie concerning the emperor, and ſauoring of malcontentment, 902,b60. A writing from him directed to the emperor,903,b20. Receiueth the order of the garter, 898,b20. With the viceroie imbarked, not a little glad of his libertie, not verie haſtie to ratifie the accord, complaineth of the emperor to the popes ambaſſadors,890 a30,50,b10,30.50. His roialtie reſtreined,889,a20. The manner of his deliuerie out of priſon,990,a10. Taken priſoner, whie he deſired to fight in plaine field, the manner how he was vanquiſhed and taken, 884,a40, 60,b30,50. Led priſoner to the rocke of Paſqueton, his letter to his mother the regent of France, 885, a50, b30. Marrieth the emperor Charles his ſiſter, 889,b40. Led priſo[illegible] into Spaine, extremelie ſicke in the caſtell of Madrill, 887, a50,b60. In durance, is viſited by the emperor, his ſiſter the ladie Alanſon treateth for him, he is carefull ouer the crowne of France, a treatie touching his deliuerie, 888,a 20, 50, 60, b20. He and king Henrie the eight at variance: note, 872,a60,b10, &c. Attacheth the Engliſhmens goods in Burdeaux,872, b40. He & the Spaniſh begin to aſpire to the empire, in hope to be emperor as well as the Spaniſh, builded his hope vpon the humors of the princes of Germanie, reſteth vpon the fauour of the pope,851,a40, b10,&c: His toieſh and light behauiour abrode: note,850,a10,&c: Deceaſeth, the variableneſſe of his fortune,835,b60,836, a10. Procureth the pope to be a meane to Henrie the eight for peace, 831, b50. Hath his hands full of troble 812,b40. Writeth to cardinall Woolſeie,848,a20. Prepareth an armie in aid of the Scots, 993, a60, b10, &c: Purpoſeth to ſurpriſe Gernſeie and Ierdſeie, but is repelled, aſhamed that anie report ſhould paſſe of his euill ſucceſſe, perſeuereth in his former martiall action,1055,b30, 50, 60. The cauſes that made him to breake vp his campe, b30. Procéedeth againſt prince Edward in iudgement of appeale [illegible], a 20. Sent to defie the b50 [illegible] England, the countie of Ponthieu taken by him, 402, b10. Prepareth a nauie, 403, b20. Deceaſeth, 396,a60

Frenchmen fail to ſpoiling and riſling of Calis,1136,a10,&c: Netled with the loſſe of ſaint Quintines, they take Newnam bridge, and Rie banke, diſappoint the Engliſhmens deuiſe, they demand a parlée, 1135, a10, 50, b10, 30,60. Shew themſelues in their kinds, 192, b30. In king Iohns time ouerrun, take, ſpoile, and ſubdue diuers places of England, 192, 193. Sent ouer to aid the rebellious barons, 190, b10. Uncommanded of the king, aſſalt Rouen,93,a60. They & Normans fight, 60, b50. Do much hurt in wales, burne townes, are ſlaine, returne home,531,a30,&c: Their demand of the Ile of wight,524 b40. Inuade the Ile of wight,524,a60. Demand a dower for quéene Iſabell,519 a60. Their practiſes to make the Engliſh reuolt from their owne king,517,b60. Breake the law of armes, 1204, b50. Spoile diuers Engliſh ſhips 95,a60. Gather cockles to their loſſe and vndoing,1192, a20,50. Their policie in womens apparell: note, 1188, b40,50. Repelled by the Engliſh,1188,a50, numbers ſlaine 60. Driuen into Leith, b10. Win a trench, 50. Repelled & ſome ſlaine, 60. A trench wonne from them, 1190, b10. Repelled by the Engliſh, 50, Sent into Scotland to aid the quéene Dowager, 1186,b40. Ships taken by the Engliſhmen, 445,a10. Burne the towne of Rie, 417, b50. Spoile the Ile of wight, burne Portſmouth, Dartmouth, and Plimmouth, 417, b60. Their gallies chaſed from the Engliſh coſtes and vanquiſhed,427,,a20. They & Spaniards burne and deſtroie diuerſe townes on the Engliſh coſtes :note, 427,a40,50,&c: Uittell the Engliſh for feare: note, 426, b20. Spoile and burne diuerſe townes in the weſt countrie, 425,b40. Their admeral perſuadeth the Scots to fight with the Engliſh,447,b20. Subtiltie, 480, b20. Fléet ſetting forward towards England is driuen backe by contrarie winds, 454, a10. Purpoſe an inuaſion of England with their ſhips, 45[illegible],a 20. Foure hundred ſlaine beſides diuerſe taken,304, b50. Their bloudie victorie, 294,b10. Slaine handſmooth by the Engliſh, 295, a60. Rob Douer, chaſed to their ſhips, diſcomfited and ſlaine, 295, b10,&c. Forced to retire by the Engliſh,296,a60. Die thorow peſtilence & other waies, 230,a60. Their ſpite toward the Engliſh, 241, b60. Take.. at aduantage, 207, b10. Put to flight at Lincolne, 200,a60. Their ſouldiors in a poore eſtate,199,b40. Their pride procureth them hatred, 198,a10. Fléet aſſailed and vanquiſhed, 201, a50, 60. Meant not to fight with the Engliſh,408,b30. Proſperous ſucceſſe in Poictou, 407 b30. Withdraw themſelues into their fortreſſes and ſhire townes,405,a60. Take the king of Nauarre, 398, a40. And Engliſh ſkirmiſh, the French flie, & ſubmit themſelues, 387, a60, b10,30. Diſtreſſed, the ordering of their battell, 388, a10, 40. Séeke to ſaue themſelues by flight,389,b30. Forſake their horſſes and fight on foot, 379, a50,60. Slaine the daie after the battell,373,a30. Diſcomfited and ſlaine, 369,a60. Slaine in great numbers, 372,b50. Loſe the paſſage ouer the water of Some, diſorder amongeſt them, 371, a20,b50. Diſtreſſed and diſcomfited,368,b40. Their armie diſcomfited by a few Engliſh,364,a50. Set vpon the Flemings in ſkirmiſh, 359,b30. Inuade the coſtes of England,355,a50. Diſcomfited, 554, b10, 10. Incountred by the earle of Huntington, 558, b50,&c. Repelled,996,a10. Harts diſcouraged with the loſſe of Rone, 568, b60. Their voluntarie ſubiection, they yeeld diuerſe caſtels and townes, 561,a30. Receiued a great ouerthrow by ſea by the duke of Bedford, their nauie vanquiſhed,557,a40. Rob Henrie the fifts campe, 554, b50. The order of their armie,553, a10. Eſtéemed faire to the Engliſh,a30. Take occaſion to inuade the Engliſh, 645, b20. Sone wearie of the French gouernement, 639, b20. Diſcomfited, flie: note,619 a20. Ouerthrowne, ſlaine, taken priſoners and ſlaine,608, a60. Breake the peace, and take the town of S. Ualeran, 608,a10. Faith and honeſtie, not to be truſted: note,607,a60. Recouered in Henrie the ſixts time all that they loſt in Henrie the fifts daies: note the courſe of the ſtories and compare them together,601, Commit a foule marther by negligence of the watch at Montargis,597,b60. When inuincible,769, a60. Their loue,699,b60. Ouerthrowne to their gréefe and ſhame,822, a20. Land in Suſſex, in the Ile of wight, diſtreſſed, the number of their nauie,969,a10,40.60. And Engliſh haue manie ſkirmiſhes, 972, 973. Dogged nature for a matter of nothing,894,b20. In London all arreſted & put to their fines,873, a20,. Failing in force make ſupplie by policie,880,a60. Scoured of the Engliſh, and foiled of the welſh,874,b20. Inſolent ſaucineſſe againſt the Engliſh, 840,a40. Their diueliſh nature,a50. Foiled at iuſts of their challenge and proclaming: note, 833,834,a10,&c. Nauie diſcomfited by the Engliſh, flieth,815,b20 Armie approching againſt the power of Henrie the eight, they get the great gun called the red gun by fooliſh hardineſſe of the maiſter capteine, 818,a50,b40. Gallies land in Suſſex and burne certeine cotages,817,a20. Crueltie reported by their owne writers,1056,a60. Aſſaile Bullognberg, the number of pikes and bils broken vpon them, repelled, fiftéene wagons laden with their carcaſes,997, a60,b10,40,50. They & the Scots do reſolue to beſiege Hadington, 993, a60, b10. Remoue their campe, 994,b50. Diſlodged frō before Hadington, incamped at Muſkelburgh, chaſed, durſt not come forth of their campe, 995,a10,b10. Of name taken priſoners,1150,b50. Their deſperat aduenture and daſtardlineſſe,1139,a20, b10. ¶ Sée Bullen, Engliſhmen, and Normans.

French gentlemen weare armour vnder their garments, 1350,a50. Taken priſoners and ſlaine, a60

Frier Forreſt ſeditious, his execution,945,a20,&c. One of Ireland that accuſed the duke of Lancaſter of treaſon, tormented and cruellie put to death,445,b40,60, 446,a10. Pateſhull. ¶ Sée Pateſhull. Patrike. ¶ Sée Patrike: note. Randoll committed to the Towre, he is ſlaine by the perſon of the Towre,568,b20

Friers beggers, an order for them,521,a40. Greie about London change their habits, 789,b40. Minors when they began and increaſed, 170, b60. Obſeruants impugne cardinall Woolſeis authoritie, 884,a10. Preachers inhabit Dunſtable, 261,b10

Friers ſuborned to treat a peace betwixt Henrie the third and his lords,268,a50. Executed for treaſon, 220,a15,&c.

Frieries ſuppreſſed, 938, a10, 946,a30. ¶ Sée Abbeis and Religious houſes.

Frith martyr burned, 937, b60

Frobiſhers firſt voiage for the diſcouerie of Cataia, 1262,a40. A rumor that he was caſt awaie,50. His ſecōd voiage to Cataia,1270,a40. His third voiage to Cataia, 1271, a60

Froſt extreame,58,a60. Bitter and nipping,881,a10. Great and long: note, 612, a60. Of continuance, 11, b50. Hindering huſbandrie: note, 396,b60,168,b30. After a ſore flood,20,b50. With ſnow on S. Marks daie, noiſome to trées and plants, 238, b60. With a ſharpe winter, 1257, b30

Froſt, called the great froſt, 1208,a60

Fuage. ¶ Sée Subſidie.

Fugitiues practiſes to execute pope Pius his buls, ſeditious and nouriſhed in ſeminaries beyond ſeas,1359,b10 20,30,&c. ¶ Sée Préeſts ſeminarie. Seditious labour to bring the relme into a war externall and domeſticall, 1360,a60. Furtherers of treſons,1382,b20. ¶ Sée Parrie and Treaſon.

Fulco a French préeſt his admonition to Richard the firſt: note, 156,b10.

G.

Gaine. ¶ Sée Gift.

Game. ¶ Sée wreſtling.

Games prohibited as vnlawfull, 111,b 40

Ganteners and king Edward the firſts men at debate,306,a 50. Mainteine warre againſt the erle of Flanders,448,b 30

Gard of the prince. ¶See yeomen.

Gardens. ¶See Moreſield.

Gardiner biſhop of winchester made lord chancellor, 1089,a 10. An enimie to the ladie Eliſabeth, examined of him,1154 a 30,40. Derided: note, dog in a rochet,1143, a 20. The talke betweene the ladie Eliſabeth and him,1158,b 20,40. Crowneth queene Marie, 1091,b 30. His tale in the ſtar chamber againſt the ladie Eliſabeth,1102,a 20,&c: Preacheth at Paules croſſe: note, 1126, a 60. His practiſe againſt ladie Eliſabeth,1101,b 40. His old hatred againſt the ducheſſe of Suffolke: note 1142,a 60,b 10,&c: 1143,a 10, &c: His death, viſited with the ſudden ſtroke of God, a hunter for the life of ladie Eliſabeth, 1130,a 40,60,b 20: note,

Garriſons placed in wales by king Henrie the firſt, 38,a 10

Gaſcoigns refuſe to receiue the king of England for their ſouereigne 481,b 10. Send to Richard the firſt, ſignifieng to him that they ought not to be diuided from the crowne, 485, a 60. Begin to humble themſelues, 249,a 10. Complaine of their ſtreict handling,247,b 60. Make warre againſt the Engliſh ſubiects, they are danted,245,a 60,b 10 they meane to complaine of the earle of Leiceſter, their allegations diſprooued,246,a 20 40. Ceaſe not to make warre againſt the earle of Leiceſter, 246,b 60. Rebell, and whie, 248,a 30. Purſue the welſhmen,282,a 20. They and other nations how they tooke the death of Richard the ſecond, 517,b all

Gaſton de Bierne noted for vnthankfulneſſe,240,a 30. Attempteth to take the citie of Baion,250,a 30. Submitteth himſelfe vnto king Henrie the third, 242,a 60

Gauaro and others executed for murther, his deſperat end, 1061,a 50,60

Gaunt beſieged by the French king, 179,a 10

Geffreie ſonne to king Henrie the ſecond, 7,b 30

Geffreie king Henrie the ſeconds fourth ſonne borne, 67, b 10. Marrieth the ducheſſe of Britaine, 75,a 20

Geffreie biſhop of Conſtance in armes againſt the earle of Camber, 11,a 50

Geffreie biſhop. ¶See Biſhop.

Geffreie a kings brother rebelleth, 66,a 30

Gelderland ¶See Duke.

Gelouſie and crueltie: note,115, b 40

Genowais ſtratagems to abaſh the Engliſh: note, 372,a 30, 40. Reteined in the French kings wages, they meet the Engliſh on the ſeas & fight, 363,b 10,20

Gentlemen more truſtie than the commons, more worthie than yeomen. 1052,b 10,60

Gerald. ¶See Erle Gerald.

Gerard de Cambill charged with felonie and treſon, 143,a 10

Gernſeie. ¶See Jerdſeie.

Gifford william biſhop of wincheſter commended, 28,b 20

Gifford doctor of phyſicke preſident of the college of phyſicians, 1349,b 40

Gift of king Henrie teight vnto the citie of London,976,b 40, 50. Of king Henrie the ſecond to Hugh Lacie, 82,b 20. Large and bountifull refuſed, 255, b 30. Of the new yeare,249,a 50. Of erle Edwins lands to earle Alane: note the forme, 7,b 10. ¶See Croſbie. Large refuſed being an vngodlie gaine, 147, b 20.

Gifts great giuen for the fauor of Edward the fourths councellors and lords: note, 700,b 20. They pacifie anger, procure fauor, 478, b 50, 60. And obteine loſt liberties: note,479,a 10. Of roiall magnificence beſtowed by the French,1382, a 20. A meane vſed to win the fauour of the nobilitie,16,a 10. Not reſpected, but the mind of the giuer: note, 1179,b 20, 30. Giuen king Henrie the eight in his progreſſe into Yorkſhire, 954, b 10, 20. ¶ See Bribes, Preſents, and Rewards.

Gilbert de Gaunt taken priſoner and put to his ranſome,7, a 20

Gilbert murthered by Liulfus, 12,b 30

Gilbert capteine of Tunbridge caſtell, 17,b 40

Gilbert knight his voiage to Norimbega, it hath not wiſhed ſucceſſe, he is ſeuered from his companie, dead, and neuer heard of, 1369,a 50,60,b 10

Gilford knight, his meſſage of thanks from king Henrie the ſeuenth to the Kentiſhmen, 780, a 10. Maiſter of the horſe vnto king Henrie the eight, 822,b 60

Gilford lord Dudleie executed on the Tower hill, 1099,b 30 ¶See Sands.

Giſors beſeeged by king Richard the firſt,151,b 60. Beſeeged by the Engliſhmen, 570,b 50

Gita the ſiſter of Sweine king of Denmarke eſcapeth into Flanders, 6,b 20

Glaſſe houſe burned, 1261,b 50

Glendoners rebellion in wales, what he was,518,b 60. The occaſion that mooued him to rebell, ouerthrowne, 519,a 10 Reputed a coniuror: note,520 b 20. Conſpireth with the Perſis,521,b 50. His daughter married vnto the earle of March, 521, a 20. He with his welſhmen full of miſcheef 519,b 20. He and his welſh in armes againſt the lord Greie of Ruthen, preuaileth, 519,b 60. Taketh the erle of March priſoner, 520, a 60. waſted the Engliſh marches 525,a 40. Aided by the marſhall Montmerancie, 531, a 10. His craftie entring the caſtell Abiruſcwith,533, b 40. He & fifteene hundred welſhmen taken and ſlaine, 528, a 10. Endeth his life in great miſerie, 536,a 10

Glouceſter recouerd & put to fine 266,b 10. Whie it was not aſſalted by queene Margaret & hir power,686,a 40. ¶ See Duke.

G, [illegible] his valiant ſeruice, 587, b [illegible] 60. Taken priſoner by the foundering of his horſe, 611, b 30. A welſhman, his eſcape,630,a 40. Slaine vpon London bridge, 635,a 30

Goodwine. ¶See Edmund.

Goring George. ¶ See Juſts triumphant.

Goſpatrike earle of Northumberland is ſent againſt king Malcolme of Scotland: note, 10,a 60. From whome duke william taketh the erledome of Northumberland, & whie, 10,b 50. How he came to be earle of Northumberland,13, a 30. ¶See Malcolme.

Goſpell, the ſhamefull end of a contemner thereof: note,935,a 60

Grace of God, words miſconſtrued by the Scots: note, 423,a 20,&c.

Grafton Richard ſlandered by a Scot and defended, 112,a 30. Defended againſt Buchanans ſlander,298,b 10,&c.

Granado is woone from the Turks or Saracens, 772,b 30. The ſtate and pompe of the ſame, b 60

Grandmeſuill Hugh ſet all vpon the ſpoile, 17,a 50

Grant of king Henrie the third to his brether,209,b 20. ¶See Patents.

Grantham church in Lincolneſhire out of which the people were frighted, 264,b 20

Grazing inconuenient vnto the commonwealth: note, 862,a 60,b 10

Graſſe. ¶See Mice.2315,a 60

Grauelin fortified by French for a countergarriſon to Calis, 444,b 10

Grauesend burned by the French and Spaniſh, 427,a 60

Greefe killeth an archbiſhop,6,b 60. Of king John turned into rage,183, b 10. Cauſe of a ſore and dangerous ſickneſſe in king John, 194,a 60, Of mind doubled the cauſe of king Johns death, 194,b 50. Killed Dauid the prince of wales,238,a 60. Killed king Henrie the ſeconds heart, 114,b 50. For loſſe of booties, 194,a 60. For an ouerthrow the death of a king, 958,b 40. The cauſe of death, 18,a 30, 44,b 60,50, b 30,728,a 30,40: note, 1151, b 10.20,797,a 10. For vnkindneſſe, 88,b 50

Greie lord committed vnto the Tower,952, b 10. Indicted and beheaded, 953, b 60

Greie lord of wilton deputie of Bullen, the letter of king Henrie the eight vnto him, 875,b 40,50,60. His ſeruice verie honorablie accepted of the king,976, a 40. His requeſt vnto the duke of Summerſet, 985,a 20. Receiueth poſſeſſion of Hume caſtell,990 b 60

Greie lord John duke of Suffolkes brother arreigned, condemned, pardoned, releaſed, beheaded, 1117,b 60

Greie lord capteine of Guiſnes, taketh the French at a ſleepie aduantage, commendeth his ſoldiors, 1137, a 50,60,b 50 The danger that he eſcaped ſitting vpon a forme with two gentlemen, hurt by miſchance, he conſulteth with the Engliſhmen, 1138, a 30, b 40,50,60. His words to his ſoldiors, being aſhamed of their timorouſnes, agreeth with the enimie vpon articles, 1140,a 20,40

Greie lord generall of the queenes armie in Scotland, 1187,a 30. His meſſage to the Frenchmen. 1188

Greie Arthur hurt in the ſhoulder by ſhot, 1189,a 10

Greie lord of wilton deceaſeth, 1198,a 50

Greie Henrie. ¶See Juſts triumphant.

Greies familie aduanced, 668, a 30,40

Greene one of Richrd the 3. mercileſſe inſtruments to murther two innocent princes, 734,b 50

Greenfield knight, ſir walter Raleighs lieutenant for the voiage to Virginia,1401,b 50. Singled from his companie, arriueth in Hiſpaniola, 60. His valiantneſſe againſt the Spaniards, 1402, a 10. In danger of ſhipwracke,20. Chaſeth and ſurpriſeth a Spaniſh ſhip, 50

Greenwich repared, 788,a 10

Greſham knight ſuddenlie deceaſeth: note, 1310,b 50

Gret Harrie. ¶See ſhip.

Gret Oneale. ¶See Oneale.

Greuill Fulke. ¶ See Juſts triumphant.

Griffin ap Rees dooth much hurt on the marches, 38,a 60

Griffin king of wales departeth this life, 152,a 60

Griffin of wales breaketh his necke, 228,b 20

Griffin beheaded at Towre hill, 928,a 10

Grotes and halfe grotes. ¶See Coines.

Ground. ¶ See Earth.

Guido earle of Britaine his father and his three ſonnes erls of Britaine, 7,b 20

Guenhera and the nobles of wales make a league with Henrie the third, 226,b 50

Guie of warwike deceaſeth, 323,a 10

Guildhall inlarged, the chappell, 540,b 10

Guines. ¶See Guiſnes.

Guiſnes, Henrie the eights palace roiall there deſcribed: note,856,b 40,b 50,&c,857,all. ¶See Greie lord capteine of Guiſnes.

Guiſe. ¶See Duke.

Gun called Digeon, 614, b 50. Called the red gun ouerthrowne, & recouered of the French, 818,b 30,40

Gun ſhot into the court at Greenwich, 1132,b 50. By caſualtie diſcharged at the queenes priuie barge, ſhe being therein, and ſome hurt doone: note, 1310,b 10,&c.

Guns of how ancient an inuention,453,b 50. Of iron when firſt made,960,a 20. Gained from the French, 968,a 10. Called handguns and bearing of weapons forbidden by proclamation, 1117, b 60. ¶See Culuerings.

Gunpowder blowes vp a houſe and killeth fifteene perſons, 1081,a 60. Shatereth houſes in Bucklerſberrie,1208,a 50. Strangelie ſet on fier dooth much hurt, 1348,b 10

Gurguint builder of Norwich caſtell,1288,a 10. His ſpeech, touch-touching antiquitie, 1289, a 40, &c.

H.

HAie at a double price, 785, a 30
Hailſtones which made men amaſed, 39, b 19. Of the bigneſſe of hens egs, 166, a 60. Of ſundrie ſtrange ſhapes, 1313, b 60. Great, the like not ſéene, 284, b 20. A mightie ſtorme that did much hurt, 250, a 50. That ſlue both men and horſſes: note, 393, b 60, 394, a 10. Square and of ſixtéene inches about, 1258, b 50. Faſhioned like mens heads, 968, b 50
Hales bloud and who brought it into England, 275, b 10. Shewed at Paules croſſe, 946, a 40
Hales knight will not aſſent to the new ſucceſſion of the crowne, 1083, a 40, 50, 60. In trouble for religion, 1092, b 10. Greuouſlie tempted, drowneth himſelfe, 1092, b 10, 30, 40
Hambleton caſtell loſt, ſummoned, rendered vnto the French king, the number that came forth thereof, 1057, a 30, 50, b 10
Hamblethew fortified by the Engliſhmen, 972, b 60
Hamont burned. ¶ Sée Heretike.
Hangman hanged, 945, b 40
Harding Stephan monke of Shireborne, 26, a 60
Haruilo ſands, 967, b 60
Harflue beſieged, 549, b 60. The people deſire a parlée, yéelded and ſacked, 550, a 30, b 10. Beſieged by the French, & reſcued by the Engliſh, 557, a 10, 60. Wonne by the Engliſh, 615, b 50. Beſieged, 629, b 60. Yéelded to the French king, 630, a 10
Harliſton knight his notable exploit: note, 422, a Harlots cauſe manie murthers, 953, a 10. ¶ Sée Murther and Whore.
Harold king of Man knighted, 238, b 60. ¶ Sée Canutus.
Hatred of the Engliſh againſt the Normans, and contrariwiſe, 14, a 10. Borne to the Iewes, 121, b 50. Irreconcilable betwéene the dukes of Summerſet and Yorke: note, 630, b 20. Great betwéene the duke of Buckingham and cardinall Woolſeie, 855, b 20. Againſt Richard the third, 738, b 10, &c: 739, 740, 741. Of the earle of Gloceſter againſt king Stephan, 48, b 50. ¶ Sée Enuie and Malice.
Harueſt ſore hindered by continuall raine, 210, b 50, 322, b 50. Wet and raine, 249, a 30, 397, b 50. Late, 348, b 30: note, 260, a 10
Haruele de Yuon his ſurrender to king Henrie the ſecond, 75, b 60. ¶ Sée Biſhop.
Haſtings, the originall of the name, the manner of their armes, 467, b 60. Their grant for exchange of lands, the record by which they executed the office of panteler, 469, a 10, 60. The order and number of clothes laid at the kings table, and how the Haſtings had them in fée, 469, a 20. Record wherbie the ſaid office of panteler is claimed, the petition for the ſecond ſword, which the earle of Arundell alſo claimed, the bill exhibited for the golden ſpurs, 471, a 10, b 10, 50
Haſtings lord his counſell to all his acquaintance, 675, b 10. Chamberleine maligned of the king and quéene, 713, a 30. Deſcribed, 723, b 60. His life and déeds laid open, 724, a 40, &c. Beheaded, 723, a 20
Haſtings lord diſcharged out of the Tower, 1088, b 30
Haſtings caſtell, 6, a 40
Hauckeſford knight his practiſe to kill himſelfe, 677, a 10, &c.
Hed of war wrought by necromancie ſpeaketh, 484, b 20
Heding caſtell beſieged by the Engliſhmen, 875, a 40
Hedgecote field, 682, b 30. ¶ Sée Battell.
Helias the pretended earle of Mans his bold words to William Rufus, 23, b 60
Henrie the firſt when he began his reigne, 28, a 10. Glad to ſéeke the peoples fauour, and whie, 28, b 10. Wonne the fauour of the people from his brother Richard, 28, a 30. His wiues, concubine, and children, his vertues, & vices, 45, a 50. In danger of drowning, 44, b 10. His promiſes to purchaſe the peoples fauour, 28, b 40. Reconciled with his brethren Robert and William, 19, a 60. Beſieged by his two brethren Robert and William, 19, a 40. His baſe ſonne to whome married, 37, a 40. Paſſeth ouer into Normandie and taketh diuerſe cities, 32, b 30. Perſuaded to renounce his title to the inueſtiture of prelats, 32, a 40. Conſulteth with his nobles where to get him a wife, 28, b 30. Hurt in battell againſt the French king, his valiantneſſe, 40, a 60. Againſt the conſecration of archbiſhop Thurſtane of Yorke, 40, a 50. He and pope Calixtus come to an interuiew at Giſors, 40, b 30. Paſſeth ouer into Normandie to aid and aſſiſt the earle of Champaigne againſt the French king, 39, b 40. Placeth garriſons in Wales, 38, a 10. He and pope Innocent méet at Chartres, 44, a 50. His ſonnes and daughters drowned by ſhipwracke, 41, b 10, without iſſue, he marrieth againe, 41, b 60. Goeth ouer into Normandie and createth his ſonne William duke, 38, a 30. His paſſage into Normandie and neuer returneth aliue, 44, b 30. Departeth this life of a ſurfet, 45, a 10
Henrie the ſecond crowned king, where and by whome 65, a 10. Offended with the biſhops, 70, a 30. Knighteth the king of Scots, 76, a 30. Inuadeth the earle of Aluergnes land, 75, a 40, Inuadeth Wales, 73, b 10. He and the French king haue an interuiew at Coicé, 69, a 40. His & Thomas Beckets firſt falling out, 68, a 20. He and the French king méet at Giſors, 95, a 50. He and his ſonnes are accorded vpon conditions, 94, a 40. Returneth out of Normandie, 93, a 20. His offer to his ſonnes, 89, b 10. Knoweth not whom he may truſt, 86, b 50. Purgeth himſelfe of Beckets death, 83, b 60. Séeketh to appeaſe the quarell betwixt his ſonnes, 106, a 60. Paſſeth into Normandie, he and his ſonnes reconciled, 105, b 40. He and the French king come to an interuiew at Vadum S. Remigij, 104, b 50. Rideth all night to méet the French king at Douer, 103, a 60. He and the French king méet at Yurie, 101, b 40, 60. His ſonnes wife is brought to bed of a ſonne, 101, b 20. Againſt the Scots, 66, b 30. Goeth into the north, 66, a 20. Negligent in aiding the Chriſtians againſt the Saracens, 116, a 10. Not ſo fauourable to the church as he might haue béene, 115, b 60. His vices, 115, b 20. His ſonnes and daughters, his baſe ſonnes, the conſtitution of his bodie, his ſtature, his qualities of mind and bodie, 115, a 20, &c. He and the French king at ſtrife, they talke together, 107, b 20, 40. His words of diſpleaſure to his ſonne earle Richard, 114, a 40. He and the French king come to a treatie of peace, 113, a 20. Inuadeth France and maketh waſt and ſpoile, 112, b 60. He and the French kings interuiew betwixt Trie and Giſors, 111, b 10. Paſſeth into Normandie to talke with French king, 110, b 40. His ſubiects arreſted in France, 110, b 10. Nothing ſorie for the death of Hugh Lacie, 110, a 30. He & the patriarch paſſe ouer into France, 109, a 50. Meſſage to his ſonne earle Richard, 109. His gift to Hugh Lacie, 82, b 20. Sorie for Thomas Beckets death, 80, a 30. Laieth his crowne on the altar, 67, a 40. Landeth in Ireland and what he doth there, 81, b 10. Becommeth ſeruitor to his ſonne, 76, b 10. Made his laſt will, 77, a 10. His ſonne crowned at ſeuentéene yeares old, 76, a 60. He and the French kings interuiew at Giſors, 74, a 60. Whie called Shortmantell, 115, a 10. Sickeneth and dieth, 114, b 50. His dead bodie laie naked a long time, 114, b 60, 115, a 10. His epitaphs, 116, a 40
Henrie the third borne at Wincheſter, 171, b 60. The beginning of his reign, 197, a 10. His coronation and annointing, b 20. The preſumptuous procéedings of the barons againſt him, 263, a 50. Aſked counſell how to procéed in his warres againſt the French king, 231, b 20. Maketh hard ſhift for monie to hire ſoldiors to aſſiſt him, he remoueth towards Windſore, commeth to Stratford, 273 a 60, b 10. Laie at Cambridge, 273, a 50. He & the lord wardens of the cinque ports reconciled, 271, b 50. The barons that roſe againſt him, their chéefe capteins, 264, b 20. Aided by his two halfe brethren, he incampeth at Lewes, the barons ſend him letters, his anſwer, he defieth them, the battell betwéene them, 267, b all. The ſcholers of Oxford fight againſt him, 267, a 10. His proteſtation againſt the articles at Oxford, 265, b 30. Licenced to paſſe ouer into France, 263, b 20. Hée falleth ſicke of a feuer quartane, 263, b 20. In his time manie gouernours ouer the land pernicious to the cõmonwelth, 263, a 60, b 10. Aſketh licence to paſſe ouer ſea, 262, a 30. Saileth into France, compoundeth all differences with the French king, 262, a 40. Sore ſicke and in deſpaire of life, 208, a 40. His charges and waſtfull expenſes, 255, b 60. Paſſeth himſelfe into Wales, 255, a 30. Lacketh monie, 254, b 40. Aſſaieth to get monie of the lords temporall, 246, b 60. Maketh great ſhift for monie to ſend vnto the pope, and ſendeth the pope a warrant to take it vp, 250, b 40. His charges to Gaſcoigne, 250, b 10. Demandeth a ſubſidie, 249, b 20. Offended with them that refuſed to helpe him with monie, b 40. His dets thrée hundred thouſand marks, 252, a 20. Purpoſeth to go himſelfe into Gaſcoigne, taketh the ſea, ariueth at Burdeaux, 248, b 10, &c. Inuadeth Wales, buildeth a caſtell at Gannoke, 236, b 10. Returneth out of Wales, 237, b 40. Flat againſt the pope his demands and decrées, his proclamation inhibiting monie to be ſent to the pope, 238, b 60, 239, a 10. His halfe brethren come to ſée him, 239, b 60. Being in ſolemne proceſſion at Paules: note, 240, a 30. Diſgraced by his nobles in a ſolemne parlement, 240, b 50. His eldeſt ſonne created duke of Aquitaine, 246, b 10. Goeth into Wales with an armie, 226, b 40. Rather hindered than helped by the counteſſe of Bierne, 230, a 40. Spareth to ſet himſelfe out of debt, 242, b 10. Driuen to ſell his ſtate for lacke of monie, 241, a 20. Procureth an inhibition to the pope, 242, b 10. His mother departeth this life, 239, a 50. Taketh vpon him the croſſe, 242, a 40. Highlie offended with the biſhops, 246, b 60. Euill ſpoken of, 231, a 30. Paſſeth ouer into France againſt the French king, 229, b 20. His ſundrie meanes of impoſitions to gather monie: note, 229, a 50. His halfe brethren depart the realme, 258, a 50, b 50. They are purſued, and ſend to the French king for ſafe conduct, 258, b 60. His ſeuere ſentence againſt a bribetaking iuſtice, 243, b 50, &c, 244, a 10. Goeth with an armie towards Scotland, 233, b 40. He and the king of Scots made friends, b 60. Lieth in wait for mens goods, 253, a 10. Fauoureth not the citie of London, 274, b 20. ¶ Sée London. Put to flight, 268, a 20. Returneth into England through France 256, a 60. Goeth ouer vnto the French king, 266, a 40. Like to haue béene deſtroied at Woodſtocke in his bed: note, 223, a 40. Crowned the ſecond time, and whie, 202, b 30. His mariage, 219, b 30. Entreth into Wales with an armie, hath but ſorie ſucceſſe, returneth, 217, a 60, b 10, 20. Goeth againſt the Welſhmen but with ill ſucceſſe, 214, a 10. Gathereth monie towards his iornie into France, 211, b 60. Saileth ouer into France, hée taketh diuerſe townes and caſtels, getteth the victorie, returneth into Britaine, ſaileth home into England his owne realme, 211, b 60, 212, all. Prepareth to paſſe ouer into France, 211, a 60.

Is conſtreined to agrée with the Welſhmen, 210, b 30. In fauor with Normans & Poictouins, 210, a 50. His grant to his brother, 209, b 10. Glad to appoint a daie of treatie for pacification betwéene him & his nobles, 209, b 10. And whie he would not admit Walter de Hamelſham archbiſhop of Canturburie, 210, a 10. Will in no wiſe bind & indanger his laie fée to the church of Rome, 208, b 20. Demandeth reſtitution of parcels of inheritance belonging to the crowne, 205, b 60. Purchaſeth a bull of the pope for his ſufficiencie to gouerne, 205, b 10. Depoſeth all the magiſtrats of the citie of London, &c: 204, b 10. His ſummons to raiſe him an armie, the capteins of the ſame, 199, b 50, 60. He requireth reſtitution of his right of the French king, 203, b 10. Put in full poſſeſſion of the realme, 201, b 60. His practiſe to get monie, 241, b 20. Sickneth, 275, a 10. Extreame ſicke, his death, buriall, iſſue, proportion of bodie, conditions good and bad, 276, a 40, &c.

Henrie the fourth duke of Lancaſter, proclamed king, 507, b 30. Plantagenet his ſtile or title, the beginning of his reigne, 509, a 40. His coronation, 510, all. His title to the crowne, 511, a 10. Ment to haue made a iournie againſt the infidels, he is vexed with ſickeneſſe, 540, b 60. Of an apoplexie, his death, buriall, iſſue, ſtature, &c: 541, a 10, &c. His ſuſpicious gelouſie toward his ſon prince of Wales, 539, a 10. Taketh vpon him to defend the Orleanciall faction, 538, b 30. The faction of Orleance ſue to him for aid, 537, b 60. Articles of couenants which they offered him, the conditions which they requeſted of him, 538, a 10, 60. A fauourer of the clergie, 536, a 50. In danger to be taken by the French pirats, 525, b 10. His comming to Berwike, he preuaileth againſt the Scots, he paſſeth into Wales, looſeth his cariages, returneth, 530, b 50, 60. Wanteth monie & can get none of the lords, 527, b 60. Goeth to Yorke, 524, a 10. Charged with periurie, his anſwer to the meſſengers that brought the lords articles, he offereth pardon to his aduerſaries, his manhood againſt them, 523. His anſwer to the Perſies libell, his ſpéedie diligence againſt his enimies, he troubleth them with his ſudden comming, 522, a 60, b 40. In armes againſt the Welſhmen, he looſeth his labour, 520, b 20, 30. His ſuſpicion grounded vpon a guiltie conſcience, his daughter maried into Germanie, 520, b 10. In danger to haue béen deſtroied in his bed: note, 519, b 20. Inuadeth Scotland, making gret waſt, 518, b 20. Cauſeth Richard the ſecond to be put to a violent death, 516, b 50. Commeth to the Towre of London, the lords make towards the citie againſt him, he goeth forth againſt them, 515, a 60, b 10, &c. A plot laid for his deſtruction, at a ſolemne iuſts, 514, b 60. In his time intaileth the crowne, 514, a 10, 20. Suſpected not to be well affected towards the church before his cōming to the crowne, 511, b 50, 60. His funerals kept at Canturburie, 543, b 50.

Henrie the fift, his title, the beginning of his reigne, his coronation daie verie tempeſtuous, he altereth his life & maners, 543. His iuſtice in a progreſſe, 579, b 40. The king of Scots in his armie, 577, a 10. The duke of Bauier cōmeth to him with a number of horſſemen, he and monſieur Baubaſon fight hand to hand, 577, a 50, 60. The biſhop of Wincheſter lendeth him 20000 pounds, 580, b 10. He falleth into France againe, the Scotiſh king ſerueth him, he purſueth Dolphin, b 20, 30, 60. Returneth into England with his new wife, 578, b 50, 60. Receiued into Paris, 578, a 10. Taketh vpon him the office of regent of France, 578, a 50. He & the French king at peace, the articles of the ſame, 572, a 20, &c: 573, a 40, &c. The effects of his oration to the French king, 576, a 10. Condeſcendeth to a treatie of peace with the French king, 572, a 20. Commeth to Trois to the French king, affieth the French kings daughter, b 20, 30. Plaieth the porters part, 570, a 20. Accurſed, his enimies deliuered into his hand, executed, his entrance into Rone, his behauior & others, a legue betwéene him and the duke of Britaine, remaineth at Rone, ſendeth his capteins abrode to ſubdue caſtels & townes, he remoueth to Vernon, 568, a 30, 40, 60. A rare & worthie example of equitie in him, 560, b 60. His iuſtice and charitie, 566, a 60, b 40. His wiſe anſwer to a preſumptuous French orator, 567, a 60. Aided by the king of Portingale, 566, a 20. Towns in Normandie yeelded vnto him, 562, b 50. His exploits in France, his victories, & ſurrenders to him, 561, a 10, &c: 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567. Arriueth in Normandie, how he preuailed againſt his enimies, and taketh caſtels and townes, 559, a 10. His roiall modeſtie: note, 556, a 40. Wiſe and valiant chalenge, an example in him what is to be doone after victorie, 555, a 10, 20. His valiantneſſe in ſlaieng the duke of Alanſon, 554, b 20. His campe robbed, b 50. His policie againſt the French horſſemen, his oration to his men, his wiſh & noble courage, 553, b 30, 40, 50. Paſſeth the riuer of Some with his hoſt, the number of his armie, his iuſtice in warre, his anſwer to the French kings defiance, he rideth forth to take view of the French armie, 552, all. His ſtandard recouered from the French, 551, b 10. Saileth ouer to France with his hoſt, 549, b 20. His charitable proclamation, his beſieging of Harflue, 30, 60. He taketh and ſacketh it, his mercifull dealing with the French priſoners, 550. all. His words to certeine traitors of the nobilitie, 548, b 30. Wiſe anſwer to the archbiſhop of Brugeſſe, 547, b 60. His policie in the time of a commotion, 544, b 10. His roiall port, he falleth ſicke. 582, b 30, 50. Is brought ſicke to Bois de Vincennes, 583, a 10. His aduiſe vpon his death bed, his deceaſe, his commendation in diuerſe reſpects, 583, all. The maner of his buriall, 584, a 10, &c.

Henrie the ſixt borne, 581, a 60, b 10. Crowned in Paris, 606, a 40. His coronation at Weſtminſter, 602, b 60. The beginning of his reigne, 585, a 20. Goeth againſt Kentiſh rebels with a power, 634, a 50. The maner of his buriall, a deſcription of his perſon, his canonization to be a ſaint laboured for, his qualitie, 691, a 16, &c. Sheweth himſelfe to the Londoners, he is deliuered vp to the hands of Edward the fourth his enimie, 683, a 30, b 10. Fetcht out of the Towre and reſtored to his regiment, 677, b 50. His ſaieng concerning Henrie of Richmond, after king Henrie the ſeuenth, b 10. Commended by the earle of Warwike: note, 671, a 10. Aſſembleth an armie againſt Edward the fourth and his adherents, 664, a 20. His power exceeded king Edwards, b 30. His part diſcomfited, he withdraweth to Berwike, 665, a 10, 40. Maketh a ſolemne feaſt at the reconcilement of the nobles that were at ſtrife: note: createth dukes and knights, 595, b 40, 50. In perſon goeth with an armie into France, 605, b 20. Returneth out of France into England, 607, b 40. His receiuing into Exceſter, the clergie there againſt him, 637, a 20, 30, &c. Practiſes to put him beſide the crowne, letters interchangable betwixt him and the vſurper, 637, a 60, b 10, &c. 638, 639. In armes againſt the duke of Yorke, his anſwer to the dukes letters, 642, a 60, b 10, 50. The armies ioine, the kings part vanquiſhed, 643, all. Part diſcomfited, he is taken, 654, b 30, 40. Articles of peace and agréement betwéene him & the duke of Yorke, 657, b 20, &c. Letters kept from him of purpoſe, 644, a 60. He to reigne in name, but not in rule, he to reuoke certeine grants agréed vpon: note, 644, b 20. His power diſcomfited, flie, 660, b 10. Raiſeth an armie againſt the duke of Yorke, 649, b 50. Preſent in habit roiall at a ſolemne proceſſion in Paules, 648, a 60. Flieth, 666, b 20. He is taken, and laid vp in hold, 667, a 30. His depoſition deſcribed, 1234, b 40. Set vp againe as king, 727, a 60. Sicke, 642, a 20. Murthered in the Towre, 690, b 60. And by whome, 712, b 20.

Henrie the ſeuenth, his birth, age, deſcent, bringing vp, and port that he bare, & king Henrie the ſixt his ſaieng concerning him, 678, a 60, b 10. One of the bloud of Henrie the ſixt, his life a gréefe to Edward the fourth, 701, b 10. He taketh ſanctuarie, note, 70, b 10, &c. His wife the ladie Eliſabeth when borne, 668, b 50. Crowned by the lord Stanlie in the field, 760, a 50, 60. Dooth ſome honour to Richard the third after his death, in reſpect of his buriall, 761, a 20. Baniſheth all Flemiſh ware out of his dominions, 778, a 20. He and Maximilian agrée to plague the French men, 774, a 50. Deſireth the king of Caſtile to haue Edmund earle of Suffolke deliuered into his hands, 793, a 30. His progreſſe into Lancaſhire, 779, wanted policie, 790, a 20. His chapels at Weſtminſter built, 790, b 30. His policie againſt ſir Robert Clifford, 778, b 20. He is in a quandarie, 779, a 10. Purpoſeth warres againſt France, and openeth the iuſt cauſe in parlement, 771, b 50. Sendeth eſpials into Flanders for a ſubtill policie, 777, b 30. He & the quéen dined at ſargeants feaſt kept at Elie houſe, 779, a 40. Requeſteth a preſt of ſix thouſand marks, & goeth into the north, 764, a 30, 50. Maketh out a power againſt Perkin Warbecke 784, a 20. His gratious pardon to a great number of miſerable rebels, 784, b 30. Couetous in his old age, 791, b 20. Saileth to Calis, he and the duke of Burgogne met at ſaint Peters church without the towne, 788, a 10, 30. Is loth that the French king ſhould marrie the ducheſſe of Britaine, 771, a 60. Sendeth the lord Daubnie and the lord Morleie againſt the French, 770, b 10. Borroweth a great ſumme of moneie of the chamber of London, 770, a 20. Sendeth forth his armie againſt the French king, 769, a 40. His returne out of the north countrie, his offer to make an attonement betwixt the French king and the [illegible] of Britaine, his loue to [illegible] Eliſabeth, 768, a 10, 40, [illegible] Aſſembleth an armie, his power ſoone increaſed, his encounter with the conſpirators, he ouercommeth, 766, b 10, 20, 30, 60. All the capteines againſt him ſlaine, he giueth thanks to God after the victorie, 767, a 20, b 30. Commeth to London, he is crowned king, 762, a 30, b 10. He aduanceth his fréends, redéemeth his hoſtages, performeth his promiſe touching the mariage of Edward the fourths daughter, 763, a 20, 60, b 30. His deceaſe, what children he had, he is deſcribed, his qualities roiall, his ſepulture, executors of his laſt will, 797, a 20, 30, &c. Roiallie buried, a deſcription of the whole pompe: note, 800, a 30, &c.

Henrie the eight, duke of Yorke, and afterwards king, his birth, 775, b 60. Proclamed king, his councellors, and riches, 799, a 20, 30. His coronation with the pompe thereof, 801, a 30, 40, &c. Good at tenniſe plaie, 809, a 10. He and the duke of Suffolke defendors at tilt againſt all commers, he receiueth a cap of maintenance from pope Iulie, 830, a 60, b 10. A notable good horſſeman, 837, a 20. He rideth weſtward in progreſſe, a 20. Sendeth for the quéene of Scots & hir husband to his court, 838, a 40, &c. Buildeth a caſtell at Tornaie, 838, b 40. Sitteth in the ſtarchamber in iudgement, 852, b 60. Intituled defendor of the faith, he writeth againſt Luther, at variance with the king of France, 872, a 30, 50, 60. His minions remoued out of the court, 852, b 10. Glad of the French kings deliuerie out of priſon, 889, b 60. Procurer of his libertie, 890, a 60. Alledged by the French king as a preſident of humanitie in caſe of a captiuated king, 890, b 40. Borroweth 20000 pounds of the citie of London, 874, a 20. Receiueth

Receiueth a golden roſe for a preſent from pope Clement, 883,a 60. what moued him gratiouſlie to receiue the ladie regents ambaſſadors of France,887. Paſſeth ouer to Calis, an interuiew betwéene him & the French king,928,b 40,60. His baſe ſon made erle and duke in one daie,892,a 40 Sworne to performe the league concluded, 893, a 10. His articles for the reforming of religion,940,b 60. His ſupremaſie confirmed, 938, a 10. Proclamed K. of Ireland, 955, a 60. Taketh a lone of monie, 957, a 10. His munificence to the earle of Angus, archbiſhop of S. Andrews his deuiſe ſo,959,b 10. Sent a power ouer againſt French king,960,a 60,b 10. His meſſage to the lord Greie by ſir Thomas Palmer:note, 975, b 50. Paſſeth the ſeas to Bullen, 964 a 60. Entreth into the towne, returneth to England 965, a 10,20. Goeth in progreſſe into Yorkeſhire, gifts giuen him,954,b 10,20. A good archer and full of actiueneſſe: note,806,a 40, 50,60, b 10,20, &c. Brake more ſtaues at iuſts than the reſt, & had the priſe giuen him, 809, a 50. Runneth at tilt, diuerſe paſtimes wherin he was a principall actor, he runneth at the ring, 805, a 10, &c: b 60. Forced to take arms againſt the Scots,957,b 30. Magnificent and munificent to the French kings ambaſſadors, &c:848,a 10,20,&c:849,a 10,&c. Purpoſeth in perſon to paſſe the ſeas to ſée the French K. his brother,835,b 60. Receiueth the order of S. Michaell,898,b 10. He commeth to weſtminſter hall & there ſitteth in iudgement himſelfe vpon the riots of ill Maie daie, his gratious & generall pardon, he and the duke of Suffolke run at iuſts,844,a 20,30 50,b 30. Riding to Porteſmouth, appointeth capteins ouer his ſhips,815,a 40. His name ſetteth out, cõcluded in parlement that he ſhould perſonallie inuade France,815,a 50,b 10,50. Taketh the popes part againſt the French K. 611,b 10. He and French K. their interuiew in the vale of Andren, they two make challenge to all commers at iuſts, his ſumptuous furniture at the ſaid iuſts, 858,a 30,b 30, 60. He runneth againſt monſieur Granduill, the parteners of his challenge, 859, a 30,b 10. His band of men with their deuiſe on their apparell, his interteinment of the French quéene, 860,b 20. He departeth from Guiſnes to Calis, and from thenſe to Grauelung to viſit the emperor, his ſtatelie maſke, himſelf a ſpeciall actor, 861, b 10, 60. He returneth into England, 861,a 40. In perſon paſſeth ouer to France,817,b 60. The order of his armie, 817, a 10. Incampeth at Arkes, commeth to the ſiege,819,a 20,30. His power vnited with the emperor Maximilian his ſoldiors againſt Terwine:note, 821, a 50. Entreth into Terwine, the citizens are ſworne vnto him, marcheth on with his armie to Tornaie, goeth to Liſle to viſit the yong prince of Caſtile,822,b 40,50, 60. His pompe & port,823,a 10 Maketh certeine gentlemen knights for their good militarie ſeruice,824, b 50. Falſelie reported to be dead, he & his traine ignorant of the waie to his campe by means of a miſt he beſiegeth Tornaie, 823,a 60. Returneth to England, 825,a 60. Méeteth the emperor Maximilian, his harneſſe and furniture, his ſpéech to a Scotiſh herald, his anſwer to the Scotiſh kings letter, 820, a 20, 50, &c. Intituled Christianiſſimo by the pope. 831,a 10. His gift to the citie of London:note,976,b 40,50, Firſt named ſupreme head, 923,a 30. And what therevpon folowed, his voluntarie inclination to pardon the premunire of the clergie, 923, b 10. His mariage in queſtion, & how determined by diuerſe vniuerſities, b 30,40,&c. His oration in the parlement houſe: note,971,a 20,&c. He & his quéen at Hauering in the Bowre, 852, b 30. Setteth forward into France, he and the emperor Charles méet at Douer caſtell, kéepe their Whitſuntide at Canturburie, landeth at Calis, lodgeth in his palace at Guiſnes,856, a 20,50,60,b 30,40. His affableneſſe with his yong courtiers made them too ſaucie & bold: note,851,a 60 Thankfulnes to his militarie ſeruitors, 829,b 50. The portion intended to be giuen with his daughter Marie in mariage, 850,b 10. His mariage by cõſent of all vniuerſities iudged vnlawfull,912,b 60,913,a 10, His mariage with his brothers wife in queſtion, 897, a 60. Is deſirous to be reſolued by the opinions of the lerned touching his mariage, 906,b 50. Confeſſeth that the ſting of conſcience made him miſlike of the mariage,907,b 60. Submitteth himſelfe to the cenſures of the learned, miſtruſteth the legats of ſéeking delaies, his affection to the ladie An Bullen,908,a 20,50,60,b 60. Marrieth the ladie Anne Bullen,929,a 60, Marieth the ladie Iane Seimor,940. Commeth to ſée the ladie Anne Cléue at Rocheſter, 948,b 10. welcommeth hir to Gréenewich,949,b 60. He marrieth hir,950,a 10,&c. His marriage with the ladie Anne of Cléue iudged vnlawfull,952,a 60. Marrieth the ladie Katharine Par,960 a 30. Maketh his laſt will & teſtament, his executors,976, b 60. Deceaſeth, deſcribed, commended, 977,a 10,20,&c.

Henrie the prince is ſent againſt Robert of Northumberland,15,b 40. His diſorder of life, 77, a 20. Séeketh to ſeize vpon the gouernment out of his fathers hands,86,a 60,b 10. New practiſes to put his father beſide the crowne, 99,b 10. Falleth ſicke, 106,a 60. He ſendeth to his father, his repentance before his deth, his deth & buriall, 107, a 10. Accuſed to his father, 539,a 10. Goeth to the court with a gret train, his ſtrange apparell, his comming to the kings preſence, the words they both vſed, his requeſt to haue his accuſors anſwer their wrongfull accuſations, 539, all. Taketh awaie the crowne before his father was dead, he is blamed of his father the king, his anſwer, 541,a 30

Henrie, the firſt ſonne to Henrie the eight deceaſeth, 808,b 50

Henrie Fitzroie, K. Henrie the eights baſe ſon:note,892,a 40

Henrie the empreſſe hir ſon lord Henrie came into England to ſée his mother, 55, b 50. Knighted in England, 58, a 40. Marrieth the ducheſſe of Aquitain,58,b 60. Returneth into England, he beſiegeth Malmeſburie caſtell & is forced to raiſe his ſiege, 59,b 40. Paſſeth into Normandie, his puiſſance, a peace betwéene him and the French king,54, a 60,b 10

Henrie ſon to the erle of Cornwall, and king of Almaigne murthered, 275,b 50

Henrie the emperour dead at Utrecht, 42,b 60

Henrie grace de Dieu, a great ſhip, otherwiſe called the gret Henrie, 815,b 40

Here long how it was to be worne, 30,b 60. In the court redreſſed,42, b 30. The abuſe thereof,44,b 60: note,46,a 10

Heraclitus patriarch of Ieruſalem, 108,b 10

Herald at armes words from the Scotiſh king to Henrie the eight, & how courteouſlie vſed, 820,a 40,50,60,b 10. Of Scotland richly rewarded of Henrie the eight, 821,a 30. From the K. of England & France to the emperor, the ſpéeches & behauiors, 898, b 60,899,all, 900,all. Defiance intimated,901,b 10. Killed, & the déed doer executed as a traitor,390,a 10. Not ſuffered to enter in France:note, 960,a 60, Scotiſh his meſſage to the duke of Summerſet. 983,b 40,&c. Engliſh his intimation to the Edenburghers,707,b 20,&c: 708,a 10,&c, His office, & how the French king rewarded an Engliſh herald giuing him defiance, 695,a 10. Inſufficient from the French king to the king of England & his ſpéech, 695, b 30,40,&c. well rewarded at Henrie the fourths hands, 518, Slaine, 443,a 10

Herbert biſhop of Thetford why depriued of his biſhops ſtaffe 21, a 40. He came to it by ſimonie, 26,a 50

Herbert knight of gret power among the welſh:note,752,b 60

Hereford caſtell deliuered vnto Lewis the French king his ſonne, 198,a 50

Heremit of Pomfret or wakefield his propheſie to king Iohn: note, 180,a 30

Heretike burned at Norwich, & what opinion he held, 1299,b 20,30,1354,b 60

Hereward partaker with the Engliſh rebels againſt duke william, 10,a 50

Herlowin a noble man in Normandie huſband to william conquerors mother, 20, a 10

Hertfordſhire men ſworne vnto Richard the ſecond,438,a 30

Hiſtoriewriters blamed,112,a 20

Holie land otherwiſe called Paleſtine,120,a 40. In danger, 104, b 50. whereto Richard the firſt goeth like a pilgrime, 123,b 10. Aid granted to the people thereof,111,b 20. ¶ Sée Ieruſalem, and Saracens.

Holie maid of Kent. ¶ Sée Eliſabeth Barton.

Holland in Lincolneſhire ſpoiled and made tributarie vnto the French, 193,a 10

Holland beyond ſeas commended, 1426,a 30

Holland knight killeth the lord Stafford, 447, a 50. Made earle of Huntington,465,b 60

Hollocke countie his ſecretarie hanged, 1431,b 30

Homage done to king Henrie the ſecond by his ſonnes, 94, b 40. Of a thouſand pounds yearelie,87,b 20. Done vnto king Henrie the third by the archbiſhop of Rone, 241, b 40 By the earle of Sauoie, 238, b 50. Of rebels to a forren prince intruding himſelfe vpon the crowne of England, 191, b 30. Of king Henrie the ſecond vnto the French king, 107,b 50. Of king Iohn to the French king,161,a 60,b 10. By king Edward the firſt vnto the French king, 283,b 30: Of the Scotiſh king, &c: vnto the kings of England, 69, a 60,b 10,20,95, b 60, 162, a 60, 254, a 40, 50, 290, a 20, 245, a 40,350,b 20,587,a 20. Of the Scotiſh lords vnto king Edward the firſt, with words of his accepting it:note, 301,a 30,&c. Of the nobles of Scotland vnto king Edward the firſt ſet downe in expreſſe words: note, 287,b 60, 288, a 10. ¶ Sée Erle of Flanders, Malcolme, and Scots.

Homilies, when and whie inſtituted to be read in churches, 979, b 50. Commanded to be had in churches, 992,a 60

Honors change maners: note, 543,b 10,76,b 10

Hope vaine & fruſtrat, 193,b 50

Horne. ¶ Sée Biſhop.

Horſſe fleſh powdered and ſerued in at a banket,1192,b 60.

Horſſe ſtealers, ten hanged at once in Smithfield,1356,a 10

Hoſe. ¶ Sée Apparell.

Hoſpitall of ſaint Leonards in yorke whie and by whome founded, 27,a 10

Hoſpitals builded by archbiſhop Lanfranke, 18,a 50, ¶ Sée Sauoie.

Hoſpitalitie of Richard the ſecond: note,508, a 10. Of the erle of warwike:note,678,a 40

Hoſtages Engliſh threatned to loſe their liues,147. Executed for promiſe broken, 597,b 10. Of France had great loue and libertie ſhewed them,396, a 20. For the aſſurance of the French kings ranſome, 394 a 60. Their number, 395,b 60 Deliuered by the Scotiſh lords on the kings ſide, 1217, a 10. During the time of a parlée betwéene enimies, 1139,b 50. French for the deliuerie of Tornaie,&c: in heauines and ſorrow courteouſlie delt with and roiallie: note, 850, a 30. ¶ Sée Pledges.

Howard knight lord admerall, 812,

812,b 60. Goeth to Biſkaie, his arriuall, 813,a 10. Abuſed of the Engliſh ſouldiors, goeth to Britaine, burneth diuerſe places, knighteth diuerſe gentlemen, the lords of Britains requeſt vnto him, 814,a 50,60, b 10. He would haue Henrie the eight preſent in perſon at the incounter and is rebuked, he commeth into the baie where as prior Jehan laie, 816, a 60, b 60. Drowned, 817,a 10

Howard knight made lord admerall in his brothers roome, 817,a 10, 20. Incountereth with the earls of Lenoux and Argile, 828,b 20. Atteinted of treaſon, dieth priſoner, 940,b 50. In the Towre, 944,b 60.

Howard lord gentle and fauourable to the ladie Eliſabeth, 1158,b 10. Priuie ſeale deceaſeth, 1257,b 40. ¶ See Earle of Surrie.

Hubert de Burgh aſſaileth the French fleet, 201,a 50

Hugh earle of Cheſter his exploits againſt the welſhmen, 23,a 40. Deſpaireth of life, 28,a 10

Hugh earle of Shrewſburie & Arundell his exploits, 23,a 40. Slaine by a rouer: note, 23,a 50

Huldorne captaine rebell executed, 672,a 30

Hume caſtell beſieged, yeelded vp, poſſeſſed of the Engliſh, 990,b 10,&c.

Hun hanged in the Lollards towre, his death lamented, & whie, 835,a 10,20

Hunger when people did eat horſſes, 1022,a 60

Hungerford lord executed for buggerie, 952,b 20

Hunſdich paued, 792,a 10

Hunſdon lord his deſcent, he preſenteth the order of the garter to the French king, 1206,a 60. He with others go againſt the rebels in the north, 1212,b 20. Made lord chamberleine, 1413,a 50

Hunting fatall of william Rufus, 26,b 30,40. Preeſts were not to vſe it, 97,a 60. A ſtatute made concerning it, 238,b 20

Hunting roiall, 473,a 20,30

Huntington earldome by whom and to whom giuen in dowrie, 11,b 20. Scotiſh, 66,b 50. The caſtell wonne, 92,a 60

Huſbandrie hindered by froſt, 396,b 60. Diminiſhed wherebie, and how remedied: note, 862,a 60,b 10. ¶ See Froſts, and Raine.

I.

IAcke Cads rebellion in Kent, 632,a 60. Is at his wits end, diſguiſeth himſelfe, is forſaken of his adherents, proclamation out to take him, he is apprehended and executed, 635. Slaieth the Staffords, 634,a 60

Jacke Straw & his adherents executed, 436,a 50. His confeſſion at the time of his deth, 438,b 10

Jane the daughter of K. John married to the erle of March, 182,b 60

Jane de Valois ſiſter to the French K. treateth for peace, 360,a 30

Jane ladie Gilford proclamed queene, 1084,b 10. Hath the keeping of the keies of the Towre, 1087,a 40. Cōmitted to the Towre with hir huſband the lord Gilford, 1088,b 50. Hir behauior at hir execution, the words which ſhe ſpake on the ſcaffold, 1099,b 40,50,60,1100,a 10,&c.

Jaques Arteueld purpoſeth the deſtruction of Gerard Deniſe, his houſe beeſet, & he ſlaine, 368,a 30,&c.

Idleneſſe & meat of other mens charge what they doo, 1049, b 20

Jennie a notorious knowne traitor & conferrer with Francis Throckmorton, 1371,b 10

Jerdſeie. ¶ See French king.

Jeruſalem taken by Saladine prince of the Saracens, 110, b 50. With more part of all other townes taken from the chriſtians, 111, a 60. The king thereof dooth fealtie to Richard the firſt, 127, b 60. The king thereof commeth to England, 205,a 50. ¶ See Holieland.

Jeſt of Philip the French king at duke william lieng ſicke: note, 14,b 20. Of Richard the firſt at the caſtell of Chateau Galliard builded, 155,b 10. Of king John concerning the maſſe, 196,b 20. Of Edward the fourth and a widow that gaue him monie, 694, a 60. Pleſant concerning the ſtrict keeping of ladie Eliſabeth, 1156,b 40. Merie at the rood of Paules, 1121, a 60. Of a cat hanged in Cheape, and of a dog clothed in a rochet called by the name of Gardener, 1143,a 20. Againſt ſcripture, iuſtlie rewarded, 1223, a 50. ¶ See Deriſion and Mocke.

Jeſuits & maſſing preeſts proclamed againſt, 1315, a 40. Sent ouer ſeas and baniſhed the realme: note well, 1379,a 30, &c: 1380. ¶ See Prieſts ſeminarie.

Jew, and of a good Jewes anſwer to william Rufus, 27,a 60, b 10. Striken by a chriſtian, 118,b 50. Hath his teeth drawne out, 174, a 40. At Teukeſburie falleth into a takes: note, 262,b 60

Jewes and chriſtians diſpute, 27,b 20. Burnt to death, 119, a 10. Sute to William Rufus againſt Jewes become chriſtians: note, 27, a 40. Brought into this land by duke william, 15, a 10. At Lincolne ſlaine and ſpoiled, 272, a 20. Inhabiting London ſlaine for treſon, 267,a 60. Slaine at London, & whie, 263,b 40. Accuſed & executed for crucifieng of a child, 253,a 50. Charged on paine of hanging to paie Henrie the third 8000 marks, 252,a 10. Robbed in Oxford, 238,b 10. Cōſtreined to helpe Henrie the third with monie, 242, b 30. Releaſed out of priſon, 254,a 20. Puniſhed by the purſe for a murther committed, 224, a 30. Meant to crucifie a child in ſpite of Chriſt, 219, a 30. Generallie impriſoned thorough out all England, hated: note, 283,b 20. Baniſhed out of England, and whie, 285, a 50. Drowned, b 10. Giue Henrie third, the third part of all their moueables, 211,b 60. Indicted and puniſhed for abuſing the kings coine, 279, b 30. Crucifie a child, 56, b 20. Grieuouſlie taxed, tormented, and impriſoned, 174,a 30. And where they buried their dead, 101, b 20. Appointed to inroll all their debts, pledges, &c: 145,b 20. Exceedinglie hated and murthered: note, 121, b 50, 122,all. Houſes ſet on fier at London, 118,b 60. Beaten & abuſed by the people, 118,b 60. Meant to preſent king Richard with a rich gift, 118, b 40

Jewell John. ¶ See Biſhop.

Jland diſcouered. ¶ See Sebaſtian.

Images taken awaie & remoued from their places: note, 945, b 10,&c. Remoued out of churches, 979,b 50. Through out the realme pulled downe and defaced, 992,b 20. Taken downe & burned in the ſtreets 1184,b 60,1185,a 10

Impoſt. ¶ See Cuſtome and Subſidie.

Imprecation: note, 248,a 60

Inceſt of king John, 184,b 20

Incloſures of the fields about London caſt downe and ouerthrowne by archers of London, 830,a 10. A proclamation for the laieng of them open, 1002,a 10

Incontinencie of Henrie the ſecond, 115,b 30

Indenture ſextipartite of conſpired noblemen: note, 514,b 60,515,a 20. Tripartite touching conſpiracie, 521,b 60

Indulgences biennals & triennals liberallie granted, 428, b 60

Infection. ¶ See Murren.

Infidelitie ſuſpected in william Rufus, 27,b 20

Ingratitude: note, 862, b 60. Shrewdlie practiſed and ſeuerelie puniſhed, 743, b 50. 744,a 50. A notable example thereof, 605,b 40 Of Fitzoſbert vnnaturall, 149, a 50. Striketh dead, 50, b 30. In all eſtates towards Richard the ſecond, 508,a 50,60. For good ſeruice vnrewarded, and what followed, 21, b 30. Of Odo for his reſtitution: note, 17,a 20. Of cardinall Poole to Henrie the eight that brought him vp, 1165,a 10

Iniurie doone and no reuenge ſought: note, 1117,b 40. ¶ See reuenge.

Iniuſtice, 173,b 30

Innocencie no barre againſt execution, 1066,a 10

Innocent hanged for the nocent 173,a 30

Inquiſitions taken of diuerſe matters: note, 153,b 30. Taken by a iurie of ſundrie matters, 145,a 60. Of the loſſes euerie biſhop had and ſuſteined, &c: 180,b 60. Calld Traile baſton, 312, b 60. Taken of the miſdemeanors of iuſtices, 312,b 40. For abuſors of the kings coine, 279, b 30. For the ſeparating of forreſts, 207 a 50. what were the liberties in times paſt of K. Henrie the thirds grandfather: note, 205, a 10. For waſhers & clippers of monie, 241,a 10. For the valuation of benefices perteining to ſtrangers, 236, b 40. For offendors abuſing clergie men ſtrangers, 214, b 40

Inſurrection about the taking vp of corne, 944,a 60. Of wiat, 1093, b 10. wherein note what miſchefous hurliburlies do chance in a commotion or rebellion, 1094. ¶ See Rebellion.

Interdiction, 175,a 10. Threatned by the pope againſt the king & his clergie, 171,a 10. Of the land ſolemnlie releſed 183,a 20,360,a 50

Interteinment vnfit breedeth malcontentment, 20, b 60. Of the emperor Sigiſmund ſtrange: note, 556, b 40, 50. ¶ See Freendſhip and Hoſpitalitie.

Interuiew. ¶ See Edward the fourth & other kings of England, as French king, &c.

Inuaſions puniſhed and other offenſes againſt the kings peace, 312,b 60. ¶ See England and Scots.

Inueſtitures of churches three daies togither argued vpon, 34,a 30. Of prelats. ¶ See Biſhops and Conſecration.

Iohannes Cremenſis a lecherous legat: note, 42,b 40

John of Gaunt borne, 357, a 60. Maried, 392, a 20. Duke of Lancaſter, 395,b 30. Buried, and his daughter Blanch, 405, a 10

John the king proclamed king of England, 157,a 20,b 40,158 a 10. Made king of Ireland, 109,a 20,101, a 30. Married 117,a 30. His impatiencie to ſee himſelfe brideled by his ſubiects, 186,b 20. Taketh diuerſe caſtels, 189 all. Aided by forren ſouldiors againſt his barons, 187,b 60. Diſquieted, departeth into the Jle of wight, 186,b 50. Crowned K. of England the ſecond time, 165,a 60. From whome the Poictouins reuolt, 164,b 10. Commeth vpon his enimies vnlooked for, 164,b 40. Diuers waies moleſteth the white moonks, 163,a 10. Diuorſed from his wife Jſabell the daughter of earle Robert of Gloceſter, 161,b 60. He & the French king come to a parlee 160,b 10. Paſſeth ouer into Normandie, 160,a 40. Returneth out of Normandie, 161,a 40. Inueſted duke of Normandie, 158,b 20. Commeth out of Normandie into England, 158,b 50. wanting aid againſt the French K. commeth backe to England, 166 b 60. Prepareth an armie to go into France, 168,b 40. Goeth to the ſea, returneth, chargeth certeine of his nobles with treaſon, 169,a 10,20,30. Taketh the ſea, maketh war againſt the French king, 170, a 10,20. Repareth Angiers, 170,b 30. writeth to the pope touching the archbiſhop of Canturburies election, 171,a 40. Threatned with interdiction, he & his realme put vnder the popes curſſe, 171,a 10. Paſſeth into Ireland, 174, a 50. Goeth into wales with an armie, 174,b 60. Puniſheth diuerſe that refuſed to go with him into wales, 175,a 40. His deſtruction put in practiſe by means of the popes legat & the French king, 175, b 40. Deliuereth his crowne to Pandulph, and hath it againe reſtored, 177, a 60, b 10. His words of fealtie made to the the pope,178,a60. what cauſed him to agree with the pope,180,b10. His lords refuſe to folow him into France 181,a10. Commended to the pope for an honorable prince, 182,a10. Remoueth to Angiers, 183, a60. Inuadeth Britaine,183,a40. Taketh vpon him the croſſe to go into the holie land, 184 Subſcribeth to his barons notwithſtanding his oth, 186, b10. Cõmeth to his lords to talke of ſome pacification, 185,b50 Left deſolat of freends, 185,b30. Maketh hauocke on the poſſeſſions of his aduerſaries 193,b50.His noblemen reuolt from him to K. Lewes,192,a10. His children male and female, the deſcription of his perſon, his fortune, his fatengs & doings,196, a10,&c. Inceſtuous & couetous:note, 184,b20. The popes vaſſall, 191,a10. Aſſembleth a great armie againſt the French K. 176,b40. Kneeleth downe to the archbiſhop of Canturburie,& beſought him of forgiuenes,810,b40. His ſon named Oliuer Fitzroie, 202, a50 By whoſe means his nephue Arthur loſt his life,& whie,7, b30. Falleth ſicke of an ague, his raging,194,a50,60. His death diuerſlie reported by writers,194, a60,b all. Reported to an ill purpoſe, 190,b20.His buriall,and corpulencie, 194,b60

Iohn Ball. ¶ See Ball.

Iohn a Chamber a notorious northerne rebell,769, b40,&c. 770,a10,&c. Hanged like an archtraitor, 770,a10

Iohn Tiler. ¶ See Tiler.

Ione de Arc pusell de Dieu, 600, 10,&c,603,b50.Taken priſoner,&c:note,604,a50,60,b10,

Ioie immoderat the cauſe of death, 955,b20

Ipſwich beſeeged, 60,b40

Ireland diuided into ſeuerall eſtates,or kingdoms,80, a50. Moſtlie conquered by Henrie the ſecond,109,b60.Foure Iriſh kings ſubmit themſelues to Richard the ſecond, 481,b30. The yearelie reuenues thereof in Edward the thirds dais,481, a50. Engliſhmen ſent thither to inhabit the Ards in Vlſter, 1257, a20 Soldiors tranſported thither 1314, a30. Inuaded by the popes meanes, 1366, b60 ¶ See Iohn and Soldiors.

Iriſh doo deſtroie Angleſeie, 237,b50. Rebelling, kill the Engliſh,275,a10. Frier appeacheth the duke of Lancaſter of treaſon,445, b40. Miſerablie tormented and put to death,446,a10. To auoid into their owne countrie by proclamation,481,a40. with the lord of Kilmaine arriued at Harflue, 565, b60. Their good ſeruice, 566,a10. wild ſpoile the earle of Kildars countrie,914,a10. Nobilitie ſubmit themſelues to Henrie the eight in England, 957, a10. Seuen hundred in warlike manner paſſe thorough London,& muſter before king Henrie the eight:note, 963,b20,30. Bowes,bagpipes,and darts among them,1259,a10.

Iron gret want within Scotland, 323,a20

Iſabell daughter to the earle of Gloceſter maried vnto Iohn K.Richards brother,117,a30

Iſabell the ſecond wife of king Iohn,& what iſſue ſhe brought him,161,b60.Crowned,162,a30

Iſabell Henrie the thirds mother deceaſeth, 239,a50

Iſabell counteſſe of Cornwall deceaſeth, 225,b60

Iſabell wife to emperor Frederike, deceaſeth, 229,a10

Iſabell de Boulbec. ¶ See Counteſſe.

Iſac. ¶ See Cipriots.

Iſleie knight, all his apparell not worth foure ſhillings, 1099,b20

Iſoldune where ſeated,146,b10

Iudge Morgan fell mad:note, 1099,a60.¶ See Iuſtice.

Iudges and other officers committed to the Tower : note, 360,b40,&c. ¶ See Iuſtices.

Iudgement raſh in an holie father, 109,a20

Iudgement ſecret of God vpon Baniſter & his children after the attaching of the duke of Buckingham, 744,a50,60 ¶ See Reuenge.

Iudith, duke williams neece, whoſe daughter & to whome married,& how indowed, 11,b10

Iurie of twelue men ancient, when inſtituted, & how matters by them ſhould be tried,8 b20. That went vpon ſir Nicholas Throkmorton, appeere in the ſtarchamber, exceſſiuelie fined,1121,b40. Extremelie dealt withall,1122,a10. ¶ See Throckmorton knight. At Exceſter aſſiſe eleuen dead:note, 1548,a60

Iuſtice chiefe of England giueth ouer his office & becommeth a canon,103,a50.An office impoſed vpon prelats. ¶ See Archbiſhop, Iuſtice of Henrie the fift : note, 560,b60,566,a60. A notable example of Edward the firſt vpon his ſon,313,b30. Mingled with mercie, 797, a60. And the commendable care of K. Henrie the ſecond thereof: note, 115, a60. without regard of kinred,315,a20. And what folowed vpon the neglect of the ſame,13,a10.Partlie pretended,734, a60. Peruerted when one is hanged for another, 1007, a20. In warre: note the force therof, 552,a30. Corrupted. ¶ See Bribes.

Iuſtices of peace when & whie inſtituted,8,a60. Itinerants the diuiſion of their circuits, 97,b60. Their oth,98, a10, Die of infection, 1547, b40. 1548,a40.Cheefe of England elected & others depoſed,119,b10.Itinerants cauſe inquiſitions to be made in their circuits, 145,a60. Abuſe iuſtice:note,225,b20. Keepe the terme for plees at S. Sauiors,259,b30. Begin to go their generall circuits, 282,b20. ¶ See Sickneſſe at Exceſter and Oxford. Complained of to Edward the firſt, & puniſhed : note, 284,b60,285, a10,&c. Fined,312,b50.Sat neither in the tower nor elſewhere for a whole yeare, 361, b20. Reſtreined from fees, briberie,& gifts,&c:note,369, b20,Iurors,&c: brought to blockham feaſt by the rebels, 430,a60. Compelled to ſubſcribe, 458, b10

Iuſts at Blie where P: Edward began to ſhew proofe of his chiualrie, 254,a20. At Brackleie, 242, a10. In Cheapſide,348,b50.At Chalons where prince Edward behaued himſelfe worthilie, 276, a20. At Dunſtable, where king and queene were preſent,363,a40. At Greenewich with goodlie ſhews,815 a10.At Greenwich before the emperor Charles, 873,b10. where ſir Francis Brian loſt one of his eies, 892,b60. At London,the maior and aldermen chalengers,&c,392,a40, 50.In the Tower of London & Greenewich,646,b60.Roiall in Tuthill field for the ſpace of eight daies,220,a10. Deuiſed to be holden at Oxford where Henrie the fourth ſhould haue beene murthered, 514,b50,60.within the kings palace of Shine for the ſpace of a moneth, 774, a30. In Smithfield,366,a10,395,b60 Roiall, 473,b30,40,&c:474,a10,&c,535,b60.At weſtminſter with the ſhews and triumphs there,807, a50,60,&c: And ſome hurt done,940,b60 1225, a30. And much hurt doone among the people, 1315, a60. By gentlemen of name, to delight nobles of France note,1316,1317,1318,1319,1320 1321.At windſore, 366,a50. Againſt all commers,497,a10 It & turnie appointed by the lords and by Henrie the third diſappointed,236,b60. Handled in a rougher manner than in theſe daies,245,a10.whereat ſir Arnold Montenſie was ſlaine:note,246,b20.Prohibited by proclamation,311,b10. Betwixt the baſtard of Burgogne & the lord Scales,669, a20. with manie a proper deuiſed ſhew,802,b10,&c: 803,a10,&c.Solemne wherin Henrie the eight himſelfe was a chalenger,835,b10. Kept for honor of his ſiſter the French queene,838,a60,b10,&c: Betweene Henrie the eight and others,844,b10,950,a30,850 a60. Proclamed in ſundrie nations,950,b60,951,a10,&c Roiall in France:note,858,a60,b10,&c:859,a10, &c:860,a10,&c. At Paris, the nobles go thither, decrees for the ſame, how long they laſted, with the maner thereof:note, 833,all. At Tornaie for diſport of the prince of Caſtile & the ducheſſe of Sauoie, 825,a20,¶ See Tilt and Turnies.

K.

Kalendar. ¶ See pope Gregorie.

Katharine daughter to the earle of Huntleie maried to Perkin the rebell,780, a40. Preſented to Henrie the ſeuenth, 784,b.10

Katharine the daughter of Ferdinando ſent ouer into England out of Spaine,788, b40, &c. Married to king Henrie the eight,801, a10. ¶ See queene Katharine & Henrie the eight.

Kelwaie Thomas.¶ See Iuſts triumphant.

Kendall waſted, 91,b10

Kentiſhmen doo lie in wait in woods for the comming of duke william,2,a10,Cannot awaie with bondage, and determine to fight with duke william for their lawes and liberties, 2,a10. The keie of England,2,b10. Send a meſſage to duke william, 2,b10. Had duke william at aduantage, 2, a20, b10, &c. Make an hurlie burlie and commit much miſcheefe, 677,b10.Executed for rebellion,693,a60. Haue thanks of Henrie the ſeuenth for their good ſeruice,780,a10. Rebellion vnder Iohn Tiler.¶ See Tiler.

Ket, his rebellion, a capteine there,1028,b50, 60, to 1042, &c. He meant to haue talked with the earle of warwike, 1037,a60. Power increaſeth, 1032,b60. Apprehended, examined,1039,50,60.Both brothers executed,1240,a50,60.

Killingworth caſtell beſeeged, deliuered to Henrie the third, 272,b10. Fortified againſt Henrie the third, 272, a30. Holden againſt Edward the ſecond, 329,b10

King of Armenia.¶ See Armenia. Of Cipriots. ¶ See Cipriots. Of France. ¶ See French king. Of Ireland. ¶ See Ireland. Of Portingall.¶ See Portingall. Of Spaine.¶ See Spaine, &c.

King can abide no peere in his owne realme : note , 25, a50. In name but not in fame: note,465,a40. what kind of perſon he is or ſhould be, 910, b40.Office hard to diſcharge 740,a40. Beſt kind of gouernment,1052,b30. Iuriſdiction abſolute in their owne realmes, & that the pope hath nothing there to doo, 24,b20, &c. Election & aduancement referred to the people, 1, a40. Oth at his coronation,1, b30.

Kings college in Cambridge founded : note, 691,b40,&c.

Kingdome to obteine what promiſes are made, but not kept. ¶ See Promiſes & People.

Kingſton knight is ſent to fetch by woolſeie areſted of treaſon to Henrie the eight, talke betwixt the ſaid ſir william and him, 916, b30, 50. Prouoſt marſhall, execution of marſhall law : note, 1006, b60, his ill iuſtice,1007, a10. Accuſed of treaſon, his deceaſe, 1132,a40.

Kiriell ſir Thomas, a valiant capteine, 630, a20.

Kiſſe the pax would not the K. with Becket, 78,a10. ¶ See Reconciliation.

Kneuet ſurueior depriued of his office: note,856, a10. An inſtrument to bring the duke of Buckingham to deſtruction, 862,b60

Kneuet knight arreigned for ſtriking in the court, iudged to looſe his hand, he is pardoned, 953,b10,&c.

Kneuet ſir Henrie knight deceaſeth, 974,b60.

Kneuet Edmund knight, his ſeruice in Norffolke rebellion 1031,b30.

Knewſtub. ¶ See Sermon.

Knights of the Bath,511,a10. 733,a20. 931,a50.

Knights order of the Rhodes diſſolued, 951, a40.

Knights of the round table firſt founded. ¶ See Order of the garter.

Knights templers apprehended, and what laid to their charge 319,a 10,&c

Knights three hundred of men of armes to be found,153,a 10 Two hundred fiftie and two beſides demilances taken priſoners by king Iohn, 165, a 20. Made by Henrie the third,240,a 60. According to the value of their lands,248,a 10. To be made according to their reuenues, 254, a 30. Fees, how manie in England in king Henrie the third his time, 262,a 20. Foure ſcore made at once, 263,a 20. Made by the duke of Buckingham at his entrie into France, 426, a 30, 40,b 30 Made of capteins for good ſeruice in warre, 551,a 40

Knighthood,595,b 50. To valorous gentlemen in ſeruice of warres,814,b 20. For good militarie ſeruice, 824, b 50, 874,a 50,880,b 40. Vrged,or elſe to make fine,929, b 40. For ſeruice doone againſt the enimie,962,b 40,&c. 991,b 40 992,a 20,1216,b 40,1222,a 60

Knolles knight ſent with an armie into France, 405,a 20. Borne in Cheſhire, his counſell not followed, 405, b 60. The feare that the enimies had of him, 406, b 50. His ſeueritie,445, b 10. Deceaſeth, remembrances of him, 533, b 40

Knolles Francis knight ſent ouer to view the ſtate of Newhauen, 1202,b 30. His foure ſonnes in a triumphant ſhew, 1319,b 60. ¶ See Auxerre, and Iuſts triumphant.

L.

LAborers, an act of parlement for the drawing of them in order, 835,b 20

Lacie Hugh, and of king Henrie the ſeconds gift vnto him,82, b 30. Slaine in Ireland,109 b 60. His puiſſance and contempt, his diligence to inlarge his poſſeſſions in Ireland, 110,a 10

Lacie Robert conſtable of Cheſter hangeth two for ſpite,133 b 40

Lacie Roger a Norman, 17,a 60

Lacie walter in armes againſt the rebels, 11,a 50

Lacies conſtables of Cheſter by inheritance, their eſtimation and credit,215, b 60,217,a 10,20,&c. Erls of Lincolne of whenſe they had their originall, 20,a 30

Laignie on the riuer of Maine beſieged, 608,a 10

Lambe eſquier, a good common wealths man, deceaſeth, his acts and deeds full of charitie: note, 1311,a 60,b 10,&c:1312, his epitaph, 1313,a 40

Lambert earle of Lens, 11,b 10

Lambert Simenill. ¶ See Simenill.

Lamperdeuaux caſtell builded, 279,b 10. Taken, 281,a 10

Lancaſter and Yorke houſe, and the vniting of them in one intended,740,b 40. Furthered 741,a 10,&c: 742,a 10,&c:743, a 10, &c. Some matter concerning both worthie the reading, 761,a 20,30

Lancaſter houſe, and how malicious Margaret the ducheſſe of Burgogne was thereunto,765,b 10. Enuied 776,a 10

Land, and how manie acres an hide conteineth, 13,b 10

Lands let out for yearelie rent in duke williams time,8,a 40 Morgaged for monie, 17, a 30. Of the church defended and recouered by archbiſhop Lanfranke: note 18,a 60,b 10

Landoiſe corrupted with rewards betraieth the earle of Richmond into Richard the thirds hands,747,b 10,20,30, 40, 50, 60. His expectation diſappointed by the priuie and vnknowne departing of the earle, 748,a 60

Lanfranke an Italian the three and thirtith archbiſhop of Canturburie,9,a 20. His authoritie great among all the lords of England, 16, a 30. His counſell to william Rufus to winne the nobles fauor, 16,a 10. Diligent care for the ſafetie of william Rufus,17,b 20. In fauor with pope Alexander, 9,a 40. Aſſiſteth duke william in armes againſt the rebelles, 9, b 50. Calleth a councell of the clergie,11,b 60. Praiſed for holding with the monks, 18,b 10. Enuied for his proſperities ſake,17,a 10,20. His death,18 a 40, with a deſcription of certeine his qualities, and diuerſe of his acts and deeds,18 40,a 50

Largeſſe of william Rufus at his coronation: note, 16,a 40

Law marſhall a burthen intollerable, 1052, b 10, Executed, 1199, a 50. 566,a 60, 1007,a 10, &c. ¶ See Soldiors.

Law ſalike, 836,a 60, 545,b 40

Law of armes: note, 669,a 60, 577, b 40. Violated by the French,1204,b 50. Touching heralds violated, 984, a 40

Law of duke william againſt ſuch as forced anie women, 15,b 50

Law to be quite aboliſhed at the rebelles requeſt, 432,a 50

Law againſt buieng and ſelling on the ſundaie, 624,a 20

Lawes penall of duke william: note,14,a 20. Confeſſed to be vnequall,8,b 40: note. Of S. Edward ſuppoſed moſt equall and indifferent, 10, a 20. Of william Rufus ſharpe, rigorous, and peremptorie, 20, b 10. Of king Henrie the firſt commanded to be vniuerſallie obſerued, 181,a 30

Lawes written in the Norman toong not vnderſtood of the Engliſh: note, void of conſcience and equitie,8,b 10. Of England ancient abrogated and eſtabliſhed, 8,a 60. Remaine in Kent onelie, 2,b 30

Lawes and liberties fought for, 2,a 10

Lawiers to plead their caſes in Engliſh,&c:396,a 20. Broght to blockham feaſt by the rebelles,430,a 60. Fraudulent puniſhed, 950,b 30

Lecture. ¶ See Surgerie.

Leeds caſtell beſieged,327,b 60, And yeelded, 328,a 10

Legat Anſelme with his authoritie from Rome, 39,b 60 Ferentino gathereth much monie in England, 170,b 10 Gualos practiſes to get monie,193,a 20. Iohn de Anagnia from Rome to procure peace betweene kings, 113, b 60. Otho cardinall, and what dutie he gathered of the clergie, 208, a 30. Pandulph, ¶ See Pandulph: note.

Legat from the pope about reformation, a bawdie knaue,42 b 40. with the archbiſhop of yorks pall, 36, a 50. ¶ See archbiſhop: note,29,a 40. A ſhift by forbearing the name, 239, b 50. ¶ See Cardinall.

Legats from Rome to reconcile the biſhop of Elie and the archbiſhop of Rouen,137,a 50 They practiſe for their owne aduantage,100,b 10. Authoriſed to celebrate a marriage, 98,a 50. Not regarded, they excommunicate, 37, b 30. From the pope about Beckets death, 82,b 50

League betwixt England and Flanders,354,b 30. Concluded,296,b 50. Renewed, 160, a 50. Betweene England and France,897,b 50. Renewed,193,b 60: note, 768,b 60 Confirmed,1229,a 40, 1238,a 30. Betweene England and Scotland, 1402, b 30. with the Scots and French to annoie the Engliſh, 296,a 10. Betweene the emperour and king Henrie the fift, 557, b 20,&c. Betweene king Henrie the eight and the emperor 959, b 60. Betweene king Henrie and the duke of Britaine, 568, a 60. Betweene king Henrie the fift and the duke of Burgogne, and how articulated, 575, b 30. with king Henrie the third and the welſh nobilitie vpon certeine articles, 226,b 50,&c. Secret betwixt the pope and certeine ſtates of Italie, 893, a 10

League of peace to breake, an euill deed, 820, b 60. ¶ See Peace and Truce.

Leiceſter wonne by force, 89, a 40. The wals and the caſtell raced, 98,b 20

Leigh knight. ¶ See Iuſts triumphant.

Leith burned,990,a 30. More riches found there than was looked for in anie towne of Scotland,962,a 30. Entred by the Engliſh armie, and by them poſſeſſed and ſpoiled: note,962,a 30. Aſſailed on the ſeuenth of Maie, 1191, a 20. The great ſkirmiſhes betweene the Engliſh & French there in queene Eliſabeths time,1186,b 40,&c.1187,1188. 1189. The French men driuen into it,1188,b 10. A fire in it, and augmented with ſhot of ordinance and windie wether,1190,a 50. Maipoles ſet vp therein on Maie daie, b 10. whie the deſcribing of the ſiege thereof is ſo largelie ſet downe,1193,a 20. Peace concluded thereabouts, a 40, &c. Burned to the ground, 963,a 20

Leofwins malicious mind againſt Liulfus: note, 12, b 30

Leolin prince of wales ſummoned to come and doo his homage,278, a 10. And the welſh rebels accurſſed, 281,a 20. His wife taken from him, he beginneth to make wars, maketh ſute for peace,278, a 50, 60. Reſtored to hir huſband,279,b 10. He ſueth for peace, 278,b 10. Beginneth new warres, 279,b 60. Inuadeth Edward the firſts freends,281,b 10. Diſcomfited,205,a 30. Inuadeth the Engliſh borders,213, b 60. His courage,214,a 10. Spoileth the marches of England,217,a 20. Made cuckold and how he reuenged it, 211, b 60. waſteth and ſpoileth all the marches betwixt wales and Shrewſburie, 218, a 30. Deceaſeth,224. Slaine, his head preſented to Edward the firſt,281,b 40,60

Leopald. ¶ See duke of Auſtrich.

Lerning in the earle of Mellents ſonnes: note, 44,a 60

Letter of king Iohn to his nobles of England, touching his victories, and taking of duke Arthur priſoner, 165, a 10. Of the proud biſhop of Elie to the ſhiriffe of Kent,130, b 30. Of the pope to the cleargie of England for the celebrating of a holie daie, 85, b 10. Of king Richard the firſt to the ſtates of England for the depoſing the biſhop of Elie,132,a 30. Of the emperor to the ſtates of England, touching his deliuerance, 140,b 20. Of Richard the firſt to the archbiſhop of Canturburie, touching his deliuerance out of priſon, 140,a 50. To the duke of Auſtrich, cleering Richard the firſt of the death of the marqueſſe of Montferrat, 136, a 50. Of Henrie the fourth to pope Gregorie and the cardinals, 535, a 40, &c. Of william Northbourgh the kings confeſſor deſcribing the kings voiage into France,373,b 50, &c. Seditious of a prieſt, 437, b 30. Of E. W, concerning the earle of Eſſex walter Deuereux,1266,a 60,b 10,&c. Of cardinall Como to Parrie for reſolution to kill queene Eliſabeth, 1388, b 10. Of Creitchton to ſir Francis Walſingham touching Parries intended murthering of the queene, 1388, a 10. Of Boner vnto cardinall Poole, concerning perſecution, 1164 a 10. Of the councell to Edmund Boner as touching queene Marie conceiued with child,1123,b 60. Of the ladie Marie, touching hir chalenge vnto the crowne, 1084, b 50. with an anſwer of the lords, 1085, a 40. Of the king to the lord Cheinie, at his going into France: note,1123. Right excellent of the duke of Summerſet to the Scotiſh nobilitie touching the marriage betweene Edward the ſixt and the queene of Scots,998,b 10 &c. 999, 1000,1001,a 10. Of defiance from the Scotiſh K. to Henrie the eight, 820. Of the French king priſoner to his mother the regent of France,884,b 50,60. Of Gefferie the kings baſe ſonne to Richard archbiſhop of Canturburie, turburie,104,b 10. Of Gardiner to Boner, touching the celebrating of pope Julies funerals,1128,a 60, b 10. Of yoong king Henrie touching the diſappointment of archbiſhop Richards conſecration,86,a 10. Of Henrie the ſecond touching the pacification betwéene him and Thomas Becket,78,a 20. Of the popes. ¶ Sée Pope.

Letters of the duke of Summerſet and the lord Ruſſell, 1057,a 60,b 20. Of Henrie the ſixt to the duke of Yorke, 638, a 60. Of the duke of Yorke to Henrie the ſixt,637, b 60, 638, a 10,&c. Of the duke of Gelderland to Richard the ſecond: note,475,b 60,&c. 476,a 10, &c. Concerning prince Edwards doings and procéedings beyond ſea,384,a 10, &c. Of Parrie to quéene Eliſabeth & lords of the councell after his voluntarie confeſſion: note, 1387, a 20,b 10. Of ſubmiſſion and ſute of one Francis Throckmorton traitor againſt quéene Eliſabeth and the realme, 1373, a 60,b 60,1374. He is executed, 1375, b 30. Miſſiue taken from the quéenes ambaſſadors ſeruants, 1195, b 20. Seditious of a biſhop ſent into a forren realme: note, 17,a 10. Treaſonable, 428, a 60. Of protection from the French king to the king of England, 102,a 60
Letters intercepted, 329, b 10.
Letters patents reuoked, 526, b 50
Lewin a welſhman hanged: note his trecherie,299,b 60, 300,a 10,&c,
Lewis the French king inclineth to peace with Henrie the third,201,b 10. Deceaſeth 208,b 60,209,a 10. His ſons intituled to the kingdome of England,201,b 20. Sendeth to his father for aid,200,b 60. An armie prepard in France to ſuccour him,201,a 10 His faire,200,b 10. Mainteineth his title pretended to the crowne of England,191,a 50 ¶ Sée French king.
Lewis le groſſe, 34,b 60
Lewis. ¶ Sée Phyſician.
Libell againſt cardinall Wolſeie, 895,a 30. Seditious againſt Henrie the ſeuenth, and the libellors executed, 778, a 60. Cauſing loſſe of life,746,b 10 Set on the duke of Northfolks gate forewarning him of trecherie againſt Richard the third, and of his owne ſafetie, 759, b 10. Againſt the quéene and realme are falſe,1363,a 40. Publiſhed in Italian againſt quéene Eliſabeth, and the ſame anſwered, 1418,a 40. Printed againſt quéene Eliſabeth, 1370,b 60. Againſt the cleargie, 558,b 20. ¶ Sée Bookes ſeditious.
Liberalitie of Richard the firſt wonderfull,126,b 30. Of the earle of Arundell: note,454,b 50. Of Edward the firſt to his nobles,308,a 40. Of ſir Thomas Sackuill to the French,1224,b 60,1225, a 10. Of William Rufus,27, a 20. Repented: note,20,b 10. In a prince commended, 16,b 10
Libertie preferred before a kingdome,726,b 60. Obteined by gentle language,673,a 60,b 10. Bought with monie, 140,a 20, b 60. ¶ Sée Ranſome. Obteined by great words and proud brags,23,b 60,24,a 10. Deſired aboue all things: note, 1046,a 30,60
Liberties. ¶ Sée Lawes, Londoners, Priuileges, and Southworke.
Licence to build caſtels, 47,a 30 Of king Richard the firſt to gather riches,120,a 60. For the Engliſh iuſts and turnie: note,145,b 60. Aſked of Henrie the third of the commonaltie to paſſe ouer ſea, 262,a 30. To burie the bodies of the rebels,335, a 60. And that without it none ſhould depart the realme,20,b 40. To depart the realme, ſought and obteined, 14,b 10
Lie, & how dangerous to credit: note, 587,a 50
Life to ſaue what ſhifts noblemen can be content to make, 460,b 30
Lightening. ¶ Sée Thunder.
Limerike a kingdome, 101,b 10
Limoges beſieged, taken by force, 406,a 10,40. Rendered to king Henrie the ſecond, 107,b 20
Lincolne beſieged,56,b 10. Taken, 272, a 10. Wonne by the French, 192,b 60
Lincolne caſtell, 6,a 40
Lincolne John the author of the inſurrection on ill Maie daie, the griefes particulariſed in his bill for the cities behoofe, a great enimie to ſtrangers, proſecuteth his information of gréeuances by ſpecialties, 840, b 10, 20, 40, 50,60. Indicted, & what laid to his charge, he is executed in Cheapſide, 843,b 40,60
Lincolneſhiremen throw awaie their cotes the lighter to run awaie,674,a 20. In armes againſt Henrie the eight, 941, a 50,&c. They giue ouer their rebellious enterpriſe, 941, b 10. Submit themſelues and receiue a new oth of fealtie, 941,b 20,30
Liſle yéelded vnto the French king, 304,b 40
Litleton a iudge of the common plées, 702,b 10
Liulfus ſlaine, and what miſchiefe thereof inſued, 12,b 30
Loialtie of the citizens of Rouen vnto king John: note, 167,b 40. ¶ Sée Oth.
Loiterer deſcribed, 1050, b 20
London the onelie place for the Jewes to burie their dead, 101,b 20. When their burgeſſes were choſen commonlie called their councell,164,a 40. The bailiffes thereof committed to priſon, and whie, 171, b 40. Bridge repared, 172, b 10. Conſumed with fier,176,b 10. Bridge on fier, 791, The kings eſpeciall chamber,729,b 20. Wall part thereof newlie built,702,b 60. Sore vexed, aſſalted, & in ſundrie places ſpoiled, & burnt, 689,b 10,&c 690,a 10,&c. When it firſt began to receiue the forme and ſtate of a commonwelth,120,a 20. Of how manie wards it conſiſteth, 120,a 30. Men of armes & archers lie round about it twentie miles compaſſe as it were in campe,451, b 50. The armes thereof augmented by addition of a dagger, 436, b 20. Liberties ſeized into king Edward the firſts hands, 282,b 60. Confirmed, the rent of the farme of the ſhiriffes increaſed,274, b 40. The liberties thereof ſeized into Henrie the thirds hands, the ſhiriffes impriſoned,251,b 40,&c. Wals decaied and newlie repared, 256,a 40. The cuſtodie thereof committed to the conſtable of the Tower: note, 256,b 20. Under the rule of prince Edward, &c: he appointeth the maior and ſhiriffes, 274,b 20. In charge of the biſhop of Exceſter, 338, a 40. Bridge and the tower there taken downe, 1270, a 30. Serued with Thames water by pipes brought into ſeuerall houſes, 1384, b 50. Where much hurt was done with wind,19,b 10. A great part of it burned to the ground, 14,b 10. And of the charter granted vnto the citizens by duke William, 15,a 60
Londoners prouident and pitifull in the time of ſcarſitie, 476,b 60, 477,a 10. Purſued by prince Edward, 268, a 10. Refuſe to lend the king a thouſand pounds, 477, b 50. Reuolt from the duke of Northfolke going againſt Wiat,1094,b 60. Take Wiats part, 1095, b 40. Receiuing of the duke of Summerſet at his returne out of Scotland, 992,a 60. Kéepe S. Barnabées daie holie daie,1062,b 10. Redineſſe to aſſiſt Edward the ſixt in a motion & worke of charitie, 1082, a 10, 40. They & gentlemen of courts by the eares,623,a 30. Skirmiſh with Jacke Cade and his rebels vpon London bridge,635,a 10. Prouidence for ſafegard of peace,647,a 50 Loiall and diſcloſers of treaſons,428,a 60. Are ſpited and enuied at,421,a 20,30. Abuſed of ſtrangers whereof followed the riot of ill Maie daie, 840,a 20,&c: b 10,&c: 841,842, 843,844. Interteine and banket the king of Denmarke, 878,b 10. Hated of cardinall Wolſeie, 895, a 30,40. Set forth a power into France, 969,b 10. Lend Henrie the eight 20000 pounds,874,a 20 Glorious receiuing of Henrie the eight, and the emperor Charles,873,b 10,20. Statelie and gorgious muſter before Henrie the eight: note, 947,a 40,&c: b 10,&c. Conſpire to take the empreſſe Maud, 53,b 60. Sue to king John for a maior and two ſhiriffes, 172,b 30. Sore affraid of the Corniſh rebels,782,a 50. Reſolue to receiue Edward the fourth, and reuolt from Henrie the ſixt, 683, a 60. Grant fiue thouſand marks to Edward the fourth, which were ſeized of the fiue and twentie wards,704, b 60. Loiall to Edward the fourth: note, 689,b 20. Riot againſt the Jewes at king Richard the firſts coronation,118, b 10,&c: 119,a 10, &c. Valiantneſſe, & among them of two aldermen,690, a 50, b 20. Preſent monie to king Richard the firſt,119, b 60. Large priuileges and liberties. 119,b 60. And the priuileges of their communaltie by whom granted, 131, b 30. Triumphant receiuing of king Richard the firſt into the citie, 141, b 60. Hardlie reported of by an Almaine lord, 141, b 60. Serue Richard the firſt in his butterie at his coronation: note,143, b 40. Fowle diſorder noted, and complained of to Richard the firſt, 149,a 40. Refuſed to fight againſt the lords,459, a 10,60. Speciallie affraid of the French forces,451,b 30. In perplexitie whether to take part with Richard the ſecond or with the nobles, 462,a 60. They incline to the lords,461 a 60. Receiuing of the duke of Lancaſter, 505, b 40,50. Fauourers of wicliffes doctrine,440,b 20. Méet the K. and quéene on Blackheath, 487, a 60, b 10, &c. Seale to blanke charters, &c: to win Richard the ſeconds fauour, 469, a 10. Euill reported of for their vnſtableneſſe, 457, b 20. Commended themſelues to the fauour of Richard the ſecond before the deth of Edward,415,b 40. They ſubmit their quarell with the earle of Lancaſter to the kings order,416,a 10. Fréends to the earle of Northumberland, 439,b 10. Aiders of the rebels of Kent and Eſſex, 430, b 60. The lords of the land ſtand in doubt of them, 426, b 30. Pretilie couſened of a thouſand markes by king Henrie the third, 247, b 50. Gift to the duke of Bedford at his returne from beyond ſea,491,a 40. Sued vnto to make choiſe of two to be their king, 1. a 40. Appointed to kéepe the ſubſidie granteth by the parlement, 418, b 60. Baniſhed the citie, 283, a 60. Their magiſtrats depoſed & new ordeined in their roome, 204,b 10. Haue frée warren granted them of king Henrie the third, and other liberties,208,a 10. They & the conſtable of the tower at variance, 263, b 60. Outrage whetted with ill counſell,204 a 40. Haue frée libertie to paſſe toll frée through all England,208,b 30. Paie Henrie the third 5000 marks for a fine,208,b 40. Haue a grant to vſe a common ſeale, 210, a 40. Good deuotion towards the earle of Kent, 215, a 60. Terrified with thunder,216, b 10. Seruice at the mariage of Henrie the third, 219, b 40, 60. Caſt in priſon and depriued of their liberties, 270, b 50,60. Sworne to be true to Henrie the third and his heirs,264,a 30. Riot vpon the biſhop of Saliſburies men, 478, a 20. Grieuouſlie complained of to the king, their liberties ſeized vpon, a gardian appointed to gouerne them, their liberties in part confirmed in part condemned, gifts preſented by them to pacifie the kings diſpleaſure, 478, all. More gifts giuen by them to the king, their liberties ratified,479,a 10,20. In great diſorder, 265, a 60. Curſtlie handled, their citie com-committed to a gardian or cuſtos: note, 271, a 30, 40. Pardoned by Henrie the thirds charter, 271, b 20. Pardoned for receiuing the earle of Gloceſter into their citie, 273, b 40. Goldſmiths and tailors togither by the eares, 274, a 50. Rob the houſe of the lord Greie, 264, a 60. Buie Henrie the thirds plate to his great loſſe, 241, a 20. They and the abbat of weſtminſter at ſtrife, 242, b 60. Receiuing in of the counteſſe of Prouance, 231, a 50. Paie a tallage and are grieued, 238, b 10 Fined at fiftéene hundred marks for receiuing a baniſhed man into their citie, 236, a 30. Helpe Henrie the third at a pinch, 247, a 10, 20. Haue their liberties reſtored vnto them, 252, a 60. Called barons in deriſion, 247, b 60. Gréedie dealing to the hurt of the commonwelth, 257, a 60 Agrée with the barons, 266, b 20. Spoiled at Croidon, 269, a 30. In an vprore choſe new officers, 273, a 30. Glad to ſubmit themſelues to Henrie the third, put to their fine, 271, a 10. Game of wreſtling, and what tumult followed, 204, a 10, &c. Take part with the quéene & hir adherents, 338, all, 339, a 10. Vnrulie & giuen to ſedition: note, 338, b 10. Set priſoners at libertie out of the Tower, 338, b 50. Loialtie, auouching to kéepe traitors out of their gates, 338, a 10. Behead a citizen & a biſhop in a riot, 338, b 10, 30 Will not permit king Edward the thirds iuſtices to ſit within the citie, 361, b 20. Haue their franchiſes confirmed, 343, a 40. Lent Edward the third monie to be paid againe out of the ſubſidie monie, 357, b 40. In arms againſt the duke of Lancaſter, ment to haue ſlaine him, 412, a 20. Outrage for words ſpoken to their biſhop, 412, a 20. Commended, 1402, b 10. Foure thouſand trained vp for ſeruice in the field, 1402, a 60, b 10. Muſter before quéene Eliſabeth at Gréenewich, 1184, b 10. Their thréefold plague, 1206, a 20. Houſhold ſtuffe ſold by a common crier or belman, 1207, a 50. Trained vp in the field, 1228, a 50, 60. Loue and hartie goodwill towards quéene Eliſabeth, 1377, a 20. Withſtand duke William, 1, b 10. Loue to quéene Eliſabeth manifeſted on the daie of hir coronation: note & obſerue it well, 1172, 1173, &c: Their farewell vnto hir, going out at Templebar 1178, b 60, Hir laſt words to them by waie of promiſe, 1179 a 30

Lone of monie taken by Henrie the eight, 957, a 10

Longchampe. ¶ Sée Biſhop of Elie.

Longland doctor miſliketh of Henrie the eights marriage with his brothers wife, 906, b 20

Lords created and made, 480, a 20 Conſpiring againſt Richard the ſecond. ¶ Sée Noblemen.

Lords and ladies put out of the court, &c. 463, a 50, &c.

Lords of miſrule. ¶ Sée Ferrers.

Loſaunge. ¶ Sée Herbert.

Loſecote field, 674, a 20

Lotterie at London called the great lotterie, 1211, a 60, b 10

Lou Hugh how he became earle of Cheſter. 20, a 10, His death and what iſſue he had, 20, a 40

Loue that Edward the ſecond bare Péers Gaueſton, 320, a 20. ¶ Sée Péers Gaueſton, and Edward the ſecond. Of the people to the lord Cobham: note, 544, b 30. Of Henrie the ſeuenth to his wife ladie Eliſabeth, 768, a 60. Of a mother naturall and kind: note, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721. Of the duke of Britaine to the earle of Richmond incorruptible, 747, b 10, &c: 748, b 20. Vnlawfull of Richard the third towards his néece, 751, a 50. Of naughtie men conuerted into deadlie hate, 739, b 10, &c. wanton miſleadeth and bréedeth diſcord, 672 b 40, 50. Of the people to the earle of warwike: note, 679. ¶ Sée Earle of warwike in Henrie the ſixts time, & Edward the fourth. Of a concubine to hir paramour, 149, b 60. Of king Richard the ſecond to the earle of Oxford, & earle of Suffolke: note, 454, a 10, 20, 30, 40. ¶ Sée more in Earles. Of the father to the children, preferment to the mother, 486, a 10. Betwéene man and wife exemplified, 481, a 20. Of a Jewiſh woman made a decon, plaid the apoſtata, 203, b 60. Gotten by liberalitie and profit, 454, b 60 Blind & vngodlie, 586, a 30. And luſt with the danger & miſchiefe of both, 545, a 40, 50, &c. Vnlawfull, with the ſhamefull end thereof, 937, b 40. Therein is loſſe euen of life: note, 41, b 30: note, 423, b 20

Loue French, 699, b 60

Louell william held the caſtell of Carte, 48, b 60. Lord, his rebellion, he eſcapeth, 764, a 60 b 30. Arriueth in Flanders, continueth conſpiror againſt Henrie the ſeuenth, 766, a 20. Knight, ſent ouer to Calis with a power, 831, b 40, 50

Louiers beſieged, 609, a 20. And yéelded vp, 564, a 60, b 10

Louthian ſpoiled by the Engliſh, 89, a 60

Low countries. ¶ Sée States.

Lucie Richard lord chiefe iuſtice of England deceaſeth, 103, a 50

Ludlow wonne by king Stephan, 50, b 10

Lumleie lord founder of ſurgerie lecture in London: note, 1349, a 20

Lupus. ¶ Sée Lou.

Luſt of william Rufus, 18, b 10 ¶ Sée Loue.

M.

Magdalen counterfeted to be king Richard the ſecond, 515, a 50

Magiſtrats authoritie great & peremptorie, 1042, b 10. Are to be honored both in ſpéech & maners, 1043, a 50

Magna charta, 308, b 10, 306, a 40, 185, b 60. Promiſed to be mainteined, 248, a 40. Confirmed, 207, a 40, 312, b 20

Magnanimitie. ¶ Sée Quéene Eliſabeth.

Magnus, admerall of rouers his exploits, 23, a 50

Maid ſmiteth a maior in the face, 1021, b 10

Maie daie the euill. ¶ Sée Rebellion of Lincolne.

Maidſtone, eſquire, offereth to fight in his ladies quarell, 527, b 40

Maigame roiall, 806, a 30, 809, a 20, &c.

Mainpriſe, 144, a 50, 513, b 60

Maior or Maire, and what the word ſignifieth, 172, b 50

Maior of London ſworne to be true to Henrie the third, 264, a 30. In information againſt him to king Henrie the third, 256, b 10. Diſcharged of his place for a while, 256, b 20. Condemned to priſon and all his goods confiſcat, 446, a 50. A ſeuere puniſher of adulterie in his time, 440, b 10. Fiue aldermen knighted, 436, b 10. His words at the rebellion of wat Tiler, 432, b 60. And ſhiriffes impriſoned at windſore, 478, a 50. Commended for his carefull prouiſion of corne from beyond the ſeas in the time of dearth, 476, b 10. His raſh and vnaduiſed anſwer, 458, b 60. Juſtlie commended, 452, a 40. And his brethren challenge all commers at iuſts, 392, a 40, 50. Forced to take an oth, 338, b 10. And what order he tooke to ſée the kings peace kept: note, 326, b 60. Sworne, and went home in a greie cloke, 795, b 60 He and aldermen feaſted by Edward the fourth: note, 705, a 30. Accuſed of treaſon: note, 670, a 40. Departeth from ſargeants feaſt diſcontent bicauſe he ſat not higheſt in the hall: note, 667, b 30. His office and authoritie, 120, a 40. One for the ſpace of twentie and one yeares, 172, b 40. And ſhiriffs the firſt that were choſen, 172 b 20. And bailiffes choſen out of the number of fiue and thirtie burgeſſes, 164, a 40. And ſhiriffes reſiſted at Clerkenwell, 641, b 10. And welcomming home of Henrie the fift out of France, 556, a 30. That firſt ware a rich collar of gold and of whoſe gift, 961, b 10. Of councell vnto Henrie the eight, 961, a 60, b 10. In a gowne of crimſon veluet, 931. And aldermen of London in blacke mourning arraie come to Henrie the eight with a heauie ſute of ill Maie daie, 843, b 60, 844, a 10. Sometime an officer: note, 764, b 60. Feaſt firſt kept at Guildhall, 789, b 30. ¶ Sée Contention, London, and Souldiors.

Maiors feaſt none kept at Guildhall, 1206, a 30, 1211, b 60, 1260, a 10, 1262, a 10

Maior of Bodmin in Cornewall hanged, 1007, a 10. Of Exceſter ſmitten on the face by a maid, 1021, b 10, 20. Of Norwich his order of receiuing the quéene Eliſabeth, 1287, a 30, 60, 1288, a 10, &c. Oration in Engliſh which he made to the quéene, 1288, a 50, 60, b 40, &c. His gift preſented vnto hir 1289, a 10, 20. Purpoſing to make another oration to the quéene, is willed to forbeare, & whie, 1298, b 20. He is knighted, 30.

Malcolme king of Scots deſtroieth manie places in the north parts, 10, a 60. Sendeth to duke William to treat of peace, 10, b 40. Doth homage to duke william for Scotland, 10, b 50. Marieth Edgar Ethelings ſiſter, 6, a 30. Commeth to Gloceſter, 20, b 60. Did fiue times waſte Northumberland: note, 21, a 10. Enioieth the earldome of Huntington, 66, b 50. Inuadeth England, ſueth for peace, 19, b 20, 20, b 60. He and his ſonne ſlaine, 21, a 10.

Malcontentment, 738, b 60, 790, a 10. Grew to a conſpiracie, 941, a 20, 30, &c. Of the earle of Montague: note, 32, b 10. Of Parrie becauſe he might not haue preferment to his liking 1383, b 60. ¶ Sée Counſell, Parrie, and Rebellion.

Malcus made and conſecrated biſhop of waterford, 22, b 60.

Malice of duke william againſt the Engliſh, 9, a 10. ¶ Sée William. of Leofwin breketh into murther, 12, b 30. Betwéene the two dukes, of Burgogne and Orleance, and the chéefe cauſe thereof, 529, a 40. Of the earle of Cornwall to the citie of London, 251, b 50. Betwéen king Richard the ſecond, and the duke of Gloceſter, 487, b 40. Of cardinall Poole againſt king Henrie the eight, 1134, b 60. Afreſh betwixt Edward the fourth and the duke of Clarence, brethren, 703, a 30. Of the earle of warwicke againſt Edward the fourth: note, 670, b 10, 50, &c. Of Richard the firſt and the French king one againſt another, 146, a 60. Of the French king againſt Richard the firſt: note, 141, a 20. Betwéene dukes of Summerſet and Yorke: note, 625, b 40, 50. Of the ducheſſe of Burgogne to the line of Lancaſter, 776, a 10. ¶ Sée Margaret. Betwéene the duke of Summerſet and the duke of Yorke: note, 612, b 10, Of the cardinall woolſeie mortall againſt the duke of Buckingham, 855, b 10, 66. Of the Frenchmen and their dogged ſtomachs, 840, a 20, &c. Againſt Henrie, breaking out into an intent of murther, and the partie executed, 223, a 40, &c. Of the lords againſt the earle of Cornewall increaſed: note, 319, b 10. Betwixt great eſtates about matters of mariage, 774, a 60.

Malice inconuenient vnto the malicious: note, 17, a 10. Cloked burſteth out, 264, a 40. Inferreth murther: note, 489 a 60, b 10. Thirſteth after reuenge: note, 304, b 30. And the nature thereof, 1418, b 60, 1419, a 10. Burſteth out into murther: note, 673, a 30. whereupon ariſe ſlanders, 63, b 60. Trauelleth ſtill to reuenge, 641, b 60. To appeaſe, a labour dangerous, 646, b 60. In a realme, the mortall miſchiefe thereof, 630, b 60. Notablie diſſembled: note, 622, b 60. How miſchiefouſlie it worketh to reuenge, 962, b 40, &c: note, 590, b 60, 591, a 10, &c.

10,&c. Content with no reuenge,431,a 20,&c. ¶ Sée Enmie, Hate, and Reuenge.

Man Ile taken by Robert Bruſe,318,b 10. ¶ Sée Harold.

Manners knight lord Ros created earle of Rutland,892, a 50

Manners Thomas knight his militarie ſeruice in Scotland, 1216,b 40,&c. ¶ Sée Erle, and Rutland.

Manwood lord chéefe baron of the excheker a góod commonwelths man: note his déeds, 1377,1378

Mallet william ſhiriffe of yorke and his familie taken priſoners and put to ranſome,7, a 20

Marble ſtone wherupon kings of Scots ſat at their coronation, tranſferred to weſtminſter, 301,a 10,20

Marchades a valiant capteine, 154,b 30.155,b 40. A góod ſeruitor in warres, 158,b 30

Marcher earle of Mercia flieth into Scotland,6,a 30. Impriſoned by william Rufus,16, a 30. Reconciled vnto king william,9,b 40. withdraweth from the battell againſt duke william,1,a 30. Flieth into Elie for defenſe againſt duke william, 10,a 40

Margaret Dowglaſſe priſoner in the Tower, 940, b 50. Pardoned, releaſed,945, a 10

Margaret the wife of K. Henrie while not crowned,76,b 60

Margaret ſiſter to earle Hugh of Cheſter, married to John Bohune, 20,a 40

Margaret and Chriſtine, the ſiſters of Edgar Etheling,6, a 30

Margaret the daughter of king william of Scotland maried to earle Conan, 7,b 30

Margaret daughter to the quéene of Scots and of the earle Angus borne, 838 a 10

Margaret daughter vnto the French king affianced vnto Henrie the kings ſonne of ſeuen yeres old,68,a 50. Crowned quéene, 82,b 60

Margaret ducheſſe of Saliſburie beheaded, 703,b 10

Margaret ſiſter to Edward the fourth, ſent ouer to the duke of Burgogne: note, 669, b 30,&c.

Margaret counteſſe of Lenex ſent to the Tower,1208,b 20, Deliuered out of the Tower, 1209,b 60

Margaret ducheſſe of Burgogne, ſiſter to Edward the fourth, malicious to Lancaſter houſe,765,b 10. Hir malice againſt the line of Lancaſter,776,a 10. Hir new counterfet of Richard Plantagenet, 775,a 60

Margraue of Baden and his wife great with child come to London,1208, b 40. She is deliuered of a child, b 50. The quéene giueth the name, 60. ¶ Sée Marqueſſe.

Marie the eldeſt daughter vnto Henrie the eight borne,838, a 30. Remoueth to Fremingham caſtell, 1085, b 40. To Keninghall in Northfolke, hir letters to the councell, with hir chalenge vnto the crowne by right of ſucceſſion, 1084,b 30,40. with their anſwer,1085,a 40. Aſſembleth hir powers againſt the duke of Northumberland, 1086,b 40,50,&c. wind and wether helpe hir 1087, a 20. Proclamed quéene by the nobilitie, for feare of afterclaps,1087,a 50. ¶ Sée Quéene.

Marie quéene of Scots. ¶ Sée Quéene of Scots.

Marie counteſſe of Perch, Henrie the firſt his daughter, drowned, 41,b 10

Mariage of kings, and firſt of king John after his diuorſe, 161,b 60. Of Edward the firſt to the ladie Margaret, ſiſter to the French king,309, a 10. Of Edward the ſecond and the French king his daughter, ladie Iſabell,318,b 50. Of Edward the thirds ſiſter to the duke of Gelderland, 354,b 60. Of Edward the fourth to Eliſabeth Greie being an offenſiue mariage: note,667,b 60. 668, a 10,&c. Of Henrie the third with Elenor daughter to the earle of Prouance,219,b 30. Of Edward the ſixt and the yoong Scotiſh quéene Marie, 959, a 40. Newlie moued, procéedeth not,980,a 10,20 &c. written of to the nobles of Scotland: note,999, a 20, &c. Of Henrie the fift to ladie Katharine, the French kings daughter, crowned quéene, 578, b 50, 60. Solemnitie thereat,579,all. Of Henrie the ſixt to the earle of Armenaks daughter concluded, note,624,a 10,624,b 60. To the ladie Margaret daughter to Reiner king of Sicill and Jeruſalem,625,a 40. Of Henrie the ſeuenth vnto the daughter of Edward the fourth,764,b 40. Of Henrie the eighth and the ducheſſe of Alanſon the French kings ſiſter reported,897,a 60. with his brothers wife yet againe in queſtion,906,b 20. Thoght vnlawfull, and commeth vnto iudgement, 908, a 60, b 50. Common argument in ſermons,928,a 20. yet againe in queſtion with the determinations of diuers vniuerſities concerning the ſame, 923, b 20,50,924,925,926. Debated 906,b 60. By conſent of all the vniuerſities in chriſtendome iudged vnlawfull: note, 912,b 60.913,a 10,&c. with the ladie Anne Bullen, 929,a 60. with the ladie Anne of Cléeue concluded,947,b 60. Solemniſed, 950, a 10, &c. Judged vnlawfull,952,a 60. With the ladie Katharine Par, 960, a 30. Of Richard the ſecond to the French kings daughter, 487,a 10. with the emperors ſiſter,439,b 50. And the Emperor of Germanies daughter,428,b 50. Of Richard the third vnto the ladie Anne, daughter to Richard earle of warwike,733,b 60. Betwixt Richard the third and the earle of Richmonds néece, offenſiue, 752,b 50.

Mariage of princes, and firſt of Edward the firſt his eldeſt ſonne and Philip daughter to the earle of Flanders, offenſiue,296,b 60 297,a 10. Of Edward prince of wales and the ladie Marie daughter to the earle of Henault, 337, b 30. To the earle of warwiks daughter,674,b 60. Betwixt Henrie the kings ſonne ſeuen yeares old,&c.68,a 50. Of Richard, Henrie the thirds brother to the ladie Sanctia, 231,b 50. Betwixt Henrie the thirds ſonne and the king of Spaines daughter,248, b 40. Of Edward, Henrie the thirds ſonne, vnto king Alfonſus daughter,249,b 60. Of Edward the thirds ſecond ſonne lord Lionell, vnto the duke of Millans daughter, 400,a 60. His interteinment at Surrie, his receiuing into Millan, b 10

Mariage of honourable men, and firſt of the erle of March and the daughter of Owen Glendouer,521,a 20. Of the lord Monchenſies daughter, to william de Ualence Henrie the thirds halfe brother, 240,a 20. Of the lord william Greie with the wife of Paule Peuier,244, b 60. Of earle Thomas of Flanders, and Jone the widow of Ferdinando, 224, a 60. Of earle Rafe of Cheſter vnto thrée wiues,215,b 40. Betwéene the emperor Frederike, and Henrie the thirds ſiſter,219,a 50. Of the earle of Cornewall and the counteſſe of Gloceſter,213,b 50. Of the duke of Lancaſter with a ladie of meane eſtate: note,485, b 60. Of the duke of Lancaſters daughter to the king of Portingall,450,a 10,20. Of earle Bolinbroke of Derbie to the daughter of earle Bohune of Hereford,448,b 20. Betwéene the prince of Spaine and the duke of Lancaſters daughter,450, b 40. Of Ambroſe Dudlie earle of warwike to the earle of Bedfords eldeſt daughter,1208,b 60. Of Edmund earle of Cambridge to the ladie Conſtance daughter to the king of Spaine,406, b 60. Of John of Gaunt duke of Richmond, to the duke of Lancaſters daughter, 392,a 30, Promiſed by conſtreint of the earle of Flanders and king Edward the thirds daughter, 379, b 30. Of Piers de Gaueſton and the daughter of the earle of Gloceſter,318, b 40. Of the lord Courtneie with king Edward the fourths daughter,790,a 40 Betwixt prince Arthur and the ladie Katharine daughter to Ferdinando not fullie concluded, and whie 787,b 60,788,b 30. ¶ Sée Katharine. The ſolemnitie of the ſame, 789, a 30. Of the lord Courcie and the king of England king Edward the third his daughter, 397,a 60. Betwixt the king of Caſtile and the ladie Marie the king his daughter of ten yeres old, 795,b 50,60. Moued betwixt the king of Scots and Margaret the eldeſt daughter of king Henrie the ſeuenth,785, b 60. Of the earle of Kent to a daughter of lord Barnabe of Millane: note, 535,a 40. Betwixt the earle of Gloceſters ſonne and the daughter of the lord Guie of Angoleſme, 247, b 30. Purpoſed for the earle of Richmond with walter Herberts ſiſter, but diſappointed,752,b 60. Concluded betwixt the prince of Rothſaie and the duke of Suffolks daughter,747,a 40. Of the king of Scots and king Edward the fourths ſecond daughter treated vpon, 705,a 40. Betwéene the king of Scots ſiſter and the yoong prince of wales, 665, a 60. Betwixt the duke of Burgognies ſonne and heire with ladie Margaret ſiſter to king Edward the fourth,668,b 10, 669,a 10,&c. Of the duke of Clarence with the earle of warwikes eldeſt daughter, 671,b 60. Of duke Arthurs mother to Guie de Towers by a diſpenſation,160, b 60. Of the duke of Bedford with the erle of S. Paules daughter,607,b 60. Of the duke of Gloceſter with the wife of the duke of Brabant, he aliue: note,586,a 30. Betwéene the earle of Richmond and king Edward the fourths daughter accorded vpon by oth,745, b 20. Betwéene the duke of Bedford and the ſiſter of the duke of Burgognie,586,a 40.

Mariages of quéenes and honorable women, and firſt of the counteſſe of Kent of hir owne chooſing: note, 534, b 30,&c. Of king Henrie the fourths daughter to the king of Denmarke,532, a 10, 20. Of quéene Iſabell to king Richard the ſecond, widow to the duke of Orleance his ſon, 519,b 20. Of king Henrie the fourths ſiſter vnto ſir John Cornwall,518,b 50. Of king Henrie the fourths daughter Blanch to the duke of Bauier,520,b 10. Of the counteſſe of Penbroke ſiſter vnto king Henrie the third to Simon Montfort,222,b 10. Of ladie Jone king Henrie the thirds ſiſter vnto Alexander king of Scots,203, b 30. Of quéene Iſabell Henrie the thirds mother to the earle of March in France,202,a 60,b 10. Of the ladie Jone de Courtneie king Richard the ſecond his halfe ſiſter to the earle of ſaint Paule,424, a 60. Of two of Edward the firſts daughters to two noble men, 285, a 50. Of Eliſabeth counteſſe of Holland king Edward the firſts daughter and the erle of Hereford,311,b 10. Of the ladie Elen king Edward the firſts daughter, to the duke of Bar a French man, 290,a 60. Of Eliſabeth king Edward the firſts daughter vnto the earle of Holland,301,b 50 Of the counteſſe of Gloceſter with ſir Rafe Monthermer, 295 b 60. Of Marie quéene of Scots with Henrie Stuard eldeſt ſonne to the erle of Lenex,1208, b 10. Of the counteſſe of Arthois married to the duke of Burgundie 401,b 60. Of the counteſſe of Kent a widow and the prince of wales: note,395,a 50. Betwéene the ladie Jane ſiſter vnto king Edward the third and the king of Scots,347,b 50. Of an earles two daughters to two brethren,322,a 10 Of the ladie Margaret daughter to king Henrie the ſeuenth to James the fourth king of Scots, 788,b 30,789, b 10. Of an earles daughter to

to an errant raſcall and traitorous rebell, 780, a 40. Of the ducheſſe of Britaine and Charles the French king 771, b 40. Of the ladie Margaret vnto duke Charles how beneficiall to king Edward the fourth, 676, a 10. Of the French ladie Bona to the duke of Millain, 668, a 50. Of queene Marie with Philip prince of Spaine, of ſome liked, of moſt miſliked: note, 1093, a 40, &c: b 10. Agreed vpon in parlement, 1102, b 10 Solemniſed, with an abſtract of the conditions of the ſame, 1118, b 10, 40, &c: 1119, a &c: 10, 1120, a 10. Of king Iohns daughter ladie Iane vnto the earle of March, 182, b 60. Of Iſabell to king Iohn got him enuie, 164, a 60. Of queen Katharines mother to Henrie the ſixt, with Owen Teuther, 615, a 60. Of the ladie Eliſabeth vnto Edward the fourth, 615, b 30. Of the queen of Scots and the Dolphin of France, 1056, b 60. Betweene the ladie Marie Henrie the eights daughter, and the king of Scots, purpoſed, 883, b 50. Betweene the ladie Marie eldeſt daughter to Henrie the eight, and the Dolphin of France pretended, 848, b 10. Of queene Katharine and Henrie the eight, 801, a 10. Of the ladie Eliſabeth, now queene, to a Spaniard ſolicited, 1157, b 10. Moued in the parlement, and how anſwered by hir ſelfe, 1181, a 20, 40, &c: Sued vnto out of Denmarke, 1185, b 10, 20. Of a gentlewoman in ſight to a king, 6, a 30

Mariage forren, and firſt betweene the king of France and the ladie Margaret, eldeſt daughter to Henrie the ſeuenth, 791, b 10. Betweene the French kings daughter and Richard the ſecond treated of, 485, b 30. Betweene the Dolphin of France, and Edward the fourths daughter treated vpon, 703; b 60. 704, all. Betweene the French king and the ladie Marie ſiſter to Henrie the eight, who ſhould haue beene wife to the prince of Caſtile, 832, a 60, b 10, 20, 30, 40, 50, 60. Betweene the French kings daughter and the king of Englands ſonne, 94, b 30. Betweene the Dolphin, and the princeſſe of Scots, 1141, b 40, 60. Of Lewes the French kings ſonne and Blanch the neece of king Iohn, 161, b 10. Of the French king and the emperor Charles his ſiſter, 889, b 40, Made aliance betweene the pope & the French king, 847, b 30

Mariage in generall, and firſt of one offenſiue: note, 222, b all. Fatall, 211, b 60. Confirmed from Rome with monie, 222, b 60. within the degrees of conſanguinitie, diſpenſed withall by the pope, 392, a 30, Not to be forced: note, 376, b 40. Malice betwixt great perſonages as touching the ſame, 774, a 60. One intended, another begun and ended: note 667, b 60, 668, a 10, &c. A ſpirituall thing, and how it ſhould be made, 726, b 30. Purchaſed with monie, 84, b 10, within the ſeuenth degree of conſanguinitie diſſolued, 30, b 60, 31, a 10. Broken off & reuenged, 636, b 10. Infortunate and vnprofitable to the realme of England, 625, a 60. Betweene children to compoſe ſtrife, and eſtabliſh amitie betweene the parents, 1062, a 50 Of princes is not a matter to be trifled in, 980, a 10, 20, &c. Undertaken without the kings aſſent, made treaſonable: note, 940, b 50

Mariages two roiall, 788, b 30. Three betweene honourable eſtates: note, 1803, a 60. Miſtruſted to ſort to an euill end: note, b 10. ¶ See Contracts.

Mariners of the cinque ports at deadlie debate: note, 304, b 30. Commended, 281, a 40. Curſſe the archbiſhop of Canturburie and the earle of Penbroke, 169, a 10. ¶ See Seafaring men.

Mariſch the traitor executed: note, 230, b 10

Marleſwine and Goſpatrike nobles of Northumberland, flie into Scotland, 6, a 30

Marqueſſe of Baden returneth into his owne countrie, 1209, a 30. Ualiant in chiualrie, 833 b 60. Henrie the eight and hee make a chalenge at iuſts, 835, b 10. Entreth into Scotland, and burneth diuers townes, 875, b 60. Receiueth the emperour Charles at Graueling, 873, a 60. Forſaketh the earle of Richmond, 752, b 10. Committed to the Tower, 766, a 50. Deliuered out of the Tower, 768, a 60. Of Exceſter condemned, executed, 946, a 20, 50. Montacute ſuffereth Edward the fourth to paſſe by him, 680, b 20. Slaine, 685, a 20. Of Northampton ſent into Norfolke to repreſſe the rebels, 1033, a 20. Maketh ſhift to eſcape danger, 1034, b 60. Of Suffolks requeſt, 625, b 60. Cheefeſt in fauour with king Henrie the ſixt and the queene, 626, b 40. Created duke, 627, b 30

Mart of all Engliſh commodities kept at Calis, 778, a 20.

Martine Sward a valiant capteine of the Almans aſſiſtant to the erle of Lincolne againſt Henrie the ſeuenth a peereles warrior, 766, a 60, b 50. Is ſlaine, 767, a 10

Marton college in Oxford built, 282, b 60

Martyrdome, marke the cauſes thereof, 253, b 20

Martyrs in queene Maries time, the number great that were executed, 1363, a 40

Martyrs fit for the popes kalendar, 1363, b 50, 65, 1366, a 10, &c.

Maſke, 848, b 60. Roiall, 806, b 60. 812, a 40. 835, a 40. Both the kings of England and France, 861, a 40. with intended miſcheefe, 515, b 50. Before queene Eliſabeth, at hir being in Norwich, 1296, a 40. In the French court of Engliſh lords, 860, b 30. Of graue and ancient courtiers, and likewiſe of youthfull, 852, b 40, &c. Of lords and ladies, 850, a 50, &c. And a banket, Henrie the eight in perſon preſent at the cardinals houſe, 921, b 60. Stateliſt to ſolace the emperor and his companie, 861, b 60

Maſon knight, his friendlie part towards the ducheſſe of Suffolke, 1144, b 60. Secretarie vnto the French king, 1184, a 30

Maſſe, from the which a biſhop and his deacon could not bee ſcared by a tempeſt, 211, b 50. whereat king Iohn gaue a pretie drie ieſt, 196, b 20. Concerning the celebrating of the ſame, &c: note, 484, a 40, &c. Aboliſhed, 996, b 10. ¶ See Ieſuits and Prieſts.

Matheld. ¶ See Maud.

Matreuers lord, capteine of Baieux, 560, b 60

Maud borne, afterward empreſſe, 30, a 30. Beſieged in Oxford, 55, a 60. She eſcapeth, b 10. Flieth by night out of London, 54, a 10. Armie put to flight, 54, a 30. Goeth to Briſtow, 51, b 30. Followeth the victorie, ſhe commeth to London, 53, b 40. Beſieged in Arundell caſtell, 51, b 10. Landed in England, and what power ſhe brought, 51, a 50. Married to the earle of Anion, 43, a 50. True to the crowne of England, 43, a 10. Confeſſeth hir ſelfe to bee naught of hir bodie, 63, b 50. Hir deceaſſe, 75, a 60

Maud duke williams wife, the daughter of earle Baldwine, earle of Flanders, 15, a 60. Crowned queene, 6, a 60. Hir deceaſſe, 15, a 40

Maud daughter and heire to Robert Fitzhammon, Henrie the firſt his baſe ſonne, 37, a 50

Maud the wife of Henrie the firſt, a profeſſed nun, 29, a 10

Maud Henrie the firſt his daughter affianced to the emperor Henrie, 35, a 10

Maud queene deliuered of a daughter after hir own name, 30, a 30, ¶ See Queene.

Mauns a citie in Normandie beſieged and deliuered, 23, b 20. Beſieged and taken, 158, b 10. Loſt by treaſon of the citizens, recouered, 598, a 50, b 30 Yeelded to the French king, 114, a 40

Maunt citie in France burnt by duke william, 14, b 40

Maupaſſe, ¶ See Uernon.

Maximilian king of Romans, priſoned at Bruges by the townesmen, 770, a 40. He and Henrie the ſeuenth agree to plague the Frenchmen, the cauſe of his malice, he dealeth diſhoneſtlie with the king of England to his great vexation, breaketh promiſe with him, 774, a 60, b 20, 30. Incourageth his men to plaie the men, 822, a 40

Meaux beſieged by the Engliſh men, taken by aſſault, 581, a 50, b 50. The conditions of the ſurrender thereof vnto Henrie the fift, 582, a 50

Mekins burnt in Smithfield, 953, a 40

Mellent. ¶ See Erle.

Melune vicount diſcouereth the purpoſe of Lewis and the Engliſh barons, his death, 193, b 10

Melune beſieged by king Henrie the fift, 576, b 60. Yeelded vp to Henrie the fift, 577, b 20

Men barbarous brought from the new found Ilands, 789, b 60

Mendmarket. ¶ See Winkreuill

Mendoza the Spaniſh Ambaſſador. ¶ See Throckmorton Francis.

Mercia an earldome, 1, a 30

Mercie in a warrior, note, 549, b 20, 550, b 60. ¶ See Charitie.

Merchant of London hanged at Notingham for murthering a merchant ſtranger of Genoa: note, 428 b 30

Merchants of England receiued into Antwerpe with generall proceſſion, 783, b 40. Sore hindered by a reſtreint, 778, a 20. Reſtreined out of Spaine, 1206, a 10. Euillie intreated in Duchland, 1263 a 10. Suſteine great loſſe by ſea, 1262, b 20. Complaine vnto queene Eliſabeth of their wrongs, 1262, b 40. Proclamation for their free traffike as before, &c: 1267, b 10. Robbed of the Daniſh pirats, and haue great priſes taken from them, 485, a 10. Murther a ſtranger Genoa, 422, b 60 Staied in Spaine, 905, b 60

Merchants ſtrangers fauoured of king Richard the ſecond, their goods reſtored, 453, b 60. A proclamation concerning them, 927, a 50. Staied in England, 905, b 60. Two of the ſtilliard doo penance for hereſie, 892, b 60. ¶ See Strangers.

Meſure of one length vſed thorough out England, 28, b 30 ¶ See weights.

Meta incognita. ¶ See Frobiſher.

Meulane a ſtrong towne yeelded to the Engliſh, 571, b 60

Mewtas Hercules. ¶ See Iuſts triumphant.

Mice deuoure graſſe in Danſie hundred, and how deuoured: note, 1315, a 60, b 10

Michaels mount how ſeated, a great fortification, 19, a 40

Middleton knight proclameth himſelfe duke, 323, a 60

Midſummer watch, 1206, b 10, 1208, b 30 Mainteined, 1210 a 50. ¶ See watch.

Mildmaie knight founder of Emanuell college in Cambridge: note, 1396, a 10

Mile end greene whie ſo called, 1271, b 60

Miles Couerdale preacher in the time of Deuenſhire rebellion, 1023, b 60

Miles, vicar of ſaint Brides ſlaine, and the partie executed, 914, b 30

Millain won and raſed by Richard the firſt, 146, b 50

Millers men hanged for his maiſter, 1007, a 30

Milnall in Suffolke burned, 1210, a 20

Mines of gold & ſiluer in England, 413, a 40. ¶ See Siluer.

Miniſters more fauoured than other men, 1201, a 40

Minſterworth knight executed as a traitor, 411, b 10.

Miracles of Fitzoſbert wherby he was thought to be a ſaint, 149, a 20. whereby Robert duke of Normandie was made king of Ieruſalem, 29, a 60, wrought by wolſtane to his aduantage, 12, a 10, Seen (forſooth) in the daie of Campians execution, 1329, a 60

Miracles of the holie maid of Kent. 936, b 50

Mirth

Mirth, & that after it commeth heauineſſe: note 26, b 40, 50 41, b 10

Miſerie vpon miſerie, 422, b, 60 423, a 10, &c. ¶ Sée Derth and Deth.

Miſt thicke and blind, 373, a 20 Made Henrie the eight and his ſouldiers vnable to find the waie to his campe, 823 a 60

Miſtruſt in murtherers one of of another, 1063, b 60. Cauſeth carefull cuſtodie, 586, a 60 b 10. On all ſides, of all eſtates and degrées: note 173 a 20. An enimie to peace, 457, b 10, 60. Of king Henrie the third in his officers, 216, b 40 That the earls of Hereford & Marſhall had of Edward the firſt, 307, a 30. Of the Flemings in the earle of Richmond, 359, b 20. That the dukes of Buckingham and Gloceſter had in each other, 736, a 50. Of duke Arthur in his vncle king John, 160, b 60. ¶ Sée Suſpicion.

Mocke of Henrie the firſt againſt his brother Robert Curthoſe, 44, b 60. At the maior of Norwich, 1032, b 60 ¶ Sée Deriſion and Jeſt.

Molineux conſtable of Cheſter caſtell, 460, b 60. Knight ſlaine: note, 461, b 10

Monaſteries erected in the north parts at the ſute & trauell of thrée monks, &c: 11, a 20. When none left in all the north parts, 11, a 20. ¶ Sée Abbeies and Religious houſes Monie, two falles thereof, 1066, b 50. Henrie the ſixts priuie ſeales for ſome, 653, b 30. Refuſed to be lent purchaſeth diſfauor and reuenge, 162, a 40. Largelie giuen to mainteine war againſt the Turks, 164, a 20. Carried out of the realme by a legat: note, 170, b 10. Sutes preferred for it, 187, b 20. And what practiſes Gualo vſed to get it, 193, a 20 A perpetuall order of an hundred and foure pounds lent yearelie by courſe to certeine townes: note, 1092, a 60, b 10 Buieth liberties and priuileges, 119, b 60. And what ſhifts king Richard the firſt made for it, 120, b 40. And of inquiſitions to get it: note, 153, b 40. Gotten with extortion to procure Richard the firſt his ranſome, 139, a 60, b 10. To make it, offices ſet to ſale by Richard the firſt, 142, b 40. Great ſummes gotten by Richard the firſt without making of recompenſe, 143, b 60, 144, a 10. The practiſes of Richard the firſt to get it: note, 144, a 10, 20. Much gotten for licences and grants of tuſt and turnie, 145, b 60. The meanes practiſed to get it: note: 145, a 60. Purchaſeth erldoms, 102, a 50. Maketh marriages betwéene great ſtates, 84, b 10. Purchaſeth fauor to a murtherer, 98, b 40 What ſhifts Edward the fourth made for it, 694, a 40, 50. The want thereof procureth peace, 696, b 50. The deſire thereof an occaſion to offend againſt dutie and honeſtie, 743, b 50, 744, a 50. The meanes that Henrie the ſeauenth practiſed to get it, 792, b 20. Scant, but vittels abundant, 353, a 10. Lent Edward the third by Londoners, 357, b 40. Imploied vpon the commonwealth, 1354, a 40, 50. Baſe and fall thereof, 1193, b 50. Well imploied, 1311, b 40 Gathered by cardinals, 295, a 20. Edward the firſt his ſhifts to get it, 280, a 50. Forren forbidden to go as currant, 309, a 20, 30. Edward the firſt his ſhifts for it, 292, b 50. Purchaſeth the princes fauor, 496, a 10. Of practiſes to get it by Henrie the third, 208, b 60. What conſening ſhifts the pope vſed to get it out of England, 211, a 40. Gathered to confirme a marriage, 222, b 60. To get it, practiſe againſt practiſe, 243, a 50. And what indirect meanes to get it practiſed by the Romiſh clergie, 226, a 10, 20, &c. What ſhifts Henrie the third made to get it, 241, b 20. Procured to the procurers loſſe, 241, a 20. What ſhifts Henrie the third made to ſend it pope Innocent, 250, b 40, &c. Of the biſhop of Herefords deuiſe to get ſome of the biſhops, 251, b 10. More eſtéemed than life, 252, b 40. For lands morgaged to haue it, 22, a 60, b, 20. Purchaſeth fauor when nothing els would: note 25, b 40. Receiued to inforce an abiuration of chriſtianitie, 27, a 40. Giuen and taken of the French king to raiſe his ſiege, 19, a 20. The ſhamefull ſhift of William Rufus to get it, 20, b 10. Purchaſeth peace, 21, b 10. ¶ Sée Cardinall of Praxed, Couetouſnes, Gifts, Inquiſitions, Riches.

Monſieur. ¶ Sée duke of Alanſon.

Monſieur Thermes capteine of Calis, his ſeruice, his determination to ſpoile king Philips countries, ſicke of the gowt, 1150, a 10, 30, 50

Monmouth caſtell taken, 270, a 30

Monſter borne of a woman, 1083, a 40. Maried, 1314, a 40 Of fourſcore yeres old, 1313, b 60, 1314, a 10. Of a ſow that brought out a pig of ſtrange ſhape, 37, a 40

Monſters bred and brought forth in diuerſe places of England, 1195, a 10

Monſtreau beſieged and taken, 576, a 50

Montargis recouered by the Engliſh, 606, b 10, ¶ Sée Frenchmen.

Monument. ¶ Sée Antiquities.

Moone in eclipſe ſéene of king Henrie and his traine, 103, a 60, New appéered before hir time, 247, b 40, A ſtrange wonder touching the ſame, 245, b 30. Turned into a bloudie colour, 39, b 10. Strange ſights about it, 102, b 30. Fiue ſéene in Yorke, 163, a 50

Moonke Euſtace what he was, 201, a 60, Taken priſoner and beheaded, 201, a 60. Malcus. ¶ Sée Malcus. Samuell. ¶ Sée Samuell. When a wonder among the northeren people, 11, a 30. Carthuſian apprehended, and an enimie vnto the pope: note, 225, a 60. Conference with the duke of Buckingham his treſonable practiſes, 863, a 60, b 10, &c. The laſt that was ſéene in moonks clothing till quéene Maries daies, 952, b 60

Moonks, when and how they ſhuld inioin penance, 30, b 50. Should not be godfathers, 30, b 50. Should not hold nor occupie farmes, 30, b 60. At whoſe hands they ſhould receiue parſonages, &c, 30, b 60. Hindered by the comming of the friers preachers, 26, b 30. Preſumptuous ſtoutneſſe, 154, a 60. Diſplace the ſecular prieſts at Durham, 13, a 50. Life, order, and profeſſion what it ſhould be, 18, b 60. Supported by Lanfranke, 18, b 10. Two ſtriuing for preferment diſmiſſed by a third, 18, b 60. Thrée purpoſed to reſtore religion in Northumberland, 11, a 10. Ciſteaux to whom the emperor was bountifull, 147, b 20. Couſened by Richard the firſt, 144, a 10. Of Glaſtenburie diſperſed into diuerſe religious houſes, 13, b 50. Plaie the men againſt the abbat and his adherents, 13, b 40. Of Couentrie diſplaced, 129, a 20. Placed in the church and ſecular canons diſplaced, 152, b 50. Of Canturburie without knowledge of king John choſe a new archbiſhop, 169, a 60. Baniſhed, 171, a 30. Of the Charterhouſe executed, 938, a 60. Of Chriſts church complaine to the pope of their archbiſhop, 153, a 20, Called Monachi de charitate, 27, a 10 White: when and by whome begunne and brought into England, 26, a 60. Not priuileged as other churches cōuentuall were, 173, a 60. Delt hardlie withall by king John, 162, a 40. Moleſted by king John diuerſe waies, 163, a 10. Of Norwich. ¶ Sée Friers.

More knight late vnderſhiriffe of London, now of Henrie the eight his priuie councell, 841, b 50, The paines he tooke to appeaſe ill Maie daies riot, 842, a 10, 20. Speaker for the commons, his oration and behauiour in parlement, 876, a 50, 60. Anſwereth the oration of Faber in Henrie the eights behalfe, 895, a 10. Lord chancellor, his oration in the parlement, 910, b 10, &c. An enimie to proteſtants, 913, b 60. Deliuered vp the great ſeale, 928, b 10. Beheaded, a ieſter and ſcoffer at the houre of his deth, 938, b 10, 30. In ſome ſort commended, deuoutlie giuen, in his kind, 939, a 20, 40.

More Edward. ¶ Sée Juſts triumphant.

More fields, ¶ Sée Archers.

Morgage of a dukedome for moneie, 22, a 60. ¶ Sée Lands

Morguiſon the midwaie betwéene Bullen and Calis, 1061, b 20

Moris his deuiſe for conueiance of Thames water, &c. 1348, b 50

Morleie lord appealeth the erle of Saliſburie, 513, a 50. He is mainpriſed, b 60. Slaine in battell againſt the French, 770, b 50

Morleis in Britaine won by the earle of Surrie, 874, a 30.

Mortaigne. ¶ Sée Erle Mortaigne.

Mortalitie of people verie gréeuous: note, 157, a 10. ¶ Sée Derth and Deth.

Mortmaine ſtatute eſtabliſhed, 280, a 10. Required to be repealed, 293, a 30

Morton doctor an old Engliſh fugitiue, a ſtirrer vp of rebellion in the north, 1361, b 30. His ſecret amballage from Rome, 1362, a 30. ¶ Sée Biſhop Morton, & Archbiſhop.

Mortimer and Audleie baniſhed, 269, b 10

Mortimer Hugh againſt Henrie the ſecond, 66, a 10

Mortimer king Henrie the thirds lieutenant in Wales, 255, a 30. His reuenge againſt the Welſhmen, 263, b 50

Mortimer lord of Wigmore proclamed traitor, 338, a 30. In what fauour with Edward the ſeconds wife, 340, a 50

Mortimer earle of March proclamed heire apparent to the crowne, 448, a 60, b 10. He ruleth all things at his pleaſure 347, b 60. Enuieth Henrie the fourths aduancement, 514, a 30. His good ſeruice in Ireland, 440, a 30. Apprehended in Nottingham caſtell, 348, b 50. Beareth the blame of euill counſell, 347, b 20. Attainted, and fiue articles obiected againſt him, 349, a 40. Committed vnto priſon in the Tower, 349, a 10. Breaketh out of the Tower: note, 334, b 60. Shamefullie executed, 349, a 60

Mortimers reſtored to the title and poſſeſſions of the earledome of March, 381, b 60

Moubraie earle of Northumberland, 17, a 40

Montacute. ¶ Sée Erle.

Mountcaſter, now Newcaſtell, 11, a 10

Mountfort Robert, combatant, 67, a 20

Mountgomerie Roger earle of Shrewſburie, his waſting and ſpoiling, 17, a 50, 60, Reconciled to K. William Rufus, 17, b 30. Knight paſſed ouer the ſea vnto the French king, his reward, 701, a 50, 60

Mountioie lord made generall of Tornaie, 837, b 40. His ſtratagem, 965, b 50

Mountſorell betwixt Leiceſter and Lughburrow, 189, b 10. the caſtell beſieged, 199, a 60

Mulbraie Robert earle of Northumberland highlie commended, 13, a 40, 50

Mummerie roiall, 806, b 60. ¶ Sée Maſke.

Munition for warres, and of king Henrie the ſecond his ordinance in that behalfe, 104, a 40. ¶ Sée Armour.

Murcherdach king of Ireland, 22, a 30. His reuerence to Henrie the firſt: note, 45, b 30

Murren of cattell, 14, a 60. 21, a 30. 324, b 30. 249, a 60: note, 245, b 60. Uniuerſall, 43, b 60. Made fleſh déere, 323, a 40

Murther committed in Suſſex by certeine gentlemen, and they executed: note, 954, a 10, 20. Of two capteins, notablie puniſhed by iuſtice in the déed dooers, 1061, a 60. Moſt ſhamefullie ſhamefullie committed by the meanes of a gentlewoman whoꝛe being a wife: note, 1062, b 40, &c. Mercileſſe vpon the yong erle of Rutland: note, 659, b 30. Moſt lamentable of the loꝛd Scales, 654, b 60. Shamefull committed by the loꝛd Sturton, & he hanged: note, 1133, a 10, 20. Intended againſt quéene Maries perſon, and the offenders executed, 1117, a 60. Of the marqueſſe of Montferrat, 134, b 40. Cruell of pꝛince Edward, and how iuſtlie plagued and afterwards reuenged vpon the murtherers, 688 b 20. Of Henrie the ſixt by the duke of Gloceſter, 690, b 60. Of the yong pꝛinces Edward the fift and his bꝛother in the Tower, how diſpatched, and how reuenged: note, 734, b 20, &c: 735, a all. Done vpon the pꝛioꝛ of Shéene, 790, b 60. An earle arreigned foꝛ the ſame, 790, b 60. Committed vpon the king of Scots, 1209, b 60. Of a man by his pꝛentiſe, 1213, a 10. Mercileſſe done vpon a merchant, and the offenders executed: note, 1228, b 20, &c. Committed on the gaoler of Hoꝛſham, and the offender hanged in chaines, 1258, a 10 Moſt hoꝛrible committed by Anthonie Bꝛowne vpon George Sanders merchant, and the offenders executed: note, 1258, a 20, &c. It & other miſchéefes by Peter Burchet, and he hanged, 1259, a 30 &c. Committed on a pꝛentiſe & the offenders hanged, 1353, b 20. Of an vnnaturall bꝛother committed vpon his bꝛother naturall, 1270, a 10. Commited vpon a ſargent, & the offender hanged vp in Cheape, 1310, b 60. Another at Tiburne foꝛ the like offenſe, 1311, a 10. Committed vpon a ſargent and the partie hanged in Fléetſtréet, 1348 a 10. Of one coſt manie liues, 263, b 40. Heinous of a merchant ſtranger, 422, b 60. Done vpon Richard the ſecond how abhoꝛred of foꝛren nations, 517, b all. Of Liulſus how infoꝛtunatlie it fell out: note, 12, b 30. Committed at the high altar by an Italian: note, 275, b 30. Foꝛ the which a yeoman of the gard was hanged vp, 812, b 10. Thꝛough couetouſnes committed and puniſhed, 937, b 50 Moſt vnnaturall: note, 605, b 40. Without mercie vpon a light cauſe, 118, b 40, &c. 119, a 10, 20. Puniſhed with a fine, 122, b 30. It & fellonie combined, 1228, b 30. Committed and the partie hanged on Miles end, 1271, b 50. Puniſhed by the purſſe, 224, a 30 Moſt cruell committed in Weſtminſter church, 420, b 10 &c, 60. Wilfull, & an act againſt mediation foꝛ the ſame, 472, b 60. Reuenged with murther, 13, a 30. Puniſhed with hanging in chaines, 914, b 30. Will not be concealed: note, 944, a 30. Reuenged by women: note, 605, b 60. Cannot be concealed: note, 1065, a 60, b 10, &c. Not redéemable with monie: note, 1121, b 30. Henrie the eight refuſed to beare it, but put it ouer to triall by common law, 853, a 10. ¶ Sée Slaughter and Burning in the hand, Reuenge, Temptation.

Murther of ones ſelfe to pꝛeuent iuſtice: note, 1356, b 10. Deſperat of the earle of Noꝛthumberland vpon himſelfe being pꝛiſoner in the Tower: note, 1403, b 50, 60. The whole ſtoꝛie of the maner and oꝛder thereof, 1404, b 40, &c, to 1419. Deſperat of ones ſelfe. ¶ Sée Hartfoꝛd: note.

Murthers cõmitted by pꝛéeſts, 69, b 60.

Murtherer of his bꝛother receiued into fauour, 98, b 40. Notoꝛious. ¶ Sée Blacke Will.

Murtherers to be hanged by law, 115, b 10. Of Thomas Becket came to an euill end, 79, b 40.

Muſcleburrow field. ¶ Sée Battell, Leith.

Muſcouie a cold countrie: note 1083, a 60.

Muſgraue a rebell, 943, b 60.

Muſter of hoꝛſſemen befoꝛe king Edward the ſixt at Gréenewich: note, 1081, a 60, b 10, &c. Of Penſioners befoꝛe quéene Eliſabeth, 1211, a 60 Of Londoners befoꝛe quéene Eliſabeth at Gréenewich, 1402, a 60, b 10. 1238, a 60. Verie triumphant befoꝛe Henrie the eight, 947, a 40, &c, b 10, &c. At Gréenewich befoꝛe Q. Eliſabeth, 1184, b 10

Mutinie in the Engliſh armie 250, a 40 973, a 40. 880, b 50. 837, b 50. Towards, among ſeruingmen, 1017, a 40. Of ſouldioꝛs againſt their capteine, 1140, a 30. Betwixt the Engliſhmen and the townſmen of Liſbone, 124, a 40, Betwéene the Engliſh ſouldioꝛs and the people of Meſſina, 124, b 60. 125, a 10. Among ſouldioꝛs with outragious diſoꝛder pꝛocuring execution, 1431, b 30. ¶ Sée Fraie, Riot, and Souldioꝛs.

Muttrell beſieged by the Engliſh, 965, a 30, 60, The ſiege thereat bꝛoken vp, 966, b 20.

N

Nauar, the king thereof his gentle offer to the Engliſh, 813, a 40. His kingdome gotten to the K. of Spaine, b 40. King without a realme, and whie, 821, a 10. Hath Cherburg reſtoꝛed vnto him that was ingaged, 480, b 60. Taken by the Frenchmen, 398, a 40. Commeth ouer into England, his conſtancie ſuſpected, 406, a 10. His roiall anſwer to the excommunication of pope Sixtus quintus: note, 1401, a 40, &c.

Nauie roiall ſent foꝛth, 814, b 60 815, a 30. ¶ Sée Engliſhmen.

Naunts beſieged by Edward the third, 364, a 60. By the Engliſhmen, 427, b 20.

Nauntwich in Cheſhire burnt, 1356, a 30

Neal baron. ¶ Sée Mawpaſſe.

Necromancie. ¶ Sée Hed.

Neuill baſtard Fauconbꝛidge, 689, a 50. A maiſter of miſchéefe, 60, b 10, &c. Beheaded, 693, a 30

Neuill knight executed foꝛ rebellion, 953, a 60

Neuill diſcouereth the intended treaſons of Parrie againſt quéene Eliſabeth, 1383, a 10, b 50, &c: 1384, a 10, &c

Newes of heauineſſe to Henrie the firſt, 41, b 10. That caſt duke William in a furie, 6, b 30. That made the people in a great feare, 6, b 60. From the eaſt, 111, a 60

Newarke caſtell built by the biſhop of Lincolne, 50, b 20. Reſtoꝛed to the biſhop of Lincolne, 202, a 30

Newberie ſpoiled by the earle of Wiltſhire and others, 653, b

Newbolt a yeoman of the gard hanged, 812, b 10

Newcaſtell vpon Tine when founded, 12, b 10, Burnt by caſuall fire, 241, a 60. ¶ Sée Montcaſter. 11, a 10

Newgate builded, 540, a 60. Set on fire, 1132, a 10. The kéeper whereof a ſtranger would haue murthered: note, 1132, b 30.

Newhall in Eſſex called Beaulieu, 852, b 30

Newhauen, the Engliſh fléete commeth afoꝛe it, 960, b 60 The French appoint to go out of it, 1200, a 60, b 10. A ſupplie of ſoldioꝛs out of Eſſex arriue there, 1197, a 60, b 10. And out of Deuonſhire, b 30. Greatlie infected with the plague, 1204, a 50. Articles of agréement touching the ſurrender, b 60. A new ſupplie of ſouldioꝛs out of Noꝛthfolke, Suffolke, Wiltſhire, and Gloceſterſhire, 1203, a 10, 50. A freſh ſupplie of ſouldioꝛs arriue there, 1202, b 20. An alarum thereto. 1196, a 60. Pꝛiſes taken & bꝛought thither, 1197, a 10, 20. A pꝛoclamation foꝛbidding reſoꝛt of ſouldiours thither without licence, 1202, b 40. The French king commeth to the campe lieng befoꝛe it, 1205, a 60. The chéefe cauſe whie it was yeelded, b 10. Speciall perſons that died of the plague there, b 20, 30. Peſtilence tranſpoꝛted thenſe to London, b 50

Newpoꝛt beſieged by Frenchmen, 771, a 10. Sacked and burnt by the Engliſhmen, 444, a 10.

New yeares gift. ¶ Sée Gift.

Nicholſon alias Lambert burned, 946, a 10

Nigell. ¶ Sée Neal.

Nightinghale parſon of Crondall in Kent, his blaſphemie in the pulpit, puniſhed by God: note, 1128, b 60. 1129, a 10

Noble. ¶ Sée Coine.

Nobilitie of England rooted out and beggered by duke William, 9, a 10. Faine to flie, bicauſe of duke Williams tirannie, 10, a 40. Their liuings taken awaie by duke William, 5, b 10. In arms againſt him and his Noꝛmans, 6, a 10 Hated of him and his people, 6, a 20. Foꝛſake their natiue countrie, 6, a 20. In ſeruitude to the Noꝛmans, 1, b 50. Gréeuouſlie fined by William Rufus, 20, b 10

Nobilitie true deſcribed, 1266, b 10 Compared vnto a riuer oꝛ flood, &c: note, 1263, b 30

Noblemen and king Richard the ſecond at debate, 458, a 30. Indicted of diuerſe offenſes, 457, b 20. Appeale one another of treaſon, 512, 513. That conſpired againſt K. Henrie the fourth, 514, b 30, They come to Circeſter, the bailiffe ſetteth vpon them in their lodgings, they ſet fire on their lodgings, their diſcomfiture and ſhamefull end, 515, b 10, &c. They doo yeeld themſelues, 516, a 30, 40. Beheaded foꝛ conſpiracie, 516, a 50, 60. Conſpiracie, namelie of the Perſies againſt Henrie the fourth, 521, b 10, &c. 522, 523. Executed, 530, b 30. Complaine to king Henrie the third of the popes collections, 232, b 10. Reuolting from Lewis the French kings ſonne, 199, a 30. Taken pꝛiſoners, 200, a 60. That rebelled, in what perplexitie they were, 198, b 40, Their minds dꝛawne from Lewis the French K. ſonne, 197, b 40. Offended at Henrie the third, and not without cauſe, 216, b 60. That tooke part with and againſt Henrie the third, 264, b all. Pꝛoclamed traitoꝛs by Henrie the third, 217, a 10. That reuolted from Henrie the third, 266, a 20, Diſgrace Henrie the third in a parlement, 240, b 50. Of rare qualities, 1257, b 10. What ſoꝛt and the wals of a realme, 1263, b 10. That went with the duke of Alanſon ouer ſea, 1329, b 50, 60, 1330, a 10, &c. Their vantgard diſtreſſed, they diſcomfited and executed, 688, a 40, &c. b 10. Diuers that ſtood againſt them executed, 464, a 20. At diſſention, 451, b 40. Appointed to come in warlike maner to the parlement, 489, b 60. Appꝛehended impꝛiſoned, and alſo indicted, 489, a 20, &c At variance come to the parlement in armour, 439, b 10. Roughlie handled by Richard the ſecond, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493. Againſt the duke of Summerſet to diſplace him, 1057, a 20. 1058, b 10. Conſult and alſo pꝛactiſe to diuert the ſucceſſion of the crowne, and how euillie it pꝛoued, note: 1085, a 60, b 10, &c. 1086, 1087. Impꝛiſoned foꝛ eating fleſh in lent, 960, a 10. At daggers dꝛawing and bloudſhed within the Towꝛe: note, 722, b 10, &c. 723, a 10 Conſpiratoꝛs executed, 688, b 60. In armes againſt Edward the fourth vnder quéen Margaret, the place of their incamping, the oꝛdering of their hoaſt, 687, a 60, b 40, &c. Conſpire againſt Edward the fourth: note, 670, b 30, &c; 671, &c. At deadlie malice in Henrie the ſixts time: note the whole ſtoꝛie, called to a treatie, bꝛought to agrée, 647, a 20. pꝛoclamed traitoꝛs, 650, b 60. Their letters excuſatoꝛie to Henrie the ſixt, 651, a 60, b 10, &c. Atteinted, 652, a 10. That continued true and loiall to king John, 175, b 60. Begin to miſlike the match which they had made with Lewis, 193, b 40. Dealing with Richard the ſecond as touching his depoſing, 502, a 20, &c. ¶ Sée duke of Lancaſter. Reuolting from king John to king Lewis, 192, a 10. Miſtruſted and charged with treaſon, treaſon,457,b 10,60. Conferre how to preuent the perils pretended againſt them, counſell taken how to deale againſt them, their meſſengers to the king, 458, a 40,60, b 20,50 The Londoners refuſe to fight againſt them, the lords take an oth togither to proſequute their purpoſed enterpriſe, ſéeke the fauour of the Londoners, come before the kings preſence in weſtminſter hall, their anſwer and griefes, 459, a 10,50,60,b 30, 40, 60. The king reproueth their doings, cléered of treaſon by proclamation,460,a 10, 20,30. Temper too far with the kings matters, and impeach his roialtie, 452,b 10, &c. Thirtéene lords appointed to haue the gouernement vnder the king, 453,a 10,60,b 10. Come to London with a great armie, 461,a 40. Sent to the maior and citizens of London to vnderſtand their meaning,462,a 50. Enter into London, the kings words touching their procéedings, they refuſe to come vnto the Tower, but after ſerch made they come before the kings preſence, they open their gréefes to the king, 472, b 10, &c. Drowned,41, b 10. Die, 108, a 20 230,b 50, 228, b 50 ¶ Sée Death, Shipwracke.

Noiſe, ¶ Sée Sound.
Norham caſtell beſieged by the Scots, reſcued by the Engliſh,782,b 50,60. Deliuered vp to the Scotiſh kings hands, 825,b 40,50
Norimbega. ¶ Sée Raleigh.
Normandie morgaged to william Rufus and for what, 22, b 20. Townes therein yéelded to Henrie the fift, 562, b 20 Brought into Henrie the fift his ſubiection, hauing béene a long time from him deteined, 571,a 30. Wonne by the earle of Aniou, 55,a 20. Inuaded by the French king, 39, b 50 Subdued vnto England on that day fortie yeres paſt that william Conqueror ſubdued England to Normandie, 33, b 10. Interdicted, 160,a 60 137, a 60. By the archbiſhop of Normandie,151,a 60. Recouered by the French king after thrée hundred and ſixtéene yeares kéeping: note, 167,b 60. Loſt, the ſtate thereof, and the cauſes of the loſſe, 630,b 50
Normans that came with william in the conqueſt of England, 2,b 40. Rebell, but are ſubdued to their ſmart, 612, b 30. willinglie ſworne Engliſh,561,a 10. Affraid at Henrie the fift his arriuall, 559, a 40. Vnder duke Robert vanquiſhed, 33,a 20,30. Inclined more to Henrie the firſt than to D. Robert,32,b 20. Their rule and the Frenches ouer England ceaſeth, 116, b 40 Set vpon by the Engliſh admerall,290,b 10. Their poſſeſſions confiſcated, 232,b 40 whie diſherited, 232, b 50 write to Henrie the third to take their part againſt the French, 210,a 50. Preferred to clergie mens roomes and liuings,9,a 10. Rebell againſt duke william beyond the ſea and ſoone ſubdued, 10, b 60 Their faſhion and guiſe taken vp of the Engliſh, 5, b 10 They hate the nobles euen in the time of peace, 6,a 20. Lieng in garriſon at Yorke and their diſmall daie, 6, b 60,7, a 10. Purſued and ſlaine by the Engliſh, 6,b 30. Giue the Danes the diſcomfiture, 7,a 40. Haue the nobilitie & communaltie in bondage, 1, b 50 Plaie the diuels in waſting & ſpoiling,17,a 60. Slaine by the Engliſh at worceſter, 17, b 10. Their line touching the heires male in whom ceaſed, 46,b 10. ¶ Sée william duke of Normandie.
Norris generall with thrée and twentie enſignes, 1350,b 20 Taketh the ſconſe of Lite, 1431,b 60. Other exploits by him doone againſt the enimie, 1432,a 10,&c. b 30
Northhampton beſieged, 185,a 50. Taken by force, 266,b 50
Northcountries pitifullie waſted by duke william, 7, b 40
Northerne men diſcomfit the welſhmen, 672,b 20. Spoile the towne of ſaint Albons, their valiantnes: note, 660,a 50. Rebellion and how ſuppreſſed, 942,a 10,&c.943,a 10
Northerne prickers plaie the men, 818,a 60
Northumberland an erledome, 1,a 30. Rebelleth againſt duke william, & is ſubdued, 6,b 10 Taken in poſſeſſion of the Scots,53,b 30. ¶ Sée Malcolme.
Northumbers ouer whom duke william placeth and diſplaceth diuerſe nobles, 13, a 20 Kill Robert Cumin and his companie, 6,b 30
Nortons. ¶ Sée Rebels of the north.
Norwich how ancient, 1289, a 40. Beſieged by the Normans,11,b 30. Sacked,272,b 10. Sorelie defaced with fire, 796, a 10. In commotion, their liberties ſeized into the kings hands, 626, a 60, b 10
Notingham taken by the erle of Derbie, 92, a 20. The caſtell, 6, a 40. How ſeated, 60, b 50
Nouencourt yéelded to Richard the firſt, 146, b 10
Nowell Henrie. ¶ Sée Iuſts triumphant.
Nun. ¶ Sée Chriſtine.
Nuns incontinencie, and diſplaced out of their houſe, 100, a 10. Not to be godmothers, 30,b 50
Nunries. ¶ Sée Abbeis and Religious houſes.

O.

Obedience and what rigorous means duke william vſed to reduce the Engliſh therunto, 5,b 10,&c.6,a 40 Of erle Richard to his father Henrie the ſecond, 109,a 60. Of the church of Scotland to the church of England.97, b 10
Occaſion taken to inuade England: note,19,b 10 Taken of an inuaſion, 212,b 40,50
Odo biſhop of Baieux, gouernor of England in duke williams abſence, 5, a 10, In armes againſt the earle of Cambridge,11,a 50. Conſpireth againſt his nephue william Rufus,17,a 20. Erle of Kent, 13,a 60. 18,a 60. In arms againſt king williams fréends in Kent,17,a 30. Is ſent into Northumberland to reuenge walkhers death, 12, b 20. Glad to ſubmit himſelfe for lacke of vittels, 18, a 10 Loſt his liuings in England and returneth into Normandie, 18,a 10
Offendors couer their faults with contrarie cauſes,1358,b 60
Offenſe. ¶ Sée Puniſhment.
Officer of the maior of London choſen ſhiriffe and lord maior, 764, b 60. ¶ Sée Purueior, Sargent.
Officers called to accounts, and of their fraudulent dealing, 149, a 10. Go beyond their commiſſion: note, 139, a 60 Of king Iohn oppreſſe the people,183,b 50. About Henrie the ſeuenth abuſe the common people extremelie, 792,b 10. The cauſe of manie mens vndooing and other trouble, 794,b 10. Changed throughout the realme,645,b 60. Choſen by ſound aduiſe,543,b 40. Of the king of Spaine full of tyrannicall lordlineſſe & villanie,1335,a 50. New made,509 b 40. Called to accounts, and reſtitution made out of hand with intereſt, 215, a 30. In diſpleaſure with king Henrie for their deceit,216,b 40. Called to accounts how they had ſpent the kings treaſure, 218, b 50. Puniſhed for negligent looking to priſoners, 228,b 30 Appointed in an vprore,273,a 30. Diſplaced and others placed,466,b 40,60. Committed to the Tower, and new made in place of old diſcharged: note, 360, b 40, 50, 60. Complained of to king Edward the third and puniſhed, 369, b 10. ¶ Sée Exchecker and Iuſtices, Offices ſet to ſale for monie, 142,b 40. Clamed at the coronation of Henrie the fourth, 510,a 20
Oldcaſtell knight accuſed of hereſie, ſcapeth out of the Tower, 544,a 20,50. Shifteth from place to place, he is laid in wait for to be taken, 560,a 60. Taken and wounded, executed, 561,b 20,40
Oneile the great of Ireland made knight, 808,a 50
Opportunitie taken by the welſhmen to inuade England,21,b 10. Not to be neglected,694,a 30. ¶ Sée Occaſion.
Oppreſſion puniſhed: note,256, b 20. Of the poore communaltie whereto it grew. ¶ Sée Curſſes, Empſon, Extortion Officers.
Orange prince commeth into England.1126,b 20. Taketh order for the interteinment of the duke of Alanſon,1330.
Oration of the earle Baldwine to king Stephans armie,52,b 50. Of the French king to a great aſſemblie he ſitting in his roialties, 904,b 40,&c. Of the duke of Yorke made vnto the lords of parlement, 655, b 20. Of prince Edward to the French king taken priſoner, 390,a 30. Of the archbiſhop of Canturburie after the depoſing of Richard the ſecond,506,a 10,&c. Of the biſhop of Elie lord chancellor to the lords of the parlement houſe: note, 459,b 40. Of earle Marſhall of Penbroke in the aſſemblie of péeres, 197, a 40. Of quéene Eliſabeth, which ſhe made to the parlement houſe: note, 1396,a 50,&c. Of the deputie of the ſtates of the low countries vnto quéene Eliſabeth: note, 1411,a 60,b 10,&c: 1412, a 10,&c. In Latine and Engliſh of a Dutch miniſter to quéene Eliſabeth being in Norwich,1293,a 40,b 50. Of quéene Eliſabeth to the vniuerſitie in Latine,1206, b 60, 1207,a 10,&c. Of quéene Eliſabeth by waie of anſwer in the parlement houſe touching a motion of marriage, 1181,a 40,&c. Of Henrie the fift to the king of France, 576,a 10. Of the duke of Buckingham to the maior of London, aldermen, and commoners in the Guildhall,728, a 60,b 10, &c. Of Henrie the ſeuenth to his armie, 757, a 60. Of king Edward the fourth lieng on his dethbed: note,713, a 50,&c.708,b 50. Of a French herald to Edward the fourth vttered with boldneſſe of face and libertie of toong,695,b 40 Of the French king to an Engliſh herald, giuing him defiance,695, b 60,696, a 10, &c. Of Faber ſummarilie ſet downe,894, b 50. Of Empſon to find fauor,803,b 60. Of Henrie the eight in the parlement houſe,971,a 20,&c. Of the French king before an honorable aſſemblie, and ſauoring of diſpleaſure, 902, b 60. Of ſir Thomas More in the parlement houſe, 910,b 10,&c. Of two heralds to the emperor Charles, 899,a 50. Of ſir Thomas More in the parlement, 876, a 50,60. Of Tunſtall made to the parlement, 876,a 20. Of the archbiſhop of Canturburie in the parlement ſummarilie touched,812,a 60. Of Perkin warbecke the counterfet vnto the king of Scots,780, a 50. Of cardinall Poole in the parlement houſe 1122,a 60,b 10,&c. Of quéene Marie in Guildhall to the Londoners, 1096, a 60, 1097, As touching the reſtitution of abbeie lands, 1127,b 10,&c. Of archbiſhop Hubert of Canturburie vnto the lords at the crowning of king Iohn,158,b 60,159,a 10 Of the biſhop of Durham to his ſouldiors,49,a 60. Of the earle of Cheſter to the earle of Gloceſter.52,a 10. In Latine & Engliſh of Stephan Limbert ſcholemaiſter in Norwich to quéene Eliſabeth at hir being there,1294,b 40,&c. 1295,a 10,&c. The ſame highlie commended by the quéene, 1296,a 20
Orator proud & preſumptuous, 567,a 40
Order of the round table, the feaſt kept, 280,b 60. Of the garter founded: note, and the cauſe thereof, 366, a 50,&c.
Ordinances.¶ Sée Clergie Ex officio.
Orkenie. ¶ Sée Engliſhmen.
Orleance beſieged, a bulworke there taken, 599,a 20,40, The ſiege broken vp, 601, a 50
Osborne with a nauie out of Denmarke

Denmarke arriueth in England, and whie, 6, b 50. He is proffered great kindneſſe of duke william to depart out of the north countries, 7, b 40, 50
Oſmond biſhop of Saliſburie, made the ſeruice after Saliſburie vſe, 15, b 50
Oſneie abbeie when founded: note, 1080, b 20
Oſſeſtrie town in wales burnt thriſe in thrée yers, 1210, a 10
Oſulfe ſtrangelie ſlaine by a théefe, 13, a 30
Oth for the confirmation of peace betwéen the two kings of England & France ſworne by proxe: note, 675, a 10, &c. b 10. Of obſeruing the league interchangablie made and taken of Henrie the eight and the emperor Charles, 873, b 50. Moſt wicked and diſloiall of noblemen againſt their king, 674, b 60. Falſified by the lord Granuill, 586, a 10 Of fealtie to prince Edward, 226, a 10. Not to infringe the ſtatutes of Oxford, 261, a 50 Corporall receiued vpon the holie myſteries and ſword of Thomas Becket, 303, b 40, Of fidelitie to Edward the third taken of the Flemings, 357, a 40. Concerning the peace betwéens the king of England and France, ſolemnlie taken in parlement of the ſtates: note, 395, b 10. Solemne of the ſecond K. of England to ſée peace performed, 394, b 40. Of the nobles to be true to prince Richard after his fathers deceaſe, 411, a 30 Of rebels miniſtred vnto all paſſengers, 430, a 50. Of the commons of Hertfordſhire to Richard the ſecond, 438, a 30 Of the gentlemen of Northfolke forced by the rebels, 435 a 30. Of the duke of Lancaſter & Hereford combattant touching the iuſtneſſe of his quarrell, 495, a 10. Taken of the two kings of England & France for the aſſurance of both their faithfull meanings 486, b 40. Of Richard the ſecond to performe the noblemens orders, 465, a 40. Of the lords banded againſt the king, 459, a 50. Receiued of Leoline prince of wales to Edward the firſt: note, 279, a 10. Of Edward the firſt in his anger to one of his nobles: note, 302, b 10. Of the French king to aid the ſonne againſt the father, 87, b 10. Forced vpon the lord maior of London, 338, b 10. Of Edward the ſecond at his coronation, which hée ſaid hée would not vnſwear, 326, b 50 Nothing regarded of Edward the ſecond: 321, b 30, Exacted of Henrie the third by his nobles, 258, b 20. Of Henrie the third at a parlement with an imprecation: note, 248, a 60. Of Thomas Becket whereof he repenteth him: note, 70, b 10. Of the earle of Flanders. 91, a 10. Of a cardinall not to preiudice the realme, 239, b 60. Giuen to the earle of Glocester by Henrie the third on his death bed, 276, a 40. Of the maior, aldermen, and communaltie of London ſworne vnto Henrie the third, 264, a 20, &c. Nothing regarded of the French king, 205, b 10. Of Lewes vrged vpon him by Henrie the third, 205, a 60. Of the traitor Parrie in a treaſonable action, 1386 b 40. Interchangeable of the duke of Alanſon and the people, 1342, a 50, 60 b 10. Of the duke of Alanſon read openlie to the people, 1337, a 10. Of K. Richard the firſt at his coronation, 118, a 60. Receiued of the earle of warwike and other officers at Newhauen, 1196, a 30. Taken of the biſhops & barons for their loialtie, 1, b 20. Of duke william at his coronation, 1, b 30. Of duke william ſolemnlie taken and cruellie broken, 10, a 20. Of william Rufus by ſaint Lukes face, 27, a 60. Of the thrée eſtates of France, 578, a 30. Of the duke of Burgoigne with others to Henrie the ſixt, 572, b 40, &c. 573, a 20. It and ſubmiſſion of the duke of yorke to Henrie the ſixt, 639, b 60. Of the duke of Northfolke kept with the loſſe of his life, 759, b 10. Corporall of the earle of Richmond to marie Edward the fourths daughter, 745, b 20 Of the French king at an interuiew, 699, b 60. Taken of the nobilitie in Henrie the firſts time for their fealtie, 38, a 60. Taken of the lords touching the ſucceſſion of the crowne, 43, a 10. Of Lewes the ſonne of the French king when hée laboured to get the crowne of England, 191, b 60 Of pope Innocent vſed vpon a complaint, 187, b 10. Of allegiance to be true to K. Iohn againſt all other perſons, 184 b 10. Of diuerſe erls and barons of France to K. Iohn to aſſiſt him, 160, b 30. Of K. Iohn when his nobles were vp in armes againſt him, 185, a 40, 50. Of the earle of Poictou Richard the firſt his nephue, 150, a 40. Of allegiance receiued of the people to Richard the firſt in his abſence, 137, b 40. Of allegiance to K. Richard the firſt at a councell, 120, b 20. Of Londoners to be true to king Richard the firſt and his heires, 131, b 30 Of the king of Cipres to Richard the firſt, and broken: note, 128, a 10. Of king Richard the firſt, the king of France and their barons, 125 a 40. Of iuſtices of itinerants 98, a 10. Taken about a place of méeting, 113, a 20. A diſpenſation for the ſame, 66, a 60. Of purgation taken ſolemnelie: note, 83, b 30. Ouer all the realme to obſerue the kings peace, 148, a 20. Of fealtie, Saluo ſemper ordine ſuo 85, a 60. Of allegiance newlie taken, 173, a 50. Taken and broken for preferment: note, 43, a 10. Touching an act of eſtabliſhing the crown taken of euerie perſon of lawfull age, 937, a 60, b 10. It & the ſacrament taken but not ment to be obſerued, 680, a 60. Cruellie made and cruellie kept: note, 723, a 10. Of allegiance broken and notablie puniſhed by God: note, 659, b 60. Added to a promiſe and the ſame performed, 14, b 30. Taken to be true to the king and his heires, 14, a 60. Of a noble man by his honor: note, 1214, b 30. Vpon the euangeliſt to ſtand to the iudgement of holie church, 201, b 30. For reſtitution of heritages, rights, liberties, &c. 201, b 40. Inforced, abſolued, 313, b 60. Made, broken, and puniſhed, 418, b 50. with proteſtation in a caſe of innocencie: note, 458, a 10 Of allegiance confirmed by writing, 496, b 20
Oths that the dukes of Brabant were accuſtomed to take 1336, a 10. Corporall receiued for performance of agréements, 30, a 20 Of obedience willinglie taken to K. Iohn, 157, b 30. Outragious order & diſcipline for them, 111, b 30 ¶ Sée Periurie, Promiſe, and Vow.
Otho the emperor commeth ouer into England, 170, b 60 ¶ Sée Odo.
Otuell an earls ſonne, tutor to K. Henrie the firſts children 20, a 40
Ouſe riuer: ¶ Sée Trent.
Owen Glendouer: ¶ Sée Glendouer.
Owen prince of wales ſlaine, 39 b 10
Owles deuoure mice: note a wonder, 1315, a 60, b 10
Oxford forſaken of the ſcholers 173, b 30. Verie forward in preferring quéene Maries religion, 1102, b 10. Quéene Elizabeths progreſſe thither, 1209, a 60, b 10. The ſtrange ſickneſſe there at the aſſiſe, whereof iudges died, &c. 1270, a 40, b 10. Their maner of interteining Albertus de Laſco, 1355, all. The maiſters of the vniuerſitie ſummoned to the parlement about the concluſion of a peace, &c, 255, a 60 The ſcholers thereof fight againſt Henrie the third, 267, a 10 ¶ Sée Debate, Fraie, Statutes, Treaſon, & Variance.

P

PAckinton ſtrangelie murdered, 944, a 20
Paganels: ¶ Sée Painell.
Pagents and ſhewes ſumptuous and ſightlie, 849, a 10, &c. At quéene Annes coronation 930, a 60, b 10, &c. Vpon the ſudden at a Candlemas tide, 853, a 60. At the coronation of Henrie the eight, 802, b 40, &c 803, a 10. Of neat deuiſe, 835, a 40. At quéene Maries coronation, 1091, a 10, &c: In London at the comming of Philip and Marie through the citie, 1120, b 60. 1121, a 10 Of pleaſant inuention, 808, a 60, b 10, &c. At the receiuing of quéen Eliſabeth into Norwich, 1289. 1290, 1291, vnto 1299. In Antwerpe at the receiuing of the duke of Alanſon, 1332, &c. to 1344, a 10. Of triumph at the coronation of quéene Eliſabeth. 1172, 1173, 1174, 1175, 1176, 1177, 1178, 1179. At a triumphant iuſts holden at weſtminſter, 1316, 1317, 1318, 1319, 1320, 1321. at Chriſtmas, 816, a 20. 812, a 20 807, a 40, &c. 839, b 40. On a maidaie, 809, a 20, &c. ¶ Sée Sights.
Paget lord. ¶ Sée Throckmorton Francis, and Erle Perſie of Northumberland.
Painell kept the caſtell of Ludlow, 48, b 60
Palace of Henrie the eight at Guiſnes deſcribed: note, 856, b 40, 50, &c: 857, all.
Palatine of Siradia, ¶ Sée Albertus de Laſco.
Paleſtine. ¶ Sée Holie land.
Palmer knight beheaded, his words at his death, 1090, a 50 60
Palmeſundaie field. ¶ Sée Battell.
Palſgraue of Rhene, his traine come to receiue Henrie the eight, 823, a 20. He and others come ouer into England, 947 b 60
Pandulph the popes legat, a practiſer of much miſchiefe againſt king Iohn, 175, a 10, b 40. 177, a 10. Made biſhop of Norwich, 202, a 60
Papiſts crueltie againſt the martyrs in quéene Maries time, 1363, a 40, 50. Their obiections that prieſts executed are but ſcholers and vnarmed, 1367, a 40, 50. They call the proteſtants heretikes and enimies to the croſſe of Chriſt euen as Achab called Elias the diſturber of Iſraell, himſelfe being the onlie diſturber 1125, a 60. Their praiers, & of what little effect they be, 1125, a 10. Animated by rebellion, 1054, a 10. By rebellion haue an ill opinion of Gods holie truth, 1054, b 10. Such as were neuer charged with capitall crimes, 1360, b 60. 1361, a 10, &c.
Paraphraſe of Eraſmus commanded to be had in churches 992, a 60
Pardon offred to conſpirators and traitors, 650, a 10. Vpon miſtruſt refuſed, 650, a 10. Offered to rebels: note, 431, b 60 At a parlement 396, a 10. Of ſix yeares and one hundred daies preached, 240, a 60. To Appletrée hauing the halter about his necke, 1310, b 20. with exceptions at quéene Maries coronation, 1091, b 30. Generall to all rebels conditionallie publiſhed, 1056, b 50. To the liuing, pitie on the dead, 688, b 30, 40. Generall proclamed, 942, b 20. No offenſe excepted, 765, b 20. By proclamation diſperſed the Kentiſh rebels, 635, a 60. At a pinch for treaſon: note 627, a 50. Vpon ſubmiſſion, 146, b 60 147, a 10. For priſoners at a womans ſute obteined, 378, a 20. ¶ Sée Forgiueneſſe and Parlement.
Pardoners two ſet on the pillorie: note, 774, a 40
Parrie ſueth for licence to trauell beyond ſea, 1385, a 30. Iuſtifieth himſelfe in religion before the inquiſitor of Millan, 40. Reſolued in the vile plot of his trecherous deuiſe 60. with what enimies vnto God he linketh himſelfe, b 10. He voweth to vndertake the killing of the quéene, 30. And reſolued himſelfe ſo to doo, 60. Committed vnto the cuſtodie and examination of ſir Francis walſingham, 1383, a 40. Denieth with proteſtations whatſoeuer was demanded of him, 60. Examined before certeine lords of the councell, b 20. Committed to the Tower, 40. His diſcontentment becauſe he might not haue preferpreferment to his owne liking,60. Confeſſeth himſelfe guiltie of all things conteined in his inditement,1389,b 20.His confeſſion of treaſons openlie read by his owne aſſent,1390,a 30. Iudgement giuen againſt him, 40. He chargeth the lords of the councell with vntruth, b 50. Reproued,60.His exclamation of outrage and vnpatientneſſe,1391,a 40. Abuſeth the aſſemblie with termes and words vncouth, 60. The forme of iudgement pronounced againſt him,b 60. Deſperat,1386,a 60. How long his practiſe was in handling per it was detected,b 10. His oth in that ill matter,40.He chargeth Neuill with gréeuous ſpéeches of curſſed diſloialtie, 60. What mooued him to attempt the murthering of the quéene,1384,a 10. He counteth it a déed meritorious, 20. His peſtilent humor of malice againſt hir, 50. How his traitorous practiſe ſhould haue béene doone,b 10.His reſoluteneſſe to doo it,40. His voluntarie confeſſion in the hearing of certeine lords, 60. Certeine obſeruations out of his words and writings: note,1394,all.A dilemma prouing that hée died a periured traitor,1395, b 10. An epigram of fit deuiſe for ſo vile a wretch,b 30,&c. Rageth at the iuſtice barre without all reuerence,1392,a 10. Euen at his execution hée ſéeketh to cléere himſelfe,20,30. A deſcription of him by linage and life verie lewd: note,50,60,b 10,&c.1393. His letters vnto quéene Eliſabeth and to the lords of the councell,after his voluntarie confeſſion, 1387, a 20,b 10.His treaſons practiſed againſt quéene Eliſabeth at full declared,1382,a 50 Deſcribed, reconciled to the pope,60.His malice groweth to an extremitie of miſchiefe againſt quéene Eliſabeth, b 60. Saith and vnſaith, to ſhift of the heuie charge of his treaſons, 1388, a 60. Conuicted,b 60.Arreigned,1389,all.

Paris, where Henrie the ſixt was crowned,606,a 40. Henrie the fift receiued in there, 578, a 10. Edward the third draweth néere it with his power, the Engliſhmen lie before it, the ſuburbs burned, 393,a 50,b 10,30. For multitude of people it paſſeth, 1333, b 50. The duke of Bedfords entrance thereinto, and executing certeine conſpirators, 586,a 60. The treaſon of the inhabitants,613,a 40. yéelded to the French king, 613,a 60

Paris garden. ¶ Sée Slaughter.

Pariſhes. ¶ Sée England.

Parker afterwards archbiſhop of Canturburie, preacheth to the rebels of Northfolk,1030 b 30,40,50. They threaten him, he conueieth himſelfe from among them, 1032,a 10 ¶ Sée Archbiſhops of Canturburie.

Parkin. ¶ Sée Perkin.

Parlement holden at Blackefriers, 876,a 10. At Cambridge,465,b 40. At Couentrie,652,a 10. Made fruſtrate 659,a 30. At Gloceſter,421,a 30 In Ireland,481,b 40. At Lambeth,215,b 40. Leiceſter 591,a 40. London, 261, a 50. 251,b 30. 257,b 10. 250,b 60. Adiorned,251,a 20. 248,b 40. 238,b 20. 240,b 30. 246,b 30, 265,b 20. 274,b 10. 220,a 10. 202,b 10 308,a 60. 280,b 40. 321,b 20.351,a 10. 43,b 40. 54, b 20. At Marleburrough,274 a 20. At Merton in Surrie, 220,a 50. At Northampton, 97,a 60. 318, b 30. 428,b 20. 347,b 20. 143, a 40. At Notingham,142, b 30. At Oxford,101,a 30,209,b 50. 167,a 20. At Rone by the duke of Bedford,603, a 30. At ſaint Edmundſburie,301,b 30,627 a 20. At Saliſburie,445,b 30. 302,a 60. At Shrewſburie, 282,a 60. At weſtminſter,278 a 10,283,a 60,210,b 60. 220,a 60,214,b 60 229,a 50.233,a 40 1225,a 20 270,b 60. 208,a 20. 262,a 10. 207,a 30. 272,b 40. King Richard the ſecond being in Ireland,481,b 40, 50. Crownes of England and France intaled to Henrie the ſixt,&c:678,a 20. with an atteindor and a pardon generall 762,b 20. wherevnto quéene Eliſabeth and hir lords did ride,1377,a 20.1315,a 50 At wincheſter,259,b 30.480,a 10 270,b 50. At windſor, 96,b 40.103,a 50. At Yorke,309,a 10.332,a 10. 306. 350,b 10. Called by the duke of Bedford, Henrie the fift being in France,581,a 60. It and Richard the ſecond at diſſention 452,b 10.Called, Richard the ſecond being priſoner in the Towre, 502,a 10. Called by the duke of Gloceſter, Henrie the ſixt being in France, 607, b 10. Diſſolued, quéene Eliſabeth making an oration to the whole houſe,1396,a 50,&c. wherein church liuings are reſtored: note, 1130, a 20. whereat Philip and Marie are preſent, 1122, a 10. Of white bands,326, b 60. Parlamentum inſanum, 258,a 60. Iniurious and offenſiue,493, a 50,60. Determination concerning the intaling of the crowne,657,a 60. Of ſeuen wéekes continuance,521,a 30 Called the laimens parlement,526,a 10. Long,536,b 10.That wrought wonders, 463,b 10. Of thrée eſtates of the realme,781,a 60. whereto noble men are appointed to come in warlike maner,489,b 60. Summoned, and new lawes for the common welth enacted,764,a 40. Called the great parlement, 490, a 60. Called mercileſſe, & of a head that ſpake then, 484, b 20. The lords ſit in the houſe in their armour,439,b 10. Held on that time fiftie yeares that Edward the third was borne, 395,b 60.396,a 10. For the order of knighthood, 254, a 30. Proroged,258,a 10. Maie bée deceiued,1124,b 60. And that the king of Scots came thither,97,b 60. Adiorned from place to place,631,a 30 At diuiſion: note,911,a 30,&c. 912, a 20.Great and ſolemne,255, a 60. Called the mad parlement,258,a 60. The firſt vſe thereof in Henrie the firſt his time,38,a 60,b 40,39. The authoritie thereof, 1005, b 30. The cauſes and conditions thereof: note, 452, b 20,30. The authoritie of both houſes granted to certeine perſons,493,a 20. ¶ Sée Burgeſſe, Councell, Priuilege.

Parſonages with a decrée touching the ſame, 30,b 60

Paſe doctor deſcribed, 871,b 60. His oration in praiſe of peace 848,b 40. Falleth out of his wits, 907,a 10

Paſport giuen to Anſelme to depart the land,26,a 10. ¶ Sée Safe conduct.

Paten. ¶ Sée biſhop wainfléet.

Patents reſumed into Richard the firſts hands by act of parlement. 143,b 50

Pateſhull a frier Auguſtine & a wickleuiſt, forſaketh his profeſſion, preacheth openlie againſt his order, publiſheth a libell againſt his brotherhood, his fauourers,455,a 60, b 10.

Patience of the Engliſhmen in ſuffering all wants of reléefe, 995,a 40

Patriarch of Ieruſalem commeth into England, 108,b 10

Patrike an Auguſtine frier, ſeditious, and an enimie vnto Lancaſter houſe, 787,a 20

Pauia beſieged, and how the battell was tried,884,a 40,50 60,&c.10,&c.885,a 10

Pauier a contemner of the goſpell and his ſhamefull end: note, 935,a 60

Paule abbat of S. Albons commended, 18,a 60

Paules church in London dedicate,225,b 50. The gates blew open with a tempeſt,1209,a 20 Church ſtéeple finiſhed, 204,a 10. It laie at anchor, 979 b 30. Vpon the wethercocke wherof ſtood a Duchman holding a ſtreamer, &c. 1091, a 60. It is burnt by lightning: note,624, a 50, 14, b 10. Meanes made to repare it,1194,a 40,&c. Ten thouſand pounds inſufficient to repare it as it was at firſt, b 10

Paulet ſir Hugh knight his anſwer vnto the conſtable of France,at the ſiege of Newhauen, 1203,b 10

Paulet william lord treaſuror deceaſeth,his ancient & honorable ſeruice, bleſſed in his children, 1228,a 30

Peace betwéene England and France,1206,a 50. Concluded, 261,a 60, 832,a 60,b 10 Difficulties about the practiſe thereof,the French councell accord for it,the contents of the capitulation for it, 834, a 60,b 10,&c. Proclamed,892, b 10. Concluded & proclamed, 973,b 20. Moued,774,b 60 Commiſſioners ſent ouer to Calis about the ſame, while the Engliſh preferred it before war, a concluſion thereof betwéene both nations,775,a 10,30,60. Treated of at Towres,624,a 60. Treated but not concluded, 568, b 10,&c. Conditionallie concluded: note, 1061,b 40,50,60. with a mariage, 161,a 50. After wearie wars,146,b 50,60 40,b 60 480,a 40. In memorie whereof the chapell of our ladie of peace was builded: note,486, a 50,&c. b 20, 60. Perpetuall treated, 474. b 40. 445,a 40 Treated but not obteined, 362,a 50,60. Treated by the ladie Iane de Valois, 380, a 30. And articles drawne, 391, b 50 Commiſſioners appointed to treat thereabouts, 409, a 30. Concluded for one whole yeare,379,b 40. Conditionall at the moderation of the quéene of England, 336,a 30.40. Treted by a cardinall, 295,a 10. Decréed by the pope, 308, b 40. Treated vpon by two ducheſſes: note,909,b 60 910, a 60,&c. Betwéene the French king and the emperor treated but not concluded, 1129,a 50,60. Procured betwéene the king of Spaine and France at the ſute of the ducheſſe of Lorrane, 1151, a 60. Broken by the French king,&c. 402,a 60. Hard to be made betwixt Henrie the ſecond and the French king, 113,b 60. Concluded betwene Henrie the ſecond and the French king with much adoo, 114,a 60. Treated betwéene Henrie the eight, and the French king, by a legat from Rome, 882,b 40. Betwéene Edward the fourth, and the French king, the ſeme articulated,696,b 30,50,&c. Said to be made by the Holie ghoſt: note, 700, a 60. Betwéene Henrie the ſixt & the French king ſolemnelie treated at Paris, 611, a 20. Betwéene Henrie the fift & the French king,& the articles of the ſaid peace, 572, a 20, 60. 573, a 40, &c. Betwéene king Iohn and the French king after war, 160,b 40. Said to be mooued by the popes Nuncios, 166,b 30. Betwéen Richard the firſt and the French king, 121, a 30. Betwéene Edward the third and the French king, after manie bloudie ſkirmiſhes, and vpon what articles, 394,a 10,&c. Betwéene william Rufus and his brother Robert for monie, 21, b 10 Treated and proclamed after long troubles betwéene Henrie the third and his barons: note,268,a 60,b 10,&c. Painefullie procured by the counteſſe of wales betwixt the king and the duke of Lancaſter,446,b 60. Betwéene Robert and Henrie the firſt, brethren, 30,a 10. Of brethren, namelie Edward the fourth and the duke of Clarence, 681,a 10. Betwéene Henrie the ſecond and his ſonnes, 89, b 10. Betwéene the king of England and Scotland, 47, b 30.50,a 60. with king Iohn compounded for by the king of Scots,173,b 10. with the Scots, 607,b 10. Betwixt Edward the firſt and Leolin prince of wales vpon articles, 278, b 20,&c. 279, a 10 Betwéene the king of England and the Scots with the charters of the ſame, 96,a 10 Sought by king Iohn, but withſtood of the French king, 167,a 40. Betwéene the king of France and the king of Spaine ſolemnelie celebrated,850,b 40. Betwéene Lewis and Henrie the third after ſharpe wars,201,b 10. Of quéenes by them procured: note, 291, b 50. Betwéene the king of France and the duke of Britaine, with the articles thereof, 427, b 50 betwéene king Stephan and Henrie Fitz empreſſe, after their long warres, 61, a 60. Betwixt the two factions of Burgogne and Orleance, 538, b 60. Sought for of Soldan Saladin to Richard the firſt, and concluded, 135, a 0, Betwéene Charles of France & the duke of Burgogne, 611, b 50. And what miſchéefe came thereof, 612, a 10, &c. Betwéene the emperor Charles and the French K. 888, b 20, 30, &c. Henrie the eight, & the prince of Orange included in the ſame, whie it ſet all Chriſtendome in a woondering, 889, a 40, 60, b 10 20. Treated vpon betwéene the emperor Charles and the French K. 870, a 60. Betwixt the K. of Spaine & France, treated of, 1183, b 50. The articles thereof, 1184, a 10. Betwéene France & Scotland proclamed, 1192, b 10, 20, 30. Articles of the ſame peace, the end thereof, with the commendation of the ſame, 1193, a 20, 40, 60. The praiſe and benefits thereof, 1054, b 60. A treatiſe thereof before an encounter, 10, b 40. Granted vpon mutuall conditions, 10, b 50. Made a pretenſe to execute inward malice, 10, a 30. Concluded to one partie diſhonourable, 19, a 20. Sought but not wrought, 226, b 10. Contemned, and reuenge purſued, note, 204, a 40, 50. Concluded after much trouble, 273, b 40. And what a foule end an enimie thereto had, 206, b 40. Hindered by hard demands, 410, a 60, b 10. Solemnlie made, and rechleſlie broken, 402, b 20, wrought by the grace of the Holieghoſt: note, 393, b 60. Diſhonourable, 347, b 20. Hindered with ſtoutneſſe, 352, a 20. Offenſiue, 427, b 50, 60. Sought for but not admitted: note, 494, b 20. Sought but not obteined: note, 32, b 40. Perſuaded, nothing preuailed, 146, b 10. Diſaduantageable, 161, b 10. Diſpleaſant, 30. After ſharpe wars, and victorie: note, 572, b 20, &c. Sought for the ſupplanting of ciuill diſcord: note, 657, b 10. Procured by want of monie, 696, b 50. Begun betwéene two, an occaſion thereof betwéene manie, 682, a 20. Sought after much malice & bloudſhed betwéene perſons of great honour, 681, a 50 Called the womens peace: note, 909, b 60, 910, a 10, &c. Treated vpon at Cambrie, executed: note, 914, a 20. Concluded vpon articles, 98, a 40. After great troubles vpon conditions: note, 94, a 40, b 30. Broken of ſet purpoſe: note, 112, a 10. ¶Sée Parlement.

Peers Alice is baniſhed the realme: note, [illegible]18, b 50. ¶Sée Perers.

Péers Gaueſton earle of Cornwall, 318, b 40. Edward the ſeconds lewd companion, 318, 50. Married, 318, b 40. Accurſed, 319, b 60. Hated of the noble men, and whie, 319, b 10. Baniſhed the realme, b 60. The king his fauour towards him, made deputie of Ireland, placed in Banburgh caſtell, baniſhed into Flanders, 320, a 10, 40, b 60. His ſawcie abuſing of the nobles, they aſſalt and take him, hée is brought vnto warwike and beheaded, the king diſpleaſed at his death, 321, a 20, &c.

Penance at Pauls croſſe, note, 943, b 40 936, a 40. Of Anabaptiſts, 946, a 40. 1260, b 20. Of a moſt horrible offendor: note, 1558, b 50. Of fiue perſons of the familie of loue, 1261, b 30. At Paules croſſe by a ſpirit in a wall without Alderſgate, 1117, b 60. Of two wenches counterfeiting themſelues to be poſſeſſed with the diuell, 1259, b 60, Of biſhop Herbert, 26, a 50. That the regents and rulers of Oxford did at cardinall Otho his curſſe, 222, a 50. Inioined vnto the burgeſſes of Oxford: note, 181, b 40. Of the ladie Cobham for hir intended treaſon againſt Henrie the ſixt, 623, a 10. Of doctor Barnes and two merchants of the Stilliard for hereſie, 892, b 60. That a wrongfull iuſtice did, 284, b 60. with penaltie for murder: note, 562, a 52. Ridiculous: note, 484, a 30

Penbroke coniuror. ¶Sée Sorcerer.

Pendleton doctor preaching at Paules croſſe hath a gun ſhot at him, 1117, b 50

Penker doctor loſt his voice in his ſermon, &c: note, 725, b 40

Penſioners muſter before the quéene Eliſabeth, 1211, a 60

Peoples fauour fired when it is once gotten: note, 149, all. 150, a 10, 20. Is Henrie the firſt glad to ſéeke, and whie, 28, b 10. Great vnto the duke of Summerſet, 1068, b 40. Sought by faire words, 17, b 30. Their furious reuenge for the death of one whome they loued: note, 12, b 60: what promiſes to purchaſe it, 8, b 40. ¶Sée Commons.

Perers Alice Edward the third his concubine: note, 410, b 20 Baniſhed the realme, 418, b 50

Perkin warbecke was a long time taken for the yonger of the two princes whome Richard the third murthered, 734, b 10. The counterfet duke of yorke, his redie wit to learne all that made for his preferment vnto honour, hée arriueth in Ireland, ſaileth into France all aſlant, returneth vnto the ladie Margaret his firſt founder, named by hir the white roſe of England, 776, a 10, &c. Counterfeteth the duke of yorke verie cunninglie, his true linage, his conſpiring fautors, 777, a 20, 40, b 50. Sir william Stanlie his fauourer, 778, b 40. He attempteth to land in Kent, his men diſcomfited, his capteins taken and executed, he reculeth into Flanders, 779, b 40, 60. Saileth into Ireland, and is in ſundrie opinions, hée marrieth the earle of Huntlies daughter, ſaith that he is Edward the fourth his lawfull ſonne, telleth the Scotiſh K. how he was preſerued & kept aliue, calleth the ladie Margaret his aunt, craueth aid of the Scotiſh K. toward the recouerie of the crowne of England from Henrie the ſeuenth 780, a 20, &c. His counterfet compaſſion, 781, a 40. Hée is faine to packe out of Scotland, his thrée counſellors, hée aſſalteth Exceſter, 783, b 50, &c. He taketh ſanctuarie, his wife preſented to Henrie the ſeuenth, all his partakers in their ſhirts with halters about their necks appéere before Henrie the ſeuenth, he is aſſalted in ſanctuarie, ſubmitteth himſelfe to the K. and is ſtrictlie ſéene vnto, 784, a 60, b 10, &c. Eſcapeth from his kéepers, his confeſſion as it was written with his owne hand, and read openlie vpon a ſcaffold by the ſtandard in Chepe 786, a 10, 20, &c. 787, a 10. Hée corrupted his kéepers, he is executed at Tiburne, 787, a 10, b 30

Periurie puniſhed, 46, b 20. 680, a 60. By God 1262, a 20. Laid to william Rufus charge by his brother Robert, 21, a 40. ¶Sée Oth & Promiſe. Laid to Henrie the fourths charge, 524, a 10. ¶Sée Baſſuling.

Perot ſir Thomas knight. ¶Sée Iuſts triumphant.

Perſecution in England ceaſeth, and the proteſtants returne out of exile, 1181, b 50. ¶Sée Martyr, Religion, Prieſts ſeminarie.

Perſie lord ſent againſt the Scots, 303, b 60. Put to flight by the king of Scots, 315, a 10. ¶Sée Conſpiracie and Erle.

Perſiuall ¶Sée Maior and Officer.

Peſon. ¶Sée wonder.

Peſtilence 473, a 20. In Calis, 803, b 30. Followeth famine, 1049, b 40. In manie places, ſpeciallie in London, 787, b 60. In diuerſe parts of the realme, 704, a 60, That deuoured woonderfull multitudes: note, 703, b 20. Hot in London, 1211, b 60. In London, 961, a 40. 525, a 60. Among the ſoldiors at Newhauen, 1204, a 50. The cauſe that Newhauen fell into the hands of the French, 1205, b 10, 20, 30. Tranſported from thenſe to London, 1205, b 50. And what a conſumption of people it wroght in the citie and ſuburbs: this was called the great plague, b 60. Like to haue increaſed, 1260, a 10, 20. In Germanie whereof thrée hundred thouſand died, 1206, b 10

Peterburrough ſpoiled, 194, a 30

Peter pence forbidden to be anie more gathered in England, 397, b 20

Peter Landoiſe. ¶Sée Landoiſe.

Peters william knight deceaſeth, his charitie, 1227, b 50

Petitions thrée that quéene Philip made to hir huſband on hir death bed: note, 404, a 20, 30, &c. ¶Sée Demands and Requeſts.

Peto cardinall became a begging frier: note, 1365, b 10

Peuerell william diſherited, 65 b 40

Philip his preparation to come into England, the Engliſh ambaſſadors méete him at ſaint Iames of Compoſtella, his arriuall in Southhampton, receiued of the nobilitie, interteined of quéene Marie, married vnto hir, what nobles were attendant on him, the conditions of their mariage, 1118, all. Inſtalled at windſor, he and ſhe go through London to weſtminſter, 1120 b 50, 60. Paſſeth ouer into Flanders to incounter the French king, 1133, b 20, 1129 b 40. His returne into England, 1133, a 40.

Philip the hardie and whie ſo ſurnamed, 401, b 60.

Philip of Auſtrich, afterwards K. of Caſtile or Spaine, landeth in weſt parts of England, 792, b 40. His honorable interteinment, his vow inuiolablie kept, his deth and deſcription, 793, a 10, 50, 60

Philip the French king bribed to procure peace betwéene william Rufus and Robert, 21, b 10 Setteth Robert the ſonne againſt his father william, duke of Normandie, 12, a 30. His ieſt at duke william lieng ſicke, 14, b 20. His death, 34, b 60, 205, a 60. ¶Sée French king.

Philip king Richard the firſts baſe ſonne, ſlue the vicount of Limoges, 160, b 60

Philip quéene of England: ¶Sée Quéene.

Philpot a worthie citizen of London and alderman, 419, b 60. Diſcloſeth treaſons, 428 a 60

Phyſician Lewes ſheweth to quéene Elizabeth the whole conceit and deuiſe of vniting the houſe of Lancaſter and yorke in one, 741, b 50

Phyſicians counſell neglected dangerous to the death, 45, a 10, 20

Piemount prince commeth into England, 1126, b 10

Piers Exton. ¶Sée Exton.

Pilgrime his ſcrip and ſtaffe, 123, b 10

Pilgrims robbed and the théefe hanged: note, 122, a 20

Pilgrimage cloked, 183, b 50. The holie pilgrimage, 942, a 20

Pilgrimages. ¶Sée Images.

Pipes of lead vnder the ground to conueie water, and when the caſting of them was inuented, 944, a 60. ¶Sée Water.

Pirat Barton. ¶Sée Barton, Campbell.

Pirats on the weſt ſeas taken and executed, 1258, a 10. Hanged at wapping, 1258, b 40 1271, a 60, 1354, b 10, 20 ¶Sée Clinton, &c.

Pirats had like to haue taken Henrie the fourth, 533, b 10 Followed ſo that they durſt not péepe out, 537, a 30. To the number of twentie and two condemned and iudged to die, 1262, a 10

Pittie of Henrie the ſecond to the poore: note, 115, a 50. Of Henrie the ſeuenth on a companie of haltered rebels, 784, b 40 b 40. Of Henrie the ſixt notable: note, 691. b 20. Of king Henrie the fift: note, 560. b 60 Of Hubert de Burgh toward duke Arthur of Britaine in priſon, 165. b 10. Of Edward the third towards the poore notable, 375. a 20. Of a queene of England vnto ſix burgeſſes of Calis: note, 378. a 20. Of captaine Randoll notable, 1205. b 10. Fooliſh in bearing with pardoning offendors: note, 1049. a 60. Of one the caſting awaie of another: note, 41. b 30. On the dead, pardon to the liuing, 688. b 30. 40. Procureth perill. 423. b. 10, 20. ¶ See Charitie.

Plage called The great plage, aſſwaged in London, 1262, a 10. Threefold to the poore citizens, 1209, a 20. A natural prognoſtication therof, 1050. b. 30. Great in Eſſex, 480. b 60. In diuerſe places of England great, 805. a 10. ¶ See Peſtilence.

Plaie publike, and conference there to further the rebellion in Northfolke, but note the iſſue, 1028. b 20. 30. 1029. 1030. Of a tragedie in Oxford with miſfortune. 1209. b 10.

Plaies and enterludes forbidden for a time, 1184. a 50.

Planets ſuperiors coniunction, 484. b. 40.

Plantagenet the true earle of warwike, a verie innocent, he is executed: note 787. b 20. 50 Knight deceaſeth in the tower, the cauſe of his trouble, 955. a 60. b 10. &c. The laſt of the right line and name, 953. a 60. In whome that name reſted. 703. b 20. A counterfeit of the ladie Margarets imagining, 775. a 60. ¶ See Arthur and Earle.

Pledges that duke William led ouer with him into Normandie, 5. a 10. Scotiſh appointed to paſſe into England 1187. b 40. ¶ See Hoſtages.

Plentie and abundance: note 284. a 40. And dearth, 1133. a 30. Of vittels, but ſcarſitie of monie, 353. a 10. See Vittels.

Plimmouth burnt, 355. a 60.

Pocks whereof manie died 397. b 50.

Porr Ranulfe ſlaine, 106 a 20.

Poictiers battell when it was, 390. a 10

Poictouins reuolt from king John. 164 b 10. Send king Henrie the third word of their readines to reuolt from the French king, 207. a 10. Suſpected to haue poiſoned the Engliſh lords, 259. b 50 Diſcomfited, 217. b 40

Poinings knight lieutenant of Turnaie. 825. a 10. Diſcharged of keeping it, 837. b 40 A valiant captaine ſent into Flanders, 772. a 60. Sent into Ireland with an armie, his valiantnes and ſucceſſe, 779. a 60. b 10. &c. His deceaſe 969, b. 20.

Poiſoning, a woman burnt for it at Tunbridge. 1262. a 60. And alſo at Maidſtone, 1226. 40. Puniſhed with boiling to death in hot water. 926. b 60. Practiſed, and the parties puniſhed with ſtanding on the pillorie, 1258. b. 40. For the which a wench was burnt in Smithfield, 1434, b 10. And execution for the ſame, 259. b 60. 260. a 10. Bewraied by the ſweating of pretious ſtones, 194. b 20. Of earle Scot of Cheſter with his wife, 220, b 60. Of the earle of Deuonſhire, 646. b 60. In Italie practiſed: note 795. a 10. &c.

Polander, ¶ See Albertus de Laſco.

Policie whereby Compiegne was ſurrendered to the Engliſh. 587. a 60. Of the Pariſiens to cutreach the duke of Bedford, 586. a 6. Of the French in taking Pont de Larch, 629. a 20. In buieng peace of the Engliſh, 700. b 10. &c. Of Edward the fourth againſt his enimies, 684. a 50. Of Richard the third miſchiefous and inceſtuous, note, 350. a 60. Vngratious & tending to the ſlaughter of princelie innocents, 739. a 20. Of the earle of Richmond in getting the ſun at the becke of his ſouldiers, 758. b 60. To auoid a danger 748. a 38. Of Henrie the ſeuenth againſt ſir Robert Clifford, 778. b 20. In ſending forth eſpials into Flanders, 777. b 30. To preuent an intended miſchiefe: note 536. b 20 Of duke Albert of Saxonie to get the towne of Dam, 772. a 20. Of the Engliſh archers againſt their enimies ſhot, 770. b 40. Of Henrie the ſeuenth to match ſuſpected perſons eſpeciallie if they fled, 780. a In ſurpriſing the towne of Pont Meulan, a 10. b 10. For a bridge, 617. b 60. Of ſir Francis the Arragonois, 619. b 10. Of Henrie the fift in the time of a commotion, 544 b 10. Oftentimes paſſeth force, 648. a 60. Of the earle of Huntington 617. Of Henrie the fift againſt the French horſemen, 553. b 10: note 564. b 50. For redie bridges, 571. b 40, Of a prieſt fauoring conſpirators: note 516. a 40. Of the earle of weſtmerland, 529 b 40. 50. 530. a 10. Of the Engliſh againſt the Flemiſh 454. b 10. Of the French king againſt the Engliſh, 426. b 50. 4222. a 60. Daſtardlie of the French king to make Edward the third raiſe his ſiege from Calis, 375 b 30. Of the Scots diſcomfiting the Engliſh, 324. b. 60. Of a captaine againſt the welſhmen, 236. a 60. a 60. Of the Engliſh, 295. a 60. Of the duke of Guiſe againſt the Engliſh, 1135. b 20. Of the French to make bridges 1138, b. 60. To reſtraine the people at the duke of Sumerſets execution, 1067. a 60. b 50. Of a yeoman of the gard a rebell whereby he gat pardon. 844. Of Scattergood a guner to deceiue the French 1192. a 60. Of Frenchmen diſguiſed in womans aparell, 1188. b 50. Of warre by the Kentiſhmen, 2. a 20. Of the French to giue the Engliſh a repulſe, 1191. a 50. Of duke william in making a part of England waſte, 11. a 40. Of the French king to get poſſeſſion of Vernueill. 8.88. a 50. ¶ See Diſſimulation, Stratagem.

Pomfret caſtle rendred to Edward the ſecond, 331. a

Pontoiſe ſurpriſed by the Engliſhmen, 570. a 30. Recouered by them, 17. a 40. Beſieged by the French king but valiantlie defended, b 20. Gotten by French, 618. a 30

Pont Meulan ſurpriſed by entrance of a common priuie, 610. b 10

Pontorſon rendered vnto the Engliſhmen, 895. a 30.

Poole Cardinall. ¶ See Cardinall Poole and Pope.

Pope Adrian, 274. a 40. An Engliſhman borne. 66. a 50, His election to the popedome wondered, and whie, he commeth to Rome, 871. b 30. 50. His creation, corruption of the cardinals in his election corrupted with manie vices, 767. a 40, 50. b 21. His pride: note, 69. a 40. His grant to make John king of Ireland, 101. a 30. Maketh profit of his great pardon or heauenlie grace, 788. a 60. Letters for the reliefe of the Holie land, 104. b 50. Fatherlie words to archbiſhop Lanfranke: note 9. a 50. Depriueth biſhops and reſtoreth them, 9 a 40. Heareth the contention for the primaſie betweene the archbiſhops, 9. a 30. Sent commiſſioners into England, 8. b 60. He and the emperor Frederik at debate, 75. b 10. His anſwer to Beckets complaint, 73. a 30.

Pope Boniface prohibiteth Edward the firſt further to vex the Scots, 309. b 30.

Pope Calixtus held a councell at Reimes, and conſecrateth the archbiſhop of Canturburie with his owne hands, 40 a 50. A ſutor for archbiſhop Thurſtane 40. b 40. His curſſe againſt both archbiſhops of Canturburie and yorke. 42. a 10.

Pope Celeſtine a friend to archbiſhop Geffreie of yorke, 130. b 20. Maketh an archbiſhop of Canturburie legat of all England, 147, b 50.

Pope Clements reformation in England, 315. b 40. And what ſummes of monie are had of the archbiſhop of yorke: note 315. a 30. Procureth a peace for one yeare betwixt the two kings of England and France, 379. b 40. Sent two cardinals to accord the two kings of England and France, 377. b 50. Letters in fauor of the biſhop of Elie, and how he defendeth his chapleins, 132. a 60. Sendeth Henrie the eight a golden roſe, 883. a 60. Pretended a title to the realme of Sicill, 124. b 60. Requireth Henrie the eight perſonallie to appeare at a generall councell, 930, a 10. Taken priſoner by the emperors armie, 1365. a 30. Deceſeth, more infortunat than fortunat, 935. b 10. His death preiudiciall, 131. b 60

Pope Eugenie ſendeth a legat to treat a peace betweene the two kings of England and France, 607. a 50

Pope Gelaſius the ſecond his death. 40. a 10

Pope Gregorie ſendeth the biſhop of Rauenna to treat a peace betwixt England and France, 408. b 50. Meſſengers ſent to him about reſeruations of benefices, b 60. 409 &c. Denied to be true pope: note, 225. a 60. Sendeth cardinall Otho into England, 221. b 30. His meanes to moue the people to a iorneie againſt the Saracens, 209. b 40. Diſgraced by the cardinall of Burges, 514. b 60 His plaine ſong, whereabouts was great ſtrife, 13. b 30. His bull againſt the hearing of a married prieſts maſſe, 11. b 60 Depoſed by king Henrie the ſeuenth, 1364. b 10. His faculties granted to Parſons and Campian for England, 1362. b 60. Parries letters to him, & whereto they tended, 1389. a 50. A lewd ſermon and full of papiſticall adulation made at his funerals, 1397. b 40. &c. 1398. &c. vnto 1400. Deceaſeth, 1397. a 20. His new kalendar touched, 30. 40. &c.

Pope Honorius, his legat a bawdie knaue ſent into England about reformation, 42. b 40. His legat to king Henrie the third, 208. a 10. Mainteiner of king Johns cauſe, 193. b 50

Pope Hildebrand the firſt that made warre againſt the emperor, 1364. a 40

Pope Innocent ſummoneth a generall councell, 236. b 20 His requeſt for maintenance of the warres againſt the Turks, 164. a 20. Offereth to king Henrie the third the kingdome of Sicill, 250. b 20. And hath England tributarie, 177. b 20. Would not confirme archbiſhop Reignolds of Canturburies election, and whie, 169. a 60. His anſwers to the Engliſh ambaſſadors, 187. a 60. b 10. His licence to king Richard the firſt to gather riches, 120. a 60. Commandeth that the church of Lameth ſhould be raced, 154 a 30. His councell held at Cleremont, 44. a 50. He findeth fauor at king Henrie the firſt his hands, and is thankfull, 44. a 50. Sendeth cardinals about a treatie of peace, 391. a 30. Aided with monie by king Henrie the third againſt the emperor, 224. b 30. Deceaſeth, 193. b 50. 274. a 30

Pope Julies election, a deſcription of his qualities, and how he came to the popedome, 811, b 30. &c. Sendeth king Henrie the eight a cap of maintenance, &c. Compared to Ankeus, his purpoſes and death, a malcontent, 830. b 10. &c. Intituleth king Henrie the eight Chriſtianiſsimo, his daughters requeſt, a deſcription of his properties, 831. a 20. 50. 60. Gaue cardinall Pooles authoritie apoſtolike, 1123 b 10. Dieth, a porkiſh pope, his monſtrous blaſphemie againſt God about a pecocke, 1128. a 10. &c, 50.

Pope Leo the tenth his creation, 831. b 60. His coronation, a poore priſoner on the ſame dale tweluemoneth of his election and inthronization, 832. a 10. 30. He ſoliciteth all the princes of chriſtendome againſt the Turke, 846. a 10. Receiueth two elephants for a preſent: note, 837. b 10. His craftie feare, 845. b 30. His deceaſe ſuppoſed by poiſon, the maner and order of his death. 871. a 40. &c

Pope Martine legateth the biſhop of winchester & vnlegateth him againe, 602. a 60. b 60

Pope Othobone named Adrian the fift, 274. a 40

Pope Paſchall his bulles vnto Anſelme of Canturburie, 27. b 60. Grieued bicauſe his authoritie is not regarded in England, 37. b 20. Courteouſlie receiueth the Engliſh ambaſſa-ambaſſadors, 31.b 20. Authoriſeth Anſelm to order things to his owne liking, 34. a 10. His ſtout words to biſhop Warlwaſt touching the inueſtiture of churches, 31. b 50. Hath the determining of the ſtrife about biſhops inueſting and conſecrating, 31. b 10. Writeth moſt courteouſlie to king Henrie the firſt in Anſelms behalfe, 32.a 10 Sicke at Beneuento, dieth, 40.a,10

Pope Paule a Romane borne created, 935, b 60
Pope Pius, an ambaſſage to him out of England, certeine notes concerning him, 794. b 50.60. His bull againſt queen Eliſabeth, the effect thereof, 1359, a 60. The practiſes of traitors to execute it, b 10.20. Harts confeſſion of the interpretation thereof, 1363. a 10. His bull ſeditious hanged on the biſhop of Londons gate, 1221. a 20, &c. A treſonable action, 1366.b 20
Pope Sixtus Quintus ſucceſſor to Gregorie the thirteenth, excommunicateth princes, and is by them defied, 1401. a 10
Pope Urban in miſlike with king William Rufus, and whie: note, 24.b 30. His legat for the crowning of erle John king of Ireland, 110. b 20. Whie he could not redreſſe the Engliſh enormities, 18. b 40, Calleth a councell at Cleremont and whie, 22. a 40. Giueth faculties to a frier Carmelite, 455.a 60. His beneficiall pardons to ſuch as would fight againſt Clement antipape: note, 441, a 60. b 60.442.a 40, Sendeth to Richard the ſecond for aid againſt an antipape, 421.a 50
Pope Wibert aduanced by the emperor againſt pope Urban, 24.b 20
Pope ſendeth a frier minor into England to reſtore Henrie the thirds halfe brethren to their poſſeſſions, 261, b 50. His nuncio commanded to auoid the realme, & ſent awaie, 237.a 10, 30. Allowed eleuen thouſand marks among them of the ſpiritualtie, 239. b 50. Out of fauour with the lords temporall of England, 211. a 10. Sendeth his legat to pacifie Henrie the third and his nobles, 271.a 20 Complaineth to Henrie the third and blameth him, and commandeth offendors to be curſſed, 214.b 20. Requireth maintenance for his warres againſt the emperor, 210. b 60 His demands out of ſpirituall liuings in England, 208.a 40 50, &c. Lacketh monie to mainteine his eſtate: note, 208 a 40. His chapleine inhibited to leuie monie, 315.b 30. Exhorteth king Edward the firſt to make war againſt France, 311.a 60. His decree of peace betwixt the king of England and France, 308. b 40. His requeſt for the releaſing of John Balioll, b 40. Intermedleth in princes matters, 297. a 10. 20. Deſirous of peace betwene the kings of England and France: note, 388.b 40. His pretended right to be iudge for the title of the realme of Scotland anſwered: note, 309. b 60.310, a 10, &c. His letters & the deliuerers of them hanged, 392.a 20. Sendeth two biſhops to the prince of Wales, 383. b 50. Interdicteth Flanders, 358. a 10. Taketh vpon him to beſtow and deale in benefices at his pleaſures: note, 365.a 60. b all, 366.a 10. Sendeth a bull for the apprehenſion of Wicklife, 419.a 20. Two at diuiſion for the dignitie of S. Peters chaire, 484. b 50. Sendeth his nuntio to Richard the ſecond: note whie, 474. b 60. A diſputation betwixt diuines of Oxford and Cambridge for their obedience to him, 534, b 50. 60. Beareth out the monks againſt the king & the archbiſhop of Canturburie, 155.a 50. Offended at king Richard the firſts impriſonment, 138.b 40. Into what a lamentable caſe he brought king John and his nobles, 186.b 20. 30. 40. His meſſengers to perſuade the K. of England & the French king to peace, 146, b 10. Sendeth to take awaie the interdiction vpon conditions, 181. b 20. He & king John reconciled, 178.b 40. His decree and inhibition contemned, 187. b 30. Threateneth interdiction againſt king John and the clergie, 171, b 60. 172. a 10. Diſmiſſeth two archbiſhops at ſtrife, and electeth a third, 170. b 60. His diſpenſation for a marriage: note, 160. b 60. Giueth ſentence with the monks of Canturburie againſt the biſhops, 170, b 10, 20. Interdicteth France and Normandie, 160 a 60. Sendeth his nuncio to France, 166, b 30. He diſpenſeth for an oth of allegiance broken by the duke of Yorke, 659, b 60. Sendeth Lionell biſhop of Concordia to the French king, 771.b 10. Poiſoned with the wine that his owne ſonne had ſent to poiſon another, 795, a 40. He and the ſtates of Italie in a league, abandoned of all hope, compoundeth with the imperials a hard article and to be marueiled how he might brooke it, the caſtell where he was priſoner infected with the plague 893.a 20, 50. 60.b 20. He & the emperors agents at accord, a heauie paiment for him to diſcharge, the manner of his going out of priſon, 902. a 20. 30.60. He by the inſtigation of cardinall Poole intendeth miſcheefe againſt England, 946. b 60. His ſupremaſie denied in ſermons, 937. b 10. Curſſeth Henrie the eight & the realme: note, 936. a 60. His authoritie baniſhed out of England by proclamation, 914. b 40. He with certeine cardinals flie to the caſtell of S. Angelo, 896.a 50. His legats ſcrape and rake monie togither for him: note, 226.a 30 &c. Hath Henrie the ſecond in a ſeruile ſubiection: note, 83.b 50. 84. a 10. His forces vanquiſhed in Ireland, 1367.a 40. The cauſe of rebellions in England and of treaſons: note, 1366 b 10. His curſſes no hinderance of Englands proſperitie, 1366 a 40. Not to be ſuffered to make rebellions in England, 1365. b 40. Kings of chriſtendome neuer ſuffer him to abridge their titles or rights though they ſuffer him to haue rule ouer their people, 1365. b 10. And that kings of France, Spaine, and England haue beene againſt him: note, 1365. a 40, 50. 60. Haue cruellie perſecuted emperors: note, 1364. a 60. His title of vniuerſall biſhop is a preamble of antichriſt, 1364. b 60. His authoritie not warranted by Chriſt or his two apoſtles Peter and Paule, 1363, b 60. His bull & the mainteiners thereof onelie condemned of treaſon, 1361. b 20 Supremaſie, no perſon for the onlie maintenance thereof charged with capitall crime 1361, b 10. Sendeth aid to the earle of Deſmond, his banner erected: note, 1314. b 40. His bull, a full proofe that the mainteiners thereof are directlie guiltie of treaſon: note the words of the bull, &c. 1362 a all. His dutie what it is not, and what it ſhould be, 24.b 40 His decree for confirmation & benediction, 256, a 50. Mens deuotion to him waxeth cold, 253, b 50. He is liberall of an other mans purſſe, 250, b 60. Offreth the kingdome of Sicill to earle of Cornwall, 247. a 40. Complained of to Henrie the third, the king writeth vnto him, 232.b 10. A collect to be ſaid for him, another for his election, a woman impriſoned for not praieng for him, 1128.b 20.40. 50. An enimie to peace except he might haue his owne will, 226.b 10. Sendeth for monie to mainteine his wars againſt the emperor 233. b 20. His letters intercepted & ſtaied, 236, b 30. He & French king alied 847.b 30. His decree that all ſpirituall men dieng inteſtat their goods ſhould remaine vnto him, 238 b 60, 237. &c. Requireth the French king to make war againſt England, the French king refuſeth ſo to do, 238.a 20 Sendeth for the third part of one yeares profit of euerie beneficed man reſident 239, b 10. Maketh void the election of archbiſhop Neuill, 213, b 30 Sueth to Henrie the third for licence to ſoiorne at Burdeaux 243.a 60. His preſence more like to impaire than amend things, b 10. His bull read at Paules croſſe, 263.a 10. His grant authoriſing the biſhop of Lincolne to inſtitute vicars in churches impropriat 246. a 40. 50. Hath ſix thouſand marks giuen him for a moderation: note, 244.a 40. Conſecrateth William Raleigh biſhop of Wincheſter, 231.b 60. He and king John at ſtrife, and whie, 171. all. Two die in one yeare, 229.a 10. Sueth vnto Henrie the third for his good will in benefices to beſtow on his friends, 238.b 40. ¶ See Antipape, Cardinals, Legats, Mariage, Rome.
Poore of three degrees, which to be cheriſhed, & which to be puniſhed, 1082. a 50. &c. And in what places, b 10. &c. Their neceſſitie relieued by Gods prouidence, 1129.a 60. b 10. Prouiſion of corne for them, 1092. a 50. Prouided for in time of ſcarſitie, 381.a 50.60
Portingall prince commeth to London, 589.b 60
Portingall king ſendeth aid to Henrie the fift, 566.a 20. Aided with an armie out of England againſt the king of Caſtile, 429. a 40. He with duke of Lancaſter inuade Caſtile, 450.a 30. Sendeth ſix gallies to king Richard the ſeconds aid, 448.a 10, Deceaſeth, an obſequie for him. 1134. a 10
Portgreues, and the reaſon of the name. 120.a 10
Poſie of the duke of Alanſon, 1337. a 10. &c. Interpreted, 1340.a 10
Praier and inuocation to God before battell enterpriſed: note 371, a 60. Of queene Eliſabeth as ſhe went to her coronation, 1180.a 10. Superſtitious of the Scots in a time of mortalitie among the Engliſh. 423.a 20
Praiers vſed by houſholders in the ſuſpicious & troubleſome time of duke William, 5. b 50. 6, a 10. For queene Marie being with child that ſhe maie be ſafelie deliuered, 1125, a 20. 50. &c. 1126. a 40. ¶ See Collect, Papiſts, and Saints.
Preacher at Paules croſſe hath a dagger throwne at him, defended by the gard, 1089, a 60. b 10, 20, 1090. a 20. Hath a gun ſhot at him, 1117. b 50 Popiſh blaſphemie in the pulpit, and how ſeuerelie puniſhed by God, 1128. b 60.
Preaching of pardon at the ſhew of a relike, 240.a 60. To moue chriſtians to make a iornie againſt the Saracens, 209, b 40. Of a cardinall, 316 a 10. Of the archbiſhop of Canturburie at the depoſing of Edward the ſecond, 340.b 10. Of Cementarius incenſing K. John to crueltie, 173. b 60. Good wanting, was the cauſe of rebellion in Deuonſhire, 1015 a 10. ¶ See Recantation and Sermon.
Preferment without looking or ſeeking obteined, 18.b 60
Premunire ſtatute begun, 409. a 60. Whereof followed loſſe of goods, 951.a 50. A cauſe of malcontentment: note, 927.b 60, 928.a 10. ¶ See Wolſeie.
Prentiſe hanged in London for killing his maiſter, 1213.a 10 Killed, & the offendors hanged, 1353.b 20. ¶ See Riot.
Preſent of Cambridge vniuerſitie to queen Eliſabeth. 1299 a 10. Of a Dutch miniſter to queene Eliſabeth at Norwich, 1293.b 30, 1294. a 60. b 10. Of white kine and a bull offered to king John, 174. b 10. Sent by the Rhengraue to the earle of Warwike, 1197. b 50. That the emperor Charles ſent to Henrie the eight, 882, a 40. ¶ See Gift.
Preſents rich & ſumptuous ſent to Henrie the third, 252.a 30
Prieſt excommunicated for incontinentie, 242.a 60. Committed a ſhamefull murther, 173.a 30. Killeth a frier being priſoner, 568.b 20. Executed for treaſon, 947. b 50. Hanged for fauouring of rebels, 943.a 60. b 10. Murthered, and the murtherer hanged in chaines, 814, b 30. A valiant ſoldior, 988, a 10. Maſſing ridiculouſlie ſcorned, 1102, b 50. Seditious. ¶ See Simon.
Prieſts that were hunters an act againſt them, 97. a 60. Their concubines forbidden chriſtian buriall, 207.b 30.40 &c. Religious men hardie ſouldiers, 443, a 60. Their ſonnes not to ſucceed in their fathers benefices, 30.b 30. Marriage forbidden & whie, 30.b 10. 20. Prohibited to marrie and to keepe women, 37. a 20. Sequeſtred from their wiues, 34.b 20. Married in what reſpect to be excommunicated, 30. b 30.

Should not haunt alehouſes, and of their apparell, 30.b 30. To weare crownes, 30. b 40. All in Normandie excommunicated and whie, 37.b 30. Unchaſt how puniſhed, 43.b 40. Of Rome taken in bed with a whore: note 42. b 60. Fauoured by the eſtabliſhment of a ſtatute, 54.b 50. To be arreſted offending in foreſts, 153. b 60. Uſed for priuie meſſengers, 68. b 40. Hated of king Iohn: note, 172.a 60. Their children legitimated by parlement, 1062 a 60. ¶ See Ball, Clergie, Moonks, and Policie.

Prieſts ſeminarie, as Campian, Sherwin, Kerbie, Riſhton & others indicted of high treaſon: note well, 1322. a 50. 60. Condemned, 1326. Their behauiors at their execution, 1328.b 60. 1329. a 10. Of a miracle (forſooth) on the daie of their death. See more of them, pag. 1357. a 60. &c. to 1368. 1413 a 50. Baniſhed, and how courteouſlie vſed, by their owne report, 1413.b 50 60. Executed at Tiburne, 1434.b 50. 1559.b 60. Died for treaſon and not for religion, 1361.b 40. Not to be compared to the martyrs that died in Q. Maries time in number, 1363. a 40. 50. Their practiſes to execute the popes bull, nurſſeries erected for them, their ſecret comming into the realme to induce the people to obeie the ſaid bull, 1359.b all. Ford, Shert, and Iohnſon, arreined and condemned, with their behauiors and ſpeeches at their death, 1344. 1345. Of Kirbie, Filbie Cotham and Richardſon, 1345. 1346. 1347. ¶ See Ieſuits, Scholers & Treſon.

Prieſt monie demanded of the citie of London for queene Maries behoofe, 1090, b 50. Of twentie thouſand pounds to queene Marie out of London, 1142, a 30.

Preſumption of the archbiſhop of Yorke, 98. 10 Of Anſelme 24. And of Ranulfe biſhop of Chicheſter, 26.a 20. Of cardinall Otho, 224.a 10. Of an oration in French to Henrie the fift: note, 567, a 40. Of a cardinall, 182 a 20. Puniſhed in poſteritie, 41. b 40. ¶ See Pride.

Pride of Henrie, crowned and ſerued of his father, 76, b 10 Of prelats miſliked by king Edward the firſt, 316. b 20. Of the erle of Leceſters ſons bringeth the barons to confuſion, 270.b 10. Of the French procureth them hatred, 198. a 10. Of the duke of Orleance, 524. Of Hugh Creſhingham, 305. a 20. Of Pandulfe the popes legat notable, 177, a 10. Of pope Alexander, 99.a 40. Of great ruffes reproued and reformed in a ſeruingman, 1315.a 20. 30. Hath a fall, 147.b 40: note, 132. a 10. ¶ See Ambition, Contention, 133. a 60. Preſumption, Wolſie.

Primaſie. ¶ See Archbiſhops.

Prince of Wales alwaies the kings eldeſt ſonne, 1141.b 60

Printer executed for ſeditious books, 1357.a 40.

Printing firſt inuented, 648. b 60

Prior Iehan bringeth aid to the French king, 815.b 40. Lieth in Blanke ſable baie with his power, he looſeth one of his beſt forts, a conſultation about the aſſaulting of him, the admerall roweth into the baie where he lieth, 816.a 60.b 30 40. 50. 60. Landeth in Suſſex with the French gallies, he is driuen to his gallies, 817.a 10. Ariueth on the borders of Suſſex, burneth the towne of Brighthemſtone, with other miſchiefes, he is ſhot into the eie with on arrow, 831.b 20. 50.

Priors executed for treaſon, 938. a 30. ¶ See Abbats.

Priories ſuppreſſed, 948. a 10.

Priſe rich taken by the earle of Warwicke, 648. b 50. Of wines to the quantitie of two hundred tun, 1196.a 50. More 1197.a 20. Of foure hundred tun of Gaſcoigne & French wines, 1211.a 20

Priſes taken by Frenchmen of about fiftie thouſand crownes value, 1199. a 10. 30. 40. Of French goodes taken by the weſterne ſhips, 968.a 20. ¶ See Greenfield.

Priſoner ſhifting to eſcape breaketh his necke, 228.b 20. Eſcaped and the ſhiriffe of London is puniſhed, 251.b 60 Reſcued by an officer, and the reſcuers puniſhed: note, 260, a 50. Carefullie ſeene vnto: note, 376. a 60. Faithfull, a notable example, 423. a 50. Chained in giues made of ſiluer, 128, a 10. That ſhould haue bene hanged his good ſeruice, 770. b 30. Brake from the ſeſſions houſe: note, 906.b 10

Priſoners French mercifullie vſed: note, 550. 60. Pittifullie ſlaine, 554.b 60. Taken in wars and ſlaine, 608.b 60. Diſcharged, 1088. b 60. Slaine by French as they were taken, 601.b 10. Of the Marſhalſeie breake out, 792. a 10. Sold in open markets: note, 819.b 40. Scottiſh of name taken by the Engliſh, 989.a 40. Deliuered out of the tower, 1127.a 10. Releaſed, 95.a 20. Set at libertie by duke William before his death, 14. b 50. Releaſed in an vprore, 273.a 30. Arraigned for not comming to the church, 1322. a 40. Proclamations for the lawfull taking of them in warre, 1200.b 10. 40. Set at libertie at William Rufus coronation, 16. b 10. Taken diuers nobles & gentlemen of France, 200. a 60. Beheaded, 133.a 30. Releaſed without ranſome, 201. b 10. Set at libertie out of the tower by the Londoners, 338. b 50. 60. A conſpiracie to ſet them at libertie, 333. a 30. Honorablie intreated by the prince of Wales: note, 390. a 10. &c. Taken in the warres how honorablie intreated by Edward the third, 379.b 10. 20. Set at large by rebels, 430. b 50. Saued from the gallowes at a womans ſute, note, 378, a 20. ¶ See Fines.

Priuilege of the parlement. ¶ See Burgeſſes.

Priuileges and freedomes reuoked by duke William, 8.a 20. Eccleſiaſticall defended againſt Henrie the ſixt & his nobles, 637.a 20. 30. ¶ See Liberties.

Proceſſion in Engliſh, 963, b 30

Proclamation againſt the popes authoritie in England, 914. b 40. &c. Traitorous read and the reader apprehended, 1132. b 60. Heauie and greeuous, 664, b 40. Of Henrie the ſixt for the taking of Iacke Cade the rebell and his fellowes, 635, b 10. &c. For the lawfull aſſiſe of bread, 166, a 20. That all Engliſh beneficed men in Rome ſhould returne into England, 474.b 50. 60. Clearing the lords of treaſon, 460.a 40. For the auoiding of Iriſhmen, 481. a 40. Touching monie: note, 309.a 20. To auoid ſtrangers, 202, b 40. Againſt purueiors, 259, b 20. That none ſhould depart out of the relme 20. b 40. Againſt the familie of loue, 1314. a 60, b 10. For the free traffike of merchants as before, &c. 1267, b 10. ¶ See Incloſures.

Prodigalitie of duke Robert of Normandie: note, 32.b 20. Of William Rufus, 26. b 10. noted .27, a 10.

Progreſſe of queene Eliſabeth. ¶ See Queene Eliſabeth.

Promiſe to purchaſe the peopls fauor, 8. b 40. In ſickneſſe broken in health, 20.a 50. And what ſlacknes in performance thereof procured: note, 19.b 40 Of Edward the firſt vrged by his nobles: note, 308. a 50. 60. b 10. Verie diſhonorablie broken, 304.b 60. Made againſt loialtie, & withſtood by caſualtie, 295, a 30. Made to a requeſt and performed: note, 320, b 40. Made ſolemnelie, wickedlie broken by the F. king, 133.b 60. Broken, and the hoſtages executed, 597.b 10. Of Edward the fourth made by proclamation broken 688.b 10. Broken with Henrie the ſeuenth by Maximilian verie diſhonorablie: note, 774.b 20. 30. Breaking puniſhed with great forfeture, 765 b 40. Of queene Marie made to the goſpellers broken, 1161 a 50. Of queene Eliſabeth in the parlement houſe, howſoeuer God inclined hir heart, 1181.b 20. Of queene Eliſabeth to the citie on the daie of hir coronation: note, 1175.a 20. b 60. 1179.a 30. Of the duke of Alanſon, euen to the ſheding of his blood, 1335.b 40

Promiſes of William Rufus to the Engliſh clergie, but not kept: note, 17.b 30. Large proue light in performance, 28 a 40. Faire of king Stephan 47.a 10. Great and mounteinlike, 704.a 20

Promoters cauſe of murmuring &c. among the people, 794.b 10. &c. Troubleſome beaſts, 791.b 40. Puniſhed, 800.a 10

Propheſie of death naturall fell out true in proofe, 1208. a 10. Of a cardinall: note, 388.b 50 Of Ball a ſeditious preeſt, 437 a 50. Of the reuolting of the ſubiects from their prince, 493 b 60 Of the decay of the Perſies ſtocke, 534.a 60. Of an heremite of Wakefield to king Iohn, 180. a 30. Of Henrie the fift touching Henrie his ſonne the ſixt: note, 581. b 10, Of winning France, 546. a 50. Betokening the tranſlation of the crowne, 655.a 40. Concerning the duke of Clarence his name beginning with a G, 703.a 40. The memorie whereof appalled Richard the thirds ſpirits: note, 746.a 10. Of a moonke vnto the duke of Buckingham falſe 863, a 30. 864.a 30. Fantaſticall and fallible of the northerne men, 1240.b 60. Touching Calis, 1141.b 20: note, 314.b 20. Fulfilled, 281. b 60 282.a 10 945.a 50. 678. b 10. Vaine: note, 521.b 60

Propheſies of aſtronomers falſe in euent: note, 1356.b 10. 20. &c. Diuelliſh fantaſies, 703.a 50. Deceiptfull to the Norfolke rebels: note, 1038. b 40. ¶ See Dreames, Signes, and Tokens.

Prophet falſe ſerued right, 440 a 60

Protection. ¶ See Letters, Paſport, and Safe conduct. 102, a 10

Protectors of England from the firſt to the laſt collected, 1069.b 30. &c. 1070, to 1081.

Proſperitie perſecuted with malice, 17.a 50. 20. Unſtable, 412.b 40. 413.a 10. Of king Henrie enuied, 37.a 50

Prouerbe, Ill will neuer ſaid well, verefied, 626.b 60. 627. a 10. &c. Man purpoſeth but God diſpoſeth, verefied, 230.a 60. 316.a 60. 317 a 10. 541.a 10, 835, b 60. Ictus piſcator ſapit applied, 113. a 50. The more knaue the better lucke, verefied in a bucher: note, 113. Profered ſeruice ſtinks, verefied, 1331. b 60. Haſt makes waſt verefied, 1202.b 10. He falleth into the fire that flieth frõ the ſmoke, verefied, 228.b 20 When I lend I am a friend, when I aſke I am a foe, verefied, 312.a 10. 20. It is good ſleeping in a whole ſkin, verefied, 444.b 40. Neceſſitie hath no law, verefied, 426. b 20. Soone hot ſoone cold, verefied, 444.b 40. One miſchiefe aſketh an other, verefied, 446.a 30 Wit or cunning dearlie bought, verefied, 467.b 20. One ſoweth but an other reapeth, verefied, 36.a 40. Haſt maketh waſt, verefied: note, 41.b 30. As good neuer a whit as neuer the better, verefied, 538.b 40. Pitch and paie, verefied, 532.a 40. 50. Looke yer you leape practiſed: note, 519.b 30. Set a beggar on horſſe backe and he will ride full gallop, verefied, 192.b 30. He is an ill cooke cannot licke his owne fingers, verefied, 193, a 20. He makes a rod for his owne taile, verefied, 193.b 10. 20. Plaine faſhion is beſt practiſed, 695. b 20. Marriage for pleaſure repented by leaſure, proued true, 667. b 60. &c. Mariage goeth by deſtinie verefied, 667, b 60. Ill will neuer ſaid well, verefied, 727. b 10. 729, &c. The lambe betaken to the woolfe to keepe 716.b 50. To giue roſemeat and beat with the ſpit, verefied, 715, b 40. Crooked of bodie crooked of qualitie, verefied, 712.a 60. b 10. One ill turne requireth another, verefied, 778.a 20. After mirth commeth mone, 808.b 50. Proffered ſeruice ſtinkes, verefied, 852.b 50. 853, a 10. He that gapeth after other mens goods looſeth his owne, verefied, 819. b 60. What the eie vieweth the hart rueth, verefied, 975, b 20. Too much familiaritie breeds contempt, verefied, 852 a 60. b 10. Delaie breedeth danger, verefied, 1086. b 40. To come a daie after the faire verefied, 1136, b 20. Truth purchaſeth hate, verefied, 332. a 40. In truſt is treaſon, verefied, 743.b 50. 60. 744. a 50.

He

He hath made a rod for his owne taile, verefied, 464. a 10. Faire words make fooles faine, verefied, 191. b 60. 144. a 20.
Pulpit at Paules croſſe all berated and beaſtlie, 1182, a 20
Puniſhment ſeuere vpon Welſhmen, 73. b 10. Of Thomas Louell for counterfetting letters: note, 1556. b 60. &c. Ridiculous for a great offenſe: note, 314. a 10
Puniſhments according to the offenſe, 115, b 10
Purſeuant of Henrie the third had his hand cut off, 272, a 30
Purueior of king John for wheat reſiſted, and the reſiſtors puniſhed: note, 171. b 40
Purueiors puniſhed, 369. b 20. Proclamed againſt, 259. b 20. A ſtatute againſt them, 396, a 10. Set in the pillorie: note, 1181, b 60

Q.

Quarrell betwixt the biſhops and moonks of Canturburie about the archbiſhops election, 169. b 30. That the French king picketh againſt England, 518. a 30. Faint picked againſt the duke of Gloceſter, 627, a 10. Vpon a ſmall cauſe, 126, a 30. Proſecuted vnto great miſcheefe: note, 304. b 30. Ended with murther, 568. b 20. ¶ See Debate, Fraie, Mutinie, Riot and warres.
Queene Adelicia ſecond wife to Henrie the firſt, deſcended of the dukes of Lorains, barren, 41. b 60
Queene Aldgitha ſent to Cheſter, and whoſe ſiſter ſhe was, 1. a 30
Queene Annes coronation proclamed, & the ſame celebrated with great pompe, 930. a 40. &c. 931. 932. 933. 934. With child, 929. b 40. Brought a bed of queene Eliſabeth, 934. b 20. Committed to the tower, hir imprecation at the tower gate, ſhe is arreigned, hir words at hir death, 940. a 10. 20. 60
Queene Anne wife to king Richard the third and daughter to Richard earle of Warwike, 733, b 60
Queene Anne wife to king Richard the ſecond deceaſeth, 481, a 20
Queene Berengaria crowned, the wife of Richard the firſt, 128. a 40
Queene Elenor Richard the firſts mother returneth home into England, 127. a 50
Queene Elenor king Johns mother an enimie to hir nephue Arthur, 158. a 60. Brought a bed of a daughter, 69. a 40. Sendeth for ſpeedie ſuccour to king John, 164. b 10. Studieth to mainteine the ſtrife betwixt hir ſonnes, 86. b 60, 87, a 10. Committed to cloſe priſon, 92 b 50. Set at libertie after long impriſonment, 117. a 50. Deceaſeth, 167. b 60
Queene Elenor the wife of Henrie the third, 219. Paſſeth into Normandie, 158, b 10. Forſaketh the world, and becommeth a nun, 283. b 50. Deceaſeth, hir praiſe, 285. b 30. Hir buriall, 288. b 20
Queene Eliſabeth crowned and annointed queene, 768. a 60. Deliuered of hir firſt ſonne, 769. b 10. Forward and readie to further the vniting of the two houſes of Lancaſter and Yorke, 742. a 10. 20. 30. Taketh ſanctuarie, 715. b 60. Hir deſolat eſtate, 716. a 30
Queene Eliſabeth, late wife to Edward the fourth, 615. b 30. Adiudged to forfeit all hir lands for promiſe breaking. 765, b 40. She liueth a miſerable and wretched life, ſhe erected a college in Cambridge, b 50. 60. Inconſtant, ſhe allureth hir ſonne the marqueſſe Dorſſet home out of France, 750. b 20. 30. The cardinall thought the fitteſt man to deale with hir for the ſurrendring of hir ſonne, reaſons whie it was thought meet to fetch him out of ſanctuarie, the duke of Buckinghams words vnto hir, 717. a 40. b 10. 40. Hir anſwers to the perſuaders, ſhe is loth to part with hir ſonne, hir miſtruſt of the lord protector, ſhe falleth to a reſolution touching hir ſonnes deliuerie, 719. a 60. b 10. 30
Queene Eliſabeth Greie, wife to Edward the fourth, 668. a 40. Hir father and brother beheaded: note, 673. a 30. Deliuered of a prince, the ſame chriſtened like a poore mans child, 677. b 10
Queene Eliſabeth ſurnamed the good deceaſeth, 791. a 10
Queene Eliſabeth of Caſtile dieth with iſſue male, 792. b 20
Queen Eliſabeth ſecond daughter to Henrie the eight, borne and chriſtened, the ſtatelie order thereof: note, 934. b 20. Proclamed queene, the beginning of hir reigne, hir remooue from Hatfield, the flouriſhing eſtate of this land vnder hir reigne, 1170, b 10. 20. 40. 50. Hir remooue to the Tower, to Summerſet houſe, 1171. a 10. 20. Hir praier as ſhe went to be crowned, 1180. a 10. Crowned, 1180. a 30. Deſirous to know the meaning of the repreſentations of the pagents, 1173. b 30. Liſteneth to a childs oration, 1174. b 40. Hir promiſe with thanks to the citie of London. 1175. a 20. b 60. Remooueth from Weſtminſter to the Tower by water, from thenſe to Weſtminſter through London, ſaluteth them that ſalute hir, pagents and ſhewes of reioiſing, 1172. all. Hir words vnto the lord maior of London, 1176, a 30. She receiueth Verbum Dei, kiſſeth it, and laieth it in hir lap, b 50. She thinketh vpon the cities charge, how willing ſhe was to heare a childs ſpeach, 1177. b 20. The cities farewell vnto hir, going out at Temple barre, 1178, b 60. Hir laſt words to the citie by waie of promiſe, 1178, a 30. Notes of hir mercie. &c. a 60. Hir humilitie in receiuing verie trifles thankfulie, b 30. Not forgetfull to glorifie God who glorified hir, b 60. A motion made to hir in the parlement houſe touching mariage, with hir anſwer therto, hir promiſe, 1181, a 20. 40. &c. b 20. Determineth to aid the Scots ſuing for aid, 1186, b 40. 1187. a 10. Sued vnto out of Denmarke about mariage, 1185. b 10, 20. Furniſheth hir land with armor and munition, 1193. b 60. Greeued with the loſſe of Paules ſteeple, hir beneuolence towards the reparing thereof, 1194. a 40. And what cauſes mooued hir to ſend a power into France, 1195. a 30. b 10, 30, 40. Hir progreſſe to & through Cambridge, hir oration to the vniuerſitie, 1206. b 20: &c. To Oxford, ſhe maketh an oration to the vniuerſitie, 1209. a 60. b 10. Hir owne words importing how deerelie ſhe loueth hir people, 1221. b 30. Hir manifold vertues, b 50. Goeth to the Burſſe being finiſhed, nameth it the Roiall exchange 1224. a 60. Hir deſtruction deuiſed to be practiſed. ¶ See Prieſts ſeminarie, and note it well. Hir anſwer to the maior of Norwich his oration, 1289. a 20. Incouraging words vnto Stephan Lambert redie to make an oration vnto hir, 1294. b 30. She highlie commendeth it, 1296. a 20. Hir behauiour after all hir welcomming, 1297. a 20. Hir departure from the citie heauilie taken, 1298. a 10. 20. Hir words at hir parting with water in hir eies, b 40. Hir progreſſe into Suffolke and Northfolke, with the whole manner of the ſumptuous ſights, and whatſoeuer elſe was deuiſed for pleaſure and delight, 1287. a 30. 1288. &c: to 1299. In danger of gunſhot being in hir priuie barge, 1310. b 10. The place of hir abode during the time of hir tarriance in Norwich, 1291. a 60. Accompanieth the duke of Alanſon to Canturburie, 1330. a 30. 50. An intention to murther hir, and the partie executed, 1356. a 50. She giueth aid to the defenſe of the low countries, & whie ſo mooued to doo, 1414. a 50. &c. to 1419. a 10. Shamefullie ſlandered by hir enimies, and the ſame anſwered: note, 1418. a 30. &c. Hir oration to the parlement houſe note, 1396. a 50. &c. Hir magnanimitie knowing Parries vowed treaſons againſt hir & yet concealing it, 1391. a 60. Parries treaſonable practiſes to kill hir and vndoo the whole realme: note well 1382. a 50. 60. &c. to 1385. Hir magnanimitie in ſuffering a knowne and ſworne traitor againſt hir to haue acceſſe vnto and talke with hir, 1383. a 20. Conſpired againſt, and hir depriuation ſought by traitors: note, 1370. a 40. 50. 60. b 10. &c. to 1375. ¶ See Eliſabeth and Babington.
Queene Jane proclamed with ſound of trumpet queene of England, 1084. b 10. ¶ See Jane.
Queene Jane deceſeth, 544 b 40
Queene Jone late wife to king Henrie the fourth arreſted by the duke of Bedford and committed, 568. b 10
Queene Iſabell the wife of king Edward the ſecond, 318. b 60. 319. a 10
Queene Iſabell the ſecond wife of king John. 162. a 30
Queene Iſabell wife vnto king Richard the ſecond tranſported into France, 519. a 60. And conueied to Paris, hir ſecond marriage, b 10. 20
Queene Iſabell married vnto Hugh Brune erle of March 202. a 60
Queene Katharine, hir coronation, the wife of king Henrie the fift, 578. b 60. Solemnitie thereat, 579. a 10. Saileth into France, 581 b. 60
Queene Katharines coronation, traine, and ſumptuouſneſſe, 801. b 20. &c. Deliuered of hir firſt ſonne named Henrie 807. a 20. Chooſeth lawiers in hir behalfe to iuſtifie hir mariage, hir lamentable ſpeech in preſence of the court, ſhe auoucheth the coniunction good, ſhe departeth out of the court & is called againe, 907. a 10. 50. 60. Procureth a curſſe againſt king Henrie the eight and his realme from the pope, 936. a 60. Hir words vpon the motion of a diuorſe, ſtandeth ſtiffe in the lawfulneſſe of hir mariage, 927. a 10. &c. b 60. Accuſeth cardinall Woolſeie, hath communication with the cardinall in hir priuie chamber, refuſeth to make ſudden anſwer to a diuorſe, 908. a 30. b 10. 20. Is diuorſed from king Henrie the eight, 929. b 60, 930. a 10. Princeſſe Dowager, 929. b 30. Deceaſeth, 939. b 20
Queene Katharine, hir paramors detected of incontinent liuing, 954. b 30. 40. &c. She is atteinted by parlement, ſent to the Tower and beheaded. 955. 30. 40 &c. 50
Queene Marie commeth vnto London, 1088. b 50. Proclamed queene, 1088, a 30. Hir coronation, pompe, and traine 1091. a 20. Hir mariage, diuers diuerſlie affected therabout, and what they did, 1120. a 60. b 10. A report that ſhe was with child, 1123. b 40. And what curious order is taken for the yoong prince yet vnborne: note, 1124. all. Talke betweene hir and hir ſiſter the ladie Eliſabeth: note 1159, a 10. Hir ſtout courage and kind of manhood, 1099. a 10. Hir death conſpired, and the parties executed, 1117. a 60. She & cardinall Poole reſiſted the pope, 1365, a 60. Hir oration in Guildhall to the Londoners, 1096, a 60. Is compared of the papiſts to queene Judith, 1125, b 20. Hir oration touching the reſtitution of abbeie lands, 1127, b 10. &c. Great preparation & triumph for hir lieng in childbed, 1130. b 50. 60. What became of hir child no man can tell: note, 1131. a 10. &c. Proclameth open wars againſt the French king, the capteins of hir forces, 1133, b 10. 30. With what indignation ſhe tooke the loſſe of Calis, 1149. b 40. Penſiue for the loſſe thereof, ſickeneth and dieth, 1151. b 10 20. Had neuer good ſucceſſe in anie thing ſhe went about, 1161. a 10. How long and when ſhe proſpered, hir promiſe to the goſpellers broken, 50. 60. Hir ill lucke in the loſſe of Calis, b 10. In hir childbirth, 20. With hir husband, 50. Hir finall end and death, 60. The time of hir reigne, 1162. a 10. Hir death, the maner thereof, thought to be for the loſſe of Calis, more bloud ſpilt in hir reigne than in anie kings daies before, how vnproſperous it was vnto hir and hir realme in all reſpects, 1160. b 10. &c. Buried, and the maner thereof, 1178. b 49
Queene Marie king Henrie the eights ſiſter crowned queene of France: note, with what pompe, 833. a 60. b 10. &c.

Dowager of France. ¶ Sée Duke of Suffolke.

Quéene Marie Dowager of Scotland deceaſeth, 1192, a 10

Quéene Margaret the wife of Henrie the ſonne of Henrie the ſecond, 82, b 60. Brought a bed, 101, b 20

Quéene Margaret wife to Edward the firſt, deliuered of Thomas Burtherton hir firſt ſonne, 309, a 50

Quéene Margaret Henrie the ſixt his wife lieth at Couentrie, ſhe is a better capteine than hir huſband the king, 654, a 50. Deſcribed, ſhe taketh vpon hir the gouernement, & diſchargeth the duke of Gloceſter, 626, b 40, 60 With hir ſonne goeth into wales, 665, a 60. She returneth out of France, 666, a 10 Fortunat in hir two battels: note, 660, b 50. Sendeth to the maior of London for vittels, ſome ſent by the maior & ſtaid by the commons, ſhe returneth northward, 661, a 10, 20, &c. Hir flight, ſhe is robbed, 655, a 10. Commeth to Ambois to ſée the earle of warwike, 674, b 50. She with hir ſon prince Edward land with a power out of France, 685, b 20, She is comforted by the nobles of England, b 60. The feare which ſhe had for hir ſonne, 686, a 10. Taken priſoner, 688, b 60

Quéene Maud deliuered of a ſonne called william, 31, a 30 Departeth this life, 39, b 10

Quéene Maud wife to king Stephan ſueth for the releaſe of hir huſband to the emperor, 53, b 50

Quéene Philip wife to king Edward the third, 348, b 20 Deliuered of Iohn of Gaunt hir fourth ſonne, 357, a 60 Brought a bed of Edmund Langlie afterwards duke of Yorke, 363, a 30. Deceaſeth, hir thrée petitions of the king, hir praiſe, 404, a 20

Quéene of England with hir ſonne goeth into Heinault, 337, b 10. They both arriue in Suffolke, ſhe is aſſiſted by the prelats, hir proclamation, 338, a 10, 30. She followeth the king to Oxford, the biſhop of Hereford maketh an oration to hir armie, ſhe goeth to Gloceſter and Briſtow, the lords cleaue to hir, 339, all. In danger of drowning, 265, a 10 Deliuered of a daughter, 249, a 40, 230, b 10, 378, a 50. 362, a 30. Deliuered of Edmund, 236, a 50. Hir requeſt & letters withſtood by a ſubiect: note, 376, a 60. Hir liberalitie towards king Henrie the third, 249, a 50. Out of fauour with Edward the ſecond hir huſband. 332, a 40. Sent ouer into France to talke with hir brother, 336, a 30

Quéene of Denmarke was the daughter of king Henrie the fourth, 513, b 10. She is ſent ouer to hir huſband, 532, a 20

Quéene of Scots and the erle of Angus hir huſband come into England, 838, a 20. She commeth vnto the Engliſh court, how interteined, 50, 60, &c. Returneth to Scotland, 844, a 20. Conueied into France and maried vnto the Dolphin, 1056, b 60

Quéene Dowager of Scotland dooth what ſhe can to procure war againſt England, 1142, a 10. ¶ Sée Agatha, Francis Throckmorton, Margaret, Maud.

Quéene mother gouernor of the realme, 548, a 40

Quéenes of France and Hungarie deceaſe, 1171, b 60

Quéenes thrée in the Engliſh court at once, 838, a 60

Quéenes college in Cambridge founded by the ladie Eliſabeth wife to king Edward the fourth, 765, b 60

Queſtions in law demanded of the iuſtices: note, 456, b 20 457, a 10, &c.

R.

RAdington knight lord warden of London, 478, b 10

Rafe earle of Cambridge or Northfolke marieth erle Rogers ſiſter, 11, a 40 His wife beſieged in Norwich, 11, b 20

Rafe the kings collector or proctor his extortions or pollings of the people, 24, a 20

Rafe biſhop of Durham committed to the Tower & white, 28, b 30. Broke out of priſon, and his perſuaſion to duke Robert, 29, b 40

Rafe wilford. ¶ Sée wilford,

Raier founder of S. Bartholomews by Smithfield, 31, a 30

Raine whereof grew a dearth, 58, a 60 284, b 20. And death, 404, b 60. That did hurt harueſt, 322, b 50. That hindered ſéed time, 355, a 50. Corne from ripening, 348, b 30. Continuall for a long time: note, 239, b 30. From midſummer to chriſtmaſſe, 378, b 20. That did hurt vnto houſes, trées, corne and other things, 241, b 40. Of great continuance and no leſſe abundance, 220, a 30 For the ſpace of foure moneths togither, 224, a 10 Continuall cauſing a verie wet ſeaſon, 895, a 20. Glutting and continuall in the ſpring, 163, a 50. Exceſſiue. ¶ Sée Flouds.

Rains of bloud, 101, a 30. 278, a 30. 649, a 10

Raine artificiall of roſe water, and haile of ſuger confects, 1355, a 60. ¶ Sée Flouds.

Raleigh eſquire in danger of the Deuonſhire rebels, 1016, b 40

Raleigh knight his voiage for the diſcouerie of that land which lieth betwéene Norimbega and Florida, 1369, a 20. His preparation for a ſecond voiage, 40. He ſailed as far as Cape de Verde, and arriueth in ſafetie at Plimmouth, 60. His chargeable voiage to Virginia, 1401, b 40 &c. An Engliſh colonie eſtabliſhed there, 1402, a 50. His reſolution vpon an other voiage for the ſupplie of thoſe that were left there, 50

Ramelius ambaſſador out of Denmarke honorablie interteined both in court and elſewhere: note, 1561, b 20

Randoll a pitifull capteine, 1205, b 10

Randolph iuſtice. ¶ Sée Charitie.

Ranſome of Richard the firſt out of the emperors hands, 138, b 60. Amounted to the ſumme of an hundred and fiftie thouſand marks, 140, a 20 Thrée thouſand marks thereof giuen to the white moonks and white, 147, b 20. Of Robert earle of Leiceſter, 146, b 40. Of the king of Scots Dauid, 391, a 60. For the moonke Euſtace would not be receiued, 201, a 60. Of Q. Margaret, 684, a 10. Of the French king paied and his children deliuered, 914, a 20, 40. Of the French king, 394, b 60. Of a lord by exchange, 606, b 30

Ranſoms ſought for gaine, 7, a 20. For townes, 193, a 60. ¶ Sée Fines.

Ranulfe biſhop of Chicheſter onlie held with Anſelme againſt the king: note, 26, a 20

Ranulfe de Meſchines how he came to be earle of Cheſter, 20, a 10

Ratcliffe knight a fauorer and coadiutor of Richard the third, 725, a 60

Ratcliffe Thomas. ¶ Sée Iuſts triumphant, and Erle of Suſſex.

Rauiſhment of anie woman how puniſhed in duke williams time, 15, b 50

Rebellion of Henrie the ſonne againſt his father to put him from the crowne, 99, b 10. Of nobles againſt erle Richard, 112, a 50. Of welſhmen, 66, b 60. Of Richard againſt his father Henrie the ſecond, note 94, a 10. Of Geffreie, 66, a 30 Of the welſhmen againſt king Iohn, and the ſucceſſe thereof, 176, a 30. Of lords banded againſt king Iohn: note, 185, a 10, &c. Of the lords againſt king Iohn, notwithſtanding the popes decrée, 187, b 30. Of the earle of Shrewſburie Robert de Beleſme, 30 a 30. In yorkſhire, and what euent it had, 672, a 20. In the north pacified, 689, a 30. In Northfolke furthered at a publike place, 1028, b 10, 20. In Deuonſhire, & capteines names, their number, their hope in others failed, their end: note well, 1002, a 50, 60, b 10, 30 vnto 1026. In Yorkeſhire the cauſes thereof, 1240, b 40, &c. Afreſh in Suffolke and Eſſex, and the principals executed, 1062, a 40. In Kent and the cauſers executed, 1062, a 60. Of Iacke Cade in Kent, verie miſchefous: note, 632, a 60, b 10, &c. 633, 634, a 10, &c, And what end it had, 635, a 50, 60, b 60. In Ireland, 629, a 30. Of Owen Glendouer in wales, 518, b 60, 519 a 10. In the north for a tax or ſubſidie granted by parlement, 769, b 50. In Flanders, 770, a 30. In Cornwall for the paiment of a ſubſidie, 781 b 20. Of the lord Louell, and the end thereof, 764, a 60 b 30. Of Iohn Lincolne, the cauſe of ill Maie daie: note, 840, b 10, &c. 841, 842, 843, 444 In the north procéeded from the pope, 1366, b 40 In Suffolke by the gréeuouſneſſe of a ſubſidie, pouertie and neceſſitie capteines therof, it is ſuppreſſed and the offendors puniſhed, 891, b 10, 20, 30, 46, &c. New in Northfolke intended and bewraied by one of the conſpiracie before it burſt out, 441, a 20. In the North notable, 942, a 10, &c. The ſame ſuppreſſed, 942, a 10, &c. Of the Lincolnſhire men, 941, a 20, 30, &c. In weſtmerland, and the capteines executed, 943, b 60. Practiſed in Yorkſhire, & the offendors executed, 953, a 60. Of the earle of Aubemarie, 202, a 60 Of the Gaſcoignes and the cauſe thereof, 248, a 30. Of the welſhmen, & what cauſed it: note, 254, b 30 Of the earles of Northumberland & weſtmerland, 1212, and what euill end it had: note, 1213. Of Normans againſt duke william, ſoone ſuppreſſed, 10 b 60. Of two earles againſt duke william puniſhed: note, 11, a 50, 60 Of the ſonne againſt the father procured by the French king: note, 12, a 20. Of Edrike Siluaticus in the abſence of duke william, 5, a 10 Of lords with their adherents executed, 330, b 60, 331, a 40, 60, b 30. Of the welſhmen chaſtiſed, 284, b 10. Of Dauid, 280, b 60. He purſueth his enterpriſe, 281, a all. Condemned, executed, 282, a 60, b 10. Of the Iriſh againſt earle Mortimer, 448, b 60. In Scotland by meanes of one william wallaſe, 303, a 60, b 10, In England 1358, b 60, 1359, a 10. In diuerſe parts of England by reaſon of a great ſubſidie and other oppreſſions, 429, a 60, b 10, &c. vnto 435. Note the whole courſe of the ſtorie of Henrie the ſecond, 94, what it procureth vnto rebels: note the words of vicount Melune, 193, b 10. The hurts which it dooth: note in the ſtorie of king Iohn, 190, 191, 192, 193, &c. The benefit thereof in one reſpect, 1051, b 10. what inconueniences flow from it, 1053, a 10, &c. b 10, &c. Bringeth the bréeders of it to a ſhamefull end, 777, b 50, 60, ¶ Sée Perkin warbecke. The fauorers thereof executed: note, 942, a 60, b 10. That it is all princes duties to repell the practiſes thereof, 1360 b 10. Attempted but with euill ſucceſſe: note, 9, b 50. what a miſchefous reuenge it wroght vpon the innocent, 5, b 10. The reward thereof, 281, b 40, 60: note, 534, a 20, 30, &c. Note in Robert Bruſe 314, a 10, &c. It and execution 316, a 20, &c. 315, a 10. Orders taken to preuent it, 439, b 60. ¶ Sée Acton, Commotion, Exceſter, Glendouer, Inſurrection, Ket, Neuill baſtard, Normans, Northumberland, Rebels, Riot, Sedition, wiat.

Rebels would giue awaie the crowne from their ſoueraigne to a ſtranger, 190, a 50, 60. Excõmunicated by name, 190 a 10. How rewarded, 693, a 30, 60. Their bodies buried by a licence obteined, 335, a 60 Of Eſſex by a freſh, ſcatered and ſlaine, 436, b 10, 20. Executed in euerie lordſhip, b 60 Of ſaint Albons and Suffolke their outragious behauiors, 434, a 40, b 10. Of Kent

Kent vp againe,436,a 40. Of Northfolke and their outrages,435,a 20,30,40,&c. In Kent and Eſſex,429,b 20,60, They miniſter an oth to all paſſengers, they kill lawiers, iuſtices, &c: an huge number of them, their capteines and ringleaders, they ſend to Richard the ſecond to come and ſpeake with them, they ſpoile Southworke & ſet priſoners at large, aided by the Londoners, they pretend a reformation, 430. They burne the Sauoie, their ſtrange deling, their iuſtice, they put lords to deth, make a paſtime to kill men, reſpect no place, but ſpoile all, the K. offereth them their pardons, 431. They would haue all lawes aboliſhed, the K. perſuadeth them to be quiet, 432. Quite diſcouraged, throw downe their weapons, 433. Seuerelie executed & puniſhed by duke william, 6, b 40. Of the North executed at Tiborne,1221,b 60. In Ireland their ſtrange & miſerable end, 1365,b 60,1366 a 10, &c. Moſt dangerouſlie couer their faults, 1358, b 60. Vanquiſhed by the quéenes power, fled into forren countries, pretend religion for a defenſe, their ringleaders, 1359, a 10, &c. Of the North, Hall and wilkinſon executed at Tiborne, 1257, b 20. Executed at Durham, 1213, a 10 At Yorke, a 60. Diſherited by parlement: note, 270, b 60 Againſt their prince in a perplexitie, 198, b 40. Notable pardoned and too well rewarded, 942, b 20. Of Suffolke pardoned after their appearance in the ſtarchamber, 892 a 20. How miſerable and yet mercifullie pardoned, 784, b 40. Fauorers fined, 785, a 10. Of Deuonſhire their articles ſent to Edward the ſixt, with an anſwer thereunto, 1003, a 30, &c. Executed: note, 944, a 50, b 10. ¶ Sée Conſpirators, Fugitiues, Noblemen, Sandwich and Traitors.

Recantation of certeine Anabaptiſts at Peules croſſe, 1260, b 50. Of Cranmer how deteſted of him at his death, 1131, b 60. ¶ Sée Barnes, and Crome, Smith & Sermon.

Reconciliation ſignified by kiſſing of the pax, 78, a 10

Rées king of wales ſlaine in battell, 20, b 50

Rées ap Meridoc accuſed and executed, 288, b 30

Reformation ought to be no priuat mans, but the princes action, 1051, b 20,60

Regiſter for chriſtening and burieng, &c, in euerie church to be kept, 945, a 40

Religion altered, 1090, b 40, 1123, b 30. Trouble & perſecutions for it, 1127, a 20. Profeſſors therof perſecuted, 1132, a 10. It goeth not by age but by truth, 1143, a 60. Aduanced: note, 992, a 60. Beareth the blame & is counted the cauſe of rebellion: note, 1054, a 10, 20. Reformed in Edward the ſixts daies, 979, b 40, 50, &c. A booke touching the reformation thereof publiſhed, 940, b 60. Laid open to great danger, 256, a 50 A conference thereabouts with the clergie on both ſides 1182, a 40, &c: 1183 a 10, &c. Reſtored into the Engliſh toong, 1172, a 10. Commiſſioners ſent abrode to eſtabliſh it, 1184, b 50. None charged with capitall crimes being of a contrarie religion, and profeſſing to withſtand forren forces, 1360, b 30, 50, 1361, a 10, &c. Of Rome eſtabliſhed by act of parlement: note, 519 a 30. ¶ Sée Moonks, Treaſon.

Religious houſes giuen Henrie the eight in parlement, 992, b 10. Giuen to Henrie the eight, 939, b 40. Viſited, 939, a 60. Henrie the eights promiſes for the well diſpoſing of them, 971, a 60. Suppreſſed, 1184, b 60. ¶ Sée Abbeies.

Reliks, ¶ Sée Becket, Chriſt, Hales.

Remes beſieged, 392, b 60. The citizens thereof ſaue their corne fields from deſtroieng, by ſending vittels to the Engliſh hoſt, 426, b 10

Remelic, ¶ Sée biſhop.

Remelius. ¶ Sée Ramelius.

Remigius biſhop of Dorcheſter depriued of his croſier & ring 9, a 40.

Remiſſion of ſins granted to as manie as would fight againſt Clement the antipape: note 441, a 60, b 60, 442, a 40

Rent for a mans owne lands by the yeare paied, 8, a 40

Repentance of yoong king Henrie before his death, his ſuperſtitious deuotion, his death & buriall, 107, a 10. Of raſh aduancement: note, 76, b 30. Of an act paſt, 128, a 10 Of a déed doone not foreſéeing loſſes to inſue, 170, b 30. Too late, 193, b 40: note 32, a 60, 1104, a 30, 517, a 50. Of william Rufus in his ſickneſſe: note, 20, a 50. Of duke william for his crueltie againſt the Engliſh, 14, b 60. Deſpiſed of a deſperat malefactor at his death, 1061, a 60.

Report that Richard ment to yéeld vp Calis to the French kings hands, 462, a 10. Falſe of Henrie the eights death, 823, a 30. Occaſion of rebellions, 941, b 40. Of great diſquietneſſe, 777, a 10. How hurtfull and trobleſome, 1006 b 10. 47, b 50. In the ſtarrechamber, againſt ladie Eliſabeth, 1102, a 10, 40

Requeſt granted vpon neceſſarie conſtraint, 2 b 20. Of the commons denieng a ſubſidie, 410, b 10. ¶ Sée Demands and Petitions.

Reuenge of the Londoners, 338, b 50. Of the people for the death of one whome they fauoured, 12, b 60. Againſt the dead bodie of duke william for iniurie paſt, 15, a 50. Of the duke of Auſtrich vpon king Richard the firſt, 136, a 10, 20. Of king Iohn vpon the white moonks, 162, a 40. Of Richard the firſt a baſtard for the death of his father being a king: note, 160, b 60. Sought by the French king for the death of duke Arthur, 167, a 60. Of ſir Robert de Twing vpon the Romans, 214, b 60. Of the lord Mortimer againſt the welſhmen, 263, b 50. Of Edward the firſt vpon the Scots, 312, a 40. Of duke william for the loſſe of his ſubiects, 10, b 30 Of a biſhop in a riotous maner, 247, a 60. Of Henrie the third vpon the biſhop of Elie, 247, a 10 Of wrongs & iniuries multiplied, 170, a 10, 20, Of iniuries, 137, b 10. Of remembred grudge, 1089, a 40. A notable example to forbere it: note 1117, b 40. Of an old grudge: note, 636, b 10. Vpon reuenge: note, 840, a 20, 841, a 10, &c. Counſelled and purſued: note, 204, a 40, 50, Of an old grudge, 210, a 10 Interchangeable, 204, b 10, For cuckoldrie, 211, b 60. For waſt, 257, a 10. Noblie taken: note, 447, b 60. Vpon reuenge 446, a 30. with murther, 447, a 50. Neglected where it might haue béene executed: note, 459, b 30, 40. Of murther with murther, 368, a 50, Taken as occaſion ſerued, 340, a 30. Sought for murthering a biſhop, 12, b 20. Of almightie God vpon laſciuious & diſordered liuers: note, 424, a 10. ¶ Sée Enuie, Malice, and Murther.

Reſeruations and prouiſions apoſtolike, 365, a 60

Reſignation by compulſion recompenſed, 1134, b 40

Reſtitution of townes to king Edward the third by the French king, 360, b 60

Rewards how they preuaile and worke with a wicked mind, 747, b 30, 40. Verie large offered to the duke of Britaine to betraie the earle of Richmond into Richard the third his hands, 747, a 60 b 10. Corrupt a kéeper of a priſoner, 152, a 20. ¶ Sée Bribes, Gifts, Monie.

Rhods taken by Soliman Ottoman the Turke, 876, b 10, &c: Rendered vp vnto him, 877, a 10, 20

Rice ap Thomas ſwereth fealtie and ſeruice to the earle of Richmond, 753, b 40. ¶ Sée Rées.

Rich lord ſaileth into Ireland, 1258, b 60

Richard the firſt crowned king of England, 117, a 10. In armes againſt the French king, 146, a 60. His baſtard ſonne Philips reuenge: note, 160, b 60. His practiſes to get monie, 143, b 60. 144, a 10, 20 Marieth the ladie Berengaria, 128, a 40. His letter to the ſtates of England for the depoſing of the biſhop of Elie, 132, a 30. Like to haue béene deliuered into the French kings hands, 140, a 10. He & the French king in armes, they talke togither, the emperor diſuadeth Richard from peace, the war is renewed betwixt them, they talke togither againe, a peace conditionall concluded, 148, all. Offended with the biſhop of Elie lord chancellor, 145, b 30 He tranſporteth ouer into France, 144, b 10 Crowned king anew, 143, b 30. His grant of allowance to the king of Scots when he came to England, 143, a 50. His commandement not obeied, 140, b 50. winneth Notingham caſtell, 142, a 60. Releaſed out of captiuitie, 141, a 10. Returneth into England, his triumphant receiuing into London, 141, b 40, 50. Raiſeth his ſiege from Giſors, 152, a 10. He and the earle of Tholouſe agréed, 151, b 30 His lands waſted by certeine Gaſcoignes, 137, a 60. Setteth things to ſale for his going to the holie land, 120, a 40 His thrée daughters and how he beſtowed them in mariage, 156, b 20. Charged by the emperor with iniuries doone to the Sicilians, 138, b 20. His wiſedome in making his anſwer, 30. Cleared of the murthering of the marqueſſe of Montferrat: note, 136, a 40, 50. Is deliuered to the emperor, he is committed cloſe priſoner, 137, a 30. And the cauſe of diſpleaſure betwixt him & the duke of Auſtrich, 136, a 20 The confeſſion of his lewd life in a chapell, 126, b 10. Vanquiſheth the Cipriots & chaſeth them out of their campe, 127, b 60. His nauie ſetteth forth towards the holie land, 123, a 20. Returneth home out of the holie land, 135, b 20 Slandered for the death of the marqueſſe Montferrat, 30 He commeth to Vienna, 50 Submitteth himſelfe to the duke of Auſtrich, 136, a 10 Diſcomfiteth the Saracens néere to port Iaph, 134, a 30 Fell ſicke at Cephas and recouereth, 135, a 50. His talke with king Tancred, 126, b 50 His expenſes out of reaſon & meaſure, 126, b 30. What were the cauſes of grudge betwene him and the French king, 126, a 30, &c. He and the king of France receiued a ſolemne oth, 123, a 40, His demands for the dowrie of his ſiſter, wife to king william, 124, b 40. Arriueth at Meſſina, 124, b 10. Blameth the court of Rome for couetouſnes, 123, b 50. Setteth forward to the holie land, his fléet ſtaied by contrarie winds, 123, b 10, 20 Taketh a caſtell and hangeth the owner, 123, a 20. Paſſeth ouer into Normandie, 121, a 20. Deſirous of monie, and of his ſhifts, 120, b 40. Findeth his fathers treaſure, the order of his coronation, 118, a 20 30. He and the king of France determine to go into the holie land, 117, b 30. Beſiegeth Chalus, he is wounded, deſpaireth of his life, ordeineth his teſtament, 155, b 30, &c. His bequeſts and legacies, his death, his ſtature & ſhape of bodie, his diſpoſition of mind, the vices that were in him, 156, all

Richard the ſecond borne, 397, b 60. Counterfeited: note, 515, a 50. Created prince of wales, 411, a 10. Prince of Cheſter, 492, b 40. Beginneth his reigne, the Londoners commend themſelues to his fauour before the death of king Edward, 415, a 40, b 40. The ſolemne maner of his coronation: note, 416, a 60. &c. Maried, the ſolemnitie therat, 487 a 10, 50, 60, &c. His euill gouernement, 493, a 60. The emperor agréeth with him for his ranſome, 139, a 10. Lands aſſigned vnto him, 30. Order taken taken for leuieng of monie for his ranſome, 50. Leaueth Conwaie caſtell and betaketh himſelfe to his enimies, 500,b 30. His cogniſance or badge, 500, b 60. The parlement houſe at diſſention, he abſenteth himſelfe for the ſpace of fortie daies: note, 452, b 10, 50 Loued earle de Uere of Oxford excéedinglie, 453, b 20 ¶ Sée Earle Uere. His inordinat affection towards the duke of Ireland and the earle of Suffolke, 454, a 20. Reteineth ſouldiors on all ſides againſt the lords, 457, b 60. His maner of gréeting and ſpeaking to the lords that were banded againſt him, 459, b 30, 40, 50, 60. 460, a 10. A report that he ment to yéeld vp Calis into the French kings hands, 462, a 10. Kéepeth his Chriſtmas in the Tower of London, 462, a 50. Brought to his wits end, 462, b 60. His inconſtancie, he is compelled to the nobles requeſt, 463, a 10 30. Ruled not but was ruled: note, 465, a 40. His queſtion to his lords in the councell chamber, taking vpon him the gouernment of all things, he diſplaceth diuerſe officers, &c. 466, b 10, 40. Kept open houſhold in the biſhop of London his palace, 474, a 10. Paſſeth ouer into Ireland with a mightie armie, 481, b 20 Knighteth the foure Iriſh kings and others, 481, b 30 482, a 20. Openeth his gréeuances in the parlement, 490, b 10. Saileth ouer into Ireland with a great armie, 497, a 10. Letteth the realme to farme, 496, a 60. A gard of Cheſhire men about him, 489, b 50. Roiallie receiued into London, and his fauor recouered with gifts, 479, b 50, 60 479, a 10. Taketh the death of quéene Anne his wife gréeuouſlie, 481, a 20. Goeth ouer to Calis, the interuiew betwéene him and the French king, both their oths, 486, a 60 b 20, 40. Expenſes at the interuiew betwéene him & the French king, 487, a 40, 50. He and the duke of Gloceſters priuie grudge, 487, b 40. Conſpireth the death of the duke of Gloceſter, 489, a 60. He and the dukes of Lancaſter and Yorke reconciled, 490, a 50 He beareth ſaint Edwards arms, 492, b 60. Greatlie vexed in his ſléepe after the execution of the erle of Arundell, 392, a 20. Procureth the popes bull againſt the breakers of his ſtatutes, 493, a 50 His doome betwéene the dukes of Lancaſter & Norfolke, 495, a 60. Affianced and maried to the emperors ſiſter, 439, b 50. Sumptuous in apparell, he is committed to the Tower, 501, b 40, 60. Articles obiected againſt him, wherby he was counted worthie to be depoſed, 502, a 20, &c. He is perſuaded to reſigne the crowne to the duke, 503, a 50. A copie of the ſaid voluntarie renunciation, b 10, 504, a 30. His reſignation is confirmed, 505, a 10. The publication of the ſame, a 30. Returneth out of Ireland and landeth in wales, 499, a 60. He deſpaireth of his ſafetie, ſtealeth awaie from his armie & taketh the caſtell of Flint, b 20. 30. He and his quéene in progreſſe, 444, b 30. Appointed to be kept in perpetuall priſon, 513, a 10, 20. He and his nobles at diſſention, 458, a 30. Goeth with an armie againſt the Scots, 447, a 30 Burneth Edenburgh caſtell, b 10. Returneth out of Ireland, his dealing againſt the wickleuiſts and their fauourers, 482, a 20, 40, b 30. 483, a 50, &c. Remoueth to ſaint Albans to ſée execution doone vpon the rebels, 437, a 20 Calleth in his letters of infranchiſing granted vnto the bondmen, 437, a 10. Calleth in all ſuch letters of manumiſſion as the abbat of ſaint Albans had granted vnto his bondmen, 438, a 10. He and the duke of Lencaſter accorded, 446, b 60. Maketh an agréement betwéene the duke of Lancaſter and the earle of Northumberland, 439, b 20 Depriued, he deliuereth to king Henrie the fourth all the goods that he hath, his death, perſonage, fortune, 507, b 50 60. His noble houſekéeping, and exceſſe in apparell, the ſtate of the realme in his time, 508, a 10, 20. The commons requeſt againſt him, 513, b 30 His deſperat manhood in priſon, he is murthered, he is brought to the Tower, he is buried at Langlie, forren princes abhor to heare of the ſhamefull murthering of him, how the Gaſcoignes tooke his death, 515, all. The ſundrie reports of his death, 516, b 50, 60. Reported to be aliue againe, 525, a 60, b 10. 520, a 10 533, a 60. 522, b 20. And what harme it bred, 525, a 60

Richard the third deſcribed, the maner of his natiuitie, his qualities, 712, a 60, b 10. Diſpraiſed, 737, b 60. Beginneth his vſurped reigne, 732, a 20, b 20. He createth ſeuentéene knights of the Bath, what péeres and eſtates were attendant on him at his coronation, the ſolemne ceremonies vſed thereat, his wife quéene Anne and hir traine, 733, all. Practiſeth the murthering of his nephues, 734, b 20, 30, &c. Proclameth promiſes of rewards for the apprehending of the duke of Buckingham, ſendeth forth a nauie to ſcowre the ſea ouer againſt Britaine, 744, a 10, 40. Commeth to Exceſter and is receiued with preſents, 746, a 10 Attempteth the duke of Britaine to deliuer the earle of Richmond into his hands, 747, a 60. His deuiſe to infringe and defeat the earle of Richmonds purpoſe, his leud practiſe to beguile him, 750, a 20. Caſteth his loue on his néece purpoſing to marie hir, 751 a, 50, 60. What noble men he moſt miſtruſted, whie he gaue licence to all in Hames caſtell to depart in ſafetie with bag and baggage, b 30, 50. His offenſes and euill qualities ſummarilie touched, a notorious tyrant, 758, a 10, 20. Contemneth the erle of Richmond and his power, ſendeth to his fréends for choſen men, the ordering of his armie, 754, a 20, 50, b 10 His forged complaint againſt his wife to be rid of hir, 751, a 10. His purpoſe in the caſe of coniuration againſt him, his drift in diſpoſing his armie, he preuaileth, 743, a 10, 60, b 10, &c. Calleth home his ſhips of war from the narrow ſeas, his pretended mariage offenſiue to the erle of Richmond, 752, a 10, b 50. The principals of his power fall from him, his dreame fortels him of his end, bringeth all his men into a plaine, his oration to the chiefteins of his armie, 755, a 30, 40, b 10. His vaine confidence and bootleſſe courage, 757, a 10. His armie diſcomfited, fléeth, what perſons of name were ſlaine on his ſide, he himſelfe taken and how he might haue eſcaped, 759. The ſhamefull cariage of his bodie to Leiceſter, his badge and cogniſance euerie where defaced, the deſcription of his perſon and certeine of his behauiors, 760, b 20, 40 50. Honor doone him after his deth by the erle of Richmond his enimie, 761, a 20

Richard the ſecond ſonne of K. Iohn, 173, a 10

Richard the baſe ſonne of king Iohn beheadeth monke Euſtace, 201, a 60

Richard Henrie the ſecond his ſonne affianced to earle Raimonds daughter, 67, b 20. Prepareth to reſiſt his father, 94, a 10. Deſpaireth of good ſucceſſe, 94, a 10. Submitteth himſelfe to his father. 94, a 10

Richard, king Henrie the third his brother maried, 231, b 50 ¶ Sée Archbiſhop of Canturburie.

Riches, and what means king Richard the firſt had to gather them, 120, a 50, 60. Of London great, what then of all England? 141, b 60. They and inheritance, from whom, to whom, and to what end giuen, 1043, b 10. The right waie therunto, b 50. Of Henrie the eight, 799, a 50. ¶ Sée Monie.

Richmond built, and whie ſo named, 788, a 10. On fire, 792, b 20

Richmont caſtell néere Gillingham when built, 7, b 10. ¶ Sée Erle.

Ridlie doctor perſuadeth the people in a ſermon at Paules croſſe in the title of quéene Iane, 1087, a 40. He and Latimer examined for their doctrine, 1129, b 60. 1130, a 10. Whie he was more rigorouſlie handled than the reſidue of the biſhops, 1089, a 40. His ſermon of mercie and charitie before Edward the ſixt how effectuall: note, 1081, b 20

Rie burnt by the Frenchmen, 417, b 50. The ſhips thereof win a good priſe, 440, a 60

Riot at king Richard the firſt his coronation, 118, b 40, &c. By the Suffolkmen: note, 343, b 10. 344, all. 345. Of the people againſt the Iewes: note, 121, b 50. 122, all. Of the Kentiſhmen: note, 677, b 30. In the citie of London betwéene ſtrangers of diuers nations and the Londoners, 645, a 30. Made on the Eaſterlings by the Londoners, 778, a 40. Of prince Edward puniſhed by impriſonment, 313, b 30. Of the Londoners vpon the biſhop of Saliſburie his men, 478, a 20. Betwixt the earle of warwike, and the tenants of the abbat of Eueſham, 411, a 30. At Calis vpon the cutting of a purſſe, 879, b 10. Committed vnder pretenſe of wreſtling, 204, a 20. Toward in weſt Smithfield, and the principals puniſhed, 1321, b 30, 40. Brought within the compaſſe of treaſon by a ſtatute, 842, b 50, &c. ¶ Sée Fraie, Rebellion.

Rithwall king of wales partaker with a rebell, 5, a 20

Riuer that ſuddenlie ceaſed his courſe, 493, b 60

Riuers that ebbed and flowed became ſhallow, 38, a 40. Ouerflowing and drowning the land, 20 b 30. ¶ Sée Thames.

Riuers lord and others beheaded, 715, b 40. 725, b 10

Riuers Richard. ¶ Sée Mellent.

Robert generall of the Normans ſlaine by the Northumbers, and whie, 6, b 30

Robert rebelleth againſt his father duke william, and how it came to paſſe, 12, a 20. Duke of Normandie, ſolicited to come into England to claime the crowne, 29, b 20. Arriueth at Portſmouth, his mild nature, 29, b 60. Commeth into England to viſit his brother Henrie the firſt, 32, a 50. Proclamed after the deceaſſe of his father, 16, b 20. Arriueth at Southhampton 17, b 50. How he might haue eaſilie recouered England from his brother, 17, b 60. Returneth out of the holie land, and laboureth to recouer England from Henrie the firſt, 29, a 60. Ingageth a part of his dukedome for monie, and whie, 17, a 30. His valiantneſſe in fight, 33, a 10. Maketh earneſt ſute to his brother Henrie for peace, 32 b 40. Priſoner in Cardiff caſtell and there dieth, 33, b 30 More credulous than ſuſpicious, 30, a 20. In diſfauour with the Engliſh nobilitie and commons, 28, a 20. Choſen K. of Ieruſalem by reaſon of a miracle, 29, a 60. Morgageth his duchie of Normandie to his brother william Rufus, 22, a 60. It was he whome the nobles would haue had for king being the elder brother, 16, a 30. Returneth into Normandie diſpleaſed with his brother william Rufus, 19, b 40. At diſcord afreſh with his brother william, 21, a 40. His deuiſe and deſire to bereaue william Rufus his brother of the kingdome of England, 16, b 40. To whome married, and his iſſue, 34, a 10. Taken priſoner, 33, a 40 Deſcribed, and his lamentable end, 33, b 40. 60

Robert earle of Northumberland refuſeth to come to king william Rufus, 21, b 30. Inuironeth king Malcolme, 20, b 60. Taketh ſanctuarie, 21, b 60. Priſoner in windſor caſtell, ſtell, and the cauſe of his conſpiracie, 22,a 10

Robert the baſe ſonne of Henrie the firſt married, & made earle of Gloceſter, 37, a 50. ¶ Sée Erle.

Robert the onelie ſonne & heire of Robert earle of Leiceſter deceaſeth, 1375,b 40

Robbers. ¶ Sée Theeues.

Roch knight ſent to the Fléet: note, 968,a 40

Rocheſter beſieged, 267, a 60. The caſtell fortified, and by whom, 17,a 30. Beſieged by K. Rufus, 18,a 10. Beſieged & yéelded to king John, 188,a 10 40 Reſtored to the archbiſhop of Canturburie, 186,b 10. The bridge when builded and by whom, 1377,b 60. How it began to decaie, means to kéepe it repared by act of parlement 1378,a 10,&c.

Rochford lord condemned and beheaded with others, 940, a 50

Rockeſburgh, and the ſituation thereof, in what ſort to bée fortified, 991,a 10,30,b 10. The ſame burned by the Scots, 420,a 50

Rodorke king of Ulſter vanquiſhed, 100,a 30

Roger earle of Hereford conſpireth againſt duke William, 11,a 40.

Roges burnt through the eare, 1228,b 10. ¶ Sée Uagabonds

Roiall exchange. ¶ Sée Burſſe.

Roiſton ſet on fire, 531, b 20

Rood of grace ſhewed at Pauls croſſe, 945.

Rood of Pauls erected: note, 1121,a 50,60

Rookeſbie ſhiriffe of Yorkeſhire, his hardie courage to fight, 534,a 40

Rome blamed by Richard the firſt for couetouſneſſe, 123, b 50. What gaines it had out of England, 171, a 40. Henrie the third would in no wiſe bind and indanger his heire to it, 208, a 20. Beſieged 895, b 60. Taken and ſacked, 896,a 30,50. Compoſitions with the ſoldiors to ſaue certaine places vnſpoiled, b 60. The ſpoile verie rich, 897,a 50. Sacked, 1364, a 30. Beſieged by the duke of Alua and king Philips armie, 50. ¶ Sée Pope and Legats.

Romans. ¶ Sée Triumphs.

Rone beſieged by Henrie the fift, 565,a 20. Inuironed with enimies and ſuccourleſſe, the number within the towne, extreme famine within it, 566 a 20,30, b 20. They within the towne demand parle, a truce for eight daies, articles concerning the yéelding vp thereof, 567, b 60. King Henrie the fift his entrance thereinto, 568, a 40. A conſpiracie of the Frenchmen againſt the Engliſhmen, 568, b 60. The caſtell like to be taken by treaſon of the capteine, 608, b 20. Yéelded vnto the French king, 629, b 50

Roſamund the faire, concubine to Henrie the ſecond, where buried, 196, a 30. Hir cofer, hir death and epitaph, 115, b 50

Ros lord reuolteth vnto the Scots, his brother continueth faithfull vnto the king of England, 297,b 40

Ros a noble man of France accuſed, 251, a 30,&c.

Rouen beſieged by the king of France, 92, b 60. Through famine ſurrendred vnto the king of France, 167, b 50

Round table. ¶ Sée Windſor caſtell.

Rous knight, a valiant capteine, 421,b 30

Routs ¶ Sée Brabanders.

Rufus William his promiſes to purchaſe the peoples fauour, 8,b 4 ¶ Sée William Rufus.

Rugemont caſtell: note, 1007,b 60

Rulers ſundrie in a land weakeneth it, 81,b 30

Rumors falſe ſpread to worke an alteration, 190,b 20. ¶ Sée Report.

Running at the quintine, 247,b 50. At the ring, 805, b 60. At tilt, 805,a 10

Ruptarij, 99,a 10. ¶ Sée Brabanders.

Ruſſell knight his ſober and diſcréet vſage in ſeruice commended, 879,b 50

Ruſſell lord deliuerer of the citie of Exceſter: note, 1022, a 60,b 10. Diſtruſteth himſelf and is vpon departing out of Deuonſhire, he marcheth againſt the rebels towards Exceſter, 1023,a 20,&c. 1024. L. priuie ſeale his letters to the L. protector, 1057,b 20,a 10 He ſueth for peace betwéene the lords, 1058, a 10. ¶ Sée Erle of Bedford.

Rutland earle lord Edward ambaſſador into Scotland: note, 1562,a 40

Rutland caſtell built, 279, b 50 Beſieged, 280,b 60. Taken, 278,b 10.

Rutters, 99,a 10

S.

SAbboth, a ſuperſtitious and hurtfull obſeruation thereof, 262,b 60

Sacrament of baptiſme how the rebels would haue it miniſtred, 1003,a 40

Sacraments forbidden to bée vſed of the clergie, 76, b 10. Contemned, and how the offendor puniſhed, 203,b 60

Sacrilege and no ſacrilege, 22, b 10. Seuerelie puniſhed, 704, b 50

Sackuill knight ambaſſador to the French king, 1224, b 30. His interteinment verie honorable, 40. The firſt place of his audience, his liberalitie, 60. His return into England 125,a 10, 20. ¶ Sée Buckehurſt.

Safe conduct ſued for of the king of Armenia, and denied him, 453,b 30. Granted vnto ſoldiors, 21,b 10. And the force thereof, 459, b 30. Preuaileth not, 103, b 20. ¶ Sée Licence, Protection, 104, Cardinall Uiuiano.

Sadler ſir Rafe knight, treaſuror of the Engliſh armie, 980, b 40. His ſeruice againſt the Scots commended, 988, b 30

Saie lord treaſuror beheaded at the ſtandard in Cheape, 634,b 30

Saint Albons deſtroied, 199, a 10

Saint Anthonies. ¶ Sée Church.

Saint Bartholomewes by Smithfield when builded, 31 a 30. The hoſpitall builded in part, 540,a 60

Saint Marie Oueries made a pariſh church, 950, a 60, Burned, 176,b 10. Repared. 172,b 10

Saint Quintins beſieged and taken by the Engliſh, 1134,a 60,b 10

Saint Thomas hoſpitall erected, 1082,b 10

Saints, and praieng to them miſliked by William Rufus: note, 27,b 20

Saladine cauſeth the chriſtian priſoners to be beheaded, 133, a 30. ¶ Sée Jeruſalem, Saracens, Turks.

Salike. ¶ Sée Law.

Saliſburie made a citie, 202, b 60

Saliſburie the traitor. ¶ Sée Babington.

Salt called Baie ſalt, déer, 1260 a 50

Salute. ¶ Sée Coine.

Samſon. ¶ Sée Biſhop.

Samuell monke of ſaint Albons made biſhop of Dublin, 22,a 30

Sanctuarie and of ſuch as flie for ſuccour thereunto: note, 33, b 60. No ſafe harbour for rebels, 784, a 60. Nor for traitors: note, 764,b 40. ¶ Sée Robert of Northumberland, 21,b 60 and Weſtminſter.

Sanctuaries their vſe and abuſe: note, 718,a 10, &c. Reſtreined, 790,b 10

Sanders murthered. ¶ Sée Murther.

Sanders doctor a mainteiner of the popes bull, 1361,b 30. His miſerable end, 1365, b 60

Sands knight a whip vnto the Frenchmen, 874, b 10

Sands doctor his trouble, perſecution, and voluntarie baniſhment, 1145, b 50,&c. 1146, 1147,1148,1149

Sandwich kept by rebels, they ſue for pardon, 693, a 10. Spoiled by the French, 645, b 30

Saracens diſcomfited by Richard the firſt, 134,a 30. Uanquiſh the chriſtians and kill the earle of Saliſburie with others, 243,a 10. Called Arſacides, their generation and dealing with prince Edward, 275, a 30,&c. Againſt whom went diuerſe nobles of England, 225, b 30. Make ſore war vpon the chriſtians in Spaine, and are vanquiſhed, 213,a 10. Had the whole land in poſſeſſion, 205, a 60. Beſiege the citie of Damieta, 202, a 50. Win the ſame from the chriſtians, 204,b 50. A iournie againſt them, 473,a 40. Out of whoſe hands the whole land was to be recouered, 22, a 60. Win lands from the chriſtians, 108, b 10. Traitorouſlie kill the marqueſſe of Montferrat, 134,b 40. Yéeld Acres into the chriſtians hands, 132,b 50. Make war againſt the Portingals, 124,a 10. ¶ Sée Chriſtians, Granado.

Sargent murthered, and the offendor hanged in Cheapſide, 1310,b 60. Slaine, & the murtherer hanged in Fléetſtréet. 1348, a 10. ¶ Sée Officer.

Sargents at law their feſt kept at Elie houſe, wherat Henrie the ſeuenth and his quéene were preſent, 779,a 40. In the archbiſhop of Canturburies palace, whereat were preſent Henrie the ſeuenth with all his nobles, 791, b 50. At Greies inne, 1210, a 10. At the new temple, 1314,a 60

Saturne and Jupiter. ¶ Sée Planets.

Satiſfaction that Henrie the ſecond ſware to make for the death of Becket, 83,b 50

Sauage knight ſlaine at the ſiege of Bullongne, 775,a 50

Sauage the traitor. ¶ Sée Babington.

Sauerie de Mauleon, and the earle of Saliſburie at diſcord, 194,a 40. 206,a 20. He reuolteth to the French king, 40. An aſſiſtant of king John againſt his rebels, 187, b 60, 188,a 30, 190,b 10. Sore hurt and wounded, 190,b 60

Sauoie burnt by the rebels, 431,a 20. The hoſpitall, 796,a 50

Sawtrie a prieſt burnt for religion, 519,a 30

Scales lord his chiualrie, 669, a 20,&c. Slaine moſt cruellie: note, 654,b 60

Scaliot a blacke ſmith. ¶ Sée Workmanſhip.

Scarſitie, prouiſion thereagainſt for the poores behoofe, 476,b 60. ¶ Sée Dearth.

Scattergood, ¶ Sée Policie.

Schiſme betwéene two popes for the dignitie of ſaint Peters chaire, 484,b 50. In the church, and whervpon, 24 b 20

Schoole of ſaint Anthonies in the citie of London, 779,a 50 At Tunbridge, 1062, b 20. At Draiton in Shropſhire, 1060,b 60. At Briſtow and Reading, 1092, a 30. At Holt in Northfolke founded, 1131,b 10. At Sandwich erected, 1377, a 60, b 10. At Sutton Ualens in Kent, 1311,b 10. Founded by archbiſhop Parker, 1261, a 40. In Bedford founded by William Harper, 1194,b 40. Of the merchant tailors erected, 1194,a 10. At Ratcliffe builded, 945. b 60. At Walthamſtow builded, &c. 830,a 40

Scholers diſputations, 1129, b 10,&c. Tried from traitors by ſix queſtions: note, 1368,a 10, &c. ¶ Sée Oxford.

Schoolemaiſters to teach ſcholers to conſtrue their leſſons in Engliſh, 396,a 20

Scot ſir Thomas knight, of Kent, a good politician, excéedinglie beloued of the people, &c: note, 1539,b 30. 1541,a 20. 1546,b 40,50

Scot. ¶ Sée Erle of Cheſter.

Scotland, Henrie the fift is counſelled to the conqueſt of it, 546, a 40. Inuaded by the lords Ros and Dacres, 874, b 50. Sore ſpoiled by the erle of Surreie and his power, 878, b 30. Inuaded, and diuerſe townes burned by the Engliſh, 875, b 60. It and England at wars, the cauſes of the ſame, 957,a 20,&c. And what townes, villages, &c: the Engliſh armie burned and ſpoiled, 963,a 50,60. The midle marches thereof forraied, 96 ed,969,b 10. The countrie inuaded by the erle of Hertford, 969,b 60. An Engliſh armie goeth againſt it, their number arriueth in the land,961,b 40, 50, 60, An harbour for rebels and malcontents: note the whole ſtorie of duke William & page, 10,b 20. Trouble there, Frenchmen ſent thither, the lords thereof that were confedered againſt the French, 1180, b 30, 40, 60 The earle of Suſſex maketh a iournie thereinto, waſted by fire and ſword, 1222, a 40, 50. Inuaded by the erle of Suſſex, 1213,b 60. Waſted and ſpoiled by fire and ſword,1214,1215,1216,1217, 1218, 1219, 1220. Wonne fiue times by one king of England, 999. a 10, Diuerſe places therein burned, beſieged and otherwiſe dealt withall by the Engliſh, 990,a 10, &c. Inuaded on the weſt ſide, 992, a 30. Places gained there by the Engliſh, 992, b 10, 20, &c. An Engliſh power both by ſea and land ſent thither, chiefteins of the armie,980, a 30,40,&c. The borderers of England make a rode thereinto, 446, a 20 Inuaded, 445, b 10. ¶Sée Duke of Lancaſter. Inuaded by the earle of Warwike, 353, b 20. Countries ſubdued therein by the Engliſhmen, 376,a 50. Reſigned into the hands of king Edward the third, 386, a 60. When it had great want of men, 323,a 20. Controuerſie there, about the crowne thereof: note, 285, b 60,286, all. The kings fealtie ſet downe in forme, 289, b 60 And his homage, 290, a 20 Edward the firſt appointed wardens for the ſame, 288, a 30, &c. That the right and title thereof belonged to Edward the firſt, note,309, b 60, 310, a 10. The lord Segraue ſent with an armie thither,311,b 30. ¶Sée Britaine, Church, Henrie the fourth.

Scots, their king inuadeth Northumberland, 87, b 60 His thought at the view of the Engliſh armie, the order of his hoſt, French capteins among them, the Scots are put to the worſt in the right wing, the left wing diſcomfited, 828, all. The kings magnanimitie, he fighteth himſelfe verie valiantlie, the ſtoutneſſe of his ſtomach, he is ſlaine, his bodie found hauing diuerſe wounds, 829, a 10, &c. b 30 Serueth king Henrie the fift, 580, b 30, In Henrie the fift his armie, 577, a 10 His letter of defiance to king Henrie the eight, 820. Commeth to the Engliſh parlement, 97, b 30. He with other deliuered out of priſon, 95, a 10. Dooth homage to king Henrie the ſecond, 73, b 60. Knighted by king Henrie the ſecond, 76, a 30 Slaine by his owne ſubiects, 771, a 20. Inuadeth England with a great armie in Perkins behalfe, 781, a 20, b 10, &c. Deſireth the ladie Margaret eldeſt daughter of Henrie the ſeuenth to wife, 785, b 60. Dooth homage to Henrie the ſixt, 587, a 20, Fled from his ſiege at Rockeſburgh, 615, a 20 Iames is murthered: note, 616, a 10. Beſiegeth Rockeſburgh, and is ſlaine, 657, a 60. Taken priſoner, 91, b 60. Inuadeth Northumberland, 89, a 50. Inuadeth England, 91, a 60. Preſented to the king of England, 92, b 10. Deliuereth vp caſtels, 95, a 30. Dooth homage to the king of England, 95, b 60. Knight of the garter, 939, a 60. Murthered, 1209. b 60. Proclameth open wars againſt England, 518, b 10. Inuadeth England, the lords aſſemble a power to fight againſt him, the quéene preſent in perſon, 375, b 40, &c. He is taken priſoner, 376, a 10. Reſigneth the realme of Scotland into the hands of Edward the third, 386, a 60 Ranſomed and ſet at libertie, 391, a 60. Sueth for peace vnto king Edward the firſt, and ſubmitteth himſelfe, 300, b 10, &c. Would ſerue two maſters,297,b 20. Concludeth a league with the K. of France, 296, a 10. Renounceth his homage vnto the king of England, 245, a 40. Dooth homage vnto the king of England, 299, a 40. Kept Chriſtmas with the king of England at Yorke, 211, b 30. Commeth vnto London, 263,a 10. Warden of the Engliſh marches,229,b 10. His allegiance to K. Henrie the third, teſtified by a charter, 233, b 60. Inuadeth England, 233, a 30. Commeth into England, 254,a 40. His oth of allegiance vnto Richard the firſt,120,b 20, Commeth vnto king Iohn at Lincolne, 162,a 60. Dooth homage, 69, a 60. 193, a 60. Compoundeth with king Iohn for peace, 173, b 10. Honoured with the order of knighthood, 176, a 30. Commeth to ſée king Richard the firſt, 143, a 30. His allowance by the grant of king Richard: note, 143, a 50. Hée beareth the ſword before the king, b 30. Maketh ſute vnto king Richard the firſt for Northumberland,144, a 30. Interteined honorablie at Canturburie,120,b 20. ¶Sée Biſhop of Durham.

Scots inuade the Engliſh marches, 47, b 10. 48, a 60. Inuade Northumberland, 49, a 40. They & the Engliſh doo bicker, the Scots put to flight,49,b 50,60. Purſued, retire, 48, b 40. Inuade the Engliſh borders, 782, b 40. 645, b 40, 50. Ouerthrowne by ſir Robert Umfreuill, 548, a 30. Inuade the Engliſh borders, 560, a 30. They recule home for feare, 560, a 50. With the aid of Tiuidalemen did much hurt in England, 892, a 30. Inuade the biſhoprike of Durham, 332, b 10.&c, Priſoners in the archbiſhop of Yorke his place, 811, a 40. Inuade the borders of England, aſſailed, diſcomfited, ſlaine and put to flight, 825, b 20,&c. They and the Engliſhmen haue a ſharpe conflict, two battels, fought not, but gaue the looking on, they flie at the peale of guns, 829, a 10, 50, b 40. Enter into England and rob the market folkes going vnto Berwike, put to flight and ſlaine, 383,a 20,40. Diſcomfited by the Engliſhmen, 929, b 10. Moue warre, and at laſt ſue for peace,936, a 50, 60. Inforce Henrie the eight to warre againſt them, their double dealing in a negotiation of an agréement,957, b 30, 50. Inuaded by the Engliſhmen, put to flight, taken priſoners, before the councell in the ſtarchamber, 958, all. They depart into their owne countrie,959,a 50 Their king dieth for gréefe, 958, b 30. A great power gouerned by noble men goeth againſt them,961,b 40,50, 60, They offer to impeach the Engliſh mens paſſage, flée vnto Edenburgh, 962, a 10, 20,30. Spoile the Engliſh marches, they loſe more than they win, aſſalt the caſtell of Warke,881,a 60,b 60. Chaſed and driuen awaie, 862, a 10. All in England apprehended and fined, 873, a 30. They and the Engliſhmen incounter,969,b 50,60. An ouerthrow on both ſides,970, a 10, &c. Their crueltie againſt the Engliſhmen, 10, b 10. Inuade England, 19, b 10. Ouerthrowne and ſlaine, and put to flight, 21, a 10. Sue vnto quéene Eliſabeth for aid againſt the French, 1186, b 40. For reſpit of war,1214,b 20. Their breach of couenant,1214,a 50. And common fault, 1217,b 60 They muſter foure thouſand men,1219,a 20. Their vaine doubt, they méete the Engliſh armie, 984. a 60, b 30, Slaine, the maner and the number,988, a 10,20, Why ſo few were taken, their vow, apparell, number of priſoners, ſpoile of their campe, the feature of their perſonages,988, a 10, Such as came to king Henrie the eight, their obeiſance: note,991,a 50, Submit and yéeld them ſelues to the Engliſh power: note,981, b 20, Their ſubtile practiſe, 982, a 20,30, They flie and are ſharplie purſued, 987,b 10. Caſt awaie their munition and furniture, the lighter to be gone,987, b 30, Charged with ill dealing in the contract of marriage betwéene king Edward the ſixt and the quéene of Scotland, 999, a 20, &c. Reiect all the benefites proffered in the duke of Summerſets exhortation: note, 1001, b 60, Aided by the French king, go to the worſt, 993,a 60, &c. They are ſet at a ſtaie vpon the ſudden, their order both in reſpect of furniture and diſpoſition, an hot encounter betwéene the Engliſh and them: note,985, b 10,&c.40, &c. 986, a 10, &c. Perſons wounded & ſlaine, b 10,&c. Hampered for their diſloialtie in king Edward the ſixts time, 980, 981, 982, Smothered in a caue, diſcomfited, and put to flight, ſlaine and taken priſoners, 982, a 10, 50, 60, Preparation for warre againſt them, 705, b 10, Enter into Ireland, hard hold betwixt them and the enimie, Berwike is betraied vnto them, they winne caſtels, ſpoile and burne, they come into Yorke,324, all. Accurſſed by the pope, they inuade England and returne at their pleaſure, 325, a 60, b 10, 20. Inuade Northumberland,329, a 10. Inuade Ireland, 322, a 60. Great ſlaughter of them, they ſpoile the biſhop of Durham, and raiſe their ſiege, b 20, &c. Take Warke caſtell, 514, a 60. Burne and ſpoile in Northumberland, 518, b 40. Ouerthrowne, vanquiſhed at Hameldon, the number ſlaine, priſoners taken,520, b 30,40, 50,60, Their crueltie verie barbarous, 465, b 20. They gaue the Engliſh an ouerthrow, b 20. In the time of treatie they ſpoile Northumberland, hauing prouided an armie to inuade England be hardlie perſuaded to accept a truce,466, a 50,60. Aided againſt the Engliſh by the French, they inuade the frontiers of England, they ſpoile Cumberland, aſſault Carleill,447,a 20, 40. Burne Warke caſtell, 444, b 60. Spoile the north parts in the time of dearth,422,b 60,423,a 10, &c. Inuade the Engliſh borders, ſpoile whole countries, and carrie awaie great booties,428, a 10. Their nobilitie at diſſention, their prince ſtaid in Scotland,531 b 50,60. Inuade England, 346, b 60. Diſloiall to king Edward the third, he aſſaileth them, they ſubmit themſelues, 351, all. Their ſtoutnes hindereth the concluſion of peace, a ſtatute ordeined by them in fauor of king Edward the third, 352, a 30, &c: b 40. Fight with axes,376,a 10. Sore afflicted by king Edward the third, 386,b 20. Enter into England, and doo much hurt, compounded withall for moneie, 323, a 10. Diſcomfit the lord Beaumont, 323, a 40. Accurſſed and interdicted, 323, b 10. Inuade the Engliſh borders,299, a 40. Their crueltie, the caſtell of Dunbar rendered to them, put to flight and ſlaine, 299, b 10, 20,&c. 297,b 60. They raiſe their ſiege from Carleill,298, a 10. Diſloiall in dealing, 296, a 40. Thir nobles fealtie vnto king Edward the firſt ſet downe in expreſſe words, 287, b 60, 288,a 10. Their vnfaithfull dealing, 303,b 30. In armes, 303, b 40, 60. At diſcord, they ſue for peace, diſcomfited, 304, a 10, &c. Promiſbreakers, they aſſaile the Engliſh, diſcomfit them, enter into Berwike, inuade Northumberland, ſpoile the countrie, returne home, diſcomfited and ſlaine, 305, a 10, 50, 60, b 10, 50, 60. Beſiege Rockeſborough, 306, b 60. Summoned moned vnto the parlement at Yorke, 307, a 10. The order of their battels, their horſſemen flie, their archers ſlaine, 307, b 30, 60. The ſlaughter of them, 308, a 10. Vexed by king Edward the firſt, forbidden ſo to doo by pope Boniface, 309, a 10. Flie from king Edward the firſts power, hide themſelues, fall to ſubmiſſion, 312, a 40, &c. In armes vnder Bruſe, diſcomfited, 314, a all.

Scripture abuſed: note, 1223, a 50

Scrope lord by king Richard the thirds commiſſion kept a ſeſſion againſt diuerſe indicted of high treaſon, 746, a 20

Sea decreaſeth, 38, a 40. Ouerflowne, and dooing much hurt by breaking into the land, 526, b 60. 350, b 50. With huge tides that did much hurt, 220, a 60. Seemeth to burne: note, 243, a 20. Riſeth higher than the naturall courſe gaue, 244, b 40. Ceaſed from ebbing and flowing three moneths, 236, b 20. Riſeth with verie high tides, 252, a 50. Extraordinarie, 204, b 40.

Seafaring men, and of certeine orders to be obſerued amongeſt them, 123, a 30

Sebaſtian Gabato his voiage, 1083, a 50. His diſcouerie of an Iland of rich commodities, 785, a 30. Bringeth ſtrange men from the new found Ilands, 789, b 50

Secrets diſcloſed, 511, b 40, 50. Not to be diſcouered: note, 299, b 60, 300, a 10. Of princes diſcloſed by a craftie knaue, 812, b 20

Sedition to what iſſue it commeth, 787, a 30, 40. Sowers thereof taken, conuented and executed, 1360, a 10. Condemned by ancient lawes made two hundred yeares ago, 20. Some condemned, and yet ſpared from execution, and while, 30. The miſchiefe ſpringing from the ſame, 1054, b 30. Puniſhed by impriſonment and confiſcation, 446, a 50. Sowen by a ſeditious preeſt, and by a counterfet earle of Warwike, 765, a 20, &c. How greeuous vnto a commonwealth, diſcourſed by ſir Iohn Cheeke knight, 1042, 1043, vnto 1055: note it well, it is worth the reading ¶ See Bookes, Counſell, and Letters.

Segraue lord in armes againſt the Scots, taken, wounded, and reſcued, 311, b 30 &c.

Sele common granted vnto the Londoners, 208, a 10. Roiall old made void, and a new confirmed, 208, b 60. Newlie made, 277, a 20. And the old, with all things ſealed therewith annulled, 145, b 50

Selim prince of Turkes his ambition and tyrannie againſt his father and affines, he ouerthroweth the Sophie of Perſia, 846, a 10, 20, 30. Deceaſeth, and Soliman dooth ſucceed, 847, b 20. ¶ See Saracens.

Selling and buieng of men like oxen and kine, 31, a 10

Semer knight ſent vnto the Tower, atteinted and beheaded, 996, a 60

Sempringham William deceaſeth, 113, b 20

Senens. ¶ See Guenheres.

Sens beſieged and taken, 576, a 50

Sentlow knight ſent vnto the Tower, 1152, b 60

Sequeſtration of benefices: note, a ſhift to get moneie, 193, a 20

Serle maior of London in a riot not eſteemed or regarded, 204, a 40

Serle, one of king Richard the ſecond his chamber, noiſeth abrode that king Richard is aliue, he is apprehended, examined for the duke of Gloceſters death, drawne through euerie good towne, executed at London, 525

Sermon of George Cloſſe at Paules croſſe offenſiue, for the which he was inioined ſubmiſſion: note, 1558, b 10. Of Stephan Gardiner: note, 1126, a 60. Of frier Pateſhull, 455, a 60, b 10. Of Ball a ſeditious preeſt vnto certeine rebels, 437, a 60. Of the biſhop of Rocheſter at king Richard the ſecond his coronation, 417, b 40. Full of ſlander againſt king Edward the fourth: note, 727, b 10, &c. That turned the preacher to ſhame and loſſe of life: note, 728, a 30, 40. Vndiſcreet and ſeditious, 841, a 10, 20. Inuectiue againſt biſhop Gardiner, and the preacher asketh forgiueneſſe, 950, b 10, 20. In Paules church for victorie againſt the Turkes, 1226, b 40. The aſſemblie thereat, b 50. Made by Iohn Knewſtubs, at Vtricht in the low countries, in a ſtatelie aſſemblie, 1433, b 60. Of doctor Ridleie before king Edward the ſixt, what effects it wrought touching charitie, &c: note, 1081, a 20, &c. That procured rigorous handling to the preacher: note, 1089, a 40. At Paules croſſe wherein the people were perſuaded vnto the title of queene Iane, 1087, a 40. At the Spittle without Biſhopſgate, and the houſe of the maior and aldermen by whome built, 702, b 50. Full of papiſticall adulation made at pope Gregorie the thirteenth his buriall, 1397, b 40, &c. 1398, &c. to 1400. ¶ See Oration, Preacher, Shaw, Submiſſion.

Sermons perpetuallie founded at Norwich, 1261, a 60. At Paules croſſe none for the ſpace of a quarter of a yeare: note, 1182, a 10, 20. Made to and for the mariage of king Henrie the eight, with queene Katharine, 928, a 20. That brought the preacher vnto loſſe of credit, honeſtie and life: note, 725, b 30, 40

Seruant conſtant and truſtie: note, 500, b 60. Truſtie and loiall vnto the ladie Eliſabeth, 1159, b 40. Murthering his maiſter is hanged, 1213, a 10. Accuſeth his maiſter, and commeth vnto an ill end himſelfe: note, 626, b 20. Betraieth his maiſter for reward: note, 743, b 50, 60 60. 744, b 60, ¶ See Baniſter.

Seruants wages rated by ſtatute: note, 380, b 30, &c.

Seruice old remembred, 203, a 40. Good in war vnrewarded breedeth conſpiracie: note, 21, b 30

Seruingman reproued and reformed: note, 1315, a 20

Seruitude none in England before duke Williams comming in, 1, b 50. Spurned at verie ſore, 1, b 50, 2, a 10 forſaking of natiue countrie preferred before it, 6, a 20. Vnder the Normans ſignified vnto the world by outward teſtimonie, 5, b 10

Seſſions. ¶ See Sickneſſe.

Seſſment refuſed to be paid as it was leuied, and how puniſhed, 968, a 40. ¶ See Subſidie.

Sforce duke of Millan by vſurpation, 761, a 60

Shandois lord his falſe report in the Starchamber againſt ladie Eliſabeth, 1102, a 20. Deceaſeth, 1258, a 20

Shene Oneale of Ireland diſcomfited by the Engliſh power, 1209, b 30. Mangled and hackt in peeces, 1210, a 30 50

Shaw maior of London a proud man and a fauourer of king Richard the third, 725, b 40

Shaw doctor his ſermon that loſt him his honeſtie and his life: note, 725, b 40. Commended by the duke of Buckingham, 729, b 40. He was taught his leſſon yer he came into the pulpit, 727, b 10, &c. 40

Sheene the kings manour burnt, 788, a 10

Sheepe. ¶ See Coteſhold.

Shepherd called the holie ſhepherd, 606, b 40

Sheffeeld lord is lamentablie ſlaine in the Norfolke rebellion, 1034, b 30. Laid to the rebels charge, 1046, b 60 1047, a 10

Shellie how he was affectioned to Throckmortons treaſons, 1372, b 20. An actor in the conſpiracie of the earle of Northumberland, 1407, b 10

Shews of diſport with Robin Hood, &c: before king Henrie the eight, 836, b 40, &c, 837, a 10. Of eſtate on the Twelfe night, 837, b 60. At iuſts at Greenewich, 815, a 10. Of delight wherein great perſonages were actors, 805, a 10, &c. 806, a 10, &c. Triumphant of proper deuiſe at the receiuing of the earle of Leiceſter into the low countries, note well, 1424, b 10, &c. to 1430. ¶ See Pagents and Sights.

Shift. ¶ See Policie.

Ship roiall called Henrie grace de Dieu, 815, b 40 The Marie roſe drowned through negligence: note, 969, a 30. The barke Agar recouered from the French, 972, a 60. The Regent burnt, 815, b 10 The Greihound caſt awaie, 1202, b 10. The great Harrie burnt, 1090, b 50

Ship ſeene in the aire, 249, a 60

Ships Engliſh ſpoiled by the French, 1195, a 60. Of queene Eliſabeth ſent forth into the narrow ſeas, 1211, a 10. Scowre the narrow ſeas, 1257, b 50, 60. Their ſeruice in Ireland, 1314, b 50. Three of name woone from the Scots, 989, b 60 Set on fire by the Engliſh, 995, b 30. Two of the French kings taken with a priſe in them, 453, b 50. 524, a 50. Of Rie win a good priſe, 440, a 60. Of a ſtrange mold and forme driuen on the coaſts of England, 250, a 10

Ships and caſtels ſeene in the aire, 1313, a 60, b 10 ¶ See French and Flemiſh, Thames.

Shipwracke, 562, b 10. 365, a 30. Wherein two hundred perſons were drowned, 1202, b 10. 423, a 60, b 10. Lamentable, 41, b 10. ¶ See Noblemen.

Shiriffes of ſhires when inſtituted, 8, a 60. Of all ſhires ſent for to the court, 457, b 40. Orders deuiſed for their appearance and bringing of accounts, 254, a 60. Of London put awaie their officers, 961, b 10. ¶ See London.

Shirewood forreſt. ¶ See Forreſt.

Shooes long piked forbidden, 668, b 30

Shoomaker called the cocke of Weſtminſter, his gifts to the hoſpitals, 1083, a 20

Shooting in the long bow when firſt it came into England, 15 b 50

Shores wife king Edward the fourth his concubine: note, 722, b 60. More ſued vnto than all the lords in England, 729, a 40. Spoiled of all that ſhe had, put to open penance, deſcribed, 724, b 10, &c.

Shordich knight his words to the pope, and the popes to him, 365, b 40, 50

Shrewſburie towne partlie burnt, 218, a 30

Sickeneſſe extreame among people in all places, 14, a 60 Strange at Oxford aſſiſe, whereof iudges &c, died: note, 1270, a 40, b 10, &c. Strange in Exceſter, at a ſeſſions there held, like that of Oxford: note, 1547, b 30, &c.

Sidneie ſir Henrie knight ſent ambaſſador into France, 1195, a 40. The hiſtorie of his life and death, 1548, b 10, &c.

Sidneie ſir Philip knight dead of a wound, right honourablie reported of beyond and on this ſide the ſeas: note, 1554, a 60, &c.

Sidneie ladie, the ſaid knights mother deceaſeth, hir godlie end, 1553, b 30

Sights in the aire fearefull and and ſtrange, 1270, a 20. 1313, a 60. 484, b 10, &c. 395, a 60. 210. b 50. 249, a 60 Of fierie impreſſions in the aire, 1208, a 40. 1260, a 30 1261, b 60. Out of the earth, 220, a 10. ¶ Sée Moone, Pagents, Shewes, & wonders.

Siluer mines found in Deuonſhire: note, 316, b 30

Simon a fraudulent and ſeditious préeſt, 765, a 10

Sumenill the counterfeit earle of Warwike, 763, a 20. He is honourablie receiued into Ireland, a 60. Proclaimed king of England, 766, a 10 He with all his adherents landeth in England, b 10 He is taken, pardoned, and in place of homelie ſeruice vnder Henrie the ſeuenth, 767, a 10, 30

Simonie, wherein note Anſelmes opinion, 24, a 50. A practiſe in William Rufus his time, 24, a 30. A thouſand pounds for a biſhoprike, 26, a 50. Greatlie abhorred by an archbiſhop of Canturburie: note, 213, a 60. ¶ Sée Abbaſies and Biſhopriks.

Simplicitie abuſed, 1063, b 30

Siward duke of Northumberland, 5, a 10

Six articles ſued for to be renewed, 1003, b 10. ¶ Sée Statute.

Skinks valourous ſeruice againſt the Spaniards, 1431, a 20, &c. Taketh the towne of Warle, 1429, b 10. Which he burned it, 30. Knighted, 1434, a 10. His good ſeruice againſt the enimie, 60, b 10, &c.

Skipwith Richard. ¶ Sée Iuſts triumphant.

Slander that went of king Richard for the death of the marqueſſe of Montferrat, 135, b 30. Againſt king Edward the fourth confirmed: note, 729, b 50, 60. ¶ Sée Sermon.

Slanders deuiſed by malicious heads againſt quéene Eliſabeth. ¶ Sée Books ſeditious, Libell, and Quéene Eliſabeth.

Slaughter of fiue or ſix people by the fall of a wall, 1413, a 60 Of eight perſons by the fall of a ſcaffold at Paris garden, 1353, a 30. ¶ Sée Murther.

Sléepe of fourtéene daies and as manie nights, 972, b 20

Smith Thomas eſquire and cuſtomer, a good commonwealth man: note, 1539, a 20

Smith doctor his recantation. 980, a 10

Smith embroderer. ¶ Sée Charitie.

Smithfield ſometimes a common laiſtall and place of execution, 31, a 30. And to that vſe ſince oftentimes applied. ¶ Sée Arden and Horſſeſtealers.

Snow great in Aprill, 1272, a 20, In Maie, 290, a 50

Sodomitrie puniſhed in clergiemen and laiemen, 31, a 10

Soldan king of Soria and Egypt his ſtate, by whoſe election they were choſen, two of them ſlaine, and all Soria & Egypt ſubdued, 846, a 60, b 10, &c.

Soldiors forren arriue to aid king Iohn againſt his barons, 187, b 60. Set altogither vpon the ſpoile, 192, b 40 Of certeine ordinances deuiſed by them to be obſerued, 125, a 50. Engliſh inriched, 770, b 60. Trained vp in turnies, 145, b 60. Make a fraie againſt the lord maior of London, 636, a 20. Commended with words, and rewarded with ſpoiles, 560, a 10 Engliſh haue new cotes beſtowed vpon them by the ducheſſe of Sauoie, 810, b 10 Their vnrulie and drunken behauior noted, 809, b 30. 810, a 10. Their miſbehauior againſt the L. admerall, 814, a 50. Of Tornaie rewarded of K. Henrie the eight, 850, b 10. Euill vnder a good capteine, 942, b 30. Slaie their capteine 10, a 50. Their wages borne by the lords and péeres of the realme, 14, a 60. How well affected William Rufus was to them, 27, a 10. Preſt and releaſed for ten ſhillings or twentie ſhillings a man: note, 21, a 60, b 10. Their outrage, a proclamation to reſtreine it, 1197, a 60. Good orders proclamed to be kept amongſt them, 1196, b 40. Hanged for reuolting, 1201, a 10. Executed for drawing vpon their capteins, &c, 1202, b 30. Tranſported into Ireland to vanquiſh Shane Oneale, 1209, b 30. Yong trained vp in the field at the citie of Londons charge, 1228, a 50, 60. Tranſported into Ireland, 1314, a 30. Sent ouer ſea to aid the low countries, 1413, b 10. To what ſhifts they fall after diſcamping, 1050, a 60. Reteined on all ſides by king Richard the ſecond againſt the lords, 457, b 60. Hardie of préeſts and religious men, 443, a 60 A great abuſe in the chéiſe of them, 454, a 60. Called the croſſed ſouldiors, 441, a 60 442, a 20. Incouraged by hope of gaine, 443, b 40. Out of wages by meanes of peace do much hurt in France, 395, b 10. Defrauded of their wages and the partie executed as a traitor, 411, b 10. Of the French in a poore eſtate, 199, b 40. Do much hurt, they ſpoile Weſtminſter, they are ſacked and are throwne into the Thames, 273, b 20 Their paie, a thing preferred before race of men: 229, b 20 ¶ Sée Aduentures, Law marſhall, Mutinie.

Soliman Ottoman beſiegeth and taketh Rhodes, 876, b 20. It is yéelded vp vnto him, his contempt of chriſtian religion, 877, a 10, 20. Succeſſour after Selims deceaſſe, 847, b 20.

Sophie of Perſia. ¶ Sée Selim.

Sorcerie and inchantment. ¶ Sée Coniuror, and Elenor Cobham.

Sound moſt ſtrange and wonderfull heard, 226, a 10

Southhampton burned, 355, b 50

Southwell knight his words in the parlement houſe touching quéene Maries child yet vnborne, 1124, a 50

Southwell the archbiſhop of Yorke his manor, 35, b 30

Southworke in the iuriſdiction of an alderman, 1062, a 60, b 10. Liberties purchaſed for it, 1062, a 40

Spaine a deadlie bane vnto the Engliſh ſoldiors, 450, a 60, b 10. The king thereof his armie vnder the conduct of the duke of Alua, & the kingdome of Nauarre ioined vnto his, 813, b 30, &c. His claime to the empire, 851, a 50, 60. He is choſen emperour, 852, a 30. Philip his proclamation againſt Engliſh merchants, 1206, a 10. His officers full of tyrannicall lordlineſſe and villanie, 1335, a 50. Chaſed and driuen out of his realme, 397, b 10, 60. His egerneſſe to be reuenged, his diſſimulation, 399, a 50, 60. Sendeth an herald vnto prince Edward of Wales, 398, a 60

Spaniards ioined with the Engliſh armie againſt the French, 879, b 60. Aſſalt Rome, take it, ſacke it, kill and ſlaie without exception: note, 896, a 10, &c. 897, a 20. Enter into Antwerpe, ſpoiling, wounding and killing, 1263, a 10. They and others in Ireland ſlaine, 1314, b 50, 60. Diſcomfited, 1432, b 10, &c. They bite their fingers for anger, 1433, a 30. They and Engliſhmen togither by the eares about whores, 1126, b 60. Their manhood againſt the French, 1138, a 60. More fauourable vnto ladie Eliſabeth than ſome Engliſhmen, 1157, b 20. Hanged for murther, 1121, b 30. Their gallies chaſed from the Engliſh coaſts, and vanquiſhed. 427, a 20. Their Fleet ouermatch the Engliſh, 420, a 30. Vanquiſhed by king Edward the third vpon the ſea, 379, b 60. Their order of battell, 398, b 60. Their number, 399, a 10, Put to flight, the number ſlaine, 399, a 60, b 10. ¶ Sée Frenchmen, Gréenefield, Granado.

Spenſer the yonger ſhamefullie executed, 339, b 50

Spenſer ladie committed vnto ward: note, 527, b 20, 30

Spenſers notable inſtruments to bring king Edward the ſecond to the liking of all kind of miſrule, 321, b 10. Enuied of the nobilitie, 325, a 30. Variance betwéene them and the lords, b 50. The lords in armes againſt them, their lands inuaded, 326, all. Baniſhed by the decrée of the barons, articles wherewith they were charged, 327, a 10, &c. Yéeld themſelues vnto the law, fauoured of king Edward, and reſtored to peace and quietneſſe, 328, a 20, b 10, Reſtored to all their inheritances and aduancements, 332, a 10.

Spirit in a wall without Aldersgate, doth penance at Paules croſſe for abuſing the people, 1117, b 60

Spirits in likeneſſe of birds ſéene in the aire, 166, a 60.

Spite of the French king at Richard the firſt, and why, 133, b 50. Of Roger Lacie in hanging two men, 133, b 40. ¶ Sée Enuie, Malice, and Reuenge.

Spoile rich and honourable, 201 b 10. Diuided among ſoldiors: note, 560, a 10. ¶ Sée Soldiors,

Spring hindered, 258, a 20, Séemed to be changed into winter, 239, b 30

Stafford waſted, 30, a 40

Stafford knight taken out of ſanctuarie and executed, 764, b 40

Stafford lord ſlaine by ſir Iohn Holland: note, 447, a 50. Beheaded, 673, a 40

Staffords ſlaine by Iack Cade 634, a 60

Stamford taken by duke Henrie, 60, b 30

Stanhope knight committed to the Tower, 1066, b 60. Hée and others beheaded, 1081, a 60

Stanelie knight, a fauourer of Perkine Warbecke, coniectures of his alienated mind from Henrie the ſeuenth, 778, b 40, 50, 60. He is beheaded, 779, a 10. He and his archers breake the Scots araie, 828 b 50

Stanelie lord his deuiſe to auoid ſuſpicion of king Richard the third, and to ſaue his owne life, 754, a 10. He and others méet, embrace and conſult, 755, a 20. Setteth the crowne on the earle of Richmond his head, his bold anſwer to king Richard his purſeuants, 760, a 50, 60 His faithfulneſſe, 673, a 10 674, a 30

Staple of wolles remoued to Calis, 395, b 60. Out of Flanders into England, 381 a 20

Starre ſtrange appéered euerie morning for a time: note, 223, b 40. In the conſtellation of Caſſiopeia, 1257, a 20

Stars falling after a ſtrange maner, 231, b 40. Séene at the verie time of an eclipſe, 44, b 40 ¶ Sée Blaſing ſtarre.

Starch. ¶ Sée Wheat.

States of the low countries, their deputies arriuall in London, their meſſage vnto quéene Eliſabeth, 1411, a 40, &c. 60, b 10, &c. 1412, a 10, &c. Their ſute granted, 1413, b 10 1414, a 50, to 1419, a 10: note. Sworne vnto the quéene of England, and what authoritie they gaue the earle of Leiceſter by placard, 1428, all. ¶ Sée Quéene Eliſabeth, Duke of Alanſon, and Earle of Leiceſter.

Statute of the ſix articles, with the extreame procéeding therein, 946, b 30, 50. Spoken againſt to the loſſe of life, 953, a 40. Repealed, 992, b 10. Deſcribed, 1005, b 10. Ex Officio reuiued, 1126, b 60. Of premunire begun, 409, a 60. For ſeruants wages and labourers, 380, b 30, 40. For making of clothes and other things, 380, b 40. Of Mortmaine, 280, a 10

Statutes of Weſtminſter ordeined, 278, a 10. Eſtabliſhed, 285, a 50. Of Gloceſter, 279, b 10. Called Additamenta, 283, a 60. Of Quo warranto, 280, a 50. Of Eltham, 892, b 50. Of Oxford: note, 262, a 10 Proteſted againſt by king Henrie the third, 265, b 30. Repealed, 270, b 50. ¶ Sée Apparell.

Stephan when and by whome hée was crowned king, 46, a 40, 50, 40, 50. His valiantneſſe: note,53,a 60. Ordering of his armie redie to giue battell, 51, b 60. Beſiegeth Wallingford, 51,b 30. Winneth Lincolne, 51,b 50. His power put to flight, 53,a 60 Taken priſoner and led vnto Mawd the empreſſe, 53, b 20. He and the earle of Gloceſter deliuered by exchange,54, b 20. Entreth Lincolne with the crowne vpon his head,56, b 60. With an armie commeth to Yorke, 58,a 60. Incampeth neere his enimies the Scots, 47, b 20. Agreeth with the erle of Aniou, 48, a 50. Inuadeth Scotland, 50, a 60. Maketh haſt to reſcue the north parts, 48, b 40. Burnt the ſouth parts of Scotland, 48, b 50. Hee and Henrie the fourth meet at Dunſtable about a peace, they come to Canturburie,64,a 20. His promiſe to purchaſe the peoples fauour, 8, b 40. Doubteth whome to truſt,51,a 10. Raiſeth his ſiege 51,b 10. Beginneth to incline his mind vnto peace, 61,a 40. Falleth ſicke, 47, b 50. Departeth this life, 64,b 40. A deſcription of his perſon, qualities and actions, 64,b 40,50

Stephan earle of Britaine, 7 b 20. ¶ See Erle.

Stephan Gardiner his oration to the councell touching queene Marie hir mariage, he commendeth the Spaniſh king,1093, a 50,60. ¶ See Biſhop Gardiner.

Stigand archbiſhop of Canturburie hated, and while duke William refuſed to bee crowned at his hands,1,b 20. His ſtout meſſage vnto duke William,2,b 10. Flieth into Scotland, 8, a 30. His martiall mind,and vnpatient of forren ſeruitude,1,b 50, 2,a 10. Capteine of an armie of Kentiſhmen,2, a 10. Depriued for three ſpeciall cauſes, 8,b 60. Kept in perpetuall priſon and there ended his life, 9,a 20

Stinke noiſome after a thunder: note,204, b 20. Filthie after a tempeſt, 211, b 40. Moſt horrible in Winchcombe church,19, a 60. Of Henrie the firſt his dead bodie odious, 45,a 20

Stoke battell. ¶ See Battell.

Storie doctor impudent and ſawcie,his words in the parlement houſe, 1180,b 20, 40. An enimie vnto ladie Eliſabeth,1159, b 60. 1160, a 10. Executed for treaſon, his education and birth, a perſecutor and exquiſite tormentor of Gods ſeruants, apprehended, conueied himſelfe ouer ſeas, continuing there a perſecutor, a commiſſioner to ſearch for Engliſh bookes, intended the ouerthrow of England, ſearched the Engliſh ſhips, apprehended by a wile, conueied into England, indicted, arreigned, executed as a traitor: note, 1225, a 40, &c.

Stradiotes,821,b 60. 822,a 10. Deſcribed and incountred of the Engliſh horſſemen,819 a 60

Strangers reſort to ſerue king Stephan,47, a 50. Courteouſlie prouided for by king Henrie the firſts interteinment,34, a 60. Outface Engliſhmen againſt all honeſtie and conſcience,840,b 10. Iniuriouſlie abuſed of diuerſe yonkers,841,b 10,20,&c. Appointed to depart the realme, 65,b 10. Greatlie grudged at for procuring licences to ſell woad,893,b 40. Ouer ſawcie lewd and knauiſh in dealing with Engliſhmen, 841,a 60. b 10. Skirmiſh with the rebels of Norwich, 1033,b 10. Went againſt the Deuonſhire rebels,1003,b 30. Feaſted by king Richard the ſecond, and ſo doth the duke of Lancaſter,474, a 10. Sent for by king Henrie the third to ſerue him in his wars, 217,a 20. A great complaint exhibited for that they got the beſt benefices,365,a 60. In fauour with king Henrie the third, alwaies odious vnto the homeborne,216,b 50,60. Valuation of their benefices taken,236, b 40. The value of ſpirituall liuings in their hands, 247, b 20. Keepe the caſtell of Windſor, 265, a 40. Merchants a new order for them, ſent to the towne, 283, b 10. ¶ See Proclamation.

Stratagem of the lord Montioie,965,b 50,966, a 10. ¶ See Policie.

Stratford bridge vpon Auon builded, 776,b 50

Strife amongſt the Engliſh ſubiects on the other ſide the ſea,157,a 60. It & emulation in ſumptuous apparelling of ſeruants,163,a 60. Betwixt the two archbiſhops, 142, b 20, Betwixt the laitie and ſpiritualtie, 526, a 10. Betwixt the Londoners and the abbat of Weſtminſter,242 b 60. Betwixt king Henrie the third and his barons,216, b 40. Betweene the archbiſhop of Canturburie and the biſhop of Wincheſter, 247, a 50. One ended, all ended: note, 591,b 30. ¶ See Quarell and Variance.

Stues ſuppreſſed, 972, b 10

Stukelie a defamed perſon and faithleſſe beaſt: note, 1359, a 50

Sturton lord committeth a ſhamefull murther, hee is hanged, 1133,a 10,20

Subſidie demanded and denied 215,a 10. 251, a 10. To king Henrie the third by his brother the earle of Cornewall, 251, b 30. Of the richer ſort, 236,a 30. Cauſeth a commotion and inſurrection in the realme: note,429,a 60. Granted by the parlement, appointed to be kept of two citizens of London,418,b 60. For the ſtate of parlements, 424,a 60. Greeuous cauſing manie a bitter curſſe and much miſchiefe,428,b 40. To be paid by the great men and fat backes, but the poore to go free,422, a 10, Granted and appointed to be ſpent according to the diſcretion of the nobilitie,452, a 50. Of ſurcharge,524,b 20, 30, Pardoned,1090,b 60. Of the laitie 1130,a 30. Verie ſore and intollerable laid vpon his ſubiects by William Rufus, 22, a 60. Called the great: note, 815,b 60. To be paid by anticipation,882,a 50. Granted to be paid in three yeares: note,960, a 40. Raiſed by K. Henrie the firſt to beſtow with his daughter, 38, a 20. Granted of euerie knights fee and clergie,167,a 30. The collectors thereof complaine to the earle of Northumberland that they cannot get it: note,769,b 30, &c. Raiſed of wools,292, b 20. Called chimnage,401, b 20. Of wage for the ſpace of fiue yeares, 400,b 40. Diſſuaded,401, b 10. Of wooll,355, a 30. Of tunnage and poundage,589, b 60. Of three ſhillings for euerie plowland,161, a 50. Of the thirtith part of all moueable goods granted vpon condition,220,b 10. Of the fortith part of euerie mans goods towards the diſcharge of the kings debt, 215, b 40. Of two ſhillings of euerie plowland, 202, b 10. Of the ninth part of the peoples goods granted to king Edward the firſt, 306, a 20. Of an eight part of the peoples goods granted, 301, b 30. Of the twentith part of euerie mans goods, 279, b 10. Of foure penſe and fiue penſe out of euerie marke, 332. Of the one halfe of wools through the realme, 354, a 60. Of fiftie thouſand pounds demanded of the clergie, 406, b 20. Of fiftie ſhillings of euerie ſacke of wooll tranſportable ouer ſea,383, a 60. Of foure penſe of euerie perſon aboue fortie yeares of age, &c, 410, b 30 Of ſix and twentie ſhillings eight penſe of euerie ſacke of wooll, &c, 396, b 10. For euerie laſt of lether fortie ſhillings, 357, b 10. For euerie ſacke of wooll fortie ſhillings,357,b 10. Of a new kind granted by the clergie, 531, b 30. Of the moitie of a tenth and of a fifteenth,445, a 10,20. Of twentie ſhillings of euerie knights fee, 524, b 10. Of ſix ſhillings in the pound,&c: 1225,a 20,30. Of moueables and vnmoueables granted, 1184, a 60. Of ſix ſhillings in the pound, granted of the ſpiritualtie, 971, a 10. Of the ſixt part of euerie mans goods demanded, and what curſſing and rebellion followed, 891, a 40 50. Of two ſhillings of euerie plow land, 142, b 60. Of fiue ſhillings of euerie hide of land, 153, a 10. Called the great ſubſidie, about the grant whereof there was hard hold, 877,b 20,30,&c.

Subſidies, an enimie to them was biſhop Hugh of Lincolne, 162,b 50. Of ſundrie ſorts repeated, 229, a 50 ¶ See Contribution, Cuſtome, Fifteenth, and Rebellion.

Subdeacons admiſſion not without profeſſion of chaſtitie, 30,b 30

Subiection moſt vile and vnbeſeeming a king: note, 83,b 50 84,a 10. Forren how abhorred of a valorous mind: note,192,a 50. Of Yorke vnto the archbiſh. of Canturburie. ¶ See Archbiſhop.

Subiects bridle their king to his gret impatience,186,b 10

Submiſſion of the Londoners to Henrie the third, 271,a 10 Of Dauid of Wales to Henrie the third conteined in articles, 227,b 60. Of the duke of Yorke to king Henrie the ſixt vnder his oth, 639, b 60 Of king Iohn to the pope teſtified in a charter, 177,b 20, &c. Purchaſeth peace and pardon, 203,a 40. By conſtraint, 186, b 50, 167, b 50. Of George Cloſſe preacher for a ſermon. ¶ See Sermon.

Succeſſion to the crowne conſulted vpon to be diuerted: note, 1083,b 40,50,60. ¶ See Crowne.

Sudburie hill, 686,b 40

Suffolke men the firſt that reſorted to the ladie Marie againſt the duke of Northumberland. 1086,b 60

Summer drie, 780,b 60. Extreme: note, 336, b 10. For the ſpace of foure moneths, 220,a 40. From March vntill Iune, 381,a 40. Wet with manie floods, 216, b 10 Deere, 381,a 50

Summerſet. ¶ See Herald.

Summeruile. ¶ See Traitor.

Sunne appeareth like bloud, 332,b 10. Counterfeit ſeene, 220,a 40

Sunnes two appeared, 157, a 10. Three ſeene at once,793,b 40. Foure beſide the accuſtomed, 216,b 20

Sundaie prophaned and how puniſhed by God: note, 1353, a 30. Buieng & ſelling a law againſt it, 624,a 20

Superſtition. ¶ See Religion.

Supremacie of king Henrie the eight denied and the parties executed, 952,b 50. 961,a 60 950,b 10. 938,a 10,&c. ¶ See Pope, Traitor.

Surgerie lecture founded in London, and how to be exerciſed: note, 1349,a 20,&c. An excellent inſtitution and for common benefit: note,1369,b 10,20.

Suſpenſion of the archbiſhop of Yorke by the archbiſhop of Canturburie,35 b 60.36,a 10 Of Ranulfe biſhop of Chicheſter: note, 26,a 30. Pronounced by a legat in a ſynod holden at Paules, 271, a 60

Suſpicion in a prince how miſchiefous, 738,a 30. Sometimes good and aduantageable, 1087,a 50, Cauſe of apprehenſion and execution: note, 259,b 60.260,a 10. Of Henrie the fourth grounded vpon a guiltie conſcience: note, 520,b 10. That he had in his ſonne prince Henrie, 539,a 10. ¶ See Enuie, and Miſtruſt.

Sutors what ſhifts they made to be heard, 799,b 30

Swaneſcombe in Kent where the Kentiſhmen met againſt duke William, 2,a 10

Sward, ¶ See Martine.

Sweine king of Denmarke maried earle Godwins widow, 6,b 20, Reported to intend an inuaſion of England, 14,a 40. Sendeth his ſonnes into England for recouerie of his right, 6,b 50

Sweting ſickeneſſe, 794, a 60 The maner thereof, 765,b 60 And the remedie therefore, 764

764.a 10. Speedie and deadlie, 844.a 50. Whereof died both mariners and others, 906, a 60.b 10. And remedie againſt it, 1066,a 60.b 20

Synod called by the archbiſhop of Canturburie, 256. a 30. Held by Anſelme, preſent therat Henrie the fourth with earles and barons, 34, b 10. At Dunſtable, 182.a 40. At Lambeth, 280.b 30. At London, 95. b 50. 58. b 40. 224.a 40, 11, b 60. At Northampton, 271.a 60. At Oxford, 203 b 40. At Reading, 280.a 10. Of biſhops held at weſtminſter, 30. a 60. At winchester and what was there decreed, 8.b 60. At windſore about the archbiſhops primaſie, 9. a 10. b 10. At yorke by the archbiſhop of Canturburie. 148.a 10. ¶ See Aſſemblie and Councell.

T.

Tailors their malapertneſſe at the election of an alderman. 623. a 40. They and the Goldſmiths of London togither by the eares, 274. a 50. They had ſix kings of England brethren of their companie, 790.b 60

Talbot william defendeth Hereford in wales, 48. b 60

Talbot knight with his ſix ſcore archers, 770, b 30.

Talbot lord ſaileth into France 608. b 60. 609.a 10. A valiant capteine. 597.b 10. Ranſomed by exchange, 606.b 30. Created erle of Shrewesburie, 623. b 10 ¶ See Erle.

Tallage of an eight thouſand marks leuied vpon the Iews, 252. a 10

Tame lord of Tame his gentle hart to the ladie Eliſabeth, 1156, a 10. 20. 50

Tartas beſieged, 619. b 60

Tax or tribute leuied on the cōmons by duke william, 8. b 50 Leuied throughout the relme, 144. a 20. Of fiue ſhillings of euerie plough land, 155. a 60 Leuied of the thirteenth part of euerie mans goods, 170. b 40. Leuied of an hundred thouſand pounds, 174. b 60.

Taxes and ſubſidies raiſed in duke williams time, 5. b 10. Greeuous of D. william vpon the Engliſh, 8. a 30. ¶ See Lone, Subſidie, and Toll.

Teemen toll, or Theyme toll, ¶ See Subſidie.

Teeth, men borne with fewer than in times paſt, 379. b 50.

Tempeſts that did much hurt, 473. a 20. 204. b 20. 480. b 50. 60. 793. a 60. b 10. Griſlie and hideous 166. a 60. The like neuer ſeene procuring peace, 393, b 60. That made great waſte, 395. a 40. That ſtroke manie high buildings. 252. a a 50, wonderfull, 164. a 40. Moſt terrible with a ſtinke, 19. a 60. Of wind and raine verie hideous, 60. a 10. That did exceeding much hurt: note, 254. a 30. Verie ſore, & that laſted ſixteene houres, 239. a 30. Boiſterous vpon the ſeas, 1136. b 30. 40. That ſcattered Richard the firſt his ſhips ſailing into the holie land, 127. a 60. 423. a 60. &c. Generall, 424. a 20. By ſea and land dooing harme in moſt ſhires of England, 1222, b 10, &c. 1223. 1224. a 10, &c. Great on Eaſter daie in the morning, 282, b 30. Sore of lightening and thunder, &c. 82. a 60. b 10. 46. a 30. 231. a 10. Of raine and thunder with an eclipſe: note, 372, a 30. Few the like: note, 244, b 20. Verie wonderfull: note, 1141. a 30. That did much hurt 1185 a 10. 20. In December, 260. b 30. At Chelmesford, 1208. b 30. Great in Leiceſter towne: note, 1198. b 40. Strange at London, 211. b 40. By lightening and thunder, with ſore hurt doone, 1205. b 10. In Northfolke ſtrange, vehement and hurtfull: note, 1348. b 20. In Richmondſhire 1270. a 20. In Suffolke that did much hurt: note, 1270, b 40. ¶ See wind.

Temple gatehouſe newlie builded, 918. a 10.

Templers, lands belonging to them, 335. a 40. Three knights of this order in the French kings diſpleaſure, 68 b 60. ¶ See knights.

Temptation great with large offers, 747. b 10. Preuaileth euen to violent death: note, 1092. b 10. 30. 40. ¶ See Murther.

Tenants rebell againſt their landlord the earle of wincheſter: note, 240. b 10

Tenths leuied for Henrie the ſeconds behoofe, 111, b 60. Three granted, 402. a 60. Of ſpirituall mens liuings for the ſpace of three yeares, 405. a 20. For three yeares ſpace granted of the clergie vnto Henrie the third, 248, a 40. Granted vnto king Henrie by the cleargie, 213. a 10. Of the ſpiritualtie granted to the pope, 211. a 10. Of all the mooueables in England, wales and Ireland, required by the pope, 210. b 60. Of eccleſiaſticall liuings granted to Edward the ſecond by the pope, 325. a 50. Demanded of the cleargie by Henrie the third, 246. b 40. To the pope withſtood by the earle of Cheſter, 211. a 50. They and firſt frutes reſtored to the crowne, 1180. b 10. ¶ See Subſidie.

Terme kept at Hereford caſtell, 1206. a 40. 1348. b 40. Begun at Oxford and adiorned to weſtminſter, 844. b 60. Adiourned, 1260. a 10. Adiorned bicauſe of the plague, 1211, b 60

Termes foure yearlie kept by whome inſtituted, 8. a 50

Terrouan woone by force by the Engliſh, 374. b 60

Terwin beſieged, 817, b 20. By the Engliſh, Henrie the eight being preſent, 821. all. Sore beaten with the Engliſh ordinance, 819, a 50. Yeelded vp to Henrie the eight, the citizens ſworne vnto him, it is burnt and ſpoiled, 822, b 10. 40. 50.

Teſtament new tranſlated into Engliſh, 913. b 60. ¶ See Goſpell.

Teukeſburie field, 687, b 60.

Teuther with others taken and beheaded, 660. a 30, ¶ See Mariage.

Thames froſen ouer, 1208. a 60 Exceedinglie: note, 274. a 60. 263. b 60. 58. a 60. And not paſſable, 942. b 20. Ships and veſſels could not come vp the riuer, 612. a 60. Roſe with an high tide, 220. a 30. Swolne with high ſpring tides, &c: note, 26. b 10. So high that weſtminſter hall was on a floud, 1271. b 50 Ouerfloweth and dooth much hurt, 274. b 10. Drowneth all the countrie for the ſpace of ſix miles about Lambeth, 231. a 10. Paſſable from London bridge to the Tower, it was ſo ſhallow, 38. a 40. 50. The water thereof conuicted ouer ſaint Magnus ſteeple, 1348, b 50. ¶ See Tides.

Thankfulnes for old ſeruice, 203 a 40. Of H. the eight to his good militarie ſeruitors. 829. b 50. Of queene Eliſabeth vnto hir ſubiects, &c: note, 1566. b 40 &c.

Theater erected for the duke of Alanſon to ſtand vpon and ſhew himſelfe to the people, 1334 a 50

Theefe that robbed pilgrims taken and hanged, 123. a 20. ¶ See Murtherer, Oſulfe.

Theeues and robbers verie few or none in England in duke williams time: note, 15. b 40. An ordinance againſt them, 248. a 20. Notable, and their whole neſt broken, 241. b 20. Appointed to be hanged, 45. b 10. They and murtherers ſaued by their books and committed to the biſhops cuſtodie, 791. b 10. Sacrilegious ſeuerelie executed, 704. b 50

Theobald. ¶ See Erle.

Thermes. ¶ See Monſieur.

Thetford, a biſhops ſee remooued to Norwich, 26. a 50.

Thomas archbiſhop of yorke, whie depriued, 9. a 60. A canon of Baieux the fiue and twentith archbiſhop of yorke, 9. a 20. Depriued of his croſier and ring, ibid.

Threſhers maſking: note, 214. b 20

Threatning procureth ſubmiſſion: note, 21. b 60

Throckmorton ſir Nicholas knight arriueth at Newhauen, 1199. b 40. Arreigned of high treaſon, the whole manner thereof, with his purgations: note, 1104. b 10. &c, 1105. to 1117. Eight of his iurie appeare in the ſtar chamber, hard iudgement againſt them, 1121. b 40. Extreamelie dealt withall, b 60. 1122. a 10. Fine of his iurie releaſed, 1126. b 40

Throckmorton Francis eſquire, ſome great ſecrets betweene the Scotiſh queene and him, 1373. a 10. What mooued him to denie his confeſſions at his arreignement, 30. His letter of ſubmiſſion to queene Eliſabeth 60. With a declaration of all his practiſes treaſonable againſt hir, b 50. 60. 1374. a 10, &c. Surpriſed and put to a narrow ſhift, 1372. a 40. What mind he caried towards queene Eliſabeth, b 60. His treaſons communicable to the erle of Northumberland, 1406. all. Arreigned and condemned of high treaſon, the whole declaration thereof, with the manner of proceeding againſt him, 1370. a 40. 50. 60. &c. 1371. &c, to 1375

Throckmorton Iohn of Norwich a conſpirator, executed as a traitor, 1222. a 10. ¶ See Traitors.

Throng, certeine thruſt to death on London bridge, 487. b 10. ¶ See Blackwell, Iuſts, and Paris garden.

Thunder in winter, 249. a 40. 46. a 30. With lightening in December, 220. a 40. 1206. a 40. At Chriſtmas, and on Chriſtmas daie, 243. b 10. 220. a 60. Verie terrible and fearefull: note, 114. a 60. That made men amazed, 39. b 10. For the ſpace of fifteene daies togither, 236. a 50. 216. b 10. With an earthquake, 217 b 50. Generall and hurtfull, 204. b 20. With woonder, 284. a 50. ¶ See Tempeſt and wind.

Thurſtan abbat of Glaſtenburie, and the monks of that houſe at ſtrife, and whie, a lewd man: note, 13. b 30. Depoſed, returneth into Normandie, 13. b 40. Buieth his place againe for fiue hundred pounds, 13. b 60. Refuſeth to obeie king Henrie the ſeconds pleaſure, 38. b 10

Tiberio an Italian, his valiantneſſe, 965. b 20

Tiburne, called The elmes in Edward the thirds time, 349 a 60.

Tichborne and his fellow traitors. ¶ See Babington.

Tides two in one houre, 1260. a 10. ¶ See Flouds, Raine, Sea, and Thames.

Tiler beginner of the rebellion in Dertford in Kent: note, 429. b 20. &c. His proceedings, 430 &c. A verie craftie fellow, his proud ſawcineſſe, he is thruſt through and ſlaine, 432. a 30. b 10. 40.

Tilneie. ¶ See Tichborne.

Tilt roiall, with proper deuiſes thereat, 830. a 60. ¶ See Iuſts.

Tindall burned, his painfulnes in writing and tranſlating, 939. b 50. 60. ¶ See Teſtament new.

Tirrell ſir walter killeth william Rufus with an arrow in hunting, by chance: note, 26. b 30

Tirrell knight deſcribed, 734. b 60. He receiueth the keies of the Tower, purpoſeth to deſtroie the two princes, diſpatcheth the action, ſheweth the whole maner thereof to Richard the third, the murther confeſſed, he is beheaded for treaſon, 735. all.

Tithes none to be giuen but to the church, 30. b 40. ¶ See Tenths and Clergie.

Tokens foreſhewing wolſeis ruine and fall, 915. a 50. b 10. Of victorie: note, 660, a 20. Of things falling out in euent, 793. b 10. Of imminent miſfortune to the lord Haſtings, 723. a 40. 50. 60. &c. Prodigious: note, 655, b 10 ¶ See Signs and woonders.

Toles of the Hound: note, 928. a 60. ¶ See Tax.

Tonque caſtell taken by the Engliſh, 559. a 50

Torments extreme, 445. a 60

Tornaie furniſhed with a ſtrong power of men, beſieged, the great number of people at the ſiege thereof, 359. a 50. 60. b 10. Beſieged by the emperor Charles his forces, deliuered to him 871. a 10. Summoned by Garter king at armes, the prouoſts words to the diſtreſſed townſmen, it is beſieged, 823. b 10. 20. 60. On all ſides beſieged, and the prouoſt with eleuen more ſubmit themſelues, and yeeld vp the citie to Henrie the eight, 824. a 10, &c. Articles of agreement betwixt the kings of England and France for the deliuerie therof to the French &c: note, 848. b 10, &. The maner how it was deliuered to to the French king,849.b 50 A caſtell builded there by Henrie the eight, 838.b 40

Townes in England burnt by the Frenchmen,417.b 60. In old time how fortified, 443 b 30. In France taken by the earle of Derbie, 368.b 50

Tower on London bridge taken downe, 1270.a 30. Newlie builded, 1271.a 10

Towre of London new walled about by William Rufus, 23? a 60. Beſieged,54.a 10. Deliuered to the earle of March, 654.b 60. Yeelded vp to Lewis the French kings ſonne, 192.b 20. At the Londoners commandement, 338.b 60

Traile baſton, 312.b 60. ¶ See Inquiſition.

Traitor Summeruile his miſerable and deſperat death, 1366.a 20. Carter executed at Tiborne, 1357.a 40. Elks for counterfeiting the queenes ſignet manuell, 1363. Maine executed for deniyng the [illegible] ſupremaſie,1271.a 10. Nelſon and Sherwood executed for deniyng the queenes ſupremaſie,1271.a 50. Paine executed at Tiborne, 1344.a 40 Thomas Woodhouſe preeſt executed, 1258.b 60

Traitors, Barneſt, Maher, and Rolfe executed,1327.b 60 Fen, Haddocke, Munden, Nutter, and Somerford executed at Tiborne, 1369.a 10, Arden & Sommeruile executed for treaſon, 1356.a 50 Slade and Bodie executed, 1356.a 10. Babington, Ballard, to the number of foureteene, their wonderfull conſpiracie and ſharpe execution: note, 1563,&c.

Traitors to the crowne proclamed,143.b 10. King Henries nobles, 217.a 10. Care not for their liues, ſo they may atchiue the end of their treaſons: note, 223. a 40. 50. Scholaſticall: note, 1367.a 40 &c. Six queſtions to trie them from ſcholers,1368.a 10 &c. Manie though they haue no armor nor weapon: note, 1367.b 40.50. Their rebels, and fugitiues practiſes to execute pope Pius bulles againſt queene Eliſabeth, 1359.b 10. Forren continue ſending of perſons to moue ſedition in the realme,1360.a 40. Fiue, all of one linage executed,943.b 50. Theſe rebels what ignominious ends they come to 782.b 20. Put to flight and proclamed,650.b 20.50. Atteinted,executed,652.a 10,&c. Their heads remoued from the tower on London bridge, & ſet on the gate at the bridge foot, 1270. a 30. For a time may eſcape, but at length come to the gallows,223.b 60,224.a 10. Executed, wherein note the ancient kind of puniſhment,230.b 20. Executed for deniyng the queenes ſupremaſie, 1322.a 30. A declaration of queene Eliſabeths commiſſioners their fauourable dealing for their examining, 1357.a 60,&c. 1358. to 1368 Executed in Lincolnſhire and Yorkſhire, 767. b 40. 50. ¶ See Preeſts ſeminarie, Fugitiues, Babington, Felton, and Storie.

Trauelling commended and diſcommended as neceſſarie and vnneceſſarie, 1568.b 50,&c.

Treport ſuburbs ſet on fire by the Engliſh, 879.a 30

Trenchuile lord William, a man of great power, 67.b 60

Trent riuer where duke William pitched his tents againſt the Danes 7. a 40. Hoiſed out of the chanell with a tempeſt,1142.a 40. Dried vp for the ſpace of a mile, 37 a 40. ¶ See Chanell.

Treſham knight made lord of ſaint Iohns of Ieruſalem, 1134.b 60

Treſham William. ¶ See Iuſts triumphant.

Treſilian, chiefe iuſtice deſcried by his owne man & executed at Tiborne, 463.b 50

Treſon againſt king Henrie the fourth to haue deſtroied him in his bed: note,519.b 20. Againſt Edward the ſecond the traitor executed:note,333.334 Againſt Henrie the third by a clerke of Oxford,223.a 40. Of Thomas Becket, 69.b 10. Of noble men iuſtlie puniſhed, 583.b 10.&c. Of a Saracen againſt prince Edward,275.a 20. Laid to the duke of Aumerle, and how he challenged it,513.a 60. Of ſir Thomas Turberuile, & he executed,295.b 40. Of a meſſenger diſcloſing the ſecrets of Edward the firſts letters, 299. b 60,300.a 10. Of Foulks de Brent how puniſhed, 208. a 20. Of certeine Iewes, and how reuenged,167.a 60. Notable of Francis Throckmorton,ſet downe in full diſcourſe with the maner of proceeding againſt him: note,1370. a 50 60,&c. 1371. to 1375. Notorious of Parrie to haue murthered queene Eliſabeth ſet downe at large: note, 1382.a 50,&c. to 1395. Of erle Perſie of Northumberland ſummarilie ſet downe: note, and vnto what foule end he came, 1404.b 40.1405.&c. to 1419, a 10. Of the duke of Buckingham. ¶ See Duke. Of nobles for the which they were apprehended, 548.b 10. And executed,b 40. Of erle Iohn moued in the parlement, and iudgement denounced againſt him,142. b 60. Laid vnto the archbiſhop of Canturburies charge by the ſpeaker in parlement,490. b 40. Laid to the duke of Northfolke by the duke of Hereford, 493.b 10. Laid to the duke of Lancaſter,he cleared,and the accuſer extremelie tormented, 445.b 40,&c. In great men,and they executed: note, 946.a 20. &c. 50. Practiſed againſt the erle of Richmond, but preuented, 747.a 60.b 10,&c.60. Of the citizens that loſt Mens,598.a 60. Laid to the biſhop of Wincheſter,with his anſwers, 591.a 60.b 60. Wherewith the dukes of Yorke and Summerſet mutuallie charge each other,639.a 50, 60. Againſt the duke of Clarence, 580, a 10. He is ſlaine, a 30. Laid to the nobles charge by king Iohn,169.a 30. Laid to ones charge, and pledges ſent to and fro to follow the ſute,143.a 20. Of two ſorts puniſhed with death: note, 1227. b 60. Purpoſed at a maſke againſt Henrie the fourth his perſon, 515.b 50. In letters written by ſir Ralfe Ferrers to certeine French lords, arreſted,releaſed,428.a 60.b 10. For miſgouerning the king and realme,and the parties executed,498.b 60. Tried by a combat: note, 424, b 10, &c. 425. a 10,&c. Suſpected among the nobles, and inquiſition for the ſame. 457.b 20. Intended and preuented, 295 a 30. Will euer come to light by one meane or other, 333.b 10. It and not religion the cauſe of the popes fauorers execution,prooued: note, 1366.b 10,&c. 1368.a 40,&c. The fauorers thereof puniſhed,951 a 50.60. Puniſhed in honorable perſonages of both ſex,703 b 10. To defraud ſouldiors of their wages, 411.b 10. Puniſhed by death, though diſcloſed,11.a 60. It and execution, 945.a 10.b 10.951.b 30.60. Of two perſons two waies: note,918.a 10.313.b 40.598.a 60.b 40. Vpon clergie men, 520. a 10,&c. Moſt ſeuerelie puniſhed,1575.b 60,&c. ¶ See Chartres, Conſpiracie, Elenor Cobham, Euteux, Noble men, Paris, Parrie, Preeſts ſeminarie, Rebellion, Rone caſtell, Scotiſh king Iames, Serlo, Traitors, and Woolſie.

Treſuror lord ſitteth aboue the lord maior at the ſargeants feaſt, 667.b 20.

Treſurors of England from the firſt to the laſt ſet downe in a collection,1238. a 1239. vnto 1257.a 10. ¶ See Cicill.

Treſure great of Richard king of Almaine,254.b 20. Of Richard the firſt where it laie, and deliuered to king Iohn, 157. a 20. Of Henrie the ſecond found at Saliſburie,118. a 20. ¶ See Officers.

Tribute of ox hides, 96. b 50 Of twelue penſe for euerie horſſe or yoke of oxen,98.b 10 Of three thouſand marks by yeare releaſed,32.a 50. Leuied throughout all England, and how: note, 13.a 60 b 10. Denied vnto the pope with oths and proteſtations 236 a 60. To be paid vnto the pope moued for the mainteenance of his eſtate, 208. a 40. Of the French king to king Edward for peace and amitie: note, 700.b 10,&c. For Tholouſe, 85.a 30. ¶ See Exactions, Subſidies, Taxes, Tenths, and Toll.

Triuet knight ſlaine with a fall from his horſſe, 465.b 50

Triumphs of the Romans excelled all their other ſhews, 1333.a 20. ¶ See Pagents.

Triuulſe a noble ſeruitor in the French affaires, 850.b 60

Trollop forſaketh the rebellious lords his eſtimation,650.a 60

Truce for three yeares betwixt ſix kings,466.a 40. Betwixt England and France, 445.a 50. 230.b 10. For fiue yeares, 231. Treated 466.a 10. For three yeares, 214.a 50. Generall,198.b 10. For three years expired,219.a 10. For fortie daies,892. a 60. For a moneth, 304 b 60. For eighteene moneths, 624. b 10. For ſix yeares, 607. a 60. For two yeares, 391 a 40.381 a 60. 378. a 50. 183. b 20. For three yeares, 364.b 30.40 with the conditions of the ſame,50 60.365.a 10. For a yeare at the mediation of a woman,360.a 30. 409. b 10. 93. b 50. Conditionall for two yeares,170.a 60. For foure yeares, 480 b 40. For fiftie daies, 160. a 40.154.b 50. For fiue yeares, 155,a 10. For thirtie yeares, 486 b 50. Betwixt England and Scotland,875.b 30. 439.a 10 At requeſt of the French king 311.a 60. 352.a 10.405.a 30. 89.a 60. With a treatie of alliance, 747. a 20. For ſeuen yeares,767.b 60. 668.b 60. After much miſchiefe and trouble, 334. b 30. Betwixt the emperor Charles and the gouernors of France, 887 b 60. Betwixt Henrie the fift and the duke of Burgogne, 558 a 10. Betwixt Henrie the fift and the dutcheſſe of Burgogne, 615. a 30. Betwixt Henrie the fift and the duke of Britaine,561.a 50.60 Betwixt Henrie the eight and ſundrie forren princes, 843.a 20. Betwixt the Engliſh and the Britons for ſix daies,814.b 60. Prolonged for a yeare, 477.b 10. Tripartite,572.a 40 Taken for a moneth,68.a 40. The benefits inſuing from the ſame, 906.a 60. ¶ See Legue and Peace.

Truſt in treſon: note, 743 b 50.744.a 52. ¶ See Treſon.

Truth purchaſeth hatred,513.b 60

Tunſtall, doctor,maiſter of the rolles, 849. a 10. Made biſhop of Durham, 909.b 50. Made biſhop of London,872. a 10. His oration and ſermon in the parlement houſe, 876.a 20. Deſcribed and commended,his armes, the offices he bare. 1185.b 30.40.50.60. Buildings by him founded, 1186.a 10. Depriued of his biſhoprike,30. Reſtored,40. His death,50. He and Budeus compared, b 20

Turke is mortallie hated of the pope.847 a 10,&c. His victories againſt the Soldane, his ambition hath no bounds 846,a 60.b 10,&c.

Turks warred againſt by the earle of Flanders and others, 164.a 20. At the ſiege of Vienna how manie ſlaine, 913.b 40. Ouerthrowne and vanquiſhed by the chriſtians,principall men ſlaine, 1226.b 40. 60. 1227. a 10, &c. ¶ See Ottoman, Rhodes, Saracens, Solyman.

Turketillus guider of the Daniſh armie againſt the Normans. 7.b 40

Turnaments. ¶ See Charter, and Turnies.

Turnham Stephan committed to priſon. 117.a 20

Turnies, wherein earle Marſhall of Penbroke was hurt and died,228.b 60. Exerciſed for the training vp of ſouldiors, 145.b 60, At Elie betwixt the ſoutherne and northerne men,221.b 60. ¶ See Iuſts.

Tweed a troubleſome and dangerous ſtreame. 992.a 10

Tyrannie of duke William againſt the Engliſh: note, 8.a 10,40,15.b 30. Of Richard the ſecond,489.a 10,&c. ¶ See Crueltie, and William duke of Normandie.

Tyrant. ¶ See Richard the third, or Duke of Gloceſter.

Tyrants eſtate vnquiet: note, 735.b 50

V.

Vagabonds and roges by proclamation to auoid the citie of London,1121.b 10.20. Increaſed by rebellions, 1050. a 40. ¶ See Roges.

Valdois profeſſion, their examination, nation, proteſtation, ſtoned to death, 68. 60.b 10. ¶ See Dutchmen.

Valiantneſſe and manhood, 534 a 40,&c. Of king Stephan, 53.a 60
Vandement beſieged 606.b 50
Vandoſme taken by king Henrie, 90,b 10
Vannes beſieged by king Edward the third, 361.a 40
Variance betweene the lord chamberleine and the ladie Eliſabeths ſeruants, 1154.b 50. Betweene one John Courtneie and Philip Duffeld, 1021.a 10. Betwixt the lords and the Spenſers, and whie, 325,b 50. 326.327: note all. Betwixt the ſtudents of Oxford, 260. b 40. Betwixt the earle of Penbroke and others, 257. b 30. Betweene the duke of Lancaſter and the earle of Arundell, 481. a 10. Betweene the lord Latimer, and two eſquires and to what a bloudie iſſue it grew, 420. b 10,&c. Betwixt the biſhop of Durham and earle Patrike, 161. a 10. Betweene ſir John Hollands ſeruants, and the lord Richard Stafford, 447. a 40. Verie roiallie debated: note, 459. b 30. 40. 50. Betwixt the ſcholers of Oxford, 466. a 30. Betwixt the Londoners and the conſtable of the Towre, 263.b 60. Betwixt Henrie the third and the earle of Penbroke, 223. b 20. Betweene the two kings of England and France, 872. a 60. b 10. Betweene the Lord Paine Tiptoſt and Rice ap Meridoc, 283. b 60. Betweene the biſhop of Elie and the ladie wake, 392. a 10. ¶ See Archbiſhop, Contention, Debate Diſcord and Strife.
Veere Henrie conſtable of Giſors, 110,b 10
Veere brother to the earle of Oxford, ſlaine, 772. b 10. ¶ See Erle Veere of Oxford.
Venlow beſieged by the Engliſh, 810,b 40
Vernueill beſieged and obteined by the French, 88 a 10.60. Gotten from the Engliſh by crediting a lie, 588.a 60
Vernon ſir warren baron of Shipbroke, 20,a 30
Victorie of the Engliſh againſt the French at the battell of Agincourt, their reioiſing: note, 555.a 20,&c. Againſt the Turks by the Chriſtians: note, 1226. b 40. 60. 1227, a 10,&c. Of king John againſt his rebels, 188. a 40. Of the Engliſh at the battell of Sluiſe, 358. b 10. Bloudie gotten by the Frenchmen, 294 b 10. Againſt the Iriſh and others in Ireland, 1314. b 40. Good of them of Calis againſt the French king, 448.a 30.40, &c. Of the Engliſh nauie againſt the Flemiſh fleet, 454. b 10. Of the Engliſh againſt Scots ſignified with a great ſhout, 988. b 50. Againſt rebels, and what is to be doone after the ſame, 1023. b 60. 1024. a 10. Of the Engliſh againſt the French: note, 997.a 60.b 10,&c. what is to be doone after the obteinment thereof, 760. Conſiſteth not in multitude but in manlineſſe, 758.b 10. Rich and honourable againſt the French, 201.b 10. what is to be doone after the getting thereof, 885. b 30. Obteined, and God praiſed: note, 153. b 10. without bloudſhed, 33.a 60. Uſed with rigor feared: note, 167.a 10. To whome the ſame is to be aſcribed: note, 373. a 10. what is to be doone after the obteinment thereof, 767.b 30. The Spaniſh manner of thankſgiuing after the getting thereof, 773. a 60. Generall proceſſions after it, 589,b 50. Three within a ſhort time falling to the Engliſh, 566. b 10. Of Edward the ſixt againſt the Scots, 1161. b 10. ¶ See Battell, Crueltie, and warre.
Vinteſine (a kind of collection) gotten in Ireland for the pope, 226.a 40
Virginia an Engliſh colonie. ¶ See Raleigh.
Viſion of Richard archbiſhop of Canturburie, 108,a 40. Of a Jew become a Chriſtian, 27. a 50. Strange appearing to Henrie the ſecond, 83. a 10. Of diuerſe likeneſſes, 484. b 10. ¶ See Dreames.
Viſions of admonition are to be eſteemed, 83.b 10
Vittels plentie ſold good cheape, 778. b 10. ¶ See Derth.
Vlſter in Ireland a kingdome, 100. a 30.
Vmfreuill knight, his exploits in Scotland, 536.b 10. Surnamed Mendmarket: note, 536. b 10
Vniuerſitie college in Oxford, when founded, 13. a 50. ¶ See Cambridge & Oxford.
Vnthankefulnes noted in earle Stephan, 43.a 10,20. Of Gaſton de Bierne, 240. a 20.
Voiage venturous of ſir Hugh willoughbie, to the loſſe of his owne and his peoples liues, 1083, a 60. Of ſir Francis Drake atchiued with extraordinarie honor and ſucceſſe: note, 1567. a 50. &c. ¶ See Frobiſher, Gilbert, Greenfield, Raleigh, Sebaſtian.
Vow inuiolablie kept: note 793 a 50. Profeſſed of a nun broken, 29. a 10. Of chaſtitie broken: note, 222. b 30. Of king Henrie the firſt whereof the pope offereth to diſcharge him, 40. b 50. Of Parrie the traitor to murther queene Eliſabeth, 1385. b 30. And of other traitors to the ſame end: note, 1583, a 40. Of the Scots noiſome to themſelues: note, 988.a 40.
Vowes abſolued, 257. b 60. ¶ See Oth and Promiſe.
Vrſwike, king Henrie the ſeauenths chapleine ambaſſadour into France, 768.a 30,&c.
Vſurie for the lone of monie forbidden: note. 1062.a 60. Of the Jewes the cauſe of hating & killing them: note, 122. all.
Vſurers goods ſeized. 145. b 10. Came from Rome into England vnder the name of merchants: note, 211.a 40. Called Caurſini: note, 211. a 50. Excommunicated, but to no purpoſe, 219. b 10. Accuſed & committed to priſon, 244.a 60
Vſurpation: note the whole ſtorie of Richard the third, and Edward the fiſt: hath no good end. ¶ See Bruſe, 314, 315, 316. Commeth to an euill end, 323.a 60.

W.

WAinſleet. ¶ See Paten.
wales inuaded by king william Rufus, and waſted, 22. b 10. Subdued by duke william, 12. a 20. Diuided into ſhires, 282.a 40. The marches thereof ſore impoueriſhed, 257.a 40 walden his variable fortune: note, 532.a 10 walon lord came to ſerue Henrie the eight, 818.b 60 wallop knight his martiall acts in Normandie, 831. b 40 walkheime biſhop of wincheſter 9. a 20 walkeher biſhop of Durham had the whole rule of Northumberland, 13. a 40. A furtherer of monaſteries to be erected, 11.a 20. Slaine by the Northumbers, & whie: note, 12.b 20 walteof ſonne to Siward, 5.a 10 Valiant, reconciled into the kings fauor, 7.a 50. Earle of Northumberland, Northhampton and Huntington, 11 b 20. Maried duke williams neece, and his iſſue, 11. b 10. He and Goſpatrike depriued, 10,b 50. Beheaded as a rebell though he diſcloſed the ſame: note, 11.a 60. Deſcribed, and where he was buried. 11.b 10 walter biſhop of Hereford ſubmitteth himſelfe to duke william, 1,a 50.
walter, knight. ¶ See Mildmaie, and Raleigh.
warre betweene two brethren, kings ſonnes, 106. a 50. In Normandie betwixt king Rufus and his brother Robert, 21,a 50.60. Of barons againſt king John: note, 185.b 10,&c. Proclamed againſt England by the king of Scots, 518.b 10. Prepared againſt France, 812. a 60. Betwixt England and France, 290. a 60. b 20. Proclamed betwixt England and France, 353.a 10. Proſecuted with egerneſſe, 354,355 Vpon a light occaſion, 39. b 20. Renewed, 229.a 20. Betweene diuerſe nations in one yeare ended, 1192.b 60. Ciuill and the miſerie of England then, 60.b 60. Maketh no difference of time: note, 1188. b 30. &c. Certeine ordinances deuiſed for that time, 125. a 40 The frutes thereof, 610. b 10. Forren better than ſedition at home, 1054.b 50. Open not ſo ill as ciuill, the occaſion of manie great inconueniences, 729. a 10. 20. Cannot be mainteined without monie. ¶ See Armie, Battell, Beneuolence, Frenchmen, France, Monie, Munition, Scots, & Subſidie.
warbecke. ¶ See Perkin warbecke.
ward Richard ¶ See Iuſts Triumphant. wards. ¶ See London.
warham doctor of lawes, the ſum of his ſpeach to the archduke of Burgognie, 777.b 10
warke caſtell burned by the Scots, 444.b 60 warlwaſt william taketh from Anſelme all that he had: note, 26.a 10 warning of amendment of life, 44. b 10. Reiected both by wonders and dreames, and teſted at, 26.b 10.20. Neglected cauſe of inconuenience: note, 83.a 10.20.30.40. Of a French preeſt giuen to Richard the firſt: note, 156.b 10 ¶ See Viſions.
warren. ¶ See Erle
warwike caſtell taken and raſed, 267.a 50.60
waſte. ¶ See Northcountrie. wat Tiler. ¶ See Tiler.
watch appointed to be kept by night in cities and burrowes, 248. a 10. It and ward from foure till ſix, and from ſix till foure, 327. b 10. The miſchiefe that groweth by the negligence of them, 597. b 60. In ſleepe what aduantage to the enimie, 380. a 60. Found ſleeping iuſtlie ſerued, 819. b 20. At Midſummer diſcontinued, 1062. b 10. ¶ See Midſummer.
water conueied from out the Thames by pipes into ſeuerall houſes, 1348.b 50. ¶ See Tides and Thames.
waters executed for Treaſon, 313. b 40. ¶ See Traitors.
waterquake, 440. b 50. 1311. a 50.439. b 40
wedneſdaie. 818. b 20. ¶ See Drie.
wrights and meaſures, 152,b 10 Reformed after one ſtandard. 209,b 60 welland lord cheefe iuſtice of the kings bench, his ſtorie, 284. b 40 well. ¶ See Founteine.
welſhmen vnder their kings, waſte Hereford, 5. a 20. Cruellie handled in their ouerthrow, 23.a 50. Inuaded by william Rufus, flie into the woods, 23. a 10. Vanquiſhed at Brecknocke by william Rufus, 20. b 40. Inuade England, 21.b 20. They dare not fight in open field, but worke all vpon aduantage, 22. a 20. Preuaile greatlie againſt the Engliſh, 217. Beſieged the caſtell of Montgomerie, 210. a 60. They are diſcomfited, b 10,&c. Put to flight, 214 a 10. Sent ouer to the aid of the earle of Britaine, 219. a 10 warre againſt the lord Mortimers tenants, 263. b 50. Subiect to the Engliſh laws, 244. a 50. Take caſtels, 329. 10. waſtfull without remorſe, 351. b 20. Appointed to Iaques Arteueld for a gard againſt Gerard Deniſe, 368. a 20. Moleſt the Engliſh ſubiects, 524. a 20. Rebell by the ſetting on of Owen Glendouer, 518. a 60. waſte Cheſhire 56. b 40. Vp in armes, they ſue for peace to Henrie the firſt, 42. a 20.30. Fickle and by what meanes allured to Henrie the firſts ſide, 30. a 60. Moue rebellion, diſcomfited, and puniſhed, 176. a 30. Not well delt withall, 95. b 30. Their good ſeruice againſt the French, 113. a 10. Slaie the ſhiriffe of Gloceſterſhire, 106. a 20. Their good ſeruice, 93. b 20. Make war on the Engliſh marches, ſeuerelie puniſhed, 73. b 10. Vanquiſhed and ſlaine, 154. b 20. win Cardigan, 73. b 40. Rebell, inuaded & ſubdued, 66. b 60,&c Their valiancie againſt the French, 874. b 20. Make a riot at Calis, 879. b 10. Diſcomfited by the Northerne men, 672. b 20. Inuade the Engliſh marches, 37. b 60. Slaine and diſcomfited by Henrie the firſt, on all hands: note, 38. a 10. Subdued. 203. a 60. Flie, 270 a 60. Submit themſelues, 67. a 30. Slaine, 673. b 10. Drowned within an ambuſh: note, 236. a 60. welſhwomens villanie againſt the Engliſh dead corpſes, 520 a 60. Their beaſtlie and barbarous crueltie vpon the dead carcaſes carcaſes of the Engliſh, 528. a 30. ¶ See Fraie, and Lewin.

Wentworth lord deputie of Calis ſendeth to the French to demand parlee, 1135. b 50. Taken priſoner, 1136 a 50. Arreigned and acquited, 1184. a 50

Weſtminſter ſpoiled by ſoldiors, 273. b 20. The palace of the king burned 15. b 60. The new church there begun, 202. b 10. Inlarged and repared, 237, a 40. Of a cruell murther there committed, 420. b 10. 60. The ſanctuarie confirmed by parlement 421. b 60 The hall founded: note, 23. a 60. b 10. Ouerflowne with waters: note, 1129. b 50. Full of water and not to be gotten into but on horſſebacke, 231. a 10. Where botes might haue beene rowed vp and downe, 220. a 40. The new worke there begun, 282, b 60. A new houſe made within the palace for the arreignment of the lords, 490. b 20

Weſell in Cleueland a free towne note, 1144. a 40

Weſton doctor the duke of Suffolks ghoſtlie father, 1100, b 50. Againſt the ladie Eliſabeth, the lord maiors iudgement of him, 1101, b 40. 50. reſigneth the deanrie of Weſtminſter by compulſion, and is recompenſed, 1134, b 40

Wether intemperat by coniuring as was thought, 520. b 20. ¶ See Tempeſt.

Wharton lord Thomas deceaſeth, 1238. a 50

Wheat and other corne ſcarſe, with politike orders to redreſſe it for the poore peoples releefe: note, 1588. &c.

Whitegift Iohn. ¶ See Archbiſhop.

Whittington college erected, 540 a 50

White meates licenced to be eaten in Lent, and noblemen puniſhed for breaking the law, 960, a 10

Whoore the cauſe of a notorious and ſhamefull murther: note, 1062, b 40, &c. ¶ See Concubine, Shores wife, Spaniards, 1126, b 60

Whoordome reproued, and the reprouer taken in the deed dooing, 42. b 50. Strangelie puniſhed by the iuſt iudgement of God, 1353, a 60. b 10 It and murther go together, 953, a 10, 937, b 30, &c.

Whorlepooles taken in the Thames, 928. a 20

Wiat knight his inſurrection, his proclamation at Maidſtqne, he commeth to Rocheſter, meeteth with his adherents, cauſeth much trouble, 1093. b 10 30. 40. 50. 60. Soliciteth certeine gentlemen to adhere vnto him, an herald of armes ſent vnto him, the lord warden deſirous to be tempering againſt him, 1094, a 10. 40, &c. A proclamation that none ſhould keepe in his houſe anie of his faction, he is ſent to the Tower, hardlie delt withall at the lieutenants hands, the furniture of his bodie, 1099 a 60. b 10. Marcheth with his power and executeth feats of armes againſt the aduerſe parts, preuaileth againſt the lord Cobham, 1095. b 40. 50. 60. His requeſts, 1096. a 20. Marcheth to Detford Strand, ſuffereth his priſoners to go abrode vpon their word, commeth to Southworke, his deſperat attempt, he and his complices fall to conſultation, at his wits end, 1097, all. He marcheth to Kingſtone, commeth vnto the parke corner, and ſkirmiſheth with the queenes power, marcheth alongſt the wall of S. Iames toward London, ſubmitteth himſelfe to the queene, 1098, all. Arreigned, the effect of his indictment, he anſwereth not directlie to the queſtion guiltie or vnguiltie, his exhortation to loialtie, altereth his mind touching the mariage, his anſwers to diuerſe ſpeaking at his arreignment, 1103, all. His confeſſion, and execution, 1104. a 20. 60

Wicliffe a ſecular preeſt his concluſions, the cheefeſt articles that he preached, 411, b 40, &c. He and his fellowes mainteined by certeine lords, 412. a 10 His doctrine, 428. b 50. 440. a 30. Fauoured of the Londoners, 440. b 20. Mainteined by the learned, ſentence pronounced againſt his books 535. b 50. 60. Euill ſpoken of, and his followers reproched, 419. a 20

Wicliuiſts increaſe, 467. a 40. 486. a 20. Popes letter to Richard the ſecond againſt them, a 60. Bewraid by ſome of their owne ſect, 521. a 10. Wrote againſt the clergie, 481 b 60. They are complained of, they increaſe, the lords ſeeke that they might be ſurpriſed, 482. a 10. 40. 60. Richard the ſeconds commiſſion againſt them and their ſectaries, 483. a 50, &c. Excommunicated: note, 484. a 10, &c. ¶ See Pateſhull.

Widow without Aldgate murthered, 605. b 40. ¶ See Ieſt and Beneuolence.

Widowes prouided for and releeued by the charitie of Dauid Smith: note, 1375, b 50 60, 1376

Wie riuer, 5. a 20

Wife put awaie and taken againe, 44. a 40. Robbed by hir huſband and he hanged: note, 1561

Wilford the counterfet earle of Warwike, he is executed, 787, a 30 40

Wilford knight taken priſoner, 996. b 30

Wilfulneſſe in opinion of Thomas Becket, 77. b 20

William duke of Normandie, when he began his reigne, 1. a 10. Crownd king on Chriſtmas daie, 1. b 20. Sworne at his coronation, with the ſum of his oth, 1. b 30. Whie he refuſed to be crowned at archbiſhop Stigands hands, 1. b 20. Tooke an oth and hoſtages of the nobles and lords of England, 1. b 10. His conditions and qualities, 15. a 20. His deuiſe to diſburthen himſelfe of ſouldiours wages, 14. a 60. What he beareth to his armes, 15. a 10. His deſcent, 1. a 10. Vanquiſheth the Engliſh power, 1. a 10. And waſteth certeine countries, a 20. 30. Seizeth vpon the Engliſhmens lands, and renteth them out by the yeare, 8. a 40. His couetous dealing and exactions: note, 8. b 50. Maketh a lamentable waſte of the north countries, 7. b 40. 50. 60. Hateth the Engliſhmen more than euer he did before, 8. a 10. Subdueth certeine rebels that fled to Elie for defenſe, 10. a 40. 50. Glad to deale with the Danes by promiſes and faire proffers, 7. b 40. 50. Preſent at a ſynod, wherein note his malice againſt the Engliſh, 9. a 10. Saileth ouer ſea, and beſiegeth Doll caſtle in Britaine, 11. b 40. Pitcheth his tents and fighteth againſt the Danes, and putteth them to flight, 7. a 45. In a perplexitie and glad to creepe in fauour with the Engliſh: note, 10. a 10. His oth and promiſe, with his crueltie and abuſing of peace, 10. a 20. Goeth with an huge armie againſt Malcolme king of Scots, and why, 10. b 30. His iuſtice in reſtoring the right heire, 10. b 50. Taketh awaie from the Engliſh their armor, 6. a 40. Subdueth the rebels of Exceſter. 6. b 10. And Wales, 12. a 20. Goeth ouer into Normandie, leauing guides ouer England, 5. a 10. Forced to yeeld to the Kentiſhmens requeſt, 2. b 20. Hateth the Engliſh nobilitie euen in the time of peace, 6. a 20. His three ſonnes, their names and places of their birth, 6. a 60. His foure ſons, and what he bequeathed to them, 15. a 60. And fiue daughters, b 10. Returneth into England and waxeth rigorous againſt the Engliſh, 5. a 30. b 10. In poſſeſſion of London and his promiſed courteſie, 1. b 10. What ſtrangers came in with him at the conqueſt, their names, 2. b 40. His charter granted to the citie of London, 15, a 60. He is politike, painefull, and tyrannicall againſt the Engliſh, 6. a 10. Ouerthrowne and wounded in battell by his ſon Robert, 12, a 40. 50. 60. Falleth ſicke in Normandie: note, 14. b 20. In deſpaire of his life by the Kentiſhmen, 2. [illegible] 40. Departeth this life, what yeare of his age, 14. b [illegible] His ſepulchre opened, his ſtature and epitaph. 15. b 60.

William Rufus when he began his reigne, 16. a 10. Crowned king, and of his munificence, 16. a 40. What means he vſed for to purchaſe the noble mens fauour, 16. a 10. Giuen to ſenſuall luſt and couetouſneſſe, 18. b 10. In armes againſt the Normans, 17. b 20 Inuadeth Wales but to little effect, 23. a 10. Goeth ouer into Normandie, 23. b 20. A bitter enimie to the popes of Rome, 24. b 20, &c. Renounceth archbiſhop Anſelme for his ſubiect, 25. a 60. Farmeth archbiſhopriks, biſhoprikes, and abbeies, 26. a 40. Paſſeth into Normandie, and whie, 19. a 10. Againſt his brother Robert, 21. a 50. Depriueth biſhops 21. a 40. His great courteſie to the Engliſh to win their fauours, 17. b 30. In armes againſt the Welſhmen, but with little ſucceſſe, 22. a 20. Suſpected of infidelitie, 27. b 20. Falleth ſicke at Gloceſter, 20. a 50. Where buried, his conditions, proportion and no iſſue, 26. b 60. 27. all.

William the ſonne of Henrie the firſt made duke of Normandie, 38. a 30. Drowned, and how he might haue eſcaped, 41. b 10. 30

William king of Scotland allied to the earles of Britaine, 7. b 30

William biſhop of Durham the kings houſhold chapleine in armes againſt the king, 17. a 60. Founder of vniuerſitie colledge in Oxford, 13. a 60. Beſieged at Durham, forced to yeeld and exiled, 18. a 20. Reſtored, and dieth for ſorrow, and whie, 18. a 30

William earle of Ew renounceth Robert, and becommeth king William Rufus man, 22. a 10

Willoughbie lord ambaſſador into Denmarke, his oration in Latine to the king, inueſteth the king into the order of the garter, returneth and arriueth in England, 1348. a 20, &c.

Willoughbie knight found frozen to death in his ſhip: note, 1083. a 60.

Willoughbie capteine honourablie buried, 1428. a 60

Wincheſter, an erls ſonne biſhop there, 42. a 60. ¶ See Biſhop.

Wind monſtrous and big, and dooing much harme, 170. b 30. Full of annoiance, 914. b 30. 245. a 60, 1310. b 30. 1579, a 20, &c. That troubled the ſkie 226, a 10. Extreme & terrible, 243. a 20. Big and boiſterous that blew open Paules gates, 1209. a 20. Tempeſtuous out of the ſouth, 1260. a 40. That ouerthrew houſes, 348. b 40. 220. a 60. In diuerſe places of England: note, 19. b 10. Continuing ſix or ſeuen daies, 395. b 40. For three moneths ſpace hindering the ſpring, 250. a 50. Prognoſticating trouble, 861. a 10. Vpon the ſeas, 1211. a 50

Windſore caſtell repared, 392. a 50. And of the chamber there built called the round table, 366. a 20

Windſore lord. ¶ See Iuſts triumphant.

Wine priſed at a rate, 161. a 20. Sold for thirteene ſhillings & foure penſe the tun, 455. a 10

Winter ſharpe following a drie ſummer, 1210. a 60. With great froſt, 1257. b 30. An enimie to warlike enterpriſes, 7. a 30. Extreame: note, 38. a 50. More than ordinarie, 163. a 50. Neuer the like 166. a 60 That killed all kind of ſmall fowles, 534. a 10. With a deth, 892. b 30

Winter ſir William knight, and viceadmerall, ſaileth towards Sotland, 1187. a 10.

Wiſedome of Richard the firſt in making his anſwer, 138, b 40

Witch hanged at Feuerſham: wherein note the indirect courſe of iuſtice, 1560. a 10. Of one that allured the Dolphin of France to take vpon him the title of K. of France, 602. a 20

Witchcraft puniſhed with famine, 203. b 60. 204. a 10

Wood knighted. ¶ See Maior of Norwich.

Woodſtocke manour by whome builded, 45. b 30

Wooduile lord aideth the duke of Britaine without Henrie the ſeauenths conſent, 768. a 40. Slaine, 768. b 40

Wooll ſold dog chepe by the ſtone 476. b 50. Seſſed at a certeine price, and what for the tranſporting out of the realme, 365 a 40. Tranſporting ouer ſea, an act againſt it, 353, a 60. What K. Edward the third might ſpend a daie there, by that which was tranſported, 383. b 10

Granted in ſubſidie by the merchants,440,a 20. ¶ Sée Subſidie, Staple.

Wollen cloth at two ſhillings the brode yard, 789,b 40

Wolſes wife a notable harlot, her ſhamefull end,937,b 30,&c.

Wolſeie deſcribed,829, b 60.830, a 10. Made biſhop of Durham, he demandeth a great ſubſidie, his obſtinat anſwer to the motion of the commons, 877, a 50, 60, b 10. Taketh it in ſcorne to be called brother by the archbiſhop,848,a 10. Reproued by Henrie the eight, diſſolueth the archbiſhop of Canturburie his conuocation,878 a 20,40. His princelie port at a banket and other recreations:note,848,b 50,60. He will haue euerie man ſworne what he is worth, 874, b 60 Deuiſeth the deſtruction of the duke of Buckingham, 862,b 50. Imboldeneth Kneuet againſt him, b 60. Accuſeth him to Henrie the eight, 863, b 10, 20. What forren chroniclers report of him,886 b 30. Altereth the ſtate of Henrie the eight his houſehold, 892,b 40. Erecteth two new colleges, he excuſeth himſelfe touching the ſtreict commiſſion for the tax, 891, a 10,40,60. His authoritie impugned, 884,a 10. Offended at a plaie, and puniſheth the author and actors of the ſame, 894, a 50. Goeth ambaſſador into France, his pompe, the maner of his receiuing by the French king, 897, b 10,20,40 Suſpected to be againſt Henrie the eight his mariage with quéene Katharine his brothers wife,906,b 30. Articles exhibited againſt him, 911, b 20. At his manor of Cawood kéepeth a good houſe, was to be arreſted of treaſon, prognoſtications of his fall, arreſted, taketh the action in good part,915,a 10,30,b 50,60 His commiſſions to take vp monie by anticipation, 882,a 50. His ambitious humor, the ordering of the two kings of England and Spaine, their interuiew committed to him, 853,a 20,&c. b 10, 20,&c.854, all. 855,a 10,&c. His great pompe, put in great truſt by the king of England and France,858,a 20,30. His liberalitie by vertue (forſooth) of his ſpirituall power, 872, b 50. He hateth the duke of Buckingham, cauſeth the earle of Kildare to be committed to ward, 855, b 20,30,&c. His crueltie, 894,b 30. His exceſſiue pride, 845,a 60,b 10 847,b 50. A caueat giuen him by a libell ſet vp in London, he cannot abide the citizens, 895,a 30,40,50. His pompe when he receiued the emperor Charles at Douer, his pride at high maſſe, 873,a 50,b 40 Returneth out of France, 898,a 60. Is ſent ouer to Calis, the emperor receiueth him, carrieth the great ſeale with him, and there ſealeth writs and patents. 870,a 40 b 10,20,40. Maketh means to be elected pope,871,b 10. Singeth maſſe before the two kings of England & France, 861,a 20. Deſireth to ſée the commiſſion of the arreſt, committed to the cuſtodie of certeine gentlemen, ſickneth ſitting at the table, falleth into a flux that coſt him his life,916 a 20. In diſpleſure with Henrie the eight, articles exhibited againſt him, ſued in a premunire, loth to part from the great ſeale, but yet diſcharged, calleth all his officers to accounts, goeth to Aſher and hath his plentie turned into penurie, condemned in a premunire,909,a 10,20,30,40,60 b 30,50. Archbiſhop of Yorke, cardinall, chancellor of England, his cardinals hat receiued by Kentiſh gentlemen with great ſolemnitie, iuſtice executed by him vpon offendors, he erecteth new courts by Henrie the eights commiſſion, 838,b 50,60. He taketh vpon him to determin cauſes, diuerſe péeres offended at him, he hindereth the duke of Suffolks hope, an enimie to peace,839,a 50,60,b 10. His aduiſe to the maior of London at Ill Maie daies riot, 841, b 30,40. Licenced to repaire into Yorkeſhire, his college lands ſeized vpon to the behoofe of Henrie the eight, 913,b 10. Remooued to Richmond, prepareth for his iournie into the North, 914,a 60 b 10. Auoucheth that he cannot liue, aſcribeth his fall to the iuſt iudgement of God, the complet hiſtorie of his behauiors, life, and death,917, 918,919,920,921,922

Wolſtan biſhop of Worceſter and others reſiſt the erle of Hereford rebelling,11,a 50. Refuſeth a place of ſafegard againſt the Normans, 17,a 60 b 10. Like to haue béene depoſed for his inſufficiencie of learning,12,a 10. His miracle whereby he kept his biſhoprike,12,a 10. Submitteth himſelfe to duke William, 1,a 50. Dieth, 27,b 60.

Wolſerhampton, and how to be rightlie called:note, 796,a 40

Womans requeſt preuaileth in a great matter with a great perſonage, 32,a 50. Pitifull: note,378,a 20. Their diſſimulation, 336, b 30. Hanged, drawne and quartered, 944, a 60. Ones requeſt denied occaſion of much broile, 327,b 40 328,a 10. One treateth for peace, & preuaileth betwéene two kings: note, 360, a 30 One brought to bed of a monſter: note,1314,a 40. One of fourſcoure yéeres old brought a bed of a monſter, 1313, b 60 1314,a 10. One brought to bed of foure children at one burthen, 1261,b 60

Women will hardlie be of one mind, 158,a 60. Their boldnes in eccleſiaſticall matters: note,484,a 50,60. That to be ſeuere againſt them is diſhonorable: note,314,a 10. Cauſers of miſchéefe: note, 562, a 20. Counterfeiting themſelues one our Ladie the other Marie Magdalen, 203, b 50. Their malice: what miſchéefe it bréedeth: note, 626,b 60,627,a all. Reuenge a murther donne vpon one, 605, b 60. Hard to be reconciled,378, a 60. Their peace, 1151,a 60

Wonders,37, a 40,38,a 40. 39,b 10,44,b 40.82,a 60,b 10. 101,a 30,102,b 30.166,a 60.204,b 60 &c.210,b 50. 216, b 10,20,30. 225,b 60. 226,a 10. 239,b 20. 245,b 30.252,a 50,&c. 277,b 40 395,a 40.439,b 40,484,b 10 &c.493,b 60.645,b 10.793,b 10 &c,40. Of a Dutchman ſtanding on Pauls wethercocke, note,1091,a 60,b 10. Of peaſon without tilth growing vpon hard ſtone & pible,1129. a 60,b 10. Of a man preſerued from drowning, 1223, b 10. Of a lad drowned in a kennell 1259,b 60,1260, a 10. Of a child ſpeaking ſtrange ſpéeches,1315,a 10,&c. Of mice deuouring graſſe, 1315, a 60. Of the ground ſwallowed vp 1413,b 20,30 Strange eſtéemed to be warnings: note, 26,b 10. Strange in heauen and earth,21,a 30. In the aire or element,142, a 10. Great, and whereof they were tokens,204,b 50. What they betoken,156,b 60.157, a 10,b 10. Of baie trees,496, b 60. Of a fiſh like a man: note, 368, a 10. Of fighting fiſhes, 115, a 10. Of Roſamunds cofer,115 b 60. In the ſunne, moone, and the earth,102,b 40,50,60. Of a dead carcaſe,1066,a 30. To be noted in a dead corps that laie long in the ground,779,a 40. ¶ Sée Fiſh, Miracle, and Monſters.

Worceſter aſſalted, 58,b 20. By the Normans,17,a 60. With the valiantneſſe of the people, b 10. Beſieged and taken,266, a 60. The citie burnt by caſualtie, 37,b 50

Words malicious and fooliſh of a French lord: note, 771, a 20 Of Henrie the ſecond that coſt Becket his life, 78,b 30 Of diſpleaſure vttered by the father to his ſonne, 114, a 40 Stout of a prelat to a péere, 458,a 20. Of a graue gentleman ſpoken on his death bed, do good,197,b 40. Whet Henrie the third vnto warre,209, a 10. Faire ouercome,32,a 50. Make fooles faine, 191, b 60. 144,a 20. Preuaile not, 112,a 20. With fraud: note,111,a 30 Smooth how mightilie they preuaile euen in the enimie, 673,a 60,b 10. Faire with ill meaning: note, 136, a 10. Procure wounds and death, 954,a 20. Procure wounds and bloudſhed, 447, a 40. Wounds and ſlaughter: note, 13,b 40. Shamefull & ſlanderous againſt Edward the fourth,698,b 30. Obſcure and doubtfull to be opened, 480, b 40. Unaduiſedlie ſpoken againſt the prince the price of life: note,703,a 10. Undecent to the lord chancellor puniſhed in the ſpeaker, 1081, a a 50. Gentle appeaſed ſtrife, 880,b 50. That kindled heat and indignation to reuenge, 172,b 10. Of wrath kindle diſpleaſure and warre,32,b 10 Faire and gentle with like behauiour how forceable,518, a 10. Purchaſe diſpleaſure, though truelie ſpoken, 513, b 40,50,60. Miſconſtrued by the Scots: note, 423, a 20. Multiplied kindle diſpleaſure,487,b 50,60. Roiall and well beſéeming a king to rebellious lords: note, 460, a 10 Wiſelie vttered, appeaſe the wrath of a king: 458,a 10,&c. 50. Opprobrious procure ill will: note,421,a 20. Of reproch how miſchéeuous in iſſue: note,412, a 20. Great with litle manhood,23,b 60,24 a 10. Of diſdaine bréeding miſchéefe: note,645,a 30. Puniſhed with ſtanding on the pillorie, and loſſe of both the eares,1084,a 20. Mixed with dreadfull allegation preuaile much: note,143, b 60. ¶ Sée Gifts, Oth, and Promiſes.

Works good of duke William before his death,14,b 50. Of king Henrie the firſt to win the peoples fauour, 28,b 20

Workemanſhip verie cunning, of compriſing much matter in a little roome,1262,b 10. Of a locke and a keie weighing but one wheatcorne, 1299, b 50, 60

Worſhip to creatures not permitted to be donne without the biſhops authoritie, 31, a Wotton embaſſador into Scotland, of an ancient familie: note,1402, b 30,&c. 1403,&c.

Wrecks by ſea pardoned by K. Richard the firſt, through all his dominions, 126, a 60

Wreſtling at the hoſpitall of S. Iames, betwixt the Londoners and all commers,204, a 10,20,&c. At Clerkenwell a great fraie there, 641, a 60, Wriothesleie lord. ¶ Sée Erle of South hampton.

Writing of much matter within a penie compaſſe, 1262, b 10

Y.

Yard. ¶ Sée Meſure.

Yeoman of the gard his ſhift to ſaue himſelfe from hanging,844. One hanged, 812, b 10. Two hanged for robbing, 953, a 60, b 10. Their inſtitution or firſt bringing in, 763,b 50. Defend the preacher at Pauls croſſe, 1689, b 30,1090,a 20

Yeare of Iubile,788, a 60. Of wonders, 1588: note,1356, b 60. More talked of than feared, 1357,a 10,20

Yorke beſieged by duke William 7,a 60. Burned by the Normans and white,6,b 60,7,a 10 The ſhire ſubdued to Lewis the French kings ſon, 193, a 10. The people in a perplexitie by the means of two aduerſe parties,6,b 60. The caſtell, 6,a 40

Yorke place infeoffed to Henrie the eight, 923,a 10

Yorkeſhire. ¶ Sée Commotion.

Ypres William warlike,43, b 30 52,a 10. A Fleming, earle of Kent,54,a 30. Departeth the realme, 65,b 20

Ypreſſe beſieged,443,b 20. The ſiege broken vp, 444,a 10

These faults to be amended. For ſir Iohn Perot, read Pollard, pag.1551.b 20. For ſealed read ſeldome, 1555,b 30 For Henrie the firſt, read the ſecond,1548,b 50

The reſt good reader, as iudgement ſhall lead thee, reforme,

FINIS propoſiti laus Chriſto neſcia FINIS.

Finiſhed in Ianuarie 1587, and the 29 of the Queenes Maieſties reigne, with the full continuation of the former yeares, at the expenſes of Iohn Hariſon, George Biſhop, Rafe Newberie,
Henrie Denham, and Thomas Woodcocke.

AT LONDON
Printed in Alderſgate ſtreet at the ſigne of the Starre.

Cum priuilegio.